The foresaid surgeon and Vulcanian crease-fist sacrifice alike for quarrels, but bellum, bellum, war, war, would fit the armourer's hand better than a pair of gloves of twenty pound. Yet in pranking peace the canker and rust, taking the armourer's part, so bedent the soldier's livery that men must seek unto this ward-part for amendment, or else prepare their purse for fresh ones. But I take it I speak it to the encouragement of this brood of Mulciber, who framed a child's shield and Aeneas his armour, that within a while arma virumque cano will be the world's posy. Men's bodies are but of earthly mould, but their minds taste of fiery fury: a little word will kindle war, and the Spaniard's self-conceit must have its issue. It is comfort enough for you that sweat in the wardrobe of war to foretell that men shall be proud, for pride is such a manly mother that Juno-like she can beget Mars without a father. Armour of proof will be in great request at the tilt, and fearful frogs will down with their dust for good breast-plates. A helmet will be an excellent wear for him that has little wit, and a gauntlet a good guard for a tender-fingered combatant.

Hares in helmets

Bakers

Bakers

Nurses this year, you little-fisted bakers, shall crumb their infants' milk with your white bread out of all measure, and a white crust shall make no more teeth bleed to fright little ones from the love of it. Though daily delvers mumble on a brown crust all the year, yet they shall sweeten their chaps with a white loaf at Christmas, and though the vulgar shall browse on your bran as cheaper in the purse, yet most will desire your loaves like your bolters as whiter in the hand. Besides, the physician will tell you that is hard of digestion, when this will nourish out of all

Christmas loaves

- 2012 Barber-Surgeons Barbers and surgeons formed a united company in 1540; the barbers' surgical work was restricted to bleeding and dentistry.
- 2015 lucri...odor literally, the smell of profit is good (Latin)
- 2016 Vespasian see l. 543-4
- 2021 ure operation, action
- 2023 French something sexually transmitted disease
- 2024 squirrel skins purses
- 2026 rampired fortified
- 2027.n Neapolitan i.e. syphilitic
- 2034 phlebotomist surgeon who bleeds patients
- 2038 ignavoes idlers (coinage, from Latin

- ignavus*)
- 2041 Maundy Thursday the Thursday before Easter
- curst* bad-tempered
- 2045 pullulate sprout
- 2045-6 worm bark them figurative reference to hair loss as a symptom of sexually transmitted disease
- 2047 picke-devant short beard trimmed to a point
- 2048 muchatoes moustaches
- 2049 tantara brash, brassy (imitating the sound of a trumpet)
- flash* showy
- 2050 sea-coal i.e. jet-black; see l. 742.n
- neatoes* dapper gentlemen (coinage)

- 2057 crease-fist clench-fist? (coinage)
- 2060 pranking showily dressed
- 2067-8 arma virumque cano I sing of arms and men (Latin), the first words of Virgil's Aeneid
- 2075 Juno-like Juno was queen of the gods and wife of Jupiter
- 2077 frogs general term of abuse; or possibly a reference to Aesop's fable of King Log
- 2079 gauntlet armoured glove
- 2086 delvers diggers, labourers
- mumble* chew toothlessly
- 2089 browse feed
- 2091 bolters cloths used for sifting weapon will be a good companion, and the thief that ruins the country lad will let him ride like a free man an he but swear and discourse to him of his irons. The soldier that lies on the bare ground ready to be congealed with cold shall think his side very warm if he have the cutler by him, and he that delights in blunt metal may cut his foreman's throat with a packsaddle.

Butchers

A hungry year, you carnal carvers, I know you shall have, for the conjunction of heat and moisture (in the kitchen of digesture) foretells no less, and he that hath no stomach to his work, or not a piece of a heart to meet a man in the field, shall have as good a stomach to his provant as a starved bristleback to his waste, or a crop-eared courser to his mill-bruised beans. Woolner (that cannon of gluttony) shall revive again, and those that lived by love and feed upon the air shall fall to their victuals and furbish their trenchers. A piece of powdered beef will make a man as strong as a cable, and a target of veal will be as good to defend a sick body from dying as a dead crow to defend our corn from the living. Pottage that will fur the ribs (an inch thick) are mere restorative, and the best fast-killer in a morning will be one of your marrow bones. Mutton will be like a ripe medlar, or a false lover rotten at the liver, but never pine at the spleen, for it smells of the blood-pot. Keep your own counsel, set a smooth face and a round face upon it, and then there is never a steward that sharks in your shambles will smell out the putrefaction. The tanners will prevent the worst and ply you with pledges aforehand for your hides, but keep not back the horns in any case, for that's ominous. Furriers and glovers will put money into your hands as warm as wool for your sheepskins, but for the love of a chitterling see you hold your beasts' entrails at a clean price and make the tripewives pay sweetly for them, or I protest in the presence of a hog's countenance I'll never feed more on them. The country farmers' wives will swap with you quickly for their calves, because they draw away their milk and

Butchers

Woolner the great eater

Targets of veal are excellent weapons

Furriers and glovers the butcher prays for 2190

2235

2195
2240

2200
2245

2205
2250

2210
2255

2215
2260

2220
2265

2225
2270

2230
2275

mar their good markets, and the graziers will send you their big-boned beeves upon trust if you pay them largely and keep your day truly.

Saddlers

I shall never beat it into your brains, you horse-ridge cushioners, what care men in general will take for soft saddles, lest their shrewish wives get the vantage of the proverb ('twas Socrates' speech when he was in jail) 'He loves not his wife that loves not his tail'. Coaches are like to have a downfall this year if the horses be frantic at a side of a ditch, and penny-fathers will say 'tis fond to be vexed with a brace of jades when one is sufficient to tire a man. Dirty passes shall so bespot the complexion of a velvet saddle that if your prentices were horses they would break their halters with laughing, and the dusty canker so spoil the silkman that he must be brushed till he be bald again. A voider for those fellows that will ride flat-breeched on a swain's panel, I do not think that you shall take one man (that hath but a dream of wealth) in that trick of clownery this year. Why, I tell you, every substantial webbe in a parish that hath a seat of his own in his church shall buttock a saddle and adorn his prancer with your stately trappings, and Jockie that rode on his courser (hair to hair) shall suddenly leap into his tuftaffety. Horses will be headstrong as unnurtured lobcocks and snap their brides in pieces as fast as hops. The powerful provender shall make them swell in the belly like a sullen girl in the cheek, or a wench after toying, and that will crack girts apace. But, for conclusion, divers women shall saddle their poor husbands' backs and make plain ninny-hammers of noddies, and the Lenten-faced usurer shall bridle our prodigal spend-all's most miserably.

Saddlers

Jockie a gentleman now

Women saddle men

Carpenters

You human harbour-raisers, you are the only householders in these days of do-no-good, for were it not that you held up the house without by your faculty, it might well fall down within for want of hospitality. Well, there be abundance of rotten doors in London, and they must all fall into your

Carpenters

Hospitality dwells nowhere

2200 digesture the process of digesting
2204 bristleback pig (not recorded in OED as a noun)
2205 courser horse
2205.n Woolner Richard Woolner, of Windsor, was a notorious glutton who, after safely digesting iron, glass, and oyster shells, 'by eating a raw eel was overmastered'.
2208 trenchers flat pieces of wood on which food was served; plates or platters 2210 target shield target joint of meat, usually lamb, consisting of neck and breast

2212 Pottage thick soup
2216 medlar fruit eaten when decayed to a soft, pulpy state 2220 sharks pilfers shambles abattoir, slaughterhouse
2226 chitterling the smaller intestine of the pig
2228 tripewives women who prepared and sold offal
2240 Socrates Athenian philosopher, ?470–399 BC, condemned to death for impiety and the corruption of youth

2244 penny-fathers misers, skinflints
2251 voider a basket for removing rubbish, scraps of food etc.
2252 panel a piece of cloth placed under the saddle
2255 webbe weaver
2258.n Jockie type of a common lad
2260 tuftaffety tufted silk fabric
2261 lobcocks simpletons
2264 toying amorous play
2265 girts saddle-belt
2267 ninny-hammers simpletons
noddies simpletons

chimneys shortly, for we must not look for another Orpheus to build a city with his harmony; our musicians will never do the like to that Theban. I tell you, many overleaning buildings will lack a little of your help, yet some of them that bow to my Lord Mayor when he rides by their front, and lean into the streets as though they would shake him by the hand or look the farther after him, may stand as they do to teach aproned slovens agility in the knee. 'As the bed's head rises', quoth he that was wont to lay his bags there, 'our houses must stand, and as I store up my wealth I will story up my chambers'.

'Away', quoth Monsieur Prodigio, 'with these base cottages of Philemon and Baucis, my generous blood cannot brook such a degenerate lodging. Down with wood, and up with my older oaks; stone is too damp, and brick is too cold.' All this tickles the carpenter. I would be loth to tell him too much of his joy, lest with his laughing he fall from his building and mar the fashion of his perpendicular. You shall not need to see the topgallant, the tiler, for he'll leave many a crack in the crown of a house for his own commodity, and that will make timber rot like a muckhill. And you know that the decay of a commonwealth is first in the state, the defect of my body first in my head, and the ruin of a house first in the roof. Finally, many things will be exceedingly out of order, and there will be much use of your line, rule and square.

Shoemakers

You'll laugh till you stink again, you shoemakers, to hear yourselves called eternal constables, and that (without control) you can cast the best gentleman in the land into your stocks only upon his suspicion that he would have a fine foot, or means not to tread in his old steps. I protest, I think you are able to make a greater fleet in a rainy day than the King of Spain in his whole age, for all his fleeting. This is in your shops an excellent memento (make but use of it) of your mortality. Wet weather will be as good as a purgation for dry leather, and boys' spurn-point will grate out shoes as fast as a cook can bread. Our sirs that want shoes must trash out their boots, and if they be in love with the fire tonight they must be in league with you tomorrow. Those that would be taken for gentlewomen must sue for shoes that creak like a frog, but our shrewd dames will have dumb bottoms that they may rush upon their maids as 'twere out of an ambush. As long as hats and shoes shall be slipped on with horns your trade shall be extant, and as long as you clap the fur to tender virgins' soles you shall maintain the name of the gentle craft.

Hats and shoes pulled on with horns

Painters

You beauty-shadows that rob the rainbow of her colours and disrobe the golden garden of her orient spots and flowers, your craft shall have his spring all the year and your art his flourish all your life. The parasite that gives the dug to humour shall paint it in soothing to his patron, the light lover in phrasing to his mistress, and the undermining cony-catcher in compliments to his cony. The impotent debtor shall paint it in protesting to his creditor, the fetching salesman in praising to the buyer, and all the world besides shall paint their bosom carriage with hypocrisy. Alas, men are so frosty-natured that they cannot be thawed but by viewing the colours of the playing satyrs and the coupling nymphs behind the curtains. Heaven's smith with the sky's fair one (chaste Lucrece) and her foe in a chamber, the banished Dardan and his fere in a cave: this puts life into the beholder's corpse and coin into the painter's calf-skin. While he lays colours on the table, they gild his fist, and while he makes shadows for them, he himself may sit in the sunshine. The ribs of tottering houses must be coated with a new paint against the christening of the next child, and a thin wall would have a painter's skin to shroud him from the blast of Boreas. A coloured clout will set the stamp of decorum on a rotten partition, and a pretty picture will hide a hole in a hall out of all question. My Lord Mayor's posts must needs be trimmed against he takes his oath, and the vintner's lattices must have a new blush, and all these will make you suck your pencils to the bone. O, but our sweet-faced gentlewomen will keep your profession in great request; our lack-looks and barren-beauties will uphold it forever, when the old bawd like a green apple parched in an oven, or the Italian colourist with his new-cast

Painters

Excellent painting

Two poor people of whom Ovid writes

Shoemakers

Gentlemen put into the shoemaker's stocks

- 2278 Orpheus in myth, a poet and musician whose song had a civilizing power
- 2291 Philemon and Baucis a poor old couple who offered hospitality to the disguised Jupiter and Mercury; see Ovid's Metamorphoses VIII
- 2292 degenerate fallen from ancestral virtue or excellence
- 2299 topgallant sail on the topmast of a ship
- 2300 commodity benefit, profit
- 2320 spurn-point children's game, perhaps similar to hopscotch
- grate out wear out
- 2322 trash out spoil by tramping through mud
- 2326-7 dumb bottoms noiseless soles
- 2341 cony-catcher cheat, trickster
- 2348-9 Heaven's smith Vulcan
- 2349 Lucrece legendary Roman woman who killed herself after being raped by a son of Tarquin the proud; subject of

Ghost of Lucrece

- 2350 banished Dardan Dardanus was the founder of the Trojan race; used here to refer to Aeneas after his flight from Troy
- 2351 fere partner, i.e. Dido
- 2352 calf-skin purse
- 2359 Boreas the north wind
- 2362-3 posts... trimmed posts used for fixing proclamations were newly painted when a magistrate or mayor came into office face, shall present this good complexion. Why then, to painting speedily.

When nature's birth appeareth lame,

To aid with art I count no shame.

But the smoke of my lungs will melt the vermilion, and then more work for the painter.

The winding up of the clue

Thus have you here the zephyral and spring part of your destinies. 'Twere a task beyond all time to suffer any wagon wheel to press every land's end. Only if you pardon this precursion, it may so happen that as I have here chattered of your vernal age, so I may hereafter tell you of your winter blasts, of the rigorous tempests that shall beat the blossoms from your blooming plants. But for this time I desist.

So, tradesmen, fare you well.

Yet before we shake hands at parting, let us, as country chapmen going from their inns in a morning, give one another the Basileu on horseback with a cup of white wine and sugar, if it be summer. But now I remember, it being the fall of the leaf and trees beginning to stand like tattered rogues half-naked, a cup of mulled sack and ginger is better for the stomach. Take this, therefore, next your heart. I know that to catch riches in a net you fish in all the wealthy streams of the world besides the broad sea, but is it not more safe for you to angle standing on land, and what land is more peaceable than your own? And upon your own where shall you meet less foul dealings than at fairs? To the fairest of fairs I wish you, therefore, to turn your horses' heads. Many fairs are in England, and (being wenching fellows as you are) I think not but you have set up your standings and opened booths in all or the best of them. But my prognostication speaks of other fairs to which, if travelling, your purses be ever the warmer lined. Stand wondering no more at the ill-faced Owl, but say she hath a piercing eye to catch mice in such corners. And so in the name of Minerva (patroness of handicrafts) set forward, for now I proclaim my fairs.

Fairs in England

A fare at Westminster Bridge every forenoon of all the four terms in the year, and in the afternoons of the same days a fare at Temple Stairs. And these fares (no bawdy booths in them) are kept in wherries.

A fare on the Bankside when the playhouses have twopenny tenants dwelling in them.

A fare at Blackfriars when any gentleman coming to the place desires to be a landed man.

A fare is sure to be at Coldharbour when a fresh, delicate whore lies there cum privilegio.

Bartholomew Fair begins ever on the 24 of August, but Bartlemew-babies are held in London (in men's arms) all the year long.

A fair at Cuckold's Haven every St Luke's day, but all that pass that way have not gilded horns as (then) the Haven has.

A fair kept heretofore at Beggar's Bush is this year removed and held in the prisons about London, and in some of the streets of the City too.

A fair of horses at Ripon in Yorkshire this year, and every year a fair of asses at Leighton Buzzard.

A fair of sows on Michaelmas day at Blockley in Worcestershire, but your best pigs and fattest pork are at Our Lady fair in Southwark.

A fair at Romford for hogs every Tuesday in the week, but your fairest headed oxen are fed in London.

A fair wench is to be seen every morning in some shop in Cheapside, and in summer afternoons the self-same fair opens her booth at one of the garden houses about Bunhill.

A fair pair of gallows is kept at Tyburn from year's end to year's end, and the like fare (but not

- 2375 vermilion cosmetic, i.e. rouge
- 2376 clue a ball of thread used to guide someone through a maze
- 2377 zephyral mildly breezy
- 2380 precursion prognostication (first citation in OED as a noun, 1701)
- 2388 chapmen itinerant traders
- 2389 Basileu 'your majesty'? (there is no record of this as a greeting in OED)
- 2393 tattered ragged
- 2411 Minerva better known as goddess of wisdom
- 2416 Temple Stairs landing place on the river for the Inns of Court
- 2418 wherries light rowing-boats used to carry passengers and goods
- 2419 Bankside on the south side of the river; theatre land
- 2421 Blackfriars site of the most important

- private theatre in London; landing place east of the Fleet river
- 2423 Coldharbour tenements near London Bridge, popularly regarded as a place of sanctuary; also a place where marriages could be expedited
- 2424 cum privilegio reserved for you; royal patent (Latin)
- 2425 Bartholomew Fair famous Smithfield fair, represented in Ben Jonson's play (1614)
- 2426 Bartlemew-babies dolls or puppets
- 2428 Cuckold's Haven proverbial
- St Luke's day* 18 October, proverbially associated with Cuckold's Haven
- 2431 Beggar's Bush a bush under which a begger finds shelter; William Harrison records a fair at Beggar's Bush near Rye

- on Bartholomew Day in his Description of England (1577), III, xv
- 2434 Ripon cathedral city; Harrison records a horse fair at Ripon on Holyrood day, 14 September
- 2435 Leighton Buzzard town in Bedfordshire
- 2436 Michaelmas day 29 September, the feast of St Michael
- 2438 Our Lady fair the other great London fair, south of the river
- 2439 Romford town in Essex
- 2445 garden houses used for sexual encounters
- Bunhill* Bunhill fields, north of London near Finsbury, where archery matches and artillery practice were held
- 2446 Tyburn the chief place of execution, west of London

so much resort of chapmen and crack-ropes to it) is at St Thomas à Waterings.

The highways of England: how they lie, and how to travel from one place to another 2450

Now because there are no fairs but they are kept in some certain places, and that no place can be gone unto but by knowledge of the ways, I have therefore chalked out here some of the most notorious ways in the kingdom for the benefit of galled-toe travellers thereby the sooner to come to their inns, viz.

The way between York and London is just so many miles as between London and York. It hath divers times been ridden in a day, so that by my geometrical dimensions I find it but a day's journey, yet the postmasters of the North swear 'tis a great deal more. 2460

The way between Charing Cross, and not a cross to be found scarce in one purse for twenty that passes by, is to be tried by many a gallant's pocket with yellow band, feather pendant-regardant and cloak lined with velvet, and therefore here I spare to speak of so poor a thing. 2470

The way between the two Counters in London may be travelled in as short time as one of the varlets there ventures his soul for money, and that's much about quarter of an hour, or half at most. 2475

The way to prove the taking of any purse (be it never so full), and to stand in that quarrel even to the death, is to go first to Newgate and then to Tyburn. 2525

The way to be an arrant ass is to be a mere university scholar. 2480

The highway to Bedlam is first to set forth at Westminster Hall and there to be undone in four or five terms by corrupted lawyers. 2530

Between stark drunk and reasonable sober is much about four hours sleeping, but some that have travelled those overflowing countries say 'tis sometimes more. 2485

The way to heaven is to walk with a good conscience; he that rides without it goes vilely out of the way, and ten to one if ever he gets thither. 2490

The way to hell is clean the contrary way to heaven; the one turns o' the right hand, t'other on the left.

2495

Good days

1. Not one whore in all Westminster.
3. Not one knave in Long Lane.
4. Three catchpoles cast into the Thames.
8. All that walk in Paul's dine today.
10. Nobody hangs in Barbican.
14. Attorneys get no money.
15. Not a bribe taken this term.
17. My husband is gone a-ducking.
18. Bob for eels now or never.
20. A cony for nothing.
23. One hole for nine pence.
26. Turnbull Street full of puritans.
28. The scrivener i'th' pillory.
30. Room for the baker.

2450

2500

2455

2505

2460

2510

Bad days

2. Quarter sessions.
5. Farewell and be hanged.
6. The doorkeepers steal.
7. Globe afire.
9. Cockpit plucked down.
11. The play is hissed at.
12. My wife is out of her letters and falls to joining.
13. Not a woodcock to be had for love or money.
16. The chambermaid is bedridden.
19. He hunts close, yet has lost his hare.
21. I can read my husband's name in his little boy's hornbook.
22. My maid is poisoned with a pudding.
24. His evidence is burnt, yet the seals saved.
25. A cuckold by Westminster clock, and that goes true.
27. You are peppered.
29. Ale-tapwives in loose gowns.
31. None of the Guard drunk.

2465

2515

2470

2520

2475

2525

2480

2530

2485

2535

These thirty-one Good and Bad days may wait as pages upon all the months of the year, and the rather because our bad days are still more in number than our good ones (as here they are). Also, because where the days are bad, none can be worse than these, and where they happen to be good, few better than these.

FINIS

- 2448 crack-ropes rogues
- 2449 St Thomas à Waterings watering place in Southwark for Canterbury pilgrims; site of a gallows erected in 1593
- 2465 Charing Cross in Westminster
- 2468-9 pendant-regardant heraldic term; regardant = looking backward
- 2471 the two Counters prisons: one in the Poultry, the other in Wood Street, Cheapside

- 2482 Bedlam Bethlehem Hospital on Bishopsgate, the asylum for the insane
- 2497 Long Lane in Smithfield. 'This lane is now lately builded on both the sides with tenements for brokers, tipplers [i.e. tavern-keepers], and suchlike' (John Stow, A Survey of London, II, 28).
- 2499 Paul's see note to l. 1246
- 2500 Nobody . . . Barbican probably a reference to the bookseller Trundle's sign

- in Cripplegate
- 2513 doorkeepers pimps
- 2514 Globe afire the Globe theatre burned down on 29 June 1613
- 2515 Cockpit see note to l. 434
- 2523 hornbook a paper containing the alphabet and protected by a transparent plate of horn, mounted on a wooden tablet with a handle, used to teach children the alphabet

THE PEACEMAKER; OR, GREAT BRITAIN'S BLESSING

Text edited and annotated by Paul Mulholland, introduced by Susan Dwyer Amussen

WHAT does violence mean in early modern society? And what does it mean to be a peacemaker? These are the questions addressed by Thomas Middleton in The Peacemaker. In doing so, Middleton sheds light on central conflicts in early Stuart society. For the modern reader, the pamphlet raises many questions, as the range of subjects it addresses makes it appear disjointed and somewhat incoherent. Although its sentiments represent conventional pieties, and in the condemnation of duelling government policy, the links between ideas are not obvious. Why, for instance, is there an extended section on drunkenness and other vices in a pamphlet on peace? These peculiarities—and the significance of The Peacemaker—can best be understood by placing it in the context of a debate about the nature of masculinity as defined through morality and violence that was part of the early Stuart campaign for the reformation of manners.

The Peacemaker, which was licensed for publication by the King, was published anonymously; its royal privilege and the address of the Epistle ‘To all Our true-loving and peace-embracing subjects’ (l. 11) led to its attribution to James I in both the British Library and Short Title Catalogues. Perhaps because of its quasi-official status, it rapidly went through five editions—faster than any other work of Middleton in his lifetime.

The Peacemaker celebrates James I’s contribution to European peace, but was licensed on 19 July 1618, more than a month after news had reached England of the events in Prague that led to the outbreak of the Thirty Years War and when the threat of war was evident. It also celebrated the ‘loving union’ of England and Scotland—although formal union, much to James’s chagrin, had actually been rejected by Parliament some years earlier. Finally, the attack on drunkenness as a disturber of peace is published under the protection—and possibly at the request—of a King notorious for excess and debauchery: ‘tis drunkenness that leads now’ (l. 229) could be a political, as well as a moral lament. Such ironies suggest that we would do well to try to understand the larger context in which The Peacemaker was written.

One of the most striking aspects of The Peacemaker for the modern reader is the range of topics that are raised. The paean to James I’s abilities as a peacemaker in the international realm is conventional, and is what we would expect from a pamphlet with this title. James was well known for his commitment to peace, and was proud of his diplomatic efforts for peace. The use of James’s biblical motto, ‘beati pacifici’, at the end of the last eight paragraphs of the first section (ll. 61–118) emphasizes this familiar aspect of peacemaking. The second section (ll. 119–224), which acknowledges the difficulties of establishing peace, as well as its benefits—in the expansion of trade and the encouragement of justice, charity, and religion—begins to shift the focus to the domestic implications of international peace. The attention Middleton pays to the economic benefits of peace is not unique, and certainly not surprising given Middleton’s knowledge of London merchants. More surprisingly, the domestic implications of peace yield to the threats to domestic peace.

In the context of the analogical thinking so common in early modern England, which I have discussed elsewhere, the shift from the international to the domestic (both national and familial) is entirely predictable. Yet the third and fourth sections of the pamphlet shift the discussion to a personal level, insisting that peace is based on a series of decisions made by individuals on a daily basis. The linking of personal behaviour to international peace is a reminder that the separation of politics from other social issues is a division that we create, but that Middleton and his contemporaries would not recognize. More than half the pamphlet (60 per cent) focuses not on peacemaking in the international arena, but on the evils of duelling and the sins—particularly drinking—that disrupt domestic peace. These disruptions of the peace of the soul and the community are, for Middleton, the real threats to peace.

Middleton’s reflection on the nature of manhood begins in the third section (ll. 225–358), with its discussion of the impact of drunkenness and other vices. There was extensive preaching against the evils of drink in the early seventeenth century, and many commentators shared Middleton’s view that drunkenness was epidemic. Such ideas were almost inevitable in a society where beer and ale were the primary forms of liquid refreshment. They were simultaneously sources of carbohydrates and calories, and were also considered stimulants.

We often assume that warnings about the decline of morals and the spread of sin merely reflect moral panic. In this case, there was at least some basis in fact for the concern. Alcohol consumption probably did increase in the late sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries. Peter Clark has shown that there was a significant rise in the numbers of alehouses in this period. There were certainly a lot of them: in the City of London alone in 1657 there were more than nine hundred licensed alehouses, or one licensed alehousekeeper for every sixteen houses; in addition, the more socially exclusive taverns and inns catered to the élite. At the same time, during the sixteenth century there was a gradual transformation of brewing, with old-fashioned ale being replaced by beer. Because the equipment for brewing beer was more expensive than that for brewing ale, this encouraged the commercialization of brewing, particularly in the towns and cities. Beer not only kept far longer than ale, but was also usually more alcoholic. In addition, in London the prosperous could drink wine at the many inns and taverns that served the city, and a growing group of distillers provided a range of (extremely potent) spirits for consumption. Thus drink with an increasing alcoholic content was more easily available to all ranks of English society at a time when poverty and social dislocation may have increased the demand for it—as well as for other products, like tobacco, which were thought to be stimulants.

While beer and ale were often consumed at home, drunkenness was associated with alehouses; any discussion of drunkenness, then, inevitably reflects not only on diet, but also on patterns of hospitality and recreation. Like most attacks on drunkenness at the time, Middleton's does not argue for teetotalism, but for restraint. Elizabeth Foyster has shown that drinking without becoming drunk was a critical dimension of constructing manhood. This emphasis on restraint and self-control is the starting point of Middleton's development of an alternative model of manhood, particularly for prosperous young men. Manhood in early modern England, as I have recently argued, was closely connected with both conviviality and violence. As a result of the late age at marriage, much socializing by young people was in single-sex groups, and for men at least these groups usually met in alehouses. As Keith Wrightson has shown, alehouses were natural centres of sociability, in part because in winter their fires made them one of the warmest places around. But they also served as common space where those from different households, especially servants, could gather.

Middleton's redefinition of manhood defines drunkenness itself as unmanly. The imagery of this section repeatedly assumes an equation between true manliness and virtue, while sin corrupted both true manhood and true womanhood. The man who is drunk is 'unmanned', while drunkenness itself is a 'sick and unwholesome harlot' (261–2, 292). Here manhood is linked to self-control and autonomy. Such a definition built on existing political concepts which identified real adulthood with economic independence. What Middleton has added is the idea that manhood depends not just on independence, but on sobriety. Abandoning oneself to drink is a way of losing one's independence.

Middleton does not challenge the centrality of the alehouse or other drinking centres as social institutions. Instead, he redefines appropriate behaviour in the alehouse. In his approach to this necessarily contentious subject, Middleton sought to disconnect popular conceptions of manhood from excessive drinking. It is this which ties the attack on drunkenness to peacemaking. As I have argued elsewhere, the conviviality of the alehouse involved not just drinking, but participation in various semi-ritual combats, whether brawls (for the lower orders) or duels. Both were fought for a variety of reasons—to teach an opponent a lesson, to defend one's reputation, or to make a point in an argument. Middleton argues that resort to such violence was encouraged by excessive drinking. The fourth section of The Peacemaker (ll. 359–669) begins with a criticism of quarrels in general, but soon narrows the focus to the bloodshed caused by duels. His attack on duelling forms the second part of Middleton's redefinition of manhood.

As V. G. Kiernan has shown, there was great concern with duels at this time. James I had published several proclamations against duels—first prohibiting the publication of news of duels in 1613, then effectively prohibiting them by banning challenges in 1614. Duels, like other fights, had an ambiguous place in the culture of early modern England. They were judged according to the same standards as all other forms of violence. First, they were supposed to be justified: violence should not be random. Second, they should be limited in impact, with a consequence equal to the offence. Finally, they should not be carried out in anger, but thoughtfully and purposefully. The chances of death in any quarrel depended to a great extent on the use of weapons, which were present by definition in duels. Duels were most likely to offend early modern viewers by the incommensurability of the consequence (death) to the offence—often a relatively trivial insult. Middleton makes much of the possibility of death, insisting that the reasons that most men fought duels did not deserve death, and that in fighting, the participants abrogated to themselves the role of God.

Middleton's attack on duels goes further, however, taking on central social values, especially those relating to reputation. Although this section displays Middleton's classical education through its frequent use of Seneca, the issues were central in English society. The 'wise man' whose behaviour is to be emulated, who 'cares [not] how many darts of malice or contumely are shot against him' (384–5) was rare. Unlike most others in Jacobean society, he was not overly sensitive to reputation. He is, in a sense, a new man, who really believes that God will exact vengeance from those who have harmed him. Yet in early modern England, as I and other recent scholars—including Martin Ingram and J. A. Sharpe—have shown, reputation was central at all social levels. Reputation governed how others responded to you, where one was placed, the roles one could play in society, and much more. Its implications were not just social, but financial—as suggested by the use of the word 'credit' to describe reputation as well as solvency. As a result, almost everyone was jealous of their reputations: they defended them not only with duels, but with numerous lawsuits. In so far as law is the continuation of a fight by other means, it was a satisfactory substitute for a duel or other violent confrontation; if there was any success in the campaign against duels, it may be indicated by the vast increase in litigation that occurred in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.

Reputation was shaped by many different components, some of which were extremely sensitive to words spoken by others. Although wealth was an important component of reputation it did not alone ensure the excellence of one's reputation. Rather, the propertied (from the gentry to merchants and shopkeepers as well as yeoman farmers) were assumed to be of good character; they were responsible for the governance of their communities. That presumption could be undermined by anything from excessive drunkenness, to disorderly sexual behaviour, to blatant dishonesty. To allow the allegation of any such behaviour to go unanswered would be to allow people to assume it were true, especially because reputation was based on the opinion of 'people of credit and estimation'—or what people said about you. Middleton argues, however, that reputation was more effectively protected by wise, cautious, and judicious behaviour than by resort to arms.

Middleton's argument required not only a redefinition of the basis of reputation, but of the place of duelling in English society. Violence was a familiar feature of early modern English society, but it was not always accepted. The duel—with its specialized weapons, its elaborate codes and rituals—was a form of the brawl. The ability and willingness to fight was often considered a sign of manliness. The attraction of the duel, however, was its association with the upper class. After all, not everyone could learn to fight with a rapier. Skill was expected to distinguish the true aristocrat from the parvenu. Yet the lines of division in English society were not so clear that such distinctions could be made easily. Although the case which occasioned The Charge of Sir Francis Bacon Knight (1614)—on which Middleton based some of his discussion—involved one man called a 'gentleman', and the other 'Esquire', Bacon clearly thought little of them. 'I could have wished that I had met with some greater persons, as a subject for your censure'; it is appropriate for 'the dog to be beaten before the lion'; and finally, 'I should think (my Lords) that men of birth and quality will leave the practice, when it begins to be vilified, and come so low as to barbers surgeons and butchers, and such base mechanical persons.' Middleton develops this theme, suggesting that duelling is not a sign of courage and honour, but shame and dishonour; but while Bacon located the source of the shame in the status of others who fought duels, Middleton located it in the morality of the duel itself.

Duels were enmeshed in concepts of class and masculinity—in particular the manhood of young gentlemen. It is indicative of Middleton's audience that he focuses on duels, rather than the more common—and plebeian—brawl. The argument that Middleton makes against duels serves to separate the manhood of the élite from that of the lower classes of society: not only is Middleton silent on the subject of fights that do not qualify as duels, but his definition of a wise man is effectively reserved for those—at various social levels—who are confident of their position in society: they are the ones who do not need to pay excessive attention to petty slights. For those whose position is more tenuous, or who are trying to define their place in society, such restraint is difficult. The focus on self-restraint and self-control are part of an attempt to redefine the nature of aristocratic and gentle manhood. They are not unique; indeed the advice literature of the church had for a long time argued that true manhood was not violent.

In the context of the redefinition of manhood, The Peacemaker is best read as a contribution to the campaign for the 'reformation of manners' in the early seventeenth century. This campaign, usually associated with Puritans, sought to impose higher standards of personal morality on society; it emphasized self-restraint in many forms. This campaign, as described by Keith Wrightson and David Underdown, included intense concern with drinking, reflected in repeated campaigns against alehouses as sources of disorder, crime, and sin. Personal morality was emphasized in the context of proper adherence to gender roles—both in attacks on assertive women and on men who failed to uphold proper (as defined by the reformers) standards of manhood. The campaign for the reformation of manners was carried out by Puritans in the broadest sense of the word—people who wanted religion to represent a more serious commitment to personal moral improvement. The reformation of manners sought to impose stricter standards of behaviour on the (morally) unregenerate masses, and it had support throughout society. This support was, however, concentrated among the 'middling sort'—yeomen, merchants, and craftsmen, whose lives were more likely to conform in any case to its expectations. In the process of trying to create a single moral standard, the campaign divided society profoundly.

Middleton associates the reformation of manners with a reformation of manhood through the connections drawn between drinking and duelling, and underscores the cultural and social divisions it implies. A reformation of manners inevitably leads to cultural polarization, as it distinguishes between those who behave 'properly' and those who do not. But Middleton's shift from all quarrels to duels illuminates the process by which the distinction between the moral and the immoral came to mirror the social polarization of English society in the early seventeenth century. When duelling is accepted as a way of settling disagreements between élite young men, their relationship to violence is distinguished from that of less prosperous young men only by weapons and ritual. While the weapons contribute to the potential for bloodshed that Middleton so laments, they do not remove young men from violence. When the duel is rejected, however, the relationship of élite men to violence is radically different from that of other young men. Those who accept the duel can understand the brawl; those who reject the duel cannot. By proposing to change the relationship of some, but not all, men to violence, Middleton's focus on duels makes this polarization one based more on status than morality. In this way, Middleton contributes to the process of differentiating manhoods—of creating different meanings for manhood in different social groups. The cultural gap between the godly and the unregenerate has become one between the élite and the rest.

It is in the context of reinventing manhood that the inclusion of a long discussion of drunkenness is necessary in The Peacemaker: the self-control necessary for avoiding duels depended on the self-control—more commonly sought—that avoided drunkenness. In addition, the unmanliness of drunkenness, and its association with duelling, made it easier to make the reformation of manhood a central aspect of the reformation of manners. Middleton understood, as did his contemporaries, that all forms of violence were connected; a society which prepared its sons for war would train them to duel. To argue for a world of peace, where trade, industry, and agriculture flourished, involved redefining what was important, what was valued in society. And it involved creating, in many ways, a new man. That this was always the goal of the godly made the discourse familiar. Middleton’s use of these commonplace ideas reveals the profound transformation of society sought in the reformation of manners.

SEE ALSO

Textual introduction and apparatus: Companion, 648

Authorship and date: Companion, 402

The Peacemaker

Or, Great Britain’s Blessing

Framed for the continuance of that mighty happiness wherein this Kingdom excels many Empires;

Showing the Idleness of a Quarrelling Reputation, wherein consists neither Manhood nor Wisdom;

5 Necessary for all Magistrates, Officers of Peace, Masters of Families, for the conformation of Youth, and for all his Majesty’s most true and faithful Subjects:

To the general avoiding of all Contention and Bloodshedding.

10

Cum Privilegio.

To all Our true-loving and peace-embracing subjects

The glory of all virtues is action; the crown of all acts, perfection; the perfection of all things, peace and union.
It is the riches of our beings, the reward of our sufferings, the music on our deathbeds. Never had so great a treasure so poor a purchaser, for man hath the offer of it. The God of Peace sent it, the Lamb of Peace brought it, the Spirit of Peace confirmed it, and We still seek to preserve it.
With what power then may the good purpose of this work arrive at the hearts of all faithful Christians? And with what cheerfulness and freeness ought it to be embraced of all Our loving subjects, having so many glorious seals of honour, power, and virtue to strengthen it? All that is required of Us from you is a faithful and hearty welcome, and that bestowed upon man’s best and dearest friend, either in life or death. For peace that hath been a stranger to you is now become a sister, a dear and natural sister;
and to your holiest loves, We recommend her.

15

20

25

This commentary pays special attention to the work’s sources. For further background on versions of the Bible used by Middleton, see the commentary to Two Gates, p. 683.

Title Great Britain’s In 1604 James I was proclaimed ‘King of Great Britain’, the first English monarch to be so styled.

3 Quarrelling Reputation (1) contentious disputing of the validity of a reputation; (2) finding fault with a reputation

6 Families households (including servants)

11 Our The royal plural here and elsewhere together with the royal coat of arms in type ornaments that accompany the early editions is apparently part of a strategy aimed at giving the impression that the epistle, if not the whole pamphlet, was the work of the king. Two of the ornaments are reproduced in our text; an alternative version of the second is printed in the Companion. The earliest state of this forme contains the phrase ‘By the King’—an error possibly deriving from tactics employed to suggest royal authorship.

12 glory . . . action i.e. in making virtues manifest

13 union unity, concord

14 It peace

15 music . . . deathbeds Cf. ‘music at the close’, Shakespeare, Richard II 2.1.12.

16–17 God . . . Lamb . . . Spirit in reference to the Trinity

19 work action (i.e. of sending, bringing, and confirming)

22 seals pledges

27 sister possibly drawing on conventional iconographic representations of Peace as a sister of Justice

The Peacemaker

30 The book itself in glory of its name
 Is proud to tell from whence the subject came.
 Peace be to you. I greet you in the blessing of a God, the salutation of an Apostle, and the motto of a King.
 My subject hath her being in heaven, her theory in holy 35 writ, and her practice in England, insula pacis: the Land of Peace, under the King of Peace.
 Like Noah's dove, she was sent out to seek a resting place to see if the whole world were not yet covered with the perpetual deluge of blood and enmity, and only here 40 she found the olive leaf. Hitherto hath she been pilot to the ark, and here it first touched shore. Here now it hath remained full fifteen years, I am proud to report it.
 Rejoice, O England, with thine espoused Scotland, and let thy handmaid Ireland joy with thee. Let all thy servant 45 islands be glad; yea, let in strangers to behold and taste thy blessings.
 The disturbed French seek succour with thee; the troubled Dutch fly to thy confines; the Italian leaves his hotter climate. These and many more all seek shelter under the sweet shadow of thine olive branches. 50

 O London, blessed mistress of this happy Britain, build new thy gates: there's peace ent'ring at them. The God of Peace hath sent this peace of God. O, ever love her that she may never leave thee: salute her and invite her. Let Whitehall, fit emblem for her purity, be her chief palace, 55 and let it say, Ades, alma salus.
Peace and contention lie here on earth as trading factors for life and death.
 Who desires not to have traffic with life? Who, weary of life, but would die to live? 60
Peace is the passage from life to life; come then to the factory of peace, thou that desirest to have life: behold the substitute of peace on earth, displaying the flag of peace, Beati pacifici.
 Let contention enjoy, without joy, large empires; here 65
 we enjoy, with all joy, our happy sanctuary. It was born with him; he brought it with him after five-and-thirty years' increase, and here hath multiplied it to fifty with us. O blessed jubilee, let it be celebrated with all joy and cheerfulness, and all sing Beati pacifici. 70
 And are not the labours blessed with the workman?
 England and Scotland (though not malicious enemies, yet churlish neighbours) are reconciled, feast, love, live, and die together, are indeed no more neither what they were, but a new thing betwixt them, more firm and near in their 75

32 Peace...you a salutation in Gen. 43:23 and Christ's words to the disciples after the resurrection as recorded in Luke 24:36 and John 20:19, 20, 26
 32-3 God...Apostle...King The text is unusual in italicizing many such common nouns.
 33 salutation...Apostle many of the Apostle Paul's epistles begin with the salutation, 'Grace be with you, and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ' (Geneva-Tomson) motto...King i.e. Beati pacifici, blessed are the peacemakers (Latin), Matt. 5:9, the motto of James I 35 insula pacis island of peace (Latin)
 37 Noah's dove Gen. 8:8
 40 olive leaf Gen. 8:11; the olive is also an emblem of peace.
 42 fifteen years i.e. the length of the reign of James I since becoming king of England
 43 espoused Scotland i.e. by virtue of James's uniting of England and Scotland under his rule
 44 handmaid perhaps a figurative use of the naval sense of a vessel employed to attend on larger ships
 44-5 servant islands presumably in reference to islands under English rule such as Jersey and Guernsey
 45 let in strangers either as visitors or immigrants
 47 disturbed French possibly in allusion to the turmoil generated by the assassination of Henri IV in 1610
 48 troubled Dutch The final years of the Twelve Years' Truce between Spain and the Dutch United Provinces (1609-21) were akin to a cold-war period during which the Dutch were making preparations for renewed hostilities; Dutch enclaves and interests elsewhere in Europe were also under threat.
Italian James I was advised in 1609 to found a college for Italian refugees in England, casualties of political and religious skirmishes among independent Italian and neighbouring states.
 51 happy blessed; fortunate
 51-2 build new thy gates The 1618 edition of Stow's Survey of London draws attention to the recent 'new building' of two of London's gates: Aldgate and Aldersgate.
 53 peace with a pun on 'piece'
 55 Whitehall the palace of the kings of England from Henry VIII to William III, situated on the north bank of the Thames near Westminster Bridge; the reference plays on the suitability of 'white' as an emblem of purity.
 56 Ades, alma salus 'Come, kindly salvation (Latin); possibly derived from Statius, Thebaid, 10.611: 'venit alma salus', kindly salvation comes.
 57 factors agents
 60 but that
 62 factory workshop; trading station
 63 substitute deputy
 64 Beati pacifici Blessed are the peacemakers (Latin), Matt. 5:9
 66 sanctuary refuge, shelter
 67 him 'the substitute of peace on earth', i.e. James I
 67-8 five-and-thirty...increase the reference is presumably to James I's age at his accession to the English throne in 1603, but the reckoning is faulty: he was born 19 June 1566 and so was 36 when Elizabeth I died.
 68 fifty as with the preceding reference, at least one year out of line with James I's age in 1618
 69 jubilee fiftieth anniversary; among the significances of the Biblical Year of Jubilee was the proclamation of liberty to all the inhabitants of the land (Lev. 25:9-10)
 72-3 England...reconciled The political union of the English and Scottish monarchies that resulted from James becoming king of England significantly reduced tensions between the two nations.

loving union than ever divided in their hearty unkindness; and now both say with one tongue, Beati pacifici.

80 Ireland, that rebellious outlaw, that so many years cried blood and death (filling her marish grounds with massacres, affording many preys of slaughtered bodies to her ravenous wolves, and in their wombs keeping the brutish obsequies), would know no lord, but grew more stubborn in her chastisement till this white ensign was displayed; then she came running with this hallowed text in her mouth: Beati pacifici.

85 Spain, that great and long-lasting opposite, betwixt whom and England the ocean ran with blood not many years before, nor ever truced her crimson effusion: their merchants on either side trafficked in blood, their Indian ingots brought home in blood (a commerce too cruel for Christian kingdoms), yet now shake hands in friendly amity and speak our blessing with us, Beati pacifici.

90 Nay, what Christian kingdom that knows the blessing of peace has not desired and tasted this our blessing from us? Come they not hither as to the fountain from whence it springs? Here sits Solomon, and hither come the tribes for judgements. O happy moderator, blessed father, not father of thy country alone, but father of all thy neighbour countries about thee. Spain and her withstanding provinces (long bruised on both sides) thou hast set at peace, turning their bloody leaguers to leaguers of friendship. Do not those children now live to bless thee (who had else been buried in their parents' wombs) and say, Beati pacifici?

Denmark and Suecia, Suecia and Poland, Cleves and Brandenburg; have not these and many more come to this oracle of peace and received their dooms from it? If the members of a natural body by concord assist one another, if the politic members of a kingdom help one another, and by it support itself, why shall not the monarchical bodies of many kingdoms be one mutual Christendom, if still they sing this blessed lesson taught them, Beati pacifici?

Let England then, the seat of our Solomon, rejoice in her happy government, yea, her government of governments; and she that can set peace with others, let her, at least, enjoy it herself. Let us love peace, and be at peace in love. We live in Beth-salem, the house of Peace; then let us ever sing this song of peace, Beati pacifici.

*Detraction snarls and tempts fair Peace to show
The plenty of her fruits and how they grow.*

120 Sed ubi fructus? Where are all these rich and opulent blessings that this tender white-robed Peace hath brought with her? Ætas parentum peior avis, etc. Our grandfathers, for the most part, were honester men than our fathers, our fathers better than we, and our children are like enough to

76 hearty bold; zealous

78 Ireland...outlaw in allusion to the rebellious posture of the Irish tribal chieftains, and possibly Tyrone and Tyrconnell in particular, who despite submission to the English crown in 1603 continued to wield their accustomed authority until 1607

79 marish marshy

81-2 in their wombs...obsequies in their bellies observing the savage funeral rites

83 white ensign i.e. as a token of peaceful or friendly intention; possibly in reference to James's efforts to establish himself as Ireland's sovereign lord, thereby supplanting the authority of the tribal chiefs, and his proclamation that the Irish were his 'free, natural and immediate subjects'; also included might be allusion to the plantation of Ulster that followed the departure of Tyrone and Tyrconnell, which aimed by the redistribution of land to set up a new order.

84 hallowed with a pun on the senses 'sanctified' and 'shouted'

87 ocean... blood i.e. in reference to the Spanish Armada of 1588 and other naval battles in Elizabeth's reign

88 truced put an end to

88-9 their...side presumably Spanish merchants on either side of the Atlantic, since they now shake hands in friendly amity...with us

89 trafficked traded

89-90 Indian ingots i.e. precious metals

90 brought home in blood presumably in allusion to Spanish atrocities in the New World

91-2 shake hands...amity James concluded a peace with Spain in August 1604

96 Solomon In wisdom and as a peace-maker Solomon (the name means 'peace-making' or 'man of peace') had a particular appeal for James I, which is reflected both in his own writings and those of his contemporaries.

97 tribes classes or divisions of persons; possibly with a play through the Latin form of James (Jacobus) on the twelve tribes descended from Jacob

98 father Cf. James's insistence on himself as father of all his subjects; also Solomon as the father of David (and James was also blessed as a father of an heir, Charles)

100 withstanding opposing or offering resistance provinces in reference to the United Provinces, the seven northern provinces of the Netherlands allied by the Union of Utrecht (1579); with the support of France and England the Netherlands forced Spain to agree to the Twelve Years' Truce that ran from 1609 to 1621

101 leaguers laagers, military camps

102 children carrying on the image of James as father; cf. Solomon and his children

105 Denmark...Poland King James intervened in a diplomatic capacity to defuse tensions between Denmark (King Kristian IV was his brother-in-law) and Sweden (Suecia, Latin) in the Treaty of Knäred, 21 Jan. 1613, after the War of Kalmar; and in Nov. 1613, in conjunction with the Dutch, he mediated between Sweden and Poland, whose King Sigismund III was a pretender to the throne of Sweden, in an attempt to achieve a lasting armistice or truce.

105-6 Cleves and Brandenburg The crisis over succession that arose from the death in 1609 of the childless Catholic Duke of Cleves, Jülich, and Berg, three strategically and economically valuable duchies situated along the lower Rhine, produced various claimants and political entanglements. James favoured the protestant Elector of Brandenburg and contributed to a resolution of sorts in arranging the Treaty of Xanten in 1614.

107 dooms judgements, sentences

112 lesson with a pun on the senses 'musical exercise or performance' and 'matter to be learned'

117 Beth-salem house of peace (Hebrew)

119 Detraction disparagement, calumny (here, the voice of nostalgia for Elizabeth's reign)

121 Sed ubi fructus? But where are the fruits? (Latin); untraced

123 Ætas...avis Our parents' age, worse than our grandsires' (Latin; Horace, Odes, III.6.46) be worse than ourselves. Does Peace keep a palace where charity may warm herself?

Peace answers

130 Shame, murmurer, hadst thou rather with the forgetful Israelites go back to the flesh-pots of Egypt, bought with blows and burdens, than eat manna in the way to Canaan?

Dost thou thirst here? 'Tis for want of sacrifice to him that should refresh thee then.

135 Thy grandfather prayed for this that thou enjoyest, and though he had it not himself, yet prepared it as a blessing on thee. The sun that daily shines on thee, thou letst it pass with a careless and neglective eye; but were it hid from thee the change of a moon, thou wouldst then welcome it with all alacrity and cheerfulness.

140 Were blows more bountiful to thee? Did blood yield thee benefit? War afford thee wealth? Didst thou make that thine own by violence which was another's by right? It may be the handmaid was fruitful and the mistress barren, but Sarah has now brought forth, and in her seed are the blessings come.

145 Hagar is despised, Peace hath conceived, and smiling Isaac hath left us Jacob, a new Israel, a prince of God, a man that hath prevailed with God to plant his peace with us.

150 The trading merchant finds it, who daily plows the sea, and as daily reaps the harvest of his labours. What wants England that the world can enrich her with? Tyre sends in her purples, India her spices, Afric her gold, Muscovy her costly skins of beasts, all her neighbour countries their best traffic, and all purchased by friendly commerce, not, as before, by savage cruelty.

155

The fearless trades and handicraft men sing away their labours all day, having no note drowned with either noise of drum or cannon, and sleep with peace at night.

The frolic countryman opens the fruitful earth and crops his plenty from her fertile bosom; nay, even his toiling beasts are trapped with bells, who taste in their labours the harmony of peace with their awful governors.

160

The magistrate, constantly draws his sword of justice on offenders, not o'erawed by party-headed contentions.

The kingdom's beauty, the nobility, who were wont to be strangers in their native country, leading the ranks of blood and death against their enemies, have now no enemy, but keep their practice amongst themselves to pastime with (nonne hæc meminisse voluptas?). And now, more sweet and holy, are pillars at home, that were enforced to be prodigies abroad; all being by a heavenly metamorphosis trans-shaped to become the becoming branches of the great olive tree of peace. And doth not Charity dwell here with Peace? O blind detraction. Has not in foretimes unwilling necessity erected two hospitals? And now most free and willing Charity hath, in augmentation of her glory, raised twenty almshouses; yea, so many for one, and give her true testimony.

165

170

175

Nay, has she not done the great wonder? Built some churches, repaired many, and still her hand is dealing? Is not the sum of all, Religion, established by her? Are not the flesh-eating fires quenched, and our faggots converted

180

128 murmurer one who complains against constituted authority; in reference to Exod. 16:2

128-9 forgetful...Egypt in reference to Exod. 16:3

130 Canaan the land of promise

131 thirst in allusion to the thirst of the children of Israel after departing the wilderness of Sin (Exod. 17:2-3)

136 neglective neglectful

137 the change of a moon a month

142 mistress barren Queen Elizabeth, who ruled during the wars with Spain in the time of Middleton's father and grandfather, was childless; James had three children.

143 Sarah wife of Abraham; barren for ninety years, she at last gave birth to Isaac.

145 Hagar Egyptian handmaid of Sarah; while Sarah was barren she offered her maid, Hagar, as a concubine to Abraham and Hagar bore him Ishmael (Gen. 16). Peace hath conceived In addition to figurative senses, Elizabeth, Electress Palatine, daughter of James I, had given birth to her second son 24 December 1617 and was pregnant with her first daughter, Elizabeth, in the spring of 1618.

146 Jacob son of Isaac, but also in reference to James I, playing on the Latin form of his name, Jacobus

147 prevailed with God in allusion to Jacob's wrestling with God in the form of a man; when Jacob prevailed, his opponent conferred on him the blessing of changing Jacob's name to Israel (Gen. 32:24-8)

150 wants lacks; desires

151-3 Tyre...beasts in allusion to expanded trade resulting largely from expeditions on the part of the Muscovy (Russia), Levant, and East India Companies especially after 1609

151-2 Tyre...purples Tyre was famous for its scarlet or purple dye extracted from local shellfish.

152 India her spices Possibly in reference to the East Indies, which were famous for spices.

Afric Africa was believed to have rich gold mines.

Muscovy Russia

154 traffic goods, merchandise

159 frolic merry; free

161 trapped adorned

162 awful profoundly respectful

163 constantly resolutely, faithfully

164 party-headed partisan

166 strangers...country i.e. because they were abroad marshalling forces against the country's enemies

168-9 pastime amuse themselves

169 nonne...voluptas Surely it is a pleasure to remember these things? (Latin); possibly adapted from Ovid, Heroides, 18.55: 'namque est meminisse voluptas', for the memory has a charm for me.

170 pillars persons who are the main supporters of the state

171 prodigies persons whose deeds excite wonder

172 trans-shaped changed in form, transformed

175 two hospitals Possibly in reference to St Thomas's in Southwark and St Bartholomew's in West Smithfield, two of London's five main hospitals, which cared for 'the poor by casualty' including wounded soldiers, decayed housekeepers, and those visited with grievous disease, according to the 1633 edition of Stow's Survey of London.

177 twenty almshouses In 1618 several members of the Fishmongers' Company erected, at their own expense, 22 almshouses in the parish of St Mary's, Newington, where Middleton lived; King James named them 'St Peter's Hospital'.

The Peace-maker.

185 to gentler uses? O, but those cornfields must never be without some tares until the general harvest: Israel must not at once destroy all the inhabitants of the Land of Promise, but by little and little, lest they boast and say, it was our strength and not the Lord's hand that did it.

190 Nor shall our peace in her young plantation enjoy so full and perfect a tranquillity, but that there will be with us contentious Canaanites, seditious Jebusites, crafty Gibeonites, drunken Amorites, and arrogant Anakims.

195 Envy shall stand between and hold two brothers of either hand of her; sectarists and schismatics shall break the peace of God, wound the mother of peace (the Church), and bind together false brotherhoods to dissipate the unity and bonds of peace.

200 Law shall wrangle with her; Ebriety and Drink shall strike her, Pride and Ambition shall seek to overthrow her; yea, even her oily and most dangerous enemy, Hypocrisy, shall get within to strangle her; yet still shall she stand, and reign, and conquer. Invidiam pax prosternet. She shall mount to heaven and throw her enemies as low as hell, where peace shall never come.

205 Envy shall gnaw her own entrails, Schism shall perish, Law shall be silent, Drunkenness shall burst itself, Pride shall be humbled in her own habitation, and hollow-hearted Hypocrisy shall find no peace.

210 Ubi deorum numen prætenditur sceleribus, subit animum timor (Flamin. Consul.). Where the majesty of God is made a colour for mischief, a fear comes into that breast: his peace shall be tremblings and doubts and horrors; his heart shall then faint that told him before, like heart-stealing Absalom in his father's gates, thy cause was good, when it was not so. Or like the false and foolish prophets that told the people it was pax, pax, peace, peace, when it was no peace (Ezek. 13:10). 215

The walls were daubed with untempered mortar, and they shall fall, yet still shall Truth have Peace, and the Peacemaker shall preserve the truth; they shall dwell together and live together. The heavenly Soldiers have sung it; the Father hath sent it; the Son hath brought it; the blessed Dove shall preserve it, ever comfort us with it; our anointed hath received it; we do enjoy it, and see it plentiful in Israel. 220

Peace takes a view of such as do molest 225
And kindle most unquiet in her breast.

Put up the bell-bearer first, then all the flock will follow. Pride has lost her place, or comes behind for her greater state; 'tis Drunkenness that leads now—and mark the herd that troop after her. Lust follows close, Contention at her sleeve. Emulation on t'other side; Envy keeps the scent like a bloodhound; Revenge and Murder come coupled together. 230

The smaller-headed beasts are unseen yet, as Breach of Friendship, unlocking hearty secrets, Slander, Oaths and Blasphemies, fearful Invocations (all which custom hath driven so far distant from the soul's eye, as the moon from the ocular sight, whose body overbulks the Earth's large 235

183-4 O, but...harvest in reference to the parable of the tares, Matt. 13:24-39; Geneva-Tomson glosses the passage: 'Christ showeth in another parable of the evil seed mixed with the good that the Church shall never be free and quit from offences, both in doctrine and manners, until the day appointed for the restoring of all things do come, and therefore the faithful have to arm themselves with patience and constancy.'

190-1 Canaanites...Anakims Peoples who inhabited Canaan, the land of promise, previous to and concurrently with the Israelites, and deemed worldly and unsanctified enemies of the true people of God. Only the epithet 'crafty' appears to have particular relevance to the people named. The Gibeonites tricked the Israelites into making a treaty with the city of Gibeon (Josh. 9).

193 sectarists zealous members of a sect schismatics those who promote schism or disunity

197 Ebriety drunkenness

201 Invidiam...prosternet Peace will overthrow envy (Latin); untraced

204 Envy...entrails a common emblematic representation of Envy; cf. Middleton's contribution to Magnificent Entertainment, 2152-3

205 Drunkenness James I issued a number of proclamations aimed at reducing the incidence of drunkenness in the early years of his reign (despite his own addiction to alcohol); in A Counterblast to Tobacco he called drunkenness 'the root of all sins'.

208-9 Ubi...timor Livy 39.16.7; translated in the following line

209 Flamin. Consul. The quoted passage comes not from Livy's account of the consulship of Gaius Flaminius and M. Aemilius Lepidus (187 BC) but from that of his successors, Spurius Postumius Albinus and Quintus Marcius Philippus.

210 colour pretext

212-14 heart-stealing Absalom...not so in reference to Absalom's conspiracy to usurp David's throne; II Sam. 15:2 (Geneva): 'And Absalom rose up early, and stood hard by the entering in of the gate...'; 15:3: 'Then Absalom said unto him, See, thy matters are good and righteous, but there is no man deputed of the king to hear thee' and 15:6: 'And on this manner did Absalom to all Israel, that came to the king for judgement: so Absalom stole the hearts of the men of Israel.'

217-18 The walls...fall adapted from Ezek. 13:10-11 (Geneva): 'And therefore, because they have deceived my people, saying, Peace, and there was no peace: and one built up a wall, and behold, the others daubed it with untempered mortar, Say unto them which daub it with untempered mortar, that it shall fall...'

217 daubed coated, covered

220 heavenly Soldiers i.e. angels

220-1 heavenly Soldiers...sung it in reference to Luke 2:13-14 (Geneva-Tomson), with lyrics cited at ll. 642-3. Geneva-Tomson glosses 'a multitude of heavenly soldiers' (Luke 2:13): 'Whole armies of angels, which compass the majesty of God round about, as it were soldiers'.

222 Dove Spirit of God (in completion of the Trinity)

223 our anointed i.e. King James

227 Put up rouse; accuse; enclose bell-bearer the leading sheep of a flock from the neck of which hangs a bell

233 as namely

235-6 custom...eye in oblique allusion to St. Augustine's 'Consuetudo peccati tollit sensum peccandi': the custom of sinning takes away the feeling of sin

236-8 moon...centre apparently in reference to the belief that the moon was larger than the earth, found, for example, in Pliny, Natural History, II.viii.49; the earth's large centre would accordingly refer to the earth's size and position at the centre of the universe

237 ocular sight physical vision (as opposed to rational or spiritual observation, the soul's eye)

overbulks exceeds in size

centre, yet seems as little as her figure taken on the tavern sign, where these brutish orgies are celebrated), Abuse of Time, Riot, Prodigality, and lineal-succeeding Poverty. All these are Peace's professed Enemies, her domestic foes, who, unless this fore-battle be repulsed and suppressed in the first assault, the rest will follow, though to their own perdition.

245 Non ignota refero, these are no wonders with us. There may be monsters among them, but too familiar with our acquaintance. Examine the ringleader: Drunkness is no stranger in the world; she came in with the earth's first general curse, and he that 'scaped that inundation of waters tasted the deluge of wine. Shame fell on him, and his curse to posterity. Noah tasted one, and Ham felt the other. Lot had his portion in her: there Drunkness begat Incest (an unnatural issue of a brutish mother) and her succession, two wicked generations, Moab and Ammon. Drunkness played the part of a headsman with Holofernes, stooping his neck to the weak arm of a woman; and he that stopped the waters of Bethulia from others had so much of his own wine as made him senseless of either wine or water ever after.

260 Alexander inter epulas Clitum carissimum transfodit: the friend hath sprinkled his wine-bowls with the dear blood of his friend. O brutish sacrifice! O man unmanned! O absent man! Where, out of thyself, dost thou remain while this fiend possesseth thee? But why do we seek antiquities for proof of a practice so present with us? Had Israel any sin that England hath missed? Was Noah drunk, one of the ark, and one of the eight reeling there? It is eight to one that seven of eight do stagger here, if not the whole vessel.

It was a shame to one then, but custom hath made it no shame for all now. Did Lot commit incest with his own daughters? Could we not wish Drunkness to excuse us now? Does not Lust, her hellish handmaid, challenge this weapon hers? The example was too soon found, and yet too late to remember. O, would that had been the first, and that we might never know a second. Nec linguam nec manum continet ebrius, how many bosomed counsels have been vomited out of the mouth of a drunkard, though to the ruin and destruction of his former friend?

280 O insania voluntaria! O wilful madness of man, to depress and quench out all thy faculties of reason with this puddle Drunkness! Thou, that armed in thine own lordly fortitudes, canst reach the stars, measure the earth's large globe, search and understand the sea's profound abyss, yet in this sottish ignorance canst not find the depth of thine own stomach. The Jews' old proverb hath carried his full sense quite through Christendom: chomets ben yayin. Wine must needs acknowledge itself the parent of vinegar, meaning that a good father may have a different and saucy son. But we have from him the daughter of a worse hair: this common strumpet, Drunkness, whom almost all sorts do sleep with—not vinum ægrum, but ægrotum, is our issue, a sick and unwholesome harlot; yet hath spread herself into large offsprings, in most lineal and natural children, as Lust, Envy, Revenge, Murder, etc., all impious and turbulent peacebreakers.

295 O Peace! Shall we not fear thy longer abode with us if we embrace thee with no better love? How many loving friends have broke that diamond of amity (whose pieces once dissevered can never be reconciled) for the embrace

239 where i.e. in a tavern celebrated with a play on the celebration of eucharist 240 lineal-succeeding in the direct line of succession
 242 fore-battle advance battalion; advance engagement
 245 Non ignota refero I do not report strange matters (Latin); untraced
 251 Noah . . . other in reference to Ham's discovery of his father, Noah, naked in a state of drunkenness; in the Geneva Bible Ham's derisive and contemptuous report of his father's state to his brothers Shem and Japheth brought about Noah's curse on Ham's posterity, Gen. 9:20–5
 251–2 Lot . . . incest in allusion to Lot's daughters plying their father with wine in preparation for incestuous union to preserve his seed, Gen. 19:32–8
 253 issue offspring
 254 Moab and Ammon sons of Lot by his daughters; Ammon is more commonly referred to as Ben-ammi, Gen. 19:38
 255 Holofernes The Assyrian King Nebuchadnezzar's chief general who, after laying siege to the Israelites at Bethulia, was beguiled by the charms of Judith. When he succumbed to drink in anticipation of her submission to him, she cut off his head; Jth. 2:4–13:20.

 260 Alexander . . . transfodit Alexander stabbed Clitus, his dearest friend, at a banquet (Latin); a slightly modified version of Seneca, Epistle 83.19 or Of Anger III.17.1.
 262 brutish sacrifice in contrast to the Christian sacrifice (which also involves wine and blood) man unmanned Alexander (an epitome of manhood) deprived of manly attributes; also contrasting with the paradox of Christ's incarnation
 262–3 absent man i.e. in reference to the disappearance of the drunkard's rational faculties and loss of self-control; also in contrast to 'present God' of Christian sacrament
 266–7 one . . . reeling there The eight who survived the flood consisted of Noah, his three sons (Ham, Shem, and Japheth), and their respective wives; only one of this number succumbed to drink (Noah).
 272 challenge claim

274 late recent; delayed
 275–6 Nec . . . ebrius The drunkard restrains neither tongue nor hand (Latin); adapted from Seneca, Epistle 83.20
 279 O insania voluntaria O condition of insanity purposely assumed (Latin); probably adapted from Seneca, Epistle 83.18
 284–5 canst not . . . stomach i.e. his stomach is bottomless
 286 chomets ben yayin vinegar, son of wine (Hebrew); derived from The Babylonian Talmud. Seder Nezikin. Baba Mezi'a, fol. 83b, which remained untranslated into Latin until later in the century and did not appear in English until the late nineteenth century. A citation in some as yet unidentified work seems the likeliest source.
 289 saucy with a pun on the senses 'highly seasoned, piquant' and 'insolent'
 290 hair kind, nature
 291 vinum ægrum . . . ægrotum sour wine . . . diseased (Latin); untraced
 293 spread dispersed
 296 fear doubt

300 of a lascivious courtesan whose arms are like the iron idol that crushed the cursed sacrifices in pieces?

305 Envy! O what does that ulcus animæ amongst us? That Etna in a man that continually burns itself, intus et extra, within and without; that, like the cantharides found feeding on the fairest and flourishing roses, so Envy is ever opposed against the most sweet, noble, flourishing, and peaceful blossoms. Were she as rare as the comparison, I could call her phoenix, and wish that this day she would burn herself and leave her ashes issueless.

310 Revenge! Whence have we borrowed thee? O Sal-moneus' terror: shall we play with thunder and lightning, and follow thy precipitated fate? Shall we snatch the sword (the peculiar sword) from the Almighty hand? Have we received wrongs on earth? Consider then if we have done
315 no wrongs to heaven. If we stand guilty there (as, quis non?), do we then revenge? No, we stand disobedient and repugnant to our own just punishments. We have a milder Sister given in her stead: Justice, the arbiter of our injuries. But Vengeance is God's alone, which no man ought to 320 take in hand, but as delivered from his hand; nor so to imitate his Majesty and Greatness that does it not but by authority, and in the way and path of his goodness.

Murder! O Cain-created sin! Cursed catastrophe of all the rest! This is summum opus: here is the full point and 325 end of the labour. All the precedent travellers are here at home, the end hazardous the endless end: fearful spectacle! Here is capital sacrilege, the temple of a holy spirit robbed and ruined. Here is treason in the highest degree: the workmanship and image of the Creator defaced. Un-330 happy passive, but more, and most of all, unhappy active! Thou that dost murder dost first deface Him in thyself, then in thy brother. God is the God of Peace, of Mercy, Meekness, Long Suffering, and Loving Kindness: all these hast thou expelled from thyself and lost thy shape with them; there is neither Peace, Mercy, Meekness, Sufferance, 335 nor Love in thee. Then in thy brother thou destroyest them. His blood is vox clamans; and he is enforced in death from the many mouths of his wounds to cry out for revenge. But is heaven far off, and will not that move us? Look upon the deed then with natural pity (or a conscience, 340 which is as inseparable as thy soul, that shall not leave thee living). Behold a brother weeping over his brother, a distracted mother tearing her hair and rending her heart for her child's loss, a friend with tears embalming his dear friend's body, a raving father ready to send his soul after 345 his son, yea, perhaps his only son, his name and posterity destroyed with him. Then brothers, friends, mothers, fathers, all their curses to be thrown on thee. Are heaven and earth both dull motives to thee? O, beware the third place: let hell affright thee, and let thy conscience describe 350 it to thee.

I return to that which I would wish thee never to pass—and then thou canst not come to the unblessed discovery of it—and its paths, before recited, that lead thee to it: Peace. Stay and abide with her and thou shalt never know 355 her enemies, God's enemies, and thine own enemies. Let them that seek peace, find peace, enjoy peace, and have their souls laid up in eternal peace.

Of wise men I discourse, by injuries never shaken.

What reputation is, I show: a thing so long mistaken. 360

In this small particle consists the ground of all quarrels whatsoever, either by suspecting false things, or by aggravating small things. Now how far these two are from the ways of a wise man, and how ill-becoming, reason 365 makes manifest, for suspicion and aggravation are the offsprings of passion, and a wise man is free from passion.

Nor can there be a greater argument of defect and despair of merit in man than suspicion; and mark her

300-1 iron idol . . . pieces The passage is reminiscent of several Biblical elements: the image that had legs of iron and broke all that opposed it in pieces, Dan. 2:32 ff., the stone cut without hands that destroyed the image, Dan. 2:34 and 45, and the whore of Babylon, Rev. 17.

302 ulcus animæ ulcer of the spirit (Latin); untraced

303-4 intus et extra inside and outside (Latin); untraced

304 cantharides properly an insect commonly called Spanish fly, but probably used here, as often in early writers, for 'aphides'

308 phoenix the fabled bird, of which only one existed at any time, that lived 500 or 600 years in the Arabian desert, was consumed by flame, and then rose anew from its own ashes

310-11 Sal-moneus' terror Arrogantly boasting that he was greater than Zeus, Sal-moneus drove through his city a chariot fitted with noise-making devices and threw torches into the air to simulate thunder and lightning. Zeus destroyed his city and hurled him into Tartarus with a thunderbolt; derived from the accounts by Diodorus Siculus 4.68 and Apollodorus, 1.9.7-8.

312 precipitated violently cast down
312-13 sword . . . hand i.e. the sword of justice; Geneva-Tomson glosses Matt. 26:51: 'They take the sword to whom the Lord hath not given it, that is to say, they which use the sword, and are not called to it.'

313 peculiar own particular

315-16 quis non? who [does] not? (Latin); untraced

317-18 milder Sister Justice (Dike) was the sister of Peace (Eirene) and Discipline (Eunomia), who together were referred to as the Horae. They were sisters also of the three fates (Moirai), who may be confused or mixed here with the avenging furies (Erinyes).

319 Vengeance . . . alone Deut. 32:35

323 Cain-created Gen. 4:8

323-4 catastrophe . . . rest disastrous end or conclusion of the sequence embracing Drunkenness, Envy, Revenge

324 summum opus the highest part of the work (Latin); untraced

325 precedent travellers i.e. as Pride, Drunkenness, Envy, Revenge

326 end . . . endless end conclusion (or death) risking eternal damnation

330 passive . . . active 'suffering action brought about by external agency' (e.g. as the victim of some action) as opposed to 'originating or exerting action upon others' (e.g. as the perpetrator of murder)

337 vox clamans a voice crying (Latin); untraced

342 living i.e. while you are alive

343 distracted mentally deranged

361 particle i.e. reputation

362 suspecting imagining something to be evil, false, or undesirable on slight or no grounds

- 370 nutriment, what strange food passion hath provided for
it. It feeds upon false things, for indeed, true things are not to be suspected. And how just the punishment meets with the offence: in erring from the truth, it hath falsehood for a reward. But in peiora ruunt omnia, the worse devil is behind.
- 375 The aggravation of small things, when a spark shall grow to a flaming beacon, a word to a wound, the lie to a life; when every man will be the master of his own revenge, presuming to give law to themselves, and in rage to right their own wrongs, at which time the sword is 380 extorted out of the hand of magistracy, contrary to the sacred ordinance of the Almighty.
- Now the wise and understanding man is not subject or exposed to any of these injuries whatsoever; neither cares he how many darts of malice or contumely are 385 shot against him, since he knows that he cannot be pierced. Even as there are certain hard stones which iron cannot enter; and the adamant will neither be cut, filed, nor beaten to powder, but abateth the edge of those instruments that are applied unto it; and as there are 390 certain things which cannot be consumed with fire, but continue their hardness and habitude amidst the flames;
and as the rocks that are fixed in the heart of the sea break the waves and retain no impression of the storms that have assailed them; so the heart of a wise man is solid,
- 370-1 true things ... suspected genuine things are not disposed to be imagined guilty or false
- 373 in peiora ruunt omnia all things fall quickly into ruin in worse states (Latin); untraced
- 380 extorted wrested
- 382-97 Now ... mention of probably derived from Thomas Lodge's translation of Seneca's Works (1614), Of the Constancy of a Wise Man, 3.5: 'I say then that a wise man is not subject or exposed to any injury whatsoever; neither careth he how many darts are shot against him since he knoweth that he cannot be pierced. Even as there are certain hard stones which iron cannot enter; and the adamant will neither be cut, filed, or beat to powder, but abateth the edge of these tools that are applied unto it; as there are certain things which cannot be consumed by fire, but continue their hardness and habitude amidst the flames; and even as the rocks that are fixed in the heart of the sea break the waves and, although they have been assaulted and beat upon many infinite times, retain no impression of the storms that have assailed them; even so the heart of a wise man is solid, and hath gathered such force that he is as secure from injury as those I made mention of.'
- 384 contumely reproachful treatment, disgrace
- 387 adamant very hard mineral identified with diamond
- 391 habitude constitution, essential character
- 397-402 Not that ... heaven translation of Seneca, Constancy, 4.1, with some resemblances to Lodge: 'What then, is there no man that will attempt to do injury to a wise man? Yes, he will attempt, but he shall not attain unto him; for he is so highly raised above all the attaints of worldly things that there is no violence whatsoever that can aim his attempts so high ... All their endeavours shall be frustrate before a wise man be offended, even as arrows and bullets that are shot into the air mount more high than our sight, but they fall back again without touching heaven.'
- 398 attaints blows; stains
- 402-6 and as ... effect translation of Seneca, Constancy, 4.2 with some resemblances to Lodge: 'Even as celestial things are not subject to human hands, and they that overturn temples and melt down images do no ways hurt the deity, so whatsoever is attempted either crabbedly, immodestly, or proudly against a wise man is done in vain.'
- 406-8 and are ... world translation of Seneca, Constancy, 9.1, which reads in Lodge: 'He therefore endureth all these misfortunes as he would abide the rigour of the winter, rains, heats, and other accidents ...', possibly conflated with the marginal commentary: 'All injuries to a wise man are but as cold and heat, rain and sickness.'
- 412 pre-fix fix or appoint beforehand
- 413-14 Quis ... irascitur translated in following line (Latin); Seneca, Constancy, 13.1
- 414-24 For what ... insolencies derived from Lodge's translation of Seneca, Constancy, 13.1-2: '... for what physician is angry with a lunatic person? Who will interpret a sick man's reproaches to the worst that is vexed with a fever, and is forbidden to drink cold water? The same affection hath a wise man towards all men as the physician hath towards his sick patients, who disdaineth not to handle their privities if they have need of remedy, nor to see their urines and excrements, nor to hear the outrages which fear maketh them to utter. The wise man knoweth that all these which jet in their gowns, or are apparelled in purple, who, although they are well coloured and fair, are sick and diseased, whom in no other sort he looketh upon but as intemperate sick men. Therefore is he not angry with them if during their sickness they have been so bold as to speak injuriously against him who would heal them; and as he setteth light by all their honours, so tormenteth he himself as little with their despite and insolencies.'
- and hath gathered such invincible force that he stands as secure from injury as those insensible substances I made mention of. Not that injuries are not offered him, but that he admits them not, so highly raised above all the attaints of worldly wrongs that all their violences shall be frustrate before a wise man be offended. Even as arrows or bullets that are shot into the air mount higher than our sight, but they fall back again without touching heaven; and as celestial things are not subject to human hands; and they that overturn temples do no way hurt the godhead to whom they are consecrated; so, whatsoever injuries are attempted against a wise man return without effect, and are to him but as cold or heat, rain or hail, the weather of the world.
- And for words of contumely, it is held so small, and so slight an injury as no wise man complains or revengeth himself for it: therefore, neither do the laws themselves pre-fix any penalty thereunto, not imagining that they would ever be burdensome. Quis enim phrenetico medicus irascitur? For what physician is angry with a lunatic person? Who will interpret a sick man's reproaches to the worst, that is vexed of a fever? Why, the same affection hath a wise man toward all men as the physician hath toward his sick patients: not offended to hear their outrages, he looks upon them as upon intemperate sick men, therefore is not angry with them if during their sickness they have been so bold as to speak injuriously against him. And as he sets light by all their words of honour, so torments he himself as little with all their despite and insolencies. For he that is displeased for an injury that is done him will likewise be glad to be honoured at his hands that did it, which a wise man is free from. For he that revenges a contumely honours him that did it in taking it so much to heart and respecting it.

Art thou angry with thy superior? Alas, death is at hand, which shall make us equals. Dost thou wish him with whom thou art displeased any more than death? Although thou attemptest nothing against him, he shall be sure of that. Thou lovest thy labour then in offering to do that which will be done without thee.

We laugh, saith the wisest of philosophers, in beholding the conflict of the bull and bear when they are tied one to another, which after they have tired one another, the butcher attends for them both to drive them to the slaughterhouse. The like do we. We challenge him that is coupled with us: brother or friend, we charge him on every side; meanwhile both the conqueror and conquered are near unto their ruin. Rather let us finish that little remainder of our life in quiet and peace that our end may be a pleasure to no man.

Thou wishest a man's death! And there is always but a little difference betwixt the day of thy desire and the affliction of the sufferer.

Whilst we are therefore amongst men, let us embrace humanity, be dreadful and dangerous to no man. Let us contemn injuries and contumelies, for but looking back we may behold death presently attending us.

Pisistratus, that lived a tyrant in Athens, being for his cruelty mocked and reprov'd by a drunken man, answered that he was no more angry with him than if a blindfold fellow, having his eyes bound up, should run upon him.

Another said to his friend, 'I prithee, chastise my servant with strokes because I am angry,' intimating thus much: that a servant ought not to fall into his power that is not master of himself.

But now the compounding of quarrels is grown to a trade. And as a most worthy father of law and equity

424 despite contempt, scorn
 424-8 For he...respecting it possibly adapted from Lodge's translation of Seneca, Constancy, 13.5: '...now if but once he embase himself so far as either he be moved with injury or contumely, he can never be secure; but security is the proper good of a wise man. Neither will he endure that by revenging the contumely that is offered him [lest] he honour him that did the same; for it must needs be that he whosoever is displeased for an injury that is done him will likewise be glad to be honoured at his hands.'

429 Art...superior adapted from Seneca, Of Anger, III.4.3.1, possibly derived from Lodge's translation: '...who is so bitter and troublesome to his superiors? Why fretteth thou at thy servant? Thy lord? Thy king? Why art thou angry with thy client?'

429-30 Alas...equals possibly derived from Lodge's translation of Seneca, Of Anger, III.4.3.1: 'Bear with him a little: behold, death is at hand which shall make us equals.'

430-4 Dost thou...without thee from Lodge's translation of Seneca, Of Anger, III.4.3.3: 'Dost thou wish him with whom thou art displeased any more than death? Although thou sayest nothing to him, he shall die; thou lovest thy labour, thou wilt do that which will be done.'

435-44 We laugh...no man from Lodge's translation of Seneca, Of Anger, III.4.3.2, which includes 'We were wont to laugh'

(not in Seneca): 'We were wont to laugh, in beholding the combats which are performed on the sands in the morning, to mark the conflict of the bull and bear when they are tied one to another, which, after they have tired one another, the butcher attendeth for them both to drive them to the slaughterhouse. The like to do we. We challenge him that is coupled with us, we charge him on every side; meanwhile both the conquered and the conqueror are near unto their ruin. Rather let us finish that little remainder of our life in quiet and peace, and let not our death be a pleasure to any man.'

445-51 Thou wishest...attending us probably adapted from Lodge's translation of Seneca, Of Anger, III.4.3.4-5: 'Dost thou wish him with whom thou art displeased any more than death?...there is but a very little difference betwixt the day of thy desire until the punishment which such a one shall endure...Whilst we are amongst men let us embrace humanity, let us be dreadful or dangerous to no man; let us contemn detriments, injuries, slanders, and garboils, and with great minds suffer short incommodities, whilst we look behind us, as they say, and turn ourselves: behold, death doth presently attend us.'

450 contemn despise
 452-6 Pisistratus...upon him probably derived from Lodge's translation of Seneca, Of Anger, III.11.4: 'It is reported that Pisistratus, a tyrant in Athens, when as a certain drunken man that sat at banquet with him had spoken many things against his cruelty (and there wanted not some who would have executed whatsoever he should have commanded, and one man on this side and another on the other laboured to enkindle his displeasure) that he took all things patiently, and answered those that provoked him after this manner, that he was no more angry with him than if a blindfold fellow having his eyes tied up should run upon him.'

457-60 Another...himself derived from Lodge's translation of Of Anger, III.12.7, which specifies Plato as the angered party and Speusippus as his friend: '...and notwithstanding because his servant had committed some fault that was worthy punishment, he said unto Speusippus, "I pray thee chastise my servant with strokes because I am angry." He beateth him not for that which another had beaten him: "I am angry," said he, "I shall do more than I should. I will do it more willingly. Let not this servant be in his power that is not master of himself.'"

461 compounding settling
 462 trade (1) occupation, business; (2) habitual course of action father of law and equity i.e. Sir Francis Bacon, in 1618 named Chancellor; the court of chancery elevated equity over precedent 465 speaks, there be some counsel learned of duels that teach young gentlemen when they are beforehand and when behindhand, and thereby incense and incite them to the duel, and make an art of it: the spur and incitement, false and erroneous imagination of honour and credit, when most commonly those golden hopes end in a halter.

470 That folly and vainglory should cast so thick a mist before the eye of gentry! To fix their aim and only end upon reputation, and end most lamentably without it; nay, farthest from it: first to hazard the eternal death of their souls, and the surviving bodies to die the death of a cutpurse.

475 A miserable effect and most horrid resolution when young men, full of towardness and hope, such as the poets call auroræ filii, the sons of the morning, in whom the sweet expectation and comfort of their friends consists, shall be cast away and ruined for ever in so vain a business.

480 But much more is it to be deplored when so much noble and gentle blood shall be spilt upon such follies which, adventured in honourable service, were able to make the fortune of a day and to change the fortune of a kingdom.

485 It is evident then how desperate an evil this is which troubles peace, disfurnishes war, brings sudden calamity upon private men, peril upon the state, and contempt upon the law.

They pretend above all things to regard honour, yet chiefly seek the dishonour of God and of justice, and, which is worse than madness in those men, that adventuring to leave this life in anger, presume to press into the next (to the supper of the Lamb, which is all Peace and Love) without Peace, Love, or Charity. O, that gentlemen would learn to esteem themselves at a just price! How dearly they are bought, how most precious their redemption!

The root of this offence is stubborn—for it despiseth death, which is the utmost of all temporal punishments—and had need of the severity used in France, where the man-slayers, though gentlemen of great quality, are hanged with their wounds bleeding, lest a natural death should prevent the example of justice.

This punctuality of reputation is no better than a bewitching sorcery that enchants the spirits of young men, like the smoke of fashion, that witch tobacco, which hath quite blown away the smoke of hospitality, and turned the chimneys of their forefathers into the noses of their children. And by all computation (if computation may be kept for folly), I think the vapour of the one and the vainglory of the other came into England much upon a voyage, and hath kept as close together as the report follows the powder.

463–6 there . . . of it taken with minor changes from The Charge of Sir Francis Bacon, Knight, His Majesty's Attorney General, Touching Duels, upon an Information in the Star Chamber against Priest and Wright (1614), sigs. D4^v–E1: 'Nay, I hear there be some counsel learned of duels that tell young men when they are beforehand and when they are otherwise, and thereby incense and incite them to the duel, and make an art of it.'

466–8 the spur . . . halter Cf. Bacon, The Charge, E1: 'I hope I shall meet with some of them too, and I am sure, my lords, this course of preventing duels in nipping them in the bud is fuller of clemency and providence than the suffering them to go on, and hanging men with their wounds bleeding, as they did in France.'

468 halter i.e. on the gallows

475–80 A miserable . . . business taken in slightly altered form from Bacon, The Charge, B1^v–B2: 'Again, my lords, it is a miserable effect when young men full of towardness and hope, such as the poets call auroræ filii, sons of the morning, in whom the expectation and comfort of their friends consisteth, shall be cast away and destroyed in such a vain manner.'

477 auroræ filii translated in the following phrase; Virgil, Aeneid 1.751, where the reference is to Memnon, the son of Aurora, who was slain by Achilles

481–4 But much . . . kingdom derived from Bacon, The Charge, B2: ' . . . but much more it is to be deplored when so much noble and gentle blood shall be spilt upon such follies, as, if it were adventured in the field in service of the king and realm, were able to make the fortune of a day, and to change the fortune of a kingdom'.

481–2 noble and gentle i.e. of the nobility and gentry

483–4 make . . . day win a battle

485–8 It is . . . law derived from Bacon, The Charge, B2: 'So as your lordships see what a desperate evil this is: it troubleth peace, it disfurnisheth war, it bringeth calamity upon private men, peril upon the state, and contempt upon the law.'

491–4 that adventuring . . . Charity essentially from Henry Howard, Earl of Northampton's (but published anonymously), A Publication of His Majesty's Edict (1613), p. 11: ' . . . that adventuring to leave this life in passion, presume to press in the next, to the supper of the lamb without charity . . .'

496 bought procured, obtained

497 redemption ransom, the price of their deliverance (i.e. their lives)

498–9 The root . . . punishments taken in slightly modified form from Bacon, The Charge, C1^v: ' . . . the root of this offence is stubborn, for it despiseth death, which is the utmost of punishments . . .'

500–3 severity . . . justice adapted from Bacon, The Charge, C1^v: 'And yet the late severity in France was more, where by a kind of martial law established by ordinance of the king and parliament, the party that had slain another was presently had to the gibbet, in so much as gentlemen of great quality were hanged, their wounds bleeding, lest a natural death should prevent the example of justice.'

504 punctuality punctiliousness

506–9 witch tobacco . . . children possibly a nod to James I's A Counterblast to Tobacco (1604)

511 upon in consequence of

512 voyage a possible allusion to Sir Walter Raleigh, a conspicuous patron of tobacco. Mistrusted by James I and imprisoned in the Tower from 1603 to 1616, Raleigh emblemized for James military heroism—largely anti-Spanish—associated with Elizabeth's reign and now out of favour. He was arrested soon after his return in June 1618 from his final, disastrous voyage to the New World and subsequently beheaded.

report i.e. the sound of a gunshot

513 powder gunpowder (i.e. the ignition of the powder)

515 For when, but in the latterness of these times, hath so much private and domestic blood been shed? Like the three Jewish brothers in that perplexed history of Jerusalem, who, wanting enemies, still flew upon themselves.
 So these malicious, unthankful spirits, fattened with the abundant blessings of a mellifluous peace, disgorge them-520 selves upon their Christian brothers, like those that surfeit upon too much honey.

And well may this vainglory, or opinion of reputation, be called a satanical illusion and apparition of honour against religion, law, moral virtue, and against all the 525 honourable precedents and examples of the best times and valiantest nations. For hereby have gentlemen lost the true knowledge and understanding of fortitude and valour.
 For true fortitude distinguisheth of the grounds of quarrels whether they be just; and not only so, but whether they 530 be worthy; and sets a better value upon men's lives than to bestow them idly—which are not so to be trifled away, but offered up and sacrificed to honourable services, public merits, good causes, and noble adventures.

And behold here thy folly: thou attemptest a way freely 535 to lose thy soul eternally, but not thy reputation. Fool that thou art, in offering to save that which indeed is nothing, thou lovest all! For reputation is but another man's opinion, and opinion is no substance for thee to consist of. For how canst thou consist of a thing that is 540 without thee? Which may be any man's at an instant as well as thine; and when thou hast it, it is but a breath.
 And of what certainty or permanence is it when they must die that give it thee?

Perhaps because some have said that fame hath a 545 perpetuity, thou hasten'st to lose thy soul to provide for thy name. How much thou deceivest thyself! Why, it is no more than the echo of a glory, for as an echo no longer resounds than it is fed with a voice, no longer does fame sound forth man's praises than it is supplied and cherished with deservings. For when thy noise ceases in itself, it will 550 quickly cease the noise of thee. However, at the farthest a general dissolution will come when fame, that is next to nothing now, shall have no being then at all.

Happy is then the wise and understanding spirit. For, though he be injured, he can lose nothing thereby, neither 555 his fame nor reputation, for a wise man entertains nothing that is subject to loss. Fortune takes nothing but what she hath given. She gives not virtue, nor wisdom; therefore cannot take that away.

The more thou thinkest upon reputation, the farther off 560 thou art from all contention, unless custom in ignorance or wilfulness in nature make thee throw an abuse upon the word. For what is reputation but consideration? A diligent weighing, considering, and revolving in the mind?
 And that is quite opposite to rashness: truth will shame
 565 thee if thou confess not so much.

There can be then no reputation in rashness; that is manifest. And what are quarrels but the fruits of rashness?
 There can be then no reputation in quarrels.

And as it is consideration, it were dreadful to think that 570 any man in the state of his best counsel and advisedness should attempt to destroy the image of his Creator in the life of his Christian brother. And therefore divinely have our human laws bent their hate and punishments against the abhorred act committed in cold blood, which is as 575 wilful an opposition against man's life (considering what he does) as blasphemy against the Word of Truth, the conscience knowing it offends of set purpose (the only sin against the Holy Ghost). And as the body of every true Christian is said to be the Temple of the Holy Ghost (1 580 Cor. 3:16), what does the accursed man-slayer but in the blood of his brother destroys the temple, as the blasphemous wounds the Lord of the Temple?

Behold then, not without a face of horror, the miserable 585 condition the sons of this age run into. All they venture for 516-17 three Jewish... themselves Presumably in allusion to the self-destructive strife among three rival Jewish factions led respectively by Eleazar, John, and Simon that broke out within Jerusalem during peaceful intervals in the Romans' siege of the city, set out in an account by Thomas Nashe in Christ's Tears Over Jerusalem derived from Josephus, The Jewish War.

516 perplexed complicated, intricate
 519 mellifluous playing on the etymological meaning: 'honey-flowing'

522 opinion favourable estimate, esteem
 523-6 satanical... nations from Bacon, The Charge, B2^v: '... and a kind of satanical illusion and apparition of honour; against religion, against law, against moral virtue, and against the precedents and examples of the best times and valiantest nations...'

526-33 For hereby... adventures from Bacon, The Charge, B3-B3^v: '... men have almost lost the true notion and understanding of fortitude and valour. For fortitude distinguisheth of the grounds of quarrels, whether they be just; and not only so, but whether they be worthy; and setteth a better price upon men's lives than to bestow them idly. Nay, it is weakness and disesteem of a man's self to put a man's life upon such ledger performances. A man's life is not to be trifled away, it is to be offered up and sacrificed to honourable services, public merits, good causes, and noble adventures.'

540 without outside of

554-9 Happy... away probably adapted from Lodge's translation of Seneca, Constancy, 5.3-4: 'Injury hath this intent to harm some man. But wisdom leaveth no place for evil: for there is no evil for her but vice, which cannot enter there where virtue and honesty dwell; and therefore injury doth not affect a wise man: for if injury be the sufferance of some evil, and a wise man cannot suffer evil, there is no evil that appertaineth to a wise man. Every injury is a diminution of him to whom it is offered, and no man may receive any injury without some detriment either in honour, body, or in goods, but a wise man can lose nothing. He hath all his good enclosed in himself. He no ways putteth confidence in fortune; he entirely possesseth his riches, contenting himself with virtue, which hath no need of accidental things, and therefore may neither increase nor decrease. For having attained to the height, there is no place for increase. Fortune taketh away nothing but that which she hath given; she giveth not virtue, and therefore cannot take it away'.

556 entertains cherishes

577-9 blasphemy... Holy Ghost in reference to Matt. 12:31-2, Mark 3:28-9, or Luke 12:10

is to bring the bloodiness of their action into the compass of Honour—as if Honour consisted in destruction. Now what impossibility follows that labour even the weakest may conjecture. For Honour is the rumour of a beautiful and virtuous action which redoundeth from our souls to the view of the world, and by reflection into ourselves, bringing to us a testimony of that which others believe of us, which turns to a great peace and contentment of mind—blessings which were never yet found in a bloodshedder, let his cause be never so glorious. And where there is no Peace, all other benefits have a cessation. It is the only health of thy soul; and that once lost, thy soul sickens immediately, even to death, and can no more taste or relish a joy after than a sick man's palate his nutriment.

Is not this then a delusion of Honour? Nay, can there be anything more delusive? Alas, when it is at the greatest height of human glory, it is of a small and slender efficacy, uncertain, a stranger, and as it were separated in the air from him that is honoured. For it does not only not enter into him, nor is inward and essential unto him, but it does not so much as touch him. A poor and miserable purchase at the best for so great and eternal a hazard!

Flatter not thy soul then to her everlasting ruin in thinking reputation consists in bloodshedding. Sanguis clamat, as the Almighty speaks in the letter of his own law. Blood cries, and with a louder voice to Heaven than thy fame can sound on Earth. Rumour's ten thousand tongues are hoarse to that. They compass but some nook or angle of the World; the other reaches from the field to Heaven.

'The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the earth' (Gen. 4:10). And no sooner the Cry comes but the Curse follows in the very next words: 'Now therefore thou art cursed from the earth, which hath opened her mouth to receive thy brother's blood from thy hand.' And immediately in the next, 'A vagabond and a runagate shalt thou be on the earth', which shows the horror of the guilty conscience, which, after the deed done, would fain fly from itself: a distraction which follows all the children of wrath unto this day.

Well may peace then have the excellency of her glorious name advanced above all titles and inscriptions: and so much the rather in that it pleaseth the Almighty Creator himself to be called the God of Peace, and the Author (I Cor. 14:33), nay, Love itself, delighting in the name (I John 4:16): 'God is love, and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him.' And (I Thess. 5:23), 'Now the very God of Peace sanctify you throughout, etc.' Christ the Saviour of the World, the Lamb of Peace (John 1:29): 'Behold, the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world.' There is Peace made in taking sin away, which is the only fuel of Wrath. And (Eph. 2:14), 'Christ is our Peace, which hath made of both, one, and hath broken the stop of the partition wall.'

Moreover, the heavenly Soldiers at the birth of Christ, praising God, said, 'Glory be to God, in the high Heavens, and Peace in Earth, and toward men, good will.'

And as his most blessed nativity was the Fountain of Peace, there wanted not the fruits that sprang from that sacred Fountain in his departure (John 14:27): 'Peace I leave with you; my peace I give unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, nor fear.' Let not your heart, speaking to many, because all his ought to be of one heart, which is a work of Peace.

And not leaving, but in the same evangelist (John 14:16), 'I will pray my Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever': intimating thereby the eternal Peace of Soul and Conscience by the coming of the Holy Ghost, calling him in the words immediately following (John 14:17), 'Even the Spirit of Truth,' (John 14:26) 'whom the Father will send in my name'. He comes all Peace, and in the name of Peace, of Christ our Saviour.

And to add more glory to the name of Peace, behold how the incomprehensible Godhead desires to be comprehended all into Unity, Trinity in Unity, which shows that Unity is the Conserver, Sustainer, and Comprehender of all things, both in Heaven and Earth.

Thou, therefore, that in the madness of thy blood attemptest to destroy Unity, thou seekest to destroy that which Heaven and Earth is sustained by. Most miserable of creatures, thy soul hath but one supporter, and in the tempest of thy fury thou overturnest that and all.

Peace enters here in arms and overthrows

By force of her own strength her strongest foes.

And first behold her contending with her most honourable enemy, even he that with better authority may slay his ten thousand than any other his thousand, ay, his hundred, yea, one single life (either the haughty challenge,

588 weakest feeblest intellect

609 Flatter deceive with false hopes

610-11 Sanguis clamat blood cries out

(Latin); cited in A Publication of His Majesty's Edict, 11; probably derived from Gen. 4:10, quoted at ll. 617-18

613-14 Rumour's...tongues Rumour was conventionally emblemized as a figure adorned with many tongues and eyes.

637 sins Various versions of the Bible read 'sin'; but Geneva-Tomson glosses the passage: 'That is, that root of sins, to wit, our corruption, and so consequently the fruits of sin, which are commonly called in the plural number, sins.'

638-40 Christ...partition wall essentially drawn from Geneva-Tomson

640 broken...partition wall The gloss in Geneva-Tomson reads: 'As by the ceremonies and worship appointed by the Law, the Jews were divided from the Gentiles, so now Christ, having broken down the partition wall, joineth them both together, both in himself, and betwixt themselves, and to God.'

the stop piece that keeps a part fixed in its place partition wall internal wall dividing one room or portion of a building from another 641 heavenly Soldiers See ll. 220-1 and note.

642-3 Glory...will Luke 2:14 (Geneva-Tomson)

646-8 Peace...fear Geneva-Tomson

661-2 comprehended included, contained the curious duel, or the blood-thirsty revenge): to wit, War itself, sometimes a principal arrow shot from the heavenly Bow of Justice, a forced Arbitrator betwixt different Kingdoms, and often proves the dear Moderator. Yet this great Soldier, with all his attributes of Fame and Honour, falls far short of our high-throned Empress, Peace.

Mark how the philosopher hath ordered this battle and given the colonies to both these great commanders: Pacem cum omnibus habebis, bellum cum vitiiis. Have peace with all the world, only war with thy sins. Melior et tutior est certa pax quam incerta victoria: for more safe and noble is a certain peace than a doubtful victory, with all his honours attending.

But let us believe no cowardly philosophers; let him that in his hand holds both, and from his hand sends both, be the Judge betwixt us.

When was war sent as a blessing, or peace as a punishment? Let his judges judge our cause (Judg. 5:8): 'They chose new gods, then was war in the gates.' Here is an Offence and here is a Punishment: Idolatry and War.

Again, 'They turn to the Lord, and the land had Peace forty years.' Here is Penitence, and here is the Blessing: Serving God, and Peace.

If then the General of Blood and Death, even War itself, be a prodigy, a curse, and not a blessing, what shall his base imitator be? What Honour shall the challenger lay challenge to? What blood shall the Revenger dare to shed? Or what Fame shall the schoolmaster of duels achieve, with all his vainglorious and punctual orders of firsts and seconds, lengths of weapons, distances of place, heights of grounds, equalities of wind and sun? O wicked Ashkelon and her suburbs, let them be taken and destroyed together. Why do we quarrel? What is the end of the fairest War? To enjoy Peace. See how the servant labours for the mistress, and foolish they that enjoy their inheritance, yet know it not: thriftless gamesters to play for their own money.

Is thy night quiet, and sweet with Peace? Embrace her in the day and keep her continually. If thou letst blood into thy bosom in the day, Peace will not stay with thee at night. Peace wears no parti-coloured coat, no mixed scarlet and white, but white in her purity; nor fat nor blood must be eaten in the Peace-offering (Lev. 3). Now ascend Abarim and climb up to the Mountain of Nebo, and see some part of the Land of Promise, whither this blessed Peace shall lead thee, if she be thy conduct: but be sure to look upwards, and then thou canst not fear the depth beneath thee.

Behold the Father (the God of Peace), the Son (the Lamb of Peace), the blessed Spirit (the Dove of Peace), the Angels (Servants and Ministers to this power of Peace); infinites and all rejoicing at one soul's entrance into Peace.

Behold the new Jerusalem, Kiriath-salem, the City of Peace. That which was militant and troubled in the wilderness (the Church), behold it there triumphant in ever-blessed Peace. That Peace, which as it is unintelligible, so is it most unutterable.

Then, if we desire to be inhabitants in this Land of Promise and Peace, observe our entrance. We have yet two mountains to pass over Jordan by: Gerizim and Ebal; and the twelve tribes placed on each side, both to bless or curse us:

676 curious fastidious; skilful
 683 colonies territories (i.e. the matters under contention between Peace and War)
 683-4 Pacem...vitiis translated in the following line (Latin). This apophthegm occurs in two classical sources: De Institutione Morum, 34, uncertainly attributed to Seneca, and Publilius Syrus, Sententiae, 45, both of which share wordings that differ slightly from Peacemaker's: 'Pacem cum hominibus habebis, bellum cum vitiiis' (have peace with men, war with your sins). The Latin Vulgate Bible, Rom. 12:18, may have influenced the cited reading: 'cum omnibus hominibus pacem habentes' (have peace with all men).
 685-6 Melior...victoria adapted from Livy 30.30.19: 'Melior tutiorque est certa pax quam sperata victoria', better and safer is certain peace than a hoped-for victory (Latin). This oft-quoted aphorism appears in adapted form in James I's Speech to Parliament of 19 March 1604: 'a secure and honourable warre must be preferred to an vnsecure and dishonourable Peace', p. 134.

696-7 They...years presumably based on Judg. 5:31, but Judg. 3:11 or 8:28 are candidates. Various versions of the Bible read 'rest' in place of 'Peace'.
 700 prodigy something extraordinary, abnormal; a wonder, marvel 701 challenger claimant
 702 challenge claim
 704 punctual punctilious
 705-6 firsts...sun in reference to various points, strict observance of which was stipulated by the code of duelling
 705 firsts principal parties in a duel seconds those who act as representatives of the principals in a duel lengths of weapons the challenged party was generally presented with a stick prescribing the length of sword to be used 707 Ashkelon Philistine city the destruction of which is foretold by several prophets, e.g. Jer. 47:5-7 her suburbs in reference to outlying localities characterized by licentiousness (probably inspired by the model of London) 708-9 What...Peace possibly in allusion to the Latin epigram, 'pax quaeritur bello', peace is sought by war

 709 servant war
 710 mistress Elizabeth I
 710-11 foolish...know it not an echo of the position set out at ll. 133-8; the end of Elizabethan military campaigns was peace, which has been duly passed on to the heirs of the previous reign (though some are foolishly blind to this)
 712 for their own money i.e. in placing the principal at risk
 716 parti-coloured partly of one colour, partly of another
 717-18 nor fat...Peace-offering Lev. 3:17
 719 Abarim a range of mountains of Moab, east of and facing Jordan opposite Jericho Nebo the highest mountain in the Abarim range from which Moses viewed the promised land, Deut. 32:49
 726 infinites exceedingly large numbers
 728 Kiriath-salem city of peace (Hebrew)
 735 Gerizim...Ebal the mountain of blessings in Ephraim and mountain of curses in Samaria respectively, designated by Moses to ensure adherence to the law before crossing Jordan into the promised land: Deut. 11:29, 27:12-26

The Peace-maker.

740	EBAL Pride Malice Ambition Schismatical	}	Here we have our choice, and we are ever going on in this passage.	GERIZIM Humility Mercy Charity Faith
745	Contentions Revenge Impiety		O, let us pass by Gerizim, the Mount of Blessings, the right hand and the right hill. Turn thy back to Ebal, but let none of her curses fall upon thee.	Peace Piety

Be thou strong or weak, thou mayst with more ease bear six on thy right hand than one on thy left.

750 Pride is a great weight, able to overthrow the strongest man. Malice, a ponderous load, turning thy sleeps to unquiet slumbers, and even there haunting thee in restless dreams. Ambition, a mountain itself, to sink thee. Schism, a spirit and conscience troubler. Revenge, an impostume of blood—which, broken once, strangles thee with thine own corruption. Impiety, a cloud and mist of darkness, turning thee from thy way. 755

Whenas on the other side, how light and easily mayst thou bear about thee Humility? How sweet a companion is Mercy? How loving a fellowship is Charity? How sure a friend is Faith? How nourishing a cordial is Peace? How bright a lamp is Piety? And then, how glorious a reward is Eternity, and Peace in Eternity? 760

Now let us bind ourselves to the Peace, put in security for our good behaviours. Let our souls be bound for our bodies, our bodies for our souls, and let each come in at the general sessions (to save his bail), where we shall find a merciful Judge. If there we can answer, 'We have not broke his Peace,' our bonds shall be cancelled. As we have kept the Peace, we shall be rewarded with Peace, and kept in Eternal Peace. Amen. 765 770

FINIS.

748 right...left The textual arrangement places the curses on the left or sinister side and the blessings on the right; in setting the text confronting the choice between the curses and blessings the layout symbolically represents the crossing of Jordan.

753 impostume festering sore, abscess 757 Whenas whereas 763-4 put in...behaviours i.e. as securing our 'good behaviour', our appearance in court at a specified time, or performance of some undertaking 766 general sessions a court held four times a year, otherwise known as 'quarter sessions'

MASQUE OF HEROES; OR, THE INNER TEMPLE MASQUE

Text edited and annotated by Jerzy Limon, introduced by James Knowles

‘A right Christmas’ as celebrated in Jonson’s Christmas His Masque (1616) featured Christmas and his ‘children’ Misrule, Carol, Minced Pie, Gambol, Post and Pair, New Year’s Gift, Mumming, Wassail, Offering, and Baby Cake, who entertained the company with songs and dances. Such amusements and delicacies typified a seventeenth-century aristocratic Christmas when the festivities might include singing, dancing, gift-giving, feasting, and various forms of sanctioned festive misrule, all designed to foster social harmony. In London, many of the City institutions and guilds, but also the Inns of Court, vied with the aristocracy in the magnificence—and sometimes riotousness—of their seasonal celebrations. Indeed, such competition occasionally became explicit so that Middleton’s Masque of Heroes; or, The Inner Temple Masque (performed sometime between 6th January and 2nd February 1619) amidst its seasonal compliments also emulated another Christmas masque, Jonson’s Pleasure Reconiled to Virtue (1618).

Masque of Heroes combines a lively debate between traditional figures such as Doctor Almanac (a stock comic character), New Year, and the irrepressible, rotund Plumporridge (a seasonal food), with a masque proper and social dancing. Middleton’s prefatory verses emphasize the occasion’s ‘mirth’, gracefully acknowledging the hospitality and commensality of the Inner Temple which the masque itself displayed. Such ‘mirth’ was ‘found free’ (7), that is both ‘noble’ and ‘generous’, although ‘free’ might encompass the elements of festive licence, levity, and sociability that the masque also displays. These qualities, nobility, liberality, and festivity, serve well as a self-characterization of the Inns of Court which, although primarily legal institutions, functioned as a third university for England. At the Inner Temple cultural education supplemented the legal tuition which might launch a career in the judiciary, administration, or even at court. Masques constituted an important part of this milieu.

Indeed, masques made ideal Christmas entertainments since the structure of antimasque followed by masque and then revels provided the guests with comedy (in the antimasque performed by professional actors), a graceful ordered vision of hope for the future which commended the society (danced by the members of the inn), and finally participatory dances (the revels). These elements, combining festivity, hospitality, and generosity, permeate Heroes, notably in the extant antimasque music ‘The New Year’s Gift’ (see Companion, p. 161), which conveys the significance of the entertainment as a demonstration of the ‘free’ ethos of the inn and its guests. The presentation of gifts exemplifies hope for the new year, and symbolizes the social and political cohesion of the audience, as spectators and participants in the masque.

Formally, Heroes falls into three main sections. The ‘ante-masques’ contain dialogue between Doctor Almanac, Fasting Day, Plumporridge, and New Year, about the death of the old year and the decline of Master Kersmas, diagnosed by Doctor Almanac in his patient’s water (57–62, 91–2). The discussions are enlivened by the animosity between ‘plump and lusty’ Plumporridge (literally embodying festivity) and the Fasting Day who has been ‘out of service’ (44) since the beginning of Christmas. Aided by Doctor Almanac and Time, the New Year fits all the differently tempered days (ranging from the disturbed days through the good, bad, and indifferent days) into New Year’s ‘service’ (household) (155, 179). Each group of days then performs a separate ‘antemasque’ rounded off with an antic dance. In the second segment of Heroes dance, music, and formal speeches predominate, with the masque of Nine Worthies, introduced by Harmony, while the entertainment closes with the revels as the masquers select dancing partners from the audience.

Festivity provides one of the masque’s central themes as Middleton’s prefatory verses claim: ‘I only made the time they sat to see | Serve for the mirth itself’ (6–7). Yet Christmas, like other traditional calendar feasts, had become a site of religious dissension, as Puritans like John Stubbes emphasized how more mischief is that time committed than in all the year besides. What masking and mumming—whereby robbery, whoredom, murder and what not is committed? What dicing and carding, what eating and drinking, what banqueting and feasting is then used, more than in all the year besides, to the great dishonour of God and impoverishing of the realm. (Durston)

Alexander Leighton complained in 1625 that Christmas recalled Catholic idolatry, as ‘the Popes of Rome solemnized their festivals and jubilees with all sorts of plays and sports for recreation, and to delight the people with such fooleries’. For James VI and I, however, these ‘fooleries’ constituted ‘lawful recreations’ which he defended in his Declaration of Sports (1618): ‘For when shall the common people have leave to exercise, if not upon the Sundays and holidays?’

Debates over the legitimacy and degree of festivity and events surrounding the Declaration of Sports provide important contexts for Heroes. The Declaration had been sparked by the King's discovery, during a royal progress through Lancashire, that Puritan ministers had forbidden any Sunday recreations; the King then ordered a relaxation of Sunday observances. He allowed not only sabbatarian games but also popular ceremonials such as Whitsun Ales and May poles, and obliquely the Declaration also defended Anglican ritual, another target of the Puritans. This recently publicized controversy may explain why Fasting Day considers Lancashire for employment, presumably amongst its stricter brethren (165).

Such issues merged into court politics since the King also constantly sought to persuade his gentry to diminish their court attendance and continue the tradition of country residence, the foundation of Jacobean political and social control through the gentry's role as local representatives of the monarch. Simultaneously, however, the King struggled to curb the extravagance of the court and reduce royal expenditure. Many of James's leading courtiers—notably James Hay, Earl of Carlisle—practised conspicuous consumption, not only in magnificent festivals (sometimes graced with their own masques, such as Jonson's Lovers Made Men [1617]) but also in the form of the ante-supper, a sumptuous banquet set before the guests, only to be whipped away untouched. Conspicuous consumption vied with non-consumption as symbols of aristocratic opulence, and critical satires circulated against the monarch's 'merry boys with masks and toys' (Malone MS 25).

Throughout, Heroes engages with these wider discussions of the politics of festivity and hospitality. Jonson's Pleasure Reconciled to Virtue (1618) opposes the 'vicious hospitality' (Marcus) of Comus, the walking belly, with the virtuous Hercules, and rejects puritan parsimony (allegorized in the figure of Antaeus and his pygmies). The masque envisions James as Hesperus and England as his Hesperides, an ideal image of pastoral hospitality and moderation, bountiful yet temperate. Contemporaneously, the anonymous Coleorton Masque contrasted the commensality of Leicestershire and its old families, the 'good fellows in this corner of the country' (67–8), with the current parsimony, mocked by the buttery spirit Bob:

Puck, housekeeping is a rag of Rome—'tis abolished.
All good fellowship, called feasting, is turned to a dish of Bibles. The country mirth and pastime, that's... dead and buried... This new sect, in sincerity, 'tis a dry one... (29–35)

The audience, members of the Hastings and Devereux families, typified 'great houses... o'th'old way' (34) who, combining ancient aristocracy and Protestantism, were at odds with the court's arriviste favourites. In 1621 Middleton contributed to the debate in another Christmas entertainment, where Severity and Levity argue over the proper celebration of the season (Honourable Entertainments, 7).

Questions about the function and propriety of festivity and hospitality permeate Heroes. Thus Fasting Day laments his exclusion from the calendar, the 'only man in place' being Plumporridge:

I have been out of service all this Kersmas;
Nobody minds Fasting Day;
I have scarce been thought upon o' Friday nights;
And because Kersmas this year fell upon't
The Fridays have been ever since so proud
They scorn my company... (44–9)

Neglected by even his closest kin, Fasting Day sees his sworn adversary Plumporridge thrive, 'sure of welcome... like one of the great porridge tubs, going to the Counter' (66–7). Plumporridge's only concern is the sickening of his Master Kersmas, although Fasting Day longs for the end of Christmas and the austere start to the new year.

When New Year actually arrives he recognizes Fasting Day as one of his father's old retainers and although Doctor Almanac denigrates the 'unseasonable coxcomb' (155), Fasting Day defends himself on grounds that his economy made New Year's ancestors rich through parsimony. To reconcile the two principles of fasting and festival New Year agrees to welcome Fasting Day into his household, but not until Candlemas Eve:

Thou shalt not all be lost, nor for vainglory
Greedily welcomed; we'll begin with virtue.
As we may hold with't, that does virtue right.
(180–2)

Later, Doctor Almanac, acting as physician to the calendar politic, under instruction from New Year and aided by Time, allots each of the festival and fast days 'their places due by custom' (204). This location of each of the feasts and fasts in their correct place and time provides an image of the rightful place of both celebration and penance and envisages the harmony possible in the formation of New Year's household.

Parallels with Pleasure Reconciled weave throughout the masque, in the balance of festal days and in the implicit defence of the calendrical rituals. Plumporridge and Comus are clearly related figures and, indeed, the resolution of the Heroes ends with a similar vision of Virtue. Yet although the themes of the two entertainments are similar their treatments vary, for whereas Jonson relies upon classical and to some extent abstract ideas, Middleton draws upon the popular culture of the almanacs, folk plays (for Doctor Almanac), and upon the shared culture of calendrical ritual. Plumporridge, an altogether more prepossessing and humorous figure than Jonson's classical Comus, emerges from the traditions of Christmas games, the popular pastimes antithetical to Jonsonian erudition. Most importantly, the agent of resolution lies in the providential pattern of the calendrical cycle rather than royal power:

The goodness of thy thought
This blessed work hath wrought,
Time shall be reconciled.
Thy spring shall in all sweets abound,
Thy summer shall be clear and sound,

Thy autumn swell the barn and loft
 With corn and fruits, ripe, sweet and soft,
 And in thy winter, when all go,
 Thou shalt depart as white as snow. (284-92)

This vernacular pastoral vision contrasts with the royalist Hesperides, an opposition which can again be traced in Middleton's Honourable Entertainments where civic pastoral for the Spittle sermon stands against the classicized courtly pastoral in Jonson's Pan's Anniversary (1621).

The 'antemasques' of Heroes substitute providential for monarchical power, while the masque offers a vision of active heroism that further diverges from the celebration of courtly virtue and royal authority in Pleasure Reconciled. Both masques end with a vision of virtue enabled by Harmony but the virtues offered differ, for whilst the 'masked knights' of Jonson's masque practise a self-contained, almost personal virtue, Middleton presents an activist, communal heroism. In Heroes virtue is defined as 'heroic glory' (316) which tends to the 'human good' (301), personified not in anonymous courtier-knights but in the Nine Worthies.

Although during their fleeting entry in Heroes the Nine Worthies remain silent, some of the implications of these familiar figures can be traced from their reappearance in The World Tossed at Tennis where they are introduced at length, with emphasis placed upon the Old Testament figures (especially Judas Maccabaeus and King David—both suitably Protestant exemplars), and upon the three Christians, all as military figures. The Worthies symbolize a fame to be aspired to and exemplify how 'Men strive to know too much, too little do' (308). In Heroes Harmony comments that the heroes

... all descend to have their worth
 Shine to imitation forth;
 And by their motion, light and love,
 To show how after-times should move! (303-6)

Their manifestation will 'Raise merit from his ancient slumber' (318).

While such compliments are traditional to the masque whatever its origin or playing space, the particular date, location, and political context all lend a special resonance to the sentiments. In the 'polycentric world' (Smuts) of Jacobean elite culture the Inns of Court (like the London and provincial homes of the greater nobles) functioned as privileged sites of political debate, where the full variety of political viewpoints might find expression. The Inner Temple, for instance, had a distinct Protestant ethos, with several pro-puritan benchers (senior members), and this religious bias may have shaped attitudes, especially towards fellow Protestants in Bohemia and the Palatinate (modern Germany). In 1613 the Inns of Court had taken a significant role in celebrations for the marriage between Princess Elizabeth and Frederick, Elector Palatine when the Inner Temple had staged Beaumont's Masque of the Inner Temple and Gray's Inn at Whitehall. During the Bohemian crisis, the Inns of Court shared the national enthusiasm for military intervention, a climate that may be glimpsed in a sermon from the Temple Church minister, Abraham Gibson, whose Christiana-Polemica, or a Preparative to War (1619) advocated militarized Protestantism. It may be that even the choice of performers for Heroes, Prince Charles's Men, reflects a similar political stance.

The Bohemian crisis arose in 1618 when the kingdom, with its largely Protestant population, revolted against Ferdinand of Styria, and wholesale war with the Catholic Hapsburg powers threatened. The Bohemians appealed to the wider Protestant community. In late 1618 the Dutch Commissioners urged James to intervene, and although in January 1619 the King ostentatiously refused to quarrel with Spain, he came under increasing pressure, not least from some sections of the Privy Council and from Buckingham and Prince Charles, to respond. This pressure only increased with the arrival in January 1619 of the Bohemian representative Achatius, Baron zu Dohna. Thus the forward-looking tone of Masque of Heroes not only suits the new year but speculates about future need for heroic virtue in the face of Catholic threat: 'how after-times should move' (306: my italics).

Contemporary responses are encapsulated in one of James's own poems about the comet that appeared in 1618, and which many interpreted as an apocalyptic signal germane to the Palatine:

You men of Britain, wherefore gaze you so,
 Upon an angry star...?
 Oh, be so happy, then, while time does last
 As to remember, Doomsday is not past,
 And misinterpret not the vain conceit
 The character you see on heaven's gate,
 Which though it bring the world some news from fate
 The letter's such as no man can translate.
 And for to guess at God Almighty's mind
 Were such a thing might cozen all mankind.
 Wherefore I wish the curious man to keep
 His rash imagination till he sleep:
 Then let him dream of famine, plague and war,
 And think the match with Spain has caused this star.
 Or let them think that if their prince, my minion,
 Will shortly change, or (which is worse) religion...

The excitement the crisis generated amongst Protestants who at last saw the opportunity for alliance against the Antichrist can be gauged in Sir Henry Wotton's comment from October 1618: 'the actions in Bohemia give us leave to be wanton'. Whilst the King explicitly denied such expectations ('remember Doomsday is not past'), the foreign policy crisis permitted Protestants to interpret events apocalyptically, and Middleton's use of such undertones in this masque may indicate the ideological position of the text.

In contrast, Pleasure Reconciled to Virtue, written shortly before the crisis erupted, still extolled the vision of peaceable Britain and domestic virtue. Its depiction of James as Hesperus 'the brightest star' (172) who shines across the 'Atlantic seas' (173) may celebrate glorious isolation over continental involvement. The Coleorton Masque, written from outside the immediate royal circle, prefers Spenserian echoes and internationalist Protestantism: military heroism ‘Atlas-like uphold[s] all lands’ and ‘Keep[s] the world [so] it does not run | To the old confusion’ (163–5). Situated in a more ambivalent location on the periphery, neither totally within the court orbit nor in country-based exile, Middleton’s Heroes adopts the mean: it proposes the need for military heroism as the main form of virtue, but as yet only as a future possibility.

The subject matter and approach both show how Heroes partakes in the political debates of 1619, with different emphases from those found in court entertainments, and such divergences also invest the formal elements of the text as Heroes challenges Jonsonian models. Throughout its existence the Jonsonian masque had its critics, especially Samuel Daniel and Thomas Campion (two of the losers in the patronage battle with Jonson), but after 1618 it came under increasing pressure—from the politics of the Palatine crisis which made its pacific classicism increasingly redundant, and from internal forces, partly generated by the increasing dominance of Buckingham and his family, and also the emergence of a new, bitter factional politics around foreign policy questions.

By 1618 even Jonson had to recognize the internal contradictions in the form, riven between praise and the counsel he claimed to present. Pleasure Reconciled exemplifies such tensions, since on one hand it embodies the panegyric ideal, ‘royal education’ (201), whilst its actual circumstances, when the restive monarch interrupted the masque and contemporary commentators dismissed the text as dull and indecorous, demonstrates how ideal and reality often clashed. ‘Royal education’ suggests, slightly contradictorily, that the monarchy both offers but also needs education, and the issue of whether any of the exhortations embedded in the masque are heeded, remains unanswered. Later, Jonson’s ‘An Epistle to a Friend, to Persuade Him to the Wars’ excoriates the flattery surrounding court grandees and depicts the poet ‘hoarse with praising’ so that his ‘voice’ (perhaps message as well as medium) is beyond ‘recovery’ (151, 154).

In this climate Middleton offers a reformation, or re-writing, of the Jonsonian masque, much as envisaged by Daniel, a technique prefigured in his revisionist civic pageant The Triumphs of Truth, which was ‘redeemed into form’ (13). Whereas Pleasure Reconciled depicts the instant dissolution of antimasque disorder by the appearance of magical royal order, Heroes dramatizes another pattern whereby the antimasque forces are not expelled but absorbed into the proper order. Thus Fasting Day and all the different days are placed in New Year’s household and allotted their place in the calendar, and the opposites of feast and penitence are ‘reconciled’ through the agency of Time (286). Even when faced with the disagreements of Plumporridge and Fasting Day, Doctor Almanac still appeals to ‘friendship, friendship’ (80) as proper to the time. Whereas the reconciliation of Pleasure Reconciled can only be achieved in the initial banishment of opposing forces, Middleton’s masque seeks to gather the opposites together into a constructive tension symbolized in the ideal of Harmony.

Middleton repeats this strategy in the reconciliation of Levity and Severity in the Honourable Entertainments, in the integration of Mean and Base in the choruses of An Invention, and in World Tossed at Tennis, which dramatizes a series of newfound fellowships and collaborations as an alternative to the divisive patterns propounded by the Jonsonian masque. These occasional works emphasize the key ideal of harmony which encompasses all oppositions, and includes the monarchy only as primus inter pares. Here Middleton’s habit of spelling ‘antemasques’ with an ‘e’ may well be significant, since the oppositions of his masque are not absolute antitheses but simply precursors, connected by the sequence of action and time to what follows upon them. Such formal eclecticism and the integration of different materials belongs to a structure which places less emphasis upon the transformation of the scene by a mystical vision of power and authority. Thus the ‘antemasques’ of Heroes belong to the overall pattern of the year, just as much as does the hope for virtuous heroism. Doctor Almanac links the two elements when he suggests that the ‘low births and natures’ (267) of the antemasques have cheered New Year and stand as portents of the happiness and blessedness predicted by his ‘secret in astrology’ (271) and which Harmony then displays in the form of the Worthies. Almanac says of this juncture that ‘The minute, nay, the point of time’s arrived’ (277), thus marking the auspiciousness of the moment and the year that will reconcile all factions in a vision of active virtue which will unite the nation.

This insistence connects the auspiciousness of the new year, its hopes for the future, and echoes more overtly political apocalypticism that depicted this as the moment for war against Antichrist. The transformation enacted in the masque, from current world to future heroic ideal and from old to new year, from the old man to the new man, also contains further Protestant nuances. Like Pleasure Reconciled, Middleton’s masque provides an image of ‘lawful recreations’—though whereas Jonson locates these in courtly ceremonial, Middleton finds them in popular culture. Moreover, the recreation offered by the vision of inspired military heroism may allude to another Protestant sense of recreation: the duty of each true Christian to ‘re-create’ him or herself every day. To cast off the old year and welcome the new not only enacts a transformation of foreign policy, it also defines a Pauline spiritual metamorphosis for individuals and for the nation. Here Middleton reappropriates the debate over festivity and propriety, rewriting it within Protestant discourse as a ‘lawful’ but also literal ‘re-creation’, not simply authorized by the monarch, but invested with spiritual authority. In complex ways Middleton fulfils his promise to make the ‘time’ serve for the ‘mirth’ of his masque, but the mirth is the permitted pleasure that accompanies the metamorphosis of the world at Christmas, a ‘mirth’ that stems from the hope that providence brings in a new law and new world, where battle against the Antichrist will be joined.

MASQUE OF HEROES.

SEE ALSO

Music and dance: Companion, 161 (entrance of New Year), 162 (first antemasque), 163 (second antemasque), 164 (entrance of masquers), 164 (their dance), 164 (their exit)
Textual introduction and apparatus: Companion, 646
Authorship and date: Companion, 404

Masque of Heroes

Or, The Inner Temple Masque

Presented as an entertainment for many worthy ladies by gentlemen of the same ancient and noble house.

The Masque.

This nothing owes to any tale or story,
With which some writer pieces up a glory;
I only made the time they sat to see
Serve for the mirth itself, which was found free
And herein fortunate (that's counted good)
Being made for ladies, ladies understood.

6. The First Dog Day

25

The second Antemasque, presented by eight Boys
Good Days—3.
Bad Days—3.
Indifferent Days—2.

The Masque itself receiving its illustration from nine of the Gentlemen of the House.

30

The Inner Temple Masque.

Enter Doctor Almanac coming from the funeral of December, or the Old Year

DOCTOR ALMANAC

I have seen the old year fairly buried,
Good gentleman he was, but toward his end
Full of diseases: he kept no good diet,
He loved a wench in June (which we count vile),
And got the latter end of May with child.
That was his fault, and many an old year smells on't.
[Enter Fasting Day]

35

How now? Who's this? Oh, one o'th' Fasting Days
That followed him to his grave; I know
Him by his gauntness, his thin chitterlings;
He would undo a tripe-wife. Fasting Day,
Why art so heavy?

40

FASTING DAY Oh, sweet Doctor Almanac,
I have lost a dear old master. Beside, Sir,

The Parts

DOCTOR ALMANAC
PLUMPORRIDGE
A FASTING DAY
NEW YEAR
TIME HARMONY

The Speakers

Joseph Taylor
William Rowley
John Newton
Hugh Atwell
William Carpenter
A Boy

Two Antemasques

In the first, six Dancers

1. Candlemas Day
2. Shrove Tuesday
3. Lent
4. Ill May Day
5. Midsummer-Eve

- 11 The Speakers These were professional actors, not the gentlemen-masquers of l. 31.
12 Joseph Taylor actor; early in 1619 became a King's man and is known to have performed many of the roles created by Burbage who died in that year.
13 William Rowley actor and playwright. His typical role was that of a fat clown.
14 John Newton the actor who played the lean clown to Rowley's fat clown.
15 Hugh Atwell actor. Rowley's elegy suggests that he was a 'little man'.
16 William Carpenter one of the Prince's actors

- 18 Antemasques one of the structural elements of masques, usually consisting of 'rude' or allegorical characters, often involving dancing. Earlier masques usually had one antemasque, which preceded the main masque, but later it became common for the masques to have several antemasques.
30 The Masque itself the final discovery of masked gentlemen was considered the most important element of the performance; see 292.1-3.
31 House The Inner Temple
31.2 Doctor Almanac almanacs were

- written by students and practitioners in astronomy or astrology, or by physicians 35 He loved a wench in June echoes Tilley J102: 'In June, July, and August, wife, I know thee not'; also S422: 'Who marries between sickle and scythe will never thrive'
39 That . . . grave i.e. followed the Old Year of ll. 32-7 40 gauntness abnormally slim as from hunger chitterlings (ironic) intestines
41 tripe-wife term of abuse
42 heavy serious, grieved

The Inner-Temple Mafque.

I have been out of service all this Kersmas;
 45 Nobody minds Fasting Day;
 I have scarce been thought upon o' Friday nights;
 And because Kersmas this year fell upon't
 The Fridays have been ever since so proud
 They scorn my company; the butchers' boys
 50 At Temple-Bar set their great dogs upon me,
 I dare not walk abroad, nor be seen yet:
 The very poulters' girls throw rotten eggs at me,
 Nay, Fish Street loves me, e'en but from teeth out-
 ward,
 The nearest kin I have looks shy upon me,
 55 As it had forgot me. I met Plumporridge now,
 My big-swollen enemy: he's plump and lusty,
 The only man in place. Sweet Master Doctor,
 Prefer me to the New Year, you can do't.

DOCTOR ALMANAC
 When can I do't, sir? You must stay till Lent.

FASTING DAY
 60 Till Lent? You kill my heart, sweet Master Doctor.
 Thrust me into Candlemas Eve, I do beseech you.

DOCTOR ALMANAC Away, Candlemas Eve will never bear thee i' these days; 'tis so frampold, the Puritans will never yield to't.
Enter Plumporridge

FASTING DAY
 Why, they're fat enough.

65 DOCTOR ALMANAC Here comes Plumporridge.
 FASTING DAY Ay, he's sure of welcome; methinks he moves like one of the great porridge tubs, going to the Counter.

PLUMPORRIDGE Oh, killing cruel sight, yonder's a Fasting 70 Day: a lean spiny rascal with a dog in's belly; his very bowels bark with hunger. Avaunt, thy breath stinks; I do not love to meet thee fasting; thou art nothing but wind, thy stomach's full of farts, as if they had lost their way, and thou made with the wrong end upward, like a Dutch maw that discharges still into the mouth!

FASTING DAY Why thou whoreson breakfast, dinner, nuntions, supper and bever, cellar, hall, kitchen, and wetlarder! 75

PLUMPORRIDGE
 Sweet Master Doctor, look quickly upon his water,
 That I may break the urinal about his pate.
 [He offers a urinal to Doctor Almanac]

DOCTOR ALMANAC
 Nay, friendship, friendship!

PLUMPORRIDGE Never, Master Doctor, 80
 With any Fasting Day, persuade me not.
 Nor anything belongs to Ember week.
 And if I take against a thing, I'm stomachfull;
 I was born an Anabaptist, a fell foe
 To fish and Fridays; pig's my absolute sweetheart. 85
 And shall I wrong my love, and cleave to saltfish?
 Commit adultery with an egg and butter?

DOCTOR ALMANAC
 Well, setting this apart, whose water's this, sir?

PLUMPORRIDGE
 Oh, thereby hangs a tail, my Master Kermas's.
 It is his water, sir, he's drawing on. 90

DOCTOR ALMANAC Kermas? Why let me see,
 I saw him very lusty o' Twelfth Night.

PLUMPORRIDGE
 Ay, that's true, sir, but then he took his bane
 With choosing king and queen;
 He's made his will already, here's the copy. 95

DOCTOR ALMANAC And what has he given away? Let me see, Plumbroth.
 [Doctor Almanac takes the will from Plumporridge]

PLUMPORRIDGE He could not give away much, sir, his children have so consumed him beforehand.

DOCTOR ALMANAC (reading) The last will and testament of 100 Kersmas, irrevocable. Imprimis: I give and bequeath to my second son In-and-In, his perpetual lodging i'the
 King's Bench, and his ordinary out of the basket.

44 Kersmas corruption of Christmas
 47 fell upon't (as it did in 1618)
 50 Temple-Bar Butcher Row was just outside Temple Bar on the north side of the Strand.
 51 abroad out-of-doors
 53 Fish Street the main fish market in London
 55 Plumporridge porridge containing prunes, raisins, currants, etc; a favourite Christmas dish
 58 Prefer me recommend me
 63 frampold pert, saucy the Puritans (known for their strict observance of fasting) 65 fat enough (Puritans were often accused of hypocrisy)
 67 Counter (a prison)
 69 spiny slender
 73 wrong end upward i.e., he 'farts' out of his mouth, instead of his anus

 74 Dutch maw Dutch stomach (?); the Dutch were often the object of ridicule, but the meaning of this phrase remains obscure.
 75-6 nuntions snacks between meals
 76 bever drinking, or, a small snack between meals
 82 Ember week the name of the four weeks of fasting and prayer appointed by the Church to be observed respectively in the four seasons of the year. Since 1095 Ember days have been the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday next following (1) the first Sunday of Lent (2) Whit Sunday
 (3) Holy Cross Day (14th September)
 (4) St Lucia's Day (13th December).
 83 stomachfull obstinate, hostile
 85 fish and Fridays Friday was a fish day on religious grounds, but Saturday was a statutory fish day, that is, a day on which meat-eating was forbidden by an Act of Parliament. pig's (alluding to the Puritan fondness for pork)

 87 egg and butter traditional food for fasting days
 89 tail conclusion, termination (OED 4b);
 with a bawdy innuendo
 90 drawing on dying
 92 Twelfth Night (traditional climax of the Christmas festivities)
 93 took his bane caught his death 94 choosing king and queen (traditional entertainment during Twelfth-tide)
 102 In-and-In a game at dice
 103 King's Bench prison basket (in which broken meat and bread from the sheriffs' table was carried to poorer prisoners)

MASQVE OF HEROES.

PLUMPORRIDGE A sweet allowance for a second brother.
 105 DOCTOR ALMANAC Item, I give to my youngest sons Gleek and Primavista the full consuming of nights and days and wives and children, together with one secret gift, that is, never to give over while they have a penny.
 PLUMPORRIDGE And if e'er they do, I'll be hanged.
 110 DOCTOR ALMANAC For the possession of all my lands, manors, manor houses, I leave them full and wholly to my eldest son, Noddie, whom during his minority I commit to the custody of a pair of knaves and one-and-thirty.
 115 PLUMPORRIDGE There's knaves enough o' conscience to cozen one fool.
 DOCTOR ALMANAC Item, I give to my eldest daughter, Tickle-me-quickly, and to her sister My-lady's-hole, free leave to shift for themselves either in court, city, or 120 country.
 PLUMPORRIDGE We thank him heartily.
 DOCTOR ALMANAC Item, I leave to their old aunt, My-sow-has-pigged, a litter of courtesans to breed up for Shrovetide.
 125 PLUMPORRIDGE They will be good ware in Lent, when flesh is forbid by proclamation.
 DOCTOR ALMANAC Item, I give to my nephew Gambols, commonly called by the name of Kersmas Gambols, all my cattle, horse and mare, but let him shoe 'em himself.
 130 PLUMPORRIDGE I ha' seen him shoe the mare forty times over.
 DOCTOR ALMANAC Also, I bequeath to my cousin-german Wassail-bowl, born of Dutch Parents, the privilege of a free denizen, that is, to be drunk with Scotch ale or 135 English beer; and lastly, I have given by word of mouth to poor Blind Man's Buff, a flap with a foxtail.
 PLUMPORRIDGE
 Ay, so he's given 'em all, for ought I see.
 But now what think you of his water, sir?

DOCTOR ALMANAC
 Well, he may linger out till Candlemas,
 But ne'er recover it.
 FASTING DAY Would he were gone once! 140
 I should be more respected.
Enter New Year [dancing]
 DOCTOR ALMANAC Here's New Year!
 PLUMPORRIDGE
 I have ne'er a gift to give him; I'll be gone. [Exit]
 DOCTOR ALMANAC
 Mirth and a healthful time fill all your days.
 Look freshly, sir.
 NEW YEAR I cannot, Master Doctor.
 My father's death sets the spring backward i' me. 145
 For joy and comfort yet, I'm now between Sorrow and joy, the winter and the spring,
 And as time gathers freshness in its season,
 No doubt affects will be subdued with reason.
 DOCTOR ALMANAC
 You've a brave mind to work on; use my rules 150
 And you shall cut a caper in November,
 When other years, your grandfathers, lay bed-rid.
 NEW YEAR
 What's he, that looks so piteously, and shakes so?
 DOCTOR ALMANAC
 A Fasting Day.
 NEW YEAR How's that?
 DOCTOR ALMANAC A foolish Fasting Day, 155
 An unseasonable coxcomb, seeks now for a service;
 He's hunted up and down, h'as been at court,
 And the long porter broke his head across there;
 He had rather see the devil, for this he says:
 He ne'er grew up so tall with Fasting Days.
 I would not for the price of all my almanacs 160
 The guard had took him there, they would ha' beat out

105 Gleek a game at cards
 106 Primavista a game at cards
 108 give over give over gambling
 112 Noddie a game at cards
 113 knaves jacks
 113-14 one-and-thirty a game at cards
 116 cozen cheat, dupe
 118 Tickle-me-quickly a game at cards
 My-lady's-hole a game at cards
 122-3 My-sow-has-pigged a game at cards
 125-6 They will... proclamation an annual proclamation was issued against the eating of flesh (during Lent).
 128 Kersmas Gambols During Twelfth Night festivities students also appear to have amused themselves electing 'King of the Bean' whoever came upon a dried bean concealed in his portion of cake. Henry Bourne mentions this custom, calling it 'Christmas gambol' (p. 153).
 129 mare... shoe 'em himself 'Shoeing the mare' was a boisterous Christmas sport.

One of the players was chosen to be the wild mare, and others chased him about the room with the object of shoeing him. Tilley records the proverb 'To ride (shoe) the wild mare'.
 132 cousin-german near relation
 133 Wassail-bowl spiced ale used in Twelfth Night and Christmas-Eve celebrations; alludes to the custom of drinking healths on those occasions
 Dutch Parents Dutchmen's drinking was proverbial: 'The Dutchmen drinks pure wine in the morning, at noon wine without water, in the evening as it comes from the butt' (Tilley D656).
 136 Blind Man's Buff a game in which one player is blindfolded, and tries to catch and identify any one of the others, who, on their part, push him about, and make sport with him a flap with a foxtail a contemptuous dismissal. A foxtail was one of the badges of the fool.

 139 Candlemas falls on the 2nd of February; the 'vulgar' often prolonged Christmas festivities beyond Twelfth Night until Candlemas.
 142 a gift to give him (Presents were given not on Christmas day but on the New Year's.)
 149 affects affections
 155 coxcomb a jester's cap; hence a metonym for a fool
 157 long porter an allusion to one Walter Parsons of Staffordshire, of whom Thomas Fuller reported that 'he grew so tall in stature that a hole was made for him in the Ground to stand therein up to his knees, so to make him adequate with his Fellow-work-men [in a smithy]'. He afterwards was Porter to King James' (Worthies, 48).

MASQVE OF HEROES.

His brains with bombards. I bade him stay till Lent
 And now he whimpers he would to Rome forsooth, That's his last refuge, but would try a while 165 How well he should be used in Lancashire.
 NEW YEAR He was my father's servant,
 That he was, sir.
 DOCTOR ALMANAC 'Tis here upon record.
 FASTING DAY
 I served him honestly, and cost him little.
 DOCTOR ALMANAC
 Ay, I'll be sworn for that.
 170 FASTING DAY Those were the times, sir,
 That made your predecessors rich, and able
 To lay up more for you, and since poor Fasting Days
 Were not made reckoning on, the pampered flesh
 Has played the knave; maids have had fuller bellies;
 Those meals that once were sav'd, have stirr'd and 175 leapt,
 And begot bastards, and they must be kept.
 Better keep Fasting Days, yourself may tell ye,
 And for the profit of purse, back and belly!
 DOCTOR ALMANAC
 I never yet heard truth better whined out.
 NEW YEAR
 180 Thou shalt not all be lost, nor for vainglory
 Greedily welcomed; we'll begin with virtue.
 As we may hold with't, that does virtue right.
 Set him down, sir, for Candlemas Eve at night.
 FASTING DAY
 Well, better late than never.
 185 This is my comfort, I shall come to make
 All the fat rogues go to bed supperless,
 Get dinners where they can. [Exit]

[Enter Time]
 NEW YEAR How now? What's he?
 DOCTOR ALMANAC 'Tis old Time, sir, that belonged
 To all your predecessors.
 NEW YEAR Oh, I honour
 That reverend figure; may I ever think 190 How precious thou'rt in youth, how rarely Redeemed in age.
 TIME Observe, you have Time's service.
 There's all in brief.
 Enter the first antemasque
 NEW YEAR Ha? Doctor? What are these?
 TIME
 The rabble that I pity, these I have served too,
 But few or none have ever observed me,
 195 Amongst this dissolute rout. Candlemas-Day!
 I'm sorry to see him so ill associated!
 DOCTOR ALMANAC
 Why that's his cause of coming to complain,
 Because Shrove Tuesday this year dwells so near him.
 But 'tis his place, he cannot be removed.
 200 You must be patient, Candlemas, and brook it.
 This rabble, sir, Shrove Tuesday, hungry Lent,
 Ill May Day, Midsummer Eve, and the first Dog Day,
 Come to receive their places due by custom,
 And that they build upon.
 NEW YEAR Give 'em their charge,
 205 And then admit 'em.
 DOCTOR ALMANAC I will do't incony.
 Stand forth Shrove Tuesday, one o' the silenced bricklayers;
 'Tis in your charge to pull down bawdy-houses,
 To set your tribe a-work, cause spoil in Shoreditch
 210 And make a dangerous leak there, deface Turnbull,

162 bombards wide leathern drinking vessels
 163 Rome fasting was more closely observed in Catholic countries than in Protestant ones
 165 Lancashire Fuller noted that in the western part of Lancashire people were 'Popishly affected', hence 'many Papists, and Jesuits have been born and bred in this County' (Worthies, 105).
 173 pampered over fed
 174 fuller bellies i.e. became pregnant. A full belly was also associated with foolishness: 'A fat belly does not engender a Subtle wit' (Tilley B293), or 'A Belly full of gluttony will never study willingly' (B285).
 176 kept supported
 194 rabble disorderly people
 196 rout disorderly or disreputable crowd
 199 Shrove Tuesday . . . near him Candlemas fell on the day before St Blaise's Day, 3rd of February, which was, traditionally the earliest possible day for Shrove Tuesday.

Lent follows the latter. Shrove Tuesday was the traditional day for often violent misrule—hence Candlemas's complaint.
 202 Shrove Tuesday allusively meaning 'a time of merriment'
 203 Ill May Day so called in allusion to the rising of the apprentices on the 1st of May 1517 against foreigners and aliens.
Midsummer Eve one of the festive days notorious for drinking and misrule
Dog Day the day about the time of the heliacal rising of the Dog-star (i.e. Sirius), noted from ancient time as the hottest and most unwholesome period of the year; in current almanacs dog days are said to begin on 3 July and end 11 August.
 206 incony (a) happily (b) rarely, skilfully
 207 silenced bricklayers Possibly an allusion to Ben Jonson, who was the son of a bricklayer and an apprentice himself, especially if we take into account his 'tribe' of l. 209. 'The tribe of Ben' was the contemporary name for a group of poets who were Jonson's followers. Also playing on 'silenced ministers' = Puritans forbidden to preach.

 208 pull down bawdy-houses Many writers record the custom of London apprentices' revelry on Shrove Tuesday, including their attacks on brothels and theatres, as if they wanted to clean the city of all the 'dirt' before Lent.
 209 tribe (see note to l. 207 above)
Shoreditch This parish in London had the worst reputation as a haunt of loose women and bad characters in general.
 210 leak possibly an allusion to Mrs Leak who kept a bawdy-house in Shoreditch and is mentioned as being attacked by prentices in Owl's Almanac 434. The riot took place on Shrove Tuesday, 1617, and many apprentices were arrested, along with Mrs Leak.
Turnbull one of the most disreputable streets in London, a haunt of thieves and prostitutes.

MASQVE OF HEROES.

Here the second dance, and last antemasque: eight boys, habited according to their former characters. The three Good Days, attired all in white garments, sitting close to their bodies, their inscriptions on their breasts: on the first 'Cock-a-hoop'; on the second 'The gear cottons'; on the third 'Faint heart never'. The three Bad Days all in black garments, their faces black, and their inscriptions: on the first 'Rods in piss'; on the second 'Post for puddings'; on the third 'Put up thy pipes'. The Indifferent Days in garments half white, half black, their faces seamed with that parti-colour, and their inscriptions: the first 'Neither full nor fasting'; the second 'In dock out nettle'.

These having purchased a smile from the cheeks of many a beauty by their ridiculous figures, vanish, proud of that treasure

DOCTOR ALMANAC [to New Year]

I see these pleasures of low births and natures
 Add little freshness to your cheeks; I pity you,
 And can no longer now conceal from you
 Your happy omen. Sir, blessings draw near you,
 I will disclose a secret in astrology
 By the sweet industry of Harmony,
 Your white and glorious friend;
 Ev'n very deities have conspired to grace
 Your fair inauguration; here I find it,
 'Tis clear in art,
 The minute, nay, the point of time's arrived;
 Methinks the blessings touch you, now they're felt,
 sir.

At which loud music heard, the first cloud vanishing, Harmony is discovered with her sacred choir.

The first song

HARMONY [singing]

New Year, New Year! hark, hearken to me!
 I am sent down
 To crown
 Thy wishes with me!
 Thy fair desires in virtue's court are filed.
 The goodness of thy thought,
 This blessed work hath wrought,
 Time shall be reconciled.
 Thy spring shall in all sweets abound,
 Thy summer shall be clear and sound,
 Thy autumn swell the barn and loft

266.12-13 seamed...parti-colour decorated with lines in a variety of colours
 273 white beloved
 278.2 discovered a sudden discovery of allegorical figures, often accompanied by a change of scenery, is characteristic for all masques.
 283 virtue's court (where the performance is taking place)

292.1-2 Masquers...discovered (the discovery of the masquers was the culminating moment of every masque) 292.3-4 heroes deified for their virtues since there are nine 'heroes', we may associate them with the 'nine Worthies', especially because their 'worth' is mentioned in l. 314. The nine Worthies include three Jews (Joshua, David, and

With corn and fruits, ripe, sweet and soft,
 And in thy winter, when all go,
 Thou shalt depart as white as snow.
 Then a second cloud vanishing, the Masquers themselves discovered, sitting in arches of clouds, being nine in number, heroes deified for their virtues.

The song goes on

[HARMONY] [singing]

Behold, behold, hark, hearken to me!
 Glories come down
 To crown
 Thy wishes with me:
 Bright heroes in lasting honour sphered,
 Virtue's eternal spring,
 By making Time their king,
 See, they're beyond Time reared.
 Yet in their love to human good,
 In which estate themselves once stood,
 They all descend to have their worth
 Shine to imitation forth;
 And by their motion, light and love,
 To show how after-times should move!
 Then the Masquers descend [and] set to their first dance.

The second song

HARMONY [singing]

Move on, move on, be still the same,
 You beauteous sons of brightness,
 You add to honour, spirit and flame,
 To virtue, grace and whiteness.
 You whose every little motion
 May learn strictness more devotion,
 Every pace of that high worth
 It treats a fair example forth,
 Quickens a virtue, makes a story,
 To your own heroic glory;
 May your three-times-thrice blest number
 Raise merit from his ancient slumber!
 Move on, move on, be still the same,
 You beauteous sons of brightness,
 You add to honour, spirit and flame,
 To virtue, grace and whiteness.
 Then they order themselves for their second dance, after which

Judas Maccabaeus), three Gentiles (Hector, Alexander, and Julius Caesar), and three Christians (Arthur, Charlemagne, and Godfrey of Bouillon).
 297 sphered there were also nine spheres in the Ptolemaic heavens.
 306.1-2 the Masquers...dance (the final moment of every masque)

MASQVE OF HEROES.

The third song

HARMONY [singing]

325 See, whither fate hath led you, lamps of honour,
For goodness brings her own reward upon her;
Look, turn your eyes, and then conclude, commend-
ing,
And say you have lost no worth by your descending.
Behold a heaven about you, spheres more plenty,
There, for one Luna, here shines ten
And for one Venus, twenty;
330 Then heroes, double both your fame and light,
Each choose his star, and full adorn this night.

At which the Masquers make choice of their ladies, and dance.

Time [enters], thus closing all

TIME

The morning grey
Bids come away;
Every lady should begin
To take her chamber, for the stars are in. 335
Then making his honour to the ladies
Live long the miracles of times and years
Till with those heroes you sit fixed in spheres.
[Exeunt]

Finis

- 328 Luna personification of the Moon 329 Venus goddess of beauty and love; here,
the paragon of beauty.
331.1-2 At which...dance (every masque concluded with a dance of the masquers with the partners drawn from the audience)
335.1 honour bow

AN/THE OLD LAW

Edited by Jeffrey Masten

Honour thy father* and thy mother . . .

*By the which is meant all that have authority over us.

—Exodus 20:12 and its gloss, The Geneva Bible (1570)

IMAGINE a culture—a culture at once strikingly like early modern England and at the same time apparently ancient and distant from it—that passes a law mandating the execution of old people when they reach a given age. This is the unusual proposition with which Old Law begins—though, as the play makes clear, this proposition and the response to it are unusual for reasons other than those we might expect today.

Old Law is a tragicomedy of euthanasia. If this description seems an oxymoron, it is also, as we will see, a redundancy; an exploration of both terms illuminates the play. Philip Sidney called tragicomedy a ‘mongrel’ genre; John Fletcher (who collaborated with Beaumont, Massinger, Rowley, Shakespeare, and others) wrote, less disparagingly, that

A tragicomedy is not so called in respect of mirth and killing, but in respect it wants deaths, which is enough to make it no tragedy, yet brings some near it, which is enough to make it no comedy (which must be a representation of familiar people with such kind of trouble as no life be questioned), so that a god is as lawful in this as in a tragedy, and mean people as in a comedy.

Though labelled an ‘Excellent Comedy’ in the first printed edition (1656), Old Law nonetheless meets a number of Fletcher’s tragicomic criteria: no god makes an appearance, but the play mixes in its three related plots characters ranging from the lower-class Clown, Wife, and Wench (Fletcher’s ‘mean people’) to a Duke and his courtiers. The play brings some so ‘near’ death that everyone (including the audience) assumes they have died, and, in the play’s climactic trial scene, others are in danger of being sentenced to death for their ‘capital’ crimes against the state (5.1.143).

In fact, the play out-goes Fletcher’s definition in its mixing of tragedy and comedy, for it insistently brings together ‘mirth and killing’. Epire’s law that executes all men at the age of eighty and women at the age of sixty produces a series of comic scenes and jokes about the death of the aged. The scene in which the Clown persuades the Clerk to antedate his wife’s birthday in the parish registry is one of the funniest in the play (at the same time that it is, from a number of other perspectives, one of the most outrageous). Jokes themselves are said to be fatal, and death produces laughter: ‘An’t be a laughing business,’ says the young courtier Simonides, ‘Put it to me; I’m one of the best in Europe. | My father died last too; I have the most cause’ (3.2.3–5).

Two ceremonies staged in the play are amalgamations that ‘match hornpipes and funerals’, to use Sidney’s metaphor for tragicomedy’s ostensibly inappropriate mixing. (This metaphor is literalized several times in the course of a play closely attuned to kinds of music.) Staging his father’s funeral prematurely so that he can hide him from the Old Law, Cleanthes leads a joyful funeral (‘We’ll seem to weep, and seem to joy withal, | That death so gently has prevented you | The law’s sharp rigour’ [1.1.470–2]), and the Duke remarks of this mournful festivity, ‘I never saw a corse so joyfully followed . . . Was ever such a contrariety seen | In natural courses yet, nay, professed openly?’ (2.1.156, 161–2). The Clown’s procession in the final scene—which he intends as the simultaneous funeral of his first wife and the marriage of his second—recalls Cleanthes’s earlier spectacle, as well as other tragicomic mixtures of marriages and funerals, like those in the first and last scenes of Fletcher and Shakespeare’s The Two Noble Kinsmen (1613). The Clown theorizes this ‘contrariety’ for the Duke:

As the destiny of the day falls out, my lord, one [wife] goes out to wedding; another goes to hanging. And your grace in the due consideration shall find ’em much alike: the one hath the ring upon her finger; the other a halter about her neck. ‘I take thee, Beatrice’, says the bridegroom; ‘I take thee, Agatha’, says the hangman, and both say together, ‘to have and to hold till death do part us’. (5.1.387–94)

That much of the humour surrounding this mixture is at the near-fatal expense of old women is, like the gendered difference of twenty years in the law itself, something to which we will need to return.

The legislation of euthanasia (the Old Law for the killing of old people) is the play’s ‘improbable hypothesis’—to use the term a more recent critic of tragicomedy, Eugene Waith, cites as characteristic of the genre. And yet, as twentieth-century debates over euthanasia and suicide suggest, what is ‘improbable’ is relative to cultural context; the improbability of euthanasia in the context of seventeenth-century English culture (and its meaning as a proposal for social reform) differs in important ways from its improbability and its possible meanings in later Anglo-American culture.

What I am calling ‘euthanasia’ in Old Law is not the early (and etymological) notion of euthanasia—that is, from the Greek, ‘good death’, a term often used to denote an easy, usually self-inflicted death, as described, for example, in Montaigne’s essay ‘A Custom of the Isle of Cea’ (trans. 1603), or in Thomas More’s Utopia (1516). This ‘euthanasia’ might be considered literally redundant in the context of tragicomedy, where all deaths turn out to be good, or rather not to be deaths in the conventional sense at all. Nor is what I’ve called ‘euthanasia’ the more recent (post-nineteenth-century) practice usually glossed today as ‘mercy killing’. The euthanasia of Old Law, in fact, more closely resembles fascist social engineering—the extermination of what Nazi ideology called ‘lives unworthy of life’—than these other meanings; ‘euthanasia’ is ‘good death’ in the play only from the particular vantage point of ‘the care and good of the commonwealth’, to quote the law (1.1.128–9).

Historical changes in the terms and discourses surrounding the killing of old people are at issue here; indeed, what may be most shocking to a modern reader of Old Law is the way in which resistance to the Old Law enacted in Epire is not staged in the terms we may have come to expect in the late twentieth century, amid controversies over abortion and medically assisted suicide. In the play, discussion of and resistance to a law that arbitrarily kills certain members of society deemed non-functioning is not framed in the now familiar vocabulary of inherent rights—the individual’s right to life, or to death, or to self-determination. Anthony Trollope’s controversial 1882 novel The Fixed Period, which rewrites the play as an ironic first-person narrative, illustrates the magnitude of this epistemic shift.

The play’s opening scene—between Simonides (the greedy young courtier who approves of the law), Cleanthes (the young courtier who opposes it), and two mercenary lawyers—makes clear that the law will be contested among Epire’s sons, not those most fatally affected by the legislation. To the extent that the play depicts condemned characters resisting the law in something like a post-Enlightenment discourse of self-determination, the characters who espouse such a view are comically denigrated. The Clown’s Wife, Agatha (shortened to ‘Ag’, which in the Clown’s dialect sounds like ‘hag’), is ridiculed for her desire to live out even the full life-span allowed by law, after the Clown has succeeded in antedating her birthdate; Lisander, in his attempts to rejuvenate his appearance and behaviour, is made ludicrous—if not quite as ridiculous as the young courtiers with whom he competes. In contrast, all of the characters of the older generation whom the play constructs as worthy go willingly, almost cheerfully, off to death. Creon, Simonides’s father, initially resists the law on the grounds that he has faithfully served a state that now discards him, but a few moments later, appearing before the Duke, he mouths the words of the law back to its legislator:

’Tis just I die indeed, my lord, for I confess
I’m troublesome to life now, and the state
Can hope for nothing worthy from me now,
Either in force or counsel. (2.1.87–90)

Though she has additional years to live under the law, Creon’s wife, Antigona, accepts her own death as part of his, and her later resistance to the law, before the Duke, is a plea on behalf of Creon, not herself. In the face of Creon’s own willingness to die, she articulates her opposition in terms of his ability still to serve the state, linked explicitly to his worthiness as a father: ‘He is not lost in judgement . . . | His very household laws prescribed at home by him | Are able to conform seven Christian kingdoms | They are so wise and virtuous’ (2.1.98, 2.1.101–3).

As these lines begin to suggest, opposition to the law in this play is based not in a rhetoric of self-determination, but instead in the discourse of early modern patriarchalism. Creon’s ‘household laws prescribed at home’ are also laws ‘able to conform seven Christian kingdoms’; they recapitulate (in a language familiar to subjects versed in James I’s words and works) a connection between the governance of families and of nations. Further, these laws are, significantly, written on a ‘table’ (tablet) and are linked in this scene to the ten commandments (2.1.119). The Old Law—Epire’s new law for the killing of old people—is thus resisted here and elsewhere in the play on the basis of an older law on which the play’s title puns: the law of the Old Testament (i.e., the Hebrew Bible), as received and reinscribed through its early-modern patriarchalist interpretation.

Old Law recalls, at a number of points, the ten commandments of Exodus 20 and catalogues the ways in which the play’s old law results in transgressions of the older Mosaic laws—the various incidents of attempted adultery, of coveting a neighbour’s wife and/as property, of murder by changing a wife’s birthdate in the church register, etc. But the play’s primary concern is the fifth commandment (central to the theory and practice of patriarchalism) to ‘Honour thy father and thy mother.’ In seventeenth-century England, there was a frequent slippage between the commandment’s citation of both father and mother and patriarchalism’s insistence on the importance of fathers alone. This is an effacement enacted in the play: when Creon is sent to his death after Antigona’s unsuccessful plea, she simply disappears until the end of the play, and, in the plot detailing Cleanthes’s resistance to the law, there is no mother to complicate the play’s focus on the father. Whether in Antigona’s emphasis on Creon’s exemplary household government or in Cleanthes’s concealment of his father Leonides, the resistance to the euthanasia law is based upon the law’s failure to honour the father and (more incidentally) the mother; at the same time, opposition is voiced not by the person whose death is subject to law, but by the children (and, in the case of Antigona, the dutiful wife). As in our own time, then, euthanasia is contested, but on very different terms.

The ending of the play might seem simply to restore a fully patriarchalist status quo, with its validation of filial piety, its new law replacing the old, its privileging of the good son Cleanthes and punishing of the prodigal Simonides. And yet, in exploring the relation of family values and political governance so central to seventeenth-century political theory, the play discloses—whether intentionally or not—manifold fractures within this system. This is particularly the case in the concluding trial scene, which addresses a central contradiction in patriarchalist discourse. If, as James I argued in The True Law of Free Monarchies (a text first published in 1598, widely circulated in the early years of his reign in England, and included in his 1616 collected Works), ‘the King towards his people is rightly compared to a father of children, and to a head of a body composed of divers members’, then which father—the royal or the household father—requires the highest obedience? Like the Geneva Bible quoted above, GOD and the King (the 1615 pamphlet published and studied at James’s command) attempts to settle this question in its gloss on the fifth commandment: ‘honour thy Father and thy Mother: where as we are required to honour the Father of private families, so much more the Father of our Country and the whole kingdom.’ But for Old Law (probably first written and performed within a few years of these publications) the question remains open to contestation: can a father of what GOD and the King calls a ‘private family’ be simultaneously a head and a member of a body? Which is the head here, and which the member?

Cleanthes’s trial focuses on precisely this question, and the sentence Simonides hands down confronts the issue explicitly:

Cleanthes, there is none can be

A good son and a bad subject, for if princes
Be called the peoples’ fathers, then the subjects
Are all his sons, and he that flouts the prince Doth disobey his father; there you’re gone. (5.1.197– 201)

Yet even here in the most straightforward statement of a patriarchal-absolutist stance, the plural ‘princes’ may begin to overwhelm the subsequent emphasis on singular authority. How many princes, how many peoples, how many fathers are there? These are questions for the editor as well as the reader (as the notes to the play suggest, these activities are often indistinguishable), for the earliest printed text of the play has no apostrophe in ‘peoples’. Though the play may seem in the end to resolve such issues (the political and familial fathers turn out, in the tragicomic ending, not to have been opposed after all), the play has raised the possibility of fracture, has staged the adjudication of a theory the king himself understood as self-evident. Cleanthes’s trial, we might say, takes place in the space between the Geneva Bible’s statement of the fifth commandment and its authoritarian gloss in the margin. There are other moments of resistance marked in the notes to the play (for example, the question of whether a husband is more closely identified with his wife or father), and readers will undoubtedly locate others.

This is not to say that the play had these particular meanings for all its audiences; my notes to the text attempt to demonstrate the multiple valences of the play’s language, meanings that may have been heard or read by some spectators or readers, though not by others. Indeed, the existence of two slightly different titles for the play in the seventeenth century—An Old Law, The Old Law—may suggest the variability with which audience members or readers may have seen in the play ‘an’ indefinite law (or one among several possible), and ‘the’ law (the definitive dictum, nevertheless potentially replaceable by ‘the’ [or ‘a?’] new one). (On the variant titles, see Canon and Chronology.)

Further, the play may have signified in very different ways late in 1618 or in 1619 (when it was written by Middleton, Rowley, and possibly Thomas Heywood, and first performed, probably by Prince Charles’s Men at either the Red Bull or the Cockpit); and then in the 1630s, when it may have been revived (and possibly revised at this point by Heywood, if he was not a part of the initial collaboration); and yet again in 1656, when it was published, after the theatres had been closed for more than a decade. (Though readers or audiences hardly need unravel the play’s collaborative texture to experience its comedy and power—and, as I have argued elsewhere, there are potentially serious methodological problems, from a historicist perspective, in doing so—recent critics interested in attributing the play’s authorship have agreed that Middleton probably wrote scenes 2.2, 3.2, and 4.2, and that Rowley wrote all or parts of 4.1 and 5.1. Although Philip Massinger is associated with the play on its first printed title-page, Gary Taylor has recently argued strongly for Heywood as the writer of the first half of the final act, 5.1.1–347; his argument simultaneously casts significant doubt on Massinger’s participation at any point in the play’s writing.)

During the 1640s and 1650s, the play’s political vocabulary—its juxtaposition of terms including prince, senate, parliament, republic, and commonwealth—would have been particularly charged, as would the patriarchalist discourse explored above after the beheading of James I’s son in 1649. (According to the 1656 title-page, the play was at some point performed for ‘the King and Queen’, probably Charles I and Henrietta Maria.) In other words, although a version of the play we now read was probably first composed in the second decade of the seventeenth-century, it continued to be revised and reinterpreted for at least forty years; like many plays of the period that were printed long after early performances, Old Law may have been revised for a revival in the interim (see 4.1.89, 5.1.347.1–4). Further, the compositors who set the type for the 1656 text may have changed or augmented, intentionally or not, the political valences of the play. As the notes attempt to detail, an analysis of some issues treated above may rest on whether a reader or editor accepts or rearranges the speech headings assigned by the 1656 text (particularly in Act 5), and on what might have been considered 'characteristic' of characters at a given historical moment (see for example 5.1.267, 5.1.270).

Old Law thus dynamically participates in the culture of its era(s), reflecting and rewriting that culture in multiple ways. The play's most important source might be said to be the ten commandments (though they are never quoted in the play itself), along with the many sermons, proclamations, political-theoretical texts (by James I and others), and biblical marginalia that produced the fifth commandment in particular as political theory and social practice. While the play seems for the Cleanthes plot to rewrite in particular a story transmitted from the medieval Historia septum sapientum and to draw on a tale retold from Giambattista Cinzio Giraldi's Gli Ecatommiti (1565) in Barnaby Rich's Farewell to Military Profession (1581) for the plot of the Clown's two wives, Old Law is also widely allusive, agglutinative, and revisionary in a way that defies any simple understanding of 'source'. The play satirizes Renaissance courtiers, lawyers, and legal discourse (Middleton's participation in legal wrangling over his filial inheritance may itself function as a 'source', especially in the first and last scenes), and the play seems to address James I (or advise his son) about reforming a court perceived as excessively young, fashionable, and effeminate. The play draws obliquely on a Montaigne essay (noted above) for its mention of some character-names and the setting. Other character names (for example, Hippolita) connect the play to a range of others in the period. The play apparently reworks or parodies lines from George Peele's now-lost play The Turkish Mahamet and Hyrin the Fair Greek (1581-94) and from Thomas Kyd's The Spanish Tragedy (1592), which in the Clown's parodic revision produces yet another complicated moment of tragicomic mixing (5.1.500-3).

Add to this list the play's broad classical attentiveness: its resurrecting of names from Antigonè, Sophocles's tragedy of social resistance (available in Latin translation by 1581); its use of Thomas North's translation of Plutarch's Lives (1579); and Cleanthes's recounting, to the patricidal young judges, of Aeneas's escape from burning Troy carrying his father—a passionate aria that puts the old text of Virgil's Aeneid in the service of the Old Testament. There is, finally, the play's closing reference to Plato's Cratylus at 5.1.618, an allusion that (just at the moment the law seems firmly re-rooted in 'natural' law and the Old Testament) asks whether the foundation of law lies in convention or nature, and calls into question the very ideas of stability and authenticity in language. (In what might almost seem a Pynchonesque message to twentieth-century readers of a modernized text, the Cratylus also argues the impossibility of establishing stable spellings and meanings of old words.) Here we may again find a linking of classical, theoretical seriousness and 'mirth'; seemingly like the Platonic dialogue, the Clown laments, near the end of the play: 'I am not the first by forty that has been undone by the law; 'tis but a folly to stand upon terms' (5.1.535-7, my emphasis). The form in which the allusion to the Cratylus arrives on stage—the character-revelation that produces the allusion—might itself be taken as a joke or as something altogether more serious: mirth or killing? Both?

Emblem of Aeneas fleeing Troy, 'Pietas filiorum in parentes', from Geoffrey Whitney, A Choice of Emblemes (1586).

SEE ALSO

Music and dance: Companion, 166

Textual introduction and apparatus: Companion, 1123

Authorship and date: Companion, 405

Other Middleton-Rowley works: Weapons, 980; Quarrel, 1209;

Tennis, 1405; Changeling, 1632; Gypsy, 1723

WILLIAM ROWLEY, THOMAS MIDDLETON, and THOMAS HEYWOOD

An }
The } Old Law

Or, A New Way to Please You

[for Prince Charles's Men (at the Red Bull?)]

Commentary “To interpret a text is not to give it a (more or less justified, more or less free) meaning, but on the contrary to appreciate what plural constitutes it . . . this text is a galaxy of signifiers, not a structure of signifieds; it has no beginning; it is reversible; we gain access to it by several entrances, none of which can be authoritatively declared to be the main one . . .” (Roland Barthes, S/Z 5).

Like all commentaries, this column of running commentary interprets the play even as it ostensibly clarifies or ‘glosses’ (3.2.219) it. This commentary in particular attempts to activate some of the ‘plural’ meanings of Old Law available to audiences and readers in the seventeenth century. The plurality of meanings cited in this column are the result of a number of factors; often these are difficult fully to distinguish in any given instance:

1) linguistic plurality, the fact that early modern English pronunciation, spelling, and punctuation lacked (though its speakers did not necessarily think of it as lacking) the standardization of modern English; also, the possibility of words having one meaning in general usage and another in a more specialized area of the language (for example, legal discourse); 2) intentional plurality, often called ‘quibbles’ or ‘puns’, wit attributed to characters like the Clown, and intended by the playwrights; 3) collaborative plurality, the production of plural meanings through the interventions of players or bookholders (prompters) in the theatre, or the printers in the printing house (doubled stage directions, omitted words, inverted pieces of type, etc.); 4) aural plurality, the fact the different audience members might have heard different or multiple meanings during the playing of this text on stage.

While this edition provides a version of Old Law that can be read as reconstructing a performance of a play, the commentary nevertheless insists on the multiple interventions the editorial process makes in the text in order to produce such an experience for the reader. For readers of both the text and the commentary column, reading cannot be merely, as Barthes writes, ‘a parasitical act, the reactive complement of writing which we endow with all the glamour of creation and anteriority.’ Rather, ‘[i]t is a form of work . . . I write my reading . . .’ (S/Z 10). See gloss (3.2.219).

For these reasons, then, this commentary departs from the general protocol of this edition by including both commentary and the textual notes detailing changes (emendations) and modernizations made in the text; textual notes ordinarily appear in the Companion. Commentary notes refer to the first printed edition of Old Law (dated 1656) as BELL (for Jane Bell, who printed it). Other editors mentioned here include: COXETER (1761), MASON (1779), GIFFORD (1805), COLERIDGE (1839/40), DYCE (1840), BULLEN (1885), SHAW (1982), and TAYLOR (in consultation on the present edition). (Notes also occasionally mention specific copies of BELL stored at particular libraries; these are referenced as: FOLGER, HOUGHTON1, HOUGHTON2, HUNTINGTON, LCP, NEWBERRY, WILLIAMS.) Full bibliographical references for all editions appear in the Companion.

Title An Old Law/The Old Law The title appeared in two forms in the seventeenth century (see below), both of which raise some questions. Does The Old Law refer to the law for the killing of old people as described in the first scene? the law(s) of the ‘Old Testament’ (i.e., the Hebrew Bible), especially the fifth commandment (‘honour thy father and thy mother’)? Does the ‘old’ law suggest that there will be a new law, later on? If so, will it correspond to the New Testament? Or will it function as the parodic opposite of the New Testament—as the Old Law of 1.1 functions in relation to the Old Testament? If there is ‘an’ old law, might there be any number of others, or a young law?

Or, A New Way to Please You An alternative title for the play, or a subtitle? (Does this title substitute for Old Law, or does it supplement it?) In which of its senses will an old law be pleasing? Does this title promise a ‘new way’ that will replace the old law? Or does this phrase simply promise an innovation in dramatic repertoire? How is this title related to other ‘pleasing’ titles and subtitles—e.g. As You Like It, or Twelfth Night, or What You Will? Is the subtitle, possibly added for publication in 1656, a play on Massinger’s play entitled A New Way to Pay Old Debts (published 1633)? The Old Law; or, A New Way to Please You BELL (The Excellent Comedy, called THE OLD LAW: OR A new way to pleafe you.); An ould Lawe REVELS; The Old Law. A Comedy COXETER. On the variant titles, see Taylor, “‘The Old Law’ or ‘An Old Law’?” On the play’s genre, see Critical Introduction.

THE OLD LAW:

- Persons This list is an editorial construction for this edition. BELL's list (transcribed in the Companion, p. 1127) was almost certainly prepared by someone unfamiliar with the details of the play (perhaps the publisher) some time after the play was acted, especially since it includes some significant errors of description. A seventeenth-century theatre audience would not have possessed a list of the play's persons, and the emergence of such lists (increasingly, they accompanied printed plays in the seventeenth century) is the product of the practice of reading, rather than (or in addition to) seeing plays. (See Gary Taylor's essay "The Order of Persons" in the Companion, p. 31.) A list of 'persons' may give the impression that the play's characters pre-exist the performance that in fact constitutes them—that they have essences, pasts, futures, thoughts, motives, or even stable titles ('Executioner') or relationships ('Wife') separate from the performance/text. This list follows BELL's in not divulging some characters' names until they are addressed on stage or 'discovered' later in the play. Specific commentary on particular names appears at the moment of a character's first entrance or naming in the play itself.
- 16 LISANDER Although BELL suggests he is Cleanthes's 'uncle', the play itself does not specify the relation of Lisander to Cleanthes more closely than 'coz' (kinsman).
- 19 DANCER dancing teacher

PERSONS OF THE PLAY

SIMONIDES }
CLEANTHES } 2 courtiers

FIRST LAWYER
SECOND LAWYER

CREON, father to Simonides
ANTIGONA, mother to Simonides and wife to Creon

BUTLER }
BAILIFF }
TAILOR } servants to Creon
COOK }
COACHMAN }
FOOTMAN }

Old women, wives to Creon's servants

HIPPOLITA, wife to Cleanthes
LEONIDES, father to Cleanthes

LISANDER, husband to Eugenia and kinsman to Cleanthes
EUGENIA, wife to Lisander and mother to Parthenia
PARTHENIA, daughter to Lisander and Eugenia
DANCER
Servants to Lisander

DUKE of Epire
FIRST COURTIER
SECOND COURTIER
THIRD COURTIER
EXECUTIONER
FIRST GUARD
SECOND GUARD
FIRST OFFICER
Officers

CLOWN
Clown's WIFE
WENCH

CLERK

DRAWER

Musicians
Old men

- I.I.O.I Incipit Actus Primus THIS EDITION; Act. I. Scen. I. BELL
1 Is...sir Unless otherwise noted, partial verse lines depicted in THIS EDITION as completing or continuing a verse line begun by another character were set in BELL as separate lines of type.
4 conceive understand

Incipit Actus Primus
Enter Simonides and two Lawyers

SIMONIDES
Is the law firm, sir?
FIRST LAWYER The law—what more firm, sir,
More powerful, forcible, or more permanent?
SIMONIDES By my troth, sir,
I partly do believe it; conceive, sir,

I.I

5 You have indirectly answerèd my question.
I did not doubt the fundamental grounds
Of law in general for the most solid,
But this particular law that me concerns
Now at the present, if that be firm and strong,
10 And powerful, and forcible, and permanent.
I am a young man that has an old father.
SECOND LAWYER Nothing more strong, sir;
It is secundum statutum principis
Confirmatum cum voce senatus,
15 Et voce reipublicæ, nay, consummatum
Et exemplificatum. Is it not in force
When divers have already tasted it
And paid their lives for penalty?
SIMONIDES 'Tis true,
My father must be next; this day completes
Full fourscore years upon him.
20 SECOND LAWYER He's here then
Sub pœna statuti, hence I can tell him,
Truer than all the physicians in the world,
He cannot live out tomorrow; this is
The most certain climacterical year,
25 'Tis past all danger, for there's no 'scaping it.
What age is your mother, sir?
SIMONIDES Faith, near her days too,
Wants some two of threescore.
FIRST LAWYER So, she'll drop away
One of these days too; here's a good age now
For those that have old parents, and rich inheritance.
SIMONIDES
30 And sir, 'tis profitable for others too:
Are there not fellows that lie bedrid in their offices
That younger men would walk lustily in,
Churchmen, that even the second infancy
Hath silenced, yet hath spun out their lives so long 35 That many pregnant and ingenious spirits
Have languished in their hoped reversions
And died upon the thought, and by your leave, sir,
Have you not places filled up in the law
By some grave senators that you imagine
40 Have held them long enough, and such spirits as you,
Were they removed, would leap into their dignities?
FIRST LAWYER
Dic quibus in terris et eris mihi magnus Apollo.
SIMONIDES
But tell me, faith, your fair opinion:
Is't not a sound and necessary law,
This by the Duke enacted?
45 FIRST LAWYER Never did Greece
(Our ancient seat of brave philosophers)
'Mongst all her nomothetai and lawgivers,
Not when she flourished in her sevenfold sages,
Whose living memory can never die,
50 Produce a law more grave and necessary.
SIMONIDES
I'm of that mind too.
SECOND LAWYER I will maintain, sir,
Draco's oligarchy, that the government

13-16 secundum...exemplificatum 'according to the Prince's statutes, confirmed with the voice of the senate, and the voice of the republic, nay, perfected and put into practice.'
14 senatus MASON; senatum BELL.
15 reipublicæ BELL (republicæ)
17 divers several, many, a variety (often used in legal and scriptural contexts)
21 Sub pœna statuti 'under the penalty of the law'
24 climacterical year an especially critical, dangerous, or fatal stage of life. The ages 81 and 63 were considered 'grand climacterics', making them especially critical.
25 'scaping escaping
35 pregnant resourceful, ready
36 hoped expected
reversions inheritances; reversion: the right to succeed to, or occupy, an estate after the death of its owner (legal term). Here and elsewhere, THIS EDITION occasionally adds diacritical marks not in BELL to assist readers with a possible scansion of a verse line.
42 Dic...Apollo 'Tell me how, and you will be as great as Apollo to me.' The line is adapted from Virgil's third Eclogue, translated in 1589 by Abraham Fleming as: 'tell me in what ground... and thou shalt be Apollo great to mee.'
47 'Mongst amongst nomothetai BELL (Nomotheta); this modernization follows OCD's rendering from Greek. In ancient Athens, this committee of lawmakers drafted or revised laws.
51-70 I will...shame The speech is a catalogue of famous lawmakers, reformers, and legal theorists of ancient Greece.
51 maintain support, defend; carry on a law case
52 Draco's Draco is traditionally credited with introducing the first Athenian laws to be set down in writing (c.620 BCE); the laws, including those for homicide, were known for their severe penalties.

- 54 Solon's One of the 'sevenfold sages' of ancient Greece (and a metaphor for wise legislator in the Renaissance), Solon was an Athenian statesman who reformed laws and government during a crisis that arose because of the severe conditions of serfdom (c.600 BCE). His seisachtheia (I.I.57, literally, a 'shaking off of burdens') cancelled debts, released peasants from serfdom and slavery, and forbade money-borrowing that considered persons as security for the debt. According to Thomas North's 1579 translation of Plutarch's Lives of the Noble Grecians and Romans, Solon's friends were known as 'Creocopides, "cutters of detts"'. Solon also repealed Draco's laws, except those against homicide. Creocopides THIS EDITION; Crecopedi BELL; chreokopia GIFFORD. From context, BELL's term seems to mean chreokopia, the cancelling of debts under Solon. However, BELL's spelling (Crecopedi) seems to be an attempt to render the term not for the process, but for persons who cancelled their debts (chreokopides), which North's Plutarch spells 'Creocopides' (see previous note.) The confusion may indicate that Second Lawyer does not fully understand the precedents he cites. The spelling in this edition imagines that BELL (and potentially the hypothetical manuscript that was its copy) followed North's form, but corrected the initial letter.
- 57 seisachtheia MASON (Seisachtheia); Sisaithe BELL. Modernization follows OCD. See I. 54.
- 58 Areopagite members of a judicial council (the Areopagus) reformed by Solon
- 59 Lycurgus legendary legislator credited with creating a social system and laws for Sparta (c.900 BCE). North's translation of Plutarch says of Lycurgus's marital rules: 'a man was not to be blamed, being stepped [= advanced] in yeres, and having a young wife, if seeing a fayer young man that liked him [= pleased him], and knowen with all to be of a gentle nature, he brought him home to get his wife with childe.... Lycurgus did not like that children should be private to any men, but that they should be common to the common weale'.
- 61 woman BELL; wife TAYLOR conj. (spelled 'wiue')
- 64-5 Plato... Aristotle referring to the systems of social organization proposed in Plato's Republic and Aristotle's Politics
- 66 luxurious lecherous; excessive limits extents
- 67 Epire Epirus, a region of north-west Greece, considered backward in ancient times, and isolated geographically, culturally, and linguistically from the rest of Greece (see 5.I.618-21)
- 69 predecessive preceding (meaning earlier in history and perhaps earlier in this speech). This term, which is only known to appear in this play, may be a parody of legal language.
- 74 Whither BELL (Whether)
- 78 jubilee occasion of joyful celebration; in the Old Testament (the Hebrew Bible) and Jewish history, the celebration of a year of Jubilee every fifty years included the freeing of slaves and the reversion of property to its earlier owners.
- 83 He is GIFFORD; Hees is BELL
- 97 Secundum justitiam 'according to the law'

Of community reduced into few
Framed a fair state. Solon's Creocopides,
That cut off poor men's debts to their rich creditors, 55
Was good and charitable (but not full allowed);
His seisachtheia did reform that error,
His honourable senate of Areopagite.
Lycurgus was more loose, and gave too free
And licentious reins unto his discipline, 60
As that a young woman in her husband's weakness
Might choose her able friend to propagate,
That so the commonwealth might be supplied
With hope of lusty spirits. Plato did err,
And so did Aristotle, allowing 65
Lewd and luxurious limits to their laws;
But now our Epire, our Epire's Evander,
Our noble and wise prince, has hit the law
That all our predecessive students
Have missed unto their shame.

Enter Cleanthes

- SIMONIDES Forbear the praise, sir; 70
'Tis in itself most pleasing. Cleanthes,
O lad, here's a spring for young plants to flourish!
The old trees must down kept the sun from us;
We shall rise now, boy.
- CLEANTHES Whither, sir, I pray?
To the bleak air of storms among those trees 75
Which we had shelter from.
- SIMONIDES Yes—from our growth,
Our sap and livelihood, and from our fruit.
What, 'tis not jubilee with thee yet, I think,
Thou look'st so sad on't. How old's thy father?
- CLEANTHES Jubilee, no indeed, 'tis a bad year with me. 80
- SIMONIDES Prithee, how old's thy father? Then I can tell thee.
- CLEANTHES I know not how to answer you, Simonides.
He is too old being now exposed
Unto the rigour of a cruel edict,
And yet not old enough by many years, 85
'Cause I'd not see him go an hour before me.
- SIMONIDES These very passions I speak to my father.
Come, come, here's none but friends here; we may speak
Our insides freely. These are lawyers, man,
And shall be counsellors shortly.
- CLEANTHES They shall be now, sir, 90
And shall have large fees if they'll undertake
To help a good cause, for it wants assistance;
Bad ones (I know) they can insist upon.
- FIRST LAWYER O sir, we must undertake of both parts,
But the good we have most good in.
- CLEANTHES Pray you, say 95
How do you allow of this strange edict?
- FIRST LAWYER
Secundum justitiam, by my faith, sir,

The happiest edict that ever was in Epire.
CLEANTHES
What, to kill innocents, sir? It cannot be;
100 It is no rule in justice there to punish.
FIRST LAWYER O sir,
You understand a conscience, but not law.
CLEANTHES
Why, sir, is there so main a difference?
FIRST LAWYER
You'll never be good lawyer, if you understand not that.
CLEANTHES
105 I think then 'tis the best to be a bad one.
FIRST LAWYER
Why, sir, the very letter and the sense both
Do both o'erthrow you in this statute,
Which that speaks, that every man living to Fourscore years, and women to threescore, shall then 110 Be cut off as fruitless to the republic,
And law shall finish what nature lingered at.
CLEANTHES
And this suit shall soon be dispatched in law.
FIRST LAWYER
It is so plain it can have no demur;
The church-book overthrows it.
CLEANTHES And so it does;
115 The church-book overthrows it if you read it well.
FIRST LAWYER
Still you run from the law into error.
You say it takes the lives of innocents;
I say no, and so says common reason:
What man lives to fourscore and women to three
That can die innocent?
120 CLEANTHES A fine lawful evasion.
Good sir, rehearse the full statute to me.
SIMONIDES
Fie, that's too tedious, you have already
The full sum in the brief relation.
CLEANTHES
Sir, 'mongst many words may be found contradictions,
125 And these men dare sue and wrangle with a statute;
If they can pick a quarrel with some error—
SECOND LAWYER Listen sir, I'll gather it as brief as I can for you. [Reads] 'Anno primo Evandri, be it (for the care and good of the commonwealth, for divers necessary reasons 130 that we shall urge) thus peremptorily enacted'—
CLEANTHES
A fair pretence, if the reasons foul it not.
SECOND LAWYER [reads] 'That all men living in our dominions of Epire in their decayed nature to the age of fourscore, or women to the age of threescore, shall on 135 the same day be instantly put to death, by those means and instruments that a former proclamation had (to this purpose) through our said territories dispersed.'
CLEANTHES
There was no women in this senate, certain.

103 is COXETER; ls BELL. The difference between i and l is obviously slight; in lightly printed copies of BELL, the difference is undetectable, and readers probably would not have interpreted this as a moment requiring intervention.
main great
106–7 both...both It is difficult for a reader to differentiate the exaggerations of the lawyer's language from the possibility of an extra word (the first both?) in BELL. In l. 108, 'Which that' (as an archaic construction meaning 'which') may work similarly.
107 o'erthrow The first use of this and related terms that link the way in which the old people are executed (2.1.132–6) and the social and political consequences of this action (the overturning of 'proper' hierarchies, the world upside-down). See 1.1.114–15, 1.1.482, 4.2.196, 5.1.216.
113 demur delay, doubt, hesitation; in legal terminology, a demurrer was an objection that delayed the proceedings: 'a kind of pause upon a point of difficultie in any action', John Cowell, The Interpreter (1637)
114 church-book the parish registry that records dates of christenings, marriages, burials, and thus the ages of parishioners. In the next line, however, Cleanthes uses the term to mean 'bible'.
119 women BELL; woman TAYLOR conj.
127 gather collect, bring together
128 Anno primo Evandri 'the first year of Evander's reign' 129 commonwealth 1) public welfare (in this case BELL's two-word spelling, common wealth, is more appropriate); 2) the group of people making up a nation or state; 3) a republic governed by the people; 4) the term used specifically to designate the English form of government at the time this play was first published (1656)
divers several; various 130 peremptorily decisively, conclusively; in a way that precludes debate or objection (legal term)
131 pretence aim or purpose (not necessarily hypocritical) (OED)
138 women BELL. Since was could be used as a plural verb, the commonplace emendation to woman (COXETER) is unnecessary. Readers of some copies (particularly FOLGER and LCP) would have confronted a blotch in place of the second vowel and might have interpreted this graphic shape as either word.

139-63 Since it is largely impossible to differentiate between deliberately labyrinthine prose that parodies legal language and errors in the text, I have taken a middle road in this speech, repunctuating it (as with the rest of the play) to make it legible to a modern reader, but leaving the words largely as they are in BELL—modernizing their spellings, but not rewriting the passage, as many previous editors have. The point or effect of the speech may have been that ‘the old law’ does not (within either a grammatical or a certain moral paradigm) make complete sense. See ll. 106-7.

141 livelihood BELL; likelihood GIFFORD

142 counsels ability to give advice. BELL’s spelling (councells) might also be modernized as councils, especially since counsel is rarely plural. The modernization of BELL’s spelling Counsel is more interpretively significant at l. 152, where it could mean: ‘never admitted, by advice of counsel’; or ‘never permitted to serve as counsel’; or ‘never admitted by council’ (a deliberative body).

143 which BELL; for MASON; whose GIFFORD

146 it... is BELL; they may be supposed COXETER; it may be supposed, [they are] SHAW

148 yet nevertheless; still

means BELL; Mean MASON

149 born to them theirs by birth, with a pun on borne (carried)

150 for the which are BELL; for the which they are adjudged to death MASON; [be condemned to die]: for GIFFORD; for BULLEN; [and they be condemned to death.] For SHAW

151 never were defence BELL; were never a Defence MASON; were never defence SHAW

152 the... government BELL; assist in the Government COXETER; the assist[ance] of [the] government DYCE

154 to be past BELL; being MASON; past GIFFORD; they be past BULLEN; be past SHAW

155 fit COXETER; fit BELL

then BELL; for them MASON; not in GIFFORD

156 member BELL; Members MASON. Member = part of the body politic, the commonwealth.

to be BELL; that they be GIFFORD; they be DYCE

161 further COXETER; furrher BELL

164 fairly gilded adorned with beautiful words; covered over with decoration that conceals defects; possibly also with a suggestion of gold/money (guilders) and of lawyers as a group (guild)—all readings suggested by BELL’s spelling gilded

167 Pox an exclamation of impatience; literally, a disease

176 ope open

180 expressly in plain terms; in particular

FIRST LAWYER [reads] ‘That these men, being past their bearing arms, to aid and defend their country, past their manhood and livelihood, to propagate any further issue to their posterity, and as well past their counsels (which overgrown gravity is now run into dotage), to assist their country, to whom in common reason nothing should be so wearisome as their own lives, as it may be supposed is tedious to their successive heirs, whose times are spent in the good of their country, yet wanting the means to maintain it, and are like to grow old before their inheritance (born to them) come to their necessary use; for the which are the women, for that they never were defence to their country, never by counsel admitted to the assist of government of their country, only necessary to the propagation of posterity, and now at the age of threescore to be past that good, and all their goodness: it is thought fit, then, a quarter abated from the more worthy member, to be put to death as is before recited, provided that, for the just and impartial execution of this our statute, the example shall first begin in and about our court, which ourself will see carefully performed, and not for a full month following extend any further into our dominions. Dated the sixth of the second month, at our palace royal in Epire.’

CLEANTHES

A fine edict, and very fairly gilded.

And is there no scruple in all these words

To demur the law upon occasion?

SIMONIDES

Pox, ’tis an unnecessary inquisition;

Prithee, set him not about it.

SECOND LAWYER [to Cleanthes] Troth, none, sir,

It is so evident and plain a case

There is no succour for the defendant.

CLEANTHES

Possible? Can nothing help in a good case?

FIRST LAWYER

Faith, sir, I do think there may be a hole

Which would protract delay, if not remedy.

CLEANTHES

Why, there’s some comfort in that, good sir; speak it.

FIRST LAWYER

Nay, you must pardon me for that, sir.

SIMONIDES

It may ope a wound to many sons and heirs

That may die after it.

CLEANTHES [to First Lawyer]

Come, sir, I know how to make you speak;

[He gives him money]

will this do’t?

FIRST LAWYER

I will afford you my opinion, sir.

CLEANTHES [to Second Lawyer]

Pray you, repeat the literal words, expressly

The time of death.

SIMONIDES

’Tis an unnecessary question; prithee, let it alone.

- SECOND LAWYER
Hear his opinion; 'twill be fruitless, sir.
[Reads] 'That man at the age of fourscore, and women 185 at threescore shall the same day be put to death.'
- FIRST LAWYER
Thus, I help the man to twenty-one years more—
CLEANTHES That were a fair addition.
- FIRST LAWYER
Mark it, sir: we say man is not at age
Till he be one-and-twenty; before, his infancy
190 And adolescence; nor (by that addition)
Fourscore he cannot be till a hundred and one.
- SIMONIDES O poor evasion!
He's fourscore years old, sir—
- FIRST LAWYER That helps more, sir:
He begins to be old at fifty, so at fourscore
195 He's but thirty years old, so believe it, sir,
He may be twenty years in declination
And so long may a man linger and live by't.
- SIMONIDES
The worst hope of safety that e'er I heard.
200 Give him his fee again; 'tis not worth two deniers.
- FIRST LAWYER There's no law for restitution of fees, sir.
Enter Creon and Antigona
- CLEANTHES
No, no, sir, I meant it lost when 'twas given.
- SIMONIDES No more, good sir;
Here are ears unnecessary for your doctrine.
- FIRST LAWYER
205 I have spoke out my fee and I have done, sir.
- SIMONIDES
O my dear father!
- CREON Tush, meet me not in exclams;
I understand the worst and hope no better.
A fine law; if this hold, white heads will be cheap,
And many watchmen's places will be vacant.
210 Forty of 'em I know my seniõrs,
That did due deeds of darkness too—their country
Has watched 'em a good turn for't, and ta'en 'em
Napping now. The fewer hospitals will serve too;
Many may be used for stews and brothels,
215 And those people will never trouble 'em to fourscore.
- ANTIGONA
Can you play and sport with sorrow, sir?
- CREON
Sorrow for what, Antigona? For my life?
My sorrow's I have kept it so long well
With bringing it up unto so ill an end.
220 I might have gently lost it in my cradle,
Before my nerves and ligaments grew strong
To bind it faster to me.
- SIMONIDES [aside] For mine own sake,
I should have been sorry for that.
- CREON In my youth
I was a soldier; no coward in my age,
225 I never turned my back upon my foe.
I have felt nature's winters' sicknesses,
Yet ever kept a lively sap in me
- 184-5 man... threescore The law's twenty-year difference in the execution age of men and women may reflect a similar difference encoded in an Elizabethan statute regulating labour, which freed women over 40 and men over 60 from compulsory agricultural work ('Statute of Artificers' 5 Eliz c. 4 (1562), sections 5 and 17).
- 190 nor BELL; NOW MASON. The final letter is legible only in some copies (FOLGER, WILLIAMS); the indistinctly printed word might have been read as not in other copies.
- 197 declination decline
- 198 by't BELL (bit). by't = by it (i.e., by this interpretation of the law). A modernization first adopted by DYCE, though suggested by COXETER (by it). Other possible readings for BELL's 'linger and live bit'—a line without end punctuation:
And so long may a man linger and live [a] bit.
And so long may a man linger and live bit [by bit]—
[Simonides interrupts]
And so long may a man linger and live bit. [i.e., stung by death, but not yet dead]
- 200 deniers BELL (deneers). Coins of little value (one-twelfth of a French sou); a term sometimes used in English to translate the Latin monetary term denarius
- 201.1 Enter Creon and Antigona The names recall (not altogether sensically in this context) the tyrant king and resistant heroine of Sophocles's tragedy Antigone.
Creon BELL (HOUGHTON2, HUNTINGTON); Cre on BELL (HOUGHTON1, FOLGER, WILLIAMS, LCP, NEWBERRY). Unlike another press variant identified in these notes (2.1.96), but like letters that seem to fail to print throughout BELL at various points in various copies (see 4.1.148), this variant cannot necessarily be ascribed to deliberate alteration of the text during the process of printing. BELL's intra- and inter-word spacing is often unusual, even when considered within the broad range of early modern spelling and typesetting practices.
- 204 ears unnecessary for ears that need not hear
- 206 Tush an exclamation of impatient contempt in exclams with exclamations
- 210-13 Forty... now I know forty men older than me who did required service (like watchmen) defending their country, which has returned the favour by executing them in their old age.
- 211 due BELL; do COXETER too—their country MASON; ~, ~ BELL
- 212 ta'en taken
- 214 stews whore-houses; hot baths
- 218 sorrow's BELL (sorrowes); sorrowe's NEWBERRY (added handwritten apostrophe)
- 219 unto BELL; to TAYLOR conj.
- 222 aside Since at this point Simonides seems still to be disguising his attempt to hustle his father off to death, I have placed an 'aside' in the text. But BELL does not indicate lines spoken 'aside', and they must always be read in the text column as an interpretive act by the editor. Whether a reader accepts that interpretation may depend on how brazenly he/she understands Simonides to be acting toward his parents at this point in the play; what it is appropriate to say aloud to one's parent in Renaissance culture might be said to be the subject matter of the play as a whole. For other ambiguous instances of 'asides', see 2.1.108, 3.2.266-8, 4.2.132.
- 226 winters' sicknesses BELL (winters fickneffes); Winter's ~ COXETER; Winters, ~ MASON conj.; winter-sicknesses BULLEN conj.; winter sicknesses SHAW

- To greet the cheerful spring of health again.
Dangers on horseback, on foot, by water,
230 I have 'scaped to this day, and yet this day,
Without all help of casual accidents,
Is only deadly to me, 'cause it numbers
Fourscore years to me. Where's the fault now?
I cannot blame time, nature, nor my stars,
235 Nor aught but tyranny; even kings themselves
Have sometimes tasted an even fate with me:
He that has been a soldier all his days
And stood in personal opposition
'Gainst darts and arrows, the extremes of heat,
240 And pinching cold, has treacherously at home
In his securèd quiet by a villain's hand
[]
Am basely lost in my star's ignorance,
And so must I die by a tyrant's sword.
- FIRST LAWYER
245 O say not so, sir; it is by the law!
- CREON
And what's that, sir, but the sword of tyranny,
When it is brandished against innocent lives?
I'm now upon my deathbed, sir, and 'tis fit
I should unbosom my free conscience
250 And show the faith I die in: I do believe
'Tis tyranny that takes my life.
- SIMONIDES [aside] Would it were gone
By one means or other. What a long day
Will this be ere night!
- CREON Simonides.
- SIMONIDES
Here, sit—([breaks off], weeping)
- CREON Wherefore dost thou weep?
- CLEANTHES [aside]
255 'Cause you make no more haste to your end.
- SIMONIDES
How can you question nature so unjustly?
I had a grandfather, and then had not you
True filial tears for him?
- CLEANTHES [aside] Hypocrite,
A disease of drought dry up all pity from him
260 That can dissemble pity with wet eyes!
- CREON
Be good unto your mother, Simonides;
She must be now your care.
- ANTIGONA To what end, sir?
The bell of this sharp edict tolls for me
As it rings out for you; I'll be as ready
With one hour's stay to go along with you. 265
- CREON
Thou must not, woman; there are years behind
Before thou canst set forward in this voyage,
And Nature sure will now be kind to all:
She has a quarrel in't, a cruel law
Seeks to prevent her; she'll therefore fight in't
270 And draw out life even to her longest thread.
Thou art scarce fifty-five.
- ANTIGONA So many morrows,
Those five remaining years I'll turn to days,
To hours, or minutes for thy company;
'Tis fit that you and I, being man and wife,
275 Should walk together arm-in-arm.
- SIMONIDES [aside]
I hope they'll go together—I would they would,
i'faith,
Then would her thirds be saved too. [To Creon] The day goes away, sir.
- CREON
Why, wouldst thou have me gone, Simonides?
- SIMONIDES
O my heart, would you have me gone before you, sir?
280 You give me such a deadly wound—
- CLEANTHES [aside] Fine rascal.
- SIMONIDES
Blemish my duty so with such a question!
Sir, I would haste me to the Duke for mercy;
He that's above the law may mitigate
The rigour of the law. How a good meaning 285 May be corrupted by misconstruction!
- CREON
Thou corrupt'st mine; I did not think thou mean'st so.
- CLEANTHES [aside] You were in the more error.
- SIMONIDES The words wounded me.
- CLEANTHES [aside] 'Twas pity thou died'st not on't. 290

235-41 kings...hand These lines may allude to the assassination in 1610 of King Henri IV of France, a famous life-long soldier stabbed to death in a Paris street.

237-44 He...sword Either a line (or more) is missing in BELL between 'hand' and 'Am' (as here), or Creon changes pronouns in the midst of this speech, moving from an abstract, third-person description of his situation to an explicitly personal conclusion at 243. A number of other interventions (noted below) have been suggested as a way of making sense of BELL's shift in grammatical person.

240 has BELL; dies COXETER

241-3 hand...Am THIS EDITION; hand | Am BELL

243 Am BELL; I'm COXETER; Been GIFFORD+ my BELL; his GIFFORD+ star's ignorance ignorance of my fate (as dictated by the stars); state's ignorance TAYLOR conj.

254 Here, sit—([breaks off], weeping) THIS EDITION; Heer fit — — weeping. BELL; Here, Sir [weeping. COXETER; Here, sir, — weeping. GIFFORD; Here [I] sit, weeping. SHAW. PRICE argues that (as in the 1623 quarto of The Duke of Milan) 'the composer has in places left blanks for words he could not decipher...' (123). THIS EDITION interprets BELL's unusual punctuation as suggesting that 'weeping' is a marginal stage direction rather than part of Simonides's speech. Alternatively, the entire line in BELL might be read as a stage direction for the actor playing Simonides. See note to 3.2.173.

272 morrows days after today; mornings

278 thirds the third of a deceased husband's personal property that was inherited by his widow (legal term)

287 mean'st BELL (meanest)

SIMONIDES

I have been ransacking the helps of law,
 Conferring with these learned advocates;
 If any scruple, cause, or wrested sense
 Could have been found out to preserve your life,
 It had been bought (though with your full estate),
 Your life's so precious to me, but there is none.

FIRST LAWYER

Sir, we have canvassed it from top to toe,
 Turned it upside down, threw her on her side,
 Nay, opened and dissected all her entrails,
 Yet can find none; there's nothing to be hoped
 But the Duke's mercy.

SIMONIDES [aside] I know the hope of that;
 He did not make the law for that purpose.

CREON

Then to his hopeless mercy last I go;
 I have so many precedents before me,
 I must call it hopeless. Antigona,
 See me delivered up unto my deathsman,
 And then we'll part; five years hence I'll look for thee.

SIMONIDES [aside]

I hope she'll not stay so long behind you.

CREON

Do not bate him an hour by grief and sorrow;
 Since there's a day prefixed, haste it not.
 Suppose me sick, Antigona; dying now,
 Any disease thou wilt may be my end,
 Or when death's slow to come, say tyrants send.

Exeunt [Creon and Antigona]

SIMONIDES

Cleanthes, if you want money tomorrow use me;
 I'll trust you while your father's dead.

Exeunt [Simonides and Lawyers]

CLEANTHES

Why here's a villain 315

Able to corrupt a thousand by example.
 Does the kind root bleed out his livelihood
 In parent distribution to his branches,
 Adorning them with all his glorious fruits,
 Proud that his pride is seen when he's unseen?
 And must not gratitude descend again
 To comfort his old limbs in fruitless winter?
 Improvident, at least partial, Nature—
 Weak woman in this kind—who in thy last Teeming still forgets the former, ever making
 The burden of thy last throes the dearest
 Darling. O, yet, in noble man reform it,
 And make us better than those vegetives
 Whose souls die within 'em! Nature, as thou art old,
 If love and justice be not dead in thee,
 Make some the pattern of thy piety,
 Lest all do turn unnaturally against thee,
 And thou be blamed for our oblivions
 And brutish reluctations.

Enter Leonides and Hippolita

Ay, here's the ground

Whereon my filial faculties must build
 An edifice of honour or of shame
 To all mankind.

HIPPOLITA [to Leonides]

You must avoid it, sir,

- 291 ransacking examining thoroughly, making a detailed search; plundering, damaging, destroying
- 293 cause case, legal action; fact (legal term)
- 297–301 The law's transformation here from a neuter body to a female one may have served to remind an audience of the asymmetrical gendering of the law itself, also formulated in the language of the body ('member', l. 156). This figurative description of the law's dissection also resonates with depictions of dissection in Renaissance anatomical treatises, like the title-page of Andreas Vesalius, De humani corporis fabrica libri (1543).
- 304 precedents previous cases, examples (legal term); fore-runners (i.e. those already executed). BELL spells 'presidents'; though we now distinguish these words, they were spelled interchangeably, which may suggest the way in which precedents were thought to preside. Advising Prince Charles to follow the example of his father (King James) in 1616, James Montagu wrote: 'Neither doeth the Honour of a good Sonne consist in any thing more, then in imitating the good Presidents of a good

- Father . . . ' (James I, Workes).
- 309 bate subtract, lessen (abate); as a legal term, abate could mean: to put an end to a legal action, to render a writ null and void. In this context, audiences might have heard a suggestion (not altogether sensical) of the legal term abatement, the intrusion of someone without inheritance rights onto lands before the proper heir's possession of them.
- him the Executioner (l. 306) or Simonides
- 313 tyrants send In the theatre, an audience might have heard 'tyrants end'.
- 315 while until
- 317 bleed out bleed forth, but perhaps also with a suggestion of 'exhaust' (an unusual usage)
- 318 parent parental. Parent was only rarely used as an adjective, in the phrases heir parent and parent heir, uses clearly related to this passage.
- 323–7 Improvident . . . Darling One possible paraphrase of this difficult sentence: Nature, you are not forward-looking (provident) in always seeming to favour youth (what you have produced most recently) over age. See 1.1.443.
- 324 Weak woman in this kind weak, like a - woman, in this way

- last BELL; latest TAYLOR conj.
- 326 burden BELL (burthen)
- last throes latest labour-pains, possibly with a suggestion of death-throes (especially since last is repeated)
- 328 vegetives vegetables or plants, 'capable of growth and development but devoid of sensation and thought' (OED)
- 331 pattern BELL's spelling is patern, and, in a speech arguing for 'parent distribution' from father to son, it is worth noting that the word we now spell pattern was not fully differentiated from its root patron (and the related term paternal) until 1700. Patron could mean an advocate or defender. Describing to Prince Charles the collected Workes of his father King James, Montagu wrote: 'Let these Workes, therefore, most gracious Prince, lie before you as a Patterne; you cannot haue a better . . . ' (a4).
- 333 oblivions things forgotten; forgetfulness
- 334 brutish beastly, non-human
- reluctations struggles against, or resistances to something (the 'turnings against' of 1.1.332)
- 334.1 Hippolita a queen of the Amazons, later conquered and married to Theseus

- If there be any love within yourself.
 This is far more than fate of a lost game
 340 That another venture may restore again;
 It is your life which you should not subject
 To any cruelty if you can preserve it.
- CLEANTHES
 O dearest woman, thou hast now doubled
 A thousand times thy nuptial dowry to me.
 345 Why, she whose love is but derived from me
 Is got before me in my debted duty!
- HIPPOLITA
 Are you thinking such a resolution, sir?
- CLEANTHES
 Sweetest Hippolita, what love taught thee
 To be so forward in so good a cause?
- HIPPOLITA
 350 Mine own pity, sir, did first instruct me,
 And then your love and power did both command me.
- CLEANTHES
 They were all blessed angels to direct thee,
 And take their counsel. [To Leonides] How do you fare,
 sir?
- LEONIDES
 355 Never better, Cleanthes; I have conceived
 Such a new joy within this old bosom,
 As I did never think would there have entered.
- CLEANTHES
 Joy call you it? Alas, 'tis sorrow, sir,
 The worst of sorrows, sorrow unto death.
- LEONIDES
 360 Death? What's that, Cleanthes? I thought not on't;
 I was in contemplation of this woman.
 'Tis all thy comfort, son; thou hast in her
 A treasure unvaluable; keep her safe.
 When I die, sure 'twill be a gentle death,
 For I will die with wonder of her virtues—
 Nothing else shall dissolve me.
- CLEANTHES
 365 'Twere much better, sir,
 Could you prevent their malice.
- LEONIDES
 I'll prevent 'em,
 And die the way I told thee: in the wonder
 Of this good woman. I tell thee, there's few men
 Have such a child; I must thank thee for her.
 370 That the stronger tie of wedlock should do more
- Than Nature in her nearest ligaments
 Of blood and propagation! I should ne'er
 Have begot such a daughter of my own.
 A daughter-in-law! Law were above nature
 Were there more such children.
- CLEANTHES
 This admiration
 Helps nothing to your safety; think of that, sir.
- LEONIDES
 Had you heard her, Cleanthes, but labour
 In the search of means to save my forfeit life,
 And knew the wise and sound preservations
 That she found out, you would redouble all 380 My wonder in your love to her.
- CLEANTHES
 The thought,
 The very thought claims all that from me,
 And she's now possessed of it. But good sir,
 If you have aught received from her advice,
 Let's follow it, or else let's better think,
 385 And take the surest course.
- LEONIDES
 I'll tell thee one:
 She counsels me to fly my severe country,
 Turn all into treasure, and there build up
 My decaying fortunes in a safer soil,
 Where Epire's law cannot claim me.
- CLEANTHES
 390 And sir,
 I apprehend it as a safest course
 And may be easily accomplished;
 Let us be all most expeditious.
 Every country where we breathe will be our own,
 Or better soil. Heaven is the roof of all,
 395 And now, as Epire's situate by this law,
 There is 'twixt us and heaven a dark eclipse.
- HIPPOLITA
 O then avoid it, sir; these sad events
 Follow those black predictions.
- LEONIDES
 I prithee peace.
 I do allow thy love, Hippolita,
 400 But must not follow it as counsel, child;
 I must not shame my country for the law.
 This country here hath bred me, brought me up,
 And shall I now refuse a grave in her?
 I'm in my second infancy, and children
 405 Ne'er sleep so sweetly in their nurse's cradle
 As in their natural mother's.

340 venture endeavour, with the suggestion of risk-taking. For more on this important word, see 3.1.177.
 343 now doubled BELL; doubled now TAYLOR conj.
 345 derived See I.1.458–63.
 362 unvaluable invaluable, priceless
 370 stronger BELL. TAYLOR suggests 'stranger', since wedlock connects one to 'strangers', which paradoxically 'do[es] more' than the nearest natural connection.
 374–5 daughter-in-law . . . children Leonides's emphasis on 'law' is a prime instance of the play's frequent comparison of the law with what is perceived to be natural. For one definition of natural in the play, see Cleanthes's speech, I.1.317–34.

 378 forfeit life Leonides's life, given up (forfeited) in compliance with the Old Law. The legal term forfeiture signified 'the effect of transgressing a penall law, rather than the transgression itself' (Cowell, The Interpreter, 1637). Since fet was a past participle of fetch, BELL's spelling forfet may carry the additional resonance of fore-fet (fetched ahead of its time).

 379 preservations means of preserving (OED); preservatives TAYLOR conj.
 380 found COXETER; foud BELL. The inversion of n/u occurs occasionally in this text, most significantly at 5.1.57.
 396 situate by situated, placed in relation to 407–9 natural mother's . . . her Again emphasizing that the law violates what is represented as 'natural' by Hippolita and Cleanthes, and hearkening back to Cleanthes's presentation of a reproductive, female Nature (I.1.323–7).

	HIPPOLITA	Ay, but sir, She is unnatural; then the stepmother Is to be preferred before her.	'Tis done, pray you observe 'em: I can conceal you And yet not leave your country.
	LEONIDES	Tush, she shall	LEONIDES	Tush, it cannot be 435
410		Allow it me despite of her entrails!	CLEANTHES
		Why, do you think how far from judgement 'tis That I should travel forth to seek a grave That is already digged for me at home— Nay, perhaps find it in my way to seek it?
415		How have I then sought a repentant sorrow? For your dear loves, how have I banished you From your country ever with my base attempt? How have I begged you in wasting that Which only for your sakes I bred together—
420		Buried my name in Epire, which I built Upon this frame to live forever in? What a base coward shall I be to fly From that enemy which every minute meets me! And thousand odds he had not long vanquished me
425		Before this hour of battle! Fly my death? I will not be so false unto your states, Nor fainting to the man that's yet in me: I'll meet him bravely; I cannot (this knowing) fear That when I am gone hence I shall be there.
430		Come, I have days of preparation left.
	CLEANTHES	Good sir, hear me. I have a genius that has prompted me, And I have almost formed it into words—
			HIPPOLITA	'Tis holy care, sir, Of your dear life, which is your own to keep, But not your own to lose, either in will Or negligence.
			CLEANTHES	Call you it treason, sir? I had been, then, a traitor unto you, Had I forgot this. Beseech you accept of it; It is secure, and a duty to yourself.
			LEONIDES	What a coward will you make me!
			CLEANTHES	You mistake— 'Tis noble courage: now you fight with death,

410 entrails thought to be the location of emotions

414–23 Since exclamation points and question marks are sometimes used in ways that seem interchangeable in BELL, it is possible to read a number of the questions in this speech as exclamations.

415 have I i.e., will I have

417 with my base attempt Given BELL's lack of punctuation, it is not clear whether this phrase belongs with the question that precedes or follows it. BELL reads 'From your Country ever with my base attempt'; the editorial question mark inserted at the end of this line might instead be inserted after 'ever'. This intervention might seem extreme (because it places a question mark in the middle of an unpunctuated line), but punctuation of the kind a modern reader would expect is often scarce or absent in BELL.

426 your states 1) governments in general; 2) the government of Epire specifically (its authorities, its nobles, or its ruling assembly, the 'estates of the realm', elsewhere in the play called a 'senate' and a 'parliament' [I.I.138]); 3) Cleanthes and Hippolyta's welfare; and 4) more specifically, the legal term for Cleanthes and Hippolyta's right or title to property or 'estates', about which Leonides has just spoken at ll. 418–19.

Interpreting this word need not be a choice of any one definition; since the appropriate conduct of the state and the family are closely linked in the play (and in early modern English culture generally), the word may carry these meanings simultaneously.

428–9 I... there Knowing this, I can't/won't allow myself to fear that when I am dead I'll be in a foreign country.

432 genius Several meanings are applicable here, in ways that may significantly complicate an understanding of Cleanthes as a 'character'. In a classical meaning that extends to the present, genius signified the god or spirit that accompanied each person through life 'to govern his fortunes and determine his character' (OED). Later there developed, in the words of a 1614 text, the 'tradition of two Genii [geniuses], which attend every man, one good, the other euill' (Purchas his Pilgrimage). At about the same time, the word also began to mean the 'characteristic disposition' of a person—what we might call 'personality', but with the significant reminder that the genius is figured (as it is here) as Other, an entity originating outside the person in question. In a way that may be important to an interpretation of the later part of the play, then, Cleanthes here says that he has a spirit (good? bad?) that arrives at the plan he proceeds to outline, a spirit that 'prompts' him from the outside. (Importantly, genius did not begin to mean superabundant creativity or intelligence until well after the writing and publication of this play—in the mid-eighteenth century).

436 on's on us

438 lodge a secluded house in a forest that serves as a temporary retreat

439 passengers travellers, passersby

441 yes indeed. Possibly an error for 'yet' (= furthermore, besides).

yes BELL; yet COXETER situate with situated with, placed among

443 provident foreseeing

445 treason The choice established here—between treason to one's country and treason to one's father—is central to the play, for it distinguishes two things that were often said to go together in early modern English culture. See 5.1.198–201.

446–9 'Tis... negligence The line cites the Christian (Augustinian) prohibition against suicide, whether active or passive.

446 holy This spelling (BELL's) was used at least through the sixteenth century to signify the words we now distinguish as holy and wholly.

- 455 And yield not to him till you stoop under him.
LEONIDES
This must needs open to discovery,
And then what torture follows?
CLEANTHES By what means, sir?
Why, there's but one body in all this counsel,
Which cannot betray itself. We two are one—460 One soul, one body, one heart, that think all one thought—
And yet we two are not completely one;
But as I have derived myself from you,
Who shall betray us where there is no second?
HIPPOLITA
You must not mistrust my faith, though my sex
Plead weak and frailty for me.
465 LEONIDES O, I dare not!
But where's the means that must make answer for
me?
I cannot be lost without a full account,
And what must pay that reckoning?
CLEANTHES O sir, we will
Keep solemn obits for your funeral;
470 We'll seem to weep, and seem to joy withal,
That death so gently has prevented you
The law's sharp rigour, and this no mortal ear
Shall participate the knowledge of.
LEONIDES Ha, ha, ha!
475 This will be a sportive fine demur,
If the error be not found.
CLEANTHES Pray, doubt of none;
- Your company and best provision
Must be no further furnished than by us,
And in the interim your solitude
May converse with heaven, and fairly prepare 480
Which was too violent and raging
Thrown headlong on you.
LEONIDES Still, there are some doubts
Of the discovery, yet I do allow't.
HIPPOLITA
Will you not mention now the cost and charge
Which will be in your keeping?
LEONIDES That will be somewhat 485
Which you might save too.
CLEANTHES With his will against him,
What foe is more to man than man himself?
Are you resolved, sir?
LEONIDES I am, Cleanthes.
If by this means I do get a reprieve
And cozen death awhile, when he shall come 490
Armed in his own power to give the blow,
I'll smile upon him then, and laughing go. Exeunt
Finis Actus Primus
-
- Incipit Actus Secundus*
Enter Duke, three Courtiers, and Executioner 2.1
DUKE Executioner.
EXECUTIONER
My lord.

457 torture torture (in the modern sense); executioner, torturer. BELL's spelling tortor was one possible seventeenth-century spelling of torture; tortor's additional meaning of executioner is relevant here, especially since a character named Executioner appears in the scene that 'follows'. Both spellings suggest the legal discourse of 'tort'—the perceived wrongness (etymologically, the 'twisted' nature) of this particular law.

458–63 one body . . . second It is not entirely clear which 'two' are 'one' in this speech—Leonides and Cleanthes, or Cleanthes and Hippolita. The speech initially seems directed at Leonides, suggesting the commonplace that the son was a true and perfect copy of his father, a 'second-self' as Prince Charles was said to be in relation to King James I (Workes). Yet the end of the speech, turning to Cleanthes's derivation from his father, suggests that he had been initially referring to Hippolita, with whom he is (in the words of Genesis 2:24, quoted frequently in the period) 'one flesh'. In l. 461, we two may again refer to Leonides. The complicated mathematics of the speech may thus reveal an important fracture in the discourse of the family in early modern England: with which 'one body' is the son 'one flesh', the father or the wife? These questions of identity are further complicated here by l. 462's apparently missing 'I' (added here).

460 one body, one heart BELL; one heart, one body TAYLOR conj.

462 as I MASON; ~_A BELL

465 weak weakness. The meaning is clear; the usage is unusual. The difficult syntax may result from a play on 'plead guilty'; most editions substitute weakness, though doing so disrupts the iambic metre. TAYLOR conjectures that weak and may be an error for weakend (weakened). weak and frailty BELL. MASON's emendation (weak and frailty) seems unsupported by OED, which lists no adverbial uses of weak; GIFFORD's (Weakness and frailty), adopted by all subsequent editions, disrupts the fairly regular metre in this passage, without any real benefit in meaning. See previous note.

467 account 1) explanation; or

2) arithmetical or financial reckoning (the next line plays on this meaning). Account/accompt (BELL's spelling) were interchangeable in the period, and both could designate a legal term: 'Accompt is a writ, and it lieth where a bayliffe or a Receiver to any Lord or other man, which ought to render accompt, will not give his account' (John Rastell, The exposicians of the termes of the lawes, 1618).

account BELL (accompt)

469 obits rites

473 participate partake, share

475 sportive playful

demur delay. See 1.1.113.

481 Which BELL; What TAYLOR conj. Which = that which (i.e. Leonides's eventual death)

482 headlong hastily, recklessly; head-first (head fore-most, or down-most)—a meaning that gestures again toward the mode of execution (described in the next scene) and its cultural resonances of the world upside-down (see 1.1.107).

492.1 Primus BELL (Primi)

2.1.0.1 Incipit Actus Secundus THIS EDITION; Act. II. Scen. I. BELL

DUKE How did old Diocles take his death?
 EXECUTIONER
 As weeping brides receive their joys at night, my lord:
 With trembling yet with patience.
 DUKE Why, 'twas well.
 FIRST COURTIER
 5 Nay, I knew my father would do well, my lord,
 Whene'er he came to die; I'd that opinion of him,
 Which made me the more willing to part from him.
 He was not fit to live i'th' world indeed
 Any time these ten years, my lord.
 But I would not say so much.
 10 DUKE No, you did not well in't,
 For he that's all spent is ripe for death at all hours,
 And does but trifle time out.
 FIRST COURTIER Troth, my lord,
 I would I had known your mind nine years ago.
 DUKE
 15 Our law is fourscore years, because we judge
 Dotage complete then, as unfruitfulness
 In women at threescore. Marry, if the son
 Can within compass bring good solid proofs
 Of his own father's weakness and unfitness
 20 To live or sway the living, though he want five
 Or ten years of his number, that's not it,
 His defect makes him fourscore, and 'tis fit
 He dies when he deserves, for every act
 Is in effect then, when the cause is ripe.
 SECOND COURTIER An admirable prince—how rarely he 25 talks! O that we'd known this, lads! What a time did we endure in twopenny commons! And in boots twice vamped!
 FIRST COURTIER Now we have two pair a week, and yet not 30 thankful. 'Twill be a fine world for them sirs that come after us.
 SECOND COURTIER
 Ay, an they knew't.
 FIRST COURTIER Peace, let them never know't.
 THIRD COURTIER
 A pox, there be young heirs will soon smell't out.
 SECOND COURTIER
 'Twill come to 'em by instinct, man.—May your grace
 Never be old, you stand so well for youth.
 DUKE
 35 Why, now methinks our court looks like a spring, Sweet, fresh, and fashionable, now the old weeds are gone.
 FIRST COURTIER
 'Tis as a court should be: gloss and good clothes, my lord, no matter for merit, and herein your law proves a provident act, my lord, when men pass not 40 the palsy of their tongues, nor colour in their cheeks.
 DUKE But women by that law should live long, for they're ne'er past it.
 FIRST COURTIER
 It will have heats, though, when they see the painting
 Go an inch deep i'th' wrinkle, and take up
 45 A box more than their gossips. But for men, my lord,

2 Diocles a resonant name from antiquity; three men of this name seem especially relevant here, all of whom lived around 400 BCE: 1) a Syracusan democrat and legislator, 2) an Athenian comic poet, 3) a physician, contemporary of Aristotle.
 11 ripe ready
 17 compass limits (or perhaps: the established time)
 20 that's not it who's not at the age limit. TAYLOR suggests emending to 'that's no wit', meaning: 1) 'that's no whit' (it makes no difference whether he's 70 or 75); 2) 'that has no wit' (he that is 70 or 75 has no wit).
 23 when . . . ripe when the purpose or end of the law has been reached cause purpose; case, suit (legal term)
 26 twopenny commons cheap accommodations
 27 vamped patched
 29 them sirs those courtiers. 'Them' sounds incorrect to modern ears but was not in the seventeenth century. Another possible modernization of BELL: 'Twill be a fine world for them, sirs, that come after us.'
 31 an if. BELL's spelling (and) could mean both 'and' (the conjunction) and 'if'; throughout THIS EDITION, 'and' has been modernized to 'an' to distinguish these for a modern reader. FIRST COURTIER COXETER; 2. Cou. BELL. In BELL, this and the preceding speech appear on the same line and are each assigned to the Second Courtier. This textual error may suggest the way in which the courtiers were readable as indistinguishable (at least by the compositor who typeset this scene); compare Rosencrantz and Guildenstern in Hamlet, and the silence/disappearance of Third Courtier after the next line, his only speech in the play. See 5.1.3, 5.1.139-40.
 43 have heats produce intense feelings (anger, passions, excitement) painting cosmetics
 44-5 take . . . box buy or possess themselves of a box (of cosmetics)
 45 gossips friends; but also with the derogatory sense of 'gossipers'

- 46 bravery splendour, finery (clothing)
- 55 where BELL; whereas MASON. MASON'S meaning is clear without the emendation.
diseased BELL'S spelling ('diseased') may suggest three syllables.
- 56 Wood BELL (Would), a modernization conjectured by MASON Wood with crazy with the pain of sciatica a painful disease affecting nerves of the leg and especially the hip
- 57 paned hose breeches or hose made of multicoloured strips of cloth; punning, perhaps, on pained
paned BELL (pained)
- 58 Giving... ruined 1) the paned hose don't flatter the figure (of the old men), which lies ruined in any case; 2) the laughing ladies give no reverence to the status of the old men, whose bodies are in ruins; 3) by wearing paned hose, the old men don't show proper respect for the palace (the place), which the courtier sees as ruined by their habits of dress.
- 60 sits BELL (fits), which some readers (including SHAW) may have interpreted as fits
- 61 mutter grumble. But, given the printing of BELL at precisely this point (in all copies consulted a small ink blot appears precisely over the first vowel in what is here taken to be BELL'S mutter), the word might be matter. And since 'soule' could be spelled 'sole' (and possibly vice versa), the reading might be, or might have been taken to be, 'sole matter'. This meaning is perhaps clearer than 'soul mutter' (for it is unclear why the soul and not its usual antithesis the body would mutter in these binding garments); thus: the doublet that requires three hours to button becomes a man's only activity (sole matter) half the day. Whether mutter or matter was pronounced on stage, audiences might have heard soul or sole.
- 69 itself, it is lost BELL (it felle it is loft). The repetition may serve for emphasis; in the context of an otherwise metrically regular passage, the second 'it' might also be construed as a printer's error (an incorrect repetition) to be eliminated.
- 70 bravery See 2.1.46. In the mouth of the Duke, the word may carry both positive and (in retrospect, at the end of the play) negative connotations.
- 72 Sim The courtiers' nickname for Simonides has a number of other meanings and resonances in the context of the play. 'Sim Subtle' was a nickname for a crafty or devious person in the late sixteenth century. Sim may also suggest similarity (i.e., Simonides's likeness with the courtiers, from whom he is attempting to differentiate himself at this point). Compare the son named Sim Quomodo in Michaelmas Term.
Push an exclamation of impatience (like Pish at 3.2.188)
- 81 church-book See 1.1.114; this line carries the irony that Simonides has apparently not read the book's (i.e., the Bible's) injunction to 'Honour thy father and thy mother' (Exodus 20:12).
- 86 not COXETER; no BELL. This change might be a simple modernization; OED cites possible seventeenth-century evidence of no meaning 'not' (see adv.1, 1.α), though it notes that these may be 'misprints', which of course is precisely what we are using OED to adjudicate here.

That should be the sole bravery of a palace,
 To walk with hollow eyes and long white beards
 (As if a prince dwelt in a land of goats),
 With clothes as if they sat upon their backs on purpose
 To arraign a fashion and condemn't to exile, 50
 Their pockets in their sleeves, as if they laid
 Their ear to avarice and heard the devil whisper!
 Now ours lie downward here close to the flank,
 Right spending pockets as a son's should be
 That lives i'th' fashion, where our diseased fathers— 55
 Wood with the sciatica and aches—
 Brought up your paned hose first, which ladies laughed at,
 Giving no reverence to the place (lies ruined);
 They love a doublet that's three hours a-buttoning,
 And sits so close makes a man groan again, 60
 And his soul mutter half a day; yet these are those
 That carry sway and worth, pricked up in clothes.
 Why should we fear our rising?

DUKE You but wrong
 Our kindness and your own deserts to doubt on't.
 Has not our law made you rich before your time? 65
 Our countenance then can make you honourable.

FIRST COURTIER
 We'll spare for no cost, sir, to appear worthy.

DUKE
 Why, you're i'th' noble way, then, for the most
 Are but appearers; worth itself, it is lost,
 And bravery stands for't.
Enter Creon, Antigona, and Simonides

FIRST COURTIER Look, look who comes here! 70
 I smell death, and another courtier,
 Simonides.

SECOND COURTIER
 Sim!

SIMONIDES [aside to Courtiers]
 Push! I'm not for you yet;
 Your company's too costly. After the old man's Dispatched I shall have time to talk with you.
 I shall come into the fashion, ye shall see too, 75
 After a day or two; in the mean time,
 I am not for your company.

DUKE
 Old Creon, you have been expected long.
 Sure you're above fourscore.

SIMONIDES Upon my life,
 Not four-and-twenty hours, my lord; I searched 80
 The church-book yesterday. Does your grace think I'd let my father wrong the law, my lord?
 'Twere pity o' my life then. No, your act Shall not receive a minute's wrong by him
 While I live, sir, and he's so just himself too, 85
 I know he would not offer't. Here he stands.

CREON
 'Tis just I die indeed, my lord, for I confess
 I'm troublesome to life now, and the state
 Can hope for nothing worthy from me now,

90 Either in force or counsel. I've o' late Employed myself quite from the world, and he that once
 Begins to serve his maker faithfully
 Can never serve a worldly prince well after.
 'Tis clean another way.

ANTIGONA [to the Duke] O give not confidence
 95 To all he speaks, my lord, in his own injury!
 His preparation only for the next world
 Makes him talk wildly to his wrong of this.
 He is not lost in judgement—

SIMONIDES [aside] She spoils all again.
 ANTIGONA [to the Duke]
 Deserving any way for state employment.

100 SIMONIDES Mother—
 ANTIGONA [to the Duke]
 His very household laws prescribed at home by him
 Are able to conform seven Christian kingdoms
 They are so wise and virtuous.

SIMONIDES Mother, I say—
 ANTIGONA [to the Duke]
 I know your laws extend not to desert, sir,
 105 But to unnecessary years, and, my lord,
 His are not such: though they show white, they're worthy,
 Judicious, able, and religious.

SIMONIDES [aside to Antigona]
 I'll help you to a courtier of nineteen, Mother.

ANTIGONA
 Away, unnatural!

SIMONIDES [aside] Then I am no fool, I'm sure,
 110 For to be natural at such a time
 Were a fool's part indeed.

ANTIGONA [to the Duke] Your grace's pity, sir,
 And 'tis but fit and just.

CREON [to the Duke] The law, my lord,
 And that's the justest way.

SIMONIDES Well said, father, i'faith.
 Thou wert ever juster than my mother still.

DUKE [to Simonides]
 Come hither, sir.

SIMONIDES My lord.

115 DUKE What are those orders?
 ANTIGONA Worth observation, sir,
 So please you hear them read.

SIMONIDES
 The woman speaks she knows not what, my lord.
 He make a law? Poor man, he bought a table indeed, 120 Only to learn to die by't. There's the business now,
 [He shows his father's table and gives it to the Duke]
 Wherein there are some precepts for a son too—
 How he should learn to live—but I ne'er looked upon't,
 For when he's dead I shall live well enough,
 And keep a better table than that, I trow.

DUKE
 And is that all, sir?

90 o' late BELL (alate). Of late, lately

91 world Translating Montaigne's essay on voluntary suicide, John Florio writes: 'a man doth also sometimes desire death, in hope of a greater good. I desire (saith Saint Paul) to be out of this world, that I may be with Iesus Christ . . . Cleombrotus Ambraciota . . . was so possessed with a desire and longing for an after-life, that without other occasion or more adoe, he went and headlong cast himselfe into the sea' ('A custome of the Ile of Cea', [1603]).

94 clean entirely (adv.). But clean might also be read as an adj. ('Things are pure in the other world'); in Renaissance translations of Old Testament law, clean often means 'undefiled' or 'undefiling'.

96 preparation BELL (HOUGHTON1, HOUGHTON2, HUNTINGTON, NEWBERRY); preparation BELL (FOLGER, WILLIAMS, LCP). This is the only press variant that can be confidently identified as such; see also I.I.201.1.

97 talk . . . this BELL's lack of punctuation produces several meanings: 1) Creon's preparation for heaven makes him talk wildly of this secular world, to the detriment (wrong) of his own life/survival. In this version, commas can be imagined around 'to his wrong'. 2) Creon's preparation for heaven makes him talk wildly, treating this world unjustly (wronging this world). wrong harm, injury or damage (legal term)

102 seven Christian kingdoms England, Scotland, Wales, Ireland, France, Spain, and Italy

108 [aside to Antigona] On asides, see I.I.222-3.

115 orders the 'household laws' of l. 101, with the added civic and moral ideology this word often conveyed: 'As the good Housholder ought to set his house in order, . . . so ought a good Magistrate to order a Cittie and Common-weale . . . Order is the due disposing of al things' (The Mirrov of Policie, 1599).

119 table writing tablet, but with the added sense (alluded to throughout this exchange) of the ten commandments of Exodus 20, known as 'the first and second tables'. For example, James I decried 'all the impieties and sins that can be devised against both the first and second Table' (His Maiesties Speech, 1605).

120.1-2 [He . . . Duke] When BELL's stage directions include props or descriptions of onstage action, it is usually at the point of a character's entrance, which may explain why there is no descriptive direction here. My addition thus is one hypothesis of what might have taken place on stage.

121 precepts Simonides dismisses the popular genre of 'precepts' transmitted from a father to a son about to undertake travel (a situation revised here); see, for example, Polonius's 'few precepts' (Hamlet 1.3).

too BELL (to)

124 keep a better table punning on 'dining table'; i.e., maintain a more lavish lifestyle

- 127 cheese-trenchers plate or platter on which cheese was cut and served; 'trencher' thus resonates with 'household laws' and 'table'/tablet (above) and signals Simonides's debasement of his father's 'orders' and by association the ten commandments. Short verses were sometimes painted 'upon the backe sides of our fruite trenchers of wood' (The Arte of English Poesie, 1589).
- 128 runnet rennet, a 'mass of curdled milk found in the stomach of an unweaned calf or other animal', used in cheesemaking to curdle milk (OED). In the next line, the joke continues with 'calves' maws'.
- 131 Agent person who acts for, does the work of, another; also a legal term
- 133 Before surfeit with before it is surfeited with (exceeds the limits of); already surfeited with (in which case, before-surfeit works as a compound, like before-mentioned or before-named).
- 134 promontory a cliff jutting out over the sea
- 135 sea Again, the English version of Montaigne's essays includes a striking parallel to this passage: 'from the top of an high-steepy rocke, appointed for that purpose, [the old people] cast themselves headlong into the Sea'. On headlong, see 1.1.482. These executions are an age-reversal of the execution in Lycurgus's Sparta of unfit children, who were 'thrown in a deepe pyt of water' because it was thought that 'it was neither good for the childe, nor yet for the common weale, that it should live, considering from his birthe he was not well made, nor geven to be stronge, healthfull, nor lustie of bodie all his life longe' (North, Plutarch's Lives). On Lycurgus, see 1.1.59-64.
- 139 cast down punning on 1) the mode of execution; 2) the demolition of a building; 3) 'downcast' (= dejected); and chiefly, 4) lying down to have sex
- 140 an if
- 141.1 [Exeunt Antigona and Executioner with Creon] THIS EDITION; not in BELL. COLERIDGE provides separate exits for Creon (after 2.1.135-6) and Antigona (after 2.1.143).
- 143 You've BELL (Yave)
- 145 hold you talk have conversation with you
- 146 suit lawsuit; suit of clothes (following line)
- 146.1 Recorders A flute-like wind instrument often associated with funerals and other solemn ceremonies in Renaissance drama (see, for example, Chaste Maid 5.4.0.1). Significantly, recorders will recur in the complement to this scene (5.1.251.1-2). Recorders ... off THIS EDITION; Recorders BELL (in the margin of 2.1.146); Recorders within GIFFORD (after 2.1.149); Recorders [sound from above] SHAW. It is possible that this marginal reference to recorders is one of the 'anticipatory stage directions' that occur frequently later in BELL—that is, a promptbook annotation that instructed the musicians to be prepared to play/enter in a few lines.
- 147 form beauty, handsomeness; body; mode of behaviour
- 148 else otherwise; if not
- with a mischief with a vengeance
- 150.1-2 Recorders ... musicians THIS EDITION; Recorders. Enter | Cleanthes & Hi-polita with a hearse BELL (in the margin of ll. 150-2). BELL clearly indicates that music of recorders is to sound; whether (as imagined here) the musicians entered as part of the procession is not clear. (Compare the stage direction at 5.1.347.1-4.)
- 150.2 hearse the corpse; the coffin; the pall over the corpse; and/or the carriage used to transport the corpse at a funeral
- 153 habited dressed; 'suitable' in the next line plays on this.
- 156 corse BELL (Coarfe). Body (corpse); or way of action (course). BELL's spelling could signify the nouns corse, corpse, and course, as well as the adjective coarse; early modern English did not differentiate (in spelling or pronunciation) among what we think of as separate words. The spelling provided here both signals the most prominent meaning in the text at this point and reminds the reader who speaks or hears the line that 'course' (a way of action, proceeding, or behaviour) is also a possible meaning: the Duke has never seen a corpse accompanied so joyfully, and/or he has never seen a funeral conducted in such a joyful way (course).
- 125 SIMONIDES All I vow, my lord,
Save a few running admonitions
Upon cheese-trenchers, as, 'Take heed of whoring, shun it;
'Tis like a cheese too strong of the runnet',
And such calves' maws of wit and admonition
- 130 Good to catch mice with, but not sons and heirs—
They're not so easily caught.
- DUKE [to Executioner] Agent for death.
- EXECUTIONER
Your will, my lord?
- DUKE Take hence that pile of years,
Before surfeit with unprofitable age,
And with the rest from the high promontory
- 135 Cast him into the sea.
- CREON 'Tis noble justice.
- ANTIGONA 'Tis cursèd tyranny.
- SIMONIDES [aside] Peace, take heed, Mother; you have but a short time to be cast down yourself, and let a young
- 140 courtier do't, an you be wise, in the mean time.
- ANTIGONA Hence, slave!
[Exeunt Antigona and Executioner with Creon]
- SIMONIDES Well, seven-and-fifty,
You've but three years to scold, then comes your payment.
- FIRST COURTIER Simonides.
- SIMONIDES
Push, I am not brave enough to hold you talk yet. 145
Give a man time; I have a suit a-making.
Recorders [begin to play within, as afar off]
- SECOND COURTIER
We love thy form first; brave clothes will come, man.
- SIMONIDES
I'll make 'em come else with a mischief to 'em,
As other gallants do that have less left 'em.
- DUKE
Hark! Whence those sounds? What's that?
Recorders [still]. Enter Cleanthes and Hippolita [in joyful attire] with a hearse [and musicians]
- FIRST COURTIER Some funeral 150
It seems, my lord, and young Cleanthes follows.
- DUKE
Cleanthes?
- SECOND COURTIER
'Tis, my lord, and in the place
Of a chief mourner too, but strangely habited.
- DUKE
Yet suitable to his behaviour, mark it.
He comes all the way smiling; do you observe't? 155
I never saw a corse so joyfully followed.

161 contrariety discordance; diametrical opposition. 'Contrarietie is when our talke standeth by contrary wordes or sentences together' (Wilson, The Art of Rhetorique 1585). Cleanthes's following speeches exemplify this rhetorical figure.

162 natural courses This phrase continues and complicates the non-differentiation of the set of words discussed at 2.1.156. BELL's spelling ('naturall courses') seems at first to refer to 'the way things (courses) naturally proceed' and then (given the descriptions that follow) to a live 'natural corse', the body of Cleanthes. On natural, see 1.1.374-5, 1.1.317-34, 1.1.407-9.

164 handkerchief BELL (handkercher) t'other the other; BELL (tother)

166 apparently openly, visibly

173 That COXETER; Thae BELL

179 blacks black clothing, for mourning; also, funeral draperies, and a 'mute or hired mourner at a funeral' (OED), a meaning more prominent when the word is repeated two lines later

180 orient brilliant, radiant (like the sun, which rises in the east/Orient)

182 to't to it; the sense of the sentence has shifted, with it seeming to refer not to 'blacks' (plural) but to the colour (singular)

187 sables black mourning clothes

188 gaudy-hearted gaudy: showy, ornate (excessively); possibly also with a suggestion of 'joyful' (the Latin etymology). Though Cleanthes's speech seems to be built on the opposition of exterior, theatrical displays of mourning versus interior, authentic emotion, Cleanthes's use of 'gaudy' may engage both sides of the opposition here: these lines describe both a 'showy' theatrical façade and a heart that is also 'gaudy' (joyful? excessive? showy? deceitful?).

190 entirely merry BELL spells 'intirely', which may suggest more fully than the modernized word a pun on clothing ('attire' and 'tire'). Thus, 'in/tirely merry' might also sound like 'merry in clothes'.

195 on't of it

197 performed here and in the Duke's reply, a reminder of the theatricality of the staged funeral

202 revenue income from property

206 Duke in sight MASON conj., GIFFORD; dim fight BELL; dim Sight COXETER. THIS EDITION follows MASON's emendation, with the hypothesis that the manuscript copy for BELL read 'D. in sight' (where 'D.' is an abbreviation for 'duke' and 'in' was misread by the compositor as 'im'). D (conj. in MASON) would retain 'dim sight', explaining that Cleanthes is 'happy that he could shed a Tear' during the fake funeral.

Light colours and light cheeks! Who should this be?
'Tis a thing worth resolving.

SIMONIDES One belike
That doth participate in this our present joy.

DUKE
Cleanthes.

CLEANTHES
O, my lord—

160 DUKE He laughed outright now.
Was ever such a contrariety seen
In natural courses yet, nay, professed openly?

FIRST COURTIER
I ha' known a widow laugh closely, my lord,
Under her handkerchief, when t'other part 165 Of her old face has wept, like rain in sunshine,
But all the face to laugh apparently
Was never seen yet.

SIMONIDES Yes, mine did once.

CLEANTHES
'Tis of a heavy time the joyfull'st day
That ever son was born to.

DUKE How can that be?

CLEANTHES
170 I joy to make it plain: my father's dead.

DUKE Dead!

SECOND COURTIER
Old Leonides?

CLEANTHES In his last month, dead;
He beguiled cruel law the sweetliest
That ever age was blessed to.
It grieves me that a tear should fall upon't,
175 Being a thing so joyful, but his memory
Will work it out, I see. When his poor heart broke,
I did not so much but leapt for joy,

So mountingly I touched the stars, methought.
I would not hear of blacks, I was so light,
But chose a colour orient, like my mind, 180
For blacks are often such dissembling mourners,
There is no credit given to't, it has lost
All reputation by false sons and widows.
Now I would have men know what I resemble,

A truth indeed, 'tis joy clad like a joy, 185
Which is more honest than a cunning grief
That's only faced with sables for a show,
But gaudy-hearted. When I saw death come
So ready to deceive you, sir, forgive me,
I could not choose but be entirely merry, 190
And yet to see now of a sudden

Naming but Death, I show myself a mortal,
That's never constant to one passion long.
I wonder whence that tear came when I smiled;
195 In the production on't, sorrow's a thief,
That can when joy looks on steal forth a grief.
But gracious leave, my lord; when I have performed
My last poor duty to my father's bones,
I shall return your servant.

DUKE Well, perform it.
The law is satisfied; they can but die, 200
And by his death, Cleanthes, you gain well,
A rich and fair revenue.

Flourish. [Exeunt Duke, Courtiers, and Executioner] SIMONIDES I would I had e'en another father, condition he did the like.

CLEANTHES [aside]
I have passed it bravely; now how blessed was I 205
To have the Duke in sight, now 'tis confirmed,
Past fear or doubts confirmed.—On, on, I say,
He that brought me to man I bring to clay.

[Exeunt Cleanthes and Hippolita, with hearse and Recorders]

- SIMONIDES
 I'm wrapped now in a contemplation,
 210 Even at the very sight of yonder hearse;
 I do but think what a fine thing 'tis now
 To live and follow some seven uncles thus,
 As many cousin-germans, and such people
 That will leave legacies. A pox, I'd see 'em hanged else 215 ere I'd follow one of them, and they could find the way.
 Now I've enough to begin to be horrible covetous.
Enter Butler, Tailor, Bailiff, Cook, Coachman, and Footman
- BUTLER
 We come to know your worship's pleasure, sir,
 Having long served your father, how your good will Stands towards our entertainment.
- SIMONIDES Not a jot, i'faith:
 220 My father wore cheap garments; he might do't.
 I shall have all my clothes come home tomorrow;
 They will eat up all you, an there were more of you,
 sirs,
 To keep you six at livery and still munching.
- TAILOR
 Why, I'm a tailor; you've most need of me, sir.
- SIMONIDES
 225 Thou mad'st my father's clothes, that I confess,
 But what son and heir will have his father's tailor
 Unless he have a mind to be well laughed at?
 Thou'st been so used to wide, long-side things that when I come to truss I shall have the waist of my 230 doublet lie upon my buttocks—a sweet sight.
- BUTLER I, a butler.
- SIMONIDES There's least need of thee, fellow; I shall ne'er drink at home, I shall be so drunk abroad.
- BUTLER But a cup of small beer will do well next morning, 235 sir.
- SIMONIDES I grant you, but what need I keep so big a knave for a cup of small beer?
 COOK Butler, you have your answer; marry, sir, a cook I know your mastership cannot be without.
 SIMONIDES The more ass art thou to think so, for what 240 should I do with a mountebank, no drink in my house?
 The banishing the butler might have been a warning for thee, unless thou mean'st to choke me.
 COOK I'th' mean time you have choked me, methinks.
- BAILIFF
 These are superfluous vanities indeed,
 245 And so accounted of in these days, sir,
 But then, your bailiff, to receive your rents—SIMONIDES I prithee, hold thy tongue, fellow; I shall take a course to spend 'em faster than thou canst reckon 'em.
 250 'Tis not the rents must serve my turn, unless I mean to be laughed at; if a man should be seen out of slash-me, let him ne'er look to be a right gallant! But sirrah, with whom is your business?
 COACHMAN Your good mastership.
- SIMONIDES [to Coachman and Footman]
 You have stood silent all this while, like men
 255 That know their strengths i' these days. None of you
 Can want employment; you can win me wagers,
 Footman, in running races.
- FOOTMAN I dare boast it, sir.
- SIMONIDES
 And when my bets are all come in and store,
 Then, coachman, you can hurry me to my whore. 260
- COACHMAN
 I'll firke 'em into foam else.
- SIMONIDES Speaks brave matter,
 And I'll firke some too, or't shall cost hot water.
 [Exeunt Simonides, Coachman, and Footman]

- 209 wrapped BELL (wra^{pt}) wrapped...contemplation absorbed in meditation or thought (also with a mock-religious sense)
- 213 cousin-germans first cousins; relatives
- 214 legacies bequests
- 215 and...way and they could find the way to burial themselves. Possibly and should be read as an (= if): 'if they could find the way to die'.
- 216 covetous The text gestures toward another of the 'old laws', the tenth commandment: 'Thou shalt not couet thy neighbours house, nether shalt thou couet thy neighbours wife, nor his man seruant, nor his maid, nor his oxe, nor his asse, nether any thing that is thy neighbours' (Exodus 20:17, Geneva Bible).
- 216.1 Bailiff BELL (Bayly). A lord's agent, who managed his estate and collected his
- rents. Elsewhere BELL spells 'Bayliff' and
 'Bayliffe', in directions and in dialogue.
OED records bailie as a separate though obsolete word.
- 219 entertainment employment; also pay for service
- 225 mad'st BELL (madeft)
- 228 long-side things long and sweeping garments
- 229 truss tie the laces that joined the doublet and hose
- 234 small weak
- 241 mountebank pretender, con-man
- 251 out of slash-me out of fashion. Probably a reference to garments with slits that exposed linings of contrasting colour; the practice was called 'new fashioned' in 1615 (OED).
- 256 i' these days Because BELL's commas can sometimes be read not as pauses (in the modern way) but as emphasizing
- what comes after, it is not clear in which direction this phrase reads: it may belong with the preceding or following sentence.
- 256-8 you...races The line probably refers to a famous event of 1618, in which wagers were placed on a race run by footmen. A letter written 10 April 1618 reports a popular 'race of two footmen from St Albans to Clerkenwell; the one [footman] an Englishman, belonging lately to the Countess of Bedford, but now to the king; the other an Irish youth, that lost the day, and I know not how much money laid on his head' (Maxwell 144). The race drew huge crowds (including the king).
- 259 store (adv.) abundantly
- 261 firke whip; with the suggestion of frig/frike (= fuck) in Simonides's reply Speaks (he) speaks
- 262 cost hot water cause (someone) trouble

- COOK Why, here's an age to make a cook a ruffin, and scald 265 the devil indeed, do strange mad things, make mutton pasties of dogs' flesh, bake snakes for lamprey-pies, and cats for conies.
- BUTLER Come, will you be ruled by a butler's advice once?
 For we must make up our fortunes somewhere now, as 270 the case stands. Let's e'en therefore go seek out widows of nine-and-fifty an we can; that's within a year of their deaths, and so we shall be sure to be quickly rid of 'em, for a year's enough of conscience to be troubled with a wife for any man living.
- COOK Oracle butler, oracle butler! He puts down all the 275 doctors o'th' name. Exeunt
- 2.2 Enter Eugenia and Parthenia [at separate doors]
- EUGENIA
 Parthenia.
- PARTHENIA
 Mother.
- EUGENIA [aside] I shall be troubled
 This six months with an old clog; would the law
 Had been cut one year shorter!
- PARTHENIA Did you call, forsooth?
- EUGENIA
 Yes, you must make some spoon-meat for your father,
 And warm three night-caps for him. [Exit Parthenia]
 5 Out upon't!
 The mere conceit turns a young woman's stomach!
 His slippers must be warmed in August too,
 And his gown girt to him in the very dog-days
 When every mastiff lolls out's tongue for heat.
 10 Would not this vex a beauty of nineteen now?
 Alas, I shall be tumbling in cold baths now,
 Under each armpit a fine bean-flour bag
 To screw out whiteness when I list,
- And some seven of the prop'rest men i'th' dukedom,
 Making a banquet ready i'th' next room for me,
 15 Where he that gets the first kiss is envied
 And stands upon his guard a fortnight after.
 This is a life for nineteen, but 'tis justice,
 For old men, whose great acts stand in their minds
 And nothing in their bodies, do ne'er think 20 A woman young enough for their desire,
 And we young wenches that have mother wits
 And love to marry muck first, and man after,
 Do never think old men are old enough
 That we may soon be rid on 'em—there's our quit-25 tance.
 I have waited for the happy hour this two year,
 And if death be so unkind still to let him live,
 All that time I am lost.
Enter Courtiers [fashionably dressed]
- FIRST COURTIER
 Young lady.
- SECOND COURTIER
 O sweet precious bud of beauty!—
 Troth, she smells over all the house, methinks.
 30
- FIRST COURTIER
 The sweet-brier's but a counterfeit to her—
 It does exceed you only in the prickle,
 But that it shall not long, if you'll be ruled, lady.
- EUGENIA
 What means this sudden visitation, gentlemen?
 So passing well performed, too! Who's your milliner?
 35
- FIRST COURTIER
 Love and thy beauty, widow.
- EUGENIA
 Widow, sir?
- FIRST COURTIER
 'Tis sure and that's as good. In troth, we're suitors;
 We come a-wooing, wench—plain dealing's best.

263 ruffin 1) the ruff, a fish (playing on the speaker's occupation); 2) slang for the Devil (next line); and 3) ruffian (villain, criminal, with a connotation of low social-class), of which ruffin is a period change to 'Ruffian'; losing this play of meaning.

265 bake COXETER; backe BELL. That OED does not cite BELL's spelling as a form of bake may suggest the limits of OED as a guide to modernization.

lamprey-pies pies made with an eel-like fish

266 conies rabbits. BELL's spelling 'Cunnies' suggests the Renaissance pronunciation, and a pun on cunt is possible here, especially with the phallic 'snakes' and 'lamprey' in the same line.

272 of conscience in fairness, reasonably (but with the larger irony that such a plan would usually be said to go against conscience)

274–5 Oracle butler . . . name referring to Dr William Butler, a renowned and eccentric physician (1535–1618). Butler famously treated royalty—Prince Henry in 1612, King James in 1614. Oracle here may function as an imperative verb, or as part of a compound noun.

2.2.1 Parthenia (from the Greek: virgin, maiden)

Mother step-mother. (Eugenia implies below that she is nineteen and has been married only two years.)

2 This these clog like a ball-and-chain, a heavy piece of wood tied to a person or animal to prevent its escape; an encumbrance

3 forsooth truly

4 spoon-meat soft food for babies or invalids

5 Out upon't Fie upon it

8 girt to wrapped around, fastened to dog-days the hottest days of the year

9 out's out his/its

11 shall be should be; ought to be. Modern idiom would seem to require should (and most editions emend), but this may be a possible usage of shall in the period

(see OED II.2, 4, 8, and 11a). The usage here is in a sense poised on the line between 'shall be' (will in the future, when Lisander dies) and 'should be' (ought to be).

12 bean-flour bag The specific use of this cosmetic in this context is not clear; bean-flour was sometimes used for colouring the hair white (see Webster, The Devil's Law-Case 4.2.290).
bean-flour BELL (beaneflower)

13 screw out draw out (OED)

17 stands The first of this scene's many jokes about penises, erections, and impotence; see below at ll. 20 (no/thing = no penis), 32, 133–4, and 158–68.

23 muck money

25 quittance release, reward

28.1 Enter Courtiers On the apparent disappearance of the Third Courtier, see 2.1.31.

32 prickle thorn, but also prick (penis)

35 performed BELL; perfum'd COXETER

37 we're BELL (w'are)

- EUGENIA
A-woing? What, before my husband's dead?
- SECOND COURTIER
Let's lose no time. Six months will have an end, you 40 know;
I know't by all the bonds that e'er I made yet.
- EUGENIA
That's a sure knowledge, but it holds not here, sir.
- FIRST COURTIER
Do not you know the craft of your young tumblers—that you wed an old man, you think upon another 45 husband as you are marrying of him? We, knowing your thoughts, made bold to see you.
Enter Simonides [fashionably dressed and] Coachman
- EUGENIA [aside] How wondrous right he speaks! 'Twas my thought indeed.
- SIMONIDES By your leave, sweet widow, do you lack any 50 gallants?
- EUGENIA [aside] Widow again! 'Tis a comfort to be called so.
- FIRST COURTIER
Who's this—Simonides?
- SECOND COURTIER Brave Sim, i'faith.
- SIMONIDES Coachman.
- 55 COACHMAN Sir.
- SIMONIDES
Have an especial care of my new mares.
They say, sweet widow, he that loves a horse well Must needs love a widow well. When dies thy husband?
Is't not July next?
- EUGENIA O you're too hot, sir!
60 Pray, cool yourself and take September with you.
- SIMONIDES
September! O, I was but two bows wide.
- FIRST COURTIER Master Simonides.
- SIMONIDES
I can entreat you gallants; I'm in fashion too.
Enter Lisander
- LISANDER
Ha! Whence this herd of folly? What are you?
- SIMONIDES
Well-willers to your wife. Pray tend your book, sir, 65
We have nothing to say to you; you may go die,
For here be those in place that can supply.
- LISANDER
What's thy wild business here?
- SIMONIDES Old man, I'll tell thee:
I come to beg the reversion of thy wife;
I think these gallants be of my mind too. 70
But thou art but a dead man; therefore what should a man do talking with thee? Come, widow, stand to your tackling.
- LISANDER Impious bloodhounds.
- SIMONIDES Let the ghost talk, ne'er mind him. 75
- LISANDER Shames of nature.
- SIMONIDES
Alas, poor ghost, consider what the man is.
- LISANDER
Monsters unnatural, you that have been covetous
Of your own fathers' deaths, gape ye for mine now?
Cannot a poor old man, that now can reckon 80
E'en all the hours he has to live, live quiet
For such wild beasts as these, that neither hold
A certainty of good within themselves,
But scatter others' comforts that are ripened
For holy uses? Is hot youth so hasty 85
It will not give an old man leave to die
And leave a widow first, but will make one,
The husband looking on? May your destructions
Come all in hasty figures to your souls,
Your wealth depart in haste, to overtake 90
Your honesties, that died when you were infants!
May your male seed be hasty spendthrifts too!
Your daughters hasty sinners and diseased
Ere they be thought at years to welcome misery,
And may you never know what leisure is 95
But at repentance! I am too uncharitable,
Too foul; I must go cleanse myself with prayers.
These are the plagues of fondness to old men;
We're punished home with what we dote upon. Exit
- SIMONIDES
So so, the ghost is vanished now; your answer, lady. 100

41 e'er BELL (ere)

43 tumblers acrobats; hunting dogs that distract their prey with tumbling; people
having sex43-4 tumblers— | that you wed BELL
(Tumblers? | That you wed); Tumblers?
You that wed MASON; tumblers? That when you wed GIFFORD44 that When (when that). (See OED that, II.6b.)

61 two bows wide two bow-lengths away

62 Master BELL (Mr.)

63 entreat you gallants BELL's lack of punctuation (replicated in this text) allows several possibilities: 1) I can entreat you, gallants (I can handle you);

2) I can entreat, you gallants (I can negotiate [a marriage]).65 Pray tend your book lack of punctuation allows either of two possibilities: 1) I pray you, tend your book; 2) Pray to God; tend your book (bible, or church register).69 reversion right to inherit or occupy (usually, an estate). See I.I.36.72-3 stand to your tackling hold your ground (without the modern sense of football tackling)78 covetous alluding to the tenth commandment (2.I.216)

82 For From

82-4 neither ... But do not ... and instead

89 hasty figures 1) at a premature age
(figure = number), as the next scene illustrates; 2) premature or hastily prepared horoscopes

91 honesties truthfulness; chastity

99 home to the utmost; but also suggesting:
at home, at the core/centre100 now; Again BELL's punctuation would allow now to read in either direction:
as in the text here, or, 'the ghost is vanished; now your answer, lady'. See 2.I.255-7.

EUGENIA
Excuse me, gentlemen, 'twere as much impudence
In me to give you a kind answer yet,
As madness to produce a churlish one.
I could say now, come a month hence, sweet gentlemen,
105 Or two or three, or when you will indeed,
But I say no such thing, I set no time,
Nor is it mannerly to deny any;
I'll carry an even hand to all the world.
Let other women make what haste they will,
110 What's that to me? But I profess unfeignedly,
I'll have my husband dead before I marry;
Ne'er look for other answer at my hands, gentlemen.

SIMONIDES
Would he were hanged, for my part looks for other.

EUGENIA
I'm at a word.

SIMONIDES And I'm at a blow then;
I'll lay you o'th' lips and leave you.
[Simonides kisses her]

115 FIRST COURTIER Well struck, Sim.

SIMONIDES
He that dares say he'll mend it, I'll strike him.

FIRST COURTIER
He would betray himself to be a botcher
That goes about to mend it.

EUGENIA Gentlemen,
You know my mind, I bar you not my house,
120 But if you choose out hours more seasonably,
You may have entertainment.
Enter Parthenia

SIMONIDES
What will she do hereafter when she is a widow,
Keeps open house already?
Exeunt [Simonides, Coachman, and Courtiers]

EUGENIA How now, girl?

PARTHENIA
Those feathered fools that hither took their flight
Have grieved my father much.

125 EUGENIA Speak well of youth, wench, While thou'st a day to live; 'tis youth must make thee,
And when youth fails, wise women will make it,
But always take age first to make thee rich.
That was my counsel ever, and then youth 130 Will make thee sport enough all thy life after.
'Tis time's policy, wench. What is't to bide
A little hardness for a pair of years or so—
A man whose only strength lies in his breath,
Weakness in all parts else, thy bedfellow
135 A cough o'th' lungs, or say, a whining matter—
Then shake off chains, and dance all thy life after?

PARTHENIA
Everyone to their liking, but I say
An honest man's worth all, be he young or grey.
Enter Hippolita
Yonder's my cousin.

103 churlish rude

110 unfeignedly straightforwardly. But modernizing BELL's spelling 'unfainedly' may erase the suggestion of 'unfain' and thus 'reluctantly'.

113 my . . . other 'I look for another answer', possibly with a bawdy play on Eugenia's 'hands' (body parts), in which case Simonides (or Simonides's 'part' [= penis?]) suggests an interest in other 'parts' of Eugenia.

114 I'm at a word That's all I have to say. Simonides's response alludes to the commonplace, 'to move from words to blows'.

117 botcher MASON; brother BELL. A tailor who patches and makes repairs (playing on 'mend it'). BELL's 'betray himself to be a brother', emended here, might be readable as: 'go against his solidarity with us', though this is not a typical use of betray.

122 she is COXETER; sh is BELL. The frequency of non-printing letters in copies of BELL makes it possible that in an unconsulted or now-missing copy, the text reads 'sheis'.

126 thou'st BELL (th'aft)

129 my counsel ever Not, however, her counsel at the beginning of this scene, 2.2.5-28.

135 whining THIS EDITION; wheening BELL; whening COXETER; wheezing MASON+. Since none of the other proposed emendations seems especially persuasive, THIS EDITION adopts whining as a near-spelling of BELL's wheening (see OED whining, vbl. n., and whine v.).

whining matter whimpering body. Matter may also signify a bodily discharge. One heretofore unexplored emendation is 'whining mammet', a phrase used in Romeo and Juliet (3.5.184). Mammet (= puppet, ugly figure) is a term of derision, and, in Massinger's The Picture, is used in connection with age (rather than youth, as in Romeo and Juliet): 'Sophia. Are they handsome women? | Vbaldo. Fie noe, course mamnets, and whats worse they are old to, | Some fifty, some threescore . . .' (3.6.58-60). TAYLOR conjectures 'matten' (matin), which might in context mean 'a whining morning song'.

135-6 matter— . . . after? It is not unusual for BELL to lack question-marks in sentences that would now require them. Indeed, the whole issue of what constitutes 'a sentence' is put into question by early modern punctuation practice in general, and by BELL's scarcity of end-stops and abundance of commas and semicolons in particular. Here, as elsewhere, the question is: where do sentences, or other syntactic units, begin and end? Another punctuation possibility for this 'sentence', then, is: 'matter? | Then shake off chains, and dance all thy life after!'

[Exit]

- 141 woman . . . their credit Eugenia speaks of women as if she were not one herself; audiences may have heard this line as a gesture toward the play's mode of production: a boy would have acted ('dissembled') this role.
- 141.I [She seems to weep] The lack of stage direction in BELL is an example of directions to Renaissance actors being encoded within the words of their speeches, rather than dictated by a separate stage direction. In supplying a stage direction, as I have here, the question is whether to foreground Eugenia's 'dissembling'; another version might read simply: [She weeps].
- 142 cousin relative, cousin. BELL uses the spelling 'cozen' throughout this scene; as a verb, cozen meant 'to trick or deceive', and was thought in the period to be related to the word we now spell 'cousin'. This scene illustrates the conjunction of meanings, with a cozening cousin, Eugenia.
- 148 comfortably comfortably
- 149 quited requited, repaid
- 154 coz cousin
- 158 With COXETER; Wi h BELL. Context clearly suggests With, but all copies consulted have a space in the position of the presumptive t.
- 160 lodged (punning on the location of the secret)
- 163 'less unless
- 175 on't of it
- 179 In COXETER; n BELL; all consulted copies have an initial space at the beginning of this line. In FOLGER, an initial I has been written in; the date of this and other corrections in FOLGER has not been determined.
- 182 O sweet cousin BELL's 'Oh sweet Cozen!' is a reminder of the multiple cozenings occurring here: Hippolita and Cleanthes's cozening of the law, and Eugenia's pretended sympathy with Hippolita's family values.
- EUGENIA Art, I must use thee now.
Dissembling is the best help for a virtue
That ever woman had; it saves their credit often. 140
[She seems to weep]
- HIPPOLITA How now, cousin,
What, weeping?
- EUGENIA Can you blame me, when the time
Of my dear love and husband now draws on?
I study funeral tears against the day
I must be a sad widow. 145
- HIPPOLITA
In troth, Eugenia, I have cause to weep too,
But when I visit, I come comfortably,
And look to be so quited. Yet more sobbing?
- EUGENIA
O, the greatest part of your affliction's past;
The worst of mine's to come. I have one to die;
Your husband's father is dead, and fixed in his Eternal peace, past the sharp tyrannous blow. 150
- HIPPOLITA
You must use patience, coz.
- EUGENIA Tell me of patience.
- HIPPOLITA
You have example for't in me and many. 155
- EUGENIA
Yours was a father-in-law, but mine a husband.
O, for a woman that could love and live
With an old man! Mine is a jewel, cousin,
So quietly he lies by one, so still—
- HIPPOLITA [aside]
Alas! I have a secret lodged within me
Which now will out, in pity I can't hold. 160
- EUGENIA
One that will not disturb me in my sleep
After a whole month together, 'less it be
With those diseases age is subject to,
As achës, coughs, and pains, and these (heaven knows) 165
Against his will too. He's the quietest man, Especially in bed.
- HIPPOLITA Be comforted.
- EUGENIA How can I, lady?
None knows the terror of an husband's loss
But they that fear to lose him. 170
- HIPPOLITA [aside]
Fain would I keep it in, but 'twill not be;
She is my kinswoman, and I'm pitiful.
I must impart a good, if I know't once,
To them that stand in need on't. I'm like one
Loves not to banquet with a joy alone; 175
My friends must partake too. [To Eugenia] Prithce cease, cousin.
- If your love be so boundless—which is rare
In a young woman in these days, I tell you,
To one so much past service as your husband—
There is a way to beguile law, and help you;
My husband found it out first. 180
- EUGENIA O sweet cousin!

- 184 order arrange
 191 dainty pleasant
 199–200 Exit | EUGENIA . . . me The question of whether Hippolita hears Eugenia's line is interpretively significant. BELL's placement of 'exit' directions is not always precise in a modern sense but may suggest that Hippolita exits before Eugenia speaks the line; nevertheless, it is possible that Hippolita hears it. The line could signify in several ways, and in any event could remind an audience that Eugenia is throughout characterized as never to be trusted.
 202–3 conceal? . . . funeral? . . . husband? THIS EDITION renders BELL's commas as question marks; they could as easily be exclamation points (signifying what Eugenia might see as the ludicrousness of Hippolita's suggestions).
 204 'Las Alas. BELL's spelling (Laffe) could be modernized as 'Lass' (girl), perhaps signaling that Eugenia thinks Hippolita is naïve.
 207 prick the man down mark the chosen man on the list; but also engaging the sexual sense of prick (2.2.32), which then resonates with do (= have sex).
 208 him Lisander
 208.1 Secundus BELL Secundi
 3.1.0.1 Incipit Actus Tertius THIS EDITION; Act. III. Scen. I. BELL
 0.2 Enter Clown and Clerk [with the church-book] THIS EDITION; Enter the Clown and Clerk. BELL THIS EDITION routinely deletes definite articles before character names; BELL's usage is not consistent. church-book See I.1.1.14.
 3 wot on know of
 4 be covered put your hat back on (after it has been removed as a sign of respect). In the next lines, Clerk and Clown argue over who has the lower social standing; to replace one's hat first would be to acknowledge one's higher class position.
 6 remember yourself 1) recall your social status; 2) put your hat back on ('remembering one's courtesy' = 'be covered'); 3) remind yourself
 7 small minor (but perhaps playing on the height of the actor)
 10 great socially important (but perhaps playing on the obesity of the Clown, possibly played by William Rowley)

- HIPPOLITA
 You may conceal him, and give out his death
 Within the time, order his funeral too.
 We had it so for ours, I praise heaven for't,
 And he's alive and safe. 185
- EUGENIA O blessèd coz,
 How thou reviv'st me!
- HIPPOLITA We daily see
 The good old man, and feed him twice a day.
 Methinks it is the sweetest joy to cherish him
 That ever life yet showed me.
- EUGENIA So should I think
 A dainty thing to nurse an old man well. 190
- HIPPOLITA
 And then we have his prayers and daily blessing,
 And we two live so lovingly upon't,
 His son and I, and so contentedly,
 You cannot think unless you tasted on't. 195
- EUGENIA
 No, I warrant you. O loving cousin,
 What a great sorrow hast thou eased me of!
 A thousand thanks go with thee.
- HIPPOLITA I have a suit to you:
 I must not have you weep when I am gone. Exit
- EUGENIA
 No, if I do, ne'er trust me. Easy fool,
 Thou hast put thyself into my power forever;
 Take heed of ang'ring of me. I conceal?
 I feign a funeral? I keep my husband?
 'Las, I have been thinking any time these two years
 I have kept him too long already. 200
 I'll go count o'er my suitors, that's my business,
 And prick the man down; I ha' six months to do't,
 But could dispatch him in one, were I put to't. Exit
Finis Actus Secundus

- Incipit Actus Tertius* 3.1
Enter Clown and Clerk [with the church-book]
- CLOWN You have searched o'er the parish chronicle, sir?
 CLERK Yes, sir, I have found out the true age and date of the party you wot on.
 CLOWN Pray you be covered, sir.
 CLERK When you have showed me the way, sir. 5
 CLOWN O sir, remember yourself, you are a clerk.
 CLERK A small clerk, sir.
 CLOWN Likely to be the wiser man, sir, for your greatest clerks are not always so, as 'tis reported.
 CLERK You are a great man in the parish, sir. 10
 CLOWN I understand myself so much the better, sir, for all the best in the parish pay duties to the clerk, and I would owe you none, sir.
 CLERK Since you'll have it so, I'll be the first to hide my head. 15
 [Clerk puts on his hat]

- 16 cap-case bag, box, case; with pun on cap (= hat)
- 20 dial sun-dial, clock, or other timepiece (referring to the church-book)
- 21 You . . . witness To say that the church-book says something is to require no further proof or authority. (Ipse dixit = 'he said it'.)
- 24 Agatha (from the Greek for 'good')
- 29 Bollux a nonsense word that sounds like ballocks (testicles), bullocks (castrated bulls), and Bullokar (next note)
- 30 orthography spelling (literally 'right writing'); punning on the subject and author of William Bullokar's Booke at large, for the Amendment of Orthographie (1580), which advocated a new standardized, phonetic spelling system for English, to replace the 'old' conventions. (The lines may thus also associate spelling reform with the legal reform referenced by the play's title and the rewriting of dates in this scene; on spelling reform and languages, see 5.1.618.) The lines may also reference a hard-word dictionary published by Bullokar's son John, An English Expositor (1616, 1621), which is also concerned with 'true orthography'.
- 32 Pollux . . . Castor in Greek and Roman mythology, twin brothers and inseparable companions. 'Castor' perhaps puns on 'cast her' (= throw her down); see l. 66.
- 33 anno BELL (an.)
- 33-4 1540 . . . '99 In contrast to the apparent ancient Greek setting of the larger play, the Clown's plot mixes a classical Greek setting (ll. 91-2) with what would have been the recent past for the play's audience. The years 1540 and 1599 may have been chosen for ease with which an audience could follow the subtraction.
- 39 deduct it trace it out
- 51 indifferent impartially (but also suggesting 'not particularly')
- 54 you . . . all (a clerk's duty at church-services)
- 58 above your duty beyond your regular duties as clerk; in excess of the usual fee for your services (in which case one might add a stage-direction: Clown gives the Clerk money).
- 59 e'en BELL (in). Elsewhere, in is a possible spelling of e'en (even); COXETER and all later editions interpret as the modern word in and delete.
- 61 sexton church sexton (in charge of tolling the bells)
- 63 conceit conceive, understand
- 63-4 jack . . . clock-house a mechanical figure on the outside of a clock that strikes a bell (referring here to the sexton)
- 64 hand of the dial 1) hand of the clock (i.e., time); 2) handwriting in the church-book (see l. 20)
- 66 cast a figure write a number; but the usual meaning of this phrase (which Clerk responds to) is to calculate a horoscope. Additional meanings relevant to the ensuing scene: 1) condemn a person (in law, cast = to defeat in a suit, to declare guilty, to condemn); 2) set aside a figure (a number or a person); 3) estimate a number or amount.
- 71 cipher zero

CLOWN [putting on his hat] Mine is a cap-case. Now to our business in your hand: good luck, I hope. I long to be resolved.

CLERK

Look you, sir, this is that cannot deceive you,

This is the dial that goes ever true;

You may say 'ipse dixit' upon this witness,

And 'tis good in law too.

CLOWN Pray you, let's hear what it speaks.

CLERK Mark, sir: [reading from the church-book] 'Agatha the daughter of Pollux', this is your wife's name, and the name of her father, 'born'—

CLOWN Whose daughter, say you?

CLERK The daughter of Pollux.

CLOWN I take it his name was Bollux.

CLERK 'Pollux', the orthography, I assure you, sir; the word is corrupted else.

CLOWN Well, on, sir: 'of Pollux'—now come on Castor.

CLERK [continues reading] 'Born in anno 1540', and now 'tis '99. By this infallible record, sir, (let me see) she is now just fifty-nine and wants but one.

CLOWN I am sorry she wants so much.

CLERK Why, sir? Alas, 'tis nothing, 'tis but so many months, so many weeks, so many—

CLOWN Do not deduct it to days, 'twill be the more tedious, and to measure it by hour-glasses were intolerable.

CLERK Do not think on it, sir; half the time goes away in sleep, 'tis half the year in nights.

CLOWN O, you mistake me, neighbour, I am loath to leave the good old woman. If she were gone now, it would not grieve me, for what is a year, alas, but a ling'ring torment? And were it not better she were out of her pain? 'T'must needs be a grief to us both.

CLERK I would I knew how to ease you, neighbour.

CLOWN You speak kindly, truly, and if you say but 'amen' to it, which is a word that I know you are perfect in, it might be done. Clerks are the most indifferent honest men, for to the marriage of your enemy, or the burial of your friend, the curses or the blessings to you are all one—you say 'amen' to all.

CLERK With a better will to the one than the other, neighbour, but I shall be glad to say 'amen' to anything might do you a pleasure.

CLOWN There is first something above your duty; now I would have you set forward the clock a little, e'en to help the old woman out of her pain.

CLERK I will speak to the sexton for that, but the day will go ne'er the faster for that.

CLOWN O neighbour, you do not conceit me; not the jack of the clock-house, the hand of the dial I mean. Come, I know you, being a great clerk, cannot choose but have the art to cast a figure.

CLERK Never indeed, neighbour, I never had the judgement to cast a figure.

CLOWN I'll show you on the back side of your book.

[He writes]

Look you, what figure's this?

CLERK Four with a cipher—that's forty.

- CLOWN So, forty.
 [He writes]
 What's this now?
- CLERK The cipher is turned into nine by adding the tail, 75 which makes forty-nine.
- CLOWN Very well understood.
 [He writes]
 What is't now?
- CLERK The four is turned into three—'tis now thirty-nine.
- CLOWN Very well understood. And can you do this again?
- 80 CLERK O easily, sir.
- CLOWN A wager of that; let me see the place of my wife's age again.
- CLERK Look you, sir, 'tis here: 1540.
- CLOWN Forty drachmas, you do not turn that forty into 85 thirty-nine.
- CLERK A match with you.
- CLOWN Done, and you shall keep stakes yourself; [giving him money] there they are.
- CLERK A firm match. But stay, sir, now I consider it, 90 I shall add a year to your wife's age. Let me see, [reads] 'Skrophorion the seventeenth', and now 'tis Hekatombaion the eleventh. If I alter this, your wife will have but a month to live by the law.
- CLOWN That's all one, sir; either do it or pay me my wager.
- 95 CLERK Will you lose your wife before you lose your wager?
- CLOWN A man may get two wives before half so much money by 'em. Will you do't?
- CLERK I hope you will conceal me, for 'tis flat corruption.
- CLOWN Nay, sir, I would have you keep counsel, for I lose 100 my money by't and should be laughed at for my labour, if it should be known.
- CLERK Well sir,
 [He writes]
 there, 'tis done, as perfect thirty-nine as can be found 105 in black and white. But mum, sir, there's danger in this figure-casting.
- CLOWN Ay, sir, I know that better men than you have been thrown over the bar for as little. The best is, you can be but thrown out of the belfry.
 Enter Cook, Tailor, Bailiff, and Butler
- CLERK Lock close—here comes company. Asses have ears 110 as well as pitchers.
- COOK [to Clown] O Gnothoes, how is't? Here's a trick of discarded cards of us; we were ranked with coats as long as our old master lived.
- CLOWN And is this, then, the end of serving-men?
- 115 COOK Yes, faith, this is the end of serving-men; a wise man were better serve one God than all the men in the world.
- CLOWN 'Twas well-spoke of a cook. And are all fall'n into fasting-days and ember-weeks, that cooks are out of 120 use?
- 81 wife's Early modern English did not differentiate wives (singular possessive, now spelled 'wife's') from wives (plural), except by context. Thus, throughout this scene, BELL spells (and the actor probably would have pronounced) this word as 'wives'. Though the meaning of any given occurrence of 'wives' is not ambiguous, in a larger sense, the scene is about Clown's refusal to distinguish morally between having singular or plural wives.
- 84 drachmas silver coins of ancient Greece. See also 4.1.54.
- 86 A match with you It's a bet. Perhaps with a pun on match = marriage compact, especially at l. 187.
- 91 Skrophorion MASON (Scirophorion); Scirophon BELL
- 91-2 Skrophorion ... Hekatombaion Month names in the ancient Athenian calendar. Perhaps the month names are used for their effect as classical signifiers and are not meant to correspond to calculable dates. Alternatively, part of the humour of the scene, at least for educated audience members, may be that the Clerk's calculations are wrong: Skirophorion is the last month of the calendar, and Hekatombaion the first (beginning just after the summer solstice).
- 91 seventeenth BELL (17.)
- 92 Hekatombaion MASON (Hecatombaion); Hecatomacon BELL
eleventh BELL (11.)
- 98 corruption The line, and the passage that follows (109-40), may refer to the corruption scandal in the Royal Navy, brought to light in the 1618 reform commission report. This context seems especially apt, since corruption was in part associated with unaccountable clerks, and one of the reforms instituted included the reduction in the number of officers' servants (Peck, Court Patronage and Corruption).
- 105 figure-casting See ll. 65-6.
- 107 thrown over the bar disbarred (from practising law), imprisoned; punning on cast (ll. 103-5)
- 108 thrown ... belfry The line may refer to the 'defenestration of Prague': in May 1618, three noble Catholic officials were thrown out the windows of Prague castle by a band of Protestant nobles. As a crucial event in Catholic/Protestant European politics and the start of what became the Thirty Years War, the event attracted much attention in England.
- 108.1 Enter ... Butler Creon's servants had earlier appeared in livery (uniforms provided by a master to mark his servants distinctively); here, as Cook notes at ll. 111-12, they appear without their livery coats.
- 109 Lock close shut the book tightly; don't disclose this transaction
- 109-10 Asses ... pitchers alluding to the proverb, 'little pitchers [i.e. children] have wide ears.'
- 111 Gnothoes BELL. Clown's name derives from the Greek verb 'to know'; pronounced onstage (probably without an initial g), it might have sounded like its opposite (the Greek word for 'bastard' or 'false', nothos) or, to the English-speaking audience, 'no-toes'. The name is also legible as an allusion to Gnatho, a sycophantic character in the Roman Terence's play Eumuchus, available in Nicholas Udall's 1533/34 popular Latin textbook translation (seven subsequent reprints, the last in 1581). All editions after MASON silently alter Clown's name to Gnotho throughout. Whatever clarification of meaning is intended as a result of this alteration, BELL unmistakably gives a final s in all thirteen occurrences, spelling 'Gnothos' (twice) or 'Gnothoes' (11 times).
- 111-12 trick ... coats The language of playing-cards is used to play on the servants' loss of their livery uniforms (see 3.1.108.1); coats = coat-cards = face-cards, cards of the highest rank.
- 114 And ... serving-men The line is said by the nineteenth-century editors of the play to allude to an old ballad (Gifford, Bullen).
- 118 well-spoke BELL (well spok)
- 119 ember-weeks periods of church-appointed fasting and prayer (one during each of the four seasons)

- 121 lists strips of cloth
- 121-2 if this world hold Because BELL has only commas in this speech, the 'if' clause can modify in the other direction as well: 'All tailors will be cut into lists and shreds; if this world hold, we shall grow both out of request.'
- 127 long of attributable to
- 128 publican Roman tax-collector (often used derogatorily)
- 130 seam-rent . . . piece torn apart at the seams cracked . . . piece completely ruined (piece = piece of cloth and of land). The speech uses terms common to the language of both tailors and bailiffs.
- 150 laid by 1) placed a bet on, gambled on 2) set aside 3) had sex with
- 151 old BELL; old enough GIFFORD. If BELL's line is not strictly parallel, it is entirely intelligible and therefore does not require the emendation made by GIFFORD and all later editions.
- 153 stock 1) line of descent, genealogy 2) fund of money 3) sum of money to invest, principal 4) property that produces income 5) dowry for a daughter, endowment for a son 6) a term from 'Bookkeeping by Double Entry' (OED), relevant to Clown's double-entry wager with Clerk. Perhaps also suggesting 'the town-stocks', a mode of punishment. Given Clerk's obliviousness earlier in the scene, it is not clear that the text characterizes him as 'realizing' or 'intending' all of these meanings, which are nevertheless available to the audience.
- 154 today BELL (to day); to a Day COXETER. BELL's reading makes sense, but since its spacing of words/letters is highly irregular, even for a seventeenth-century printed text, there might also have been an omission. The servants' response in the next line may suggest that the text should read 'to a day', or 'to the day'.
- 155 OMNES all the servants. The speech raises a theatrical problem: how would this unison speech be spoken on stage? (Is this only a question for a modern, 'realist' theatre?)
- 167.1-3 [Cook . . . apart] Here and at ll. 189.1, 204.1, and 222, the stage-directions are one interpretation of action suggested by, but not made explicit in, BELL.
- 168-70 bailiff . . . behind . . . bum An elaborate sodomy joke on bum. A 'bumbailiff' was a bailiff of the lowest kind; bailiffs were said to be at the backs of—'behind' or 'in the bum of'—debtors.
- TAILOR And all tailors will be cut into lists and shreds, if this world hold; we shall grow both out of request.
- BUTLER And why not butlers as well as tailors; if they can go naked, let 'em neither eat nor drink.
- CLERK That's strange, methinks, a lord should turn away his tailor of all men, and how dost thou, tailor? 125
- TAILOR I do so-so, but indeed all our wants are long of this publican, my lord's bailiff, for had he been rent-gatherer still, our places had held together still, that are now seam-rent, nay, cracked in the whole piece. 130
- BAILIFF Sir, if my lord had not sold his lands that claim his rents, I should still have been the rent-gatherer.
- COOK The truth is, except the coachman and the footman, all serving-men are out of request.
- CLOWN Nay, say not so, for you were never in more request than now, for requesting is but a kind of begging, for when you say, 'I beseech your worship's charity', 'tis all one if you say, 'I request it', and in that kind of requesting, I am sure serving-men were never in more request. 135
- COOK Troth, he says true. Well, let that pass, we are upon a better adventure. I see, Gnothoes, you have been before us; we came to deal with this merchant for some commodities.
- CLERK With me, sir? Anything that I can. 140
- BUTLER Nay, we have looked out our wives already; marry, to you we come to know the prices, that is, to know their ages, for so much reverence we bear to age, that the more aged, they shall be the more dear to us.
- TAILOR The truth is, every man has laid by his widow, so they be lame enough, blind enough, and old, 'tis good enough. 145
- CLERK I keep the town stock; if you can but name 'em, I can tell their ages today.
- OMNES We can tell their fortunes to an hour then. 150
- CLERK Only you must pay for turning of the leaves.
- COOK O bountifully, come mine first!
- BUTLER The butler before the cook while you live; there's few that eat before they drink in a morning.
- TAILOR Nay, then the tailor puts in his needle of priority, for men do clothe themselves before they either drink or eat. 155
- BAILIFF I will strive for no place; the longer ere I marry my wife, the older she will be, and nearer her end and my ends.
- CLERK I will serve you all, gentlemen, if you will have patience. 160
- [Cook, Butler, and Tailor turn the leaves of the church-book with Clerk; Clown and Bailiff speak apart]
- CLOWN I commend your modesty, sir; you are a bailiff, whose place is to come behind other men, as it were in the bum of all the rest. 165
- BAILIFF So sir, and you were about this business too, seeking out for a widow?
- CLOWN Alack no, sir, I am a married man, and have those cares upon me that you would fain run into. 170

- 177 venter This word is perhaps the pivotal term of the Clown's plot, with several meanings played upon in the scenes that follow: 1) wager, commercial speculation, venture; 2) one of two or more wives who produce offspring for the same man (legal term), as in this usage by jurist Edward Coke: 'a man hath issue [of] a sonne and a daughter by one venter, & a son by another ve[n]ter. . . .' (Institutes of the Lawes of England, 1628); 3) the womb (from the French for 'stomach'); 4) a mother. Most editors modernize venter to venture (since it was one possible spelling), but to do so erases the other meanings of venter that are highly relevant to a scene in which Clown attempts to arrange for a quick second marriage. Throughout Clown's scenes, the equating of commercial speculation and wives produces much of the play's humour—at the expense (so to speak) of women. All other editions silently alter BELL's venter to venture, with the resulting erasure of relevant meanings discussed above. BELL is remarkably consistent in its use of venter (15 occurrences); venture occurs only twice, in an instance where the meaning signified by the modern word venture seems most appropriate (Hippolita's speech at 1.1.340) and at 5.1.491.
- 178 quean woman (term of abuse); whore
- 179–80 I'll . . . wife 'I announce three-to-one odds that I can marry a second wife.'
- 179 give out announce, proclaim
- 183 Un sight, un seen sight unseen
- 190 fitted bravely well situated, well provided for
- 197–8 eating-tide . . . gorgeous punning on Eastertide, which follows Lent (a time of fasting); gorgeous = sumptuous, brilliantly coloured, with the resonance of gorge (= eat greedily)
- 199 tailor . . . man alluding to several proverbs: 'the tailor makes the man' and 'three tailors make a man'.
- 200–1 Goodman Finis Mr. End. From here to Clerk's exit, speeches allude to the fact that clerks had the last word (amen = so be it) at services and kept the church-book, which foretells the finis of various old people.
- 203 here after BELL (hereafter)
- 221 sped met with success
- BAILIFF What, an old rich wife? Any man in this age desires such a care. 175
- CLOWN Troth, sir, I'll put a venter with you if you will; I have a lusty old quean to my wife, sound of wind and limb, yet I'll give out to take three for one, at the marriage of my second wife. 180
- BAILIFF Ay, sir, but how near is she to the law?
- CLOWN Take that at hazard, sir; there must be time, you know, to get a new. Un sight, unseen, I take three to one.
- BAILIFF Two to one I'll give, if she have but two teeth in her head. 185
- CLOWN [giving him money] A match, there's five drachmas for ten at my next wife.
- BAILIFF A match.
[They rejoin the others]
- COOK I shall be fitted bravely—fifty-eight and upwards, 'tis but a year and a half, and I may chance make friends, and beg a year of the Duke. 190
- BUTLER Hey, boys, I am made Sir Butler! My wife that shall be wants but two months of her time; it shall be one ere I marry her, and then the next will be a honeymoon. 195
- TAILOR I outstrip you all; I shall have but six weeks of Lent, if I get my widow, and then comes eating-tide plump and gorgeous.
- CLOWN This tailor will be a man if ever there were any.
- BAILIFF [to Clerk] Now comes my turn, I hope, Goodman Finis, you that are still at the end of all with a 'so be it'. [To Cook, Butler, and Tailor] Well now, sirs, do you venter there as I have done, and I'll venter here after you; good luck, I beseech thee. 200
- [Bailiff and Clerk speak apart from the rest]
- CLERK Amen, sir. 205
- BAILIFF That deserves a fee already.
[He gives him money]
- There 'tis, please me and have a better.
- CLERK Amen, sir.
- COOK [to Clown] How, two for one at your next wife? Is the old one living? 210
- CLOWN You have a fair match; I offer you no foul one. If death make not haste to call her, she'll make none to go to him.
- BUTLER I know her, she's a lusty woman, I'll take the venter. 215
- CLOWN [giving him money] There's five drachmas for ten at my next wife.
- BUTLER A bargain.
- COOK Nay then, we'll be all merchants; give me.
- TAILOR And me. 220
- [Clown gives Cook and Tailor money]
- BUTLER What, has the bailiff sped?
- BAILIFF [rejoining the others] I am content, but none of you shall know my happiness.
- CLERK As well as any of you all, believe it, sir.
- BAILIFF O clerk, you are to speak last always. 225
- CLERK I'll remember't hereafter, sir. You have done with me, gentlemen?

Enter Wife

OMNES For this time, honest register.

CLERK Fare you well then; if you do, I'll cry 'amen' to't.

Exit

230 COOK Look you, sir, is not this your wife?

CLOWN My first wife, sir.

BUTLER Nay then we have made a good match on't; if she have no froward disease, the woman may live this dozen years by her age.

235 TAILOR I'm afraid she's broken-winded, she holds silence so long.

COOK We'll now leave our venter to the event; I must a-wooing.

BUTLER I'll but buy me a new dagger and overtake you.

240 BAILIFF So we must all, for he that goes a-wooing to a widow without a weapon will never get her.

Exeunt [Cook, Tailor, Bailiff, and Butler]

CLOWN O wife, wife!

WIFE What ail you, man, you speak so passionately?

245 CLOWN 'Tis for thy sake, sweet wife. Who would think so lusty an old woman, with reasonable good teeth, and her tongue in as perfect use as ever it was, should be so near her time? But the Fates will have it so.

WIFE What's the matter, man? You do amaze me.

CLOWN Thou art not sick neither, I warrant thee.

250 WIFE Not that I know of, sure.

CLOWN What pity 'tis, a woman should be so near her end, and yet not sick.

WIFE

Near her end, man? Tush, I can guess at that.

I have years good yet of life in the remainder;

255 I want two yet, at least, of the full number,

Then the law, I know, craves impotent and useless,

And not the able women.

260 CLOWN Ay, alas, I see thou hast been repairing time as well as thou couldst; the old wrinkles are well filled up, but the vermilion is seen too thick, too thick, and I read what's written in thy forehead; it agrees with the church-book.

WIFE Have you sought my age, man? And I prithee, how is it?

265 CLOWN I shall but discomfort thee.

WIFE Not at all, man; when there's no remedy, I will go, though unwillingly.

CLOWN 1539 just. It agrees with the book; you have about a year to prepare yourself.

270 WIFE Out, alas, I hope there's more than so, but do you not think a reprieve might be gotten for half a score? An 'twere but five year, I would not care. An able woman, methinks, were to be pitied.

275 CLOWN Ay, to be pitied, but not helped; no hope of that, for indeed women have so blemished their own reputations nowadays, that it is thought the law will meet them at fifty very shortly.

WIFE Marry, the heavens forbid!

280 CLOWN There's so many of you that when you are old become witches; some profess physic, and kill good subjects faster than a burning fever; and then school-mistresses of the sweet sin, which commonly we call bawds—innumerable of that sort. For these and such causes 'tis thought they shall not live above fifty.

285 WIFE Ay, man, but this hurts not the good old women.

290 CLOWN I'faith, you are so like one another, that a man cannot distinguish 'em now. Were I an old woman, I would desire to go before my time, and offer myself willingly two or three years before. O, those are brave women and worthy to be commended of all men in the world, that when their husbands die, they run to be burnt to death with 'em. There's honour and credit; give me half a dozen such wives.

295 WIFE Ay, if her husband were dead before, 'twere a reasonable request. If you were dead, I could be content to be so.

CLOWN Fie, that's not likely, for thou hadst two husbands before me.

300 WIFE Thou wouldst not have me die, wouldst thou, husband?

305 CLOWN No, I do not speak to that purpose, but I say what credit it were for me and thee, if thou wouldst; then thou shouldst never be suspected for a witch, a physician, a bawd, or any of those things, and then how daintily should I mourn for thee, how bravely should I see thee buried. When, alas, if he goes before, it cannot choose but be a great grief to him to think he has not seen his wife well buried. There be such virtuous women in the world, but too few, too few who desire to die seven years before their time with all their hearts.

228 OMNES See l. 155.

233 froward difficult to deal with, unfavourable (thus, incurable); perhaps with a pun on forward (= advanced). BELL provides only commas in this speech; again, the 'if' clause could read in either direction.

235 broken-winded out of breath; more specifically, an incurable respiratory disease in horses; possibly with a resonance of break wind (= belch or fart)

241.1 Exeunt Cook, Tailor, Bailiff, and Butler THIS EDITION; Exeunt. BELL (in the margin of 244)

243 What ail you, man, you What's the matter, that you

247 Fates three mythological goddesses in charge of human destinies

260 vermilion scarlet cosmetic

263-4 how is it? (a plausible question, in a culture where people often did not keep track of their age or celebrate birthdays)

268 just precisely

271 An If (see 2.1.31).

280 profess physic practise medicine

283 bawds procuresses, madames, pimps

297-8 thou...me Modern social historians suggest that 'throughout the early modern period females preserved a lead over males in their capacity to survive to age 65' (Pelling).

305 bravely One of several minor irregularities in BELL's catchwords; page 35/F2 catchword is ly, and 36/F2^v begins with lie. Other irregular catchwords: 19/D2 Dnke, 20/D2^v Du.; 47/G4 whether, 48/G4^v Whether; 61/I3 Duke., 62/I3^v Duk.; 72/K4^v Til, 73/L1 Till; 73/L1 Creo., 74/L1^v Creon.

WIFE I have not the heart to be of that mind. But indeed, husband, I think you would have me gone.
 CLOWN No, alas, I speak but for your good and your credit, for when a woman may die quickly, why should she go to law for her death? Alack, I need not wish thee gone, for thou hast but a short time to stay with me; you do not know how near 'tis. It must out—you have but a month to live by the law.
 WIFE Out, alas!
 CLOWN Nay, scarce so much.
 WIFE O, O, O, my heart!
 [She] swoons
 CLOWN Ay, so, if thou wouldst go away quietly, 'twere sweetly done and like a kind wife. Lie but a little longer and the bell shall toll for thee.
 WIFE [reviving] O my heart, but a month to live!
 CLOWN [aside] Alas, why wouldst thou come back again for a month? I'll throw her down again. [To Wife] O woman, 'tis not three weeks, I think a fortnight is the most.
 WIFE Nay, then, I am gone already.
 [She] swoons
 CLOWN I would make haste to the sexton now, but I'm afraid the tolling of the bell will wake her again. If she be so wise as to go now—she stirs again, there's two lives of the nine gone.
 WIFE [reviving] O, wouldst not thou help to recover me, husband?
 CLOWN Alas, I could not find in my heart to hold thee by thy nose, Or box thy cheeks; it goes against my conscience.
 WIFE I will not be thus frightened to my death; I'll search the church record. A fortnight—'Tis too little, of conscience; I cannot be so near. O time, if thou beest kind, lend me but a year. Exit CLOWN What a spite's this, that a man cannot persuade his wife to die in any time with her good will. I have another bespoke already; though a piece of old beef will serve to breakfast, yet a man would be glad of a chicken to supper. The clerk, I hope, understands no Hebrew, and cannot write backward what he hath writ forward already, and then I am well enough:
 'Tis but a month at most, if that were gone, My venter comes in with her two for one,

'Tis use enough, o' conscience, for a broker if he had a conscience. Exit

Enter Eugenia at one door; Simonides, Courtiers at the other 3.2

EUGENIA
 Gentlemen courtiers.
 FIRST COURTIER All your servants vowed, lady. O I shall kill myself with infinite laughter! Will nobody take my part?
 SIMONIDES An't be a laughing business, Put it to me; I'm one of the best in Europe. My father died last too; I have the most cause. 5
 EUGENIA You ha' picked out such a time, sweet gentlemen, To make your spleen a banquet.
 SIMONIDES O, the jest, lady! I have a jaw stands ready for't, I'll gape Halfway and meet it.
 EUGENIA My old husband, That cannot say his prayers out for jealousy And madness at your coming first to woo me— 10
 SIMONIDES Well said.
 FIRST COURTIER Go on.
 SECOND COURTIER On, on.
 EUGENIA Takes counsel with the secrets of all art To make himself youthful again. 15
 SIMONIDES How, youthful? Ha, ha, ha!
 EUGENIA A man of forty-five he would fain seem to be Or scarce so much if he might have his will indeed.
 SIMONIDES Ay, but his white hairs, they'll betray his hoariness.
 EUGENIA Why, there you are wide; he's not the man you take him for, 20
 Nay will you know him when you see him again, There will be five to one laid upon that.
 FIRST COURTIER How?
 EUGENIA Nay, you did well to laugh faintly there; I promise you, I think he'll outlive me now, And deceive law and all.

313 credit reputation
 314 quickly with a paradoxical pun (quick = alive)
 326 aside The first as well as the third sentence of this speech might be spoken within the hearing of the reviving Wife, though the second is not.
 331 sexton church official whose duty it was to ring bells and dig graves 344 spite's annoyance is 345 die (with a possible play on 'have an orgasm')

 in BELL; e'en TAYLOR conj. See l. 59–60.
 348–9 Hebrew...backward Hebrew is written from right to left.
 353–4 o' conscience...a conscience BELL (a ~...a ~) conscience...conscience Clown plays on the relative meaninglessness of the mild exclamation o' conscience (see 2.1.271–2).
 353 broker MASON; brother BELL. Broker =

1) middleman who transacts business for a fee, 'use' 2) hired matchmaker
 3) pander, pimp.
 3.2.7 make...banquet indulge yourself in merriment. The spleen was considered the location of laughter.
 17 would fain is desirous; with a suggestion of feign (2.2.110)
 21 Nay Never. Emendation to nor (COXETER and most other editions) is unnecessary.

25 SIMONIDES Marry, gout forbid.
EUGENIA
You little think he was at fencing-school
At four o'clock this morning.
SIMONIDES How, at fencing-school?
EUGENIA
Else give no trust to woman.
SIMONIDES By this light
I do not like him then; he's like to live
30 Longer than I, for he may kill me first now.
EUGENIA
His dancer now came in as I met you.
FIRST COURTIER
His dancer too!
EUGENIA They observe turns and hours with him;
The great French rider will be here at ten
With his curveting horse.
SECOND COURTIER These notwithstanding,
35 His hair and wrinkles will betray his age.
EUGENIA
I'm sure his head and beard as he has ordered it Looks not past fifty now; he'll bring't to forty Within these four days, for nine times an hour, at least,
He takes a black lead comb and kembs it over.
40 Three quarters of his beard is under fifty;
There's but a little tuft of fourscore left,
Enter Lisander [aloof off]
All of one side, which will be black by Monday,
And to approve my truth, see where he comes?
Laugh softly, gentlemen, and look upon him.
SIMONIDES
45 Now by this hand, he's almost black i'th' mouth indeed.
FIRST COURTIER He should die shortly then.
SIMONIDES
Marry, methinks he dies too fast already,
For he was all white but a week ago.
FIRST COURTIER
O, this same cony-white takes an excellent black
Too soon; a mischief on't!
50 SECOND COURTIER He will beguile us all
If that little tuft northward turn black too.
EUGENIA
Nay, sir, I wonder 'tis so long a-turning.
SIMONIDES
Maybe some fairy's child held forth at midnight
Has pished upon that side.
FIRST COURTIER Is this the beard?
LISANDER [to himself]
55 Ah, sirrah, my young boys, I shall be for you—
This little mangy tuft takes up more time
Than all the beard beside. Come you a-wooing
And I alive and lusty? You shall find
An alteration, jack-boys; I have a spirit yet,
60 (And I could match my hair to't; there's the fault)
And can do offices of youth yet lightly.
At least I will do though it pain me a little.

25 gout forbid 'God forbid' is an obvious meaning here, but, given that it was illegal (beginning with the 1606 'Act to Restrain Abuses of Players') to 'jestingly or profanely speak or use the name of God' on stage, BELL's spelling ('gowt') may also suggest, for us, the difficulty of determining how or why such an instance of multiple meanings is produced in the text: is this a joke, with the appearance of intentionality on Simonides's part—his substitution of a disease for God in a familiar phrase? Or is it, in a different way, a joke for playwrights, actors, and/or audiences aware of the censorship law—a phrase that sounds like 'God forbid', but is not?

31 dancer dancing teacher

32 observe turns and hours take hourly turns

34 curveting leaping

39 comb and kembs BELL (Combe and kembs). BELL (as well as OED) differentiates these words, which mean the same thing; modernizing kembs to combs would introduce a repetition that is not in BELL.

41.1 [aloof off] (the others on stage observe him unseen)

42 black by Monday (playing on 'Black Monday', the Monday that followed Easter and thought to be particularly unlucky)

45 black i'th' mouth as opposed to black around the mouth (the dyed beard), perhaps with a joke on being black in the mouth as a sign of death

47 dies Modernizing a homonym like dies/dyes requires an editor to decide which meaning seems more prevalent at the point the word appears; thus, l. 46 is die (pass away), while this line might become dyes (colours). But deciding which signification a character 'means' (or might mean, were he a person and not a collection of letters on a page, or collection of prescribed movements and sounds on a stage) is a complex operation. As one reads/hears l. 47, dies is appropriate; only when one proceeds to l. 48 does dyes seem the more prominent meaning.

49 cony-white rabbit-white takes absorbs

50 beguile COXETER; beguile BELL. Beguile = fool, cheat. BELL's 'beguile' (with its possible associations of gild/begild, 'to cover with gold') may have arisen from all the puns on colouring in this passage.

53 held forth displayed (?). Possibly BELL's held should be emended to haled (TAYLOR conj.), meaning that the child has been hauled out (kidnapped) like a fairy's changeling.

55 for you ready for you

59 jack-boys boys employed in menial labour, especially stable boys. Lisander's language is full of terms referring to horses and riding: mangy (l. 56), tits (l. 64), jade and wrench (ll. 94–5).

- 64 court-tits tits: small horses; also, derogatory term for young women (but probably without the modern slang sense of 'breasts'). Without further evidence, it is impossible to know whether this term was typically applied to young men (this line is OED's only example), or whether, instead, this is a context in which young men are being portrayed as effeminate. In contrast to the modern stereotype that links effeminacy and homosexuality, effeminacy in the Renaissance was often said to result from ostensibly excessive contact with women.
- 65 tomboys' As with tits, it is unclear whether this term is being used as it may have been normatively gendered (tomboy = boisterous boy), or used of women (tomboy = 'inappropriately' boisterous woman) but transferred onto the courtiers in an effeminizing way; most of the evidence available from the period suggests the term was usually applied to women.
- tricks pranks; deceptions; ways of acting (probably suggesting sexual acts)
- 70 'Slight God's light (a mild oath)
- 72 ginny BELL; grumpy MASON; grinning GIFFORD. BELL's spelling may signify some or all of the following: 1) guinea, short for guinea-fowl (turkey) or guinea-hen (female turkey, and slang for prostitute), perhaps referring to its distinctive call; 2) jenny, woman (also applied to effeminate men); 3) ginny, seductive, ensnaring (from gin = ingenuity); possibly 4) jennet, a small horse (referring to its neighing).
- 75 Pup! the sound of the outburst
- 77 one-and-twenty BELL; twenty-one TAYLOR conj. If written as a figure in the manuscript (as in, for example, manuscripts of Game), the number might have been translated into words either way, and TAYLOR's conjecture is more metrically regular.
- 79 codlings 1) small cod-fish 2) variety of apple 3) scrotum 4) derogatory slang for a 'raw youth' (OED)
- parboiled overcooked, thoroughly boiled
- 80 Cupid's scalding-house perhaps a brothel; more likely, a sweating tub (an ostensible cure for venereal disease)
- 82 DANCER COXETER; Dauc. BELL
- 86 horse-trick continuing Lisander's use of language related to horses, with an extended play on 'to horse' = for a stallion to 'cover' (= copulate with) a mare, especially at l. 87.
- 92 My life for yours I'm sure
- 93 by my viol an oath, referring to a 'viol' (musical instrument) or perhaps 'vial' (vessel, possibly with religious overtones deriving from Rev. 15:7). BELL's spelling (Violl) could signify both words, but an oath using either term is unusual. If viol, perhaps the Dancer uses a musical instrument to accompany his pupil.
- 94 jade inferior horse; also derogatorily applied to women (= hussy). 'Played the jade' and 'wrench i'th' back' thus imply injury resulting from sexual overexertion. Wrench was also applied to injuries in horses.
- Shall not a man for a little foolish age
Enjoy his wife to himself? Must young court-tits
Play tomboys' tricks with her, and he live, ha?
I have blood that will not bear't, yet I confess
I should be at my prayers. But where's the dancer there?
Enter Dancer
- DANCER Here, sir.
- LISANDER
Come, come, come, one trick a day, and I shall soon Recover all again.
- EUGENIA [apart] 'Slight, an you laugh too loud,
We are all discovered, gentlemen.
- SIMONIDES
And I have a scurvy ginny laugh o' mine own
Will spoil all, I'm afraid.
- EUGENIA Marry, take heed, sir.
- SIMONIDES
Nay, an I should be hanged, I can't leave it—
[He bursts out laughing]
Pup! There 'tis—
- EUGENIA Peace, O peace!
- LISANDER [to Dancer] Come, I am ready, sir.
- I hear the church-book's lost where I was born too,
And that shall set me back one-and-twenty years.
There is no little comfort left in that
And my three court codlings that look parboiled,
As if they came from Cupid's scalding-house.
- SIMONIDES
He means me specially, I hold my life.
- DANCER
What trick will your old worship learn this morning,
sir?
- LISANDER
Marry, a trick—if thou couldst teach a man
To keep his wife to himself, I'd fain learn that.
- DANCER
That's a hard trick for an old man specially.
The horse-trick comes the nearest.
- LISANDER
Thou sayst true, i'faith;
They must be horsed indeed, else there's no keeping on 'em
And horse-play at fourscore is not so ready.
- DANCER
Look you, here's your worship's horse-trick, sir.
[He dances the step]
- LISANDER Nay, say not so,
'Tis none of mine; I fall down horse and man,
If I but offer at it.
- DANCER My life for yours, sir.
- LISANDER
Sayst thou me so?
[He dances the step]
- DANCER Well offered, by my viol, sir.
- LISANDER
A pox of this horse-trick, 't'as played the jade with me
And given me a wrench i'th' back.

- 96 inturn possibly a term from wrestling: placing a leg between an opponent's thighs and lifting (thus continuing the sexual meanings)
- 99 galliard a lively dance in triple time
- 101 coxcomb fool
- 104 Gregories The term probably plays on the name of Gregory Brandon, the famous London hangman during the reign of James I and Charles I, popularly known as 'Gregory'. Lisander's 'Gregories' thus means 'hangmen, men who are trying to kill me before my time'; it may also refer to both Brandon and his son Richard, who succeeded him shortly before 1640 and was known as 'Young Gregory'. PRICE conjectures a misreading of Gregues (= galligaskins, breeches); another possibility is Gregorians (= a type of wig).
- 106 grinners 'grinning' signified more ominously at the time, often emphasizing the showing of teeth.
- 109 weapons BELL (wapons)
- 110 own roadways usual activities
glistar-pipes a term that may combine clyster-pipes (enema tubes, sometimes spelled 'glistar') and an allusion to the courtiers' elaborate, brilliant (glistening) mode of dress
- 111 parlous perilously; very
- 112 lank suck-eggs thin (hungry) avaricious people, with reference to weasels (l. 113), said to suck eggs
- 114 dogbolts wretches
- 114.1 Enter...glasses BELL's stage-directions are often in the right margin of the page, opposite several lines (here, lines corresponding to 3.2.114). Thus, placing them within the linear flow of the speeches of the text 'proper' entails an inexact estimation of what might have happened on stage.
- 115 Well said Lisander either compliments himself on his insulting rhetoric, or thanks the servants (= 'well done').
down with 'em put down the drinks and foils; down the drinks
- 116 quality skill, talent
- 124 princecock's conceited young man's princecock's BELL (princecock)
- 125 powder medicine, drug (punning on 'gunpowder')
- 126 Let't BELL (Let). Modernization conj. TAYLOR.
- 128 trillibubs entrails

DANCER

Now here's your inturn, and your trick above ground.
 [He dances another step]

LISANDER

Prithee no more, unless thou hast a mind
 To lay me underground; one of these tricks
 Is enough in the morning.

DANCER

For your galliard, sir,
 You are complete enough, ay, and may challenge
 The proudest coxcomb of 'em all, I'll stand to't.

100

LISANDER

Faith, and I've other weapons for the rest too,
 I have prepared for 'em, if e'er I take
 My Gregories here again.

SIMONIDES

O, I shall burst;
 I can hold out no longer.
 [He laughs]

EUGENIA

He spoils all.

105

LISANDER [noting them]

The devil and his grinners—are you come?
 Bring forth the weapons, we shall find you play,
 All feats of youth too, jack-boys, feats of youth,
 And these the weapons: drinking, fencing, dancing—
 Your own roadways, you glistar-pipes. I'm old, you say—

110

Yes, parlous old, kids, an you mark me well.
 This beard cannot get children, you lank suck-eggs,
 Unless such weasels come from court to help us?
 We will get our own brats, you lecherous dogbolts!
Enter [Servants] with glasses [and foils] Well said, down with 'em. Now we shall see your spirits.

115

What, dwindle you already?

SECOND COURTIER

I have no quality.

SIMONIDES

Nor I, unless drinking may be reckoned
 For one.

FIRST COURTIER Why Sim, it shall.

LISANDER Come, dare you choose your weapon now?

120

FIRST COURTIER

I, dancing, sir, an you will be so hasty.

LISANDER

We're for you, sir.

SECOND COURTIER Fencing, I.

LISANDER

We'll answer you too.

SIMONIDES

I'm for drinking your wet weapon there.

LISANDER

That wet one has cost many a princecock's life,
 And I will send it through you with a powder.

125

SIMONIDES

Let't come with a pox—I care not, so't be drink.
 [Aside] I hope my guts will hold, and that's e'en all
 A gentleman can look for of such trillibubs.

LISANDER

Play the first weapon, come strike, strike I say!
 Yes, yes, you shall be first, I'll observe court rules:

130

130.I 'La Migniard' BELL (La-|mi niard). The name of a dance-tune, also cited in Richard Brome's The New Academy, Or The New Exchange (written c.1635, published 1659), where it appears in a list of courantes (distinguished from a list of galliards). For the music, see Companion, p. 166.

Migniard dainty, delicate; a French word that entered English around 1600 and is related to mignon and minion.

To those familiar with the tune of this name, the music may have transmitted a gendered message, further emphasizing the effeminacy of the courtiers (see ll. 64–5). James I advised his son: 'In your language be plaine, honest, naturall, comelie, cleane, short, and sentencious: eschewing . . . mignarde & effeminate tearmes' (Basilikon Doron [1603]).

133 go COXETER; ago BELL

135 put fair make a good attempt

136 sciaticas attacks of sciatica (2.1.56)

137 hit you scored against you (in the language of fencing that pervades the scene)

142 musk-cod the bag that contains musk in some animals; here, roughly: 'perfumed devil'

143 venies hits or thrusts in fencing

147 lie twenty 'miss my age by twenty'; but also Lisander's identification of Second Courtier's age as 'twenty' (responding to Second Courtier's accusation 'fourscore')

148 had had THIS EDITION (Taylor); had BELL; I'd had GIFFORD. TAYLOR notes that grammar, metre, and the possibility of easy scribal or compositor misreading argue for this emendation; BELL may nevertheless be intelligible.

149 butter-teeth front teeth

150 flap-dragon raisin, in a game in which raisins are caught with the mouth out of burning brandy

151 pent-weeze COXETER (pentweeze); pentwize BELL. Pent-weeze = blocked windpipe (resonating with 'throat' in the previous line); penned weasel. (BELL's wize corresponds to no recorded early spelling of either weeze or weasel.)

158 bear-whelp cub

160 you and I MASON; with you and I BELL; with you I SHAW wet venies Lisander applies fencing language to drinking.

161 Venies THIS EDITION; Vennis BELL; Venue COXETER; Venues GIFFORD. BELL's 'Vennis' is a contemporary spelling of Venice, not venies, and therefore an emendation.

Venice glasses delicate drinking glasses for which Venice was famous [Music for] a galliard, 'La Migniard'

Always the worst goes foremost—so 'twill prove I hope.

[First Courtier dances]

So sir, you've spit your poison, now come I.

[Aside] Now forty years, go backward and assist me, Fall from me half my age but for three minutes, That I may feel no crick; I will put fair for't, Although I hazard twenty sciaticas.

135

[He dances a galliard]

So, I have hit you.

FIRST COURTIER You've done well, i'faith, sir.

LISANDER

If you confess it well, 'tis excellent, And I have hit you soundly. I am warm now, The second weapon instantly.

SECOND COURTIER What, so quick, sir?

140

Will you not allow yourself a breathing time?

LISANDER

I've breath enough at all times, Lucifer's musk-cod, To give your perfumed worship three venies.

A sound old man puts his thrust better home Than a spiced young man. There I—

145

[Lisander begins the fencing match]

SECOND COURTIER Then have at you, fourscore.

LISANDER

You lie twenty, I hope, and you shall find it.

[They fight; Lisander gives the first hit]

SIMONIDES [aside]

I'm glad I missed this weapon; I had had an eye Popped out ere this time, or my two butter-teeth Thrust down my throat instead of a flap-dragon.

150

LISANDER [giving the second hit]

There's two, pent-weeze.

DANCER

Excellently touched, sir.

SECOND COURTIER

Had ever man such luck? Speak your opinion, gentlemen.

SIMONIDES

Methinks your luck's good that your eyes are in still; Mine would have dropped out like a pig's half-roasted.

LISANDER

There wants a third,

[He gives the third hit]

and there 'tis again.

155

SECOND COURTIER The devil has steeled him.

EUGENIA What a strong fiend is jealousy!

LISANDER You're dispatched, bear-whelp.

SIMONIDES

Now comes my weapon in.

LISANDER

Here, toadstool, here—

'Tis you and I must play these three wet venies.

160

SIMONIDES

Venies in Venice glasses, let 'em come;

They'll bruise no flesh, I'm sure, nor break no bones.

SECOND COURTIER Yet you may drink your eyes out, sir.

165 SIMONIDES Ay, but that's nothing; then they go voluntarily. I do not love to have 'em thrust out whether they will or no.

LISANDER Here's your first weapon, duck's meat.
[He drinks the first glass]

170 SIMONIDES How, a Dutch what-you-call-'em,
'Stead of a German falchion? A shrewd weapon,
And of all things, hard to be taken down,
Yet down it must.
[He drinks]

I have a nose goes into't;
I shall drink double, I think.

FIRST COURTIER The sooner off, Sim.

LISANDER I'll pay you speedily—with a trick
I learned once amongst drunkards; here's half-pike.
[He drinks the second glass]

175 SIMONIDES Half-pike comes well, after Dutch what-you-call-'em;
They'd never be asunder by their good will.

FIRST COURTIER Well pulled of an old fellow.

LISANDER O, but your fellows
Pull better at a rope.

FIRST COURTIER There's a hair, Sim,
In that glass.

180 SIMONIDES An't be as long as a halter, down it goes;
No hair shall cross me.
[He drinks the second glass]

LISANDER I make you stink worse than your polecats do.
Here's long sword, your last weapon.
[He drinks the third glass]

SIMONIDES No more weapons.

FIRST COURTIER Why, how now, Sim? Bear up, thou sham'st us all else.

185 SIMONIDES Light, I shall shame you worse an I stay longer.
I ha' got the scotomy in my head already,
The whimsy—you all turn round, do not you dance,
gallants?

SECOND COURTIER Pish, what's all this? Why, Sim, look, the last veny.

190 SIMONIDES No more venies goes down here, for these two
Are coming up again.

SECOND COURTIER Out! The disgrace of drinkers!

SIMONIDES Yes, 'twill out,
Do you smell nothing yet?

FIRST COURTIER Smell?

SIMONIDES Farewell quickly then;
It will do if I stay. Exit

FIRST COURTIER A foil go with thee.

195 LISANDER What, shall we put down youth at her own virtues?
Beat folly in her own ground wondrous much?

167 duck's meat a plant that covers the surface of still water
(another apparently nonsensical insult)

168 Dutch what-you-call-'em Probably a reference to a specific kind of weapon associated with the Dutch; some possibilities are halberd and handspike (especially given the play on half-pike at
l. 175) and bill (a type of weapon, here playing on duck's). The chain of puns on Dutch is apparently triggered by duck's in the previous line; the word Dutch continued, into the seventeenth century, to refer to people and things we now distinguish as Dutch or deutch (German), though by 1600 English had begun to differentiate these countries, languages, and peoples. The Dutch were ostensibly heavy drinkers.

169 falchion a curved broad sword

173 speedily—with a trick MASON (long dash); speedily—with a trick BELL. Long dashes seem to signify interrupted or curtailed speeches elsewhere in BELL (at the equivalent of 3.1.38, 3.2.306, 4.2.59). THIS EDITION interprets the dashes as a pause in Lisander's speech, perhaps to prepare his drinking 'trick'.
Other editions have read the dashes as marking space for an actor's improvisation of expletives, or expletives that could not be printed (GIFFORD). This might seem unlikely, since BELL copiously inscribes Lisander's other insults, but TAYLOR notes that the other insults are not profane; 'if the original here was profane, or politically objectionable, it might have been struck out, and the other insults left intact'. See l. 25 above.

174 learned BELL (learnt) half-pike a shorter version of the pike, a shaft with a sharp pointed head

175 Half-pike... what-you-call-'em See l. 168.

177 pulled of drunk for

178 Pull better at a rope hang better

181 hair (with pun on hair)

182 polecats animals related to skunks, known for their smell; slang for 'prostitute'

185 Light God's light (an oath)
an if

186 scotomy GIFFORD; Scotomy BELL. Scotomy = scotoma, 'dizziness accompanied by dimness of sight' (OED)

187 whimsy whim, fantastical idea; dizziness

189 venies goes Should this verb agree? How might one distinguish between a grammatical error on the part of the writer(s) (at a point in the history of English when verb agreement was not as strictly maintained), a textual error, or a drunken character's syntactical difficulties?

194 foil disgrace (with a pun on the weapon)

195 LISANDER COXETER (Lysan.); Life. BELL. The final letter is unclear in all copies consulted (possibly c); BELL's usual speech prefix for Lisander is Lif.

Why, may not we be held as full sufficient
 To love our own wives then, get our own children,
 And live in free peace till we be dissolved?
 200 For such spring butterflies that are gaudy-winged,
 (But no more substance than those shamble-flies
 Which butchers' boys snap between sleep and waking)
 Come but to crush you once; you are all but maggots,
 For all your beamy outsides.

Enter Cleanthes

EUGENIA [to Courtiers] Here's Cleanthes;
 205 He comes to chide. Let him alone a little;
 Our cause will be revenged. Look, look, his face
 Is set for stormy weather. Do but mark
 How the clouds gather in't; 'twill pour down straight.

CLEANTHES [to Lisander]

Methinks I partly know you; that's my grief.
 210 Could you not all be lost that had been handsome?
 But to be known at all, 'tis more than shameful.
 Why, was not your name wont to be Lisander?

LISANDER 'Tis so still, coz.

CLEANTHES

Judgement, defer thy coming, else this man's miserable.

EUGENIA [to Courtiers]

I told you there would be a shower anon.
 215 SECOND COURTIER We'll in and hide our noddles.

Exeunt Courtiers and Eugenia

CLEANTHES

What devil brought this colour to your mind,
 Which since your childhood I ne'er saw you wear?
 You were ever of an innocent gloss
 220 Since I was ripe for knowledge, and would you lose it
 And change the livery of saints and angels
 For this mixed monstrousness, to force a ground
 That has been so long hallowed like a temple
 To bring forth fruits of earth now, and turn back 225 To the wild cries of lust, and the complexion
 Of sin in act, lost and long since repented?
 Would you begin a work ne'er yet attempted,
 To pull time backward?
 See what your wife will do. Are your wits perfect?

230 LISANDER My wits?

CLEANTHES

I like it ten times worse, for 't'ad been safer
 Now to be mad, and more excusable.
 I hear you dance again and do strange follies.

LISANDER

I must confess I have been put to some, coz.

CLEANTHES

235 And yet you are not mad? Pray say not so:
 Give me that comfort of you that you are mad,
 That I may think you are at worst, for if You are not mad, I then must guess you have
 The first of some disease was never heard of,
 240 Which may be worse than madness, and more fearful.
 You'd weep to see yourself else, and your care
 To pray would quickly turn you white again.
 I had a father, had he lived his month out

198 get beget, father

199 dissolved deceased

200 gaudy-winged See 2.1.188.

201 shamble-flies flies in a butcher's stall or slaughterhouse.
Shamble may also imply 'ill-formed'.

203 you...you i.e., one...they

204 beamy radiant

210 Could...handsome? Could you (who had been handsome) not be entirely unrecognizable? Possibly BELL's line should be repunctuated 'Could you not all be lost? That had been handsome—'; handsome would then have its historically older meaning of 'proper, appropriate', rather than 'attractive'.

216 noddles heads

219 gloss exterior; perhaps with the added resonance of a marginal comment (like this one) that explains or annotates a 'text', in this case Lisander's earlier virtue. In both senses, the word often had sinister connotations: in the first, of a cover-up; in the second, of a gloze, a devious argument or explanation. Thus, innocent gloss may (whether intentionally or not) carry a whiff of oxymoron.

221 livery...angels i.e., white

224 back COXETER; black BELL. The emendation makes better syntactic sense of the phrase 'turn back | To...the complexion |
 Of sin in act'; at the same time, the substitution sacrifices BELL's resonant play on colours. (If BELL's 'turn black' was pronounced on stage, audiences might still have heard the resonance of the idiom 'turn back'.)

226 act action; a sex act

228 pull time backward attempted, in fact, at ll. 133-4

229 See...do Notice what your wife is doing (as a result of your behaviour)

Act 3 Scene 2

A new way to please you.

253-3.2.254.1 Exit Lisander... Enter Eugenia See 3.2.114.1.

265 stickest pierces; or remains fixed
 266-8 The question of whether Cleanthes's speeches here are 'asides' is again significant; see 1.1.222-3. Given that he describes Eugenia as 'fast asleep' (l. 261), it may have been theatrically effective to treat all the lines as spoken aloud; in such a scenario, Cleanthes acts as if he is not speaking these lines to Eugenia, but speaks them within her hearing for [what he perceives to be] her benefit. See also ll. 259-61.

274 gone backward See ll. 133-4, 228.
 288 Have who have
 297 stronger master i.e., the devil
 298 Bless protect, save
 299 impudently common shamelessly promiscuous. Common woman was a term for prostitute—i.e. a woman said to be shared 'in common' by multiple men, like a piece of land (a common). Impudently is closely related to pudendum (= vulva).
 301 fit punish 303 I can 'sure The edited version here interprets BELL's 'I can sure' as 'I can assure that...'; another possibility would read 'sure' as 'certainly, surely':

He that attempts to take away my pleasure,
 I'll take away his joy, and I can, sure.
 His concealed father pays for't...

307 He's BELL (Has), a modernization suggested by GIFFORD (He has) a bout BELL (about)
Since now
 308 flirt a quick blow or tap; a stroke of wit

245 But to ha' seen this most prodigious folly,
 There needed not the law to have cut him off:
 The sight of this had proved his executioner,
 And broke his heart. He would have held it equal
 Done to a sanctuary, for what is age
 But the holy place of life, chapel of ease
 250 For all men's wearied miseries? And to rob
 That of her ornament, it is accursed,
 As from a priest to steal a holy vestment,
 Ay, and convert it to a sinful covering. Exit Lisander
 I see 't'as done him good; blessing go with it,

Enter Eugenia

255 Such as may make him pure again.

EUGENIA

'Twas bravely touched, i'faith, sir.

CLEANTHES

O, you're welcome.

EUGENIA

Exceedingly well handled.

CLEANTHES

'Tis to you I come;

He fell but i' my way.

EUGENIA

You marked his beard, cousin.

CLEANTHES

Mark me.

EUGENIA Did you ever see a hair so changed?

CLEANTHES [aside]

260 I must be forced to wake her loudly too;
 The devil has rocked her so fast asleep.—Strumpet.

EUGENIA Do you call, sir?

CLEANTHES

Whore.

EUGENIA

How do you, sir?

CLEANTHES

Be I ne'er so well,

265 I must be sick of thee. Thou'rt a disease
 That stickest to th' heart, as all such women are.

EUGENIA

What ails our kindred?

CLEANTHES [aside] Bless me, she sleeps still.

What a dead modesty is i' this woman!—
 Will never blush again? Look on thy work
 But with a Christian eye: 'twould turn thy heart
 270 Into a shower of blood to be the cause
 Of that old man's destruction—think upon't—
 Ruin eternally! For through thy loose follies

Heaven has found him a faint servant lately;
 His goodness has gone backward and engendered
 With his old sins again, has lost his prayers 275
 And all the tears that were companions with 'em,
 And—like a blindfold man, giddy and blinded,
 Thinking he goes right on still, swerves but one foot
 And turns to the same place where he set out—
 So, he that took his farewell of the world 280
 And cast the joys behind him out of sight,
 Summed up his hours, made even with time and men,
 Is now in heart arrived at youth again,
 All by thy wildness. Thy too hasty lust 285
 Has driven him to this strong apostasy.
 Immodesty like thine was never equalled;
 I've heard of women (shall I call 'em so)
 Have welcomed suitors ere the corpse were cold,
 But thou, thy husband living—thou art too bold.

EUGENIA

Well, have you done now, sir?

CLEANTHES

Look, look, she smiles yet. 290

EUGENIA

All this is nothing to a mind resolved.
 Ask any woman that; she'll tell you so much.
 You have only shown a pretty saucy wit,
 Which I shall not forget, nor to requite it.
 You shall hear from me shortly.

CLEANTHES

Shameless woman, 295

I take my counsel from thee—'tis too honest—
 And leave thee wholly to thy stronger master.
 Bless the sex of thee from thee, that's my prayer.
 Were all like thee, so impudently common,
 No man would be found to wed a woman. Exit 300

EUGENIA

I'll fit you gloriously;
 He that attempts to take away my pleasure,
 I'll take away his joy, and I can 'sure
 His concealed father pays for't. I'll e'en tell Him that I mean to make my husband next, 305
Enter Simonides
 And he shall tell the Duke—mass, here he comes.

SIMONIDES

He's had a bout with me too.

EUGENIA

What? No! Since, sir?

SIMONIDES

A flirt, a little flirt; he called me strange names,

309 quit repay (2.2.149)
 315.1 Tertius BELL (Tertii)
 4.1.0.1 Incipit Actus Quartus THIS EDITION;
 Act. IV. Scen. I. BELL
 1 gentlemen COXETER; Gentlemen BELL draw (with a pun on his occupation)
 5 De clare clary wine, a mixture of wine, honey, and spices
 6 bullies friends, good-fellows (without the modern sense of intimidation)
 8 two BELL (too)
 9 basted moistened (continuing the jokes in culinary language), but with a sexual meaning as well
 11 stuck her with rosemary Meat was stuck with the herb rosemary as a flavoring;
 rosemary was also used as an ornament at both weddings and funerals (see ll. 33-5). 'Stuck her' suggests sexual penetration.

 14 fly-blown tainted (with deposits of flies' eggs)
 15 Put her off get rid of her
 21 Palermo a kind of wine from Palermo, Sicily
 22 lick-spigot insulting name for a tapster
 23 Ad imum to the last
 36 account See I.1.467.
 43 wire-drawers i.e., string-players. Lines 42-50 play upon the intersections in the vocabularies of music and drinking.
 46 sack-butts casks of white wine; also a common musical instrument, now obsolete (a bass trumpet with a slide like a trombone)
 48 theirs MASON; their BELL cittern- and gittern-heads citterns and gitterns were guitar-like stringed instruments, often with a 'grotesquely-carved head' (OED)

 51 fool BELL (foole). fool = play the fool. All other editions emend unnecessarily to foot.
 52 Siren in Greek mythology, one of a group of monsters, part-bird, part-woman, who lured sailors to their deaths with enchanting singing (Odyssey 12)
 53 Hiren slang for seductive woman, harlot (synonymous with Siren). The passage references a frequently quoted line ('have we not Hiren here?') probably from a now-lost play associated with George Peele, The Turkish Mahamet and Hyrin the fair Greek (c.1594). This story was also kept in circulation by William Barksted's 1611 narrative poem Hiren: or The faire Greeke.

But I ne'er minded him.

EUGENIA You shall quit him, sir,
 When he as little minds you.

310 SIMONIDES I like that well.
 I love to be revenged when no one thinks of me.
 There's little danger that way.

EUGENIA This is it, then.
 He you shall strike; your stroke shall be profound,
 And yet your foe not guess who gave the wound.

315 SIMONIDES O' my troth, I love to give such wounds. Exeunt
Finis Actus Tertius

4.1 Incipit Actus Quartus
Enter Clown, Butler, Bailiff, Tailor, Cook, Drawer,
Wench

DRAWER Welcome, gentlemen, will you not draw near?
 Will you drink at door, gentlemen?

BUTLER O, the summer air's best!

DRAWER What wine will please you drink, gentlemen?

5 BUTLER De clare, sirrah. [Exit Drawer]

CLOWN What, you're all sped already, bullies?

COOK My widow's o'th' spit and half ready, lad; a turn or two more and I have done with her.

10 CLOWN Then, cook, I hope you have basted her before this
 time.

COOK And stuck her with rosemary too, to sweeten her;
 she was tainted ere she came to my hands. What an old piece of flesh of fifty-nine, eleven months, and upwards!
 She must needs be fly-blown.

15 CLOWN Put her off, put her off, though you lose by her;
 the weather's hot.

COOK Why, Drawer!

Enter Drawer

DRAWER By and by—here, gentlemen, here's the quintessence of Greece; the sages never drunk better grape.

COOK Sir, the mad Greeks of this age can taste their 20
 Palermo as well as the sage Greeks did before 'em. Fill, lick-spigot.

DRAWER Ad imum, sir.

CLOWN My friends, I must doubly invite you all, the fifth of the next month, to the funeral of my first wife, and 25 to the marriage of my second, my two-to-one. This is she.

COOK I hope some of us will be ready for the funeral of our wives by that time, to go with thee. But shall they be 30 both of a day?

CLOWN O, best of all, sir! Where sorrow and joy meet together, one will help away with another the better.
 Besides, there will be charges saved too; the same rosemary that serves for the funeral will serve for the 35 wedding.

BUTLER How long do you make account to be a widower,
 sir?

CLOWN Some half an hour—long enough, o' conscience.
 Come, come, let's have some agility! Is there no music in the house? 40

DRAWER Yes, sir, here are sweet wire-drawers in the house.
 COOK O, that makes them and you seldom part; you are wine-drawers, and they wire-drawers.

TAILOR And both govern by the pegs too.

CLOWN And you have pipes in your consort too. 45

DRAWER And sack-butts too, sir.

BUTLER But the heads of your instruments differ; yours are hogsheads, theirs cittern- and gittern-heads.

BAILIFF All wooden heads; there they meet again.

COOK Bid 'em strike up; we'll have a dance. [Exit Drawer] 50
 Gnothoes, come, thou shalt fool it too.

CLOWN No dancing with me; we have Siren here.

COOK Siren? 'Twas Hiren the fair Greek, man.

- 54 drachmas BELL (Drachmes); Drachms COXETER. Here and in 3.1, BELL employs the spellings 'drachmaes' and 'drachmes' without distinction (three occurrences each), though this scene consistently capitalizes. In the next three lines, drachmas refers to 1) a Greek coin (3.1.84); 2) a small amount of liquor drachm (pronounced and sometimes spelled dram); and/or 3) the unit of weight on which both of these were based (thus resonating with the puns on measurement that follow). The words were largely interchangeable, and either pronunciation may have been employed on stage in this scene.
- 62 Helen of Greece Helen, married to Menelaus of Sparta, later abducted by Paris of Troy, triggering the Trojan War
- 66 shorter COXETER; fhorer BELL
- 69 an ell 1) unit of measurement (45 inches) 2) 'a Nell'
- yard 36 inches; also, a standard word for 'penis'
- 70-2 There... Cressida Women thought promiscuous or unchaste were described as 'light'; moving from length to weight in his jokes on measurements, the clown is weighing the relative chastity of two famous women of antiquity.
- 70 Cressid Trojan woman in love with Troilus, during the siege of Troy
- 71 Troy weight the standard system of weights for precious metals, in which a pound = 12 ounces avoirdupois BELL (haberdepoyfe). A system of weights, in which a pound = 16 ounces. BELL's spelling may suggest

- 'haver of poise', punning on have/held and on poise, meaning balanced between two things (in this case, men).
- 76 plaster of Paris common white plaster, playing on Paris, Helen's seducer; 'plasters' were also bandages used to place medicine on a wound, and thus to 'stop holes'—with a joke about sexual penetration
- 80-1 I... both The line resonates with the staging practices in early performances; men and boys would have played the women's parts.
- 81 visors BELL (vizards); Wizards MASON. visors/vizards = masks. Most editors substitute wizards, suggesting that Drawer is corrected by Cook and then excused by Butler, but the speech can be read as it stands in BELL, giving the sense that Drawer tentatively proposes a term, which Cook confirms and Butler then plays on.
- 86.1 Enter... masks MASON (subst.); Old women. BELL (in the margin of 4.1.85-4.1.86.1).
- 88.1-4.1.91.2 Musicians... Wench BELL's stage direction here is detailed; at the same time, BELL does not fully distinguish lines spoken, speech headings, and stage directions at the right margins of speeches. The version in the text column, then, is one possible interpretation of BELL; in an attempt to render what may have transpired on stage, it re-orders the relation of some stage directions and speeches. BELL reads:

Draw. They desire to enter amongst any merry company of Gentlemen good fellows for a fittime or too. Old women.
Cook. We'll strain our selves with 'em say, let 'em come Gentles now for the honour of Epire. Dance.
She dancing with me, we have Siren here.
The Dance of old women masked, then offer to take the men, they agree all but Gnothoes: so fit with his speech after Troy weight.
Cook. I f'okind if en every o' his Wench to his f'everal room a Gnothoes we are all provided now as you are. Enter each with Clo. I shall have two it f'ormes away I have his wife masked Siren here already. Gnothoes is the unmasked.

- 88.1 Musicians... dance THIS EDITION (Taylor); Dance. BELL (in margin following 4.1.88). THIS EDITION interprets BELL's marginal direction as a cue for the music (as might have been the case in a promptbook); previous editions have treated Dance as a duplication of the direction that follows.
- 88.3 take dance with
Clown THIS EDITION; not in BELL
- 89 CLOWN COXETER (Gno.); Gnothoes: BELL (in the margin after 4.1.87). In BELL the speech itself has no speech heading; editors interpret the word Gnothoes at the right of 4.1.87 as a misplaced speech heading. If this is correct, it is the only time BELL uses Clown's name as a speech heading (though Gnothoes does appear in the stage direction). See next note.
She... here. THIS EDITION. BELL places this line of speech before the stage direction; THIS EDITION places it in the middle of the stage direction, so that it supplies a text for Clown's refusal to dance. If (as hypothesized in the previous note), the marginal Gnothoes is a speech heading, this line of speech may have appeared marginally, as an addition in the manuscript copy for BELL.
She Clown's Wife (masked)
We have Siren here See ll. 52, 92, 102-3.

- 55 CLOWN Five drachmas of that! I say Siren the fair Greek, and so are all fair Greeks.
COOK A match—five drachmas her name was Hiren.
CLOWN Siren's name was Siren, for five drachmas.
COOK 'Tis done.
TAILOR Take heed what you do, Gnothoes.
- 60 CLOWN Do not I know our own countrywomen Siren and Nell of Greece, two of the fairest Greeks that ever were?
COOK That Nell was Helen of Greece too.
CLOWN As long as she tarried with her husband she was Ellen, but after she came to Troy she was Nell of Troy, or Bonny Nell, whether you will or no.
- 65 TAILOR Why, did she grow shorter when she came to Troy?
CLOWN She grew longer, if you mark the story. When she grew to be an ell, she was deeper than any yard of Troy could reach by a quarter. There was Cressid was Troy weight, and Nell was avoirdupois; she held more by four ounces than Cressida.
- 70 BAILIFF They say she caused many wounds to be given in Troy.

- CLOWN True, she was wounded there herself, and cured again by plaster of Paris, and ever since, that has been used to stop holes with.
Enter Drawer
DRAWER Gentlemen, if you be disposed to be merry, the music is ready to strike up, and here's a consort of mad Greeks. I know not whether they be men or women, or between both; they have—what you call 'em? visors?—on their faces.
- 80 COOK Visors, goodman lick-spigot.
BUTLER If they be wise women, they may be wizards too.
DRAWER They desire to enter amongst any merry company of gentlemen good-fellows for a strain or two. 85
[Enter] old women [and Wife, in masks]
COOK We'll strain ourselves with 'em, say; let 'em come now, for the honour of Epire!
[Musicians within play a] dance
The dance of old women masked, then [they] offer to take the men; they agree, all but [the Clown] Gnothoes CLOWN She dancing with me? We have Siren here.

He sits with his Wench after they whisper

90 COOK Ay, so kind, then every one his wench to his several room. Gnothoes, we are all provided now as you are.

*Exeunt each with his wife, manet
Gnothoes' Wife, [Clown, and Wench]*

CLOWN I shall have two, it seems. Away, I have Siren here already.

WIFE What, a mermaid?

95 CLOWN No, but a maid, horse-face.

[Wife unmask]

O, old woman, is it you?

WIFE Yes, 'tis I; all the rest have gulled themselves and taken their own wives, and shall know that they have done more than they can well answer. But I pray you, 100 husband, what are you doing?

CLOWN Faith, thus should I do if thou wert dead, old Ag, and thou hast not long to live, I'm sure. We have Siren here.

WIFE Art thou so shameless whilst I am living to keep one under my nose?

CLOWN No, Ag, I do prize her far above thy nose; if thou wouldst lay me both thine eyes in my hand to boot, I'll not leave her. Art not ashamed to be seen in a tavern, and hast scarce a fortnight to live? O, old woman, what art thou? Must thou find no time to think of thy end?

WIFE O unkind villain.

CLOWN [to Wench] And then, sweetheart, thou shalt have two new gowns, and the best of this old, old woman's shall make thee raiments for the working days.

WIFE O, rascal, dost thou quarter my clothes already too?

CLOWN [to Wench] Her ruffs will serve thee for nothing but to wash dishes, for thou shalt have nine of the new fashion.

WIFE Impudent villain! [To Wench] Shameless harlot!

CLOWN [to Wench] You may hear she never wore any but ruffs all her lifetime.

[Wife attacks Wench; Clown restrains her]

WIFE Let me come—I'll tear the strumpet from him.

CLOWN Dar'st thou call my wife 'strumpet'? Thou preterpluperfect tense of a woman! I'll make thee do penance in the sheet thou shalt be buried in. Abuse my choice, my two-to-one!

WIFE

No, unkind villain, I'll deceive thee yet.

I have a reprieve for five years of life;

I am with child.

WENCH Cudso, Gnothoes, I'll not tarry so long. Five years—I may bury two husbands by that time.

CLOWN Alas, give the poor woman leave to talk. She with child? I with a puppy! As long as I have thee by me, she shall not be with child, I warrant thee.

WIFE The law and thou and all shall find I am with child.

CLOWN I'll take my corporal oath I begat it not, and then thou diest for adultery.

WIFE No matter, that will ask some time in the proof.

CLOWN O, you'd be stoned to death, would you? All old women would die o' that fashion with all their hearts, 140 but the law shall overthrow you the t'other way first.

89.1 after they whisper Clown and Wench sit, after which they whisper; or they sit after they whisper. (The text seems to provide no further explanation for the whispering.)

91.1 manet remain (on stage)

91.2 Gnothoes' Wife BELL (Gnothoes wife)

Clown, and Wench GIFFORD (subst.); not in BELL.

94 mermaid prostitute; synonymous with siren (l. 52)

95.1 Wife unmask THIS EDITION (Taylor); wife unmaskt. BELL (in the margin opposite l. 93); Takes off her mask. GIFFORD (at l. 94). Clown's question, and particularly his interjection 'O', suggest that he has not recognized his wife until now. Alternatively, Clown's ability to dissimulate elsewhere in the text may suggest he pretends not to recognize his wife until now, in which case BELL's original placement of 'wife unmaskt' might be followed. Clown's term 'Horse-face' might refer either to his wife's face or to her mask; animal masks were common in the period. TAYLOR argues that there is no reason for Wife to remove her mask at the point where BELL marks the action, and he suggests that, given the amount of material apparently in the margin here, the compositor could have become confused: 'Exeunt . . . | Wife | Wife | unmaske' could easily have been interpreted as an erroneous duplication, part of a single sentence, which would encourage the (easy) misreading of a terminal 'e' as 't'.

101 old Ag the nickname for Agatha may sound like 'old hag'

115 quarter my clothes alluding to the division of Jesus of Nazareth's clothes at his crucifixion (John 19:23)

116 ruffs decorative collars

121 rails neckerchiefs, playing on rail (= use abusive language, harangue)

122 him BELL; thee TAYLOR conj.

123-4 preterpluperfect tense literally, 'beyond the pluperfect tense'; before the past, older than old

130 Cudso BELL (Cud fo). An exclamation related to God's

136 corporal oath an oath made while touching a sacred object (e.g. the Bible, the communion host)

139 stoned a mode of execution (for adultery, particularly in the Hebrew Bible and New Testament), with a play on stones as testicles; thus, perhaps, 'fucked to death', a sense underlined by overthrow. (See cast down at 2.1.139.)

141 t'other the other (a redundant idiom)

WENCH Indeed, if it be so, I will not linger so long, Gnothoes.
CLOWN [to Wife] Away, away, some botcher has got it; 145 'tis but a chushion, I warrant thee. The old woman is 'loath to depart'; she never sung other tune in her life.
WENCH We will not have our noses bored with a chushion
if it be so.
CLOWN [to Wife] Go, go thy ways, thou old almanac—at 150 the twenty-eighth day of December e'en almost out-of-date! Down on thy knees, and make thee ready. Sell some of thy clothes to buy thee a death's-head, and put't upon thy middle finger; your least-considering 155 bawds do so much. Be not thou worse, though thou art an old woman as she is. I am cloyed with old stock-fish;
here's a young perch is sweeter meat by half. Prithree, die before thy day if thou canst, that thou mayst not be counted a witch.
WIFE No, thou art a witch and I'll prove it. I said I was 160 with child; thou knewest no other but by sorcery; thou said'st it was a cushion and so it is; thou art a witch for't, I'll be sworn to't.
CLOWN Ha, ha, ha! I told thee 'twas a chushion. Go get thy sheet ready; we'll see thee buried as we go to church 165 to be married. Exeunt [Clown and Wench]
WIFE Nay, I'll follow thee, and show myself a wife; I'll plague thee as long as I live with thee, and I'll bury some money before I die that my ghost may haunt thee afterward. Exit

4.2 Enter Cleanthes

CLEANTHES
What's that? O, nothing but the whispering wind Breathes through yon churlish hawthorn, that grew rude,
As if it chid the gentle breath that kissed it.
I cannot be too circumspect, too careful,
5 For in these woods lies hid all my life's treasure,
Which is too much ever to fear to lose,
Though it be never lost. And if our watchfulness
Ought to be wise and serious against a thief
That comes to steal our goods—things all without us,
10 That proves vexation often more than comfort—
How mighty ought our providence to be
To prevent those, if any such there were,
That come to rob our bosom of our joys,
That only makes poor man delight to live?
15 Pshaw, I'm too fearful. Fie, fie, who can hurt me?
But 'tis a general cowardice that shakes
The nerves of confidence; he that hides treasure
Imagines everyone thinks of that place,
When 'tis a thing least minded. Nay, let him change
20 The place continually; where'er it keeps,
There will the fear keep still. Yonder's the storehouse
Of all my comfort now,
Enter Hippolita

and see, it sends forth
A dear one, to me, precious chief of women.—
How does the good old soul? Has he fed well?

- 144 botcher a tailor who patches and makes repairs got fathered
145 chushion BELL. Cushion, pillow; also, a simulated pregnancy.
This spelling, unrecorded in OED, is retained because it may represent a dialect pronunciation; it appears three times (also at ll. 147 and 163, always attributed to Clown or Wench), in contrast to Wife's usage (l. 161).
146 'loath to depart' the name of a familiar tune. (See Weapons
2.2.248.1.)
147 have our noses bored be swindled
148 if Like many other less significant cases that could be cited, the appearance of this word only in some copies of BELL illustrates the difficulty of distinguishing between press variants and letters that do not print (or print as ink blotches) in BELL. HOUGHTON2 lacks the word entirely at the end of this line (p. 49/H1); FOLGER, LCP, and HOUGHTON1 have the hint of a letter but are otherwise illegible; WILLIAMS shows a clear i and a blotched f; HUNTINGTON clearly shows if.
150 twenty-eighth BELL (28.)
December While the play insists at certain points (the beginning of this scene, for example) on its Greek setting, there is a persistent multiculturalism in the play, a constant resurfacing of English terms and customs. Greek month-names are used earlier (3.1.91-2).
152-4 death's-head... bawds Bawds commonly wore rings with representations of skulls.
153 put't BELL (put). Modernization conj. TAYLOR.
155 cloyed overfed, satiated; encumbered stock-fish cured, dried salt-water fish 156 perch freshwater fish; something to sit on (sexually) 158 witch (suggesting that old women were more likely to be accused of witchcraft)
165 Exeunt BELL (Ex.)
167-9 bury... afterward Ghosts were thought to haunt spots where they had buried treasure in life.
4.2.2 yon COXETER; YOU BELL. For other u/n inversions, see notes to 1.1.380, 5.1.57.
5 life's BELL (lives)
7 Though COXETER; Hip. Though BELL. In BELL, this line is preceded by Hip., as if it begins a speech by Hippolita, but this is apparently one of BELL's many anticipatory stage directions, preparing for her entrance. Such directions appear throughout BELL, usually in the right margin, as does Hippolita's actual entrance direction at l. 22; they suggest that the text from which BELL was typeset was one that had been used in the theatre as a book-holder's copy, or 'promptbook'.
10 proves prove. Early modern English occasionally used third-person plural verbs ending in -s. See l. 14.
22.1 Enter Hippolita THIS EDITION; BELL (in the margin of 4.2.21-
2); GIFFORD (after 4.2.22)
23 dear one, to me BELL reads: 'A deere one, to me, pretious chief of women' (which THIS EDITION follows), but there are several other possibilities of punctuation (and thus of meaning): 'A dear one to me, precious chief of women.' 'A dear one, to me precious chief of women.' And as direct address (since BELL ends the line with a comma): 'A dear one to me. Precious chief of women, |
How does the good old soul?'

- 27 HIPPOLITA COXETER; Eip. BELL
- 31.1 Enter Leonides COXETER; Ent. Leonides. BELL (in the margin of 4.2.32, at the end of the first line of the speech given to him by editors)
- 32 LEONIDES COXETER; not in BELL. In BELL the speech continues as Hippolita's, after a line break, and a reader might initially have taken it as such.
- 34 CLEANTHES BELL. Most editions treat this as a continuation of the previous speech, reassigned to Leonides.
Lists of honour delights of honour. Lists = joy, desire, delight (archaic).
- 55.1 [sounds . . . off] THIS EDITION; not in BELL
- 58 consort partner (used with spouses, parents, associates, and thus possibly resonating with Cleanthes's earlier speech that fails to distinguish wife and father, 1.1.458-63).
- 59 HIPPOLITA COXETER; H p BELL. All copies consulted have a medial space in this speech heading.
- HIPPOLITA
Beshrew me, sir, he made the heartiest meal today. 25
Much good may't do his health.
- CLEANTHES A blessing on thee,
Both for thy news and wish.
- HIPPOLITA His stomach, sir,
Is bettered wondrously since his concealment.
- CLEANTHES
Heaven has a blessed work in't. Come, we're safe here;
I prithee call him forth, the air's much wholesomer. 30
- HIPPOLITA Father!
Enter Leonides
- LEONIDES
How sweetly sounds the voice of a good woman!
It is so seldom heard that when it speaks
It ravishes all senses.
- CLEANTHES Lists of honour,
I've a joy weeps to see you, 'tis so full, 35
So fairly fruitful.
[He kneels]
I hope to see you often and return,
Loaden with blessings, still to pour on some,
I find 'em all in my contented peace,
And lose not one in thousands. They're dispersed 40
So gloriously I know not which are brightest.
I find 'em as angels are found, by legions:
First in the love and honesty of a wife,
Which is the first and chiefest of all temporal blessings;
Next in yourself, which is the hope and joy 45
Of all my actions, my affairs, my wishes;
And lastly, which crowns all, I find my soul
Crowned with the peace of 'em, th'eternal riches,
Man's only portion for his heavenly marriage.
- LEONIDES
Rise: thou art all obedience, love and goodness. 50
[Cleanthes rises]
I dare say that which thousand fathers cannot,
And that's my precious comfort. Never son
Was in the way more of celestial rising;
Thou art so made of such ascending virtue
That all the pow'rs of hell cannot sink thee. 55
A horn [sounds within, as afar off]
- CLEANTHES Ha.
- LEONIDES
What was't disturbed my joy?
- CLEANTHES Did you not hear,
As afar off?
- LEONIDES What, my excellent consort?
- CLEANTHES [to Hippolita] Nor you?
- HIPPOLITA
I heard a—
A horn [sounds within]
- CLEANTHES Hark, again.
- LEONIDES Bless my joy,
What ails it on a sudden?
- CLEANTHES Now, since lately— 60

Act 4 Scene 2

An out Law

- 64.I Exit...still THIS EDITION; not in BELL. Other editions call for Leonides to exit at l. 65 or for Hippolita to exit with him and return at l. 67.I.
 66 hunting hunt
 76 light cheerful; frivolous
 78 merry COXETER; merry BELL
 88 cousin-german COXETER; Cofen germen BELL
 89 me, a free-tongued woman What modern grammar would call Simonides's 'misplaced modifier' is significant, and may effeminize him further.
 91 neatly carried cleverly or dexterously enacted. To carry could mean: 1) to conduct one's body in a certain way; 2) to succeed ('carry the day'); 3) to bear a corpse to burial.
 94 scrivener notary; professional copyist
 96 Constant to light'ning continuing his light-heartedness light'ning BELL (lightning); lightening COXETER; Lightness MASON+

LEONIDES
 'Tis nothing but a symptom of thy care, man.
 CLEANTHES
 Alas, you do not hear well.
 LEONIDES
 What was't, daughter?
 HIPPOLITA
 I heard a sound twice.
A horn [sounds within]
 CLEANTHES
 Hark, louder and nearer.
 In, for the precious good of virtue, quick, sir.
[Exit Leonides, as a horn sounds still]
 Louder and nearer yet—at hand, at hand!
 A hunting here? 'Tis strange, I never Knew game followed in these woods before.
Enter Duke, Simonides, Courtiers, and Executioner
 HIPPOLITA Now let 'em come and spare not.
 CLEANTHES
 Ha! 'Tis, is't not the Duke? Look sparingly.
 HIPPOLITA
 'Tis he, but what of that? Alas, take heed, sir,
 Your care will overthrow us.
 CLEANTHES
 Come, it shall not.
 Let's set a pleasant face upon our fears,
 Though our hearts shake with horror. Ha, ha, ha!
 DUKE Hark!
 CLEANTHES [to Hippolita] Prithée proceed,
 I'm taken with these light things infinitely
 Since the old man's decease. Ha, so they parted—ha, ha, ha!
 DUKE
 Why, how should I believe this? Look, he's merry,
 As if he had no such charge. One with that care
 Could never be so; still he holds his temper,
 And 'tis the same still with no difference
 He brought his father's corpse to th' grave with;
 He laughed thus then, you know.
 FIRST COURTIER
 Ay, he may laugh, my lord;
 That shows but how he glories in his cunning,
 And perhaps done more to advance his wit,
 Than to express affection to his father,
 That only he has overreached the law.
 SIMONIDES
 He tells you right, my lord; his own cousin-german
 Revealed it first to me, a free-tongued woman,
 And very excellent at telling secrets.
 DUKE
 If a contempt can be so neatly carried,
 It gives me cause of wonder.
 SIMONIDES
 Troth, my lord,
 'Twill prove a delicate cozening, I believe;
 I'd have no scrivener offer to come near it.
 DUKE
 Cleanthes.
 CLEANTHES
 My loved lord.
 DUKE [aside]
 Not moved a whit,
 Constant to light'ning still.—'Tis strange to meet you
 Upon a ground so unfrequented, sir.

- 101 vicious bad, harmful, a vice (without the modern sense of violence); marred by a defect, illegal (legal term)
 105 proportion i.e. of mirth and sadness
 118 it... fadge something's happening. fadge = suit, succeed.
 132 [apart to Cleanthes] Since the on-stage audience may be hearing (and is certainly interpreting) these exchanges between Cleanthes and Hippolita, they are not asides in the usual sense; see I.I.2.22-3.
 133 Speak ... sir BELL's lack of commas allows for several meanings: 'speak something good, sir', or 'speak something, good sir'.

This does not fit your passion; you're for mirth
 Or I mistake you much.

CLEANTHES But finding it
 Grow to a noted imperfection in me— 100
 For anything too much is vicious—
 I come to these disconsolate walks, of purpose
 Only to dull and take away the edge on't.
 I ever had a greater zeal to sadness,
 A natural proportion, I confess, my lord, 105
 Before that cheerful accident fell out,
 If I may call a father's funeral cheerful
 Without wrong done to duty or my love.

DUKE
 It seems, then, you take pleasure i' these walks, sir.

CLEANTHES
 Contemplative content I do, my lord. 110
 They bring into my mind oft meditations
 So sweetly precious, that in the parting
 I find a shower of grace upon my cheeks,
 They take their leave so feelingly—

DUKE So, sir—

CLEANTHES
 Which is a kind of grave delight, my lord. 115

DUKE
 And I've small cause, Cleanthes, t' afford you
 The least delight that has a name.

CLEANTHES My lord.

SIMONIDES
 Now it begins to fadge.

FIRST COURTIER Peace, thou art so greedy, Sim.

DUKE
 In your excess of joy you have expressed
 Your rancour and contempt against my law. 120
 Your smiles deserve fining; you've professed
 Derision openly, e'en to my face,
 Which might be death, a little more incensed.
 You do not come for any freedom here,
 But for a project of your own. 125
 But all that's known to be contentful to thee
 Shall in the use prove deadly; your life's mine
 If ever thy presumption do but lead thee
 Into these walks again—ay, or that woman.
 I'll have 'em watched o' purpose. 130

FIRST COURTIER
 Now, now, his colour ebbs and flows.

SIMONIDES Mark hers too.

HIPPOLITA [apart to Cleanthes]
 O, who shall bring food to the poor old man now?
 Speak somewhat good, sir, or we're lost forever!

CLEANTHES [apart to Hippolita]
 O, you did wondrous ill to call me again.
 There are not words to help us. If I entreat, 135
 'Tis found; that will betray us worse than silence.
 Prithee, let heaven alone, and let's say nothing.

FIRST COURTIER [to the Duke]
 You've struck 'em dumb, my lord.

SIMONIDES Look how guilt looks.
 I would not have that fear upon my flesh

Act 4 Scene 2

A new way to please you.

To save ten fathers.
CLEANTHES [apart to Hippolita]
140 He is safe still, is he not?
HIPPOLITA [apart to Cleanthes]
O you do ill to doubt it.
CLEANTHES [apart to Hippolita]
Thou'rt all goodness.
SIMONIDES [to the Duke]
Now does your grace believe?
DUKE 'Tis too apparent.
Search, make a speedy search, for the imposture
Cannot be far off by the fear it sends.
CLEANTHES
Ha!
SIMONIDES
145 H'as the lapwing's cunning, I'm afraid, my lord,
That cries most when she's farthest from the nest.
CLEANTHES
O we're betrayed.
HIPPOLITA Betrayed, sir.
SIMONIDES See, my lord,
It comes out more and more still.
Exeunt Courtiers and Simonides
CLEANTHES Bloody thief,
Come from that place; 'tis sacred homicide,
150 'Tis not for thy adulterate hands to touch it.
HIPPOLITA
O miserable virtue, what distress
Art thou in at this minute?
CLEANTHES Help me, thunder,
For my power's lost. Angels, shoot plagues and help me.
Why are these men in health and I so heart-sick?
155 Or why should nature have that power in me
To levy up a thousand bleeding sorrows
And not one comfort?—only makes me lie
Like the poor mockery of an earthquake here,
Panting with horror, and have not so much force
160 In all my vengeance to shake a villain off o' me.
Enter Courtiers, Simonides, Leonides
HIPPOLITA
Use him gently and heaven will love you for't.
CLEANTHES
Father, O Father, now I see thee full
In thy affection. Thou'rt a man of sorrow
But reverently becom'st it; that's my comfort.
165 Extremity was never better graced
Than with that look of thine. O, let me look still,
For I shall lose it; all my joy and strength
Is e'en eclipsed together.
[He kneels before the Duke]
I transgressed
Your law, my lord; let me receive the sting on't.
170 Be once just, sir, and let the offender die;
He's innocent in all, and I am guilty.
LEONIDES
Your grace knows when affection only speaks
Truth is not always there; his love would draw

145 lapwing's bird that protects its nest by leading intruders noisily away from it
149 sacred accursed (OED 6). Audiences might also have heard the contrary resonance of 'holy' (the usual sense).
163 a man of sorrow 'He is despised and reiected of men, a man of sorrows, and acquainted with griefe' (Isaiah 53:3, Authorized Version, 1611); in Christian readings, the passage was taken to prophesy the treatment of Jesus of Nazareth at the time of his trial and execution.

- 174 undeserved misery BELL's spelling, 'undeservd misery', suggests a non-metrical pronunciation; the line could be spoken iambically with 'undeservèd mis'ry'.
- 185.1 He rises Cleanthes may rise here, or perhaps at ll. 188-9 or 194. BELL does not indicate his kneeling or rising; placing the stage direction here reads Hippolita's speech as meaning 'it's too late now anyway'.
- 192 this BELL; his COXFETER
- 193 consorts friends, associates, perhaps Hippolita (see 58).
- 196 headlong torrent overturns referencing the mode of execution, the father as 'head', and the world upside-down; see I.I.107, I.I.482. BELL's metrically long line may echo Cleanthes's point here.
- 198 blood too BELL (~, to). Most editions end the line with blood. See next note.
- 199 on our heads THIS EDITION; our heads BELL; our Heart's MASON; our heart's too GIFFORD
- 200 incorporate to embodied in, made a part of (I.I.458-63)
- 201 CLEANTHES COXFETER (Clean.); Clea. BELL thee MASON; him BELL. Strictly speaking, BELL's pronoun does not make sense, although (in this context of 'incorporate' emotions) it resonates with Cleanthes's inability here and elsewhere to distinguish fully his father, wife, and self.
- 208 in...trust a reference to Eve that links Hippolita to Eugenia's untrustworthiness (2.2.200, 3.2.28). The placing of Eugenia's entrance in BELL (marginally, next to Hippolita's couplet) focuses the couplet's commentary on Eugenia.

An undeserved misery on his youth,
 And wrong a peace resolved, on both parts sinful. 175
 'Tis I am guilty of my own concealment,
 And like a worldly coward injured heaven
 With fear to go to't; now I see my fault,
 And am prepared with joy to suffer for't.

DUKE [to Executioner]
 Go give him quick dispatch; let him see death, 180
 [To Cleanthes] And your presumption, sir, shall come to judgement.
Exeunt [Duke, Courtiers, Simonides,
and Executioner,] with Leonides

HIPPOLITA
 He's going—O he's gone, sir.

CLEANTHES Let me rise.

HIPPOLITA
 Why do you not then, and follow?

CLEANTHES I strive for't.
 Is there no hand of pity that will ease me
 And take this villain from my heart awhile? 185
 [He rises]

HIPPOLITA
 Alas, he's gone.

CLEANTHES A worse supplies his place then,
 A weight more pond'rous, I cannot follow.

HIPPOLITA
 O misery of affliction.

CLEANTHES They will stay
 Till I can come; they must be so good ever,
 Though they be ne'er so cruel. 190
 My last leave must be taken, think o' that,
 And this last blessing given; I will not lose
 That for a thousand consorts.

HIPPOLITA That hope's wretched.

CLEANTHES
 The inutterable stings of fortune!
 All griefs are to be borne, save this alone; 195
 This like a headlong torrent overturns the frame of nature,
 For he that gives us life first, as a father,
 Locks all his natural sufferings in our blood too;
 The sorrows that he feels are on our heads:
 They are incorporate to us.

HIPPOLITA Noble sir. 200

CLEANTHES
 Let me behold thee well.

HIPPOLITA Sir?

CLEANTHES Thou shouldst be good,
 Or thou'rt a dangerous substance to be lodged
 So near the heart of man.

HIPPOLITA What means this, dear sir?

CLEANTHES
 To thy trust only was this blessèd secret
 Kindly committed. 'Tis destroyed; thou seest 205
 What follows to be thought on't.

HIPPOLITA Miserable!
 Why, here's th'unhappiness of woman still,
 That having forfeited in old times their trust

Act 4 Scene 2

An out Law

214 CLEANTHES THIS EDITION; not in BELL. In BELL, there are two consecutive speeches assigned to Eug. (4.2.212-14, 4.2.214-18). Either a speech by Cleanthes has been omitted (the conjecture here), an extra speech heading has been inserted in a continuous speech, or a revised speech was added and the former version left undeleted (PRICE). There are other signs that the compositor may have been compressing text in the latter half of the last page of the gathering (H4^v) (the two parts of 4.2.218 are printed on a single line); the conjectured missing line may have been intended to be printed on the same line as 4.2.214. The relatively regular metrical context provides further evidence for a missing part-line.

217 field-bed portable bed for use outdoors (perhaps signifying promiscuity)

222 in labour working with; giving birth to

225 betrayed COXETER; betray BELL

226 you'd BELL (y'ad)

230 I I could also indicate the word Ay.

233 cozened On the homonyms cozen/cousin, see 2.2.142, 2.2.182.

240 someway BELL (some way). Somehow, in some way

242 weapon The first of the ensuing scene's many equations of weapon and penis (l. 245).

Enter Eugenia

Now makes their faiths suspected that are just.

CLEANTHES
What shall I say to all my sorrows, then, 210
That look for satisfaction?

EUGENIA Ha, ha, ha, cousin!

CLEANTHES
How ill dost thou become this time!

EUGENIA Ha, ha, ha!
Why that's but your opinion; a young wench
Becomes the time at all times.

CLEANTHES []

EUGENIA
Now, coz, we're even; an you be remembered, 215
You left a strumpet and a whore at home with me,
And such fine field-bed words, which could not cost
you
Less than a father.

CLEANTHES Is it come that way?

EUGENIA Had you an uncle,
He should go the same way too. 220

CLEANTHES O eternity,
What monster is this fiend in labour with?

EUGENIA
An ass-colt with two heads; that's she and you.
I will not lose so glorious a revenge,
Not to be understood in't: I betrayed him, 225
And now we're even; you'd best keep you so.

CLEANTHES
Is there not poison yet enough to kill me?

HIPPOLITA
O sir, forgive me, it was I betrayed him.

CLEANTHES How?

HIPPOLITA I. 230

CLEANTHES
The fellow of my heart—'twill speed me then.

HIPPOLITA
Her tears that never wept, and mine own pity
E'en cozened me together, and stole from me
This secret, which fierce death should not have purchased.

CLEANTHES
Nay then, we're at an end; all we are false ones, 235
And ought to suffer: I was false to wisdom
In trusting woman, thou wert false to faith
In uttering of the secret, [to Eugenia] and thou false
To goodness in deceiving such a pity.
We are all tainted somehow, but thou worst, 240
And for thy infectious spots ought to die first.
[Cleanthes draws his weapon]

EUGENIA
Pray turn your weapon, sir, upon your mistress;
I come not so ill-friended. Rescue, servants!
Enter Simonides and Courtiers

CLEANTHES
Are you so whorishly provided?

252 sharper set more eager; more sexually desirous 256 I'd COXETER; 'de BELL. BELL has what appears to be an apostrophe or dot in initial position in the line. In FOLGER, a minim has been written in under the dot and an apostrophe added; the interpretation by this unknown reader is thus: 'i'de'.
getting conceiving; having sex
 268 peck loaves loaves of bread made from a peck of flour
 273 cut (with a pun on cunt)
 275.1 Quartus BELL (Quarti)
 5.1.0.1 Incipit Actus Quintus THIS EDITION; Act. V. Scen. I. BELL
 0.2 sword and mace magistrates' symbols of office

SIMONIDES
 Yes, sir, she has more weapons at command than
 one. 245

EUGENIA
 Put forward, man, thou art most sure to have me.

SIMONIDES [aside]
 I shall be surer if I keep behind though.

EUGENIA Now, servants, show your loves.

SIMONIDES [aside] I'll show my love too, afar off.

EUGENIA
 I love to be so courted; woo me there. 250

SIMONIDES [aside]
 I love to keep good weapons though ne'er fought;
 I'm sharper set within than I am without.
 [Cleanthes and Courtiers fight]

HIPPOLITA
 O gentlemen! Cleanthes!

EUGENIA Fight! Upon him!

HIPPOLITA
 Thy thirst of blood proclaims thee now a strumpet.

EUGENIA
 'Tis dainty, next to procreation fitting; 255
 I'd either be destroying men or getting.
Enter Officers

FIRST OFFICER
 Forbear, on your allegiance, gentlemen.
 He's the Duke's prisoner, and we seize upon him
 To answer this contempt against the law.

CLEANTHES
 I obey fate in all things.

HIPPOLITA Happy rescue! 260

SIMONIDES [aside] I would you'd seized upon him a minute sooner; 't'ad saved me a cut finger. I wonder how I came by't, for I never put my hand forth, I'm sure. I think my own sword did cut it, if truth were known, maybe the wire in the handle. I have lived these five-and-twenty years and never knew what colour my blood was before. I never durst eat oysters, nor cut peck loaves. 265

EUGENIA
 You have shown your spirits, gentlemen,—[to Simonides] but you
 Have cut your finger. 270

SIMONIDES Ay, the wedding-finger too, a pox on't.

FIRST COURTIER You'll prove a bawdy batchelor, Sim, to have a cut upon your finger, before you are married.

SIMONIDES I'll never draw sword again to have such a jest put upon me. Exeunt 275
Finis Actus Quartus

Incipit Actus Quintus 5.1
 [With the] sword and mace carried before them
 [by officers and guards], enter Simonides, and the Courtiers

SIMONIDES [to officers]
 Be ready with your prisoner; we'll sit instantly

And rise before 'leven, or when we please.
 Shall we not, fellow judges?
 FIRST or SECOND COURTIER 'Tis committed
 All to our power, censure, and pleasure, now
 5 The Duke hath made us chief lords of this sessions,
 And we may speak by fits or sleep by turns.
 SIMONIDES
 Leave that to us, but, whatsoe'er we do,
 The prisoner shall be sure to be condemned;
 Sleeping or waking we are resolved on that
 Before we set upon him.
 10 SECOND COURTIER Make you question?
 If not Cleanthes, and our enemy,
 Nay, a concealer of his father, too,
 A vile example in these days of youth—
 SIMONIDES
 If they were given to follow such examples,
 15 But sure I think they are not; howsoe'er,
 'Twas wickedly attempted, that's my judgement,
 And it shall pass whilst I am in power to sit.
 Never by prince were such young judges made,
 But now the cause requires it, if you mark it:
 20 He must make young or none, for all the old ones
 Hereafter he hath sent a-fishing, and
 My father's one, I humbly thank his highness.
Enter Eugenia
 FIRST COURTIER Widow?
 EUGENIA
 25 You almost hit my name—no, gentlemen,
 You come so wondrous near it I admire you
 For your judgement.
 SIMONIDES My wife that must be, she.
 EUGENIA
 My husband goes upon his last hour now.
 FIRST COURTIER
 On his last legs, I am sure.
 EUGENIA September the seventeenth,
 I will not bate an hour on't, and tomorrow
 His latest hour's expired.
 30 SECOND COURTIER Bring him to judgement.
 The jury's panelled and the verdict given Ere he appears; we have ta'en course for that—
 SIMONIDES
 And officers to attach the grey young man,
 The youth of fourscore. Be of comfort, lady;
 35 We shall no longer bosom January,
 For that I will take order, and provide
 For you a lusty April.
 EUGENIA The month that ought indeed
 To go before May.
 FIRST COURTIER Do as we have said:
 Take a strong guard and bring him into court,
 40 Lady Eugenia; see this charge performed,
 That having his life forfeited by the law
 He may relieve his soul.
 EUGENIA Willingly.
 From shaven chins never came better justice
 Than these ne'er touched by razor.

2 And COXETER; an BELL
 'leven BELL (leaven); Eleven COXETER. Eleven, punning on leaven (yeast)
 3 fellow MASON (Fellow-judges); follow BELL. While unlikely, BELL's reading might be retained by reading follow as 'punish,
 prosecute' (legal term).
 FIRST or SECOND COURTIER THIS EDITION; Cour. BELL. Given BELL's ambiguous speech heading, either Courtier could have spoken the speech on stage; the Courtiers are indistinguishable from each other and, increasingly in the scene, from Simonides. Most editions give the speech to First Courtier.
 5 sessions series of sittings of a court
 10 Before...him An anticipatory stage direction in the margin of this line in BELL (not included here) instructs the actor playing Eugenia to prepare for his/her entrance. On anticipatory directions, see 4.2.7.
set upon attack, assail; but also 'sit upon' (the spellings overlap in the period), meaning 'decide his case' 11 If BELL; IS'T TAYLOR conj.
our MASON; one BELL; an GIFFORD
 17 it shall pass this judgement will be rendered (legal term) 20-1 all...sent He has (by his law) sent all the men who will be old in the future ('hereafter') to their deaths 21 Hereafter THIS EDITION; Her father BELL; Their fathers DYCE; not in COXETER (which begins the line 'He hath...')
 23 Widow COXETER; Widdows BELL
 29 bate delay (I.I.309)
 32 Ere MASON; Ever BELL
ta'en BELL (tane)
 35 bosom January protect the aged 35-8 January...May In Chaucer's 'Merchant's Tale', an old man named 'January' marries a young woman named 'May'.
 37 April. Anticipatory stage direction: 'Lifander and Guardian' in the margin. PRICE views the distance between this anticipatory direction and the later entrance (at l. 83.1) as evidence of a revision that added new material (133). Alternatively, the direction might suggest that some or all of ll. 44-83 was cut (TAYLOR conj.).
 44 ne'er...razor MASON conj., GIFFORD; new tucht by reafon BELL.

Act 5 Scene 1

A new way to please you.

- 84 SIMONIDES In contrast to its usual practice of abbreviating speech headings, BELL spells Simonides's full name before this speech.
- 86 strives BELL; strikes GIFFORD (conj.), BULLEN
- 91 manumissions releases from slavery
- 93 feed on snakes Eating snakes was thought to restore youth.
- 100 elbow-healths drinks (health = a toast drunk in someone's honour)
- 103 peppered MASON conj., GIFFORD; prepar'd BELL. Peppered = trounced, ruined. The best case that might be made for BELL's prepar'd is that it reads ironically (i.e. 'I was almost cooked'); there might also be a resonance of pared (= cut, trimmed), a word closely related to prepare.
took Audience members might have heard here a pun on a kind of weapon; BELL's 'took' is a spelling of tuck, a slender, pointed, thrusting sword, often described as 'long' (and thus resembling the 'third veny' of the earlier contest).
- 104 Long sword THIS EDITION; Being fwolne BELL; Longsword | Being swol'n MASON. BELL's verb ('had ... took') seems to lack an object, supplied here. This emendation expands MASON's suggestion, interpreting BELL's 'Being swolne' as a compositor's misreading of a similar series of graphic shapes ('Long sword') in the hypothetical manuscript copy. The emendation makes sense of BELL's unidiomatic use of 'took' (otherwise unexplained) and completes Simonides's review of the 'weapons' in his earlier drinking contest with Lisander.

104.1-5.1.107 A flourish ... Lisander In BELL the complicated passage spans a page break (pp. 61-62/13-13') and reads:

On the basis of apparent promptbook annotations and anticipatory and doubled stage directions elsewhere in BELL, the hypothesis here is that the text from which BELL was typeset included two sets of stage directions, one in the right margin (Flourish | Enter the Duke) and another in the body of the text (Duke. A Flourish). If so, the editing process here simply eliminates one. (The misalignment in speech headings that seems to have resulted is discussed in notes below, ll. 105-7.) An alternative hypothesis, more difficult to explain in terms of hypothetical manuscript copy, might make a case for BELL's 'A flemish'

as an intended part of Simonides's speech somehow displaced down one line and associated with the Duke's entrance. Hypothetically, as a description of the third veny ('but had I took | A Flemish', meaning 'a Flemish one', 'a Flemish veny'), the line would thus continue scene 3.2's punning on Dutch/German nationality (Flemish = 'Low Dutch'), drinking, and weapons ('fleming knives').

104.1 A flourish COXETER (Flourish.); Duk. A flemish BELL

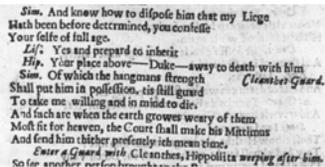

- 105-8 For several lines, BELL's speech headings are out of alignment with the lines that would seem appropriate for these characters to speak (see photoquote above). The version here argues that the speech headings have simply been misplaced down one line.
- 106 DUKE COXETER; not in BELL, which continues the speech as assigned to Second Courtier. See note to l. 106-7. take D (conj. in note to MASON), SHAW; bathe BELL; keep MASON conj.; back 't' GIFFORD
- SIMONIDES COXETER; Duk. BELL; 2 Court. GIFFORD
- 108 precedent Spelled 'president' in BELL, the line may hint that Eugenia has (inappropriately, in one moral paradigm) 'presided' over her husband by turning him in; see I.1.304.

Enter Eugenia, with Lisander [as a] prisoner, [and] a Guard

- SIMONIDES
Eugenia, come.—Command a second guard
85 To bring Cleanthes in. We'll not sit long;
My stomach strives to dinner. [Exit a Guard]
- EUGENIA
Now, servants—may a lady be so bold
To call your power so low?
- SIMONIDES A mistress may;
She can make all things low; then in that language
There can be no offence.
- 90 EUGENIA The time's now come
Of manumissions; take him into bonds,
And I am then at freedom.
- SECOND COURTIER This the man?
He hath left of late to feed on snakes;
His beard's turned white again.
- FIRST COURTIER
95 Is't possible these gouty legs danced lately,
And shattered in a galliard?
- EUGENIA Jealousy
And fear of death can work strange prodigies.
- SECOND COURTIER
The nimble fencer this, that made me tear
And traverse 'bout the chamber?
- SIMONIDES Ay, and gave me
100 Those elbow-healths, the hangman take him for't!

- They had almost fetched my heart out; the Dutch veny
I swallowed pretty well, but the half-pike
Had almost peppered me; but had I took Long sword, I had cast my lungs out.
A flourish. Enter the Duke [and Executioner]
- SECOND COURTIER Peace, the Duke. 105
- DUKE
Nay, take your seats. Who's that?
- SIMONIDES May't please your highness,
'Tis old Lisander.
- DUKE
And brought in by his wife: a worthy precedent
Of one that no way would offend the law,
And should not pass away without remark. 110
[To Lisander] You have been looked for long.
- LISANDER But never fit
To die till now, my lord; my sins and I
Have been but newly parted, much ado
I had to get them leave me, or be taught
That difficult lesson how to learn to die. 115
I never thought there had been such an act,
And 'tis the only discipline we are born for;
All studies as are are but as circular lines,
And death the centre where they must all meet.—
I now can look upon thee, erring woman, 120
And not be vexed with jealousy; on young men,
And no way envy their delicious health,

125-5.1.135.3 And...him This passage in BELL presents a cluster of editorial problems:

Though it is impossible to say why BELL's text takes this form, the reconstruction in the text column reflects the hypothesis that an anticipatory stage direction at the left margin of 5.1.127-30 in the manuscript copy for BELL was twice interpreted as part of the text: that is, 1) what BELL gives as a speech heading ('Hip.') may have been part of the marginal entry 'Cleanthes Guard', since the three enter together a few lines later; and 2) the word guard at the end of the next line ('tis still guard') repeats the final word of the same direction. At the same time, a short speech of the Duke's, possibly in the margin of the copy, has been printed in the midst of these lines; see note to l. 128-9.

126 determined BELL (determined), which suggests four syllables.

128 SIMONIDES Your THIS EDITION (Taylor); Hip. Your BELL; Eug. Your COXETER+.

All editions give the speech to Eugenia, though her name appears nowhere in this vicinity in BELL.

129 DUKE COXETER (after 5.1.135); Duke—BELL. BELL's 'Duke' is not clearly marked as a speech heading (see photoquote above), nor is there a clear place to situate it within the dialogue. COXETER and all later editions place the short speech after 'mean time' (l. 135); the version here interprets it as an interruption and maintains its location in BELL. Since the short speech appears at a moment when BELL may be confusing the text and marginal notations of its copy, the short speech may have been a later addition. Whenever or wherever it appeared in the hypothetical manuscript copy, the speech raises questions crucial to an interpretation of the Duke and his political agency. The Duke explicitly avoids intervention in this trial scene (see ll. 159-61), at least until l. 245. But he does pronounce a parallel execution order at 4.2.180.

131 good THIS EDITION; guard BELL; cared GIFFORD; grace TAYLOR conj. The emendation here hypothesizes that the compositor mistakenly substituted the similar word 'guard' from the anticipatory stage direction typeset in the previous line (right margin) of BELL. See photoquote above.

132 'em THIS EDITION (Taylor); me BELL. Without this emendation (which hypothesizes the transposition of two letters in BELL), the pronoun problem seems to require the rearrangement of several speech headings; most editions, following GIFFORD, assign "'Tis still...heaven' to Lisander and resume Simonides's speech with "The court...". COXETER and MASON simply delete "'Tis still...die'.

134 mittimus a warrant from the court sending a convict to prison (legal term)

Pleasure, and strength, all which were once mine OWN,

And mine must be theirs one day.

DUKE [to Eugenia and judges] You have tamed him.
SIMONIDES

125 And know how to dispose him; that, my liege, Hath been before determined. [To Lisander] You confess

Yourself of full age?

LISANDER Yes, and prepared to inherit—

SIMONIDES Your place above—

DUKE [to Executioner] Away to death with him.

130 SIMONIDES Of which the hangman's strength
Shall put him in possession. 'Tis still good
To take 'em willing and in mind to die.
And such are, when the earth grows weary of them,
Most fit for heaven; the court shall make his mittimus
And send him thither presently.

[Exit Lisander and Guard]

135 'T'h' mean time—

Enter a Guard with Cleanthes, Hippolita weeping after him

So, see, another person brought to the bar.

FIRST COURTIER The arch-malefactor.

SECOND COURTIER

The grand offender, the most refractory
To all good orders; 'tis Cleanthes, he—

SIMONIDES

That would have sons grave fathers ere their fathers
Be sent unto their graves. 140

DUKE There will be expectation

In your severe proceedings against him,
His act being so capital—

SIMONIDES

Fearful and bloody;
Therefore we charge these women leave the court,
Lest they should sound to hear it.

EUGENIA

I in expectation 145

Of a most happy freedom. Exit

HIPPOLITA

I with the apprehension
Of a most sad and desolate widowhood. Exit

138 offender COXETER; offenders BELL. COXETER's emendation either captures the rhetorical spirit of the passage, or produces one. Alternatively, with the emendation in l. 139, BELL's sentence makes sense and could be modernized as follows: "The grand offender's the most refractory | to all good orders. 'Tis Cleanthes...."

refractory rebellious, unyielding

139 all COXETER; call BELL

139-41 'tis...graves Simonides and the Courtiers often finish or continue each other's sentences; the collaborative quality of their discourse (the ways in which any given speech cannot be said to be 'characteristic' of a particular character) makes reassigning speeches necessarily tentative in cases where speech headings seem to be inappropriately attached. See l. 3. The issue of character exchangeability extends to Creon/Cleanthes (5.1.374-81), and, most significantly, to Cleanthes/Simonides/Courtiers (5.1.267).

142 proceedings COXETER; pooceedings BELL

143 capital BELL (Capitall). BELL's capitalization may inscribe an orthographic pun.

145 sound THIS EDITION; stand BELL; start MASON; SWOON GIFFORD+. sound = faint. The emendation is supported by Eugenia's and Hippolita's swoonings at the reversal of the situation later in the scene (ll. 314.1 and 336.1, respectively); at l. 314.1, BELL uses the form 'sounds'. If this emendation is correct, the manuscript copy for BELL may have read 'swond' (TAYLOR conj.) or 'soud'. The only rationale for BELL's stand seems to be the meaning 'have the opportunity' (OED, v., 16c).

145, 146 I i.e., I ['leave the court']

Act 5 Scene 1

A new way to please you.

FIRST COURTIER
We bring him to the bar.

SECOND COURTIER
Hold up your hand, sir.

CLEANTHES
More reverence to the place than to the persons.
150 To the one, I offer up a palm
Of duty and obedience, showed as to heaven,
Imploring justice, which was never wanting
Upon that bench whilst there our fathers sat.
But unto you, my hand's contracted thus,
155 As threat'ning vengeance against murderers,
For they that kill in thought shed innocent blood.—
With pardon to your highness; too much passion
Made me forget your presence and the place
I now am called to.

DUKE
160 All our majesty
And power we have to pardon or condemn
Is now conferred on them.

SIMONIDES [to Cleantes]
And these we'll use
Little to thine advantage.

CLEANTHES
I expect it,
And as to these I look no mercy from,
And, much less, shame to intreat it, I thus now
165 Submit me to the emblems of your power—I mean
The sword and bench—but, my most reverend judges,
Ere you proceed to sentence, for I know
You have given me lost, will you resolve me one thing?

FIRST COURTIER
So it be briefly questioned.

SECOND COURTIER
Show your honour;
Day spends itself apace.

CLEANTHES
170 My lords, it shall.
Resolve me, then: where are your filial tears,
Your mourning habits and sad hearts become,
That should attend your father's funeral?
Though the strick law—which I will not accuse,
175 Because a subject—snatched away their lives,
It doth not bar you to lament their deaths.
Or if you cannot spare one sad suspire,
It doth not bid you laugh them to their graves,
Lay subtle trains to antedate their years,
180 To be the sooner seized of their estates.
O time of age, where's that Aeneas now
Who, letting all his jewels to the flames,
Forgetting country, kindred, treasure, friends,
Fortunes, and all things save the name of son,
185 Which you so much forget—godlike Aeneas,
Who took his bedrid father on his back,
And with that sacred load (to him no burden)
Hewed out his way through blood, through fire,
Through even all the armed streets of bright-burning Troy,
Only to save a father?

SIMONIDES
190 We have no leisure now
To hear lessons read from Virgil; we are past school,
And all this time thy judges.

150 a palm Many editions insert a word to complete this line metrically, noting the apparent error in the next line; GIFFORD, e.g., has '[spreading] palm'. But BELL's 'howdu s' in the next line provides little help in supplementing a perceived deficit in this one.

151 showed as COXETER; fhowdu s BELL; as GIFFORD; showed [th]us SHAW

153 there BELL (their) our THIS EDITION (Taylor); own BELL. 'Owr' and 'owre' are possible spellings of our in the period; the emendation hypothesizes that the compositor exchanged two very similar words.

159 our COXETER; one BELL

163 as...from i.e., as to these judges, from [whom] I expect no mercy from BELL; from them COXETER

164 shame THIS EDITION (Taylor); fhowne BELL; mean GIFFORD+

165 to MASON; not in BELL. BELL's spacing between words is not uniform, and it may be significant that there is slightly more space between BELL's 'me' and 'the', possibly indicating that a word was thought missing, or fell out of the forme, though there is not room for two letters.

169 honour respect, high esteem (i.e. to the court). DYCE emends to 'humour'.

170 shall i.e., shall ['be briefly questioned']

171-2 are...become have...gone. (Modern English would say 'what has become of...')

173-97 For much of BELL's p. 64/14^v, some of the types have apparently tilted themselves in the forme so that, in all copies consulted, many words and letters, especially in Cleanthes's speech on Aeneas, are printed at unusual angles. There is a less severe occurrence on BELL's p. 39/F4.

173 father's funeral BELL (fathers funeral). Editions have suggested a range of possibilities: Father's Funerals COXETER; fathers' funerals COLERIDGE; fathers' funeral SHAW.

174 strick swift, rapid (said of water, and thus resonating with the mode of execution); but also strict (inescapable, severe). BELL's spelling strick could be used for either word; all other editions modernize unnecessarily to strict, losing the resonance of the law's rapidity/haste/prematurity.

176 you MASON; them BELL

177 suspire sigh

179 Lay subtle trains create clever schemes, traps

180 seized BELL's spelling (ceal'd), a possible seventeenth-century spelling of seized, may nevertheless also carry the added resonance (not entirely intelligible syntactically) of 'stopped': the lives of the fathers have apparently ceased; the lives of the courtiers should cease (because of their actions); the courtiers should cease to inherit their fathers' estates, etc.

181 Aeneas This episode, in which Aeneas carries his father Anchises from Troy as it is being burned and conquered by the Greeks, is recounted in Book II of Virgil's Aeneid. Cleanthes's retelling effaces Aeneas's attention to his own son, whom he leads by the hand, and his wife, whom he returns to the burning city to find when she is left behind.

185 godlike COXETER; goe like BELL. The emendation (made in all editions except SHAW) is supported by the fact that Aeneas was the son of a goddess, and it addresses the problem of BELL's unusual syntax here. Nevertheless, a case could be made for retaining 'go like' in the sense of 'be guided by; follow the example of; conduct yourself as', or even 'walk, proceed (out of Troy) as' Aeneas did.

188-9 Hewed...even Following GIFFORD, several editions maintain BELL's third through at the end of l. 188 and add arms, since BELL's line seems to lack a syllable, in the midst of a speech that closely adheres to iambic pentameter. THIS EDITION relinesates but does not add words to BELL's text.

SECOND COURTIER 'Tis fit
That we proceed to sentence.

FIRST COURTIER You are the mouth,
And now 'tis fit to open.

SIMONIDES Justice indeed
195 Should ever be close-eared, and open-mouthed;
That is, to hear him little, and speak much.
Lo, then, Cleanthes, there is none can be
A good son and a bad subject, for if princes
Be called the peoples' fathers, then the subjects
200 Are all his sons, and he that flouts the prince
Doth disobey his father; there you're gone.

FIRST COURTIER
And not to be recovered.

SIMONIDES And again—

SECOND COURTIER
If he be gone once call him not again.

SIMONIDES
I say: again, this act of thine expresses 205 A double disobedience: as our princes
Are fathers, so they are our sovereigns too,
And he that doth rebel against sovereignty
Doth commit treason in the height of degree,
And now thou art quite gone.

FIRST COURTIER Our brother in commission
210 Hath spoke his mind both learnedly and neatly,
And I can add but little; howsoever,
It shall send him packing.
He that begins a fault that wants example
Ought to be made example for the fault.

CLEANTHES
215 A fault? No longer can I hold myself
To hear vice upheld and virtue thrown down.
A fault, judge! Then I desire, where it lieth—
In those that are my judges or in me.
Heaven, stand on my side; pity, love and duty—

SIMONIDES
220 Where are they, sir, who sees them but yourself?

CLEANTHES Not you, and I am sure
You never had the gracious eyes to see them.
You think you arraign me, but I hope
To sentence you at the bar.

SECOND COURTIER That would show brave.

CLEANTHES
225 This were the judgement seat, we now would try
The heaviest crimes that ever made up
Unnaturalness in humanity.
You are found foul and guilty by a jury
Made of your fathers' curses, which have brought 230 Vengeance impending on you, and I now
Am forced to pronounce judgement on my judges.
The common laws of reason and of nature
Condemn you ipso facto; you are parricides,
And if you marry will beget the liar
235 Who, when you're grown to full maturity,
Will hurry you their fathers to their graves.
Like traitors, you take counsel from the living;
Of upright judgement you would rob the bench—

194–5 Justice... open-mouthed (rewriting the commonplace depiction of Justice as blind)

197 Lo BELL (Low)

198–201 princes... father 'The King towards his people is rightly compared to a father of children, and to a head of a bodie composed of diuers members' (King James I, The Trve Lawe of free Monarchies, 1598, reprinted 1616). BELL reads 'peoples'; because early modern English orthography and pronunciation did not distinguish between singular and plural possessive, this could be either 'people's' or 'peoples'. The latter, chosen here, is in agreement with the plural 'princes' and 'fathers', under the assumption that in patriarchal discourse like James's one people could only have one father. The fluctuation between the singular and plural 'princes' of 198 and 200 is the crux of the political question the play wrestles with here: how many fathers/princes/authorities does one have? Is primary devotion owed to the political father, or the familial father? (See also the ambiguity of 'they', l. 206.)

199 peoples' BELL (peoples); People's MASON; people's GIFFORD+

201 gone undone, ruined

202 recovered This spelling (BELL's) would normally indicate a four-syllable pronunciation (as opposed to 'recover'd' or 'recovered'), but the line works metrically with three. See l. 336 ('feared').

207 against BELL; 'gainst GIFFORD

220 BELL's unpunctuated line might be interpreted as two sentences: 'Where are they, sir? Who sees them but yourself?' See 2.2.135–6.

225 This... seat i.e., 'if this [the prisoner's bar or dock where I now stand] were the judges' bench'. To clarify this use of the subjunctive, COXETER emends to read: 'Were this the Judgment Seat, ...'

we now would try THIS EDITION; we now BELL; we stand at now COXETER; we [k]now SHAW; were one to try now TAYLOR conj. (were one to try now). THIS EDITION's conjecture, admittedly unsupported by any words present in BELL, has the advantages of 1) supplying an iambic foot to what may be an incomplete line, and 2) completing the sentence in a way that seems compatible with the context. Like TAYLOR's conjecture, THIS EDITION's reading could be explained by compositor eyeskip ('we nowe would trie').

232 common laws English common law (as opposed to more recent statutory law) was said to be based on established ancient principles of nature, God, and reason. Old Law was probably written and first performed at a time of great controversy over the primacy of common law; in November 1616, James I dismissed the prominent jurist Edward Coke from the King's Bench for his defence of common law.

233 ipso facto 'by the fact itself'

234 liar BELL (lyar); like MASON+. Though the singular noun is somewhat dissonant in relation to the plurals around it ('you', 'parricides', 'their'), the text has elsewhere not been consistent about this kind of agreement (compare ll. 198–201). Another possibility: 'liars'.

- 249–50 I...effects In the right margin opposite these two lines BELL has 'Recorders. | Old men.' This may be an anticipatory stage direction (though it directly precedes the actual entrance direction), or it may have functioned simply to highlight for the book-holder an important music cue and entrance.
- 251.1–2 Music...appear This direction emends and fills out BELL's stage direction in the text and supplements it with material from the marginal notation (see note to ll. 249–50). BELL reads 'Mufick, Sons and the old men appear' and thus seems to call for the appearance of additional 'sons' who do not elsewhere appear on stage in this scene. This seems unlikely (though not impossible) from the perspective of casting, and the Duke's pointed reuniting of 'lads' and fathers at l. 257 also suggests sons who are already on stage. The mixed font of BELL's stage direction may provide additional support for SHAW's emendation.
- 251.1.1 recorders See 2.1.146.1. sounds SHAW; Sons BELL. See previous note.
- 252 talks BELL; walks TAYLOR conj.
- 254 ill-entreated ill-treated
- 257 [to...men] Alternatively, the Duke may speak this line jokingly to the young men onstage.
- 267 FIRST COURTIER THIS EDITION (following NEWBERRY [see below]); Clean. BELL. All other editions attribute the speech to Simonides; while such an attribution would support a certain view of the play (making the contrast of Simonides and Cleanthes pivotal at this climactic reversal), this edition construes ll. 265–9 as an exchange between the two Courtiers. This reading is supported by evidence of one apparently seventeenth-century reader's corrections in NEWBERRY; the reader has crossed out BELL's 'Clean.', written in and crossed out 'Simon.', and written in a word ending in 'r.' (the page has been cropped). The surviving 'r' suggests the First Courtier. (See Masten, 'Family Values', and following notes.) In several senses BELL's attribution of the speech to Cleanthes seems utterly wrong: Cleanthes has already indicated that he's seen his father (ll. 252–6); the speech is prose, but he speaks verse elsewhere; the lines seem uncharacteristic of his portrayal thus far in the play as the archetypal Good Son. Yet, given his history of theatricality (his staging of his father's funeral before the Duke in 2.1) and his feigned performance of mixed emotions there ('We'll seem to weep, and seem to joy withal' [1.1.470]), the speech heading in BELL may be comprehensible in the terms of the play—though it radically destabilizes an earlier sense of Cleanthes's character (and/or perhaps our modern sense of 'character'). If Cleanthes does speak these lines, the play may be said to suggest that none of the sons resists the euthanasia law and the threat to filial piety it represents. Any reading of BELL here, then, always-already depends on one's interpretation of the play, and one's definition of 'characteristic' speech in a play that has already worked to undermine that definition. When is Cleanthes 'seeming'?

- 270 CLEANTHES NEWBERRY (Cle:) (handwritten marginal correction), COXETER; Sim. BELL. In NEWBERRY, a reader has circled and crossed out BELL's 'Sim.' To continue the argument in the previous note: the assignment of that speech to Cleanthes may be only a temporary suggestion of doubt toward the character Cleanthes, for this speech, assigned in BELL to Simonides, seems to belong to Cleanthes, since its speaker asks to be returned to trial. It seems probable, then, that a performance would have reassigned these speeches as they appear 'corrected' in NEWBERRY and in THIS EDITION. But it is also possible that for at least one seventeenth-century compositor and probably a number of BELL's readers there was the possibility of another interpretation of the play. (In most of the other surviving copies of BELL, no change is made.) Here then is BELL's version of the passage, with the original assignments:

- 240 Experience and discretion snatched away
From the earth's face—turn all into disorder,
Imprison virtue and enfranchise vice,
And put the sword of justice into the hands
Of boys and madmen.
- SIMONIDES Well, well, have you done, sir?
- CLEANTHES I have spoke my thoughts.
- SIMONIDES Then I'll begin and end.
- 245 DUKE 'Tis time I now begin
Where your commission ends.
Cleanthes, you come from the bar.
Because I know you're severally disposed,
I here invite you to an object will
- 250 No doubt work in you contrary effects.
Music!
- Music [of] recorders sounds and the old men [including Leonides, Lisander, and Creon] appear
- CLEANTHES Pray heaven, I dream not; sure he moves, talks comfortably
As joy can wish a man. If he be changed
Far above from me, he is not ill-entreated;
- His face doth promise fullness of content,
And glory hath a part in't.
- LEONIDES O, my son.
- DUKE [to the old men]
You that can claim acquaintance with these lads Talk freely.
- SIMONIDES I can see none there that's worth
One hand to you from me.
- DUKE [to Cleanthes]
These are thy judges and, by their grave law,
I find thee clear, but these delinquents guilty. 260
You must change places, for 'tis so decreed,
Such just preeminence hath thy goodness gained,
Thou art the judge now; they, the men arraigned.
- FIRST COURTIER Here's fine dancing, gentlemen. 265
SECOND COURTIER Is thy father amongst them?
- FIRST COURTIER O, a pox! I saw him the first thing I looked on! Alive again—'sight, I believe now a father hath as many lives as a mother.
- CLEANTHES 'Tis full as blessed as 'tis wonderful! 270
O, bring me back to the same law again;
I am fouler than all these. Seize on me, officers,
And bring me to new sentence.

- DUKE What's all this?
- CLEANTHES
A fault not to be pardonèd;
275 Unnaturalness is but sun's shadow to it.
- SIMONIDES
I am glad of that; I hope the case may alter
And I turn judge again.
- DUKE Name your offence.
- CLEANTHES
That I should be so vile
As once to think you cruel.
- DUKE Is that all?
- 280 'Twas pardonèd ere confessèd. You that have sons,
If they be worthy, here may challenge them.
- CREON
I should have one amongst them, had he had grace
To have retainèd that name.
- SIMONIDES (kneels) I pray you, father—
- CREON
That name, I know, hath been long since forgot.
- 285 SIMONIDES [aside] I find but small comfort in rememb'ring it now.
- DUKE
Cleanthes, take your place with these grave fathers,
And read what in that table is inscribed.
[He gives Cleanthes a table]
Now set these at the bar,
290 And read, Cleanthes, to the dread and terror
Of disobedience and unnatural blood.
[Simonides rises]
- CLEANTHES [reading the table] 'It is decreed by the grave and learned council of Epire that no son and heir shall be held capable of his inheritance at the age of one-295 and-twenty, unless he be at that time as mature in obedience, manners and goodness.'
- SIMONIDES
Sure I shall never be at full age then,
Though I live to an hundred years, and that's nearer by twenty than the last statute allowed.
- 300 FIRST COURTIER A terrible act.
- CLEANTHES [reading] 'Moreover is enacted, that all sons aforesaid, whom either this law or their own grace shall reduce into the true method of duty, virtue, and affection, relate their trial and approbation from 305 Cleanthes, the son of Leonides'—from me, my lord?
- DUKE
From none but you as fullest; proceed, sir.
- CLEANTHES [reading] 'Whom, for his manifest virtues, we make such judge and censure of youth and the absolute reference of life and manners.'
- SIMONIDES
310 This is a brave world! When a man should be Selling land, he must be learning manners.
Is't not, my masters?
Enter Eugenia
- EUGENIA
What's here to do? My suitors at the bar,
The old bawd shines again—O miserable!
- 273 DUKE NEWBERRY (Duk) (handwritten marginal correction), SHAW; Clean. BELL; Sim. COXETER. (See previous notes.)
- 274 CLEANTHES COXETER; not in BELL. In BELL, these lines continue a speech there assigned to Cleanthes, the first line of which is here reassigned to the Duke. (See previous note.)
- 281 here may challenge them COXETER; heare my ~ then BELL
- 282 CREON COXETER; Cle. BELL. BELL assigns both this speech and
l. 284 to Cle. BELL's usual speech-heading abbreviations are Clean. for Cleanthes and Cre. for Creon. The first speech is more appropriate to Creon, though the second could be spoken by either man.
- 284 CREON COXETER; Cle. BELL. See previous note.
- 285 aside On asides, see I.I.222–3.
- 287 place COXETER; places BELL
- fathers COXETER; father BELL. Some copies of BELL have an unidentifiable mark—perhaps a broken piece of type—that can only be hypothesized to have been an s. In any other context within BELL, the mark would be taken as an accidental blotch or an apostrophe. None of the copies consulted has s.
- 288 table tablet (See 2.I.I19.)
- 293 council council (as Parliament/Senate), or counsel (those who give advice) (I.I.142, I.I.152)
- 295 mature MASON; nature BELL. While MASON's emendation seems more appropriate to the law's grammar and context, the word nature appears repeatedly in the play and is referenced only a few lines before, also in connection with obedience (l. 291– 5.I.291.1). Though not self-evidently grammatical, nature may work in this context ('as nature' = 'as a person should naturally be') and may suggest at least one seventeenth-century reader's sense of the equivalence of the two terms in this context. That is, natural sons and mature ones will behave the same way in a patriarchal context.
- 301 CLEANTHES COXETER; not in BELL. In BELL the speech appears to continue the First Courtier's speech, but it is marked by beginning on a new line, and the speech later identifies itself with Cleanthes.
- 301–5 Moreover ... Leonides The syntax of the new law in BELL is either deliberately complicated in a way that does not seem to make syntactic sense or is not registered accurately in the printed text. (Intervening editorially at such an important point in the play might thus alter the politics of the play's outcome.)
The emendations suggested to these lines in the notes below hypothesize that, in the midst of complicated legal syntax, BELL's compositor may have unnecessarily repeated several words, which, deleted here, make for a more coherent new law. Still, it is impossible to know whether the text was intended to read smoothly or is (again) imitating and perhaps parodying legal discourse (see I.I.139–63). If the new law is 'better' than the old law within the moral scheme the play delineates, it might be expected not to be parodic in form.
- 302–3 grace shall COXETER (subst.); grace, whom it fhall BELL; with it TAYLOR conj. All editions delete BELL's 'whom it'; see previous note.
- 304 affection, relate THIS EDITION; affection; and relate BELL; affection, [shall appear before us] and relate GIFFORD; affection appear before us and TAYLOR conj.
relate ... from receive the approval of relate refer to (a legal term, probably used incorrectly)
- 314 old bawd shines the old man lives. Bawd could refer to a person of either sex who arranges sexual activity for another; here it may suggest that Eugenia is figuring Lisander as someone whose age has in effect procured her suitors/sexual partners (see scenes 2.2 and 3.2). See next note.
bawd BELL (baud); Bard COXETER; Beard D (conj. in note to MASON); band GIFFORD+. Alternatively, GIFFORD's 'band' (meaning 'group of old men') could be adopted, interpreting BELL's baud as a case of u/n type-inversion; see I.I.380, 5.I.57.
More extensive emendations of the line have been proposed: The old revived MASON conj.; The old bald sires DYCE conj.

318 the BELL; their MASON+. Sentences noting the legal status and responsibilities of 'the husband' in the abstract are standard legal discourse in the period. While MASON's emendation brings some of the sentence's numbers into agreement, no editor has opted to pursue this numerical logic to give their plural 'husbands' plural 'deaths'. The number of husbands is precisely what the law here seeks to regulate; thus, one editor's standardizing emendation may be another's opportunity to note instability in the law's rhetoric. The same can be said of the next word in BELL ('husbands'), where a modern edition must make a decision between a singular- or plural-possessive form of the word in this and the following line. On the apostrophe, see 3.1.81, 5.1.198–201.

330 judged COXETER; judge BELL

332 judged COXETER; judge BELL

332.1 Enter Hippolita In the right margin opposite lines 330–2, BELL has duplicate entrance directions for Hippolita: Hippolita. | Enter Hip.

333 prevent prepare you for (literally, 'come before'), with a theological meaning: provide spiritual guidance (usually said of God)

341 May FOLGER (handwritten marginal correction), COXETER; My BELL

346.1 still THIS EDITION; not in BELL

347.1–4 Enter... wedding THIS EDITION. This direction is the second of BELL's two extensive, consecutive stage directions describing this large entrance (see Stage Directions list), to which is added (from the first) the 'one carrying' the bridecake. BELL reads:

The second direction is adopted here because it is more fully descriptive, but it is important to note that the two directions present different orders for this procession, and thus each might emphasize a particular interpretation of the episode. Some reasons for BELL's doubling of this direction: 1) The direction was revised (with whatever interpretive intentions/effects) but the first version was not clearly deleted from the manuscript from which BELL was typeset; 2) More fancifully, the text from which BELL was set included the first large direction at the bottom of a page; since the timing and conduct of such a large entrance was clearly important in performance, the text reinscribed a near-duplicate version at the top of the following page, and, though no change of page is at issue in BELL, the compositors simply followed the duplication of the text that was their model. However it came about, this is not a textual 'problem'; it gives BELL's reader more, rather than less, information about the performance(s) of the play. BELL also includes here what may have been a book-holder's brief marginal notation (Clo. &c.) in the left margin of the first stage direction.

347.3 music musicians

348 crowd on press on; punning on crowd = fiddle

She [swoons]

DUKE

Read the law over to her; 'twill awake her.

315

'Tis one deserves small pity.

CLEANTHES [reading] 'Lastly, it is ordained that all such wives now whatsoever that shall design the husband's death to be soon rid of them and entertain suitors in their husbands' lifetime'—

320

SIMONIDES You had best read that a little louder, for, if anything, that will bring her to herself again, and find her tongue.

CLEANTHES [reading] 'Shall not presume, on the penalty of our heavy displeasure, to marry within ten years after'—

325

EUGENIA [reviving]

That law's too long by nine years and a half.

I'll take my death upon't; so shall most women.

CLEANTHES [reading] 'And those incontinent women so offending to be judged and censured by Hippolita, wife to Cleanthes.'

330

EUGENIA

Of all the rest, I'll not be judged by her.

Enter Hippolita

CLEANTHES

Ah, here she comes. Let me prevent thy joys,

Prevent them but in part, and hide the rest;

Thou hast not strength enough to bear them else.

335

HIPPOLITA

Leonides—

She faints

CLEANTHES

I feared it all this while.

I knew 'twas past thy power, Hippolita.

What contrariety is in women's blood?

One faints for spleen and anger; she, for grace.

DUKE

Of sons and wives we see the worst and best:

340

May future ages yield Hippolitas

Many, but few like thee, Eugenia.

Let no Simonides henceforth have a fame,

But all blessed sons live in Cleanthes' name.

Music [within]

Ha, what strange kind of melody was that?

345

Yet give it entrance whatsoever it be;

Music [still]

This day is all devout to liberty.

Enter Clown and Wench, the rest [—Cook, Butler,

Taylor, Bailiff—] with the old women, the Clown's

Wife, music, and one carrying a bridecake, to the wedding

CLOWN Fiddlers, crowd on, crowd on; let no man lay a block in your way. Crowd on, I say.

DUKE Stay the crowd awhile; let's know the reason of this jollity.

350

CLEANTHES [to Clown] Sirrah, do you know where you are?

CLOWN Yes, sir, I am here, now here, and now here again, sir.

- 355 LISANDER Your hat's too high-crowned, the Duke in presence.
 CLOWN The Duke (as he is my sovereign) I do give him two crowns for it, and that's equal change all the world over. As I am lord of the day (being my marriage day the second) I do advance bonnet.—Crowd on afore!
- 360 LEONIDES Good sir, a few words if you'll vouchsafe 'em. Or will you be forced?
 CLOWN Forced? I would the Duke himself would say so.
 DUKE I think he dares, sir, and does: if you stay not, you shall be forced.
- 365 CLOWN I think so, my lord, and good reason too. Shall not I stay when your grace says I shall? I were unworthy to be a bridegroom in any part of your highness' dominions, then. Will it please you to taste of the wedlock courtesy?
- 370 DUKE
 O, by no means, sir; you shall not deface
 So fair an ornament for me.
 CLOWN If your grace please to be cake-ated, say so.
 CLEANTHES or CREON And which might be your fair bride, sir?
- 375 CLOWN [showing Wench] This is my two-for-one that must be uxor uxoris, the remedy doloris, and the very syceum amoris.
 DUKE And hast thou any else?
 CLOWN I have an older, my lord, for other uses.
 CLEANTHES
 My lord, I do observe a strange decorum here:
 These that do lead this day of jollity
 Do march with music and most mirthful cheeks;
 Those that do follow, sad and woefully,
 Nearer the haviour of a funeral
 Than a wedding.
- 385 DUKE 'Tis true. Pray, expound that, sir.
 CLOWN As the destiny of the day falls out, my lord, one goes out to wedding; another goes to hanging. And your grace in the due consideration shall find 'em much alike: the one hath the ring upon her finger; the other, a halter about her neck. 'I take thee, Beatrice', says the bridegroom; 'I take thee, Agatha', says the hangman, and both say together, 'to have and to hold till death do part us.'
- 395 DUKE This is not yet plain enough to my understanding.
 CLOWN If further your grace examine it, you shall find I show myself a dutiful subject and obedient to the law—myself (with these, my good friends and your good subjects), our old wives, whose days are ripe and their lives forfeit to the law. Only myself, more forward than the rest, am already provided of my second choice.
- 400 DUKE
 O, take heed sir; you'll run yourself into danger.
 If the law finds you with two wives at once,
 There's a shrewd præmunire.
- 405 CLOWN I have taken leave of the old, my lord; I have nothing to say to her. She's going to sea; your grace knows whither better than I do. She has a strong wind
- 358 equal change (punning on kinds of English coins: a sovereign [worth 10 or 11 shillings at the time of the play's first performances] was equal to two crowns [at 5 shillings apiece.])
 360 advance bonnet (punning on raising his hat, moving forward, and advancing a sum of money [bonnet = crown])
 370 wedlock courtesy wedding cake. Courtesy was also a legal term describing a man's right to hold certain kinds of property belonging to his wife after her death.
 373 cake-ated BELL (cacated). cake-ated = served with cake (the only known use of this term), possibly with a pun on cack (= shit). The spelling of THIS EDITION departs from the editorial tradition (cacated) for the sake of aural intelligibility. There is no reason to accept OED's spelling, since this is OED's only citation, and it gets many details wrong in this instance.
 374 CLEANTHES or CREON THIS EDITION; Clo. BELL; Duke. COXETER. In BELL, there are three consecutive speeches (ll. 373, 374–5, 376–8) attributed to Clo., BELL's standard speech-prefix abbreviation for 'Clown'. This emendation argues that the prefix here is an error for Cle. or Cre.; compare ll. 282–4, 381. Alternatively, as COXETER suggests, the conversation might instead be imagined to remain entirely between Duke and Clown at this point.
 376 two-for-one the odds of Clown's 'venter' with the servants, but suggesting the legal term venter itself (3.1.177)
 377 uxor uxoris 'wife of wives' doloris 'sadness'
 377–8 syceum amoris probably 'fig of love', with a pun on syceum/fig (= vulva)
 381 CLEANTHES BELL (Cle.). Elsewhere BELL's speech heading 'Cle.' also seems to denote Creon (5.1.282), who might alternatively speak the speech. (See l. 374.) Especially (but not only) if spoken by Cleantes, this speech resonates with his staging of Leonides's funeral earlier—itself a hybrid production of joy and sadness, observing 'a strange decorum'.
 385 haviour manner, conduct
 391 Beatrice (apparently Wench's given name)
 404 præmunire penalty. Præmunire was the offence, originally, of prosecuting in a foreign court a suit that could be tried in England and, eventually, of maintaining or defending papal jurisdiction in England. Thus, though the law originated with Richard II, there may be a reference here to Henry VIII, whose split from the Roman church led to the second meaning of this term and was centred on the question of multiple wives. The play All is True (Henry VIII), which uses the term and was performed in 1613, had emphasized this.
 407 whither BELL (whether). 'Whether' might also be a meaning here.
 407–8 strong wind... poop 1) she's ready to set sail for execution. But there is also the strong sense of excretory puns here (wind = flatulence; poop = rear of a ship, also a tooting sound); thus, 2) she's breaking wind. (Poop probably does not carry the modern slang sense of 'faeces'.)

Act 5 Scene 1

An out Law

409 disembogue BELL (disemboge). 1) literally, come out of the mouth of a river into the sea (continuing the reference to execution); 2) discharge like a river (thus continuing the series of excretory puns); 3) a word suggesting disembark and disembowel
 418 venter On venter's multiple meanings, see 3.1.177.
 422 censure sentence, judgement
 426 an if
 429 paints uses cosmetics
 437 edge-tool implement with a sharp, cutting edge (e.g. a sword)
 441 if COXETER; it BELL
 442 give . . . ears listen to him. But also playing on another form of punishment, in which a prisoner's ears were cut off.
 444 church-book (with pun on bible) with her; it stands full in her poop. When you please, let her disembogue.

 COOK And the rest of her neighbours with her, whom we present to the satisfaction of your highness' law. 410
 CLOWN And so we take our leaves and leave them to your highness.—Crowd on!
 DUKE
 Stay, stay, you are too forward. Will you marry, And your wife yet living? 415
 CLOWN Alas, she'll be dead before we can get to church, if your grace would set her in the way. I would dispatch her; I have a venter on't, which would return me, if your highness would make a little more haste, two for one. 420
 DUKE [to the judges]
 Come, my lords, we must sit again, here's a case Craves a most serious censure.
 COOK [to the Clown and other servants]
 Now they shall be dispatched out of the way.
 CLOWN
 I would they were gone once; the time goes away.
 DUKE
 Which is the wife unto the forward bridegroom? 425
 WIFE I am, an it please your grace.
 DUKE
 Trust me, a lusty woman, able-bodied, And well-blooded cheeks.
 CLOWN O, she paints, my lord; she was a chambermaid once, and learnt it of her lady. 430
 DUKE
 Sure, I think she cannot be so old.
 WIFE
 Truly, I think so too, an please your grace.
 CLOWN Two-to-one with your grace of that; she's threescore by the book.
 LEONIDES Peace, sirrah, you're too loud. 435
 COOK Take heed, Gnothoes. If you move the Duke's patience, 'tis an edge-tool; but a word and a blow, he cuts off your head.
 CLOWN Cut off my head? Away, ignorant! He knows it cost more in the hair; he does not use to cut off many such heads as mine. I will talk to him too; if he cut off my head, I'll give him my ears.—I say my wife is at full age for the law; the clerk shall take his oath, and the church-book shall be sworn too. 440
 DUKE [to the judges] My lords, I leave this censure to you. 445
 LEONIDES
 Then, first, this fellow does deserve punishment For offering up a lusty able woman Which may do service to the commonwealth, Where the law craves one impotent and useless.
 CREON
 Therefore, to be severely punishèd 450 For thus attempting a second marriage, His wife yet living.
 LISANDER Nay, to have it trebled, That even the day and instant when he should mourn As a kind husband to her funeral,

455 He leads a triumph to the scorn of it,
Which unseasonable joy ought to be punished
With all severity.

BUTLER The fiddles will be in a foul case too by and by.

LEONIDES

460 Nay, further, it seems he has a venter
Of two-for-one at his second marriage,
Which cannot be but a conspiracy
Against the former.

CLOWN A mess of wise old men.

LISANDER

Sirrah, what can you answer to all these?

465 CLOWN You're good old men and talk as age will give you leave. I would speak with the youthful Duke himself; he and I may speak of things that shall be thirty or forty years after you are dead and rotten. Alas, you are here today and gone to sea tomorrow.

DUKE

470 In troth, sir, then I must be plain with you:
The law that should take away your old wife from
you,

The which I do perceive was your desire,
Is void and frustrate, so for the rest.

There has been since another parliament

475 Has cut it off.

CLOWN I see your grace is disposed to be pleasant.

DUKE

Yes, you might perceive that; I had not else
Thus dallied with your follies.

480 CLOWN I'll talk further with your grace when I come back from church; in the mean time, you know what to do with the old women.

DUKE

Stay, sir, unless in the mean time you mean
I cause a gibbet to be set up in your way
And hang you at your return.

WIFE O gracious prince!

DUKE

485 Your old wives cannot die today by any Law of mine; for aught I can say to 'em,
They may by a new edict bury you,
And then perhaps you pay a new fine too.

CLOWN This is fine indeed.

490 WIFE O gracious prince, may he live a hundred years more.

COOK Your venter is not like to come in today, Gnothoes.

CLOWN Give me the principal back.

COOK Nay, by my troth, we'll venter still, and I'm sure we have as ill a venter of it as you, for we have taken old 495 wives of purpose, where that we had thought to have put away at this market, and now we cannot utter a pennyworth.

DUKE [to Clown]

Well, sirrah, you were best to discharge
Your new charge and take your old one to you.

CLOWN

500 O music, no music, but prove most doleful trumpets;
O bride, no bride, but thou mayst prove a strumpet;

455 triumph 1) the procession of a victorious commander and army through the streets of Rome after an important victory; 2) any public celebration, pageant.

458 case instrument case; legal case; pun on 'female genitals'

463 mess 1) a group of people (usually four) who dine together, especially judges and students at the Inns of Court; 2) a group of people or things; 3) a serving of food. Mess did not yet carry the modern sense of 'disorder'.

468-9 here . . . tomorrow BELL's spacing/spelling ('heere to day and gone to Sea to morrow') may alert a reader to some of the aural puns available here: the punning repetition of to; the expansion of the proverb ('here today, and gone tomorrow'); the possibility of hearing sea as see (going to sea to see the future).

473 frustrate invalid (legal term)—in the usage of a legal commentator, writing about wills: 'the later testament doth make frustrate the former' (Henrie Swinburn, A Briefe Treatise of Testaments and Last Willes, 1590).

474 parliament Lines I.I.I.14 and I.I.I.138 emphasize that the legislature of Epire is a 'senate'; the use of the more English term here emphasizes the play's topical connections to early seventeenth-century English culture and the way it speaks within seventeenth-century discourses of government. The relation of the parliament to the Duke as absolute ruler and national 'father' also re-plays aspects of English debates over the relative power of king and parliament at the time of the play.

483 gibbet gallows

491 venter BELL (venture). This is the only instance in which BELL uses the spelling 'venture' in the context of Clown's wagers; THIS EDITION 'modernizes' it to venter for the same reason that that spelling is retained elsewhere in the text—to keep in circulation its multiple meanings, which are clearly relevant here (see 3.I.I.177).

495 where that it being the case that; in view of the fact that 495-6 where . . . and BELL; that we had thought to have put away at this market, where TAYLOR conj. Given the inverted type in BELL (see following note), TAYLOR'S conjecture is based on the possibility of a miscorrected proof page.

496 put away dispose of, sell and COXETER; end BELL utter sell

500-3 O . . . gone The speech comically rewrites Hieronimo's lament for his murdered son in Act 3 of The Spanish Tragedy:

Oh eies, no eies, but fountains fraught with teares,
Oh life, no life, but liuely fourme of death:
Oh world, no world but masse of publike wrongs,
Confusde and filde, with murder and misdeeds
Oh sacred heauens . . .

First acted in 1592 and repeatedly published thereafter, this popular revenge tragedy was revised at least once (1602) and reprinted often (including an edition in 1618); it is one of the most frequently quoted and parodied plays in early modern English drama.

- 503 hoped COXETER+ (subst.); hope BELL
- 504 no penny, no wedding rewriting the commonplace saying, 'no penny, no paternoster', referring to priests' insisting on payment in return for services; thus: 'if you want something, you must pay for it'.
- 512 grow...reason multiple puns: 1) on time (out-of-season, out-of-date, current); 2) on fruits (grow, date, raisin, and currant [BELL's spelling, not distinguished in the period from 'current']); 3) on unreasonableness (out of reason); 4) on money (currency)
current BELL (currant)
- 514 William Dickins A proverbial figure for someone who loses money in a transaction, Dickins was said to have bought five dishes for twopence and then to have sold six dishes for only a penny.
- 516 plums 1) plums in the modern sense; 2) dried grapes or raisins used in puddings and cakes
- 525 reverend old; but see 5.1.52
- 528 duty's fee's
- 530-1 Such...nowadays i.e., voyages back from the (near) dead. The speech may also allude to Sir Walter Raleigh's return from his last, unsuccessful voyage in the spring of 1618.
- 531-2 1...water BELL; not in COXETER
- 531 too, salt BELL (~,~); two salt ones out DYCE one THIS EDITION; our BELL; my GIFFORD. This emendation is supported by BELL's apparent interchanging of one/our elsewhere in this scene (ll. 11, 159) and adds a Clownish play on numbers.
- 532 two...water eyes, but playing on the saltiness of tears by using fresh to mean 'new, recent' instead of 'unsalty'. See 5.1.561.
- 535 countrymen in this fashion BULLEN; Country men:fashion BELL; Countrymen COXETER
- 537 stand upon terms 1) insist upon conditions (i.e., the terms of the old law); 2) to rely on or attach value to language; 3) to stand (literally) at the boundaries or limits. There is also the possible resonance of term as session of a law court.
- 546 were COXETER; have BELL; had hanged TAYLOR conj. (had hangd)
- O venter, no venter, I have for one now none;
O wife, thy life is saved when I hoped 't'had been gone.—
Case up your fruitless strings, no penny, no wedding;—
Case up thy maidenhead, no priest, no bedding. 505
Avaunt, my venter; it can ne'er be restored,
Till Ag, my old wife, be thrown overboard.
Then come again, old Ag, since it must be so;
Let bride and venter with woeful music go.
- COOK What for the bridecake, Gnothoes? 510
CLOWN
Let it be mouldy now 'tis out-of-season;
Let it grow out of date, current and reason;
Let it be chipped and chopped and given to chickens;
No more is got by that than William Dickins
Got by his wooden dishes. 515
Put up your plums, as fiddlers put up pipes;
The wedding dashed, the bridegroom weeps and wipes.
Fiddlers, farewell, and now, without perhaps,
Put up your fiddles as you put up scraps.
- LISANDER This passion has given some satisfaction yet. My 520 lord, I think you'll pardon him now, with all the rest, so they live honestly with the wives they have.
- DUKE O, most freely; free pardon to all.
- COOK Ay, we have deserved our pardons if we can live 525 honestly with such reverend wives that have no motion in 'em but their tongues.
- WIFE Heaven bless your grace; you're a just prince.
- CLOWN All hopes dashed, the clerk's duty's lost, venter 530 gone, my second wife divorced, and (which is worst) the old one come back again. Such voyages are made nowadays; I will weep, too, salt of one nose, besides these two fountains of fresh water. Your grace had been more kind to your young subjects; heaven bless and mend your laws, that they do not gull your poor 535 countrymen in this fashion. But I am not the first by forty that has been undone by the law; 'tis but a folly to stand upon terms. I take my leave of your grace, as well as mine eyes will give me leave; I would they had been asleep in their beds when they opened 'em to see this day.—Come Ag, come Ag. [Exeunt Clown and Wife] 540
- CREON [to servants] Were not you all my servants?
COOK During your life, as we thought, sir, but our young master turned us away.
- CREON [to Simonides]
How headlong, villain, wert thou in thy ruin?
SIMONIDES I followed the fashion, sir, as other young men 545 did; if you were as we thought you had been, we should ne'er have come for this, I warrant you. We did not feed after the old fashion on beef and mutton and suchlike.
- CREON [to servants] Well, what damage or charge you 550 have run yourselves into by marriage, I cannot help, nor deliver you from your wives; them you must keep.
Yourselves shall again retain to me.

OMNES We thank your lordship for your love, and must thank ourselves for our bad bargains.

[Exeunt servants, wives, and wedding party]

DUKE

555 Cleanthes, you delay the power of law,
To be inflicted on these misgoverned men,
That filial duty have so far transgressed.

CLEANTHES

My lord, I see a satisfaction
Meeting the sentence, even preventing it,
560 Beating my words back in their utterance.
See, sir, there's salt sorrow bringing forth fresh
And new duties (as the sea propagates).

[Simonides and Courtiers kneel]

The elephants have found their joints too; why,
Here's humility able to bind up
565 The punishing hands of the severest masters,
Much more the gentle fathers.

SIMONIDES I had ne'er thought to have been brought so low as my knees again, but since there's no remedy, fathers, reverend fathers, as you ever hope to have good 570 sons and heirs, a handful of pity. We confess we have deserved more than we are willing to receive at your hands, though sons can never deserve too much of their fathers, as shall appear afterwards.

CREON

And what way can you decline your feeding now?
575 You cannot retire to beeves and muttons, sure.

SIMONIDES Alas, sir, you see a good pattern for that; now we have laid by our high and lusty meats and are down to our marrowbones already.

CREON

Well, sir, rise to virtues; we'll bound you now.
[Simonides and Courtiers rise]

580 You that were too weak yourselves to govern,
By others shall be governed.

LISANDER

Cleanthes,
I meet your justice with reconciliation;
If there be tears of faith in woman's breast,
I have received a myriad which confirms me
585 To find a happy renovation.

CLEANTHES [turning to Leonides] Here's virtue's throne,

Which I'll embellish with my dearest jewels
Of love and faith, peace and affection.
This is the altar of my sacrifice,
590 Where daily my devoted knees shall bend.
Age-honoured shrine, time still so love you
That I so long may have you in mine eye,
Until my memory lose your beginning.—
For you, great prince, long may your fame survive,
595 Your justice and your wisdom never die,
Crown of your crown, the blessing of your land
Which you reach to her from your regent's hand.

LEONIDES

O Cleanthes, had you with us tasted
The entertainment of our retirement,
600 Feared and exclaimed on in your ignorance,
You might have sooner died upon the wonder

553 OMNES See 3.1.155.

558 satisfaction 1) an act of compensation or amends (legal term);
2) an act of penance after confession; 3) in Christian theology,
Christ's paying for the sins of the world

559 Meeting ... preventing it encountering ... coming before it. BELL's 'Meeting' was also a possible spelling of meting (= measuring, ascertaining, weighing a judgement). Since mete is also a legal term meaning 'boundaries', audiences might have heard meting as 'limiting' or 'diminishing' here. In any event, meeting probably modifies satisfaction rather than I, though, again, the elliptical syntax might have led audiences to hear Cleanthes expressing his satisfaction.

561 salt sorrow tears

562 as the sea propagates just as the sea expands; or, as the sea creates new life

563 elephants ... joints Elephants were thought to lack knee-joints.

575 beeves plural of beef

577 high and lusty flavorful and hearty (with pun on lust)

578 marrowbones BELL (marry bones). marrowbones = animal bones containing marrow to be eaten (considered 'dainty' [OED]); knees

579 bound you make you leap up like a horse; limit you, set your boundaries

583-4 If ... myriad The speech may refer to Eugenia's repentance or to Lisander's own.

597 regent's ruler's, probably without the more familiar sense of 'temporary or substitute ruler'

605 Viands food

607 fantasies imaginations, perceptions (probably without the sense of 'whim' or 'desire' now usually indicated by this spelling). BELL spells (phantasies).

614 weeds (punning on 'clothing')

616–17 abuse . . . bosom take into our confidence; misrepresent as a result of our secret

618 Cratylus The introduction of a new character with a highly resonant and allusive name at this late point in the play may prompt an audience to a retrospective revision of the play's action. Cratylus was the name of a philosopher (a contemporary of Socrates and teacher of Plato); in Plato's dialogue Cratylus, a discussion of the origins of names and naming, Cratylus argues that all names are naturally appropriate to the things they represent, while Hermogenes maintains that names are entirely the product of convention. There are a number of passages in the dialogue relevant to the play: Socrates's discussion of legislators (lawgivers) as the wise inventors of names; his discussion with Cratylus of the difference between numbers and names ('the number ten at once becomes other than ten if a unit be added or subtracted' [see 3.1]); his discussion of two identical objects, Cratylus and the image of Cratylus, and whether these have the same name. Much of the dialogue is occupied with Socrates's analyses of elaborate etymologies; he argues that letters have been added or subtracted from original terms to create the current versions of words, or he seems to add and subtract letters to make particular names conform with what he takes to be their essence. As such, in addition to its relevance to the play (the Clown's discussions of orthography [Bullox/Pollux, Hiren/Siren, Helen/ell/Ellen]), the introduction of Cratylus may serve as a cautionary note to the modernizing and emending editor who adds to and subtracts letters from an old text to produce a new version of the text (see also 3.1.30 and 5.1.131–6). Socrates's summary of the issue also resonates with Clown's warning not 'to stand upon terms' (5.1.536–7): 'no man of sense will . . . so far trust names or the givers of names as to be confident in any knowledge which condemns himself and other existences to an unhealthy state of reality.' The dialogue as a whole is concerned with the stability or instability of language and its ability to project the essence of a thing; on this, see particularly the note on venter (3.1.177) and, in general, all the notes above.

619–21 travelled . . . languages '[T]he one text is [an] entrance into a network with a thousand entrances; to take this entrance is to aim, ultimately, not at a legal structure of norms and departures, a narrative or poetic Law, but at a perspective (of fragments, of voices from other texts, other codes), whose vanishing point is nonetheless ceaselessly pushed back, mysteriously opened. . . .' (Barthes, S/Z 12). Toward what languages, what voices, does this moment gesture?

622 crown crowning ornament; culmination

623 set it high 1) set the music at a high (and thus exalted) pitch;
2) set the (metaphorical) crown high, in celebration; perhaps
3) set the following text to music.

Than any rage or passion for our loss.

A place at hand we were all strangers in,
So sphered about with music, such delights,

Viands, and attendance, and once a day 605

So cheerèd with a royal visitant,
That oft-times (waking) our unsteady fantasies
Would question whether we yet lived or no,
Or had possession of that paradise
Where angels be the guard.

DUKE Enough, Leonides, 610

You go beyond the praise; we have our end
And all is ended well: we have now seen
The flowers and weeds that grew about our court.

SIMONIDES [aside] If these be weeds, I'm afraid I shall wear none so good again as long as my father lives. 615

DUKE

Only this gentleman we did abuse
With our own bosom; we seemed a tyrant
And he our instrument. Look, 'tis Cratylus,

Discover the Executioner

The man that you supposed had now been travelled,
Which we gave leave to learn to speak 620

And bring us foreign languages to Greece.
All's joyed, I see. Let music be the crown,
And set it high. The good needs fear no law;
It is his safety, and the bad man's awe.

[Music. Exeunt omnes]

Finis

THE TRIUMPHS OF LOVE AND ANTIQUITY

Text edited and annotated by David M. Bergeron, introduced by Lawrence Manley

The Triumphs of Love and Antiquity, Middleton's third mayoral pageant, was commissioned by the Company of Skinners following a competition in which 'Anthonie Mondaie, Thomas Middleton and Richard Grimston poette, all showed to the table their several plot for devices for the shows and pageant'. The third most expensive of Middleton's productions, costing £726, the show was the first in which major responsibility for the pageant-works was awarded to the naval carver Garret Christmas. Praised along with Robert Norman for his 'workmanship' at the end of Middleton's pamphlet, Christmas thereafter became the chief collaborator in all of Middleton's remaining mayoral shows and, with his sons, dominated the fabrication of the pageants until 1639.

Though in many respects typical of the shows Middleton wrote after his extraordinary 1613 debut, The Triumphs of Love and Antiquity is exceptional for its place in Middleton's career and for what it reveals about Middleton's ability to adapt his artistry to the exigencies of patronage and the demands of ceremonial occasion. The Lord Mayor whose inauguration the Skinners had commissioned Middleton to celebrate was Sir William Cokayne, one of the most notorious merchant-courtiers of the Jacobean period. A London Alderman and prominent Eastland trader who had made his fortune purveying victuals to the army in Ireland 1600–1603, Cokayne was the chief architect of the disastrous 'Cokayne Project', a scheme to replace England's traditional economic lifeline, the export by the Merchant Adventurers of unfinished woollen textiles to the Netherlands, with the direct delivery of home-finished cloth to markets throughout Northern Europe. While promising to employ domestic clothworkers, who had always objected to the Merchant Adventurers' unfinished exports, and to enhance customs revenues through direct competition with the Dutch clothing trade, the scheme was probably an attempt by interloping Eastland and Levant traders to wrest the lucrative textile monopoly from the Merchant Adventurers. While the project was initially opposed (by Robert Middleton, among others) in the 1614 Parliament and by leading Privy Counsellors, Cokayne and his syndicate managed, with the dismissal of Parliament and with the aid of bribes to Suffolk and Somerset, to win approval for a project that appealed both to the vanity of King James and to the search, by the Howard faction, for non-parliamentary sources of revenue. Following the revocation of the Merchant Adventurers' charter and the royal incorporation of the 'King's Merchants Adventurers of the New Trade of London', Cokayne earned his knighthood by feasting and bestowing lavish gifts on the monarch in his home in 1617.

By the time of this festive occasion, marked by a masque in which dyers, cloth dressers, and merchants from Hamburg were presented to the King and 'spoke such language as Ben Jonson put in their mouths', textile exports had plummeted, domestic producers were complaining of unsold inventories, and the English cloth trade had slipped into a depression that would last a decade. Sir Edward Coke, who had initially supported Cokayne's project, described its leaders as 'Projectors and Deluders of the State', and King James was said to have threatened Cokayne that 'if he had abused him by wrong information his four quarters should pay for it'.

With the return of the hated Merchant Adventurers to their monopoly, and with the further disruption of trade by war on the continent, the targets of blame were sufficiently numerous that Cokayne escaped retribution, 'better', as one contemporary noted, 'than could be wished'. Yet he was a man whose reputation had been damaged. When his London home and possessions were destroyed by fire in 1625, John Chamberlain wrote to Sir Dudley Carlton that he 'had seldom known a man less pitied, . . . and specially for that business of clothing (wherein all England hath and is like to suffer so much) which was his only plot and project, and procured him many a curse from poor people'. Coming on the heels of his failed project, Cokayne's elevation to the London mayoralty in 1619 was a crucial step in his rehabilitation. Middleton's pageant, written both 'to the service of his honour and honourable Society', was an important contribution to it.

The key device in Middleton's pageant is the figure of Love, who, from his opening announcement of 'the love of the city to his lordship' (34–5), to his closing speech on the circular, reciprocal nature of bounty and obligation, symbolizes the variety of bonds essential to the City's life—the amity of all citizens, the brotherhood of the Skinners' guild, the solicitude of officeholders, and the esteem that Middleton insists is due to their virtuous works. The pageant's underlying spousal tropes celebrate the inauguration of a whole series of relationships based on love: the moral 'match' between 'the city's general love' and the candidate's deserving (46); the political bond by which the mayor becomes 'the city's bridegroom' (440); the divine assurance that, all else failing, the mayor's 'good works' will 'wed thee to eternity' (52). As adapted to this particular occasion, however, the love that compensates the magistrate who 'Collects his spirits, redeems his hours with care' is understood as relieving more burdens than those of office. So is the assertion later on, in the Sanctuary of Fame, that Cokayne is now a 'worthy' ensconced among the former mayors and benefactors who distinguished the company of Skinners.

The three pageants that follow Love's opening speech—the Wilderness at Paul's Chain, the Sanctuary of Fame near the Little Conduit, and the Parliament of Honour at St Lawrence Lane end—form a pattern that, in keeping with both the citizen ethos and the syntagmatic nature of the triumph form, emphasizes secular causes and effects rather than the thaumaturgic mysteries associated with royal advents like that of James I. In Middleton's mayoral shows, as in those of his contemporaries, the rough and boisterous celebration of the mayor's return by river from Westminster, where he had taken his oath to the Crown, was a transitional event that marked a successful negotiation between political jurisdictions, and more broadly, between the dangers of the external world and the community's inner stability. The rite of arrival, moreover, provided the occasion for constructing narratives of arrival—myths, stories, and symbolic tableaux staging the historical passage from rude nature to urban culture, from the violence of pagan origins to the serenity of Christian community, from a barbarous past to a civilized present.

In The Triumphs of Love and Antiquity, this pattern begins with the presenter of the Wilderness, Orpheus, a figure associated throughout Renaissance mythology with the civilizing powers that, according to Thomas Lodge, made 'poets... the first raisers of cities'. A founder-hero who (in George Puttenham's words) brought 'savage people to a more civil and orderly life' and who (according to William Webbe) enabled them to 'keep company, make houses, and keep fellowship together', Orpheus had appeared in London mayoral shows as early as 1561. In Middleton's 1619 show, Orpheus and the Wilderness with beasts are skillfully adapted to compliment Cokayne's legendary eloquence (at Cokayne's funeral, John Donne recalled the King's observation that he had never heard a Londoner 'handle businesses more rationally, more pertinently, more eloquently, more persuasively') and to extol the patron Company of Skinners, to whose trade Middleton returns in his closing epigram on 'those beasts bearing fur, and now in use with the bountiful Society of Skinners' (446–7). The emphasis, however, picking up on the 'Graces' silver chimes' sounded in Love's opening speech (76), falls on the political theme of Orpheus' 'harmonious government' (160). The cock that appears over the head of Orpheus, an heraldic emblem of the Cokayne family, provides the basis for an allegory of the mayor's vigilance and power (165–84); it marks a transition from the animal kingdom to the ordered world of man. The orphic taming of the wilderness is a motif that runs throughout Middleton's show, from Orpheus' concluding tribute to the Stuart theme of union—extended to include 'the civilly instructed Irishman' (in 1610 Cokayne had become the first governor of the City of London's plantations in Londonderry and Coleraine)—to the last of the day's major pageants, which ends with mention of the fur-trimmed robes of state, produced by the Skinners, that adorn British kings 'when they consent/ To ride most glorious to high parliament' (269–70).

In passing from the Wilderness to the Sanctuary of Fame and the Parliament of Honour, then, the mayor's progress was meant to follow a path toward political consolidation and cultural perfection. The Sanctuary of Fame, in which Middleton extols London's twenty-six Aldermen and the worthy Skinners who have served the City's good, is represented as both a moral 'reward' for the 'cares in government' (211–13) first figured in Orpheus and as an historical step in the passage from a world 'that knows no laws' (158) into the security of local government and communal spirit. The pattern culminates in the Parliament of Honour, where, in passages borrowed heavily from John Stow's Survey of London (1598), the figure of Antiquity recalls (as was conventional) the Company's noble and royal patrons in order to celebrate the amity and mutual dependency between citizenry and gentry, commune and Crown, City and nation. Invoking the Skinners' ancient identity as the 'Fraternity of Corpus Christi', the guild that had sponsored the processions and performances in which medieval Londoners had celebrated their corporate life, Middleton's Parliament of Honour completes not only a narrative but a hierarchical image of the body politic. Upon the mayor's return from the Guildhall feast, when 'the whole triumph' was 'placed in comely and decent order before him' (405–6), London's citizenry would have witnessed passing before them the rising echelons of the social order, from the 'rude multitude' figured in the Wilderness (157), to the 'large benefactors and sweet governors' (223) of the urban community, to the chief of England's nobility and royalty. The whole movement is reinforced by a cycle of light imagery that extends from the vigilance of the heraldic cock, 'the morning's herald' (166), to the 'six-and-twenty bright-burning lamps' of London's magistrates (204–5), to the circular motion of 'the bright sun' (416) invoked in Love's closing speech.

In the Wilderness pageant, where the cock's timely vigilance is contrasted with the time-serving clocks that are irresponsibly turned back on 'revelling nights' at court (113–27), Middleton may be glancing not only at courtiers in general but at the first glimmerings of an anti-Buckingham sentiment. Six months after becoming mayor, Cokayne married his daughter to Charles, Baron Howard of Effingham, a minor scion of the Howard faction whose leaders, Nottingham and Suffolk, rivals to Buckingham, were brought down in the months preceding Cokayne's inauguration. Six weeks before the inauguration, moreover, Frederick the Elector, the King's son-in-law, had announced his acceptance of the Bohemian crown; in the incipient war-fever, sentiments ran high (on September 12 Archbishop Abbot called in a letter for 'ringing of bells, and making of bonfires in London' and for a campaign to 'tear the Whore and make her desolate'). By the time of the mayoral inauguration in late October, Buckingham was being blamed for the King's reluctance to commit himself to the Protestant cause in

The Triumphs of Loue and Antiquity.

Europe. The unusually heavy use, in Middleton's inaugural show, of the City Trained Bands, whose Lord-General Cokayne became with his inauguration, may reflect the City's eagerness, manifest later in Cokayne's mayoralty, to contribute to war with Spain.

In its topicality, The Triumphs of Love and Antiquity is thus adapted both to the current political scene and to Cokayne's complex place within it. At least three of the earliest of Middleton's Honourable Entertainments were written specifically for Cokayne during his mayoralty. Throughout these works, Middleton uses the Cokayne cock and the golden cock-shaped loving cups which Cokayne's father had bequeathed to the Company of Skinners without alluding to the fact that the Company had been forced to sue the son in order to obtain its legacy. In Middleton's mayoral show, the heraldic cock appears above the head of Orpheus, the archetypal figure of the civic poet. The presenters of all three pageants in the show—Orpheus, Example, and Antiquity—symbolize the attributes of eloquence that sustain the civic order. In view of his services to the City and to Cokayne, it is not surprising that in September 1620—the last month of Cokayne's mayoralty—Middleton became the first official Chronologer to the City of London, appointed to 'set down all memorable acts of this City...and for such other employments as this Court shall have occasion to use him in'.

SEE ALSO

Textual introduction and apparatus: Companion, 672

Authorship and date: Companion, 408

General introduction to the civic entertainments: this volume, 968

Other Middleton-Christmas works: Aries, 1586; Virtue, 1714; Integrity, 1766; Prosperity, 1901; lost pageant for Charles I, 1898

The Triumphs of Love and Antiquity

An honourable solemnity performed through the City, at the confirmation and establishment of the Right Honourable Sir William Cokayne,
Knight, in the office of His Majesty's lieutenant,
5 the Lord Mayor of the famous City of London.

Taking beginning in the morning at his lordship's going, and perfecting itself after his return from receiving the oath of mayoralty at Westminster, on the morrow after Simon and Jude's Day, October 29, 1619.

10 To the honour of him, to whom the noble Fraternity of Skinners, his worthy brothers, have dedicated their loves in costly triumphs, the Right Honourable, Sir William Cokayne, Knight, Lord Mayor of this renowned city, and Lord General of all the military forces

15 Love, triumph, honour, all the glorious graces,
This day holds in her gift; fixed eyes and faces
Apply themselves in joy all to your look:
In duty then, my service, and the book.

20 At your lordship's command,
Tho. Middleton.

The Triumphs of Love and Antiquity

25 If foreign nations have been struck with admiration at the form, state, and splendour of some yearly triumphs wherein art hath been but weakly imitated and most beggarly worded, there is fair hope that things where invention flourishes, clear art and her graceful proprieties should receive favour and encouragement from the content of the spectator, which, next to the service of his honour and honourable Society, is the principal reward it looks for; and not despairing of that common favour— 30 which is often cast upon the undeserver, through the distress and misery of judgement—this takes delight to present itself.

And first, to begin early with the love of the city to his lordship, let me draw your attentions to his honour's 35 entertainment upon the water, where expectation, big with the joy of the day, but beholding to free love for language and expression, thus salutes the great master of the day and triumph.

THE SPEECH TO ENTERTAIN HIS LORDSHIP UPON THE WATER.

LOVE

Honour and joy double their blessings on thee. 40

I, the day's love, the city's general love,

Salute thee in the sweetness of content;

All that behold me worthily may see

How full mine eye stands of the joy of thee;

The more, because I may with confidence say 45

Desert and love will be well matched today.

And herein the great'st pity will appear,

This match can last no longer than a year.

3 William Cokayne Sheriff, 1609–10;
Alderman from 1609 until his death in 1626; member of Skinners from 1590;
admitted of Gray's Inn, 1600

The Triumphs of Loue and Antiquity.

50 Yet let not that discourage thy good ways,
Men's loves will last to crown thy end of days;
If those should fail, which cannot easily die,
Thy good works wed thee to eternity.
Let not the shortness then of time dismay
The largeness of thy worth, gain every day;
55 So many years thou gain'st that some have lost;
For they that think their care is at great cost,
If they do any good in time so small,
They make their year but a poor day in all.
For, as a learnèd man will comprehend
60 In compass of his hour, doctrine so sound,
Which give another a whole year to mend,
He shall not equal upon any ground.
So the judicious, when he comes to bear
This powerful office, struck with divine fear,
65 Collects his spirits, redeems his hours with care,
Thinks of his charge and oath, what ties they are;
And with a virtuous resolution then
Works more good in one year than some in ten.
Nor is this spoken any to detract,
70 But all t'encourage to put truth in act.
Methinks I see oppression hang the head,
Falsehood and injury with their guilt struck dead,
At this triumphant hour; ill causes hide
Their leprous faces, daring not t'abide
75 The brightness of this day; and in mine ear
Methinks the Graces' silver chimes I hear.
Good wishes are at work now in each heart,
Throughout this sphere of brotherhood play their part;
Chiefly thy noble own fraternity,
80 As near in heart as they're in place to thee,
The ensigns of whose love bounty displays,
Yet esteems all their cost short of thy praise.
There will appear elected sons of war,
Which this fair city boasts of, for their care,
85 Strength, and experience, set in truth of heart,
All great and glorious masters in that art
Which gives to man his dignity, name, and seal,
Prepared to speak love in a noble peal,
Knowing two triumphs must on this day dwell,
90 For magistrate one, and one for colonel:
Return lord-general, that's the name of state
The soldier gives thee, peace the magistrate.
On then, great hope. Here that good care begins,
Which now earth's love and heaven's hereafter wins.
95 At his lordship's return from Westminster, those worthy gentlemen whose loves and worths were prepared before in the conclusion of the former speech by water, are now all ready to salute their lord-general with a noble volley at his lordship's landing; and in the best and 100 most commendable form, answerable to the nobleness of their free love and service, take their march before his lordship, who, being so honourably conducted, meets the first triumph by land waiting his lordship's most wished arrival in Paul's Churchyard, near Paul's Chain, which is a Wilderness, most gracefully and artfully furnished with 105 divers kinds of beasts bearing fur, proper to the fraternity;

the presenter the musical Orpheus, great master both in poesy and harmony, who by his excellent music drew after him wild beasts, woods, and mountains; over his head an artificial cock, often made to crow and flutter with his 110 wings. This Orpheus, at the approach of his lordship, gives life to these words.

THIS SPEECH DELIVERED BY ORPHEUS

Great lord, example is the crystal glass
By which wise magistracy sets his face,
Fits all his actions to their comeliest dress,
115 For there he sees honour and seemliness:
'Tis not like flattering glasses, those false books
Made to set age back in great courtiers' looks;
Like clocks on revelling nights, that ne'er go right,
Because the sports may yield more full delight;
120 But when they break off, then they find it late,
The time and truth appears: such is their state,
Whose death by flatteries is set back awhile,
But meets 'em in the midst of their safe smile.
Such horrors those forgetful things attend,
125 That only mind their ends, but not their end.
Leave them to their false trust; list thou to me.
Thy power is great, so let thy virtues be,
Thy care, thy watchfulness, which are but things
Remembered to thy praise; from thence it springs, 130 And not from fear of any want in thee.
For in this truth I may be comely free:
Never was man advanced yet waited on
With a more noble expectation:
That's a great work to perfect; and as those 135 That have in art a mast'ry can oppose
All comers, and come off with learnèd fame,
Yet think not scorn still of a scholar's name,
A title which they had in ignorant youth,
So he that deals in such a weight of truth
140 As th'execution of a magistrate's place,
Though never so exact in form and grace,
Both from his own worth and man's free applause,
Yet may be called a labourer in the cause,
And be thought good to be so, in true care
145 The labour being so glorious, just, and fair.
Behold, then, in a rough example here
The rude and thorny ways thy care must clear;
Such are the vices in a city sprung,
150 As are yon thickets that grow close and strong;

76 Graces' could be either the chimes of the mythological Graces or those of the Theological Graces: Faith, Hope, and Love

81 ensigns banners, flags

The Triumphs of Loue and Antiquity.

Such is oppression, coz'nage, bribes, false hires,
 As are yon catching and entangling briers;
 Such is gout-justice, that's delay in right,
 Demurs in suits that are as clear as light.
 155 Just such a wilderness is a commonwealth
 That is undressed, unpruned, wild in her health;
 And the rude multitude the beasts o'th' wood,
 That know no laws, but only will and blood;
 And yet, by fair example, musical grace,
 160 Harmonious government of the man in place,
 Of fair integrity and wisdom framed,
 They stand as mine do, ravished, charmed, and tamed:
 Every wise magistrate that governs thus,
 May well be called a powerful Orpheus.
 165 Behold yon bird of state, the vigilant cock,
 The morning's herald and the plowman's clock,
 At whose shrill crow the very lion trembles,
 The sturdiest prey-taker that here assembles;
 How fitly does it match your name and power,
 170 Fixed in that name now by this glorious hour,
 At your just voice to shake the bold'st offence
 And sturdiest sin that e'er had residence
 In secure man, yet, with an equal eye,
 Matching grave justice with fair clemency,
 175 It being the property he chiefly shows,
 To give wing-warning still before he crows,
 To crow before he strike; by his clapped wing
 To stir himself up first, which needful thing
 Is every man's first duty; by his crow,
 180 A gentle call or warning, which should flow
 From every magistrate; before he extend
 The stroke of justice, he should reprehend
 And try the virtue of a powerful word,
 If that prevail not, then the spur, the sword.
 185 See, herein honours to his majesty
 Are not forgotten, when I turn and see
 The several countries, in those faces plain,
 All owing fealty to one sovereign;
 The noble English, the fair-thriving Scot,
 190 Plain-hearted Welsh, the Frenchman bold and hot,
 The civilly instructed Irishman,
 And that kind savage the Virginian,
 All lovingly assembled, e'en by fate,
 This thy day's honour to congratulate.
 195 On, then; and as your service fills this place,
 So through the city do his lordship grace.

At which words this part of triumph moves onward and meets the full body of the show in the other Paul's Churchyard; then dispersing itself according to the ordering 200 of the speeches following, one part, which is the Sanctuary of Fame, plants itself near the Little Conduit in Cheap; another, which hath the title of the Parliament of Honour, at St Lawrence Lane end. Upon the battlements of that beauteous Sanctuary, adorned with six-and-twenty bright-burning lamps, having allusion to the six-and-twenty aldermen—they being, for their justice, 205 government, and example, the lights of the city—a grave personage, crowned with the title and inscription of Example, breathes forth these sounds.

EXAMPLE

From that rough wilderness, which did late present
 210 The perplexed state and cares of government,
 Which every painful magistrate must meet,
 Here the reward stands for thee: a chief seat
 In Fame's fair Sanctuary, where some of old,
 Crowned with their troubles, now are here enrolled 215 In memory's sacred sweetness to all ages;
 And so much the world's voice of thee presages.
 And these that sit for many, with their graces
 Fresh as the buds of roses, though they sleep,
 In thy Society had once high places,
 220 Which in their good works they forever keep;
 Life called 'em in their time honour's fair stars,
 Large benefactors and sweet governors.
 If here were not sufficient grace for merit,
 Next object, I presume, will raise thy spirit.
 225

In this masterpiece of art, Fame's illustrious Sanctuary, the memory of those worthies shine gloriously that have been both lord mayors of this city and noble benefactors and brothers of this worthy fraternity; to wit, Sir Henry Barton, Sir William Gregory, Sir Stephen Jennings, Sir
 Thomas Mirfen, Sir Andrew Judd, Sir Wolstan Dixie, Sir
 Stephen Slany, Sir Richard Saltonstall, and now the right honourable Sir William Cockayne.

That Sir Henry Barton, an honour to memory, was the first that, for the safety of travellers and strangers by 235 night through the city, caused lights to be hung out from Allhallowtide to Candlemas; therefore, in this Sanctuary of Fame, where the beauty of good actions shine, he is most properly and worthily recorded. His lordship by this time gracefully conducted toward that Parliament of 240 Honour, near St Lawrence Lane end, Antiquity, from its eminence, thus gloriously salutes him.

ANTIQUITY, IN THE PARLIAMENT OF HONOUR

Grave city-governor, so much honour do me,
 Vouchsafe thy presence and thy patience to me,
 245 And I'll reward that virtue with a story,
 That shall to thy fraternity add glory;
 Then to thy worth no mean part will arise,
 That art ordained chief for that glorious prize.

151 coz'nage cheating, fraud
 153 gout-justice justice that is halting or tardy
 182 reprehend reprimand, rebuke
 185 his majesty King James I 229–30 Henry Barton mayor 1416 and again in 1428

 230 William Gregory mayor, 1451
 Stephen Jennings mayor, 1508
 231 Thomas Mirfen mayor, 1518
 Andrew Judd mayor, 1550
 Wolstan Dixie mayor, 1585

232 Stephen Slany mayor, 1595
 Richard Saltonstall mayor, 1597
 237 Allhallowtide liturgical season of All Saints
 Candlemas church festival on 2 February
 244 Vouchsafe confer on, bestow

The Triumphs of Loue and Antiquity.

250 'Tis I that keep all the records of fame,
 Mother of truths, Antiquity my name;
 No year, month, day, or hour, that brings in place
 Good works and noble, for the city's grace,
 But I record, that after-times may see
 What former were, and how they ought to be 255 Fruitful and thankful, in fair actions flowing,
 To meet heaven's blessings, to which much is owing.
 For instance, let all grateful eyes be placed Upon this mount of royalty, by kings graced,
 Queens, prince, dukes, nobles, more by numb'ring gained 260 Than can be in this narrow sphere contained;
 Seven kings, five queens, only one prince alone,
 Eight dukes, two earls, Plantagenets twenty-one;
 All these of this fraternity made free,
 Brothers and sisters of this company:
 265 And see with what propriety the Fates
 Have to this noble brotherhood knit such states;
 For what society the whole city brings
 Can with such ornaments adorn their kings,
 Their only robes of state, when they consent
 270 To ride most glorious to high parliament?
 And mark in this their royal intent still;
 For when it pleased the goodness of their will
 To put the richest robes of their loves on
 To the whole city, the most ever came 275 To this society, which records here prove,
 Adorning their adorners with their love,
 Which was a kingly equity.
 Be careful then, great lord, to bring forth deeds
 To match that honour that from hence proceeds.

280 At the close of which speech the whole triumph takes leave of his lordship for that time; and, till after the feast at Guildhall, rests from service. His lordship, accompanied with many noble personages; the honourable fellowship 285 of ancient magistrates and aldermen of this city; the two new sheriffs, the one of his own fraternity (the complete Brotherhood of Skinners), the right worshipful Master Sheriff Dean, a very bountiful and worthy citizen; not forgetting the noble pains and loves of the heroic captains 290 of the city, and gentlemen of the Artillery-garden, making, with two glorious ranks, a manly and majestic passage for their lord-general, his lordship, through Guildhall yard; and afterward their loves to his lordship resounding in a second noble volley.

295 Now, that all the honours before mentioned in that Parliament, or Mount of Royalty, may arrive at a clear and perfect manifestation, to prevent the over curious and inquisitive spirit, the names and times of those kings, queens, prince, dukes, and nobles, free of the honourable

Fraternity of Skinners in London, shall here receive their proper illustrations. 300

Anno 1329. King Edward the Third, Plantagenet, by whom, in the first of his reign, this worthy society of Skinners was incorporate, he their first royal founder and brother: queen Philipa his wife, younger daughter of William Earl of Hainaut, the first royal sister; so gloriously 305 virtuous that she is a rich ornament to memory; she both founded and endowed Queen's College in Oxford, to the continuing estate of which I myself wish all happiness;
 this queen at her death desired three courtesies, some of which are rare in these days. First, that her debts might 310 be paid to the merchants; secondly, that her gifts to the church might be performed; thirdly, that the king, when he died, would at Westminster be interred with her.

Anno 1357. Edward Plantagenet, surnamed the Black Prince, son to Edward the Third, Prince of Wales, Duke 315 of Guienne, Aquitaine, and Cornwall, Earl Palatine of Chester. In the battle of Poitiers in France, he, with 8000 English against 60,000 French, got the victory; took the king, Philip his son, seventeen earls, with divers other noble personages, prisoners. 320

King Richard the Second, Plantagenet. This king being the third royal brother of this honourable Company, and at that time the society consisting of two brotherhoods of Corpus Christi, the one at St Mary Spital, the other at St
 Mary Beth'em without Bishopsgate, in the eighteenth of 325 his reign granted them to make their two brotherhoods one, by the name of the Fraternity of Corpus Christi of Skinners, which worthy title shines at this day gloriously amongst 'em; and toward the end of this king's reign, 1396, a great feast was celebrated in Westminster Hall, 330 where the lord mayor of this city sat as guest.

Anno 1381. Queen Anne, his wife, daughter to the Emperor Charles the Fourth, and sister to Emperor Wence-slaus, whose modesty then may make this age blush now, she being the first that taught women to ride sideling on horseback; but who it was that taught 'em to ride strad- 335 dling, there is no records so immodest that can show me, only the impudent time and the open profession. This fair precedent of womanhood died at Sheen, now Richmond; for grief whereof King Richard her lord abandoned and defaced that goodly house. 340

Anno 1399. King Henry the Fourth, Plantagenet, surnamed Bullingbrooke, a fourth royal brother. In his time the famous Guildhall in London was erected, where the honourable courts of the city are kept, and this bounteous 345 feast yearly celebrated. In the twelfth year of his reign the river Thames flowed thrice in one day.

262 Plantagenets familiar name for the ruling family of England, 1154-1485

289 gentlemen... Artillery-garden the Honourable Artillery company of the City of London, revitalized in 1610; the 'garden' or exercising ground for the company located between west side of Finsbury Square and Bunhill Row.

324 St Mary Spital Spitalfields, fields east of London which once belong to the Priory and Hospital of St Mary Spital, founded

in 1197

324-5 St Mary Beth'em Hospital of St Mary of Bethlehem, located in Bishopsgate ward, known as a lunatic hospital from 1547

The Triumphs of Loue and Antiquity.

350 Queen Joan, or Jane, Duchess of Brittany, late wife to John Duke of Brittany and daughter to the King of Navarre, another princely sister.

355 Anno 1412. King Henry the Fifth, Plantagenet, Prince of Wales, proclaimed Mayor and Regent of France. He won that famous victory on the French at the battle of Agincourt. Queen Catherine, his wife, daughter to Charles the Sixth, King of France.

King Henry the Sixth, Plantagenet, of the house of Lancaster.

360 King Edward the Fourth, Plantagenet, of the house of York. This king feasted the Lord Mayor, Richard Chawry, and the aldermen his brethren, with certain commoners in Waltham Forest: after dinner rode a-hunting with the king, who gave him plenty of venison, and sent to the lady mayoress and her sisters the aldermen's wives, two harts, six bucks, and a tun of wine, to make merry; and 365 this noble feast was kept at Drapers' Hall.

Anno 1463. Queen Elizabeth Grey, his wife, daughter to Richard Woodville, Earl Rivers, and to the Duchess of Bedford; she was mother to the Lord Grey of Ruthen that in his time was Marquess Dorset.

370 King Richard the Third, brother to Edward the Fourth,
Duke of Gloucester, and of the house of York.

375 Lionel Plantagenet, third son to the third Edward, Duke of Clarence and Earl of Ulster; Philipa his daughter and heir married Edward Mortimer, Earl of March, from whom the house of York descends.

Henry Plantagenet, grandchild to Edmond Crouchback, second son to Henry the Third.

380 Richard Plantagenet, father of Edward the Fourth,
Duke of York and Albemarle, Earl of Cambridge, Rutland, March, Clare, and Ulster.

Thomas Plantagenet, second son of Henry the Fourth.

385 John Plantagenet, third son of Henry the Fourth; so noble a soldier and so great a terror to the French, that when Charles the Eighth was moved to deface his monument—being buried in Rouen—the king thus answered: Pray, let him rest in peace, being dead, of whom we were all afraid when he lived.

Humphrey Plantagenet, fourth son of Henry the Fourth.

John Holland, Duke of Exeter.

390 George Plantagenet, brother to Edward the Fourth.

Edmond Plantagenet, brother to Edward the Fourth.

Richard Neville, Earl of Salisbury and Warwick, called the Great Earl of Warwick.

John Cornwall Knight, Baron Fanhope.

395 The royal sum: Seven kings, five queens, one prince, seven dukes, one earl; twenty-one Plantagenets. Seven kings, five queens, one prince, eight dukes, two earls, one lord; twenty-four Skinners.

The feast ended at Guildhall, his lordship, as yearly custom invites it, goes, accompanied with the triumph 400 before him, towards St Paul's, to perform the noble and reverend ceremonies which divine antiquity religiously ordained, and is no less than faithfully observed. Holy service and ceremonies accomplished, his lordship returns by torchlight to his own house, the whole triumph placed 405 in comely and decent order before him: the Wilderness, the Sanctuary of Fame, adorned with lights, the Parliament of Honour, and the Triumphant Chariot of Love, with his graceful concomitants, the chariot drawn with two luzerns. Near to the entrance of his lordship's gate, 410
Love, prepared with his welcome, thus salutes him.

LOVE

*I was the first, grave lord, that welcomed thee
To this day's honour, and I spake it free,
Just as in every heart I found it placed,
And 'tis my turn again now to speak last; 415
For love is circular, like the bright sun,
And takes delight to end where it begun,
Though indeed never ending in true will,
But rather may be said beginning still,
As all great works are of celestial birth, 420
Of which love is the chief in heaven and earth.
To what blessed state then are thy fortunes come,
Since that both brought thee forth and brings thee home?
Now, as in common course, which clears things best,
There's no free gift but looks for thanks at least; 425
A love so bountiful, so free, so good,
From the whole city, from thy brotherhood—
That name I ought a while to dwell upon—
Expect some fair requital from the man
They've all so largely honoured: what's desired? 430
That which in conscience ought to be required;
O, thank 'em in thy justice, in thy care,
Zeal to right wrongs, works that are clear and fair,
And will become thy soul, whence virtue springs,
As those rich ornaments thy brother-kings. 435
And since we cannot separate love and care—
For where care is, a love must needs be there,
And care where love is, 'tis the man and wife,
Through every estate that's fixed in life;
You are by this the city's bridegroom proved, 440
And she stands wedded to her best beloved:
Then be, according to your morning vows,
A careful husband to a loving spouse;
And heaven give you great joy, both it and thee,
And to all those that shall match after ye. 445*

361 Waltham Forest forest near the village of Waltham in Hertfordshire, a few miles north of London

364 tun large barrel

410 luzerns lynx

The Triumphs of Loue and Antiquity.

The names of those beasts bearing fur, and now in use with the bountiful Society of Skinners, the most of which presented in the Wilderness, where Orpheus predominates

450 Ermine, foine, sables, martin, badger, bear,
Luzern, budge, otter, hipponesse, and hare,
Lamb, wolf, fox, leopard, mink, stot, miniver,
Raccoon, moashy, wolverine, caliber,
455 Squirrel, mole, cat, musk, civet, wild and tame,
Cony, white, yellow, black, must have a name,
The ounce, rowsgray, jennet, pampilion;
Of birds the vulture, bittern, ostrich, swan:
Some worn for ornament, and some for health,
All to the Skinners' art bring fame and wealth.

The service being thus faithfully performed, both to his lordship's honour and to the credit and content of his 460 most generously bountiful society, the season commends all to silence; yet not without a little leave taken to reward art with the comely dues that belong unto it, which hath been so richly expressed in the body of the triumph with all the proper beauties of workmanship, 465 that the city may, without injury to judgement, call it the masterpiece of her triumphs; the credit of which workmanship I must justly lay upon the deserts of master Garret Christmas and master Robert Norman, joined-partners in the performance. 470

FINIS.

449 foine animal of polecat or weasel kind sables small carnivorous quadruped martin possibly a kind of monkey 450 budge lamb's skin with wool dressed outward hipponesse fur-bearing animal 451 stot a steer miniver fur-bearing animal 452 moashy some kind of fur caliber a type of squirrel 453 musk animal producing musk, usually the musk deer

civet in size and appearance between a fox and a weasel
454 Cony rabbit
455 ounce common lynx rowsgray obscure (OED cites this example)
pampilion fur-bearing animal
456 bittern a bird smaller than a heron 469 Garret Christmas Christmas and his two sons were involved with the production of Lord Mayor's Shows from 1618 to 1639, twenty-one years.

Garret Christmas (also known as Gerard Christmas) is first cited for his work with Munday in the 1618 Lord Mayor's Show, Sidero-thriambos. He works on all the subsequent shows by Middleton.
Robert Norman Norman served as artificer in the pageants of 1628, 1634, and 1635.

THE WORLD TOSSED AT TENNIS

Edited by C. E. McGee

A Courtly Masque, further entitled The World Tossed at Tennis, should have been performed, probably early in 1620, at Denmark House in the presence of King James and Prince Charles. The King gave Denmark House to the Prince of Wales by a grant of 28 September 1619, thereby making him lord not only of Richmond and St James's but also of the palace of the late Queen Anne. To express his gratitude for this gift and to display his magnificence, newly enhanced by the King's generosity, Prince Charles set in motion preparations for an entertainment of James, the centrepiece of which was to be a courtly masque. Charles further established his prestige by summoning his own players, led by William Rowley, to take the major roles in the production, and Rowley, presumably, turned to his trusted collaborator, Thomas Middleton, for help with the masque. The intended performance at court was a splendid opportunity, offering the authors and actors a place of prominence before an audience full of potential patrons. However, the very forces that ennobled the occasion, the sponsorship of Charles and the presence of James, made it problematic—particularly at this time, when the King and the Prince were at odds over England's policy concerning Europe, 'the world' already being tossed by the Thirty Years War.

Writing early in 1620 under these historical conditions, Middleton and Rowley had to mediate between the scholarly pacifism of the King and the Protestant militancy of his son. Prince Charles favoured moral, financial, and military support of the claim to the crown of Bohemia staked by his brother-in-law, Frederick, the Elector Palatine. The Estates of Bohemia had chosen Frederick to be their king on 26 August 1619, after fifteen months of armed civil insurrection in which Protestant forces in Bohemia rebelled against their monarch, the Austrian Emperor, Matthias, and his cousin, the heir apparent to the throne of Bohemia, Ferdinand, Duke of Styria. Ferdinand, a staunch Roman Catholic, had persecuted cruelly the Protestants of Styria and, like other Habsburgs before him, had tried to subvert the elective monarchy of Bohemia by establishing a hereditary claim to it. Protestant insurgents in Bohemia could not accept the grim prospect of his succession, so that, having routed the Austrian forces and set up a provisional government in 1618, they formally deposed Ferdinand on 31 July 1619. When Frederick, the Elector Palatine, accepted the crown offered to him by the Bohemian Estates, he became the central figure in a momentous political and religious conflict, one in which he counted on the support of Protestant states such as England—especially England, where his father-in-law reigned.

King James, however, true to his motto, Beati pacifici ('Blessed are the peacemakers', Matthew 5:9), wanted to restore peace and order in Europe by negotiation and treaty. In particular, he hoped to protect England's rapprochement with a long-standing Catholic foe, Spain, and to confirm that alliance with the marriage of Prince Charles and the Spanish princess. For five months after learning that Frederick had accepted the Bohemian crown, James played the scholar's part; he studied Frederick's right to be 'King of Bohemia' and debated the question with Baron zu Dohna, Frederick's emissary in England. Evidence of the consequences of James's strategy, gathered together by S. R. Gardiner in Letters and Other Documents Illustrating the Relations between England and Germany at the Commencement of the Thirty Years War, appears in the dispatches of foreign ambassadors, who described the King as divided from the Prince, from his favourite, the Duke of Buckingham, from the Earl of Doncaster, England's special envoy to Europe, from the Privy Council—from 'in a word all good patriots' according to Sir Francis Nethersole. The diplomats regularly noted the inaction and isolation of King James; Venetian Girolamo Lando, though oversimplifying somewhat, is typical: "The whole nation takes the same side, and all the kingdom declares its impatience of this prolonged irresolution. Nevertheless His Majesty takes advice from no one but himself. He gives out that he has not yet succeeded in understanding the arguments bearing upon the affair . . ." Faced with these tactics, 'the great men and nobility', according to the ambassador to the States General, Noel de Caron, 'will not stop till they have spurred and driven' the monarch to come to the aid of the Elector Palatine. Tennis, had it been performed at court, would have been part of this project.

To 'entangle' James in the Protestant cause, the masque not only celebrated the glorious war in Europe, but also tried to elicit from the King a public gesture of support for the enterprise. This play occurs at the very end, when the Scholar and the Soldier present their 'wish with reverence to this place, | For here't must be confirmed or 'tas no grace' (887–8). Here, as in other masques, characters in a fictive world reach into the world of the audience. Though well established in Tudor and Stuart entertainments, this strategy was risky, especially if that audience included the often impatient, unresponsive King James, for the closure of the entire show depended on the willingness of the monarch to play along, and, in the case of Tennis, publicly to support the Soldier's readiness to fight in Europe. There is little reason to think that James, who, according to the French ambassador reporting in March 1620, 'dislikes utterly all the proceedings in Bohemia', would have obliged.

Disinclined to be put in the awkward position required by the final speech of the masque, of having to endorse the Soldier's campaign as a condition for approving of the Scholar's hopeful acceptance of the Jacobean peace, King James may have scuttled the entertainment at Denmark House planned by Prince Charles. No evidence of a production of Tennis at court has been found, but the masque was performed, at the Prince's Arms (otherwise known as the Swan) and, according to the title-page, 'divers times . . . to the contentment of many noble and worthy spectators'. William Beeston, manager of the Cockpit in Drury Lane, evidently judged Tennis to be negotiable in the public theatres and maintained his right to 'The World' until at least 1639. Presented in 1620 to a Swan audience—presumably made up in part of lords and gentry disappointed by the King's irresolute response to the Protestant cause in Europe and in part of Londoners like those who celebrated the coronation of the Elector Palatine with bonfires, raised money for his defence, and joined the forces levied to protect the Palatinate—Tennis's militant Protestantism would have been welcome. At this venue, the final appeal would have been directed 'with reverence' (887) to the playgoers. Put in the King's position for the moment, the audience was empowered to confirm by their applause the Soldier's commitment to go 'over yonder to the most glorious wars' (878). But for this audience too the moment might have been awkward as their applause was co-opted in support of the Scholar's endeavours and James's peace.

In the ambiguity of this final engagement of its audiences, Tennis is, as Margot Heinemann has said of other works of "'opposition" drama' written 'largely for court circles', 'cautious and equivocal'. These qualities are clear in the masque's attempt to counter the isolation of James by recommending to him a collaborative model of government, represented in the climactic dance in which the elements of 'the sphere of harmony' (811)—including Majesty/the player-King—'all move mutually' (812). Counterpointing this final dance in which royal rule of the world appears to be unstable, temporary, and dependent upon others is the stage direction glossing the dance as acknowledging, in the end, 'the absolute power of Majesty' (813.6). Similarly, in one line the Flamen portrays the King/Majesty as his equal ('. . . here's his place, | Truth his defence, and majesty his grace' [816–17]), but in the next ('We all acknowledge it [the world] belongs to you') affirms the superiority of majesty, an affirmation that immediately receives unanimous support from all the other characters. Equivocation also appears in the plotting of the masque. When the King takes the world from Simplicity, the masque seems to reinscribe one of James's favourite arguments for the superiority of monarchs: since kings come first after the age of innocence, their priority establishes their pre-eminence. However, Jupiter provides an alternative interpretation of the sequence of events when he intervenes (a step he takes only this once) after the Land-Captain receives the world from the King. The priority of the King and his deference to the Land-Captain are necessary for teaching a different lesson (one implicitly critical of Buckingham's distribution of patronage), that meritorious service should be honoured above all, even by monarchs:

This was the season when desert was stooped to,
By greatness stooped to, and acknowledged greatest;
But in thy time, now, desert stoops itself
To every baseness and makes saints of shadows.
(619–22)

Finally, as these lines also suggest, there are the contradictory representations of the present, of England in 1620. Like most masques, Tennis transmutes its vision of ideal governance into a mirror of the current regime. The monarchy of King James becomes 'the sphere of harmony' that dashes the hopes of the Devil and Deceit while renewing those of the Soldier and the Scholar. In Middleton's hands, however, the grand compliments expected of the finale are qualified ('when his glorious peace' [815]; italics mine) and conditional ('if it hold' [876]; italics mine). More important, the high praise of 'this glorious time' (862) with its 'most glorious wars' (878) and 'a most glorious peace' (880) counterpoint, but fail to offset, the sustained criticism of society throughout the masque. The Soldier and the Scholar, both unemployed (as were more and more of their professions during James's reign) complain about the conditions of their lives with wit and conviction; nor do the rebukes of Pallas or the railing of Jupiter refute their claims. Persisting in their quest simply for a living, for 'a competence' (203) not a fortune, the Soldier and the Scholar prompt Pallas and Jupiter to extend the critique of the present by voicing their own sense of how values have declined from the 'first and simple state | To the foul centre where it now abides' (412-13). Similarly, Time undercuts the force of the ideal embodied in the Nine Worthies by refocusing attention on the present and its abuses. If the compliments of Jacobean rule in the finale are not deliberately inadequate to the critique of Jacobean rule throughout the masque, then Tennis is clearly, strategically 'cautious and equivocal'.

In two crucial respects however, it is not cautious or equivocal at all. First, whereas most masques, particularly those of Ben Jonson, praise King James as the embodiment in the present of the edifying ideals of the show, Tennis gives Prince Charles that status. Pallas's 'complete man' (164) is he who partakes of both arms and arts, and Jupiter reaffirms this ideal in his parting instructions to the Soldier and the Scholar: 'Scholar and soldier must both be shut in one; | That makes the absolute and complete man' (870-1). James was not, by this criterion, absolute or complete; personally renowned for his scholarship, he is praised at the end of the masque for a peaceful regime conducive to learning. Nor are the Soldier and Scholar complete men, for though they support one another's endeavours, in the end each goes his own separate way. Nor is this ideal to be found in 'the sphere of harmony'; there learning, the Lawyer and the Flamen, is split off from valour, the Land-Captain and the Sea-Captain. With one possible comic exception, 'the son of Simplicity' (Epistle.25-6) who was raised among 'good scholars of all sorts' and 'did good and honest service beyond the small seas' (Epistle.12-14), Prince Charles is the only 'absolute and complete man', being by Jupiter's account not only the son of Minerva, goddess of arts, but also her 'valiant'st, hopeful'st son' (866). Coming from the Prince's Men on an occasion when the Prince was playing host to the King and court, such singular praise of Charles is understandable. At the same time, whether delivered at Denmark House or in the Swan, this prominence given to Charles, particularly the valiant Charles, implies support for his policies, specifically for the valorous exercise of arms in Europe.

Secondly, Tennis emphasizes throughout the value of mutuality and collaboration. In the main show-within-the-show, Jupiter's dramatized history of the governance of the world, Middleton pokes fun at land-captain and sea-captain, churchman and lawyer by deftly caricaturing the narrowness of each one's concerns as well as the peculiarity of his rhetoric and comportment. He dramatizes also the failure of each character's regime: none of these characters falls for the greedy, Deceitful schemes of their aides, but all of them, when given rule of the world, indulge their own predilections. Middleton's comic effects are crucial, for they expose the limitations of the characters as individuals, so as to set up the main political point of the show: good government depends upon the cooperation of the various professions. The achievement of 'the sphere of harmony' epitomizes a pattern of the masque. Unlike the Jonsonian masque in which the disorderly forces of the antimasque have to be banished before an edifying, mystical vision of the court can appear, Tennis dramatizes a series of reconciliations. Characters overcome anxiety, disaffection, or rivalry, in order to establish new forms of fellowship. The Induction opens with Richmond worrying about the need to compete with a new rival for the attention of Prince Charles, but meeting Denmark House, who appreciates Richmond's distinctive strengths, relieves Richmond's anxiety so that both houses can join with St James's in a fellowship of seasonable service to their lord. Likewise, the Starches, testy and abrasive at first, perform their dance after agreeing unanimously that 'The sin's not i' the colour, but the pride' (406). The world itself, tossed from character to character, finally settles in the hands of Majesty, surrounded and supported in 'partnership' (848) by Valour, Religion, and Law. And the stage business by the Soldier and the Scholar at the very end of the masque emphasizes their new alliance, as the two exchange good wishes, shake hands, and, like brothers, present one petition to the audience. Matching this image of common purpose at the end are several at the start of the work: the Prologue's maxim, 'No man is lifted but by other hands' (15); the dedication of the work to new partners in marriage; the title-page announcing the collaborative authorship of Middleton and Rowley. The main thrust of Tennis opposes any ruler who, like James in 1619-20, would take advice 'from no one but himself'.

It is difficult to exaggerate how unusual Tennis is as a masque. The antimasque/masque structure developed by Jonson hardly applies given the brevity of the Starches scene and their integration into the masque's dominant pattern of collaborations. Unlike Jonson, Middleton and Rowley seem indifferent to the unity of the work; on the contrary, to provide delight they delight in eclecticism—promising a show that is pastoral, comical, tragical, historical; delivering one that is all that and satirical to boot. Most odd, the authors invert the conventional masque structure by placing first, rather than last as usual, the one dance that might have been performed by courtiers, that of the Nine Worthies. Non-speaking roles suitable for aristocratic amateurs, the Worthies are ushered in ceremoniously and represent the masque's highest ideals. Dancing first, they define an ideal that is quickly judged to be admirable but now unattainable; as a result, instead of demonstrating an ideal transcendence of current corruption, they measure the extent of the current moral decline. Radically different in form from the Jonsonian masque, Tennis is also radically different in its politics. According to Martin Butler, Jonson's Pan's Anniversary, also written in 1620, 'sets out to counter the current expectations of a more aggressive position on European affairs and to restrain them within limits of deference to James's kingship'. Jonson may well have been writing against Middleton and Rowley. Like Pan's Anniversary as Butler perceives its wider significance, The World Tossed at Tennis 'marks a new and disturbing development in court culture under James I... [in] making a contribution (albeit a small one) to the developing polarizations of attitude that were to be so significant a feature of English politics in the coming decade'.

The World Toft at Tennis.

SEE ALSO

Textual introduction and apparatus: Companion, 667
Authorship and date: Companion, 408
Other Middleton-Rowley works: Weapons, 980; Quarrel, 1209; Old Law, 1331; Changeling, 1632; Gypsy, 1723

THOMAS MIDDLETON and WILLIAM ROWLEY

The World Tossed at Tennis

A Courtly Masque

[for Prince Charles's Men at The Swan]

THE FIGURES AND PERSONS PROPERLY RAISED FOR EMPLOYMENT
THROUGH THE WHOLE MASQUE

First, three ancient and princely receptacles: RICHMOND, ST
JAMES'S, DENMARK HOUSE

A SCHOLAR
A SOLDIER

PALLAS
JUPITER

The Nine WORTHIES [with the MUSES]
The first song and first dance

TIME, a plaintiff (but his grievances delivered courteously)

The five STARCHES: WHITE, BLUE, YELLOW, GREEN, and RED

The second dance

SIMPLICITY, the Intermedler
DECEIT, the Disguiser
The second song, sung by REAPERS

A KING
A LAND-CAPTAIN
A SEA-CAPTAIN
MARINERS

The third song and third dance

The FLAMEN
The LAWYER

The fourth and last dance: the DEVIL an Intermixer

Persons. O.I FIGURES the allegorical characters as opposed to the divine and human personages

RAISED produced; possibly punning on 'reared'

I princely magnificent and, in this case, owned by Prince Charles receptacles places where people are received; the terminology is consistent with the representation of the palaces as female

9 courteously punning: politely; appropriately for the courts of law; respectfully of the king and the courtly audience

12 Intermedler intermediary among the several characters who appear in the last part of the masque

22 Intermixer suggesting that the Devil was more thoroughly involved in the final dance, more aggressively engaged in the pursuit of the world (and probably more vividly repulsed) than the description of the dance (813.1-11) indicates

Dedication

The Epistle Dedicatory

To the truly noble, Charles, Lord Howard, Baron of Effingham, and to his virtuous and worthy lady, the Right Honourable Mary, Lady Effingham, eldest daughter of the truly generous and judicious Sir William Cokayne, Knight, Lord Mayor of this City, and Lord General of the Military Forces.

To whom more properly may art prefer
Works of this nature, which are high and rare,
Fit to delight a prince's eye and ear,
Than to the hands of such a worthy pair?
Imagine this, mixed with delight and state,
Being then an entertainment for the best,
Your noble nuptials comes to celebrate;
And though it fall short of the day and feast
Of your most sacred and united loves,
Let none say therefore it untimely moves.
It can, I hope, come out of season never,

To find your joys new, as at first, for ever.

Most respectfully devoted to both your honours,
Thomas Middleton 20

To the well-wishing, well-reading understander, well-understanding reader—Simplicity S. P. D. Epistle

After most hearty commendations, my kind and unknown friends, trusting in Phoebus your understandings are all in as good health as Simplicity's was at the writing hereof, this is to certify you further that this short and small treatise that follows, called A Masque, the device further entitled The World Tossed at Tennis—how it will be now tossed in the world I know not—a toy brought to the press rather by the printer than the poet, who requested an epistle for his pass to satisfy his perusers how hitherto he hath behaved himself. First for his conception, he was begot in Brentford, born on the Bankside of Helicon, brought up amongst noble, gentle, commons, and good

Dedication.o.1 Epistle Dedicatory Invoking the names of Cokayne and Howard, the dedication of the book of the masque points toward the policy of military engagement advanced by the masque. William Howard (1510–1573), created Baron Howard of Effingham in 1554, served as Lord High Admiral from 1553 to 1558. Charles Howard (born in 1536) was far more famous: Lord High Admiral from 1585 until he resigned the office early in 1619, he secured his renown by leading the English forces against the Spanish armada in 1588 and at the capture of Cadiz in 1596.

To his second son and namesake, Middleton dedicated Tennis. This Charles Howard (1579–1642), styled Baron Effingham following the death of his older brother (William) in 1615, had not distinguished himself in arms prior to the publication of the masque, but he would serve as Lord Lieutenant of Surrey from 1621 and as Vice-Admiral of Sussex from 1626 until his death. When asked for donations in support of the cause of the Palatinate (see the Critical Introduction, 1405), he offered to serve in person because he lacked the financial resources to back the war effort. Clearly, Middleton was trading on the strength of the Howard name, not on the achievements of the latest Baron Effingham, whom John Chamberlain disparaged as a man 'worne out in state, credit, years, and otherwise' (2:301).

Sir William Cokayne had more to do with land-captains than with sea-captains like the Howards, for he began as a purveyor to the English army in Ireland in 1598, provided that service again in 1603, and maintained substantial mercantile interests overseas. As Lord General of the Military Forces, Cokayne was, in effect, commander-in-chief; however, his impressive title belies the improvisational nature and the disorganization of the military forces, which the pacifistic policies of King James had seriously weakened. Not a standing army, these forces consisted of the garrisons for forts and the militia of boroughs. For more on Cokayne, see Antiquity and Entertainments.

3 Mary Chamberlain judged the young, handsome Mary Cokayne to be a prize wasted on Charles Howard, but Cokayne wanted prestigious matches for his daughters, five of whom married earls, one a viscount, and one a knight. Mary Cokayne was an important bridge to her father, Middleton's most reliable, generous patron in 1619–20. Middleton, using the dedication of Tennis to represent the masque book as a belated wedding gift, adds this entertainment to the others he had written for the service of the Lord Mayor.

5 Lord Mayor see Antiquity for Cokayne's lord mayor's show.

7 prefer recommend

8 high noble

9 prince's alluding to Prince Charles's original sponsorship of the masque

11 state stateliness; pomp

13 nuptials wedding

14 fall short arrive late, for the book of the masque was not published until July 1620

the day 22 April 1620

16 untimely inopportunistly, being late

Epistle.o.2 S. P. D. abbreviation of salutem plurimam dicit; Simplicity extends many greetings

2 Phoebus Apollo as the sun god, whose patronage of eloquence and medicine seem particularly relevant here

4 to certify generally, assure; more precisely, to attest legally. It is typical of the epistle and productive of its comic tone that Simplicity never says what he sets out so forcefully to make certain. The one point that might need to be certified is that the printer rather than the poet desired the publication of the masque, but Simplicity gets distracted from that point by the title of the work, its possible reception, and its essential insignificance.

5 treatise a book dealing with a particular subject device an invention or contrivance; the word was often used specifically to refer to the entire show set forth on a civic pageant

7 tossed bandied about; received, debated and assessed toy insignificant thing

9 epistle covering letter

pass written permission

11 Brentford Brentford, a holiday resort and lovers' rendezvous about eight miles west of London; see Michaelmas 2.3.185. While 'Braine-ford', the spelling used in Purslowe's edition, may serve Simplicity's biographical purposes by implying high intelligence, the locale also suggests ironically his illegitimacy.

Bankside of Helicon a bankside was the ground sloping down to a body of water. Helicon, a mountain in Boetia sacred to Apollo and the muses, was the site of the fountain Hippocrene. Hence, the 'Bankside of Helicon' may refer to the margin of the waters of poetic inspiration flowing from Hippocrene. However, for Londoners the Bankside had less rarefied associations, for it was a suburb on the south side of the Thames, a site of stews, theatres, and baiting pits.

12 noble, gentle, commons bathos for comic effect; while 'noble' and 'gentle' suggest upper-class associates, 'commons' brings the poet down to his proper place in the social structure

15 scholars of all sorts, where, for his time, he did good and honest service beyond the small seas. He was fair-spoken, never accused of scurrilous or obscene language (a virtue not ever found in scenes of the like condition), of as honest meaning reputed as his words reported, neither too bitterly taxing nor too soothingly telling the world's broad abuses, moderately merry as sententiously serious, never 20 condemned but for his brevity in speech, ever wishing his tale longer to be assured he would continue to so good a purpose. Having all these handsome qualities simply and no other compounded with knavery, there is great hope he shall pass still by the fair way of good report, persevering in those honest courses which may become the son of 25 Simplicity, who, though he be now in a masque, yet is his face apparent enough. And so, loving cousins, having no news to send you at this time but that Deceit is entering upon you (whom I pray you have a care to avoid), and this notice I can give you of him: there are some six or eight pages before him, the Lawyer and the Devil behind him. In this care I leave you, not leaving to be,

Your kind and loving kinsman,
Simplicity

Prologue

Prologus

This, our device, we do not call a play,
Because we break the stage's laws today
Of acts and scenes. Sometimes a comic strain
Hath hit delight home in the master vein—
5 Thalia's prize. Melpomene's sad style
Hath shook the tragic hand another while.
The muse of history hath caught your eyes,

And she that chants the pastoral psalteries.
We now lay claim to none, yet all present,
Seeking out pleasure to find your content. 10
You shall perceive by what comes first in sight,
It was intended for a royal night.
There's one hour's words, the rest in songs and dances.

Lauds no man's own; no man himself advances.
No man is lifted but by other hands: 15
Say he could leap, he lights but where he stands.
Such is our fate: if good, much good may't do you;
If not, sorry, we'll lose our labours wi'you.

An Induction to the Masque, Induction prepared for his Majesty's entertainment at Denmark House

Enter Richmond and St James's

ST JAMES'S Why, Richmond, Richmond, why art so heavy?
RICHMOND I have reason enough for that, good sainted sister. Am I not built with stone—fair, large, and free stone—some part covered with lead too?
ST JAMES'S All this is but a light-headed understanding 5
now. I mean, why so melancholy?—thou look'st must-ily methinks.

RICHMOND
Do I so? and yet I dwell in sweeter air
Than you, sweet St James's. How three days'
Warming has spirited you! You have sometimes 10
Your vacations as other of your friends have,
If you call yourself to mind.

ST JAMES'S Thou never saw'st

14 small seas probably the English Channel, the North Sea, or the Irish Sea, as opposed to the Atlantic 15 scurrilous indecent
16 scenes situations
18 taxing criticizing
19 sententiously wisely, with the suggestion of some pomposity
22 simply without admixture, with simplicity, and as the offspring of Simplicity
23 knavery dishonesty
24 pass . . . report be well reputed
25 courses activities
26 masque punning on mask
27 cousins kindred spirits
31 behind after
32 leaving ceasing
Prologue.2 the stage's laws alluding to the normative status of classical models for the division of plays into acts and scenes. The prominent place of Terence on the curriculum of schools so re-enforced this idea of dramatic structure that it might be taken to have the force of 'laws'.
3 strain passage
4 master vein as the dominant effect

5 Thalia's the muse of comedy's Melpomene's the muse of tragedy's sad serious
7 muse of history Clio
8 pastoral literature of idyllic country life, the muse of which was Euterpe psalteries songs sung to a psaltery, an ancient stringed instrument 11 by . . . sight the Induction welcoming King James 14 Lauds no man's own praises no individual himself
Induction.o.1 Induction formal introduction
1 heavy sad; but mistakenly taken in the literal sense ('weighty') by Richmond
3 sister because the Latin word for 'palace' (regia) was feminine, such buildings were conventionally represented as female
3-4 free stone freestone: a high quality, fine grained limestone. The impressive royal apartments of Richmond, rising three storeys beside the Thames, were faced with freestone. The gown of the character probably imitated stonework, as those of St James's and Denmark House did brickwork. Presumably each character, like London in Truth, wore a headpiece with the recognizable skyline of each castle.

4 lead the towers atop Richmond were 'crowned with leaden cupolas of picturesque profile'; see Colvin.
5 light-headed foolish; St James's choice of word plays off 'heavy' (1) and Richmond's reference to her uppermost parts.
6-7 mustily tainted by damp (lit); sullen (fig)
8 sweeter air given the lack of urban pollution
10 Warming by means of the fireplaces; part of making St James's ready to accommodate Prince Charles and his attendants spirited enlivened
11 vacations periods of emptiness. The English court regularly moved from castle to castle to allow for sewage disposal, cleaning, and refurbishing.
friends other royal houses, e.g. Whitehall or Greenwich 12 call yourself to mind think of your own experience

My new gallery and my tennis-court, Richmond.
 RICHMOND
 No, but I heard of it, and from whence it came too.
 ST JAMES'S
 15 Why, from whence came it?
 RICHMOND
 Nay, lawfully derived, from the brickhills,
 As thou didst thyself.
 ST JAMES'S Thou breed'st crickets, I think,
 And that will serve for the anagram to a critic.
 Come, I know thy grief:
 20 Thou fear'st that our late rival, Denmark House,
 Will take from our regard, and we shall want
 The noble presence of our princely master,
 In his so frequent visitation,
 Which we were wont so fully to enjoy.
 RICHMOND
 25 And is not that a cause of sorrow then?
 ST JAMES'S
 Rather a cause of joy, that we enjoy
 So fair a fellowship. Denmark—why she's
 A stately palace and majestic,
 Ever of courtly breeding, but of late
 30 Built up unto a royal height of state,
 Rounded with noble prospects. By her side
 The silver-footed Thames is doth slide
 As, though more faintly, Richmond, does by thee,
Enter Denmark House
 Which I, denied to touch, can only see.

RICHMOND
 Who's this?
 ST JAMES'S 'Tis she herself, i'faith,
 Comes with a courteous brow. 35
 DENMARK HOUSE You're welcome, most nobly welcome.
 ST JAMES'S
 Hark you now, Richmond, did not I tell thee
 'Twas a royal house?
 DENMARK HOUSE Why, was there any doubt
 Of our kind gratulation? I am proud
 Only to be in fellowship with you, 40
 Co-mate and servant to so great a master.
 ST JAMES'S
 That's Richmond's fear, thou'lt rob us both;
 Thou hast such an enticing face of thine own.
 DENMARK HOUSE
 O let not that be any difference.
 When we do serve, let us be ready for't;
 45 And, called at his great pleasure, the round year
 In her circumferent arms will fold us all
 And give us all employment seasonable.
 I am for colder hours, when the bleak air
 Bites with an icy tooth. When summer has seared 50 And autumn, all discoloured, laid all fallow,
 Pleasure taken house and dwells within doors,
 Then shall my towers smoke and comely show;
 But when again the fresher morn appears,
 And the soft spring renews her velvet head,
 55 St James's takes my blest inhabitants,

- 13 gallery covered passageway. The long gallery of St James's was newly wainscotted in 1609–10. Prince Charles's main addition to this palace was a two-storey buttery built in 1617–18; though classical in character and probably designed by Inigo Jones, this building does not seem to include a new gallery.
tennis-court shown between St James's Street and Pall Mall on Fairthorne and Newcourt's map (1643–47). If the tennis-court was new in 1620, Colvin may be wrong in concluding that it was 'probably of Tudor date'; on the other hand, this line may allude to a renovation of the tennis-court.
 15 whence The King's Works Accounts (1616–17) note that the tennis-court built at Richmond for Prince Henry in 1610–12 was torn up, and the bricks were saved and cleaned for re-use. The discussion of the source of the tennis-court at St James's would be a nicer joke if the bricks from Richmond were used to make or to restore it.
 16 brickhills hills rich with deposits of clay for making bricks; there were several such areas on the outskirts of London
 18 anagram transposing letters: 'cricket' (or 'critic') becomes 'critic', fault finder 20 late recent
 21 take . . . regard detract from the esteem in which we are held
 23 visitation periodic visit
 24 Which . . . enjoy modifying 'presence'
 28 stately dignified
 29 courtly breeding Denmark House, originally Somerset House, was built between 1548 and 1551 by Edward Seymour, Duke of Somerset, Lord Protector of Edward VI. The palace served as the London residence of Princess Elizabeth during the reign of Queen Mary (1553–58). In 1604, James assigned Somerset House to Queen Anne, who initiated massive renovations and additions from 1609 until 1617, when Somerset House was renamed Denmark House in honour of Anne's Danish royal family.
 30 Built . . . state This celebration of the restoration of the magnificence of Denmark House might not have been altogether pleasing to King James, for he had to pay for the construction. 'Taken in conjunction with the sums spent on furnishing and equipment it [the construction] constitutes Somerset House one of the most ruinously expensive enterprises of James I's reign' (Colvin).
 31 Rounded finished off prospects look-outs; Anne's building included a three-storey, stone gallery of arched openings fronting on the garden.
 32 silver-footed shimmering
Thamesis the River Thames; see Civitatiss for Thamesis as a character in a pageant 36 courteous respectful; not, as Richmond fears, arrogant bro the forehead, as the seat of the facial expression of emotion (OED)
 39 Of . . . gratulation that we [Denmark House] would be welcomed with kindness
 43 face the face of the character and the façade of the building. Queen Anne made the main entrance to Denmark House more enticing when, in 1612–13, she restored the classical façade facing the Strand.
 44 difference cause for disagreement
 46 his Prince Charles's round cyclical
 47 circumferent encircling fold embrace
 48 seasonable suited to the seasons of the year
 50 seared withered
 51 fallow without crops
 53 comely show appear properly attractive
 55 velvet head an image of new growth: the soft, velvety covering both of the buds of some plants and of the antlers of deer as they develop

For she can better entertain them then
 In larger bounds, in park, sports, delights, and grounds.
 A third season yet, with the western oars,
 60 Calls 'Up to Richmond!' when the high-heated year
 Is in her solsticy; then she affords
 More sweeter-breathing air, more bounds, more pleasures:
 The hounds' loud music to the flying stag,
 The feathered taloner to the falling bird,
 65 The Bowman's twelve score prick, even at the door,
 And to these I could add a hundred more.
 Then let not us strive which shall be his homes,
 But strive to give him welcome when he comes.

RICHMOND

By my troth, he shall be welcome to Richmond
 Whensoever he comes.
 70 ST JAMES'S And to St James's, i'faith, at midnight.

DENMARK HOUSE

Meantime, 'tis fit I give him welcome hither.
 But first, to you, my royal royal'st guest,
 And I could wish your banquet were a feast;
 75 Howe'er, your welcome is most bounteous,
 Which, I beseech you, take as gracious.
 To you, my owner, master, and my lord,
 Let me the second unto you afford,
 And then from you to all, for it is you
 That gives indeed what I but seem to do.
 80 I was from ruin raised by a fair hand,
 A royal hand; in that state let me stand
 For ever now. To bounty I was bred;
 My cups full brimmed and my free tables spread

To hundreds daily, even without my door
 I had an open hand unto the poor. 85
 I know I shall so still; then shall their pray'rs
 Pass by the porter's keys, climb up each stairs,
 And knit and joint my new re-edified frames,
 That I shall able be to keep your names
 Unto eternity. Denmark House shall keep 90
 Her high name now till time doth fall asleep
 And be no more. Meantime, welcome, welcome,
 Heartily welcome!—but chiefly you, great sir,
 Whate'er lies in my power, command me all,
 As freely as you were at your Whitehall. Exeunt 95

A Courtly Masque

Enter Soldier and Scholar

SCHOLAR Soldier, ta-ra-ra-ra-ra, how is't?—thou look'st as if thou hadst lost a field today.
 SOLDIER No, but I have lost a day i'th' field. If you take me a maunding but where I am commanding, let 'em show me the house of correction. 5
 SCHOLAR Why, thou wert not maunding, wert thou?
 There's martial danger in that, believe it.
 SOLDIER No sir, but I was bold to show myself to some of my old and familiar acquaintance; but being disguised with my wants, there's nobody knew me. 10 SCHOLAR Faith, and that's the worst disguise a man can walk in. Thou wert better have appeared drunk in good clothes—much better. There's no superfluities shame a man, as to be over-brave, over-bold, over-swearing, over-lying, over-whoring; these add still to his repute. 15
 'Tis the poor indigence, the want, the lank deficiency,

58 bounds boundaries59 western oars Richmond being upstream, west of London60 'Up to Richmond!' using the call of the watermen soliciting passengers61 solsticy the summer solstice, when the sun is as far north as it can be from the equator62 bounds spaciousness. In 1605, James formed a new park, 3 1/2 miles in circumference, north of Richmond. Given its several hunting lodges and the size of its parkland, Richmond was, according to Colvin, the fourth most expensive royal house to maintain.63 music baying64 taloner falcon; 'talent' was an early form of 'talon' (Dyce)65 twelve score prick target set 240 yards away from the archerseven at the door conveniently located67 strive compete against one another69 By my troth truly70 midnight a most inconvenient time for the Prince's arrival72 you King James73 banquet a light repast usually served after a masque74 welcome the joy and goodwill toward the king

76 you Prince Charles77 the second 'welcome' understood afford extend78–9 you That gives acknowledging Prince Charles's sponsorship of the entertainment. The same lines make explicit a conventional trope of manor house shows: the magnificence of the building and the munificence of the festivities bespeak the worthiness of the host.80 a fair hand Queen Anne's81 in...stand an indirect petition for financial support82 bounty generosity85 I...poor such charitable hospitality was by this time a commonplace of poems in praise of country houses; see Heal and Hibbard86 pray'rs presumably prayers of thanksgiv-ing87 porter's doorkeeper's88 knit connect firmly (fig)joint fit togetherre-edified re-builtframes framing: the supporting structure of a building89 names the continued magnificence of a building secures the fame of its builders.

King James might have balked at this claim, since Denmark House, by its name, aggrandizes not James or Charles, but Christian IV of Denmark and his sister, Anne.95 Whitehall the main London residence of King James1 ta-ra-ra-ra-ra imitating the marching sounds of drums2 field battle3 field battlefield4 maunding begging5 house of correction institution for detaining and punishing offenders7 martial appertaining to someone in the military; punning on 'marshal', suggesting the danger of arrest and imprisonment for begging9–10 disguised with concealed by; hence, revealing10 wants needs13 superfluities excesses14 over-brave excessively gallant or hand-somerly dressed15 repute reputation16 indigence poverty lank deficiency skinny neediness

A Courtly Masque

as when a man cannot be brave, dares not be bold, is afraid to swear, wants maintenance for a lie and money to give a whore a supper—this is pauper, cuius 20 modicum non satis est. Nay, he shall never be rich with begging neither, which is another wonder, because many beggars are rich.

SOLDIER O canina facundia!—this dog-eloquence of thine will make thee somewhat one day, scholar. Couldst 25 thou turn but this prose into rhyme, there were a pitiful living to be picked out of it.

SCHOLAR I could make ballads for a need.

SOLDIER Very well, sir, and I'll warrant thee thou shalt never want subject to write of: one hangs himself today, 30 another drowns himself tomorrow, a sergeant stabbed next day, here a pettifogger a'the pillory, a bawd in the cart's nose, and a pander in the tail. Hic Mulier, Haec
Vir, fashions, fictions, felonies, fooleries—a hundred 35 havens has the balladmonger to traffic at, and new ones still daily discovered.

SCHOLAR Prithce, soldier, no further this way. I participate more of Heraclitus than Democritus; I could rather weep the sins of the people than sing 'em.

SOLDIER Shall I set thee down a course to live?

40 SCHOLAR Faith, a coarse living I think must serve my turn.
 But why hast thou not found out thine own yet?

SOLDIER
 Tush, that's resolved on—beg. When there's use for me,
 I shall be brave again, hugged and beloved.
 We are like winter garments, in the height

And hot blood of summer, put off, thrown by 45
 For moth's meat, never so much as thought on Till the drum strikes up storms again; and then,
 'Come my well-lined soldier' (with valour,
 Not velure) 'keep me warm. O, I love thee!'
 We shall be trimmed and very well brushed then. 50
 If we be faced with fur, 'tis tolerable,
 For we may pillage then and steal our prey
 And not be hanged for't, when the least fing'ring
 In peaceful summer chokes us. A soldier,
 At the best, is even but the forlorn hope 55
 Unto his country, sent desperately out
 And never more expected. If he come,
 Peace's war perhaps, the law, providently
 Has provided for him; some house or lands
 May be suspended in wrangling controversy 60
 And he be hired to keep possession,
 For there may be swords drawn; he may become
 The abject second to some stinking bailiff.
 O, let him serve the pox first, and die a gentleman.
 Come, I know my ends, but would fain provide for 65
 thee.
 Canst thou make?

SCHOLAR What, I have no handicraft, man.

SOLDIER
 Cuckolds, make cuckolds, 'tis a pretty trade
 In a peaceful city; 'tis women's work, man,
 And they are good paymasters.

SCHOLAR I dare not.
 'Tis a work of supererogation, 70

18 maintenance financial means 19–20 pauper . . . est the poor man, whose means are not enough 23 canina facundia dog-eloquence (lit);
 snippy, snarling rhetoric (fig)
 26 picked pecked; metaphor emphasizing the poor income from poetry
 27 for a need if necessary
 28 warrant guarantee
 31 pettifogger legal practitioner of lower status; one who uses unfair, quibbling methods pillory stocks
bawd prostitute
 32 cart's carts were used for transporting offenders to their punishment
pander pimp
Hic Mulier or, The Man-Woman (London, 1620); pamphlet (of which the title is deliberately incorrect in grammar) criticizing women for dressing and acting like men
 32–3 Haec Vir or, The Womanish-Man: Being an Answer to . . . 'Hic Mulier' (London, 1620).
 33 felonies serious crimes
 34 traffic at do business in 37 Heraclitus 'the weeping philosopher' of Ephesus (c. 500 BC) who understood the universe as an unceasing conflict of opposites

Democritus 'the laughing philosopher' of later antiquity (c. 460–370 BC) who recommended cheerfulness as an ethical principle
 40 a coarse living playing on the Soldier's 'course' (39), the Scholar complains about his prospects—unemployment and poverty. Such complaints were neither unusual nor unfounded. The number of students at Oxford and Cambridge rose sharply during the first two decades of the 17th century and, after a decline in the 1620s, reached a peak in the 1630s that would not be equalled until the 1820s. Unfortunately, there was no corresponding increase in the number of positions in the schools or the church for these scholars.
serve my turn meet my need
 43 brave courageous and finely attired
 49 velure a kind of velvet, punning on 'valour'
 50 trimmed prepared for use 51 faced adorned with, as the collars and cuffs of military jackets often were 52 pillage plunder

53 fing'ring petty theft
 55 forlorn hope doomed or hopeless hope; specifically, a band of soldiers picked out to lead the attack
 58 providently with foresight
 60 suspended legally delayed
 63 abject lowly second assistant; representative of a principal in a duel
 64 O . . . gentleman better to commit oneself to a disfiguring disease and die with one's integrity than to be reduced to being the 'abject second to some stinking bailiff.' 'Serve', as 'be employed by', ironically sets employment in opposition to remaining a gentleman; 'serve' may also connote 'endure' and 'dispense'.
 65 fain willingly
 66 make produce things
 67 Cuckolds men whose wives have been unfaithful to them
 70 a work of supererogation in Catholic moral theology, an act that is not just good but morally better, such as St Paul's teaching that to choose virginity is better than to choose matrimony. Part of the humour here comes from calling a sin a morally superior work.

The World Toft at Tennis.

And the church forbids it.
 SOLDIER Prithee, what's Latin for
 A 'cuckold', scholar? I could never learn yet. 95
 SCHOLAR
 Faith, the Latins have no proper word for it
 That ever I read. 'Homo', I take it, is the best,
 75 Because it is a common name to all men.
 SOLDIER
 You're mad fellows, you scholars. I am persuaded Were I a scholar now, I could not want. 100
 SCHOLAR
 Every man's most capable of his own grief.
 A scholar said you?—why, there are none nowadays.
 80 Were you a scholar, you'd be a singular fellow.
 SOLDIER
 How, no scholars! What's become of 'em all?
 SCHOLAR
 I'll make it proof from your experience.
 A commander's a commander, captain, captain;
 But, having no soldiers, where's the command?
 85 Such are we: all doctors, no disciples now.
 Every man's his own teacher; none learns of others.
 You have not heard of our mechanic rabbis,
 That shall dispute in their own tongues backward and forward
 With all the learned fathers of the Jews.
 SOLDIER
 90 Mechanic rabbis!—what might those be?
 SCHOLAR
 I'll show you sir, and they are men are daily to be seen:
 There's Rabbi Job, a venerable silk-weaver,
 Jehu, a throwster dwelling i'th' Spitalfields;

There's Rabbi Abimelech, a learned cobbler;
 Rabbi Lazarus, a superstitious tailor.
 These shall hold up their shuttles, needles, awls,
 Against the gravest Levite of the land,
 And give no ground neither.
 SOLDIER That I believe;
 They have no ground for any thing they do.
 SCHOLAR
 You understand right, and these men by practic
 Have got the theory of all the arts 100
 At their fingers' ends, and in that they'll live.
 Howe'er they'll die I know not, for they change daily.
 SOLDIER This is strange.
 How come they to attain this knowledge? 105
 SCHOLAR
 As boys learn arithmetic, practise with counters
 To reckon sums of silver, so with their tools
 They come to grammar, logic, rhetoric,
 And all the sciences; as, for example,
 The devout weaver sits within his loom 110
 And thus he makes a learned syllogism:
 His woof the major and his warp the minor,
 His shuttle then the brain, and firm conclusion
 Makes him a piece of stuff that Aristotle,
 Ramus, nor all the logicians can take a' pieces. 115
 SOLDIER
 This has some likelihood.
 SCHOLAR So likewise by
 His deep instructive and his mystic tools,
 The tailor comes to be rhetorical.
 First on the spread velvet, satin, stuff, or cloth,
 He chalks out a circumferent paraphrase, 120
 That goes about the bush where the thief stands.

71 the church the Church of England; see Article XIV of the Thirty-nine Articles for a repudiation of works of supererogation as conducive to impiety and pride. Ironically, in rejecting supererogation, the church forbids not only the extreme of cuckoldry, but also its opposite, virginity
 74 Homo man, or, as applied by the Scholar, everyman
 74–5 Homo...men proverbial
 77 want be needy
 78 capable of susceptible to; typically wry humour
 80 singular punning: (a) unusual; (b) one of a kind
 85 disciples dedicated students
 87 mechanic pertaining to manual work rabbis in general, learned masters, but the term applied specifically to puritan sectaries, especially lay preachers (Heinemann)
 88 tongues languages
 92 venerable respectable
 93 throwster one who twists silk fibres into raw silk or raw silk into thread

Spitalfields London suburb to the north-east; centre of the silk trade which James backed strongly
 94 cobbler shoemaker
 95 superstitious probably with a pun on 'stitch'
 96 shuttles devices for weaving cloth awls sharp pointed tool by which shoemakers made holes in leather 97 gravest authoritative
Levite one of the tribe of Levi; generally, a churchman
 98 give no ground not retreat
 99 ground basis
 100 practic practice (of their trades)
 102 At their fingers' ends because they work with their hands
 106 counters devices for counting
 107 reckon calculate
 108 grammar...rhetoric the trivium, the lower division of the liberal arts of medieval schooling
 109 sciences in addition to the trivium, the quadrivium: music, arithmetic, geometry, and astronomy

111 syllogism an argument consisting of two related propositions (the major premise and the minor premise) leading necessarily to a third proposition (the conclusion)
 112 woof thread stretched across the width of a loom warp thread stretched lengthwise, at right angle to the woof
 114 Aristotle philosopher and logician of antiquity; along with Ramus, the most influential logicians in English schools in 1620
 115 Ramus Peter Ramus, 16th-century philosopher, who developed an influential system of logic different from Aristotle's
 117 mystic penetrating into spiritual mysteries; hyperbolic praise
 119 stuff fabric
 120 chalks out outlines circumferent roundabout paraphrase to retell in different words, and, in this case, to amplify 121 That...stands misses the point; proverbial

Then come his shears in shape of an eclipsis
 And takes away the t'other's too long tail.
 By his needle he understands ironia,
 125 That with one eye looks two ways at once;
Metonymia ever at his fingers' ends;
 Some call his piccadill synecdoche,
 But I think rather that should be his yard,
 Being but pars pro toto; and by metaphor
 130 All know the cellarage under the shop-board
 He calls his hell, not that it is a place
 Of spirits' abode, but that from that abyss
 Is no recovery or redemption
 To any owner's hand, whatever falls.
 135 I could run further, were't not tedious,
 And place the stiff-toed cobbler in his form.
 But let them mend themselves, for yet all's naught.
 They now learn only never to be taught.

SOLDIER
 Let them alone. How shall we learn to live?

SCHOLAR
 140 Without book is most perfect, for with 'em
 We shall hardly. Thou mayst keep a fence-school.
 'Tis a noble science.

SOLDIER
 I had rather be i'th' crown-office.
 Thou mayst keep school too, and do good service,

To bring up children for the next age better. 145
 SCHOLAR
 'Tis a poor living that's picked out of boys' buttocks.
 SOLDIER
 'Tis somewhat better than the night-farmer yet.
Music. Pallas descends
 Hark! What sounds are these?
 SCHOLAR Ha! there's somewhat more:
 There is in sight a glorious presence,
 A presence more than human.
 SOLDIER An amazing one, Scholar. 150
 If ever thou couldst conjure, speak now.
 SCHOLAR
 In name of all the deities, what art thou?
 Thy shine is more than sub-celestial;
 'Tis at the least heavenly angelical.
 PALLAS
 A patroness unto ye both, ye ignorant 155
 And undeserving favourites of my fame.
 You are a soldier?
 SOLDIER Since these arms could wield arms,
 I have professed it, brightest deity.
 PALLAS
 To thee I am Bellona.—You are a scholar?
 SCHOLAR
 In that poor pilgrimage, since I could go 160

122 shears large scissors

eclipsis figure of speech by which words needed to make sense are omitted or, in this instance, deleted or cut; punning on the clipping of scissors

123 t'other's the paraphrase's tail punning on 'tale'

124 ironia figure of speech in which the literal meaning is opposite to the intended one; the first syllable punning on 'eye'

125 one...ways the single hole of the needle has openings on its two sides

126 Metonymia figure of speech by which a quality or an adjunct is used to identify a thing; the third syllable punning perhaps on 'nim', 'to filch'.

at...ends figuratively, ready at hand, or acquired by practical experience. For the tailor to have metonymy 'at his fingers' ends' may mean that he is well versed in rhetoric; or, taking the phrase literally, if a needle is understood to be at his finger tips, the line points to, metonymically, the needle trace

127 piccadill large, starched collar, usually reinforced with wire and adorned with a lace or perforated border, made by tailors synecdoche figure of speech by which a part is used to refer to the whole, the piccadill being a thing characteristic of the tailor or a yard being a part of the whole piece of cloth needed to make a piece of clothing. The actor, by gesturing toward an imaginary collar about his neck, might set up a pun on the second syllable of 'synecdoche'.

128 yard measuring-stick

129 pars pro toto the part for the whole; with bawdy suggestiveness

130 shop-board platform at which tailors worked

131 hell place beneath the shop-board where tailors threw their scraps

132 abode dwelling-place

abyss a (the infernal) pit

133 redemption punning on salvation and buying back

134 To...hand metonymic for the owner unable to grasp again for regain possession of the material whatever falls preceding 'of' understood

136 stiff-toed alluding to the cobbler's last, inserted into a shoe when working on it form the cobbler's seat, a long one without a back

137 all's punning on 'awl'

naught pointless

139 live choose how best to lead our lives

140 Without...perfect with the additional quibbling sense: by memory is most expert

141 hardly after which 'live' (in the sense of 'to make a living') understood fence-school fencing school; for Middleton's criticism of fencing schools, see Quarrel, and Peacemaker 461-8.

142 science field of knowledge

143 crown-office administrative offices of the Court of King's Bench

146 poor living On the status of the schoolmaster, see Richard Mulcaster:

'Our calling creeps low and hath pain for a companion, still thrust to the wall, though still confessed good' (quoted in Notestein). Notestein himself observes that the schoolmaster 'did about as well as the poorer country clergyman, but his calling had by no means the same prestige'.

picked...buttocks by keeping them in their seats; alluding perhaps to corporal punishment and homosexual activity
 147 night-farmer gong-farmer, a cleaner of privies

147.1 Pallas Minerva in Roman mythology; goddess of wisdom and warfare, she was normally portrayed wearing some armour and carrying her shield, on which the head of the Gorgon was depicted descends probably by means of a mechanical device covered to look like a cloud

151 conjure communicate with spirits; a power represented as a product of learning, for example in Marlowe's Doctor Faustus, 1.3.1-20 or Shakespeare's Hamlet, 1.1.40.

153 sub-celestial beneath the heavens; earthly

155 patroness protector and advocate ignorant mis-informed

159 Bellona goddess of war

160 pilgrimage journey, especially one made as an act of devotion go walk

The World Toft at Tennis.

I hitherto have walked.
 PALLAS To thee I am Minerva,
 Pallas to both, goddess of arts and arms,
 Of arms and arts, for neither has precedence.
 For he's the complete man partakes of both,
 165 The soul of arts joined with the flesh of valour,
 And he alone participates with me.
 Thou art no soldier unless a scholar,
 Nor thou a scholar unless a soldier.
 You've noble breedings both, worthy foundations,
 170 And will ye build up rotten battlements
 On such fair groundsels?—that will ruin all.
 Lay wisdom on thy valour, on thy wisdom valour,
 For these are mutual coincidents.
 What seeks the soldier?
 SOLDIER My maintenance.
 PALLAS Lay by thine arms and take the city then.
 175 There's the full cup and can of maintenance.—
 And your grief is want too?
 SCHOLAR I want all but grief.
 PALLAS No, you want most what most you do profess.
 Where read you to be rich was happiest?
 180 He had no bay from Phoebus nor from me
 That e'er wrote so, no Minerva in him.
 My priests have taught that poverty is safe,
 Sweet, and secure, for nature gives man nothing
 At his birth. When life and earth are wedded, 185 There's neither basin held nor dowry given;
 At parting nor is any garner stored,
 Wardrobe or warehouse kept for their return.
 Wherefore shall, then, man count his myriads
 Of gold and silver idols, since thrifty nature
 Will nothing lend but she will have't again— 190
 And life and labour for her interest?
 My priests do teach: seek thou thyself within,
 Make thy mind wealthy, thy knowing conscience,
 And those shall keep thee company from hence. 195
 Or would you wish to emulate the gods,
 Live, as you may imagine, careless and free,
 With joys and pleasures crowned, and those eternal?
 This were to far exceed 'em, for while earth lasts,
 The deities themselves abate their fullness,
 Troubled with cries of ne'er contented man. 200
 Man then to seek and find it?—all that hope
 Flew when Pandora's fatal box flew ope.
 SOLDIER
 Divine lady, there's yet a competence
 Which we come short of.
 PALLAS That may as well be caused
 From your own negligence as our slow blessings; 205
 But I'll prefer you to a greater power,
 Even Jupiter himself, father and king of gods,
 With whom I may well join in just complaint.
 These latter ages have despoiled my fame.
 Minerva's altars are all ruined now;
 210 I had a long-adored Palladium,
 Offerings and incense fuming on my shrine.
 Rome held me dear, and old Troy gave me worship;
 All Greece renowned me till the Ida prize
 Joined me with wrathful Juno to destroy 'em,
 215 For we are better ruined than profaned.
 Now let the latter ages count the gains
 They got by wanton Venus' sacrifice.
 But I'll invoke great Jupiter.
 SCHOLAR Do, goddess,
 And re-erect the ruins of thy fame, 220

163 precedence priority, hence superiority;
 see l. 374.4, and note to l. 499.1
 166 participates has things in common with 169 breedings up-bringsings
 170 battlements uppermost parts of a wall;
 usually indented parapets
 171 groundsels foundation timbers
 173 coincident correspondences in character
 174 maintenance livelihood
 176 full cup symbol of the physical means of support
can proverbial; see also Textual Notes 177 want...want first used in the sense of 'poverty'; secondly as 'need'
 178 want lack what...profess that is, scholarship, good scholarship, the lessons of which Pallas goes on to establish 179 Where...happiest the critique of the desire for wealth informs the masque, especially in the figure of Deceit who,
 in every role except that of a Ranger, tempts others with the world's wealth or plots to horde it; see ll. 502-4, 591-3,
 655, 715-17, 809-10

180 bay a wreath of bay leaves symbolized the poet and the conqueror
Phoebus see note to Epistle.1-3
 182 poverty is safe proverbial
 184 When...wedded an image of birth, when the soul and body are conjoined 185 basin rich plate, customary as a wedding gift held owned dowry assets given with a wife 186 parting death
garner storehouse of grain
 187 Wardrobe room or cupboard for clothes warehouse place for storing goods
 188 myriads countless numbers
 191 interest profit earned on a loan 194 those that is, one's rich mind and well-informed conscience
keep thee company go with you 195 emulate strive to behave like
 196 careless carefree
 199 abate curtail 201 it divine fullness that stressed, so as to clarify that hope alone remained in Pandora's box

202 Pandora's fatal box a beautiful box, given by Jove to Pandora (according to Hesiod, the first mortal woman who lived), containing a host of plagues that were released and made humans suffer 203 competence sufficient income
 206 prefer recommend
 208 complaint grievance
 211 Palladium statue of Pallas; most famous was that at Troy
 212 fuming smoking
 214 Ida prize a golden apple, named after Mount Ida, the site where Pallas,
 Juno, and Venus met to be judged by Paris. When Paris chose Venus as the fairest, Pallas and Juno became allies in opposition to the Greeks.
 215 wrathful furious
 'em Greeks and Trojans, through war
 216 profaned desecrated
 218 wanton lascivious sacrifice of Helen of Troy, whom Venus offered to Paris when he had to evaluate the beauty of the goddesses
 219 invoke summon

The World Toft at Tennis.

For poesy can do it.
 PALLAS Altitonant,
 Imperial-crowned and thunder-armed Jove,
 Unfold thy fiery veil, the flaming robe
 And superficialities of thy better brightness;
 225 Descend from thine orbicular chariot;
 Listen the plaints of thy poor votaries.
 'Tis Pallas calls, thy daughter, Jupiter,
 Ta'en from thee by the Lemnian Mulciber,
 A midwife god to the delivery
 230 Of thy most sacred, fertile, teeming brain.
Music. Jupiter descends
 Hark! These sounds proclaim his willing, sweet descent.
 If not full blessings, expect some content.
 JUPITER
 What would our daughter?
 PALLAS Just-judging Jove,
 I mediate the suit of humble mortals,
 235 By whose large sceptre all their fates are swayed,
 Adverse or auspicious.
 JUPITER 'Tis more than Jupiter
 Can do to please 'em. Unsatisfied man
 Has in his ends no end. Not hell's abyss
 Is deeper gulfed than greedy avarice.
 240 Ambition finds no mountain high enough
 For his aspiring foot to stand upon.
 One drinks out all his blessings into surfeits;

Another throws 'em out, as all were his,
 And the gods bound for prodigal supply.
 What is he lives content in any kind?
 245 That long incensèd nature is now ready
 To turn all back into the fruitless chaos.
 PALLAS
 These are two noble virtues, my dread sire,
 Both arts and arms, well-wishers unto Pallas.
 JUPITER
 How can it be but they have both abused,
 250 And would, for their ills, make our justice guilty?
 Show them their shames, Minerva, what the young world
 In her unstable youth did then produce.
 She should grow graver now, more sage, more wise,
 Know concord and the harmony of goodness;
 255 But if her old age strike with harsher notes,
 We may then think she is too old, and dotes.
 Strike by white art, a theomantic power,
 Magic divine, not the devil's horror
 But the delicious music of the spheres.
 260 The thrice three Worthies summon back to life.
 There let 'em see what arts and arms commixed,
 For they had both, did in the world's broad face—
 Those that did propagate and beget their fames,
 And for posterity left lasting names.
 265 PALLAS
 I shall, great Jupiter.

221 poesy poetry
Altitonant invoking Jove as 'thundering on high'
 222 Imperial-crowned emperor
Jove or Jupiter; chief deity; sky-god; his characterization picks up the derivation of his name from the verb 'to shine' 223 veil covering; this suggests that the staging, included a discovery of Jupiter behind a brilliant fabric embellished with flames of cloth, perhaps a curtain or perhaps the character's robe. If this was the case, then the masque included a double revelation on the upper stage:
 first this one of Jupiter; then (266.1) that of the Muses and the Nine Worthies
 224 superficies outer manifestation
 225 orbicular chariot spherical vehicle
 226 votaries devoted worshippers
 228 Lemnian Mulciber in Greek mythology Vulcan; married to Pallas and banished to Lemnos by Jove

 230 teeming bountiful
 234 mediate intercede on behalf of suit petition
 235 sceptre rod of royal or imperial authority fates futures
 236 Adverse unfavourable auspicious prosperous
 241 aspiring climbing up; ambitious 242 surfeits excesses; illness and nausea caused by excessive indulgence 244 bound legally contracted prodigal wastefully lavish
 245 kind way
 246 incensèd inflamed (with anger)
 247 fruitless sterile chaos the formless void of primordial matter
 248 dread reverend

250 abused done wrong
 251 make... guilty blame us for being just 252 shames deeds to make them feel ashamed
 254 graver more serious and dignified sage wise and grave
 257 dotes is foolishly fond of 258 white art white magic, magic relying on manipulation of the powers of nature theomantic divinely inspired 260 music of the spheres harmonious sounds produced by the motions of the planets and stars
 262 commixed joined together
 263 in the world's broad face in the wide world
 264 beget sire; generate
 265 posterity later generations 266.1 invocation chant summoning the muses

Music and this song as an invocation to the nine Muses, who, in the time, are discovered on the upper stage, placed by the Nine Worthies; and toward the conclusion [the Worthies] descend, each one led by a Muse, the most proper and pertinent to the person of the Worthy, as Terpsichore with David, Urania with Joshua, etc. After the song, Pallas describes them [the Worthies]; then [they] dance and exeunt

The First Song

Muses, usher in those states,
And amongst 'em choose your mates.
There wants not one, nor one to spare,
For thrice three both your numbers are.
Learning's mistress, fair Calliope,
Loud Euterpe, sweet Terpsichore, 270

Soft Thalia, sad Melpomene,
Pleasant Clio, large Erato,
High-aspiring-eyed Urania,
Honey-lingued Polyhymnia,
Leave awhile your Thespian springs
And usher in those more than kings.
We call them Worthies; 'tis their due
Though long time dead, still live by you.
Enter [the Muses, ushering in] the Nine Worthies, three after three, whom, as they enter, Pallas describes 275

280

PALLAS

These three were Hebrews:
This noble duke was he at whose command
Hyperion reined his fiery coursers in,
And fixèd stood over Mount Gilboa;

266.2 Muses originally, nymphs of the springs whose water inspired artists; later, goddesses of song and representatives of the various arts. The last of these roles is most pertinent to Tennis because the conjunction of Muses and Worthies constitutes an emblem of the combination of arts and arms. The Muses probably wore loose, light gowns, for, as Thomas Dekker said of the costumes of the Liberal Sciences in Troia-Nova Triumphans (1612), 'Knowledge should be free.' Gowns of different colours, distinctive headdresses, and properties identifying areas of expertise likely individuated the Muses, as they did in the Lord Mayor's Show of 1620, John Squire's Tes Irenes Trophoea: '... on the water was Pernassus Mount, whereon the Nine Muses sate; Clio the first, suted in a gowne of purple taffaty, and studiously employ'd in turning over bookes, shee being the Historical Muse; Melpomene was attired in a black taffaty robe, her head deckt with cypress, and playing on a theorbo; Thalia, the Comic Muse, in a light changeable taffaty robe, and playing on a voyall; Euterpe, the Muse that first invented wind instruments, was richly apparelled, and play'd on a fluterecorder; Terpsichore on the lute; and the Geometrical Muse Erato with a scale and compass in her hand; the Heroicall Muse Calliope was shap'd in a tauny silke robe, and her temples girt with bayes; the heavenly Muse Urania, that invented astrologie, was deckt in a robe of azure taffaty semined with starres, on her head shee wore a coronet of starres, and her right hand supported a sphere; Polymneia, the inventress of rhetoric, assumed her place nearest to Apollo...' (Nichols, 4:621-2). For the properties associated with each Muse in classical lore, see the notes to 266.5, 266.6, 266.7. For a contemporary illustration of the discovered revealed; see note to l. 223

Muses, see Folger MS V.b.232, ff. 146^v-150^v.

266.3 Worthies probably wearing armour, the head gear of which may have individuated the characters, as it does to some degree in the pictures of the Worthies in Folger MS V.b.232, ff. 142-6. In this manuscript, for example, the style of the Greek helmet differs from that of the plumed Roman one, and David wears what appears to be a simple cloth hat whereas Godfrey of Boulogne has a helmet with a cross on the top. The Worthies may have been further individuated by crests on their costumes; for details of this possibility, see F. J. Furnivall's transcription of a poem on the Nine Worthies in BL MS. Harley 2259, f. 39^v.

266.5 pertinent the illustrative pairings noted by Rowley (266.6-9), that of David with Terpsichore (muse of music and dance; classical property: a lyre) and that of Joshua and Urania (muse of astronomy; property: a globe, and sometimes a staff for pointing out features of the globe) do not clearly establish the basis for aligning Muses with Worthies. Given the prominent role of Julius Caesar in tragedy and of Hector in epic poetry, the former would probably accompany Melpomene (muse of tragedy; properties: a wreath of ivy, the mask of tragedy, and sometimes a weapon), and the latter, Calliope (muse of epic; properties: a wax tablet and pencil, a closely rolled parchment, or, sometimes, a trumpet). More tentative are the following alignments: Arthur with Erato (muse of love poetry; properties: a crown of roses and myrtle and a small lyre) because of the crucial importance of love (and infidelity) to Camelot; Godfrey of Boulogne with Thalia (muse of comedy; properties: a wreath of ivy, the mask of comedy, and sometimes a shepherd's staff) because of the fame that his court earned for festivities; Alexander the Great with Clio (muse of history and philosophy; property: a half-opened scroll and laurel wreath) because Clio's symbol, the laurel wreath, was also appropriate to the world's greatest conqueror; Judas Maccabee with Euterpe (muse of pastoral poetry; property: horns, most often flute) because he represents a more primitive age; Charlemagne with Polyhymnia (muse of rhetoric; property: a veil) because he was a great law-giver.

266.6 Terpsichore muse of music and dance; traditionally depicted with a lyre

266.7 David writer of the psalms; see l. 287
Urania muse of astronomy; depicted carrying a globe and sometimes with a staff for pointing out details of the globe
Joshua made the sun and the moon stand still in order to triumph over the Amorites; see Joshua 10:12-14

267 states dignified personages

269 There... spare there are exactly the right number

272 Loud symbolized by horns

274 large generous, unrestrained

276 Honey-lingued sweet-spoken

277 Thespian the city of Thespiae was located at the foot of Mount Helicon, home of the Muses

280 still live preceding 'they' understood

280.2 three after three see Textual Introduction, Companion, 668

282 This noble duke Joshua; see 266.7-9 note

283 Hyperion sun-god
fiery coursers horses drawing the chariot of the sun

284 Mount Gilboa an error for Gibeon, one of the cities of the Amorites over which Joshua made the sun stand still

The World Toft at Tennis.

285 This Mattathias' son, the Maccabee,
Under whose arm no less than worthies fell;
This the most sweet and sacred psalmograph.
These, of another sort, of much less knowledge,
Little less valour: a Macedonian born,
290 Whom afterwards the world could scarcely bear
For his great weight in conquest; this Troy's best
soldier;
This Rome's first Caesar. These three of latter times,
And to the present more familiar:
Great Charles of France, and the brave Boulogne
duke,
295 And this is Britain's glory, kinged thirteen times.
You've fair aspects; more to express Jove's power,
Show you have motion for a jovial hour.
The Worthies dance and exeunt

JUPITER
Were not these precedents for all future ages?

SCHOLAR
But none attains their glories, King of Stars.
300 These are the fames are followed and pursued,
But never overtaken.

JUPITER The Fates below,
The gods' arms, are not shortened, nor do we shine
With fainter influence. Who conquers now
Makes it his tyrant's prize and not his honour's, 305 Abusing all the blessings of the gods.
Learnings and arts are theories, no practics;
To understand is all they study to.
Men strive to know too much, too little do.
Enter Time

SOLDIER
Plaints are not ours alone, great Jupiter.
See, Time himself comes weeping.

310 TIME Who has more cause?
Who more wronged than Time? Time passes all men
With a regardless eye at best. The worst

Expect him with a greedy appetite:
The landed lord looks for his quarter-day;
The big-bellied usurer for his teeming gold,
315 That brings him forth the child of interest—
He that, beyond the bounds of heaven's large blessing,
Hath made a fruitless creature to increase,
Dull, earthen minerals to propagate—
These only do expect and entertain me.
320 But being come, they bend their plodding heads,
And while they count their bags, they let me pass,
Yet instant wish me come about again.
Would Time deserve their thanks, or Jove their praise,
He must turn time only to quarter-days.
325 O, but my wrongs they are innumerable!
The lawyer drives me off from term to term,
Bids me—and I do't—bring forth my Alethe,
My poor child Truth; he sees and will not see her.
What I could manifest in one clear day
330 He still delays a cloudy jubilee.
The prodigal wastes and makes me sick with surfeits.
The drunkard, strong in wine, trips up my heels
And sets me topsy-turvy on my head,
Waking my silent passage in the night
335 With revels, noise, and thunder-clapping oaths,
And snoring on my bright meridian.
And when they think I pass too slowly by,
They have a new-found vapour to expel me—
They smoke me out. Ask 'em but why they do't, 340 And he that worst can speak, yet this can say:
'I take this whiff to drive the time away.'
O, but the worst of all, women do hate me.
I cannot set impression on their cheeks
With all my circular hours, days, months, and years, 345 But 'tis wiped off with gloss and pencilry.
Nothing so hateful as grey hairs and time—
Rather no hair at all! 'Tis sin's autumn now,
For those fair trees that were more fairer cropped

285 Mattathias' son Judas, one of the five sons of Mattathias who rebelled with his sons against the pagan abuses of Antiochus in 167 bc.
286 Under . . . fell platitudinous praise
287 This David psalmograph writer of psalms
288 less knowledge less scholarly 289 a Macedonian Alexander the Great, born in ancient Macedonia born quibbles on 'borne', given 'bear' in the next line 291 this Hector
292 Rome's first Caesar Julius Caesar
294 Charles Charlemagne
Boulogne duke Godfrey, Duke of Boulogne
295 Britain's glory Arthur
296 aspects physical features
297 jovial joyful, punning on 'Jove'
298 precedents previous examples
301 Fates Clotho, Lachesis, and Atropos:

the three goddesses who determine the course of human life
306 practics applied sciences
308.1 Time in pageantry and in emblem books, Time is usually portrayed as an old man, with the identifying properties noted by Middleton in Truth 468: wings, a scythe, and an hour glass
309 Plaints complaints; grievances; lamentations
312 regardless unregarded, or indifferent; whereas the best care little about Time, the worst watch for it because it serves their materialistic purposes
314 landed lord landlord quarter-day the day, one every three months, when rents were due 315 usurer moneylender, usually at excessive rates of interest teeming procreative; breeding
319 minerals gold and silver
320 entertain welcome

321 being come modifying 'me', Time plodding stolidly working 322 bags money-bags
323 instant immediately
327 term a period of the year appointed for the sitting of a court
328 Alethe Truth, daughter of Time
331 jubilee period of fifty years
332 prodigal spendthrift
337 meridian noon
339 vapour i.e. tobacco smoke
344 set impression leave a mark; print lines on the face 346 gloss a superficial lustre produced by make-up pencilry painting
348 no hair alluding to the loss of hair because of syphilis autumn time of the harvest
349 more fairer cropped more bountifully laden with a crop

350 Or they fall of themselves or will be lopped.
 Even Time itself, to number all his griefs
 Would waste himself unto his ending date.
 How many would eternity wish here,
 And that the sun, and time, and age, might stand,
 355 And leave their annual distinction,
 That nature were bed-rid, all motion sleep?
 Time, having then such foes, has cause to weep.
 Redress it Jupiter. Exit Time

JUPITER

I tell thee, glorious daughter, and you things
 360 Shut up in wretchedness, the world knew once
 His age of happiness. Blessed times owned him
 Till those two ugly ills, Deceit and Pride,
 Made it a perished substance. Pride brought in Forgetfulness of goodness, merit, virtue,
 365 And placed ridiculous officers in life—
 Vainglory, fashion, humour, and such toys
 That shame to be produced:
 The frenzy of apparel that's run mad
 And knows not where to settle, masculine painting, 370 And the five Starches, mocking the five senses.
 All in their different and ridiculous colours,
 Which, for their apish and fantastic follies,
 I summon to make odious, and will fit 'em
 With flames of their own colours.

Music striking up a light fantastic air, those five Starches afore summoned come dancing in, and, after a ridiculous strain, White Starch, challenging precedence, standing upon her right by antiquity, out of her just anger presents their pride to 'em. Those five Starches—White, Blue, Yellow, Green, and Red—all properly habited to express their affected colours

WHITE STARCH

What, no respect amongst you? must I wake you 375
 In your forgetful duties? Jet before me?
 Take place of me?—You rude, presumptuous gossips,
 Pray, who am I?—not I the primitive starch?
 You, blue-eyed frauchen, looks like fire and brimstone;
 You, caudle-colour, much of the complexion 380
 Of high Shrove-Tuesday batter, yellowhammer;
 And you, my tansy-face, that shows like pride
 Served up in sorrel sops, green-sickness baggage;
 And last, thou Red Starch, that wear'st all thy blushes
 Under thy cheeks, looks like a strangled moon-calf 385
 With all thy blood settled about thy neck—
 The ensign of thy shame, if thou hadst any.
 Know I'm Starch Protestant, thou Starch Puritan,
 With the blue nostril, whose tongue lies i' thy nose.

BLUE STARCH

Wicked interpretation!

350 Or either
 lopped cut back; applied to hair, this image points toward venereal disease (a cause of hair falling out) or the cutting of hair (a fault for which women were castigated by James I)
 355 distinction of the seasons
 356 motion temporal movement
 358 Redress set right
 359 things disparaging reference to Time, the Soldier, and the Scholar
 360 wretchedness misery
 363 it happiness
 365 officers people in positions of authority
 366 Vainglory pretentiousness fashion novelty humour whimsy
 toys insignificant things
 367 shame are ashamed
 368 frenzy of craziness about
 369 masculine painting use of make-up by men
 370 mocking generally, imitating; in this context, corresponding in number to 371 colours with the added sense of deceptive outward appearance; perhaps with a pun on 'collars', a feature of their costumes 372 apish foolishly imitative fantastic grotesque follies mischiefs 373 odious hateful fit supply
 374 flames suggesting bright, flamboyant colours in flame patterns; for similar costumes, see The Lords' Masque (1613) by Thomas Campion and Inigo Jones's designs for the same show. Presumably the colours of the Starches' costumes were deepened for theatrical effect, for the shades produced by coloured starches were quite pale; see Arnold.

 374.1 fantastic fanciful
 374.3 strain melody challenging claiming 374.4 precedency see note to l. 163 antiquity seniority
 374.7 habited costumed
 374.8 affected pretended
 376-7 Jet...me questions implying stage business, specifically the jockeying for position by the Starches 377 presumptuous uppity
 gossips women who delight in idle chat
 378 not I preceded by 'am' understood; the use of fragments is typical of volatile style of White Starch's speech primitive original; given the later designation of White Starch as protestant and Blue Starch as puritan (388), this likely alludes to protestant argument about the 'primitive' church 379 You to Blue Starch blue-eyed having dark circles under her eyes would be consistent with the satire frauchen little woman; the foreign usage suggests that she is a Puritan exile from the continent like fire and brimstone threatening; fierce

380 caudle-colour the colour of a thin gruel
 381 Shrove-Tuesday the last Tuesday before Lent; pancake day yellowhammer a species of yellow bird, regularly used as a term of contempt; see Chaste Maid 1.1.22.1
 382 tansy-face tansy: a plant with dark green leaves and a very bitter aroma; small portions of the leaves were used to flavour tansy pudding and tansy cake, both of which were Easter fare
 383 sorrel sops Sorrel: a reddish-brown perennial with green leaves served in salad or cooked; like tansy, the flavour was bitter. Sops: liquid in which bread is dipped before eating.
 green-sickness a kind of anaemia, suffered mostly by young women and characterized by the development a light green tinge on the skin baggage good-for-nothing
 385 Under thy cheeks in the starched red collar 'about [her] neck' (386) moon-calf a creature deformed at birth
 387 ensign banner
 388 Starch stiff, strict
 389 With...nostril synecdoche for Blue Starch; the grotesqueness of this image and of the one that immediately follows jab satirically at the Puritans whose...nose alluding to the nasal delivery of the 'humming prayers' of Puritans; 'lies' also carries pejorative associations with deceit and falsehood

The World Toft at Tennis.

390 YELLOW STARCH I have known
 A white-faced hypocrite, Lady Sanctity.
 A yellow ne'er came near her; and she's been
 A citizen's wife too, starched like innocence,
 But the devil's pranks not uglier. In her mind
 395 Wears yellow, hugs it, if her husband's trade
 Could bear it—there's the spite; but since she cannot Wear her own linen yellow, yet she shows
 Her love to't and makes him wear yellow hose.
 I am as stiff i' my opinion
 As any Starch amongst you.

400 GREEN STARCH I, as you.
 RED STARCH And I as any.
 BLUE STARCH I scorn to come behind.
 YELLOW STARCH Then conclude thus:
 When all men's several censures, all the arguments
 405 The world can bring upon us, are applied,
 The sin's not i' the colour, but the pride.

ALL
 Oracle Yellow! The Starches dance and exeunt

JUPITER
 These are the youngest daughters of Deceit,
 With which the precious time of life's beguiled,
 410 Fooled, and abused. I'll show you straight their father,
 His shapes, his labours, that has vexed the world
 From age to age, and tossed it from his first and simple state
 To the foul centre where it now abides.
 Look back but into times; here shall be shown 415 How many strange removes the world has known.
Music. Loud music sounding, Jupiter leaves his state and, to show the strange removes of the world, places the orb, whose figure it bears, in the midst of the stage, to whom Simplicity, by order of time has first access

Enter Simplicity
 PALLAS
 Who's this, great Jupiter?
 JUPITER Simplicity,
 He that had first possession, one that stumbled
 Upon the world and never minded it.
 SIMPLICITY Hah, hah! I'll go see how the world looks since
 I stepped aside from't, there's such heaving and shoving 420 about it, such toiling and moiling. Now I stumbled upon't when I least thought on't.
Takes up the orb
 'Uds me, 'tis altered of one side since I left it. Hah, there's a milkmaid got with child since, methinks.
 What, and a shepherd forsworn himself?—here's a foul 425 corner. By this light, Subtlety has laid an egg too, and will go nigh to hatch a lawyer. This was well foreseen:
 I'll mar the fashion on't; so, the egg's broke, and 't has a yolk as black as buckram. What's here a' this side?
 O, a dainty world!—here's one a-sealing with his tooth, 430 and, poor man, he has but one in all. I was afraid he would have left it upon the paper, he was so honestly earnest. [A reaping song, as at a distance, within] Here are the reapers singing. I'll lay mine ear to 'em.
Enter Deceit like a ranger

DECEIT [aside]
 Yonder's Simplicity, whom I hate deadly;
 435 H'as held the world too long. He's but a fool—
 A toy will cozen him. If I once fasten on't,
 I'll make it such a nursery for hell,
 Planting black souls in't, it shall ne'er be fit
 For Honesty to set her simples in.
 440 SIMPLICITY [aside]
 Whoop! here's the coz'ning'st rascal in a kingdom,
 The master villain; has the thunder's property,
 For if he come but near the harvest folks,

391	white-faced made-up; duplicitous	of the past, a history of the world	clumsiness of Simplicity
395	Wears yellow secretly longs to dress in clothes of that fashionable colour	415 removes changes of conditions	418 minded took care of
396	spite irritating problem	415.1 Music though apparently redundant given the phrase that follows, the two references to music suggest the possibility of music building to the climax that cues Jupiter's action	421 moiling drudgery
398	makes...hose thereby ruling her husband and making a fool of him, like Malvolio in Shakespeare's Twelfth Night , 3.4; yellow hose were also a sign of a jealous husband	415.2 state raised chair with a canopy, symbolic of power and magnificence; presumably, Jupiter descended from the upper stage on this throne	423 'Uds God save
399	stiff firm, from starch	415.3 orb a globe, like that depicted on the title-page; the orb of royal regalia, a globe surmounted by a cross, would also be appropriate given Jove's introduction of this property and its final resting place with the King	424 got with child pregnant
402	scorn proudly refuse	whose figure a map of the world	425 forsworn perjured
404	censures criticisms	415.4 stage suggesting performance on a raised platform both at the Swan and at Denmark House	426 Subtlety craftiness
407	Oracle source of revelation	415.4-5 by order of time the first (the age of innocence) comes first	427 will go nigh to is just about to
408	youngest daughters see 'Critical In- roduction' concerning London starch- makers	417 stumbled discovered by chance, with a suggestion of the characteristic naive	428 mar destroy
409	beguiled allured		fashion making
410	Foiled made a fool of		429 buckram coarse, stiffened cloth; specifically, a lawyer's bag
	straight directly		430 dainty delightful
411	shapes external forms		a-sealing setting a seal on a document to authenticate it
	vexed tossed about; hence, harassed and troubled		434 reapers cutters of grain
412	simple state condition of simplicity		434.I ranger keeper of a forest or park
414	Look...times an important directive, for it makes all that follows into a vision		437 toy trifle
			cozen dupe
			438 nursery plot for developing young plants
			440 simples medicinal herbs
			442 thunder's property the power of a storm to spoil the harvest

The World Toft at Tennis.

445 His breath's so strong that he sours all their bottles.
 If he should but blow upon the world now, the stain would never get out again. I warrant, if he were ripped, one might find a swarm of usurers in his liver, a cluster of scribes in his kidneys, and his very puddings stuffed with bailiffs.
 DECEIT [aside]
 I must speak fair to the fool.
 450 SIMPLICITY [aside] He makes more near me.
 DECEIT
 'Las, who has put that load, that carriage,
 On poor Simplicity? had they no mercy?
 Pretty, kind, loving worm, come, let me help it.
 455 SIMPLICITY Keep off, and leave your cogging. [Aside] Foh, how abominably he smells of controversies, schisms,
 and factions! Methinks I smell forty religions in him, and ne'er a good one. His eyes look like false lights, cozening trap-windows.
 DECEIT
 The world, sweetheart, is full of cares and troubles—
 460 No match for thee. Thou art a tender thing,
 A harmless, quiet thing, a gentle fool,
 Fit for the fellowship of ewes and rams.
 Go, take thine ease and pipe. Give me the burden,
 The clog, the torment, the heartbreak, the world.
 465 Here's for thee, lamb, a dainty oaten pipe.
 [Offers a pipe]
 SIMPLICITY Pox a' your pipe!—if I should dance after your pipe, I should soon dance to the devil.
 DECEIT [aside]
 I think some serpent sure has licked him over,
 And given him only craft enough to keep,
 470 And gone no further with him. All the rest

Is innocence about him, truth and bluntness.
 I must seek other course, for I have learned
 Of my infernal sire not to be lazy,
 Faint, or discouraged at the tenth repulse.
 Methinks that world Simplicity now hugs fast 475
 Does look as if't should be Deceit's at last. Exit SIMPLICITY So, so, I'm glad he's vanished. Methought I had much ado to keep myself from a smack of knavery, as long as he stood by me, for certainly villainy is 480 infectious, and in the greater person the greater poison;
 as for example, he that gets but the itch of a citizen may take the scab of a courtier. [The Reapers' Song, within] Hark, the reapers begin to sing; they're come nearer methinks too.
The Reapers' Song
 Happy times we live to see, 485
 Whose master is Simplicity.
 This is the age where blessings flow.
 In joy we reap, in peace we sow.
 We do good deeds without delay.
 We promise and we keep our day. 490
 We love for virtue, not for wealth.
 We drink no healths, but all for health.
 We sing, we dance, we pipe, we play;
 Our work's continual holiday.
 We live in poor contented sort, 495
 Yet neither beg nor come at court. [Exeunt] SIMPLICITY These reapers have the merriest lives. They have music to all they do; they'll sow with a tabor and get children with a pipe.
 Enter King, after him Deceit [as a courtier]
 DECEIT
 495 Sir, he's a fool—the world belongs to you.

444 bottles trusses of hay
 445 blow a mark of the corruptive power of Deceit, merely his breath produces an ineradicable stain
 446 warrant guarantee ripped torn open
 447 usurers see note to l. 315
 448 scribblers people who received money to invest for interest
puddings guts
 449 bailiffs in this context, collectors of rent 451 'Las alas
carriage load
 453 help it help you with it
 454 cogging trickery aimed to cheat another 455 schisms hostile divisions, especially within religions
 456 factions partisan groups, often with the additional sense of unscrupulousness in their activities
 458 trap-windows hinged or sliding window, deceptive in that it falsified the intensity of the light emitted; see Michael- mas 1.2.88 for the same conjunction of this image and false light
 460 match companion

461 fool an innocent, without any pejorative connotation
 462 ewes and rams images of the pastoral world
 463 pipe presumably an imperative: play your pipe (the simple wind instrument, a regular feature of shepherds in pastoral literature)
 464 clog burden
 466 Pox a' a pox on; imprecation emphatically rejecting the offered pipe 468 serpent source of worldly wisdom licked him over shaped or educated him 469 craft intelligence keep continue in the same state 473 infernal sire the Devil, father of Deceit;
 see James I, Demonology (Edinburgh, 1597), 1–5, for this conjunction of the demons and deceit
 474 Faint dispirited
 475 fast tightly
 478 smack taste
knavery dishonesty
 480 in . . . poison villainy is pro-rated according to social rank
 481–2 he . . . courtier a person who contracts

a minor skin disease, such as eczema, from a citizen may contract a more serious one, such as syphilis, from someone of higher rank
 490 day appointed day for work or payment of rent
 492 healths toasts
 493 pipe to play music with a pipe (see note to l. 463)
 495 sort conditions
 496 at to; as Induction.32–5 suggests, the poor could expect some handouts from a great household
 498 tabor small drum
 499 pipe with a bawdy reference to the penis
 499.1 King that the king enters first after Simplicity establishes the precedence of monarchy and, hence, its superiority to lawyers and churchmen. King James based his concept of monarchy on the notion that kings received their power from God and distributed responsibility to estates beneath them, lawyers and churchmen.

The World Toft at Tennis.

You're mighty in your worth and your command.
 You know to govern, form, make laws, and take
 Their sweet and precious penalties; it befits
 A mightiness like yours. The world was made 505 For such a lord as you, so absolute
 A mast'ry in all princely nobleness
 As yourself is; but to lie useless now,
 Rusty, or lazy, in a fool's pre-eminence,
 It is not for a glorious worth to suffer.

KING
 Thou'st said enough.

510 DECEIT [aside] Now my hope ripens fairly.
 SIMPLICITY [aside]
 Here's a brave, glist'ring thing looks me i' the face.
 I know not what to say to't.

KING What's thy name?
 SIMPLICITY
 You may read it in my looks: Simplicity.

KING
 What mak'st thou with so great a charge about thee?
 515 Resign it up to me, and be my fool.

SIMPLICITY
 Troth, that's the way to be your fool indeed;
 But shall I have the privilege to fool freely?

KING
 As ever folly had.
 [Simplicity gives the orb to the King]

SIMPLICITY I'm glad I'm rid on't.

DECEIT
 Pray, let me ease your majesty.

KING Thou? hence,
 520 Base sycophant, insinuating hell-hound.
 Lay not a finger on it, as thou lov'st
 The state of thy whole body. All thy filthy
 And rotten flatteries stink i' my remembrance,
 And nothing is so loathsome as thy presence.

SIMPLICITY [aside]
 Sure this will prove a good prince.

DECEIT [aside] Still repulsed? 525
 I must find ground to thrive on. Exit Deceit

SIMPLICITY Pray, remember now
 You had the world from me clean as a pick,
 Only a little smutted a' one side
 With a bastard got against it or such a toy,
 No great corruption nor oppression in't, 530
 No knavery, tricks, nor cozenage.

KING
 Thou say'st true, fool, the world has a clear water.
 SIMPLICITY Make as few laws as you can then to trouble it—the fewer the better—for always the more laws you make, the more knaves thrive by't; mark it when you 535 will.

KING Thou'st counsel i' thee too.
 SIMPLICITY
 A little against knavery. I'm such an enemy to't
 That it comes naturally from me to confound it.

KING
 Look, what are those?

SIMPLICITY Tents, tents. That part o' the world 540
 Shows like a fair, but, pray, take notice on't,
 There's not a bawdy booth amongst 'em all.
 You have 'em white and honest as I had 'em.
 Look that your laundresses pollute 'em not.

KING
 How pleasantly the countries lie about, 545
 Of which we are sole lord. What's that i' the middle?

SIMPLICITY
 Looks like a point you mean, a very prick?

KING
 Ay, that, that.

SIMPLICITY 'Tis the beginning of Amsterdam. They say the first brick there was laid with fresh cheese and cream, 550

501 worth personal merit and financial well-being command dominion over others
 503 penalties fines
 506 nobleness dignity; perhaps punning on the coin, 'noble', as a variation on the motif of money
 508 Rusty unused and decaying a fool's Simplicity's
pre-eminence rule
 509 suffer be subjected to 511 brave see note to l. 14
glist'ring glittering; suggestive of the splendid costume of the King 512 I...to't given his lack of sophistication, Simplicity is tongue-tied in the face of greatness
 514 charge burden (the globe)
 515 fool jester
 516 fool dupe
 517 to fool freely to play the part of the licensed fool, that of a moral and social critic 519 ease disburden

 520 Base morally low sycophant parasite insinuating wheedling hell-hound dog of hell; fiend
 521–2 as...body if you love your body whole rather than ripped apart
 523 stink stench, a commonplace feature of the Devil
 524 loathsome hateful
 526 thrive prosper
 527 pick pointed metal instrument, the shape of which prevents dirt from adhering
 528 smutted smudged
 529 bastard illegitimate child got born
 531 tricks deceitful practices

532 clear water clear urine, a sign of good health 533 then therefore 535 by't by the law
 537 counsel prudent advice
 539 confound overthrow 541 pray I entreat you take notice on't observe it
 542 bawdy booth stall trading in obscenity
 544 pollute 'em stain or make dingy the tents
 547 prick a sharp point, such as that made by the capital 'a' with which Amsterdam (549) begins. The bawdy joke counters the praise of the fair free of bawdry (thereby allowing no extreme to stand as absolute in value) and makes fun of the Amsterdam Puritans.
 549–52 They...fornication ridiculing the prurience of Dutch Puritans

The World Toft at Tennis.

because mortar made of lime and hair was wicked and committed fornication. 580
Enter a Land-Captain, and Deceit as a soldier

KING
 Peace, who are these approaching?
 SIMPLICITY Blustering fellows: the first's a soldier; he looks 585 just like March.

DECEIT
 Captain, 'tis you that have the bloody sweats.
 You venture life and limbs. 'Tis you that taste
 The stings of thirst and hunger.

LAND-CAPTAIN There thou hast named
 Afflictions sharper than the enemy's swords.

DECEIT
 560 Yet lets another carry away the world,
 Of which by right you are the only master,
 Stand curts'ing for your pay at your return,
 Perhaps with wooden legs, to every groom
 That dares not look full right upon a sword
 565 Nor upon any wound or slit of honour?

LAND-CAPTAIN
 No more, I'll be myself. I that uphold
 Countries and kingdoms, must I halt downright
 And be propped up with part of mine own strength,
 The least part too? Why, have not I the power 570 To make myself stand absolute of myself,
 That keep up others?

KING How cheers
 Our noble captain?

LAND-CAPTAIN Our own captain,
 No more a hireling. Your great foe's at hand;
 Seek your defence elsewhere, for mine shall fail you.
 575 I'll not be fellow-yoked with death and danger
 All my lifetime and have the world kept from me,
 March in the heat of summer in a bath,
 A furnace girt about me, and in that agony,
 With so much fire within me, forced to wade

Through a cool river—practising in life 580
 The very pains of hell, now scorched, now shivering—
 To call diseases early into my bones
 Before I've age enough to entertain 'em.
 No, he that has desire to keep the world,
 Let him e'en take the sore pains to defend it. 585

KING
 Stay, man of merit, it belongs to thee.
 [He gives the orb to the Land-Captain]
 I cheerfully resign it. All my ambition
 Is but the quiet calm of peaceful days
 And that fair good, I know, thy arm will raise.

LAND-CAPTAIN
 Though now an absolute master, yet to thee 590
 Ever a faithful servant.

DECEIT Give't me, sir,
 To lay up; I am your treasurer
 In a poor kind. Exit King

LAND-CAPTAIN In a false kind, I grant thee.
 How many vile complaints from time to time
 Have been put up against thee? They have wearied 595
 me
 More than a battle sixteen hours a-fighting.
 I've heard the raggèd regiment so curse thee,
 I looked next day for leprosy upon thee
 Or puffs of pestilence as big as wens,
 When thou wouldst drop asunder, like a thing 600
 Inwardly eaten, thy skin only whole.
 Avaunt, defrauder of poor soldiers' rights;
 Camp caterpillar, hence!—or I will send thee
 To make their rage a breakfast.

DECEIT [aside] Is it possible?
 Can I yet set no footing in the world? 605
 I'm angry, but not weary. I'll hunt out still,
 For, being Deceit, I bear the devil's name,
 And he's known seldom to give o'er his game.
Exit Deceit

551 lime and hair elements of mortar mix; hair facilitated the binding capacity of the cement (lime)
 552.1 Land-Captain officer in charge of a troop soldier one of the rank and file who serves in the army for pay
 554 Blustering boisterous
 555 like March that is, blustery; punning perhaps on marching and Mars 556 bloody sweats sweat mingled with blood because of the physical exertions of battle. Deceit is also alluding sacrilegiously to the bloody sweat of Jesus in Gethsemane (Luke 22:44).
 557 venture risk
 560-5 Yet...honour Deceit's rhetoric changes with each role he plays; here, for example, from the fawning flattery of the monarch to the mild ridicule of the discrepancy between the Land-Captain's power and his servility 561 right deliberately confused with 'might'

 in Deceit's argument
 562 curts'ing bowing
 563 groom man-servant, with contempt
 here
 564 full right directly
 565 slit of honour honourable injury 567 halt limp
downright plainly
 570 absolute self-sufficient
 571 cheers feels, but presuming good feelings
 572 Our noble...Our own repetition stresses the conflict between the characters; see also Lineation Notes
 573 hireling servant working for wages
 575 fellow-yoked joined with 577 in a bath bathed in sweat 578 furnace...me carrying equipment, the weight of which intensifies the heat and aggravates the sweaty labour 581 scorched...shivering characteristic extremism of hell

 583 entertain 'em to receive diseases properly; with wry humour
 589 arm strength and weaponry
 592 lay up store
 593 In a poor kind humble
 597 raggèd poor and weary 599 puffs swellings pestilence an epidemic; specifically, the plague
wens tumours
 602 Avaunt get away
 603 caterpillar parasite
 604 To...breakfast to feed and satisfy their anger
 605 footing secure foothold
 608 give o'er quit

A Courtly Masque

610 SIMPLICITY Troth, now the world begins to be in hucksters' handling. By this light, the booths are full of cutlers, and yonder's two or three queans going to victual the camp. Hah! would I were whipped, if yonder be not a parson's daughter with a soldier between her legs, bag and baggage.

SOLDIER
 615 Now 'tis the soldier's time, great Jupiter;
 Now give me leave to enter on my fortunes.
 The world's our own.

JUPITER Stay, beguiled thing, this time
 Is many ages discrepant from thine.
 This was the season when desert was stooped to,
 620 By greatness stooped to, and acknowledged greatest;
 But in thy time, now, desert stoops itself
 To every baseness and makes saints of shadows.
 Be patient, and observe how times are wrought,
 Till it comes down to thine, that rewards naught.
Chambers shot off. Enter a Sea-Captain, and Deceit as a purser

OMNES
 625 Hah? what's the news?

SEA-CAPTAIN
 Be ready if I call to give fire to the ordnance.

SIMPLICITY Bless us all, here's one spits fire as he comes.
 He will go nigh to mull the world with looking on it.
 How his eyes sparkle!

DECEIT
 630 Shall the Land-Captain, sir, usurp your right?—
 Yours, that try thousand dangers to his one:
 Rocks, shelves, gulfs, quicksands, hundred hundred horrors,
 That make the landmen tremble when they're told,
 Besides the enemy's encounter.

SEA-CAPTAIN
 635 Peace, Purser, no more; I'm vexed. I'm kindled.
 You, Land-Captain, quick, deliver.

LAND-CAPTAIN
 Proud salt-rover, thou hast the salutation of a thief.

SEA-CAPTAIN
 Deliver, or I'll thunder thee a-pieces,
 Make night within this hour, e'en at high noon,
 Belched from the cannon. Dar'st expostulate 640
 With me? my fury? What's thy merit, land-worm,
 That mine not centuples?
 Thy lazy marches and safe-footed battles
 Are but like dangerous dreams to my encounters.
 Why, every minute the deep gapes for me, 645
 Beside the fiery throats of the loud fight.
 When we go to't and our fell ordnance play,
 'Tis like the figure of a latter day.
 Let me but give the word, night begins now,
 Thy breath and prize both beaten from thy body. 650
 How dar'st thou be so slow? Not yet—then—

LAND-CAPTAIN Hold.
[He gives the orb to the Sea-Captain]

DECEIT [aside]
 I knew 'twould come at last.

SEA-CAPTAIN [to the Land-Captain]
 For this resign,
 Part thou shalt have still, but the greatest mine.
 Only to us belongs the golden sway.
 Th'Indies load us; thou liv'st but by thy pay. 655

DECEIT
 And shall your purser help you?

SEA-CAPTAIN No in sooth, sir,
 Coward and coz'ner. How many sea-battles
 Hast thou compounded to be cabled up?
 Yet, when the fights were ended, who so ready
 To cast sick soldiers and dismembered wretches 660
 Overboard instantly?—crying 'Away
 With things without arms!—'Tis an ugly sight.'
 When, troth, thine own should have been off by right.
 But thou lay'st safe within a wall of hemp,

609 hucksters' hawkers' or pedlars'; so handled, the world is likely to be roughly used
 610 cutlers dealers in knives
 611 queans harlots
victual provision, presumably with sexual treats
 613-14 bag and baggage primarily, all the equipment of the soldiers individually and of the army collectively; in this context, with the bawdy connotations of scrotum and penis; possibly with a pun on 'baggage' in the sense of 'strumpet'
 618 discrepant removed in time
 619 desert merit stooped to respected
 620 greatness of blood; hence, the nobility
 621 stoops declines
 622 makes...shadows worships insubstantial things
 623 wrought made
 624 naught nothing

624.1 Chambers small cannons
Sea-Captain commander of a ship; a more prestigious officer than a land-captain in the British military forces
 624.2 purser ship's officer in charge of money matters and provisions
 626 ordnance cannons
 627 spits fire speaks fiercely
 628 mull warm up
 630 usurp wrongfully claim
 631 try undergo
 634 enemy's encounter battles with the enemy
 635 vexed stirred up; annoyed
 636 deliver hand over the world
 637 salt-rover seaman salutation greeting (the command to deliver one's goods)
 639 Make night darkening the sky with smoke from the cannons
 640 expostulate debate
 642 centuples multiplies by a hundred

644 but merely 645 deep sea
 646 fiery throats openings of the cannons
 647 fell fierce play discharge
 648 figure image latter day one of the last, apocalyptic days
 650 prize the world
 651 How...slow the actors could make clear that the impatience of the Sea-Captain, not any tardiness on the part of the Land-Captain, informs this question
 652 resign surrender
 654 golden sway the power of wealth, enhanced by plunder
 658 compounded...up gathered together to be tied up; i.e. how many sea-battles are in your tally?
 663 own arms understood
 664 hemp coil of rope

The World Toft at Tennis.

- 665 Telling the guns and numbering 'em with farting.
 Leave me, and speedily. I'll have thee rammed
 Into a culverin else, and thy rear flesh
 Shot all into poached eggs.
- DECEIT [aside] I will not leave yet:
 Destruction plays in me such pleasant strains
- 670 That I would purchase it with any pains. Exit Deceit
- SEA-CAPTAIN
 The motion's worthy. [To the Land Captain] I will join with thee
 Both to defend and enrich majesty.
- SIMPLICITY
 Hoyday! I can see nothing now for ships.
 [The Mariners' Song, within]
 Hark a' the mariners.
The Mariners' Song
 Hey, the world's ours; we have got the time by chance.
- 675 Let us then carouse and sing, for the very house doth skip and dance
 That we do now live in.
 We have the merriest lives;
 We have the fruitfull'st wives
 Of all men.
- 680 We never yet came home,
 But the first hour we come,
 We find them all with child again.
*A shout within; then, enter two Mariners with pipe and can, dancing severally by turns, for joy
 the world is come into their hands; then exeunt*
- SIMPLICITY What a crew of mad rascals are these? They're ready at every can to fall into the haddock's' mouths.
- 685 The world begins to love lap now.
Enter a Flamen and Deceit like [an aedituus]
- FLAMEN
 Peace and the brightness of a holy love Reflect their beauties on you.
- SEA-CAPTAIN Who's this?
 LAND-CAPTAIN
 A reverend shape.
 SEA-CAPTAIN Some scholar.
 LAND-CAPTAIN A divine one.
 SEA-CAPTAIN
 He may be what he will for me, fellow-captain,
 For I have seen no church these five-and-twenty years—
 I mean, as people ought to see it, inwardly.
- FLAMEN
 I have a virtuous sorrow for you, sir,
 And 'tis my special duty to weep for you;
 For to enjoy one world as you do there,
 And be forgetful of another, sir,
 (O, of a better millions of degrees!)
 It is a frailty and infirmity
 That many tears must go for—all too little.
 What is't to be the lord of many battles
 And suffer to be overrun within you,
 Abroad to conquer, and be slaves at home?
 Remember there's a battle to be fought
 Which will undo you if it be not thought.
 And you must leave that world, leave it betimes,
 That reformation may weep of the crimes.
 There's no indulgent hand the world should hold,
 But a strict grasp. For making sin so bold,
 We should be careless of it, and not fond
 Of things so held: there is the best command.
- SEA-CAPTAIN
 Grave sir, I give thy words their deserved honour,
 And to thy sacred charge freely resign
 All that my fortune and the age made mine.
 [He gives the orb to the Flamen]
- SIMPLICITY
 If the world be not good now, 'twill ne'er be good;
 There's no hope on't.

665 Telling the guns tallying the gun-shots numbering counting
 667 culverin large cannon
 670 with any pains no matter how great the pains
 671 motion's motion: the action of upbraiding and dismissing Deceit
 673 Hoyday exclamation of surprise
 675 carouse drink freely
 678-82 We... again the song implies their wives are pregnant because of their infidelity
 682.2 pipe boatswain's whistle can metal pot, from which they drink liquor and on which they may bang out the beat for their dancing severally individually
by turns one after the other 683 crew ship's crew and gang
 684 at every can with every drink of liquor;

as the dancers drink more they seem to Simplicity to be increasingly in danger of falling into the sea
 685 lap liquor
 685.1 Flamen priest of a particular deity in Roman antiquity; also religious leaders of heathen Britain, replaced by bishops after the conversion of the people to Christianity. The archaic usage, which is never used in the speeches, seems a literary extension of the caricature of the Flamen, a caricature effected in production by costume, comportment, and style of speech.
aedituus churchwarden, the parish official in charge of financial matters 686 Peace marking the shift from war to peace, from soldier to scholar 691 inwardly punning: 'from the inside' and 'spiritually'

693 'tis...you patronizing in his compassion
 694 one world the physical one
 695 another the spiritual one
 696 better after which 'by' understood
 703 thought kept in mind
 704 that world the world of military conquest betimes soon
 705 reformation amendment weep of regret or atone for sins, as a result of remembering 707-9 For... held the failure to be strict emboldens sin and demonstrates not genuine fondness of the world, but lack of care
 708 it the world fond loving and genuinely caring 711 charge custody

A Courtly Masque

	DECEIT [aside]		but not a piece of a furlong to get an appetite to their prayers.
715	I have my wishes here. [To the Flamen] My sanctified patron, I'll first fill all the chests i'th' vestry; Then there's a secret vault for great men's legacies.		Flourish. Enter King, a Lawyer, and Deceit as a pettifogger
	FLAMEN		LAWYER
	Art not confounded yet? struck blind or crippled For thy abusive thought, thou horrid hypocrite?		No more, the case is clear.
720	Are these the fruits of thy long orisons Three hours together, of thy nine lectures weekly, Thy swooning at the hearing of an oath, Scarce to be fetched again? Away! depart!— Thou white-faced devil, author of heresy, Schisms, factions, controversies. Now I know thee To be Deceit itself, wrought in by simony To blow corruption upon sacred virtue.		SIMPLICITY 'Slid, who have we here?
725			LAWYER
	DECEIT [aside]		He that pleads for the world must fall To his business roundly. Most gracious And illustrious prince, thus stands the case: The world in Greek is cosmos , in Latin mundus , In law-French le monde . We leave the Greek And come to the law-French, or glide upon the Latin— All's one business.
730	I made myself sure here. Church fail me too? I thought it mere impossible by all reason, Since there's so large a bridge to walk upon 'Twi' negligence and superstition. Where could one better piece up a full vice? One service lazy, t'other over-nice, There had been 'twixt 'em room enough for me. I will take root or run through each degree.		Then unde mundus ? shall we come to that? Nonne derivatur a munditia ? The word 'cleanness', mundus, quasi mundus , 'clean'. And what can cleanse or mundify the world Better than law, the clearer of all cases, The sovereign pill or potion that expels All poisonous, rotten, and infectious wrongs From the vexed bosom of the commonwealth? There's a familiar phrase implies thus much, 'I'll put you to your purgation'; that is, The law shall cleanse you. Can the sick world then, Tossed up and down from time to time, repose itself In a physician's hand better improved? Upon my life and reputation In all the courts I come at, be assured I'll make it clean.
735			SIMPLICITY Yes, clean away. I warrant you, we shall ne'er see't again.
	SIMPLICITY Whoop, here's an alteration. By this hand, the ships are all turned to steeples, and the bells ring for joy, as if they would shake down the pinnacles. How!—the masons are at work yonder, the freemasons; I swear it's a free time for them. Hah!—there's one building of a chapel of ease. O, he's loath to take the pains to go to church. Why, will he have it in's house, when the proverb says, "The devil's at home"? These great rich men must take their ease i' their inn. They'll walk you a long mile or two to get a stomach for their victuals,		LAWYER I grant my pills are bitter, ay, and costly,
740
745
715	sanctified holy	superstition over-nice ministry (see 733)	court
716	vestry room in the church for storing vestments and other valuables	732 piece up put together	750 roundly openly; playing on the spherical shape of the world
717	vault safe	733 over-nice too fastidious	754 glide upon pass over smoothly
	legacies bequests	735 degree rank in the social hierarchy	756 unde mundus? whence the world? mundus also means 'clean'
720	orisons prayers	738 pinnacles little ornamental turrets	757 Nonne . . . munditia? is it not derived from 'cleanness'?
721	lectures a jab at Puritans, whose religious practice included lectures, at some times and in some places daily, on the Scriptures	739 freemasons society of skilled workers in stone	758 mundus, quasi mundus 'the world', just as 'clean'
722	swooning fainting because of hearing someone swear; clearly, an overreaction	741 chapel of ease chapel built for people who live far from the parish church; developed pejoratively here	759 mundify also in the specific medical sense, to purge the body or the blood of noxious matter
723	fetched revived	743 The devil's at home proverbial (Tilley D243)	760 clearer eliminator
724	white-faced deceptively innocent in outward appearance	744 take their ease make themselves comfortable	763 vexed distressed
	heresy unorthodox teaching	745 get a stomach work up an appetite	766-8 Can . . . improved rhetorical question; given the medical metaphors for the activity of the law, the question implies that the world cannot be better off than in a lawyer's hand
726	wrought in worked in; punning on 'rotten'	746 furlong length of a furrow in a common field; approximately 220 yards	767 repose settle
	simony the selling of ecclesiastical offices	747.2 pettifogger one of the lower order of legal practitioners; also one who uses mean, deceitful practices	770 courts punning on law courts and royal courts
727	blow corruption upon defame; remove the bloom from	748 case legal suit
729	mere simply	749 pleads speaks as an advocate to the
731	negligence laziness in ministry (see 733)

- 775 But their effects are rare, divine, and wholesome.
 There's an Excommunicate capiendo,
Capias post K. and a Ne exeat regno.
 I grant there's bitter egrimony in 'em
 And antimony. I put money in all still,
 And it works preciously. Who ejects injuries,
 780 Makes 'em belch forth in vomit, but the law?
 Who clears the widow's case, and after gets her If she be wealthy, but the advocate?—Then, to conclude,
 If you'll have mundus, a mundo, clean, firm,
 Give him to me; I'll scour him every term.
- FLAMEN
 785 I part with't gladly; take't into thy trust.
 [He gives the orb to the Lawyer]
 So will it thrive as thy intent is just.
- DECEIT
 Pity your trampler, sir, your poor solicitor.
- LAWYER
 Thee!—infamy to our profession,
 Which, without wrong to truth, next the divine one 790 Is the most grave and honourable function
 That gives a kingdom blessed. But thou, the poison
 Disease that grows close to the heart of law,
 And mak'st rash censurers think the sound part perished;
 Thou foul eclipse that, interposing equity
 795 As the dark earth the moon, mak'st the world judge
 That blackness and corruption have possessed
 The silver shine of justice, when 'tis only
 The smoke ascending from thy pois'nous ways:
 Coz'nage, demurs, and fifteen term-delays.
- 775 Excommunicate capiendo a writ for the arrest of someone excommunicated for forty days and for the detention of that person 'till he hath made agreement to holy Church for the contempt and wrong' (Rastell)
 776 Capias post K perhaps capias post ca- lumnia: a writ of arrest upon accusation Ne exeat regno writ forbidding someone to leave the kingdom
 777 egrimony sorrow; punning on 'money'
 778 antimony antinomy: a contradiction within a law or between two binding laws; the reversal of the 'n' and the 'm' may have been deliberate to obtain another pun on 'money'
 779 ejects expels
 injuries injustices 783 mundus, a mundo the world, from clean: noting again the derivation of terms so as to reinforce the Lawyer's connection of them
 784 term see note to l. 327
 787 trampler one who gets about on foot; also with the more pejorative sense of one who treads harmfully upon others solicitor an advocate in a court of equity
- 788 infamy disgrace
 789 the divine one the religious profession
 791 gives produces 793 censurers critics sound healthy 794 interposing obstructing equity fairness
 797 silver shine silver was the traditional colour of Diana, goddess of the moon;
 the lunar eclipse prevents the light of the moon from being seen 799 Coz'nage fraud
demurs suspension of an action fifteen term-delays long postponement;
 sixteen term-delays would be four years 800 muck filth; in this context, money (see 808–10)
on't on the world, which Deceit still has a hand on
 802 actions legal suits
 803 portion share distributed by law 805 double-handed two-handed, and duplicitous
 811 sphere the globe and the group of characters
 812 mutually interdependently
 813.2 removes...together what action
- Yet hold thee!—take the muck on't; that's thine own, 800
 The devil and all. But the fair fame and honour
 Of righteous actions, good men's prayers and wishes,
 Which is that glorious portion of the world
 The noble lawyer strives for, that thy bribery,
 Thy double-handed grip, shall never reach to. 805
 With fat and filthy gain thy lust may feast,
 But poor men's curses beat thee from the rest.
- DECEIT
 I'll feed upon the muck on't; that awhile
 Shall satisfy my longings. Wealth is known
 The absolute step to all promotion. 810
- KING
 Let this be called the sphere of harmony,
 In which, being met, let's all move mutually.
- OMNES
 Fair love is i'th' motion, kingly love.
*In this last dance, as an ease to memory, all the former removes come close together: the Devil and Deceit aiming at the world, but the world remaining now in the Lawyer's possession. [He], expressing his reverend and noble acknowledgement to the absolute power of Majesty, resigns it loyally to its royal government, Majesty to Valour, Valour to Law again, Law to Religion, Religion to Sovereignty, where it firmly and fairly settles;
 the Law confounding Deceit, and the Church the Devil*
- FLAMEN
 Times suffer changes, and the world has been 815
 Vexed with removes, but when his glorious peace
 Firmly and fairly settles, here's his place,
- is called for is somewhat ambiguous: if
 'removes' refers to the various changes in the condition of the world, changes embodied in the characters who hold it, 'come close together' may indicate that they gather more tightly around the orb to protect it from the threats of the Devil and Deceit; if 'removes' refers to the transfers of the globe from one character to another, as described in the lines that follow, then 'come close together' may point to a quicker series of transfers. These options are not mutually exclusive: speeding up the transfer of the world from character to character would depend upon getting the members of the group closer to one another. Accelerating the transfers would also serve 'as an ease to memory' by reproducing—in short,
 as it were—what took a longer time to present throughout the body of the masque.
 813.3 aiming at threatening
 813.7 Valour the Land-Captain and the Sea-Captain allied 814 suffer undergo 815 his the world's

The World Toft at Tennis.

	Truth his defence, and majesty his grace. We all acknowledge it belongs to you.		That the great cunning enemies, Deceit And his too mighty lord, beguile you not, And you're the precious ornaments of state,	845
ALL	Only to you, sir. They all deliver the world up to the King		The glories of the world, fellows to virtues, Masters of honest and well-purchased fortunes, And I am fortunate in your partnership.
FLAMEN	Regis ad exemplum totus componitur orbis —Which		But if you ever make your hearts the houses
820	shows, That if the world form itself by the king, 'Tis fit the former should command the thing.		Of falsehood and corruption, ugliness itself	850
DECEIT	This is no place for us.		Will be a beauty to you, and less pointed at. Spots in deformèd faces are scarce noted; Fair cheeks are stained if ne'er so little blotted.
DEVIL	Depart! Away! I thought all these had been corrupted evils,	ALL	Ever the constant servants to great virtue.
825	No court of virtues, but a guard of devils. Exeunt Deceit and the Devil	KING	Her love inhabit you.
KING	How blest am I in subjects! Here are those That make all kingdoms happy: worthy soldier, Fair churchman, and thou, uncorrupted lawyer, Virtue's great miracle, that hast redeemed	JUPITER	Now, sons of vexation,	855
830	All justice from her ignominious name.		Envy and discontent, what blame lay you Upon these times now? Which does merit most To be condemned, your dullness or the age? If now you thrive not, Mercury shall proclaim You're undeservers, and cry down your fame.	860
SIMPLICITY	You forget me, sir.		Be poor still, scholar, and thou, wretch despised, If in this glorious time thou canst not prosper, Upon whose breast noble employments sit, By honour's hand in golden letters writ.
KING	What, Simplicity!		Nay, where the prince of nobleness himself	865
SIMPLICITY	Ay, marry, my masters, now it looks like a brave world indeed. How civilly those fair ladies go yonder; by this hand, they are neither trimmed, nor trussed, nor poniarded. Wonderment! O, yonder's a knot of fine-sharp-needle-bearded gallants, but that they wear stammel cloaks, methinks, instead of scarlet. 'Slid, what's he that carries out two custards now under the porter's long nose? O, he leaves a bottle of wine i'th' lodge, and all's pacified, cry mercy.		Proves our Minerva's valiant'st, hopefull'st son, And early in his spring puts armour on, Unite your worths, and make of two, one brother, And be each one perfection to the other. Scholar and soldier must both be shut in one;	870
840			That makes the absolute and complete man. So now into the world, which, if hereafter You ever tax of foul, ingrateful crimes, Your dullness I must punish, not the times.
KING	Continue but thus watchful o'er yourselves,
818	you in a performance before King James, the show might at this point have culminated with the presentation of the globe to James	poniarded wearing daggers, a fashion that James found particularly abhorrent in women	personal prospects, and good luck
820	Regis... orbis the whole world is ordered by the example of the king. James I quotes the same line at the outset of the second book ('Of a King's Duty in his Office') of Basilikon Doron (Edinburgh, 1599).	837 knot group	851 less pointed at because commonplace
822	former he who forms it	fine-sharp-needle-bearded a beard fashionably cut to form a sharp point at the bottom	855 vexation dissatisfaction
829	redeemed rescued	gallants fine, fashionable gentlemen	858 dullness foolishness
830	ignominious shameful	838 stammel coarse wool, usually dyed red	age times
833	marry by Mary	scarlet symbolic of their pride and self-indulgence	859 Mercury god who broadcast the fame of people
834	civilly with moderation	841 pacified the apparent theft of custards is set right	860 cry down condemn
835	trimmed wearing hats or garments decorated with ribbons, lace, or other trimmings	cry mercy I beg your pardon	861 thou Soldier
836	trussed wearing garments drawn tightly around the body	844 lord the Devil	862 glorious time alluding to the wars in Europe; see note to 878
		845 ornaments attendants upon state regal power	863 whose breast that of the present time
		846 fellows allies	863-4 noble... writ honourable opportunities present themselves
		847-8 fortunes... fortunate polyptoton; playing on financial well-being, attractive	865 the prince Charles, Prince of Wales
			867 his spring his youth puts armour on for his first tilt, 24 March 1620 and again on 18 April 868 worths strengths
			873 tax charge with

The World Toft at Tennis.

875 SOLDIER and SCHOLAR Prosperity keep with thee.
 Honour to mighty Jupiter. SCHOLAR And the glory 885
Jupiter ascends [with Pallas]
 SOLDIER Of noble action bring white hairs upon thee.
 The world's in a good hand now, if it hold, brother. Present our wish with reverence to this place,
 SCHOLAR For here't must be confirmed or 'tas no grace.
 I hope for many ages. Exeunt severally
 SOLDIER Fare thee well then. Epilogue Epilogue
 I'll over yonder to the most glorious wars
 That e'er famed Christian kingdom. Gentlemen,
 SCHOLAR And I'll settle We must confess that we have vented ware 880 Here, in a land of a most glorious peace Not always vendible—masques are more rare
 That ever made joy fruitful, where the head Than plays are common; at most but twice a year
 Of him that rules, to learning's fair renown, In their most glorious shapes do they appear— 5
 Is doubly decked, with laurel and a crown, Which, if you please, accept. We'll keep in store
 And both most worthily. Our debted loves, and thus entreat you more:
 SOLDIER Give me thy hand; Invert the proverb now, and suffer not
 "That which is seldom seen, be soon forgot".
Finis

THE PARTS

Adult Males

SIMPLICITY (127 lines): Prologue, Epilogue, Time
 SCHOLAR (115 lines): Prologue, Epilogue
 JUPITER (93 lines): Prologue, Epilogue
 DECEIT (83 lines): Prologue, Epilogue, Time
 SOLDIER (82 lines): Prologue, Epilogue
 LAWYER (56 lines): Prologue, Epilogue, Time
 TIME (49 lines): any but Scholar, Soldier, Jupiter
 KING (46 lines): Prologue, Epilogue, Time
 SEA-CAPTAIN (44 lines): Prologue, Epilogue, Time
 FLAMEN (40 lines): Prologue, Epilogue, Time
 LAND-CAPTAIN (40 lines): Prologue, Epilogue, Time
 PROLOGUE (18 lines): any character
 EPILOGUE (9 lines): any character
 DEVIL (3 lines): Prologue, Epilogue, Time

Boys

PALLAS (113 lines): Richmond or St James's or Denmark House
 DENMARK HOUSE (55 lines): Pallas
 ST JAMES'S (31 lines): Pallas
 RICHMOND (15 lines): Pallas

Dancers/Singers: Adult

WORTHIES (no lines): Mariners, Reapers

Dancers/Singers: Boys

MUSES (no lines): Starches

Most crowded scene: Finale—12 characters

Most crowded dance: Nine Worthies—22 characters (9 Muses [torchbearers rather than dancers?]; 9 Worthies; 4 actors)

876 hold last

878 wars in support of the claim made by Frederick, Elector Palatine, to the crown of Bohemia

879 Christian alluding to the way in which the wars were perceived, as a conflict of Protestantism and Catholicism

883 laurel symbolizing King James's achievements as a scholar

885–6 And...thee may you grow old in noble military enterprises

887 this place possibly the throne of Jupiter on high; more likely the throne of King James at Denmark House, or in the Swan theatre the audience

Epilogue.2 vented sold ware goods

3 vendible marketable

4 twice a year the masques that graced state occasions were usually performed at Twelfth Night and at Shrovetide

6 Which 'ware' understood

6–7 We'll...loves we shall remember that we are in your debt

8 suffer allow

HONOURABLE ENTERTAINMENTS and AN INVENTION

Edited by Anthony Parr

ON 29 April 1620 John Chamberlain wrote to Sir Dudley Carleton informing him of 'a great Commission come forth for the business of [St] Paul's, comprehending all the [Privy] Council . . . divers aldermen and other citizens'. A new determination to do something about the fabric of the long-neglected cathedral had been forged a month earlier, when the Lord Mayor Sir William Cokayne met James I at St Paul's and an agreement was reached about sharing the costs of repair. Chamberlain himself was a member of the Commission, and relates that after its first meeting on 22 April all its members 'were invited to dine that day with the Lord Mayor; but because I love not such confusion of company, I went not'. It is unclear from Chamberlain's laconic phrasing whether he disliked crowds or the mixing of social ranks, but he adds that he might have gone if he had known that Cokayne's daughter, who had been married that day to Charles Howard, son and heir of the Earl of Nottingham, was to be present. He concludes by offering a sour assessment of the match: 'I do not greatly allow my Lord Mayor's judgement, to purchase so poor honour with the price of his daughter, a handsome young woman (they say), and to bestow her on a man so worn out in state, credit, years and otherwise. But the match may prove reasonable indifferent, for as they can look for little or nothing of him but bare honour, so from her side they are to expect no great matter more than money.'

By excusing himself from dinner Chamberlain lost the opportunity to have his opinion softened by a skilful entertainment. Cokayne clearly decided to make the official occasion double as a wedding reception, perhaps hoping to impress his distinguished guests with this opportune match; and Middleton's preamble to the text of Entertainment 1 traces a process whereby the original in-house tribute to the Mayor and Aldermen (apparently given at two civic banquets on 17 and 18 April) became by the end of the week a sort of wedding masque played before a larger audience of notables. (The marriage was also the occasion of Middleton's dedication of The World Tossed at Tennis.) Cokayne may have felt not only that the glittering occasion demonstrated his fitness for aristocratic connections but also that the marriage would thereby gain some lustre amongst his peers in the city government, some of whom might have agreed with Chamberlain and a modern biographer that Howard was 'dim and dull', a poor successor to his famous father the former Lord Admiral. Middleton's piece, put to work in these different contexts, represents the adaptable, confident, outward-looking face of civic authority, refining social and political relations with the help of an elegant show.

The cultural rivalry between Whitehall and London in the early seventeenth century, evident in the way both the court masque and the Lord Mayor's pageant became increasingly lavish and spectacular events, is also visible in these intimate entertainments, which are in some ways more revealing of a civic ambition to match the ceremony of the court and of aristocratic great houses. We can glimpse something of the increasing provision for entertainment on formal occasions in the treatment of the city 'waits', or municipal musicians, in the Jacobean period. In 1604 the independent musicians of London petitioned successfully to be incorporated as a Company, and in the following year the waits appealed to the City for a pay rise, citing 'their continual daily and nightly services and small wage'; as a result their salary was almost doubled to £20 per year. By 1613 the consort used on such occasions—which had its own uniform of blue gown with red sleeves and caps, and a silver chain and badge of office—was probably ten or a dozen strong. Exact figures are not available, but we know that it employed a small band of wind and string players and both men and boy singers. What Middleton refers to as 'the City Music' (1.10.2–3) was in fact the only permanent group of its kind in London other than the King's Music and the cathedral choirs, and it clearly played a prominent part in all the indoor entertainments.

Middleton was presumably following the wishes of his employers (whose permission he needed to publish what he wrote for city functions) when in a number of small details he aligns his civic shows with the pomp and circumstance of courtly ritual. He informs us, for instance, that Ent. 3 took place at 'the Conduit Head near the Banqueting House', which for any reader of masque texts, then or now, would inevitably recall the Whitehall setting of court entertainments like those of Ben Jonson. In fact the reference is to the large house north of Oxford Street in what is now Stratford Place, where the city fathers dined once a year after visiting the springs at Tyburn; and it gains an extra piquancy from the fact that in 1620–1 there was no royal equivalent, since the Banqueting House in Whitehall had burned down in 1619 and Inigo Jones's replacement was not finished until 1622. In Ent. 4 Alderman Hamersley is grandly described as 'President of the noble Council of War' (he was in charge of the Artillery Company), and in the headnote to the opening piece Lord Mayor Cokayne is designated 'Lord General of the military forces', a title Middleton had already given him in his inaugural pageant, recognizing (and somewhat inflating) his authority over the city militia. But if the merchants who governed London sought to rival the opulence and refinement of Whitehall, this was because they wished to enhance their self-esteem and project a modern corporate image, and not because they saw themselves as being in opposition to royal authority.

The point needs to be made here because the supposed political sympathies of Middleton's employers have sometimes been used to advance the case for his own political radicalism. Margot Heinemann claims that 'it was pretty clearly as a protege of Parliamentary Puritans among the City oligarchs that Middleton entered on his City employments'; but if he routinely served puritan interests we might expect to find clearest evidence for it in these diverse entertainments, given the fact that they are addressed not (like the mayoral pageants) to a single Mayor or guild but to the city government in a variety of festive and workaday contexts. The men to whom Middleton dedicates his book comprise the Court of Aldermen, the senior governing body of the City of London. They were mostly wholesale merchants, many of them having interests in overseas trade through the Levant and East India Companies, and as Robert Brenner has most recently shown, their most intimate affiliation was with the Crown, which protected their corporate privileges in return for political and financial support. Many of these men were royal employees, then or later: Proby was active at court and a former governor of Ulster; Jones was a customs farmer; Ducy eventually became banker to Charles I. Men like Bolles were old gentry stock; he is one of eight ex-Lord Mayors and knights of the realm listed in the Dedication in strict order of seniority, as are the other Aldermen in the order in which they had held the post of Sheriff (and in which they would become Mayor, in the case of those destined to reach that office). This powerful oligarchy, proud of its long tradition of civic independence, inevitably had complex, often difficult relations with other political groups and interests, and it was no stranger to conflict with the Crown, usually over taxation; but amidst the shifting allegiances of this period the City's political enemies were generally to be found not in the royal government but in Parliament, which in the name of free trade regularly opposed merchant privileges and monopolies.

Middleton habitually views these matters from the City's point of view; but we may guess that he felt comfortable with his employers not for ideological reasons but because they reflected his own pragmatic attitude to self-betterment. Consider, for example, the battle over the Virginia Company that was going on while these pieces were being produced. About one-third of the named Aldermen were Adventurers in the company, a high proportion, arguably, given the extensive withdrawal by London merchants from investment in Virginia after the company was taken over by the gentry party of Sir Edwin Sandys in 1619. A leading light in the campaign to regain merchant control was Alderman Johnson, son-in-law of the city magnate Sir Thomas Smith; Hugh Hamersley and James Campbell were also declared opponents of the Sandys faction. But to achieve their ends the merchants formed an alliance with the Rich family, the colonizing aristocrats who had originally backed Sandys's efforts at colonial reform but had been alienated by his attempt to halt their own privateering activities. The merchants themselves had good reason to dislike privateers and had little taste for Robert Rich's overseas ventures (in which plunder and settlement were always closely related), but it suited their interests to make common cause with him on this occasion. And it is likely that Middleton, always an adaptable writer, would have been quick to appreciate that the civic virtues he praises so lavishly were founded upon a thoroughly practical grasp of commercial priorities.

He is also alert to the implications of the customs and practices that he commends, drawing out their particular significance for the time. Sometimes this means he has to tread carefully. Ent. 4, for instance, was devised against the background of another overseas crisis, the onset of the Thirty Years War in Europe, which led to calls for military preparedness at home. Sporadic efforts to revive military training for the citizenry had been made since 1613 (when a Spanish invasion had been expected), giving rise to a vogue for municipal artillery 'gardens' or parade grounds; but in 1617, the year before war broke out on the Continent, Thomas Adams lamented the lack of home defences ('O the madness of us Englishmen!') and counselled: 'You then that have the places of government in this honourable city, offer willingly your hands, your purses, yourselves to this noble exercise.' By 1620 the City had responded to the King's appeal for funds to defend the Palatinate by levying the individual livery companies; but the programme for military training was disrupted by bitter disputes over public use of the Artillery Garden and the captaincy of its Company; both matters were referred to the Privy Council. Middleton may be alluding to this in 4.25-6 and making the City's case that it should be allowed to run its own affairs (a claim backed by the antique pedigree given to its officers in 4.21-2). But citizens were absent from the Artillery Garden not just because of bureaucratic arguments but because they lacked (or so they claimed) the resources to train properly. On 3 October 1620, at about the time this speech was due to be given, the Court of Aldermen was petitioned to provide subsidies for those 'practising arms in the Artillery Garden', on the grounds that they were having to equip themselves and numbers had fallen by more than half in three years. The Aldermen, however, had already cancelled the muster for that year on 19 September (perhaps acknowledging the problem), so Middleton's speech was never heard.

If militia training was one of those instances where government demands popular initiative but fails to provide the means for it to flourish, Middleton's other examples of civic encouragement for projects and customs have a happier ring. The archery contests held at Bunhill near Moorfields (Ent. 2) were a convenient opportunity to celebrate social solidarity and native tradition, for they represented an early example of the heritage industry at work. At the end of the sixteenth century John Stow had complained that 'the ancient daily exercises in the longbow by citizens of this city' are 'now almost clean left off and forsaken', despite the early Tudor statutes enforcing them that Middleton refers to in 2.9-10. But as the longbow ceased to be a significant weapon of war it became a cultural symbol, and the focus of attempts to counter the enclosure of common fields where archery was practised. These efforts spawned the numerous pageants and competitive shows held during the Jacobean period; one of the biggest was held on Mayday and was probably the 'shooting day' in question. (By the mid-1620s, and perhaps earlier, the Bunhill festivities included mock-battles and sieges, which Ben Jonson made fun of in his poem 'A Speech according to Horace'.) In 2.13-16 Middleton borrows from Roger Ascham's Toxophilus (1545) to underline the idea of archery as a distillation of English skill and nobility, and uses this to develop an elaborate analogy with wise government. (Much the same idea is embodied in the emblematic figure of Honour with his sheaf of arrows in An Invention.) The visit to the Conduit Head (Ent. 3) exploits similar associations and links them to practical social needs. The reservoirs in the Tyburn area (constructed in mediaeval times) supplied piped water to the Great Conduit in Eastcheap, and the annual autumn expedition to inspect this vital supply had become in the sixteenth century a ceremonial occasion marked by hunting and feasting. The visits lapsed with the opening in 1613 of Hugh Myddelton's New River project (to which the Nymph refers at 3.30-5); but in the intervening period any notion that the New River would solve all problems of supply seems to have yielded to more long-sighted estimates. Measures were enacted at this time for the 'conservancy' of the Thames, and the impact of London's rapidly growing population must have convinced the city fathers that the traditional visit to the Conduit Head should be revived to safeguard resources.

The pieces gathered in Honourable Entertainments do not belong to a single genre and cannot simply be distinguished as a group from pageants or court entertainments. Two of them (7 and 8) are full-fledged masques for Christmas and Easter respectively, though the simple structure of the latter, dominated by songs, seems to provoke Middleton into more theatrical use of its central character, Flora, in the two pieces that follow. In the first of these (Ent. 9) he also had a special commission to fulfil. Ten days before it was performed for the Privy Council, James I had come to the Guildhall to reprimand the city authorities for not punishing adequately some youths who had abused the Spanish ambassador in the street; and Flora's speech is an assiduous apology for the lapse, one which cunningly links James's visit to the idea of London as the camera regis, the King's 'chosen city' which is the 'chamber of his sweet security' (9.57-9). Flora reappears again 'in her bower' in Ent. 10, which promises to restore the bucolic mood of Ent. 8 but is immediately complicated by the antimasque device of Hyacinth's interruption ('Speak thrice together?'); so Flora must restate the theme of delegation and responsibility (10.25-30) before complete harmony can be achieved. Individually these final two items are no more than interludes, but on the page they combine with Ent. 8 to form an ambitious masque design. The indoor pieces (including An Invention) seem all to have been given at banquets, and several of these are basically theatricalized orations, adding the iconography of court masque (Comus, Flora, Gentleman Sewer, 'made dish') to a long tradition of public speechmaking on civic occasions. The outdoor events (2 and 3) have similar elements, but they also resemble moments both in royal entries (or 'progress' entertainments) and in mayoral pageants: the water-nymph who rises—oddly but poetically—'out of the ground' in Ent. 3 and Pallas on horseback greeting the Mayor in Ent. 4 each effect a quasi-spontaneous encounter which turns Cokayne and his Aldermen into silent players in a small drama.

The first two shows for Jones (Ents. 6 and 7) taken together read like a bourgeois version of Jonson's masque Pleasure Reconcil'd to Virtue, presented at court in 1618, which may have influenced Milton's Masque at Ludlow Castle. In his masque Jonson had made Comus into a Rabelaisian figure, the 'god of cheer, or the belly'; Middleton offers in Ent. 6 a more traditional portrait of the 'smooth youth of feasts', evoking the classical exemplar of the boy crowned with vine leaves, so that the serene explication of the Haberdashers' Arms is infused with rich festivity rather than challenged by Bacchic riot. But as he moves from one piece to the next Middleton once again opens up the prospect of a larger design. Ent. 7 sets Levity and Severity in opposition, the former a voluptas figure who turns a mirror on the revellers and challenges them to value excess and abandon, the latter a killjoy who urges them to see such behaviour as a disruptive antimasque. Their conflict is resolved by Temperance (the favoured attribute of the governor in numerous mayoral pageants), who brings about a richly orchestrated close to the piece. Yet her dismissal of both figures as unworthy of the company seems forced and over-simplified. A capacity for festive cheer is a mark of the public-spirited mayor (inscribed in popular mythology by Dekker's Simon Eyre in The Shoemakers' Holiday), while the figure of Severity is in the emblem-books the very type of the strong magistrate. Both qualities, admirable in themselves but capable of being abused, are stabilized and enriched by their interaction, pleasure reconciled to virtue. But despite having laid the foundations for this idea in Ent. 6 with the decorous figure of Comus, Middleton is apparently unwilling to develop its implications for his sober and conservative audience. The modest resources at his disposal—a couple of actors, musicians, a few props—were certainly better suited to a clear and elegant exposition of received ideas.

But we should be wary of reinscribing the notion that Middleton's civic entertainments are hackwork in the service of unimaginative employers. They are polished efforts perfectly tailored to their individual occasions, and if the governing idea in each seems simple, it is invariably deployed with grace and economy. Moreover, though Middleton's job is to flatter, he usually manages to avoid sounding servile. The pieces he wrote during the mayoralty of Sir William Cokayne (which must have helped to get Middleton the job of City Chronologer) frequently capitalize on the formidable reputation of this merchant prince by structuring the action around him, rather in the same way that the monarch is the focal point of a Jacobean masque. But he makes no attempt to do the same with Cokayne's successor, Sir Francis Jones, an altogether less impressive man who was known to be fiscally unreliable (he absconded on the last night of his term as Mayor). The tactical shift of emphasis can be seen in Ents. 5–6: in both Middleton uses the device of an elaborately sculptured pie to carry his theme, but after a mock-funeral for the end of Cokayne's mayoralty (embodied in an imaginative visual pun, since piecrust was often called a 'coffin') he takes the opportunity of Jones's inaugural dinner for the Haberdashers to exalt the Company rather than the man. This is perhaps a shrewd use of the principle of laudando praecipere or praising to stimulate self-improvement, prompting Jones to live up to the Haberdashers' example. The contrast between the two pieces was one available to readers of Middleton's text of Honourable Entertainments, confirming that the maker of shows for the city is alert to, and helps to clarify, the standards and principles by which a viable civic culture will be judged.

Honourable Entertainments.

SEE ALSO

An Invention, 1446

Textual introduction and apparatus: Companion, 673

Authorship and date: Companion, 410

Honourable Entertainments

Dedication To the Right Honourable Sir Francis Jones, knight, Lord Mayor of the City of London; the Right Worshipful Sir John Garrard, Sir Thomas Bennett, Sir Thomas Lowe, Sir Thomas Myddelton, Sir John Jolles, Sir John Leman, Sir George Bolles, Sir William Cokayne, knights and Aldermen; the truly generous and noble Heneage Finch, esquire, Master Recorder; Master Edward Barkham, Master Alexander Prescott, Master Peter Proby, Master Martin Lumley, Master William Gore, Master John Gore, Master Alan Cotton, Master Cuthbert Hackett, Master William Halliday, Master Robert Johnson, Master Richard Herne, Master Hugh Hamersley, Master Richard Dean, Master James Campbell, Aldermen; Master Edward Allen, Master Robert Ducy, Sheriffs and Aldermen

15 All brethren-senators, precedents of religious and worthy actions, careful assistants in the state of so unmatched a government, and all of them being his worthy and honourable patrons, T.M. wisheth the fullness of that honour whose object is virtue and goodness.

20 Those things that have took joy at several feasts
To give you entertainment as the guests

They held most truly worthy, become now
Poor suitors to be entertained by you.
So were they from the first. Their suit is, then,
Once serving you, to be received again;
And you to equal justice are so true
You always cherish that which honours you.

25

Ever obedient in his studies, to the service of so complete a goodness,
Tho. Middleton.

30

Honourable Entertainments

On Monday and Tuesday in Easter Week, 1620, the first entertainment at the house of the right worthy Sir William Cokayne, then Lord Mayor, which on the Saturday following was fashioned into service for the Lords of his Majesty's most honourable Privy Council; upon which day that noble marriage was celebrated betwixt the Right Honourable Charles Lord Howard, Baron of Effingham, and Mary, eldest daughter of the said Sir William Cokayne, then Lord Mayor of London and Lord General of the military forces.

10

Dedication.5 Cokayne the most famous of the group of knights and former Lord Mayors listed in 1–5. He made a large fortune in the cloth trade, and was the first governor of Ulster and founder of Londonderry.

15 brethren-senators dignifying the city fathers by associating them with ancient Roman government: the first of several such references
20 things actors
23 entertained employed

1.7 Charles... Effingham the 41-year-old son of Thomas Howard, Earl of Nottingham and former Lord Admiral. He apparently inherited the barony before his father's death in 1624.

The cock-and-tortoise drinking cups.

Enter one habited like a Gentleman Sewer, bearing in his hand an artificial cock, conducted by the City Music towards the high table, a song giving notice of his entrance.

Song.

15 Room, room, make room
 You friends to fame,
 Officers of worth and name,
 Make room, make room.
 Behold the bird of state doth come,
 Make room,
 Clear the place,
 O do it all the grace.

10.1 Sewer attendant in charge of the banquet

10.2 cock one of a set of silver-gilt cups in the shape of a cock standing on a tortoise, with removable heads for drinking. They were made in 1605, a sum having been left to the Skinners by Cockayne's father for the purpose. See illustration.

31 Minerva She was the goddess of crafts and trade guilds in ancient Rome, but was also identified with the Greek goddess Pallas Athena and took over her martial characteristics.

43-4 What . . . vigilancy? recalling the cock of Aesculapius which 'doth teach his watching and his care | To visit oft his patients' (Whitney, 212).

50-1 constrains . . . nerves musters his resources

53-4 sharpest . . . spur The Skinners' cups (see illustration) show the cocks wearing the spurs which were attached to fighting birds.

It is the king of birds whose chanting
 And early morning crowing,
 So quick and strongly flowing,
 Does make the king of beasts lie panting.
 How worthy then to be brought in with honour
 That daunts the proudest in that humble manner.

The speech.

Two powers at strife about conceived wrong
 To whom this bird should properly belong
 Were reconciled by Harmony. First the sun
 Called it his bird, 'cause still, when day began
 To ope her modest eye, this creature then Proclaims his glory to the world again.
 Minerva next, goddess of arms and art,
 Claimed it for hers, not without just desert,
 He like the morning being the Muses' friend,
 And then for courage, 'tis his life, his end.
 Without wrong, then, those properties related,
 To both he may be justly consecrated.
 But, worthy lord, how properly to you
 Whose place partakes of both. It is so true
 An emblem of your worth, charge, power and state,
 None noblier can express a magistrate.
 For all that is, in this bird, quality
 Is in you virtue, justice, industry.
 What does his early morning note imply
 But in you early care and vigilancy?
 A duty that begets duty to you;
 So virtue still pays and receives her due.
 What does the striking of his wings import,
 Ere to his neighbour he his sounds retort,
 But the dear labours and incessant pains
 Of a just magistrate, that e'en constrains
 His nerves to give more virtue to his word
 And beat in sense into the most absurd?
 The sharpest is the easiest to apply,
 For his quick spur law's sword doth signify:
 The execution of your charge and place
 To cut off all crimes that are bold and base.
 'Virtues should be with kind embraces heaped,
 But with a sword sin's harvest must be reaped.'

To the Aldermen.

My reverence next to you, to you that are
 The fathers of this city, by whose care,
 Wisdom and watchfulness the good cause thrives.
 You that are lights and precedents in lives,
 Noble examples, honours t'age and time,
 This is the top which your good cares must climb.

- 65 'A ceaseless labour virtue hath imposed,
Upon all those whom honour hath enclosed.'
And such are you, selected from the rest.
Works then that are most choice become you best;
Place before all your actions and intents
- 70 The rare gifts of that bird, this but presents.
Behold the very shape and figure now Serves for a noble welcome, turned into
A cup of bounty, and t'adorn the feast
Laden with love comes to each worthy guest.
- 75 And but observe the manner, there's in that Freeness expressed, humility, yet state.
First you take off his head to taste his heart,
Which shows at this time power is laid apart
And bounty fills the place. Then he goes round
- 80 To show a welcome of an equal sound,
To everyone a free one through the board:
So plain he speaks the goodness of his lord.
Take then respectful notice through the hall
That here the noble health begins to all.
The Cock-cup then delivered by this Gentleman Sewer to the Lord Mayor, he beginning the health, a second song thus honouring it.
- Second Song*
- 85 The health's begun
In the bird of the sun.
Pledge it round, pledge it round,
With hearty welcome it comes crowned,
O pledge it round.
- 90 The ceremonies due,
Forget not as they were begun to you.
When you are drunk to, you're by duty led
First to kiss your hand, then take off the head.
You cannot miss it then,
- 95 To put it on and kiss it again.
The next to whom the health doth flow
It taught to honour your pledge so.
So round, round, round, round let it go,
As above, so below,
- 100 For bounty did intend it always so.
- 2 The Second Entertainment
At Bunhill, on the shooting day, another habited like an archer did thus greet the Lord Mayor and Aldermen after they were placed in their tent.
Why, this is nobly done, to come to grace
A sport so well becomes the time and place.
- Old time made much on't, and it thought no praise
Too dear for't, nor no honour in those days.
Not only kings ordained laws to defend it
But shined the first examples to commend it;
In their own persons honoured it so far
A land of peace showed like a field of war.
But chiefly Henry, memory's fame, the Eighth,
And the sixth Edward, gave it worth and weight
By act and favour—not without desert,
It being the comeliest and the manliest art.
And whereas meaner crafts took their first form
From humble things, as twisting from a worm,
And weaving from the spider's limber frame,
Music and archery from Apollo came.
He calls himself great master of this sport
In whose bright name fair wisdom keeps her court.
Well may this instrument be first in fame
Above all others that have got a name
In war or peace, when Heaven itself doth show
'The covenant of mercy by a bow.'
And as each creature, nay, each senseless thing
Is made a glass to see Heaven's goodness in,
So, though this be a mere delight, a game,
Justice may see here something she may claim
Without wrong done to state, and call't her own,
Since the great'st power is oft through weakness known.
- What are reproofs—with them I first begin—
But arrows shot against the breast of sin?
Who hits vice home and cleaves a wrong in twain,
So that it never comes too close again,
Shows not he noble archery? I'll pray ever
He may be followed, mended he can never.
And as a cunning Bowman marks his ground
And from light things, which being tossed up, is found
Where the wind sits, for his advantage best,
Before he lets his arrow pass his breast,
So the grave magistrate, discreetly wise,
Makes use of light occasions that arise
To lead him on to weightier, winds a cause,
From things but weakly told much substance draws,
And will the state of truth exactly try
Before he let the shaft of judgement fly.
Then in this art there's virtue still expressed,
For every man desires here to be best.
Their aim is still perfection, to outreach
And go beyond each other, which does teach

70 this... presents of which this is only an image

76 state authority

92-7 When... so Elaborate toasting ceremonies were a feature of city banquets.

2.0.2 Bunhill fields adjoining Bunhill Row on the west side of the Artillery Garden, near Moorfields

9-11 But... favour Henry VIII passed two statutes (ratified by his successor) to enforce the practice of archery by all male citizens.

13-16 And... came adapted from Toxophilus, Roger Ascham's 1545 treatise on archery: 'mean crafts be first found out by men or beasts, as weaving by a spider, and such other: but high and commendable sciences by gods, as shooting and music by Apollo'.

22 bow rainbow

27 state the dignity of high office

35 marks observes

43 exactly try precisely assess

50 A noble strife in our more serious deeds,
Assuring glory to him best exceeds.
And where some sports seek corners for their shame
Daylight and open place commends this game;
Much like an honest cause, it appears bold
In public court for all eyes to behold.

To the Archers.

55 On then, Apollo's scholars, you ne'er found Nobler spectators compassed in this ground.
To whom I wish, worthy their virtuous ways,
Peace to their hearts, long health and blessed days.

The Third Entertainment

3 Upon the renewing of the worthy and laudable custom of visiting the springs and conduit heads for the sweetness and health of the city, a visitation long discontinued.

A water-nymph, seeming to rise out of the ground by the conduit head near the Banqueting House, thus greets the honourable assembly.

5 Ha! Let me clear mine eyes. Methinks I see Comforts approach as if they came to me.
I am not used to 'em; I ha' been long without.
How comes the virtue of the time about?
Has ancient custom yet a friend of weight?
So many? Rare! Goodness is waked o'late
10 Out of her long sleep, sure, that has lain still Many a dear day charmed with neglect and will.
I thought I'd been forsaken, quite forsook,
For none, these seven years, has bestowed a look Upon my wat'ry habitation here;
15 I mean of power, that ought to see me clear
For yon fair city's health, which sweetness bless
And virtue in full strength ever possess.
Well fare thy visitation, noble lord,
And this most grave assembly, that accord
20 In ways of charity and care with thee.
Joys visit you, as your loves visit me.
The water stands so full now in mine eyes
I cannot choose but weep, but the tears rise
From gladness, not from sorrow, for that's lost
25 Now I see you. Unkindness yet has cost
Many a dear drop since I beheld the face
Of the last magistrate in power and place.
I ha' done good service: 'tis no boasting part
In one forgot to speak her own desert.
30 I grant my kind and loving sisters, both Chadwell and Amwell, have expressed no sloth
In their pipe-pilgrimage, but fairly proved
Most excellent servants, housed and well beloved;

And have, when hard necessity requires,
Given happy quench to many merciless fires. 35
Therefore am I neglected? An old friend?
The head, that to the heart o'th'city send
My best and clearest service, take delight
To be at hand, make your dames pure and white
Who for their civil neatness are proclaimed 40
Mirrors of women, through all kingdoms famed.
Can I be so forgot? And daily hear
The noise of water-bearers din your ear?
Those are my alms-folks, trotting in a ring,
And live upon the bounty of my spring, 45
Yet like dull worms that have no sense at all
Lick up the dews, ne'er look from whence they fall.
The head's not minded whence the goodness flows.
So with the world's condition right it goes.
'Blessings are swallowed with a greedy love, 50
But thanks fly slowly to yon place above'
From whence the ever-living waters spring
Which to your souls eternal comforts bring.
The dews of heaven fall on you; prosperous fates
Like fruitful rivers flow into your states. 55

The Fourth Entertainment

4 Upon discontinuance, and to excite them to practice, a speech intended for the general training. Being appointed for the Tuesday next ensuing the visitation of the springs;
but upon some occasion the day deferred.

Pallas on horseback, on her helmet the figure of a cock, her proper crest, thus should have greeted the lord general the Lord Mayor Sir William Cokayne at his entrance into the field, the worthy colonels, the right generous Master Alderman Hamersley, President of the noble Council of War, for the martial garden; the captains, etc.

Why, here's my wish, the joy I live upon, 5
Wisdom and valour when both meet in one.
Now 'tis a field of honour, fame's true sphere;
Methinks I could eternally dwell here.
Why, here's perfection, 'tis a place for me,
Pallas delights in such community. 10
This bird of courage, enemy to fear,
Whose figure on my helmet now I wear—
And have done ever from my birth in heaven—
Is consecrate to me, as to thee given.
Our crest's alike, and fits both war and peace. 15
The virtues are valour and watchfulness,
And both shine clear now in thy present state,
Field-general and city-magistrate.

51-2 And...game alluding to the 'bowling allies and dicing houses' which John Stow complained were springing up as common fields were enclosed and built upon (A Survey of London, 1603).

3.1-3 Upon...discontinued See Introduction, p. 1431.

15 of power anyone in authority

27 last magistrate Sir John Swinnerton of the Merchant Taylors was Lord Mayor in 1612-3.

31 Chadwell and Amwell villages in Hertfordshire where were located the springs feeding Hugh Myddelton's New River project, opened in 1613

48 minded bothered

4.1-4 Upon...deferred See Introduction, p.
1432.

4.1-2 Pallas...crest In Ripa's Iconologia
Minerva, Pallas's Roman counterpart, wears a helmet similarly adorned.

4.7 martial garden the Artillery Garden

15 Our...alike Cokayne's coat of arms featured three cocks.

As I from arts and arms derive my name,
 So thou suppliest two offices with fame.
 Why, here the ancient Roman honour dwells:
 A praetor, general; senators, colonels;
 Captains, grave citizens; so richly inspired
 They can assist in council if required,
 And set court causes in as fair a form
 As they do men here without rage or storm.
 Lieutenants, ensigners, sergeants of bands,
 Of worthy citizens the army stands,
 Each in his place deserving fair respect.
 I can complain of nothing but neglect
 That such a noble city's armed defence
 Should be so seldom seen. I could dispense
 With great occasions, but alas, whole years
 To put off exercise gives cause of fears.
 'In getting wealth all care should not be set,
 But some in the defending what you get.'
 There's few but have their providence so pure,
 Blessed with a fair estate, to make it sure
 By strength of writings, and in good men's hands
 Putting their coin, secured by lives and lands.
 This is the common fort to which all fly,
 Every man labours for security.
 But what's all this—I speak in truth's behalf—
 If neither men, city, nor deeds be safe?
 Where's now security of state? That day
 When life stands neglectful of her house of clay,
 A ruin which neglect of glorious arms
 Has brought on many a kingdom, rocked with charms
 Of lazy dullness by unpractised men
 Fit for no service. I resolve you then:
 This is security, if you'll rightly know,
 And does secure that word which you call so.
 Let not a small pecuniary expense
 (Which is but drossy dotage) keep you hence;
 You lose all that you save after that manner.
 What is't to rise in riches, fall in honour?
 Nay, to your safeties to commit self-treason
 Which everything provides for, blessed with reason.
 Let this grave lord's example, in its prime,
 Who perfects all his actions with his time,
 Makes even with the year to his fair fame,
 Gives his accounts up with a glorious name
 In field and court, move all men to discharge
 Their manly offices and pains at large.
 Let every year at least once in his round
 See you like sons of honour tread this ground;

And heaven that both gives and secures just wealth
 The city bless with safety, you with health.

The Fifth Entertainment

At the house of Sir William Cokayne, upon Simon and Jude's Day following, being the last great feast of the magistrate's year, and the expiration of his praetorship.

One attired like a mourner enters after a made dish like a hearse stuck with sable bannerets; drums and trumpets expressing a mournful service.

The Speech.

Imagine now, each apprehensive guest,
 The year departed. This his funeral feast;
 I a chief mourner; this a sad pageant here,
 Set with the orphan's sigh, the widow's tear.
 All seem to mourn, as locked from their reliefs,
 Till the new sun of justice dry their griefs.
 And as there is no glorious thing that ends
 But leaves a fame behind it that commends
 Or disapproves the progress of his acts,
 So in this epitaph sad truth contracts
 A spacious story which, spread forth at large,
 Might instruct all, built up for power and charge.

The Last Will and Testament of 1620 finishing for the city.

Imprimis, I Annus 1620 do bequeath to my successor
 '21 all my good wishes, pains, labours and reform-ations, to be nobly perfected by his endeavours and diligence.

Item, I make Justice my executor, and Wisdom my overseer, which is that honourable court which never failed yet to see justice performed.

Item, I give and bequeath to all the officers for legacies: truth, temperance, example of humility, and gentleness.

Lastly, I bequeath to the whole body of the beloved commonalty three inestimable jewels, love, meekness and loyalty, which are always the forerunners of a blessed prosperity; which Heaven grant they may everlasting enjoy.

The Epitaph.

Here ends a year that never misspent day,
 Through fame's celestial signs made his own way,
 By discreet judgement all his time still led
 Which is the only sign governs the head.
 Mercy to wants and bounty to desert,
 The special sign that rules the noble heart.
 A year of goodness and a year of right
 In which the honest cause sued with delight.

22 praetor governing magistrate in republican Rome

24 assist in council act as royal advisers

25 set resolve, put in order

27 ensigners standard-bearers

35 set directed, concentrated

54 is...dotage only a miser would worry about

65 every...once When it suspended the muster for 1620 at which this speech would have been heard, the Court of Aldermen decreed that in future training would take place on 10 April.

5.1-2 Simon...Day October 28th, the last day of the mayoral year

3.1 made dish sculpted cakes or pies were a popular feature at banquets in this period

8 locked from denied

11 fame record

32 fame's celestial signs the zodiac

A year wherein nothing that's good was dull,
 Began at moon's increase and ends at full.
 Full cup, full welcome, adding the sun's gift
 Who, nearer his declining, the more swift
 In his illustrious course, more bright, more clear.
 Such is the glorious setting of this year:
 His beamy substance shines e'en through his shroud
 As the fair sun shoots splendour through his cloud.
 May every year succeeding this still have
 No worse an epitaph to deck his grave.
 And so my last farewell (this tear for me)
 Wishing that many may conclude like thee.

6 The Sixth Entertainment

At the house of the Right Honourable Sir Francis Jones.

The first entertainment at his first great feast prepared to give welcome to his own noble fraternity, the Company of Haberdashers. The property to which this speech especially hath respect was a device like a made dish expressing two naked arms breaking through a cloud, supporting a wreath of laurel, being part of the Haberdashers' Arms.

The speech presented by a servant to Comus, the great sir of feasts.

Free love, full welcome, bounty fair and clear
 E'en as it flows from Heaven, inhabit here,
 And with your liberal virtues bless the year.
 Make this thy palace, thou smooth youth of feasts,
 Comus! And put joy into all the guests
 That they may truly taste in fewest words
 Th'abundant welcome yon kind lord affords
 Especially to you above the rest,
 Of all most worthy to be first and best.
 You challenge two respects: in brotherhood, one
 Which had desert enough, came it alone
 Without a second virtue; but to add
 Unto your worthiness, your love was clad
 With honour, cost, and care; and how applied
 The late triumphant day best testified,
 Stands in no need of my applause and praise.
 Your worth can of itself itself best raise.
 So much for noble action in your right,
 Which I presume his goodness will requite.
 Now for himself—not far to wade or swim—
 I borrow of your honours to fit him,
 Which both preserves me in my first bounds still
 And may agree best with his love and will.

6.2 first...feast Not the inaugural banquet for the incoming Lord Mayor, which was held at the Guildhall with all the Aldermen present, but a subsequent and more exclusive gathering, at which the Mayor's guild celebrates the honour of having one of its number elected.

8.1-2 Comus...feasts See Introduction,

p. 1433.

18 challenge...respects deserve praise on two counts

23 late...day Comus's festive spirit has infused the inaugural banquet on 29th
 October as well as the present occasion.

27 his Jones's

Here the property is presented.

Behold in this rare symbol of renown
 The emblem of all justice, and the crown
 The fair reward for't, ever fresh and green,
 Which imitates those joys eye hath not seen. 35
 These arms, that for their nakedness resemble
 E'en truth itself, no covering to dissemble
 Nor shift for bribe, but open, plain and bare,
 Shows men of power should keep their conscience fair.
 And were their acts transparent, without veil, 40
 Disguise or visor, and such never fail.
 Observe this more, 'tis not one arm alone
 That bears this laurel, but two joined in one:
 Mercy and Justice, the two props of state,
 They must be both fixed in the magistrate; 45
 If wanting either, subject to much harm,
 For he that has but one has but one arm.
 Judge then the imperfection. Mark again:
 They break both through a cloud, which instructs men
 How they should place their reverence and their love, 50
 Seeing all lawful power comes from above.
 And as the laurel which is now your due—
 Being due to honour, therefore most to you—
 Fears no injurious weather the year brings,
 But spite of storms looks ever green and springs 55
 Apollo's tree which lightnings never blast,
 So, honoured lord, should burning malice cast
 Her pitchy fires at your triumphant state,
 You are Apollo's tree, a magistrate
 Which no foul gust of envy can offend, 60
 Nor may it ever to your lordship's end.
 Health and a noble courage bless your days.
 To this your worthy brotherhood, fame and praise.

The Seventh Entertainment

At the house of the Right Honourable Sir Francis Jones, Lord Mayor, for the celebration of the joyful feast of Christmas last.

Levity, a person attired suitable to her condition, from a window unexpectedly thus greets the assembly in the midst of the feast.

LEVITY

Why, well said! Thus should Christmas be,
 Lightsome, jocund, blithe and free. 5
 Now it looks like bounty's palace
 Where every cup has his full ballast.
 Drown cares with juice that grapes have bled
 And make Time's cheek look fresh and red.

41 visor mask

46 wanting lacking

56 Apollo's tree the laurel wreath

7.3.2 from a window on one side of the carved screen at the end of the hall which housed the musicians' balcony
 (cf. ll. 32-3).

- 10 Let nothing now but healths go round,
And no sooner off but crowned
With sparkling liquors, bounding up,
Quick in palate, as in cup.
15 To be heavy, to be dull
Is a fault so pitiful
We bar it from the course of reason.
Care must not peep abroad this season,
Nor a sad look dare appear
20 Within ten mile of Christmas cheer.
Sighs are banished ten leagues farther
Either cellar, hall or larder.
To be jovial then and blithe
Is truly to pay Christmas tithe,
And where free mirth is and impartial
25 Christmas there has made me marshal.
Severity from an opposite window as unexpectedly reproves her.
- SEVERITY
Why, how now? Know you where you are? Rude
thing,
Bold and unmannered licence, dare you bring
Your free speech hither, before me begin?
Who let this skittish thing of lightness in?
30 Some call the porter hither! Yet stay, stay,
I've power in words to chase this toy away.
I wonder that the music suffers thee
To come into their room!
- LEVITY Why, nicety?
SEVERITY
Believe me, honest men (whate'er you be),
35 She's able to spoil all your harmony,
Corrupt your airs with lightness.
- LEVITY O fie, fie,
How ill you blaze my coat, Severity!
SEVERITY
Is this a place for you? Can lightness here
Under the hazard of her shame appear?
LEVITY
40 Why, thou dull lumpish thing, void of all fashion,
Mirth's poison, enemy to recreation,
Thou melancholy wretch, so filled with spite
Thou eat'st thy heart when others take delight.
I must be merry, 'tis my nature—
- SEVERITY
Fool!
LEVITY
Dull dogbolt!
SEVERITY Skit!
- Enter below Temperance.*
- TEMPERANCE What, this a scolding school? 45
How now? So high got, and so loud withal?
Whose doing was't placed you two there to brawl?
Pray mark the assembly, look upon 'em well;
Think where you are, and let that rude thought quell
Your unbecoming difference. 'Tis not here 50
As at a pit! Here's reverence, worth, and fear.
- LEVITY
She says but right in that.
SEVERITY O Levity—
TEMPERANCE
No, nor you neither.
LEVITY You may be gone too!
TEMPERANCE
You're both extremes, therefore no place for you.
Lightness becomes not, nor severity: 55
It must be between both, and I am she.
Too light is bad, and too severe, as vile;
But both well-tempered makes the mixture mild.
As I stand now between you, so it makes
A perfect virtue up when it partakes 60
Of each, and comes no nearer than I do.
And virtue made, we have no need of you.
Vanish! Be gone.
- SEVERITY I give place willingly
To you, but not to her.
They give place.
- LEVITY Nor I to thee.
TEMPERANCE
Thus things should have their becoming grace, 65
For Temperance fits the reverence of this place.
Grave senators, in goodness still increased!
Long may you live to celebrate this feast,
This blessed season of true joy compiled
In which fair heaven and man were reconciled. 70
Music! Thou modest servant to this place,
Raise chaste delight to do this season grace.
A song, answered at several places
- SINGER
Echo! Echo! By thy love once to Narcissus
I now conjure thee not to miss us,
But make thy sound 75
Upon the woods rebound
And mountains—
(Echo) And mountains
And to thy neighbouring sisters call—
(Echo) Sisters call 80
Lodged in cave or hollow wall.

25.1 Severity Presumably contrasted to Levity by being clad in formal attire.
The emblem books interpret the figure as commanding regal awe, but this is not appropriate here.
37 blaze my coat paint my reputation
39 Under . . . of risking
45 dogbolt literally, a blunt arrow; a common insult

Skit tart. The word implies wantonness or frivolity.
49 rude thought stark realization
50 difference quarrel
51 pit i.e. a bear or bull-baiting fear power to judge
64.1–7.64 They . . . thee Having formed a triangular image with Temperance between and below them (l. 59), the two disappear from their windows after Levity's retort.

72.1 several places different parts of the hall
73 Echo . . . Narcissus The nymph Echo fell in love with Narcissus and after being rejected by him wasted away to a voice.

- And those resounding near fair fountains—
 (Echo) Near fair fountains
 Let 'em call to one another—
 85 (Echo) To one another,
 (Second Echo) one another
 And one sister raise up t'other.
 (Echo) Up t'other.
 Let it go from me to you—
 90 [Echo] From me to you,
 [Second Echo] me to you
 From you to them, be just and true.
 (Echo) Just and true.
 Never cease your voice's flight
 95 Till you raise up chaste delight.
 (Echo) Up chaste delight.
- DELIGHT
 Who calls me from my cave?
 SINGER 'Twas I.
 (Echo) 'Twas I, 'twas I.
 This is no time in silence now to lie.
- DELIGHT
 Who, I?
 100 SINGER O ay!
 This is a season of all joy compiled
 In which fair heaven and man were reconciled.
 (Echo) Heaven and man were reconciled,
 [Second Echo] reconciled.
 105 Behold how many a worthy guest
 Are met to celebrate this feast.
- DELIGHT
 I see it plain. O blame me then,
 I ne'er will show such sloth again.
 For whose delight am I now raised?
 SINGER
 O, for the city's.
 110 DELIGHT How, for the city's?
 (Echo) For the city's.
 To fail a mistress so renowned it were a thousand pities.
 (Echo) Thousand pities.
- SINGER
 Those are her honoured sons you now behold.
 DELIGHT
 115 Heaven bless them all with graces manifold.
- TEMPERANCE (to the music) So!
 'Tis thankfully accepted, you've expressed
 Your service well and fully to this feast;
 Adorned and honoured in each happy part
 With those most reverend patrons to desert. 120
The close
 Joy never fail your meetings; good success
 All your endeavours and your fortunes bless.
 Gladness of heart dwell ever in your breasts,
 And peace of fair works bring you glorious rests.
- The Eighth Entertainment* 8
 At the house of the Right Honourable Sir Francis Jones, Lord Mayor, for the solemn feast of Easter last, upon the times of that blessed and laudable custom of celebrating the memory of pious works in this city at Saint Mary Spital. 5
The Invention.
The four seasons of the year, spring, summer, autumn and winter, in a song into four parts divided call up Flora, the goddess of the spring, who in a bower decked with artificial flowers appears upon the musical invocation.
The song at several windows
- SPRING
 Flora, Flora!
 We call thee here,
 SUMMER We call thee here
 From forth thy fragrant bower.
- SPRING
 Thou queen of every laughing flower
 Appear! 10
 Appear to us.
- SUMMER To us appear,
 Thou banquet of the year.
- SPRING
 Or if a name may be more sweet, more dear,
 Hark, summer, hark!
- SUMMER Mark, autumn, mark
 How coughing winter mourns to see 15
 This smiling hour.
- WINTER Would it were nipped for me!
 But soft, I feel no such decay
 But I may live to kiss fair May,

90-1 Eld's punctuation suggests the intricacy of echoic effects.

97 cave probably a property placed in front of the screen

120 desert do justice to

8.4-5 Saint...Spital a former priory and hospital on the east side of Bishopsgate; after the Reformation sermons continued to be given there on the Monday and Tuesday in Easter Week from an outdoor pulpit in the churchyard. These were attended by the city fathers, who had been provided in 1594 with 'one fair builded house...to sit in, there to hear the sermons' (Stow); this was probably a covered three-sided structure. On both days the Aldermen and Sheriffs would breakfast and dine at the Mayor's house; the evening banquet is the same occasion celebrated in Ent. 1 and An Invention, and it seems usually to have been a sumptuous one. In 1617 senior courtiers and the Archbishop of Canterbury were invited, and the elaborate nature of Middleton's entertainment for 1621 may point to a similarly important guest-list on this occasion.

5-7 several different

6-20 Flora...flowers The seasons were probably marked out simply by the colour of their coats or headgear, but Winter has a more expressive role than the others and runs no risk of upstaging Flora, so he may have had a more elaborate costume like Inverno in The Masque of Flowers put on by Gray's Inn in 1613: 'an old man in a short gown of silk shag like withered grass all frosted and snowed over...with long white hair and beard hung with icicles'.

- And in the morn and evening hours
 20 Leave my cold sweats upon the flowers.
 SPRING
 Alas, poor mumps! At thy weak power
 We laugh.
 The sun will rise and take thy cold kiss off.
 And now behold!
- WINTER
 O, O, O!
- AUTUMN
 25 He's struck cold
 At Flora's first appearing;
 Look! In a sound
 Will drop to th' ground.
 Help, help, help, he wants your cheering.
- WINTER
 30 O I confess,
 Field-empëress,
 The beauty of thy power amazes.
 I am content to join
 With those three friends of thine
 35 And help to chant thy praises.
- ALL
 Now all the seasons of the year agree
 To give, fair Flora, the prime place to thee.
Flora, rising in her bower, calls forth two of her servants.
- FLORA
 Where's Hyacinth, the boy Apollo loved
 And turned into a flower?
- HYACINTH Here, queen of sweetness.
- FLORA
 40 Adonis! Thou that for thy beauteous chastity
 Wert turned into the chastest of all flowers,
 The close-enfolded rose—blown into blushes,
 It is so maiden-modest!
- ADONIS What's thy pleasure,
 Fair empress of sweet odours?
- FLORA Willing servants!
 45 I have employment for you both, and speedy.
- BOTH
 We wait with much joy to receive the charge on't.
- FLORA
 Haste to the two assisting magistrates,
 Those worthy city consuls.
 Bear our sweet wishes to 'em, and speak joy
- From us to both their feasts,
 And to that part of their grave-worthy guests
 Which here we miss today, though here be those Whom we ought more especially to honour.
 Say, though we cannot there ourself appear
 Because we owe our greater service here,
 55 Yet that they shall not fail of all their due
 We send the wishes of our heart by you.
- HYACINTH
 Which shall be faithfully tendered.
- FLORA 'Tis presumed.
 [Exeunt Hyacinth and Adonis]
- But to this fair assembly present now
 I, and these yielding sweets all their heads bow
 In honour of this feast; of the day, chief,
 Made solemn by the works of your relief,
 Your cares, your charities, the holy use
 Of pious exercise, all which infuse
 Blessings into your fortunes. You abound
 In temporal things, 'cause blessèd fruits are found
 Upon the stocks you graft on. Mark the increase:
 You plant poor orphans in a ground of peace
 And carefully provide; when fruit time comes,
 You gather Heaven's joys for't in infinite sums.
 65 This day you viewed the garden of those deeds
 That bless the founders; and all those succeeds
 In zeal and imitation. You saw there
 Virtue's true paradise dressed with your care,
 Your most religious care, and those blue sets
 75 That are the city's bank of violets
 That smells most sweet to heaven. Never cease then,
 You worthy precedents for times and men,
 Till charity spring, by your examples given,
 As thick on earth as rewards stand in Heaven.
 80 If there were sloth or faintness toward good works—
 As blessed be heaven there is not—Time instructs
 The season of the year. For as the ground
 The heaviest and dull'st creature can be found,
 Yet now begins both in her meads and bowers
 85 To offer up her sacrifice in flowers,
 How much more ought that earth with a soul blessed,
 Which is of every of you here possessed,
 To spring forth works of piety and love
 To gratify those dews fall from above.
 90 And as the humblest flower that ever grew
 Has not his scent alone, but virtue too

21 mumps a common, rather patronizing endearment

27 sound faint

38 Hyacinth the beautiful youth in Greek myth who is loved by both Apollo and Zephyrus. The latter kills him out of jealousy, and from his blood springs the flower bearing his name.

40–2 Adonis . . . rose In Greek myth Adonis refuses Aphrodite's advances and, after he is killed by a wild boar, the rose springs from his blood.

47 two . . . magistrates the two Sheriffs for the year, Edward Allen and Robert Ducy, who are entertaining elsewhere. The command helps further to link this piece with the two that follow, since they were performed at the Sheriffs' homes.

48 consuls In republican Rome two consuls ruled annually.

68 poor orphans The city supported a number of orphanages; see next note.

69 And carefully provide referring to the children of Christ's Hospital in Newgate Street, who were also provided (see note to ll. 4–5) with 'a house . . . to sit in' at St
 Mary Spital to listen to the sermons.

75 blue sets The children of Christ's Hospital wore long blue coats and yellow stockings.

85 meads fields

92 virtue medicinal properties

- 93 Good for man's griefs, so 'tis not man's full fame
 To have a Christian savour or a name,
 95 An empty voice of charity and relief.
 He must apply ease to his brother's grief:
 'Faith is the scent and odour of the flower,
 But work's the virtue that makes good the power.'
 'Tis like the tincture of those robes you wear
 100 In which clear vesture you to me appear
 Like borders of fair roses, and worn high
 Upon the city's forehead. That rich dye,
 As it is reverend, honourable, grave,
 So it is precious, wholesome; which doth crave
 105 A double virtue at the wearer's hands:
 Justice and mercy, by which goodness stands.
 Thus honour still claims virtue for his due,
 And may both ever lay just claim to you.
 What? The four seasons of the year struck dumb?
 110 I looked for a kind welcome now I'm come.
Second song by the four seasons, called the song of flowers.
- SPRING
 Welcome, O welcome, queen of sweetness,
 Welcome in the noblest manner,
 With all thy flowers, thy sweet-breathed maids of honour.
- SUMMER
 Flower gentle, I begin with thee.
- AUTUMN
 115 Fair flower of crystal, that's for me.
- SPRING
 Apples of love, there sweetness dwells.
- WINTER
 Puh! Give me Canterbury bells.
- SPRING
 Fair double-gold cups, griefs expelling,
 SUMMER
Agnus Castus, all excelling,
 AUTUMN
 120 Venus' bath, the loveliest pride of June,
 WINTER
 Give me that flower called 'go to bed at noon'.
- SPRING
 Blessed thistle, famed for good,
 SUMMER
 Shepherd's pouch for staunching blood,
 AUTUMN
 Fair yellow knight-wort for a foul relapse,
 WINTER
 And lady's mantle, good for maidens' paps. 125
- SPRING
 Tuft hyacinth, that crowns the bower,
 Called of some the virgin's flower;
 WINTER
 Take that for me, more good I feel
 In ruffling robin and lark's heel.
- SPRING
 There is a sweet, unnamed yet, 130
 The root is white, the mark of pure delight,
 Bearing his flowers fair and high,
 The colour like a purple dye.
- WINTER
 What is the name 'tis blessed withal?
- SPRING
 Live-long; it so the shepherds call. 135
- WINTER
 Live-long? 'Tis virtue's promised due
 And may it long remain with you,
 Honoured patrons,
 Virtuous matrons,
 140 Whose lives and acts this city graces,
 Daily striving
 And reviving
 Works worthy your renown and places.
- FLORA
 So y'are confirmed. From your harmonious closes
 May sweetness drop as honeydew from roses. 145
Then turning to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen.
 A blessed health possess you, and a long,
 That in this latter spring of your grave years
 You may be green in virtues, and grow strong
 In works of grace, which souls to heaven endears.

93 full fame best ambition

101 Like... roses Stow describes the Aldermen 'in their scarlets at the Spital in the holidays'.

114 Flower gentle Amaranthus, a plant with long-lasting spiky flowers, used as a coagulant

115 Fair... crystal probably flea-wort, psyllium sempervirens, an evergreen plant whose seeds were boiled to make a purgative

116 Apples of love Poma amarum or Golden Apple, a Mediterranean variety

117 Canterbury bells the Giant Bell-flower or throat-wort, used as a remedy for throat infections and mouth ulcers

118 double-gold cups crow-foot, wild flower used as a purgative

119 Agnus Castus bushy shrub known as the 'chaste tree' because it supposedly acted as an aphrodisiac; also used as a remedy for various ills

120 Venus' bath wild teasel

121 go... noon Goat's-beard, whose flower opens only in the morning; the root boiled in wine 'assuageth the pain and pricking stitches of the sides' (Gerard)

123 Shepherd's pouch common weed, also known as shepherds' purse

124 knight-wort probably knight's pond-

wort, an aquatic plant used to treat wounds and make poultices

125 lady's mantle Gerard says that when this wild flower (Alchimilla) is used to treat breasts that 'be too great or flaggy it maketh them lesser or harder'.

126 Tuft hyacinth Clematis peregrina, usually known as Virgin's bower

129 ruffling robin possibly 'Ragged Robin' or another winter-flowering plant lark's heel flowering shrub of the larkspur family

135 Live-long Orpine, an herbaceous plant known for its hardiness

- 150 Your good cares here, justice, and well spent hours
 Crown you hereafter with eternal flowers.
Hyacinth and Adonis, sent forth by Flora to the two other feasts, thus sets off their employments.
 The goddess Flora, empress of the spring,
 Choosing this feast her flow'ry sojourning
 Under the roof of the chief magistrate,
 Whose power lays just claim to the greatest state,
 Hath sent me forth, not meanest in her grace,
 To breathe forth her sweet wishes to this place.
 First to the master of this bounteous feast
 To speak her joy; next, to each worthy guest.
 160 And though she cannot now herself appear
 Because she owes her greater service there,
 Yet her heart's love to everyone I bring
 To whom she's sent a present of the spring.
Then falls into the former speech of Flora, making use of her divine instructions
- 9 Here follows the worthy and noble entertainments of the lords of his Majesty's most honourable Privy Council, at the houses of the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs.
The Ninth Entertainment
 The first entertainment upon Thursday in Easter week, 5 being the fifth of April, 1621. And upon the sixteenth of the same month those persons of honour received their second noble welcome, in a free and generous entertainment at the house of the right worshipful Master Sheriff Allen.
Flora, the person used before, thus prepared for them.
- FLORA
 10 Am I so happy to be blessed again?
 With these, the choice of many thousand men
 For royal trust selected, and a care
 That makes you sacred: may the world compare
 A confidence with yours? From so complete 15 And excellent a master? Or so great
 And free a love can any nation show
 In subject to the sovereign than doth flow
 From this most thankful city? Waves of love
 E'en overwhelm each other as they move;
 20 All striving to be first, they run in one
 To th' ocean's breast (the King's affection).
 And you of honour, that do oft appear
 In presence of a majesty so clear,
 So mighty in heaven's blessings, be so kind
 25 To grace with words what he shall ever find—
 And 'tis a glorious truth and well beseems
 Places and persons of your fair esteems:—
 Not all the kingdoms of the earth contain
 A city freer to her sovereign,
- More faithful and more careful. Observe here
 His highness' excellent trial. Love and fear
 Make up a subject's duty to his king,
 As justice and sweet mercy makes up him.
 So two-fold virtue two-fold duty cheers;
 He knew their loves, now came and touched their fears
 35 To try their temper. O blessed heaven, he found
 It was the fear he looked for—had its ground
 Upon religion, reverence, sweet respect.
 Love looked not lovelier, nor divinelier decked.
 Each reprehensive word he did impart
 40 Flew and cleaved fast to their obedient heart.
 'Twas fire within their bosom, 'could not rest
 Till in some serious manner they'd expressed
 Their duteous care; with all speed put in act
 Their sovereign's sacred pleasure, to coax
 45 Where manners failed, and force, as with a pill,
 From humours rude the venom of the ill.
 'A king's own admonition against crimes
 Is physic to the body of the times.'
 And herein did he imitate the highest
 50 To whom it best becomes him to be nighest.
 To chasten where he loves it is the seal
 Of the Almighty's favour. He doth deal
 So with his chosen: do not languish then,
 Thou prince of cities, 'cause the king of men
 55 Divinely did reprove thee; know 'tis love.
 Thou art his chosen city, and wilt prove—
 As thou hast ever been—faithful and free,
 The chamber of his sweet security.
 Then in a health of joy your hearts express
 60 Whilst I breathe welcome to those noble guests.
The song of welcome, after which Flora closes the entertainment.
 A trust of honour, and a noble care
 Still to discharge that trust, keep your fames fair.
 You have proceeded carefully; go on,
 And a full praise crown your progression. 65
- The last entertainment* 10
 Full as noble and worthy as the former, upon the Saturday ensuing, being the twenty-first of the same month, at the house of the equally generous and bounteous the right worshipful Master Sheriff Ducey.
Flora, this the third time, in her bower beginning to speak, interrupted by her two servants Hyacinth and Adonis.
- FLORA
 Good Heaven—
 HYACINTH Fie, this is usurpation merely!
 5 Speak thrice together? There's no right in this.

151.2 sets off discharge. Presumably the following speech was given at each of the Sheriffs' feasts, with Flora's blessing (146–51) repeated for the benefit of their 'grave-worthy guests' (51). The

Sheriffs' houses may have been close enough to the Mayor's to allow the actors playing Hyacinth and Adonis in the main show to carry the message, and Adonis's speech in the last Entertainment

(10.9–10) seems to assume this sort of continuity; but the idea is perhaps more charming than plausible.

9.47 humours rude unruly elements

	FLORA	What's that?		Now, you pull in your heads.
	ADONIS	I have the juster cause to take exceptions: This is the place I served in, lately served in, And by her own appointment my wrong's greatest.	10	BOTH	Pardon, sweet queen.
	FLORA	Here's a strange sudden boldness o' both sides o' me!		FLORA	Yet why should anger in my brow be seen? They came but to show duty to the time. Contention to do service was their crime, That's no ill-looking fault; but 'tis still known, 'They that give honour love to do't alone.'
	HYACINTH	Was't not sufficient grace for you to speak At the chief magistrate's house, there where that bower Was first erected? But to shift your seat From place to place, pull down and then set up— I wonder how she 'scapes informers, trust me!	15		It brooks no partnership—to give this last Duty her due as others before past, Though it came now from men of meaner rank Where wealth was ne'er known to o'erflow the bank Like spring tides of the rich that swell more high. Yet tak't for truth, it comes as cheerfully, All smiling givers; and well may it come With smooth and loving faces. The small sum That they return is thousand times repaid In peace and safety, besides sovereign aid For each heart's grievance to its full content By this high synod of the parliament, Before whose fair, clear and unbribèd eyes, When it appears, corruption sinks and dies. Secure oppression once comes trembling thither; 'Stead of her hard heart, knocks her knees together. This benefit is purchased, this reward To which all coin is dross to be compared.
	ADONIS	Believe me, so do I. She's favour shown her.			40
	FLORA	So, this becomes you well!			45
	HYACINTH	There's right in all things; We might have kept our places as we held 'em. There's little conscience in your dealing thus; You might have left the lower books for us For our poor service.	20		55
	FLORA	Thus I answer you, Taking my precedent from the just care Of those clear lights of honour, shining fair To their work's end. You see before your eyes The trust that was committed to their wise And discreet powers, for his Highness' use. They put not off to others with excuse Of weariness or pains. As they begun, In their own noble persons see all done. So, by their sweet example, I that am Your queen and mistress and may rightly blame And tax the boldness of your ruder blood, I do not think or hold myself too good In mine own person to commend their cares That have so justly served their King in theirs.	25 30 35		60 65 70
					FINIS.

10.16 I... informers insinuating that Flora keeps on the move like a criminal 21 lower books lesser occasions. This is not a slight to the Privy Council but a reference to their city hosts on this occasion, men 'of meaner rank' (45)

than the Court of Aldermen.
43 brooks stands for 54 high... parliament the Privy Council

An Invention

Performed for the service of the Right Honourable Edward Barkham, Lord Mayor of the City of London, at his lordship's entertainment of the Aldermen his brethren, and the honourable and worthy guests at his house assembled and feasted in the Easter holidays, 1622. Written by Thomas Middleton.

An Invention

A song in several parts, ushering toward the high table a personage in armour representing Honour, holding in his hand a sheaf of arrows

MEAN
A hall, a hall! Below, stand clear.
What, are you ready?

BASE
They appear.

MEAN
[] then
10 Present your duties to those men
Of worth and honour.

CHORUS
We rejoice
When so we spend art, hour and voice.

MEAN
Tell me, O tell me, what is he appears
So like a son of Fame, and bears
15 A sheaf of arrows, bound with silken bands?

BASE
'Tis Honour with two armèd hands
Showing the figure of his crest,
Who gives it and deserves it best.

MEAN
A braver emblem for the place
I ne'er beheld.

20 BASE
Nor for his race
A fitter symbol (without pride or spite)
Being armed at all points to do merit right.

MEAN
What word's that?

BASE
25 Diligentia
Fortunae Mater.

MEAN
This honoured day
Makes good that motto; 'tis expressed
Not in him only but in every guest.
I joy to see!

CHORUS
We joy to see
Your places and your works agree.
Finis the first song

Then Honour delivers this speech

Though in this martial habit I appear
I bring nor cause of doubt nor thought of fear. 30
'Tis only a way found to express best
The worthy figure of yond noble crest.
Nor barely to be shown is the intent
And scope of this time's service; more is meant.
There's use and application, whence arise 35
Profit and comfort to the grave and wise.
A nobler emblem of charge, power, and place,
Justice and valour, never yet did grace
A station more; a crest becomes the state
Of our best champion, a good magistrate. 40
Two armèd arms: to what may they allude
More properer than to truth and fortitude,
The armour of a Christian? To be strong
In a just cause then to these arms belong.
The sheaf of arrows: what do they imply 45
But shafts of justice 'gainst impiety?
Yet they must pass through a judicious hand,
For see, they're tied with mercy's silken band.
They must not inconsiderately be spent
But used like weapons of just punishment. 50
And as it is in course of combat known
'Tis not the property of one hand alone
Both to defend and offend at one time,
So let not one hand pass upon a crime—
The weight may fall too heavy; but take both 55
Mercy with justice, twins of equal growth.
Those carry a cause level through a land,
For no man shoots an arrow with one hand.
Believe we this: do envy what it can,
Religious conscience is an armèd man. 60
Another way to make it general—
For 'tis an emblem that concerns you all,
You of the honourable brotherhood
Knit all together for the city's good,
In whose grave wisdoms her fair strength doth stand: 65
You are the sheaf; the magistrate the band Whose love is wound about you. Witness be
His bounty and his welcome, both most free.
And as this day you saw the golden sheaf
Of this blessed city's works in the relief 70
Of the poor fatherless, may you behold
That sheaf of glory that makes dross of gold,
Th'Almighty's arrows, on your enemies fall,
And heaven's armèd arms protect you all.

2 Barkham Middleton had previously written The Sun in Aries to mark the installation of Barkham, a Draper, as Lord Mayor in October 1621.
7 A hall Make way! Mean and Base are probably at the windows in the hall screen adjacent to the musicians' gallery

(see note to Entertainments 7.3.2).
16 two...hands possibly carrying a sword in the other hand, but more likely referring to chain-mail coverings
23-4 Diligentia...Mater Diligence is the mother of Fortune: the motto on

Markham's coat of arms, which is presumably displayed on the hall screen
28 Your...agree that your achievements are worthy of your rank
69-71 as...fatherless See note to Entertainments 8.4-5.

An Invention

Second song

75 MEAN Joy be ever at your feasts.
BASE Bounty welcome all your guests.
CHORUS That this city's honour may
Spread as far as morn shoots day.
MEAN Fair your fortunes ever be
BASE Plenty bless the land that's free.
80 CHORUS That this city's honour may

Spread as far as morn shoots day.
MEAN Health your powers with gladness fill BASE Justice be your armour still.
MEAN Pious works the golden sheaf
BASE Those arrows strike the wicked deaf.
MEAN And dumb.
BASE And lame.
CHORUS So virtue may
Spread forth as far as morn shoots day.
Finis

85

76 Bounty The occasion may have been less sumptuous than usual, for when the King appealed to the City for funds towards the defence of the Palatinate, the Drapers were levied the sum of £387, which made them cut down on their feasts until 1623.

HENGIST, KING OF KENT; or, THE MAYOR OF QUEENBOROUGH

Edited by Grace Ioppolo

Who could expect such treason from the breast?
(4.4.65)

Hengist, King of Kent, or The Mayor of Queenborough, is a play about betrayal, both political and personal. The political tragedy of the end of Celtic and Roman Britain and the personal tragedies of Vortiger, his wife Castiza, his mistress Roxena, his ally Hengist, and his trusted confidant Hersus all result from ‘foul devouring treachery’ (4.4.120). Yet the tragedy lies not simply in the act of betrayal but in the characters’ refusal to recognize that one act will beget others until the betrayer becomes the betrayed. The vicious sexual battery of Castiza and her public humiliation by her husband foreshadow the public humiliation and treachery her husband will soon suffer at the hands of Hengist. Vortiger’s response to his political ally’s shocking and unprovoked treachery during a peace parley—the cry ‘Treason, treason!’—echoes verbatim the earlier response of his wife Castiza—‘Treason, treason!’—when Vortiger shockingly and unprovokedly abducts and rapes her, but Vortiger does not recognize the irony.

Written between 1616 and 1620, Hengist, King of Kent or The Mayor of Queenborough occupies a central and essential place in the Middleton canon. Contemporary records suggest that it was one of the most popular plays of the Jacobean and Caroline eras—Simon the Mayor was so beloved a comic figure that the title ‘Mayor of Queenborough’ became a cultural tag for a foolish politician on and off the stage. But since its publication in 1661, the play has appeared in only a handful of eighteenth- and nineteenth-century collections, and the only modern edition, now out of print, is an unmodernized 1938 text derived from a transcription of one of its two scribal manuscripts.

Neglected editorially, the play has also been neglected critically. Usually called a ‘lesser’ tragedy, stigmatized as a curious and clashing mix of genres, and excused as an early or rehashed effort, the play has received little modern critical attention. Critics first attempted to validate the play’s inconsistent form by assigning it to one genre: they classified the play as either a tragedy (but of whom, they wondered—Vortiger? Hersus? Hengist?) or a chronicle history play (yet, as these critics acknowledged, the play drops its interest in history after the first act), full of antiquated dumb shows. But Middleton’s play mocks any attempt to give it a generic tag, because—as the ‘players’ demonstrate to Simon and his audience—the art of playing requires actors to serve as ‘comedians, tragedians, tragicomedians, comi-tragedians, pastoralists, humorists, clownists, and satirists’ (5.1.71–3). The drama is more fluid than any generic tag or category that tries to contain it. For Middleton, genres could be successfully blended; he knew that history is inherently bound to tragedy and tragedy to history, and to prove his point he had to look no farther than Holinshed’s Chronicles, which prominently featured the story of Hengist’s betrayal of Vortiger as the seminal event, both tragic and celebratory, in the establishment of Anglo-Saxon Britain.

If history could be interspersed with tragedy and comedy in the foundation of Hengist’s England, it could also lay bare the cracking foundation of James I’s England. In addition to dismissing the play’s form, critics had apologized for its contents, terming them too archaic and remote to Jacobean audiences eager for the immediacy of more recent British history. Yet the story of Hengist was anything but distant or fictional to Middleton’s audience. Hengist, the fifth-century warrior, was both famous and infamous as the king who brought the Saxons to England—forever altering the language, nationality, and political and social structures of the country. Historians (Bede, Nennius, Geoffrey of Monmouth, Wace, Layamon, Raynulf Higden, Fabyan, Grafton, Foxe, Camden, and William Lambarde, as well as Holinshed) had repeated and embellished his story, featuring it prominently at the beginning of the Saxon chapters in their works. Hengist entered the culture as a mythical figure responsible not only for the custom of ‘wassail’ and for the creation of Stonehenge but for the politically drastic division of the English kingdom into the heptarchies, the seven kingdoms, that would require hundreds of years of turmoil, war, and death to re-unite.

Even in James’s age, historians had to continue to insist that (contrary to popular belief) ‘England’ was not a corruption of ‘Hengist’s land’, but a reference to the land of the Angles. (Anthony Munday, dramatist turned historical chronicler, reiterated this point as late as 1605.) The exploits of Hengist had been celebrated for centuries in poetry (including Beowulf, The Mirror for Magistrates and The Faerie Queene) and drama (including the no longer extant 1597 ‘henges’ play and its 1596 prequel ‘valteger’, whose costumes and properties Philip Henslowe partially financed). William Lambarde in his historical survey, A Perambulation of Kent (published in 1576, then expanded and reissued in 1596), gave specific directions on how to locate the ruins of Thong Castle, Hengist's Kentish fortress. Lambard appears to have been the first historian to have named Hengist's daughter 'Roxena' (the others had called her 'Rowen' or 'Rowena'), suggesting that Middleton was one of the many readers of Lambard's popular book. Middleton capitalizes on this historical immediacy by intertwining the story of mythical England with divisive contemporary political issues—including the financial collapse of the cloth industry, a threatened insurrection in Jersey, and the scandals surrounding Lady Frances Howard, notorious 'strumpet' and convicted murderer.

The 'decay' of the cloth trade resulted from the failure of the 'Cokayne Project', begun in 1614 by Alderman William Cokayne. The trade involved not just the Merchant Adventurers (the company licensed to deal in and export the product), but the Merchant Staplers (who acted as middlemen) and workmen and merchants from a series of interrelated textile industries—sheep graziers, fellmongers (sheepskin dealers), wool dealers, spinners, weavers, tailors, buttonmakers, and other clothiers and brokers. Also affected were those employed in the second most important non-agrarian industry, the leather trade, such as cattle graziers, tanners, and glovers. Cokayne proposed that all wool exported from England be dyed and dressed before leaving the country, rather than exported 'white' and then dyed and dressed in other cloth-producing or cloth-dyeing countries such as Holland and Germany; James agreed, convinced that the new enterprise would result in tremendously increased revenue.

But Cokayne and his allies had not anticipated that their own marketing incompetence—combined with the boycott of English wool instituted by Holland, Germany, and other countries which had previously served as staunch allies and business partners—would doom the Project to failure, plunging the country into economic depression by contributing to a temporary but dangerous decline in the supply of coin and an imbalance in trade that threatened other important industries such as farming and fishing. It took several years of political and economic manoeuvring, and the cancellation of the Project, to rescue the country from bankruptcy, and although the English cloth trade began to revive in 1618, it was quickly depressed again from 1620–24 due to surpluses and the lingering effects of the Cokayne Project.

Middleton briefly alludes to this crisis in the petitioners' complaints to Constantius (1.3.87–117) about the 'enormity' of wool, the exorbitant price of land, and the near beggaring of the country. More generally, the Mayor of Queenborough plot is peopled by tanners, tailors, buttonmongers, glovers, fellmongers, and graziers, as well as that 'Puritan and fustian-weaver' Oliver (5.1.156), whose flax and cotton 'heretic' cloth—produced by those enemies of the Cokayne Project, Holland and Germany—becomes the scapegoat for Queenborough's ills. The Mayor of Queenborough plot can be seen as Middleton's send-up of local politics (as Margot Heinemann has argued), but it also deserves to be seen as a more complex condemnation of the economic crisis which would, for example, force the

Clothiers of Gloucestershire to protest to the Privy Council in 1622 about their inability longer to maintain their workmen, much of their cloth being unsold, or in pawn. The people begin to steal, and many are starving; all trades are decayed, money very scarce, the whole county impoverished and unable to maintain their poor, by public stock, or any means except by their own trades; [they] entreat the unrestrained buying of cloth, that the clothiers may be able to continue their trade, and much misery be prevented.

In this period of economic gloom, Middleton dramatizes the triumph of Simon and his brethren, true English tradesmen, over Oliver, who conjures by Amsterdam but still has his fustian loom seized and broken by his fellow English citizens.

If in his farcical plot of the Mayor of Queenborough Middleton makes a national crisis into a petty quarrel, in his tragical story of Hengist, King of Kent he makes a petty quarrel into a national crisis. Middleton may be drawing on the lessons James I offered his son in Basilikon Doron (first printed in England in 1603). James there set out the principles of kingship in detail, warning 'especially, put never a foreigner in any principal office of estate: for that will never fail to stir up sedition and envy in the countrymen's hearts, both against you and him' (p. 69). This advice seems to be echoed in the warnings of Vortiger's subjects to reject the foreign, non-Christian Hengist and to deny him the powers of kingship which he dangerously appropriates. James faced such a crisis in a political power struggle among his Anglo-French appointed governors of the Isle of Jersey from 1616–1619 in which he had to intervene personally. The dispute arose from a series of arguments between John Peyton, governor of the island, and Jean Herault, its bailiff, when each accused the other of usurping the power of James, who had appointed them; each, however, then claimed some of this usurped power for himself. James ordered the creation of a Privy Council commission of inquiry into this matter in 1617 and forced the officials to appear before him and the Privy Council and reprimanded them. Herault was later jailed and then pardoned by James.

As Hengist shrewdly records political injustices that threatened the security and unity of the nation, even as they became more and more personal and petty, so too it anatomizes the most notorious scandal of the second decade of the seventeenth century, which began as intensely personal and private and soon captured the rapt attention of the entire nation. The scandals surrounding Frances Howard—for whose remarriage to the Earl of Somerset Middleton had written Masque of Cupids, and whose trial for the murder of Sir Thomas Overbury forms the backdrop to The Witch—are crucial to understanding Hengist, King of Kent. The play's women must be seen in the cultural framework created by these scandals, although Middleton exploits that framework rather than reinforcing it. In Roxena's masquerade as a virgin, including her self-imposed virginity test while privately acknowledging herself a whore, Middleton mocks the virginity test widely believed to have been faked by Frances Howard as part of the proceedings leading to annulment of her first marriage. In Roxena's poisoning of her stepson Vortiger, evidently with her husband's consent, Middleton recalls Frances's amateurish but ultimately successful efforts to have Overbury, an impediment to her union with Somerset, poisoned, possibly with her husband's consent. In Roxena's betrayal of Vortiger, Middleton offers a man of great power, like Somerset, brought down by his lust for a conniving and promiscuous 'strumpet', a man who did not expect such 'treason from the breast'.

Previous critics have treated Hengist as a moral fable on male sexuality but, as Thomas McAlindon has argued, Middleton locates the tragic experience mainly in women. Women are victimized by men who perceive themselves to be the victims of women. Middleton insisted on the strength of these women and on the weakness of these men. He counterposes the genuine virgin, Castiza (who is raped by her husband in disguise, publicly humiliated for her act of 'adultery', and then imprisoned as a whore), with the genuine whore Roxena (who connives with her lover Hersus to impersonate a virgin, convincing her new lover Vortiger of her virtue). When Vortiger discovers he has been cuckolded, he blames her and Hersus for his own evil behaviour—which began long before they entered his kingdom.

Rather than representing the stock character of the whore, as previous critics have suggested, Roxena demonstrates the cruel, destructive and ultimately fraudulent control that men assume they exert over the women. To dismiss Roxena as a whore figure, or as a simple representation of Frances Howard, is to ignore the dramatic power with which Middleton endowed her. Her speeches are shrewd, wise, and sophisticated; more importantly, Roxena gives the play its shape and centre in her lament:

I pity all the fortunes of poor gentlewomen
 Now in mine own unhappiness; when we have given
 All that we have to men, what's their requital?
 An ill-faced jealousy, which resembles much
 The mistrustfulness of an insatiate thief
 That scarce believes he has all though he has stripped
 The true man naked, and left nothing on him
 But the hard cord that binds him: so are we
 First robbed and then left bound with jealousy.
 (3.1.44-52)

Ironically, as Roxena recognizes too well, men fall not because they expect betrayal by women, but because they do not expect betrayal by men. (The shrewd Hengist is the only male who grasps this fact.) As Roxena is all too aware, 'we can call | Nothing our own if they be deeds to come; | They are only ours when they are past and done' (3.1.11-13). Hersus concludes Roxena's inquiry in his later description to Vortiger of the perfect strategy by which to entrap the 'honest gentlewoman':

I pity her now,
 Poor soul, she's enticed forth by her own sex
 To be betrayed to man, who in some garden house,
 Or remote walk, taking his lustful time,
 Binds darkness on her eyes, surprises her
 And having a coach ready, turns her in
 Hurrying her where he list for the sin's safety,
 Making a rape of honour without words. (3.1.165-72)

However, Hersus betrays no genuine pity in his words or in his actions later while abetting Vortiger in the secret abduction and rape of his own wife. For Hersus, all women are whores because all women will betray. Even though he has been Roxena's first and only lover, responsible for her 'cracked virginity', when Vortiger tries to make Roxena his 'mistress', Hersus threatens to expose her as a 'whore impost'rous' (2.4.235, 239).

For all of the play's characters, a woman is defined by the status of her sexuality; if she is sexually active, she is already a whore, and if she is not, she will be a whore soon enough. When Hersus blindfolds Castiza in 3.2 and torments her, insisting that he will rape her (in order to keep her from suspecting that it is Vortiger who will do so), he tries to convince her that she has provoked the rape because of her 'sin', her 'contempt of man, and he's a noble creature'. The ignoble Hersus continues his assault on Castiza with words (the rape will be done 'without words'), warning her that she is 'far from any pity', and denying that her love for her husband disproves her contempt, for 'you should love those you are not tied to love, | That's the right trial of a woman's charity'. Yet he decides, 'To strip my words as naked as my purpose, | I must and will enjoy you' (3.2.32-4, 40-1, 53-4). All his language in this scene, all his arguments and analogies, are borrowed from Roxena in 3.1. The bed-trick substitution by which Castiza is deceived exploits a common dramatic convention, but—as MarliSS Desens has demonstrated—out of the forty-four Elizabethan and Jacobean plays with bed-tricks, only Hengist, King of Kent offers an act of marital rape, making the convention uniquely and intensely disturbing.

When Castiza gives her all to the man who rapes her, her requital will not be sympathy and compassion but, as Roxena predicted in 3.1, jealousy, public humiliation, and betrayal. Castiza's first chastity test is imposed by Constantius in 1.3, when he twice has her assure him that she is never yet 'known to the will of man' (1.3.161). The second test is imposed by Vortiger in 4.2, when he repeatedly has her assure him that she has known the will of no man but himself. When he first asks her ladies-in-waiting to swear to their sexual fidelity, they equivocate; his wife will swear to the truth in her unknowingly ironic response—'The honour of your bed has been abused' (4.2.154), but only because she was 'ravished'. Castiza cannot bring herself to use the word 'rape' which Hersus had used so freely in 3.1. The only person willing to plead for her is Hengist (who understands the nature of betrayal), but he is silenced by Vortiger. At the same instant, Roxena is assured by Hersus that she can lie and swear herself a virgin because the English ‘swear by that we worship not, | So you may swear your heart out, and ne’er hurt yourself’ (4.2.173-4).

Middleton’s Hengist, King of Kent or The Mayor of Queenborough encompasses kingdoms—whether that of Vortiger, Hengist, or even Simon—that connect the personal to the political through treachery. No one is safe from the betrayal of trust, not fathers, uncles, husbands, wives, sons, daughters, lovers, or friends. Castiza, used by her fiancé Vortiger as sexual bait to lure Constantius out of the monastery, will be more viciously used by her husband Vortiger as mere sexual matter when he rapes her in disguise. Vortiger, proclaimed king through his own deceitful manipulation of the people and the murder of the man he forced to precede him, will fall because of his own failure to recognize the deceit in his political ally Hengist. And like his wife, Vortiger will come to be a victim of his friends and lovers; in the final scene he attributes his corruption not to his own ambition but to his victimization by Roxena and Hersus (her lover and his friend). Ironically, only Simon the Mayor will reap the rewards that Vortiger had so firmly expected: Simon’s marriage to the widow of his former employer brings him a joyful private union and a political base on which to rise to power; his election to mayor shows him with the private trust of his allies and the public permission to punish his enemies; and his friendship with Hengist strengthens his personal and political identity, allowing him to create a world which he commands without question.

In Hengist’s rallying cry, ‘Nemp your sexes!’ (‘Draw your knives!’), Middleton offers us the central lesson of Hengist, King of Kent: betray others in order to redeem yourself.

SEE ALSO

Textual introduction and apparatus: Companion, 1029
Authorship and date: Companion, 410

Hengist, King of Kent

Or, The Mayor of Queenborough

[for the King’s Men]

THE PERSONS OF THE PLAY

VORTIGER, a British lord, later King of the Britons HENGIST, a Saxon, King of Kent
HERSUS, a Saxon
ROXENA, a Saxon, daughter of Hengist
CASTIZA, wife of Vortiger
CONSTANTIUS, a monk, King of the Britons
AURELIUS AMBROSE, brother of Constantius
UTHER PENDRAGON, brother of Constantius and Aurelius
DEVONSHIRE, a lord, father of Castiza
STAFFORD, a lord, uncle of Castiza
VORTINER, a prince, son of Vortiger and Castiza
LUPUS, a monk
GERMANUS, a monk
RAYNULPH, monk of Chester, Chorus
SIMON, a tanner
OLIVER, a fustian-weaver
Three Graziers
GLOVER

BARBER
TAILOR
FELLMONGER
BUTONMONGER
BRAZIER
COLLIER
AMINABAB, a clerk
Two Cheaters
CLOWN
Petitioners
Gentlemen
Two Ladies
Footman
Saxons
Soldiers
Lords
Captain of the Guard
Officers
Fortune

I.O	Incipit Actus Primus Enter Raynulph, a monk, the presenter RAYNULPH What Raynulph, monk of Chester, can Raise from his Polychronicon That raises him as works do men (To see light so long parted-with again), That best may please this round fair ring With sparkling judgements circled in I shall produce; if all my power Can win the grace of two poor hours Well apaid I go to rest. Ancient stories have been best: Fashions that are now called new Have been worn by more than you, Elder times have used the same Though these new ones get the name, So in story what's now told That takes not part with days of old? Then to prove time's mutual glory Join new times' love to old times' story.	Enter Devonshire and Stafford Now, kind lords, In whose loves and wishes I am built As high as human dignity can aspire, Are yet those trunks, that have no other souls But noise and ignorance, something more quiet? DEVONSHIRE Nor are they like to be, for aught we gather, Their wills are up still, nothing will appease 'em, Good speeches are but cast away upon 'em. VORTIGER Then since necessity and fate withstand me I'll strive to enter at a stranger passage. Your sudden aids and counsels, good my lords? STAFFORD They're ours no longer than they do you service. Music. Enter certain monks [including] Germanus [and Lupus]; Constantius being one, singing as at procession. [Enter also Aurelius and Uther] Song MONKS Boast not of high birth or blood To be great is to be good, Holy and religious things, Those are vestures fit for kings. By how much man in fame shines clearer, He to heaven should draw the nearer; He deserving best of praises Whom virtue raises. It is not state, it is not birth; The way to heaven is grace on earth. Sing to the temple, hymn so holy Sin may blush to think on folly. VORTIGER Vessels of sanctity, be pleased awhile To give attention to the public peace Wherein heaven is served too, though not so purely. Constantius, eldest son of Constantine, We here seize on thee for the general good And in thy right of birth. CONSTANTIUS On me! For what, lords?	20 25 25 30 35 40 45
I.I	Shout [within]. Enter Vortiger [holding a crown] VORTIGER Will that wide-throated beast, the multitude, Never lin bellowing? Courtiers are ill advised When they first make such monsters. What do they but make head against themselves by't? How near was I to a sceptre and a crown! Fair power was ever upon me, my desires Were tasting glory, till this forkèd rabble With their infectious acclamations Poisoned my fortune. They will have none As long as Constantine's three sons survive, As if the vassals knew not how to obey But in that line, like their professions That all their lifetime hammer out one way, Beaten into their pates with seven years' Bondage. Well! Though I rise not king, I'll seek The means to grow as close to one as policy can And choke their expectations.

I.O.O.2 Raynulph Raynulph Higden, Benedictine monk (d. 1364) whose history, Polychronicon, includes the story of Hengist's invasion of England. Raphael Holinshed, whose Chronicles Middleton used as his main source for the play, also discusses Higden in his passages on Hengist.
 2-3 raise...raises puns on 'brings to life' and 'exalts'

5 round fair ring suggesting a public, outdoor theatre like the Globe; the title-page of HERRINGMAN lists the play as having been performed at 'Black-Fryars', the King's Men's private, indoor theatre, thus the play may have moved between the two types of venues
 8 two poor hours approximate time for theatre performance
 I.I.2 lin cease

10 Constantine's three sons this story is given in Holinshed's Chronicles, Book 5
 14-15 seven years' | Bondage the minimum term of apprenticeship
 28.I-2 Germanus [and Lupus] Germanus (378?-448), a bishop of Auxere, was famous as an anti-Pelagian; he was accompanied by another bishop, Lupus, during his missionary travels through Britain.

VORTIGER
The kingdom's government.

CONSTANTIUS O powers of blessedness,
Keep me from groaning downwards into earth again!
I hope I am further on my way than so; set forward.

VORTIGER
You must not.

CONSTANTIUS How?

50 VORTIGER I know your wisdom
Will light upon a way to pardon us
When you shall read in every Briton's brow
The urged necessity of the times.

CONSTANTIUS What necessity
Can be i'th' world, but prayer and repentance,
And that business I am about.
[A] shout within

55 VORTIGER Hark, afar off still,
We lose hazard much. Holy Germanus
And reverend Lupus, with all expedition
Set the crown on him.

CONSTANTIUS
No such mark of fortune comes near my head.

VORTIGER
60 My lord, we are forced to rule you.

CONSTANTIUS
Dare you receive heaven's light in at your eyelids
And offer violence to religion?
Take heed, the very beam let in to comfort you
May be the fire to burn you. On these knees
65 Hardened with zealous prayers, I entreat you,
Bring not my cares into the world again.
Think with how much unwillingness and anguish
A glorified soul departed from the body
Would to that loathsome jail return again;
70 With such great pain a well-subdued affection
Re-enters worldly business.

VORTIGER Good my lord,
I know you cannot lodge so many virtues
But patience must be one. As low as earth
We beg the freeness of your own consent
75 Which else must be constrained, and time it were Either agreed or forced. Speak, good my lord,
For you bind up more sin in this delay
Than thousand prayers can absolve again.

CONSTANTIUS
Were't but my death you should not kneel so long for't.

VORTIGER
80 'Twill be the death of millions if you rise not,
And that betimes too: lend your helps, my lords,
For fear all come too late.

CONSTANTIUS This is a cruelty
That peaceful man did never suffer yet,
To make me die again that was once dead
85 And begin all that ended long before.

Hold, Lupus and Germanus; you are lights
Of holiness and religion; can you offer
The thing that is not lawful? Stand not I Clear from all temporal charge by my profession?

GERMANUS
Not when a time so violent calls upon you. 90
Who's born a prince is born a general peace,
Not his own only, heaven will look for him
In others' business, and require him there.
What is in you religious must be shown
In saving many more souls than your own. 95

CONSTANTIUS
Did not great Constantine, our noble father,
Deem me unfit for government and rule
And therefore praised me into this profession,
Which I have held strict and love it above glory?
Nor is there want in me; yourselves can witness,
100 Heaven has provided largely for your peace
And blest you with the lives of my two brothers.
Fix your obedience there, leave me a servant.

VORTIGER
You may even at this instant.
[Lupus and Germanus crown Constantius]

CONSTANTIUS O this cruelty!

ALL
105 Long live Constantius, son of Constantine,
King of the Britons.
Flourish

AURELIUS
They have changed their tune already.

CONSTANTIUS I feel want
And extreme poverty of joy within me.
The peace I had is parted 'mongst rude men;
To keep them quiet I have lost it all. 110
What can the kingdom gain by my undoing?
That riches is not blest, though it be mighty,
That's purchased with the spoil of any man,
Nor can the peace so filched ever thrive with 'em;
115 And if't be worthily held sacrilege
To rob a temple, 'tis no less offence
To ravish meditations from a soul,
The consecrated altar in a man,
And all their hopes will be beguiled in me.
I know no more the way to temporal rule 120
Than he that's born and has his year come to him
In a rough desert. Well may the weight kill me,
And that's the fairest good I look for from't.

VORTIGER
Not so, great king: here stoops a faithful servant
Would sooner perish under it with cheerfulness 125
Than your meek soul should feel the least oppression
Of ruder cares. Such common, coarse employments
Cast upon me, your subject, upon Vortiger.
I see you are not made for noise and pains,
Clamours of suitors, injuries and redresses, 130

But that which must not be forgot
 Was Roxena's cunning grief,
 Who from the father like a thief
 Hid her best and truest tears,
 Which her lustful lover wears,
 In many a stol'n and wary kiss
 Unseen of father: that maids will do this
 Yet highly scorn to be called strumpets too,
 But what they lack on't I'll be judged by you.

Exit

I.3 Enter Vortiger, Fellmonger, Buttonmonger, [First] Grazier, [Brazier, and other] Petitioners

VORTIGER This way his majesty comes.
 ALL Thank your good lordship.
 VORTIGER When you hear yon door open—
 FELLMONGER Very good, my lord.
 VORTIGER
 Be ready with your several suits, put forward.
 GRAZIER
 That's a thing every man does naturally, sir,
 That's a suitor if he mean to speed.
 VORTIGER
 'Tis well you're so deep learned. Take no denials.
 FELLMONGER No my good lord.
 VORTIGER
 Not any if you love the prosperity of your suits.
 You mar all utterly and overthrow
 Your fruitful hopes for ever if either
 Fifth or sixth, nay tenth, repulse
 Fasten upon your bashfulness.
 BUTTONMONGER Say you so, my lord?
 We can be troublesome an we list.
 VORTIGER [aside] I know't,
 I felt it but too late in the general sum
 Of your rank brotherhood, which now I'll thank you for.
 While this vexation is in play, I'll study
 To raise a second, then a third to that,
 One still to back another: I'll make quietness
 As dear and precious to him as night's rest
 To a man in suits in law; he shall be glad To yield up power, if not, it shall be had. Exit BUTTONMONGER Hark, I profess my heart was coming upward, I thought the door had opened.
 GRAZIER Marry, would it had, sir.
 BUTTONMONGER I have such a treacherous heart of mine own, 'twill throb at the very fall of a farthingale.

BRAZIER Not if it fall on the rushes. 30
 BUTTONMONGER Yes, truly; if there be no light in the room
 I shall throb presently. The first time it took me, my wife was i'th' company; I remember the room was not half so light as this, but I'll be sworn I was a whole hour afinding on her. 35
 BRAZIER By'r lady, you'd a long time of throbbing on't
 then.
 BUTTONMONGER Still I felt men, but I could find no women,
 I thought they had been all sunk. I have made a vow for't, I'll never have a meeting by candlelight again. 40
 GRAZIER Yes, sir, in lanthorns.
 BUTTONMONGER Yes, sir, in lanthorns, but I'll never trust a naked candle again, tak't on my word.
 GRAZIER Hark there, stand close, it opens now indeed.
 Enter Constantius [as king and] two Gentlemen BUTTONMONGER O majesty, what art thou! I'd give any man half my suit to deliver my petition now. 'Tis in the behalf of buttonmakers, and so it seems by my flesh. 45
 CONSTANTIUS
 Pray do not follow me, unless you do't
 To wonder at my garments. There's no cause
 I give you why you should; 'tis shame enough
 Methinks for me to look upon myself; 50
 It grieves me that more should. The other weeds
 Became me better, but the lords are pleased
 To force me to wear these, I would not else.
 I pray be satisfied, I called you not. 55
 Wonder of madness! Can you stand so idle
 And know you must die?
 FIRST GENTLEMAN We are all commanded, sir,
 Besides it is our duty to your grace
 To give attendance.
 CONSTANTIUS What a wild thing's this?
 We marvel though you tremble at death's name
 When you'll not see the cause why you are cowards.
 All our attendances are far too little
 On our own selves, yet you'll give me attendance
 Who looks to you the whilst, and so you vanish
 Strangely and fearfully. For charity's sake 65
 Make not my presence guilty of your sloth,
 Withdraw, young men, and find you honest business.
 SECOND GENTLEMAN
 What hopes have we to rise by following him?
 I'll give him over shortly.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN He's too nice,
 Too holy, for young gentlemen to follow 70

1.3.0.1 Fellmonger sheepskin dealer a woman's petticoat) in a lanthorn (i.e. lantern) rather than Buttonmonger button dealer 30 it ... rushes fall on the floor quietly (rush a 'naked' candle capable of dripping hot 0.2 Brazier brass-worker was used as a floor covering) wax; 'in lanthorns' also puns on having 23 a man in suits in law a man involved in 34 light by strict logic he means 'dark' 'horns', i.e. being cuckolded.
 lawsuits 39 sunk sleeping in beds placed lower on 49 my garments Constantius has changed 29 fall of a farthingale fall of a woman's from monastic to royal clothing.
 petticoat (he introduces a bawdy pun on 41 in lanthorns lit by a candle contained 69 nice foolish here on his sexual arousal at the drop of

- That have good faces and sweet running fortunes.
Exeunt Gentlemen
- CONSTANTIUS
 Eight hours a day in serious contemplation
 Is but a bare allowance, no higher food
 To the soul than bread and water to the body,
 75 And that's but needful then, more would do better.
- GRAZIER Let's all kneel together, 'twill move pity; I have been at begging a hundred suits.
 [The petitioners kneel]
- CONSTANTIUS
 How happy am I in the sight of you!
 Here are religious souls that lose no time.
 80 With what devotion do they kneel to heaven
 And seem to check me that am so remiss! [Kneeling]
 I bring my zeal amongst you, holy men,
 If I see any kneel, and I sit out,
 85 That hour is not well served, methinks. Strict souls,
 You have been of some order in your times?
- GRAZIER Graziers and braziers some, and this a fellmonger.
 BRAZIER Here's my petition.
 BUTTONMONGER Mine an't like your grace.
 GRAZIER Look upon mine, I am the longest suitor, I was 90 undone seven years ago, my lord.
- CONSTANTIUS
 I have mocked my good hopes! Call you these petitions?
 Why, there's no form of prayer amongst 'em all.
- BUTTONMONGER
 Yes, i'th' bottom there's some half a line
 Prays for your majesty if you look on mine.
- CONSTANTIUS
 95 Make your request to heaven, not to me.
- BUTTONMONGER 'Las, mine's a supplication for brass buttons, sir.
- FELLMONGER There's a great enormity in wool, I beseech your grace consider't.
- 100 GRAZIER Pastures rise to twopence an acre, my lord, what will this world come too?
- BRAZIER I do beseech your grace.
- GRAZIER Good your grace.
- CONSTANTIUS
 O this is one of my afflictions
 105 That with the crown enclosed me; I must bear it.
- GRAZIER
 Your grace's answer to my supplication?
- BRAZIER
 To mine, my lord?
- CONSTANTIUS No violent storm lasts ever,
 That's all the comfort on't.
- FELLMONGER Your highness's answer?
- GRAZIER We are almost half undone, the country almost 110 beggered.
- BRAZIER See, see, he points to heaven as who should say there's enough there, but 'tis a great way thither.
 There's no good to be done here, I see that we may all spend our mouths like a company of hounds in the chase of a royal deer, and go home and fall to cold 115 mutton bones when we have done.
- BUTTONMONGER My wife will hang me, that's my destiny.
Exeunt [all but Constantius]
- CONSTANTIUS
 Thanks, heaven, 'tis over. We should never know rightly
 The sweetness of a calm but for a tempest.
 Here's a wished hour for contemplation now,
 120 All still and silent, this is a true kingdom.
Enter Vortiger
- VORTIGER
 My lord.
- CONSTANTIUS
 Again?
- VORTIGER Alas, this is but early
 And gentle to the troops of businesses
 That flock about authority, my lord.
 You must forthwith settle your mind to marry. 125
- CONSTANTIUS
 To marry?
- VORTIGER Suddenly; there's no pause given.
 The people's wills are violent
 And covetous of succession from your loins.
- CONSTANTIUS
 From me there can come none; a professed abstinence
 Hath set a virgin seal upon my blood 130
 And altered all the course. The heat I have
 Is all enclosed within a zeal to virtue,
 And that's not fit for earthly propagation.
 Alas, I shall but forfeit all their hopes,
 I'm a man made without desires, tell 'em. 135
- VORTIGER
 This gives no satisfaction to their wills, my lord,
 I proved them with such words, but all were fruitless;
 Their sturdy voices blew 'em into clouds.
 A virgin of the highest subject's blood
 They have picked out for your embrace, and sends her 140
 Blest with their general wishes into fruitfulness.

81 check rebuke85 some order Constantius uses 'order' to mean religious order but the petitioners take it as 'guild'.98 There's... wool Middleton may be quoting from Holinshed here: 'It chanced also the same time, that there was great plenty of corn and store of fruit... these abuses and great enormities reignednot only in the temporality, but also in the spirituality and chief rulers in the same' (Chronicles). However, from 1613-22, the wool industry in England nearly collapsed due to the demands of the 'Cokayne Project' to control domestically all aspects of producing, weaving, dyeing, and dressing wool before exporting it to neighbouring countries.

111-12 as who should say as if to say
114-15 hounds... deer engage in futile action because royal deer could not be hunted

123 to compared with

137 proved them tried to persuade them with

See where she comes, my lord.
Enter Castiza

CONSTANTIUS I never felt
 Unhappy hand of misery 'til this touch:
 A patience I could find for all but this.

145 CASTIZA [aside to Vortiger] My lord, your vowed love ventures me but dangerously.

VORTIGER [aside to Castiza] 'Tis but to strengthen a vexation politicly.

CASTIZA [aside to Vortiger] That's an uncharitable practice, 150 trust me, sir.

VORTIGER [aside to Castiza]
 No more of that.

CASTIZA [aside to Vortiger]
 But say he should affect me, sir,
 How should I 'scape him then? I have but one faith,
 my lord,
 And that you have already, our late contract's
 A divine witness to't.

VORTIGER [aside to Castiza]
 Leave it to me still,
 155 I am not without shifting-rooms and helps
 For all my projects I commit with you. Exit

CASTIZA [aside]
 This' an ungodly way to come to honour,
 I do not like't. I love lord Vortiger
 But not these practices, they're too uncharitable.

CONSTANTIUS
 Are you a virgin?

160 CASTIZA Never yet, my lord,
 Known to the will of man.

CONSTANTIUS O blessed creature!
 And does too much felicity make you surfeit?
 Are you in soul assured there is a state
 Prepared for you, for you, a glorious one

165 In midst of heaven, now in the state you stand,
 And had you rather after much known misery,
 Cares and hard labours mingled with a curse,
 Throng but to th' door and hardly get a place there?
 Think, has the world a folly like this madness?

170 Keep still that holy and immaculate fire,
 You chaste lamp of eternity, 'tis a treasure
 Too precious for death's moment to partake,
 This twinkling of short life; disdain as much
 To let mortality know you as stars

175 To kiss the pavements. You've a substance
 As excellent as theirs; holding your pureness,
 They look upon corruption as you do
 But are stars still. Be you a virgin too.

CASTIZA [aside]
 I'll never marry; what though my troth be engaged

To Vortiger? Forsaking all the world 180
 I save it well and do my faith no wrong.
 [To Constantius] You've mightily prevailed, great virtuous lord,
 I'm bound eternally to praise your goodness.
 I carry thoughts away as pure from man
 As ever made a virgin's name immortal. 185

Enter Vortiger and Gentleman

CONSTANTIUS
 I will do that for joy I never did
 Nor ever will again. [He kisses her;] exit Castiza

GENTLEMAN My lord, he's taken.

VORTIGER
 I'm sorry for't, I like not that so well, They're somewhat too familiar for their time, methinks.
 [Aside] This way of kissing is no course to vex him. 190
 Why, I, that have a weaker faith and patience,
 Could endure more than that coming from woman.
 Dispatch and bring his answer speedily. Exit

GENTLEMAN
 My lord, my gracious lord.

CONSTANTIUS Beshrew thy heart.

GENTLEMAN
 They all attend your grace.

CONSTANTIUS I would not have 'em. 195
 'Twould please me better an they'd all depart
 And leave the court to me, or put me out
 And take it to themselves.

GENTLEMAN
 The noon is past, my lord, meat's upon the table.

CONSTANTIUS
 Meat? Away, get from me, thy memory's diseased. 200
 What saint's eve's this?

GENTLEMAN Saint Agatha, as I take it.

CONSTANTIUS
 O is it so? I am not worthy to be Served before her, and so return, I pray.

GENTLEMAN He'll starve the guard, an this be suffered. If we set court bellies by a monastery clock, he that breaks 205 a fellow's pate now will scarce be able to crack a louse within this twelvemonth. [Exit]

CONSTANTIUS
 Sure, 'tis forgetfulness and not man's will
 That leads him forth into licentious ways.
Enter Vortiger, Devonshire and Stafford

He cannot certainly commit such errors 210
 And think upon 'em truly as they are acting.
 Why's abstinence ordained but for such seasons?

VORTIGER
 My lord, you've pleased to put us to much pains,

142.1 Castiza In the chronicle sources, including Holinshed, this character is not named and is only later once named as Vortiger's 'wife' when he divorces her to marry Roxena. In naming her 'Castiza', Middleton makes use of a generic name deriving from 'castitas', the Latin word for 'chastity'. The name appears also in Revenge for the chaste female character. 155 shifting-rooms and helps practices of evasion

190 vex agitate
 194 Beshrew make wretched
 201 Saint Agatha Sicilian saint and martyr who was tortured to death for refusing to surrender her virginity

Act I Scene 3

Maison of Dunborough

215 But we confess 'tis portion of our duties.
Will your grace please to walk? Dinner stays for you.

CONSTANTIUS

I have answered that already.

VORTIGER

But my lord,

We must not so yield to you, pardon me,
'Tis for the general good you must be ruled, sir.
Your health and life is dearer to us now.

220 Think where you are, at court, this is no monastery.

CONSTANTIUS

But sir, my conscience keeps still where it was;
I may not eat this day.

VORTIGER

We have sworn you shall, and plentifully too.
We must preserve you, sir, though you'll be wilful.
'Tis no slight condition to be a king.

225 CONSTANTIUS Would I were less than man.

VORTIGER

What, will you make the people rise, my lord,
In great despair of your continuance,
If you neglect the means that must sustain you?

CONSTANTIUS

I never eat on knees.

230 VORTIGER But now you must;
It concerns others' healths that you take food.
You've changed your life, you may well change your mood.

CONSTANTIUS

This is beyond all cruelty!

VORTIGER

'Tis our care, my lord.

Exeunt

Finis Actus Primus

2.1 Incipit Actus Secundus
Music. Enter Vortiger and Castiza

CASTIZA

My lord, I am resolved, tempt me no further,
'Tis all to fruitless purpose.

VORTIGER

Are you well?

CASTIZA

Never so perfect in the truth of health
As at this instant.

VORTIGER

5 Then I doubt mine own, or that I am not waking.

CASTIZA

Would you were then, you'd praise my resolution.

VORTIGER

This is wondrous! Are you not mine by contract?

CASTIZA

'Tis most true, my lord,
And I'm better blest in't than I looked for;

10 In that I am confined in faith so strictly

I'm bound, my lord, to marry none but you,
You'll grant me that, and you I'll never marry.

VORTIGER

It draws into me violence and hazard,
I saw you kiss the king.

CASTIZA

I grant you so, sir,

Where could I take my leave of the world better?
I wronged not you; in that you will acknowledge
A king is the best part on't.

15

VORTIGER

O my passion!

CASTIZA

I see you somewhat yielding to infirmity, sir,
I take my leave.

VORTIGER

Why, 'tis not possible.

CASTIZA

The fault is in your faith; time I was gone
To give it better strengthening.

20

VORTIGER

Hark you, lady.

CASTIZA

Send your intent to the next monastery,
There you shall find my answer ever after,
And so with my last duty to your lordship,
For whose perfections I will pray as heartily
As for mine own.

25

Exit

VORTIGER

How am I served in this?

I offer a vexation to the king,
He sends it home into my blood with vantage.
I'll put off time no longer. I have wrought him
Into most men's neglect, calling his zeal
A deep pride hallowed over, love of ease
More than devotion or the public benefit,
Which catches many men's beliefs. I am stronger too
In people's wishes, their affections point to me.
I lose much time and glory; that redeemed,
She that now flies returns with joy and wonder.
Greatness and woman's wish never keep asunder.

30

35

Exit

Oboes. Dumb Show: enter two villains, enter to them Vortiger, seeming to solicit them; gives them gold, then swears them; exit Vortiger. Enter to them Constantius in private meditation, they rudely come to him, strike down his book and draw their swords upon him. He fairly spreads his arms, and yields to their furies; at which they seem to be overcome with pity, but looking on the gold, kill him as he turns his back, and hurry away his body. Enter Vortiger, Devonshire, Stafford in private conference. To them enter the murderers presenting the head to Vortiger; he seems to express much sorrow, and before the astonished lords makes officers lay hold on 'em, who, offering to come towards 230 on knees (manuscript text); on eyes (quarto text). During prayer (i.e. while kneeling in prayer on the eve of a holyday).

2.2

2.1.3 truth of health health in its true meaning, i.e. spiritual health
7 mine by contract i.e. they have a formal contract to marry

17 passion grief
2.2.0.6 fairly distinctly

Vortiger, are commanded to be hurried away as to execution. Then the lords, all seeming respect, crown Vortiger, then bring in Castiza, who seems to be brought in unwillingly, [by] Devonshire and Stafford, who crown her and then give her to Vortiger, she going forth with him with a kind of a constrained consent. Then enter Aurelius and Uther, the two brothers, who, much astonished, seem to fly for their safety
Enter Raynulphe

And is their ignorant zeal so fiery now
When all their thanks are cold? The mutable hearts
That move in their false breasts!

Shout

Provide me safety!

Hark, I hear ruin threaten me with a voice
That imitates thunder.

Enter Gentleman

GENTLEMAN Where's the king?
VORTIGER Who takes him?

GENTLEMAN
Send peace to all your royal thoughts, my lord. 20
A fleet of valiant Saxons newly landed
Offer the truth of all their service to you.

VORTIGER
Saxons? My wishes! Let 'em have free entrance
And plenteous welcomes from all hearts that love us.
They never could come happier. 25

Enter Hengist, Hersus, [with] drum and soldiers

HENGIST
Health, power and victory to Vortiger!

VORTIGER
There can be no more wished to a king's pleasures
If all the languages earth speaks were ransacked.
Your names I know not, but so much good fortune
And warranted worth lightens your fair aspects, 30
I cannot but in arms of love enfold you.

HENGIST
The mistress of our births, hope-faithful Germany,
Calls me Hengistus and this Captain Hersus,
A man low built, but, sir, in acts of valour
Flame is not swifter. We are all, my lord, 35
The sons of Fortune, she has sent us forth
To thrive by the red sweat of our own merits;
And since after the rage of many a tempest
Our fate has cast us upon Britain's bounds,
We offer you the first fruits of our wounds. 40

VORTIGER
Which we shall dearly prize; the mean'st blood spent Shall at wealth's fountain make his own content.

HENGIST
You double vigour in us then, my lord.
Pay is the soul of them that thrive by th' sword. Exeunt

Alarums and Skirmish; enter Vortiger and Gentleman 2.4

GENTLEMAN
My lord, these Saxons bring a fortune with 'em
Stains any Roman success.

VORTIGER On, speak forward.
I will not take a moment from thy tidings.

GENTLEMAN
The main supporters of this insurrection
They have taken prisoners, and the rest so tame 5
They stoop to the least grace that flows from mercy.

RAYNULPH
When nothing could prevail to tire
The good king's patience, death had hire
In wicked strengths to take his life,
In whom a while there fell a strife,
5 Pity and fury, but the god
Made pity faint and fury bold.
Then to Vortiger they bring
The head of that religious king,
Who feigning grief to clear his guilt
10 Makes the slaughterous blood be spilt.
Then crown they him, and force the maid,
That vowed a virgin life, to wed;
Such a strength great power extends,
It conquers fathers, kin, and friends;
15 And since fate's pleased to change her life
She proves as holy in a wife;
More to tell were to betray
What deeds in their own tongues must say;
Only this, the good king dead,
20 The brothers poor in safety fled. Exit

2.3 Enter Vortiger [crowned. Enter] a Gentleman, [hastily]

GENTLEMAN
My lord.
VORTIGER
I fear thy news will fetch a curse,
It comes with such a violence.

GENTLEMAN
The people are up in arms against you.

VORTIGER
O this dream of glory! I could wish
5 A sting into thee; there's no such felt in Hell
The fellow but to mine I feel now.
Sweet power, before I can have power to taste thee
Must I forever lose thee? What's the impostume
That swells 'em now?

GENTLEMAN The murder of Constantius. Exit

VORTIGER
10 Ulcers of realms, they hated him alive,
Grew weary of the minute of his reign
Compared with some kings' time, and poisoned him
Often before he died in their black wishes,
Called him an evil of their own electing;

	VORTIGER	Never came power guided with better stars Than these men's fortitudes, yet are misbelievers. 'Tis to my reason wondrous.		Rivers from blushing springs Have rise at first, and great from abject things. Stay yonder fellow, he came luckily, And he shall fare well for't, what e'er he be; We'll thank our fortune in rewarding him.	40
		Enter Hengist, Hersus, with drum [and] colours, [and] Soldiers leading Prisoners		HERSUS [to Simon] Stay, fellow.	45
10		You've given me such a first taste of your worth 'Twill never from my love. Sure when life's gone The memory will follow my soul still, Participating immortality with't; And here's the misery of earth's limited glory:		SIMON How, 'fellow'? 'Tis more than you know whether I be your fellow or no, for I am sure you see me not whether I be your fellow or no, I am sure you see me not.
15		There's not a way revealed to give you honour Above the sum which your own praises give you.		HERSUS Come, what's the price of your hide?	50
	HENGIST	Indeed, my lord, we hold, when all's summed up That can be made for worth to be expressed, The fame that a man wins himself is best;		SIMON O unreasonable villain, he would buy the house o'er a man's head; I'll be sure now to make my bargain wisely, they may buy me out of my skin else. Whose hide would you have, mine or the beast's? There's little difference in their complexions. I think mine be the	55
20		That he may call his own. Honours put to him Make him no more a man than his clothes do, And as soon taken off; for as in warmth The heat comes from the body, not the weeds, So man's true fame must strike from his own deeds;		HERSUS Hold, fellow; prithee, hold: right a fool worldling that kicks at all good fortune. Whose man art thou?
25		And since by this event which fortune speaks us This land appears the fair predestined soil Ordnained for our good hap, we crave, my lord, A little earth to thrive on, what you please, Where we'll but keep a nursery of good spirits To fight for you and yours.		SIMON I am a servant, yet I am a masterless man, sir. HENGIST How? Prithee, how that now?
		Enter Simon with a hide		SIMON Very nimbly, sir. My master's dead and I serve my mistress. I am a masterless man, sir, she's now a widow, and I am the foreman of her tanpit.	65
30	VORTIGER	Sir, for our treasure, 'Tis open to your merits as our love, But for you're strangers in religion chiefly, Which is the greatest alienation can be And breeds most factions in the bloods of men, I must not grant you that.		HENGIST [giving him gold] Hold you, and thank your fortune, not your wit.
35	HENGIST	'Sprecious, my lord, I see a pattern: be it but so little As yon poor hide will compass.		SIMON 'Faith, and I thank your bounty and not your wisdom, you are not troubled greatly with wit neither it seems. Now by this light, a nest of yellowhammers! What will become of me? If I can keep all these without hanging of myself, I am happier than a hundred of my neighbours. You shall have my skin into the bargain too, willingly, sir, then if I chance to die like a dog, the labour will be saved of fleaing. I'll undertake, sir, you shall have all the skins of our parish at this rate, man and woman's.	70
	VORTIGER	How, the hide?		HENGIST Sirrah, give ear to me now. Take your hide and cut it all into the slenderest thongs that can bear strength to hold.	80
	HENGIST	Rather than nothing, sir.		SIMON That were a jest indeed: go and spoil all the leather? Sin and pity, why, 'twould shoe half your army.
	VORTIGER	Since you're so reasonable, Take so much in the best part of our kingdom.		HENGIST Do't, I bid you.	85
	HENGIST	We thank your grace.
		[Exeunt Vortiger and Gentleman]

2.4.13 Participating partaking of 27 hap fortune

30.1 Enter...hide Holinshed does not relate the story of Hengist's receipt of enough land as encompassed by the hide; however the story appears in Fabyan, and in Lambarde's A Perambulation of Kent thus: 'that among other devices (practised for their own establishment and security) they begged of King Vortiger so much land to fortify upon, as the hide of a beast (cut to thongs) might encompass, and that thereof the place should be called Thongcaster or Thwangcaster'. 'Simon, a tanner' is one of the companions of St Peter in Acts 9:43 and 10:6 and 32.

35 'Sprecious God's precious (an oath)

40 blushing modest

54-5 There's...complexions both have become brown with tanning

59 gather heart, liver and lungs

61 a fool worldling a foolish person devoted to the pleasures of the world

62 kicks at spurns

67 foreman...tanpit overseer of her business, as well as bawdy pun on being her lover

72 yellowhammers gold coins

SIMON What, cut it all in thongs? Hunch, this is like the vanity of your Roman gallants that cannot wear good suits but they must have 'em cut and slashed into gigots that the very crimson taffeta sits blushing at their follies.

90 I would I might persuade you, sir, from the humour of cutting, 'tis but a kind of swaggering condition and nothing profitable. What, an't were but well pinked, 'twould last longer for a summer suit.

HENGIST What a gross lump of ignorance have I lighted on! I must be forced to beat my drift into him—look you to make you wiser than your parents. I have so much ground given me as this hide will compass, which, as it is, is nothing.

SIMON 'Nothing', quoth a! Why 'twill not keep a hog.

100 HENGIST Now, with the vantage cut into several parcels, 'twill stretch and make a liberal circuit.

SIMON A shame on your crafty hide! Is this your cunning? I have learned more knavery now than ever I shall shake off while I live. I'll go purchase lands by cows' tails, and undo the parish. Three good bulls' pizzles would set up a man forever. This is like a pin a day doubled to set up a haberdasher of small wares.

HENGIST [to Hersus]
Thus men as mean to thrive, as we must learn,
Captain, set in a foot at first.

110 SIMON A foot, do you call it? The devil's in that foot that takes up all this leather.

HENGIST Dispatch away and cut it carefully with all the advantage, sirrah.

SIMON You could never have lighted upon such a fellow captain to serve your turn. I have such a trick of stretching too, I learned it of a tanner's man that was hanged last sessions, that I'll warrant you I'll get you in a mile and a half more than you are aware of.

115 HENGIST Pray, serve me so as oft as you will, sir.

SIMON I'm casting about for nine acres to make you a garden plot out of one of the buttocks.

HENGIST 'Twill be a good soil for nosebags.

SIMON 'Twill be a good soil for cabbages, to stuff out the guts of your fellows there. Exit [with the hide]

HENGIST
125 You, sirs, go see it carefully performed.
[Exeunt Soldiers with Prisoners]

It is the first foundations of our fortunes
On Britain's earth and ought to be embraced
With a respect ne'er linked to adoration.
Methinks it sounds to me a fair assurance
Of large honours and hopes, does't not, Captain? 130

HERSUS
How many have begun with less at first
That have departed emperors from their bodies,
And left their carcasses as much in monument
As would erect a college.

HENGIST
135 There's the fruits
Of their religious shows too, to lie rotting
Under a million spent in gold and marble
When thousands left behind dies without shelter,
Having nor house nor food.

HERSUS
A precious charity!
But where shall we make choice of our ground,
Captain?

HENGIST
140 About the fruitful banks of uberous Kent,
A fat and olive soil, there we came in.
O Captain, he's given I know not what.

HERSUS Long may he give so.

HENGIST
145 I tell thee, sirrah, he that begged a field
Of fourscore acres for a garden plot,
'Twas pretty well, but he came short of this.

HERSUS
Send over for more Saxons.

HENGIST
With all speed, captain.

HERSUS
Especially for Roxena.

HENGIST
Who, my daughter?

HERSUS
That star of Germany, forget not her, sir,
She's a fair fortunate maid. [Aside] I shall betray myself. 150

Fair is she and most fortunate may she be,
But in maid lost forever, my desire
Has been the close confusion of that name.
A treasure 'tis, able to make more thieves
Than cabinets set open to entice, 155
Which learns one theft that never knew the vice.

86 Hunch i.e. hump
87 Roman gallants overdressed men (the English frequently mocked the Italians' concern with fashion)
88 gigots small pieces; also possibly the analogy of a leg of mutton prepared for cooking with slashes through the fatty surface so as to expose the red flesh
90-1 humour of cutting puns on 'cutting' as slicing or slashing with a knife or sword and on bullying
92 pinked cut with holes or slashes as a form of ornamentation of a fabric
105 pizzles penises (used as whips)

106 pin a day 'A pin a day is a groat [a small amount] a year' (proverbial).
109 Captain Hengist addresses Hersus here but Simon assumes he's addressing him. See 2.4.115.
109, 110 foot puns on 'foot' as measure of distance and part of the body
117 sessions sessions of the peace, i.e. periodical sittings of the justices of the peace
120-1 I'm... buttocks scatological joke, hence the 'good soil for nosebags' to perfume the air at 2.4.122

123 cabbages He puns here on an alternate meaning of cabbages, 'shreds (or larger pieces) of cloth cut off by tailors in the process of cutting out cloths' (OED).
133 as much in monument in as grand a monument
140 uberous richly productive
141 olive green, i.e. fertile
152 in maid in maidenhood, also a reference to Hersus's having taken her 'maidenhead', i.e. her virginity
153 close confusion secret destruction
156 learns teaches

Act 2 Scene 4

Maiden of Dunborough

HENGIST
Some I'll dispatch with speed.
HERSUS Do you forget not.
HENGIST
Marry, pray help my memory if I should.
HERSUS
Roxena, you remember.
HENGIST What more, dear sir?
HERSUS
160 I see you need no help, your memory's clear, sir.
Shouts; flourish
HENGIST
Those sounds leapt from our army.
HERSUS
They were too cheerful to voice a bad event.
Enter Saxon Gentleman
HENGIST Now, sir, your news?
SAXON GENTLEMAN
Roxena the fair—
HENGIST True, she shall be sent for.
SAXON GENTLEMAN
She's here.
HENGIST What say'st?
165 SAXON GENTLEMAN She's come, sir.
HERSUS [aside]
A new youth begins me o'er again.
SAXON GENTLEMAN [to Hengist] Followed you close, sir,
With such a zeal as daughter never equalled,
Exposed herself to all the merciless dangers
Set in mankind or fortune, not regarding Aught but your sight.
170 HENGIST Her love is infinite to me.
HERSUS [aside]
Most charitably censured; 'tis her cunning,
The love of her own lust, which makes a woman
Gallop downhill as fearless as a drunkard.
There's no true loadstone i'th' world but that;
175 It draws 'em through all storms, by sea or shame,
Life's loss is thought too small to pay that game.
SAXON GENTLEMAN
What follows more of her will take you strongly.
HENGIST
How?
SAXON GENTLEMAN
Nay, 'tis worth your wonder.
HENGIST I thirst for't.
SAXON GENTLEMAN
180 Her heart-joy, ravished at your late success,
Being the early morning of your fortunes,
So prosperously now opening, at her coming
She takes a cup of gold, and midst the army,
Teaching her knee a current cheerfulness
Which well became her, drank a liberal health
185 To the King's joys and yours. The King in presence,

Who with her sight, but her behaviour chiefly,
Or chief I know not which, but one, or both,
But he's so far 'bove my expression caught,
'Twere art enough for one man's time and portion
To speak him and miss nothing.
HENGIST This is astonishing! 190
HERSUS [aside]
O this ends bitter now, our close-hid flame
Will break out of my heart, I cannot keep it.
HENGIST
Gave you attention to this, Captain? How now, man?
HERSUS
A kind of grief about these times o'th' moon still.
I feel a pain like a convulsion, 195
A cramp at heart, I know not what name fits it.
Flourish; cornett. Enter Vortiger, Roxena and attendants
HENGIST
Nor never seek one for't, let it go
Without a name; would all griefs were served so,
Our using of 'em mannerly makes 'em grow.
HERSUS
A love-knot already, arm-in-arm! 200
VORTIGER
What's he lays claim here?
HENGIST In right of fatherhood
I challenge an obedient part, my lord.
VORTIGER
Take't and send back the rest.
HENGIST What means your grace?
VORTIGER
You'll keep no more than what belongs to you, will
you?
HENGIST
That's all, my lord, it all belongs to me yet, 205
I keep a husband's interest till he come,
Yet out of duty and respect of majesty
I send her back your servant.
VORTIGER
My mistress, sir, or nothing.
HENGIST Come again?
I never thought to have lived to have heard so ill of these. 210
VORTIGER
How, sir, so ill?
HENGIST So beyond detestable!
To be an honest vassal is some calling,
Poor is the worst of that, shame comes not to't;
But 'mistress', that's the only common bait,
Fortune sits at all hours catching 'whore' with it 215
And plucks 'em up by clusters. There's my sword, my lord,
And if your strong desires aim at my blood,
Which runs too purely there, a nobler way

171 censured judged
174 loadstone magnet
182-5 She...presence According to chronicle sources such as Holinshed, the custom of 'wassail' was introduced to England by Roxena and Hengist.

194 grief illness, but playing on 'sadness'
215 hours pun on 'whores'

Quench it in mine.
 VORTIGER I ne'er took sword in vain.
 220 Hengist, we here create thee Earl of Kent.
 HERSUS [aside]
 O that will do't, 'twill do't.
 [He faints]
 VORTIGER What ails our friend? Look to him.
 ROXENA
 O 'tis his epilepsy, I know it well,
 I helped him once in Germany. Comes't again?
 A virgin's right hand stroked upon his heart
 225 Gives him ease straight, but't must be a pure virgin,
 Or else it brings no comfort.
 VORTIGER What a task
 She puts upon herself unurged for purity!
 The proof of this will bring love's rage upon me.
 ROXENA [aside to Hersus]
 O this would mad a woman, there's no plague
 In love to indiscretion.
 HERSUS [aside to Roxena]
 230 Pish, this cures not.
 ROXENA [aside to Hersus]
 Dost think I'll ever wrong thee?
 HERSUS [aside to Roxena] O most feelingly,
 But I'll prevent it now, and break thy neck
 With thine own cunning. Thou hast undertook
 To give me help, to bring in royal credit
 235 Thy cracked virginity, but I'll spoil all;
 I will not stand on purpose, though I could,
 But fall still to disgrace thee.
 ROXENA [aside to Hersus] What, you will not?
 HERSUS [aside to Roxena]
 I have no other way to help myself,
 For when thou'rt known to be a whore impost'rous
 I shall be sure to keep thee.
 240 ROXENA [aside to Hersus] O, sir, shame me not!
 You've had what's precious; try my faith yet once more,
 Undo me not at first in chaste opinion.
 HERSUS [aside to Roxena]
 All this art shall not make me find my legs.
 ROXENA [aside to Hersus]
 I prithee, wilt thou wilfully confound me?
 HERSUS [aside to Roxena]
 245 Well, I'm content for this time to recover
 To save thy credit and bite in my pain,
 But if thou ever fail'st me, I will fall,
 And thou shalt never get me up again.
 ROXENA [aside to Hersus]
 Agreed 'twixt you and I, sir.
 [Hersus rises]
 [To Vortiger] See, my lord,

A poor maid's work. The man may pass for health
 now
 250 Amongst the clearest bloods and whose are nicest.
 VORTIGER
 I have heard of women bring men on their knees
 But few that ever restored 'em. How now, Captain?
 HERSUS
 My lord, methinks I could do things past man;
 I am so renewed in vigour I long most 255 For violent exercise to take me down;
 My joy's so high in blood, I am above frailty.
 VORTIGER
 My lord of Kent?
 HENGIST Your love's unworthy creature.
 VORTIGER
 Seest thou this fair chain? Think upon the means
 To keep it linked forever.
 HENGIST O my lord,
 260 'Tis many degrees sundered from that hope,
 Besides your grace has a young, virtuous queen.
 VORTIGER
 I say think on't, think on't!
 HERSUS [aside] An this wind hold,
 I shall even fall to my old disease again.
 VORTIGER [to Roxena]
 265 There's no fault in thee but to come so late,
 All else is excellent; I chide none but fate.
 Flourish; cornetts. Exeunt

Finis Actus Secundus

Incipit Actus Tertius
 Enter Hersus and Roxena

3.1
 ROXENA
 I have no conceit now that you ever loved me,
 But as lust held you for the time.
 HERSUS So, so.
 ROXENA
 Do you pine at my advancement, sir?
 HERSUS O barrenness
 Of understanding, what a right love is this?
 'Tis you that fall, I that am reprehended.
 5 What height of honours, eminence and fortune
 Should ravish me from you?
 ROXENA
 Who can tell that, sir? What's he can judge
 Of a man's appetite, before he sees him eat?
 Who knows the strength of any's constancy
 10 That never yet was tempted? We can call
 Nothing our own if they be deeds to come;
 They are only ours when they are past and done.

230 to compared with touches on her part Pish exclamation of contempt or impa- 239 impost'rous false tience 251 nicest most fastidious 231 feelingly painfully to him, with sensual 256 take me down specifically 'cause me to detumescere; the whole speech is equivocal in this vein
 266 I chide...fate i.e. 'I chide no one; it is entirely fate that does so'

Act 3 Scene 1

15 How blest are you above your apprehension
 If your desire would lend you so much patience
 To examine the adventurous condition
 Of our affections, which are full of hazard,
 And draw in the times' goodness to defend us!
 20 First, this bold course of ours can't last long,
 Or never does in any without shame,
 And that you know brings danger; and the greater
 My father is in blood, as he's well risen,
 The greater will the storm of his rage be 'Gainst his blood's wronging. I have cast for this, 25 'Tis not advancement that I love alone,
 'Tis love of shelter to keep shame unknown.

HERSUS
 O were I sure of thee, as 'tis impossible
 There to be ever sure where there's no hold,
 Your pregnant hopes should not be long arising.

ROXENA
 30 By what assurance have you held me thus far
 Which you found firm, despair you now in that?

HERSUS
 True, that was good security for the time,
 But admit a change of state. When you're advanced
 You women have a French toy in your pride,
 35 You make your friend come crouching, or perhaps
 To bow i'th' hams the better, he is put
 To compliment three hours with your chief gentlewo-
 man,
 Then perhaps not admitted—nay, nor never,
 That's the more noble fashion. Forgetfulness,
 40 'Tis the pleasing'st virtue anyone can have
 That rises up from nothing, for by the same,
 Forgetting all, they forget from whence they came:
 An excellent property for oblivion.

ROXENA
 45 I pity all the fortunes of poor gentlewomen
 Now in mine own unhappiness; when we have given
 All that we have to men, what's their requital?
 An ill-faced jealousy, which resembles much
 The mistrustfulness of an insatiate thief
 That scarce believes he has all though he has stripped
 50 The true man naked, and left nothing on him
 But the hard cord that binds him: so are we
 First robbed and then left bound with jealousy.
 Sure, he that finds us now has a great purchase,
 And well he gains that builds another's ruins!

Yet man, the only seed that's sown in envy, 55
 Whom little would suffice as any creature
 Either in food or pleasure, yet 'tis known
 What would give ten enough contents not one.
 A strong-diseased conceit may tell strange tales to you
 And so abuse us both; take but th'opinion 60
 Of common reason, and you'll find it impossible
 That you should lose me in this king's advancement,
 Who here's a usurper. As he has the kingdom,
 So shall he have my love, by usurpation,
 The right shall be in thee still. My ascension 65
 To dignity is but to waft thee upward,
 And all usurpers have a falling sickness,
 They cannot keep up long.

HERSUS May credulous man
 Put all his confidence in so weak a bottom
 And make a saving voyage? 70

ROXENA
 Nay, as gainful as ever man yet made.

HERSUS
 Go, take thy fortune, aspire with my consent,
 So thy ambition will be sure to prosper.
 Speak the fair certainty of Britain's queen
 Home to thy wishes. 75

ROXENA
 Speak in hope I may, but not in certainty.

HERSUS
 I say in both, hope and be sure. I'll quickly
 Remove her that stands between thy glory.

ROXENA Life is love!
 80 If lost virginity can win such a day
 I'll have no daughter but shall learn my way. Exit

HERSUS
 'Twill be good work for him that first instructs 'em,
 Maybe some son of mine, got by this woman too.
 Man's scattered lust brings forth most strange events,
 85 An 'twere but strictly thought on. How many brothers
 Wantonly got, through ignorance of their births,
 May match with their own sisters?
Enter Vortiger
 [Aside] Peace, 'tis he,
 Invention fail me not, 'tis a gallant's credit
 To marry his whore bravely.
 90 VORTIGER [aside] Have I power
 Of life and death and cannot command ease
 In mine own blood? After I was a king

3.1.14 apprehension understanding
 22-4 blood...blood's rank (an ironic sense, as it is properly a notion of rank as 'breeding, stock' and so should depend on birth)...kin's
 29 pregnant inventive and full of expectation, as well as 'with child'
 44-68 I...long This speech underwent revision between the play's original composition and the later version represented by the quarto text of the play. In 3.1.46, Roxena's query 'what's their requital' has been altered in the quarto text to 'what our requital', significantly changing the meaning of the rest of the speech. Also, her lines from 3.1.53 to the middle of 3.1.60 are marked for deletion in both of the manuscripts; these lines do not appear in the quarto text.

 67-8 And...long This has three levels of meaning: the political analogy of short-lived usurpation might apply literally to Vortiger; illicit affairs cannot be sustained (see ll. 19-26 where the same point is made with reference to Hersus himself); poaching lovers are poor performers.

 69 bottom ship
 70 saving profitable
 72 fortune Hersus is punning on Roxena's use of 'fortunes' at l. 44.
 89 marry...bravely Bald notes that at least two other Middleton plays, Trick and Chaste Maid, portray a man attempting to bravely (or profitably) marry off his mistress.

I thought I never should have felt pain more,
That there had been a ceasing of all passions
And common stings which subjects use to feel
95 That were created with a patience fit
For all extremities. But such as we Know not the way to suffer than to do't.
How most prepost'rous 'tis! What's all our greatness
If we that prescribe bounds to meaner men
100 Must not pass these ourselves? O most ridiculous!
This makes the vulgar merry to endure,
Knowing our state is strict, and less secure.
I'll break through custom. Why should not the mind,
The nobler part that's of us, be allowed 105 Change of affections, as our bodies are Still change of food and raiment? I'll have't so.
All fashions appear strange at first production,
But this would be well followed. [To Hersus] O Captain!

HERSUS
My lord, I grieve for you, I scarce fetch breath
110 But a sigh hangs at end on't. This is no way,
If you'll give way to counsel.

VORTIGER Set me right then,
And quickly, sir, or I shall curse thy charity
For lifting up my understanding to me
To show that I was wrong. Ignorance is safe, 115 I slept happily; if knowledge mend me not,
Thou hast committed a most cruel sin
To make me into judgement and then leave me.

HERSUS
I will not leave you so, sir, that were rudely.
120 First, you've a flame too open and too violent,
Which like blood guiltiness in an offender
Betrays him when none can. Out with it, sir,
Or let some cunning coverture be made
Before our practice enters; 'twill spoil all else.

VORTIGER
Why, look you, sir, I can be as calm as silence,
125 All the whiles music plays; strike on, sweet friend,
As mild and merry as the heart of ignorance;
I prithee take my temper. Has a virgin
A heat more modest?

HERSUS [aside] He does well to ask me,
I could have told that once. [To Vortiger] Why here's a 130 government!
There's not a sweeter amity in friendship
Than in this friendly league 'twixt you and health.

VORTIGER
Then since thou find'st me capable of happiness,
Instruct me with the practice.

HERSUS What would you say, my lord,
If I ensnare her in an act of lust?

VORTIGER
O there were art to the life; but that's impossible,
135 I prithee flatter me no further with't;
Fie, so much sin as goes to make up that
Will ne'er prevail with her! Why, I tell thee, sir, She's so sin-killing modest, that if only to Move the question were enough adultery
140 To cause a separation, there's no gallant
So brassy-impudent durst undertake
The words that should belong to't.

HERSUS Say you so, sir?
There's nothing made i'th' world, but has a way to't,
145 Though some be harder than the rest to find.
Yet one there is that's certain, and I think
I have took the course to light on't.

VORTIGER O I pray for't.

HERSUS
I heard you lately say—from whence, my lord,
My practice received light first—that your queen
150 Still consecrates her time to contemplation,
Takes solitary walks.

VORTIGER Nay, late and early, sir, Commands her weak guard from her, which are but women
When 'tis at strongest.

HERSUS I like all this well, my lord,
And now your grace shall know what net is used
155 In many places to catch modest women
Such as will never yield by prayers or gifts.
Now, there are some will catch up men as fast,
But those she-fowlers nothing concerns us;
Their birding is at windows, ours abroad,
Where ring-doves should be caught, that's married
160 wives
Or chaste maids, what the appetite has a mind to.
'Tis practised often, therefore worth discovery
And may well fit the purpose.

VORTIGER Make no pause then.

HERSUS
The honest gentlewoman, where e'er she be,
165 When nothing will prevail, I pity her now,
Poor soul, she's enticed forth by her own sex
To be betrayed to man, who in some garden house,
Or remote walk, taking his lustful time,
Binds darkness on her eyes, surprises her
170 And having a coach ready, turns her in,
Hurrying her where he list for the sin's safety,
Making a rape of honour without words;
And at the low ebb of his lust, perhaps
Some three days after, sends her coached again
To the same place, and, which would make most 175 mad,

94 use to habitually

118 rudely rudely done

159 Their... windows i.e. their seductions take place at the window.

160 ring-doves plays on the species of dove and ring-wearing women

166-74 she's... again It is not clear whether Middleton is alluding to a genuine practice of the period or has invented it for the purposes of the drama.

167 garden house notorious as places of illicit sexual encounters

172 without words without speaking

Act 3 Scene 1

the Maior of Rieburgh

She's spoiled of all, yet knows not where she was robbed.
 Wise, dear, precious mischief!
 VORTIGER Is this practised?
 HERSUS
 Too much, my lord, to be so little known,
 A springe to catch a maidenhead after sunset,
 180 Clip it and send it home again to th' city;
 There 'twill be never perceived.
 VORTIGER
 My raptures want expression; I conceit
 Enough to make me fortunate, and thee great.
 HERSUS
 I praised it then, my lord, I knew 'twould take.
 Exeunt

3.2 Enter Castiza, with a book, and two Ladies
 CASTIZA
 Methinks you live strange lives! When I see't not
 The less it grieves me; you know how to ease me
 then.
 If you but knew how well I loved your absence,
 You would bestow't upon me without asking.
 FIRST LADY
 5 Faith, for my part, were it no more for ceremony
 Than 'tis for love, you should walk long enough
 For my attendance; so think all my fellows,
 Though they say nothing. Books in women's hands,
 They are as much against the hair, methinks,
 10 As to see men work stomachers and night-rails.
 She that has the green-sickness and should follow her counsel
 Would die like an ass and go to th' worms like a salad.
 Not I, as long as such a creature as man is made;
 She's a fool that will not know what he's good for.
 Exeunt Ladies

CASTIZA
 15 Though amongst life's elections, that of virgin
 I speak noblest, yet't has pleased just heaven
 To send me a contented blessedness
 In this of marriage which I ever doubted.
 I see the king's affection was a true one,
 20 It lasts and holds out long. That's no mean virtue
 In a commanding man, though in great fear
 At first I was enforced to venture on't.
 Enter Vortiger and Hersus disguised
 VORTIGER [aside to Hersus]
 All's happy clear and safe.
 HERSUS [aside to Vortiger] The rest comes gently then.
 VORTIGER [aside to Hersus]
 Be sure you seize on her full sight at first,

For fear of my discovery.
 HERSUS [aside to Vortiger] I'll not miss it. 25
 VORTIGER
 Now, fortune, and I am sped!
 [Hersus seizes and blindfolds Castiza from behind]
 CASTIZA O help, treason, treason!
 HERSUS
 Sirrah, how stand you? Prevent noise and clamour
 Or death shall end thy service.
 VORTIGER [aside] A sure cunning!
 CASTIZA
 O rescue!
 HERSUS Dead her voice, away, make speed.
 [Hersus and Castiza] exeunt and enter again
 CASTIZA No help, no succour? 30
 HERSUS
 Louder yet? Extend your voice to the last rack,
 You shall have leave now, you're far from any pity.
 CASTIZA What's my sin?
 HERSUS
 Contempt of man, and he's a noble creature,
 And takes it in ill part to be despised. 35
 CASTIZA
 I never despised any.
 HERSUS No? You hold us
 Unworthy to be loved, what call you that?
 CASTIZA
 I have a lord disproves you.
 HERSUS Pish, your lord?
 You're bound to love your lord, that's no thanks to
 you.
 You should love those you are not tied to love,
 40 That's the right trial of a woman's charity.
 CASTIZA
 I know not what you are nor what my fault is,
 But if't be life you seek, whate'er you be,
 Use no immodest words, and take it from me.
 You kill me more in talking sinfully
 45 Than acting cruelly. Be so far pitiful
 To end me without words!
 HERSUS Long may you live,
 The wish of a good subject. 'Tis not life
 That I thirst after, loyalty forbid
 I should commit such treason. You mistake me,
 50 I have no such bloody thought, only your love
 Shall content me.
 CASTIZA What said you, sir?
 HERSUS Thus, thus, plainly,
 To strip my words as naked as my purpose,
 I must and will enjoy you.
 [Castiza faints]
 Gone already?

179 springe trap

180 Clip literally, to deflower; also plays on 'clip' as 'embrace' and clipping a bird's wings so it can't fly

3.2.10 men...night-rails i.e. for men to sew

women's decorative undergarments and dressing-gowns

11 green-sickness anemic disease of young girls, implying innocence about sexuality

29.1 [Hersus]...again Hersus wants

Castiza to think that she's been moved to another, isolated location.

38 Pish exclamation of contempt or impatience

And as we relish him, the rest comes on.
Exit Gentleman

25 'Twere no safe wisdom in a rising man
 To slight off such as these; nay rather these
 Are the foundation of a lofty work;
 We cannot build without them and stand sure.
 He that first ascends up to a mountain's top
 Must first begin at foot.
Enter Gentleman

Now, sir, who comes?

30 GENTLEMAN They cannot yet agree, my lord, of that.
 HENGIST How?
 GENTLEMAN They say 'tis worse now for 'em than ever 'twas before,
 For where the difference stood but between two,
 Upon this coming first they're at odds.
 35 One says, sir, he shall lose his place at church by't,
 Another, he'll not do his wife that wrong,
 And by their good wills they would come all at first.
 The strife continues in most heat, my lord,
 Between a country barber and a tailor
 40 Of the same town, and which your lordship names,
 'Tis yielded by consent that one shall enter.

HENGIST Here's no sweet toil, I'm glad they're grown so reasonable.
 Call in the Barber; if the tale be long,
 He'll cut it short, I trust, that's all the hope on't.
Enter Barber

45 Now, sir, are you the barber?
 BARBER O most barbarous! A corrector of enormities in hair, my lord, a promoter of upper lips, or what your lordship in the neatness of your discretion shall vouchsafe to call it.
 50 HENGIST Very good, I see this you have without book, but what's your business now?
 BARBER Your lordship comes to a high point indeed, the business, sir, lies all about the head.
 HENGIST That's work for you.
 55 BARBER No, my good lord, there is a corporation, a kind of body, a body.
 HENGIST The Barber's out o'th body, let in the Tailor.
 This 'tis to reach beyond your own profession:

When you let go your head, you lose your memory,
 You have no business with the body. 60
 BARBER Yes, sir, I am a barber-surgeon, I have had something to do with't in my time, my lord, and I was never so out o'th' body as I have been here of late.
 Send me good luck; I'll go marry some whore or other but I'll get in again. 65
Enter Tailor

HENGIST Now, sir, a good discovery come from you
 That we may know the inwards of the business.

TAILOR I will rip the linings to your lordship
 And show what stuff 'tis made on, for the body
 Or corporation—

HENGIST There the Barber left indeed. 70
 TAILOR 'Tis pieced up of two factions.
 HENGIST A patched town the whilst.
 TAILOR Nor can go through stitch, noble lord,
 The collar is so great in the one party,
 And as in linsey-woolsey wove together, 75
 One piece makes several suits, so, upright Earl,
 Our linsey-woolsey hearts makes all this coil.
 HENGIST What's all this now?
 Call in the rest; I'm ne'er the wiser, yet
 I should commend my wit could I but guess
 80 What this would come to.
 [Enter Glover, Buttonmonger and Brazier]
 Now, sirs, what are you?
 GLOVER Sir-reverence of your lordship, I am a glover.
 HENGIST What needs that then?
 GLOVER Sometimes I deal with dog's leather, sir-reverence, 85 all that while.
 HENGIST Well, to the purpose, if there be any towards.
 GLOVER I were an ass else, saving your lordship's pleasure.
 We have a body, but our town wants a hand, a hand of justice, a worshipful master mayor.
 HENGIST This is well handed yet, a man may take some 90 hold. You want a mayor?
 GLOVER Right, but there's two at fisticuffs about it, sir;
 As I may say, at daggers' drawing, sir,
 But that I cannot say, because they have none;
 And you being Earl of Kent, the town does say
 95 Your lordship's voice shall choose and part the fray.

34 coming first i.e. neither wants to be first in pressing his suit
 35 lose... by't his place in a high-ranking pew
 36 he'll... wrong subject her to the humiliation
 46-65 BARBER O... again As Hengist realizes at ll. 57-8, the Barber is not a member of the Barber-Surgeon Company, indeed he seems to have been expelled from it (ll. 63-4), and so cannot lawfully practise, hence his circumlocutions (ll. 46-9)

and his hope to marry into membership (ll. 64-5). But 'the corporation' would seem also to be the body of tradesmen offstage, as more limitedly at ll. 69-70.
 46 enormities both 'misdeeds' and 'excesses'
 50 without book without learning
 61 barber-surgeon before 1461, barbers practised surgery and dentistry; after the Company of Barber-Surgeons was incorporated by Edward IV in 1461 (their title was altered to 'Company of

Barbers and Surgeons' in Henry VIII's reign), barbers were restricted to the practice of dentistry.
 74 collar pun on 'choler'
 75 linsey-woolsey cloth woven from wool and flax (with a pun on its other meaning of 'nonsense')
 82 Sir-reverence standard contraction of 'save your reverence'
 88 wants lacks
 92 at fisticuffs in a fistfight

HENGIST
This is strange work for me. Well, sir, what be they?

GLOVER
The one is a tanner.

HENGIST
Fie, I shall be too partial,
I owe too much affection to that trade
100 To put it to my voice. What's his name?

GLOVER
Simon, sir.

HENGIST
How, Simon too?

GLOVER
Nay 'tis but Simon one, sir, the very same Simon
That sold your lordship the hide.

HENGIST
What say'st thou?

105 BARBER That's all his glory, sir. He got his master's widow by't presently after, a rich tanner's wife; she has set him up. He was her foreman a long time in her other husband's days.

HENGIST [aside]
Now let me perish in my first aspiring
If the pretty simplicity of his fortune
Does not most highly take me; 'tis a presage, me-
110 thinks,
Of bright succeeding happiness to mine
When my fate's glow-worm casts forth such a shine.
[To Tailor] And what's the other that contends with him?

TAILOR
Marry, my noble lord, a fustian-weaver.

HENGIST
115 How, will he offer to compare with Simon?
He a fit match for him?

BARBER
Hark, hark, my lord,
Here they come both now in a pelting chase
From the town house.
Enter [Oliver followed by Simon], Fellmonger, [Collier and others]

120 SIMON Before me? I scorn thee, thou wattle-faced, singed pig!
OLIVER Pig? I defy thee! My uncle was a Jew and scorned the motion.

SIMON
I list not brook thy vaunts. Compare with me?
Thou spindle of concupiscence, 'tis well known
Thy first wife was a flax-wench.

OLIVER
But such a flax-wench 125
Would I might never want at my most need,
Nor any friend of mine. My neighbours knew her;
Thy wife was but a hempen halter to her.

SIMON
Use better words, I'll hang thee in my year else,
Let whos' will choose thee afterwards. 130

GLOVER Peace, for shame, quench your great spirits. Do you not see his lordship?

HENGIST What, Master Simonides?

SIMON Simonides? What a fine name he has made of Simon! There, he's an ass that calls me Simon again, 135
I'm quite out of love with't.

HENGIST Give me thy hand, I love thee and thy fortunes, I like a man that thrives.

SIMON I took a widow, my lord, to be the best piece of ground to thrive on, and by my faith, there's a young 140
Simonides like a green onion peeping up already.

HENGIST
Th'ast a good lucky hand.

SIMON
I have somewhat, sir.

HENGIST
But why to me is this election offered?
The choosing of a mayor goes by most voices.
SIMON True, sir, but most of our townsmen are so hoarse 145 with drinking there's ne'er a good voice amongst 'em all that are now here in this company.

HENGIST
Are you content both to put all to these then,
To whom I liberally resign my interest
To prevent censure? 150

SIMON I speak first, my lord.

OLIVER Though I speak last, I hope I am not least. If he will cast away a town-born child, they may, 'tis but dying forty years or so before my time.

HENGIST
I'll leave you to your choice awhile.

ALL
Your good lordship. 155
Exit Hengist

SIMON Look you, neighbours: view us both well e'er you be too hasty, let Oliver the fustian-weaver stand as fair
as I do, and the devil give him good on't.

OLIVER I do, thou upstart callimoocher, I do. 'Tis well known to thee I have been twice ale-cunner, thou 160

106-7 other husband's previous husband's 112 glow-worm luminary, used contemptuously
114 fustian-weaver weaver who works in fustian, a cloth made of cotton and flax (with a pun on 'a maker of bombast', i.e. fustian)
118 town house town hall
119-20 wattle-faced, singed pig a scorched pig having a fleshy appendage hanging from the mouth

121-2 My... motion i.e. he did not eat pork 123 list not care not to 125 flax-wench a flax-worker, hence a common woman (here used insultingly as 'whore', a meaning Oliver does not recognize) 128 hempen halter halter made of hemp (with a pun on 'hangman's noose')
129 in my year during his year as mayor 134 Simonides Middleton appears to be punning on the name of Simonides of Ceos, a Greek lyric poet and scholar.

144 by most voices by the majority of verbal votes
159 callimoocher (manuscript text); callimoocher (quarto text). OED cites this play as having the only occurrence of this word, and they define it as 'a raw cadger, a greenhorn'. However, the context suggests that the word means 'usurper'.
160 ale-cunner inspector of ale

- mushrump, that shot up in one night with lying with thy mistress.
- SIMON Faith, thou art such a spiny bald-rib, all the mistresses in the town would never get thee up.
- 165 OLIVER I scorn to rise by a woman as thou didst. My wife shall rise by me.
- SIMON The better for some of thy neighbours when you are asleep.
- GLOVER I pray cease of your communication, we can do nothing else.
- 170 [The townspeople confer]
- OLIVER [aside] I gave that Barber a fustian suit, and twice redeemed his cittern, he may remember me.
- SIMON [aside] I fear no false measure but in that Tailor; the Glover and the Buttonmonger are both cocksure; that Collier's eye I like not. Now they consult, the matter is a-brewing. Poor Jill, my wife, lies longing for this news, 'twill make her a glad mother.
- ALL A Simon, a Simon, a Simon, a Simon!
- SIMON My good people, I thank you all.
- 180 OLIVER Wretch that I am! Tanner, thou hast curried favour.
- SIMON I, curry? I defy thy fustian fume!
- OLIVER But I will prove a rebel all thy year and raise up the seven deadly sins against thee! Exit
- 185 SIMON The deadly sins will scorn to rise with thee an they have any breeding, as commonly they are well brought up, 'tis not for every scab to be acquainted with 'em. But, leaving scabs, to you, good neighbours, lo, I bend my speech, first to say more than a man can say, I hold it not so fit to be spoken; but to say what man ought to say, there I leave you also. I must confess that your loves have chosen a weak and unlearned man, that I can neither write nor read you all can witness, yet not altogether so unlearned but I could set my mark to a bond, if I would be so simple, an excellent token of government. Cheer you then, my hearts, you have done you know not what. There's a full point, you must all cough and hem now.
- 190 ALL Hem, hem, hem, cough.
- 200 SIMON Now, touching our common adversary, the fustian weaver, who threateneth he will raise the deadly sins amongst us, which as I take it are seven in number,
- let 'em come, our town's big enough to hold 'em, we will not much disgrace it. Besides, a deadly sin will lie in a narrow hole. But when they think themselves safest and the web of their iniquity woven, with the horse-strength of my justice I'll break the looms of their concupiscence; and let the weaver go seek his shuttle. Here you may hem again, if you'll do me the favour.
- 205 ALL Cough and hem.
- 210 SIMON Why, I thank you, and it shall not go unrewarded. Now for seven deadly sins: first for Pride which always sits uppermost and will be placed without a churchwarden, being a sin that is not like to be chargeable for the parish, I slip it over and think it not worthy of punishment. Now you all know that Sloth does not anything—this place you see requires wisdom—how can a man in conscience punish that which does nothing? Envy, a poor lean creature that eats raw liver, perhaps it pines to see me chosen, and that makes me the fatter with laughing. If I punish Envy then I punish mine own carcass, a great sin against authority. Wrath, the less we say, the better 'tis; a scurvy desperate thing it is that commonly hangs itself and saves justice many a halter by't. Now for Covetousness and Gluttony, I'll tell you more when I come out of mine office, I shall have time to try what they are. I'll prove 'em soundly, and if I find Covetousness and Gluttony to be directly sins, I'll bury one i'th' bottom of a chest, and th'other i'th' end of my garden. But, sirs, for lechery, I mean to tickle that home, nay I'm resolved upon't, I will not leave one whore in all the town.
- 215 220 225 230
- 235 BARBER Some of your neighbours may go seek their wives i'th' country then.
- 240 SIMON Barber, be silent, I will cut thy comb else. To conclude, I will learn the villainies of all trades—mine own I know already. If there be any knavery in the baker, I will bolt it out, if in the brewer, I will taste him thoroughly, and then piss out his iniquity in his own sink-hole. In a word, I will knock out all enormities like a bullock, and send the hide to my fellow tanners.
- ALL A Simonides, a true Simonides indeed.
- Enter Hengist [with a book] and Roxana*
- HENGIST How now, how goes your choice?

161 mushrump mushroom, with a pun on 'rump', meaning both 'buttocks' and 'upstart'

161-8 shot...asleep a series of puns on male sexual arousal (also applied to women at 3.3.165-6).

163 bald-rib lean or bony fellow, literally having a 'bald rib'

172 redeemed his cittern bought back the cittern, an 'instrument of the guitar kind, but strung with wire, and played with a plectrum or quill...commonly kept in barbers' shops for the use of the customers' (OED)

176-7 Poor...mother i.e. he jokes on cravings in pregnancy

182 fustian fume display of anger

186-7 commonly...up playing on the proverbial idea that the devil is a gentleman

187 scab low, mean, or scurvy fellow

197 full point full stop, end

198 cough and hem cough and clear their throats in agreement

205 hole pun on 'vagina'

208 shuttle weaver's instrument

213-14 placed...church-warden seated without the permission of the lay officer of the church responsible for seating parishioners

214-15 chargeable for the parish charged to the financial responsibility of the parish

219 eats raw liver Envy is presumably seen as a bird of prey; there may also be a conflation with the punishment of Prometheus.

227 prove test, implying that he will 'indulge in' them

231 tickle that home beat it out of town, with a pun on using the whores before sending them all away

235 cut thy comb humiliate

238 bolt sift, separate

240 sink-hole (manuscript text); suck-hole (quarto text); hole used for foul matter

TAILOR Here's he, my lord. 275
 SIMON You may prove I am the man, I am bold to take 245 the upper hand of your lordship a little, I'll not lose an inch of mine honour.
 HENGIST
 Hold, sirs, there's some few crowns to mend your feast, 280
 Because I like your choice.
 BARBER
 Joy bless your lordship, we'll drink your health with trumpets.
 SIMON
 250 I, with sack-butts,
 That's the more solemn drinking for my state,
 No malt this year shall fume into my pate.
Exeunt [all but Hengist and Roxena]
 HENGIST
 Continues still that fervour in his love?
 ROXENA
 255 Nay, with increase, my lord; the flame grows greater,
 Though he has learned a better art of late
 To set a screen before it.
 HENGIST Canst speak low?
[They speak aside; Roxena exits, and Hengist sits upstage, reading a book]
Enter Vortiger and Hersus
 HERSUS
 Heard every word, my lord.
 VORTIGER Plainly?
 HERSUS Distinctly.
 The course I took was dangerous but not failing,
 For I conveyed myself behind the hangings,
 Even first before her entrance.
 260 VORTIGER 'Twas well ventured.
 HERSUS
 I had such a woman's first and second longing in me
 To hear how she would bear her mocked abuse
 After she was half returned to privacy,
 I could have fasted out an ember-week
 265 And never thought of hunger to have heard her.
 She fetched three short turns, I shall ne'er forget 'em,
 Like an imprisoned lark that offers still
 Her wing at liberty and returns checked,
 So would her soul fain have been gone, and even hung
 270 Flittering upon the bars of poor mortality,
 Whichever as it offered, drove her back again.
 Then came your holy Lupus and Germanus.
 VORTIGER
 O, two holy confessors.
 HERSUS At whose sight
 I could perceive her fall upon her breast

And cruelly afflict herself with sorrow—
 I never heard a sigh till I heard hers—
 Who after her confession, pitying her,
 Put her into a way of patience,
 Which now she holds, to keep it hid from you.
 There's all the pleasure that I took in't now
 280 When I heard that my pains was well remembered.
 So with applying comforts and relief
 They have brought it low now to an easy grief,
 But yet the taste is not quite gone.
Enter Castiza
 VORTIGER
 Still fortune sits bettering our invitation. 285
 HERSUS
 Here she comes.
 CASTIZA [aside]
 Yonder's my lord, O I'll return again.
 Methinks I should not dare to look on him. Exit
 HERSUS
 She's gone again.
 VORTIGER It works the kindlier, sir.
 Go and call her back. [Exit Hersus]
 She winds herself 290
 Into the snare so prettily, 'tis a pleasure
 To set toils for her.
[Enter Hersus with Castiza]
 CASTIZA [aside] He may read my shame
 Now in my blush.
 VORTIGER Come, you're so linked to holiness
 So taken up with contemplative desires,
 That the world has you, yet enjoys you not; 295
 You have been weeping too.
 CASTIZA Not I, my lord.
 VORTIGER
 Trust me, I fear you have, you're much to blame
 An you should yield so to passion without cause.
 Is not there time enough for meditation,
 Must it lay title to your health and beauty, 300
 And draw them into time's consumption too?
 'Tis too exacting for a holy faculty.
[He discovers Hengist, seemingly asleep]
 My lord of Kent? I pray wake him, captain,
 He reads himself asleep sure.
 HERSUS My lord?
 HENGIST Your pardon, sir.
 VORTIGER
 Nay, I'll take away your book, and bestow't here— 305
 Lady, you that delight in virgin stories
 And all chaste works, here's excellent reading for you.
 Make of that book as raised men make of favour
 Which they grow sick to part from—and now, my lord,

244 I am the man I am more manly
 250 sack-butts casks of sack, a white wine
 (with a pun on the meaning 'trumpets')
 252 malt beer brewed from barley

260 her Castiza's
 261 a woman's . . . second longing cravings
 during pregnancy
 264 ember-week a one week period encompassing three fast days

 266 fetchd performed
 292 toils snares
 298 passion grief

310 You that have so conceitedly gone beyond me
 And made such large use of a slender gift,
 Which we never minded, I commend your thrift,
 And for your building's name shall to all ages
 Carry the stamp and impress of your wit,
 It shall be called Thong Castle.

315 HENGIST How, my lord?
 Thong Castle! There your highness quits me kindly.
 VORTIGER 'Tis fit art should be known by her right name.
 You that can spread my gift, I'll spread your fame.
 HENGIST I thank your grace for that, sir.
 VORTIGER And loved lord,
 320 So well we do accept thy invitation,
 With all speed we'll set forward.
 HENGIST Your love honours me.
Music. Exeunt

Finis Actus Tertius

❁

4.1 Incipit Actus Quartus
Enter Vortiger, Castiza, two Ladies, Roxena, Devonshire, Stafford at one door; Simon and his brethren [holding a scabbard and dagger], at the other

SIMON Lo, I the Mayor of Queenborough town by name,
 With all my brethren, saving one that's lame,
 Are come as fast as fiery mill-horse gallops
 To meet thy grace, thy queen and thy fair trollops.
 5 For reason of our coming do not look,
 It must be done, I found it i'th' town book,
 And yet not I myself, I scorn to read,
 I keep a clerk to do these jobs for need.
 And now expect a rare conceit before Thong Castle, so
 thee,
 Reach me the thing to give the king, the other too, I 10 prithe; [He takes the scabbard and dagger from the brethren]
 Now here they be for queen and thee, the gifts all steel and leather,
 But the conceit of mickle weight, and here they're come together;
 To show two loves must join in one, our town
 presents to thee

This gilded scabbard to the queen, this dagger unto thee.
 VORTIGER Forbear your tedious and ridiculous duties,
 15 I hate 'em as I do the rotten roots of you.
 You inconstant rabble, I have felt your fits;
 Sheath up your bounty with your iron wits
 And get you gone.
Music. Exeunt King, Queen, Ladies, and Lords

SIMON Look, sir, is his back turned?
 ALL 'Tis, 'tis. 20
 SIMON Then bless the good Earl of Kent, say I.
 I'll have this dagger turned into a pie
 And eaten up for anger, every bite on't,
 And when that pie is new cut up by some rare
 cunning pieman,
 They shall all lamentably sing, 'Put up thy dagger,
 Simon'. 25
Exeunt

Oboes. [Enter] the King and his train, met by Hengist and Hersus; they salute and exeunt, while the banquet is brought forth. Music plays. Enter Vortiger, [Hengist], Hersus, Devonshire, Stafford,
 Castiza, Roxena, and two Ladies [and attendants] 4.2

HENGIST A welcome, mighty lord, may appear costlier,
 More full of talk and toil, show and conceit,
 But one more stored with thankful love and truth
 I forbid all the sons of men to boast of.

VORTIGER Why, that's a welcome that implies 5
 The building plain but substantial;
 Methinks it looks as if it mocked all ruin
 Save that great masterpiece of consummation,
 The end of time, which must consume even ruin
 And eat that into cinders. 10

HENGIST There's no brass would last your praise, my lord,
 'Twould last beyond it and shame our durablest metal.

VORTIGER [aside to Hersus] Hersus!
 HERSUS [aside to Vortiger] My lord?
 VORTIGER [aside to Hersus] This is the time I have chosen, here's a full meeting,
 And here will I disgrace her.

310 conceitedly ingeniously, wittily
 312 minded intended
 313 for so that
 315 Thong Castle In 1576 Lambarde noted that 'the ditch and ruins of this old castle do yet appear at Tong Mill within one quarter of a mile of the parish church there, and about so much northward from the highway between London and Canterbury: where you may see the water drained from the Castleditch, to serve the corn mill' (A Perambulation of Kent).

4.1.3 mill-horse gallops Simon's foolish error, as a mill-horse would plod slowly
 4 trollops Simon's error for 'ladies'; also perhaps a desperate rhyme-word

 7 scorn to read he is, of course, illiterate, but he assumes the attitude of an aristocrat who might scorn to read
 14 gilded scabbard unintended sexual implication that is particularly embarrassing in view of the rape of Castiza

15 HERSUS [aside to Vortiger] 'Twill be sharp, my lord. She'd choose to dwell and draw all parts to one.
 VORTIGER [aside to Hersus] VORTIGER
 O 'twill be best, sir. My lord of Kent, I thank you for this welcome, HERSUS [aside to Vortiger] It came unthought of in the sweetest language 50
 Why here's the earl, her father. That ever my soul relished.
 VORTIGER [aside to Hersus] HENGIST You are pleased, my lord,
 And, ay, the lord, her uncle, that's the height on't, To raise my happiness from slight deservings
 Invited both, o' purpose to rise sick, To show what power's in princes: not in us Full of shame's surfeit. Ought worthy, 'tis in you that makes us thus.
 HERSUS [aside to Vortiger] I'm chiefly sad, my lord, your queen's not merry. 55
 And that's shrewd, by'r lady, VORTIGER
 It ever sticks close to the ribs of honour, So honour bless me, he has found the way
 Great men are never sound men after it, To my grief strangely. [To Castiza] Is there no delight?
 It leaves some ache or other in their names still CASTIZA
 Which their posterity feels at every weather. My lord, I wish not any, nor is't needful, VORTIGER [aside to Hersus] I am as I was ever.
 Mark but the least presentment of occasion VORTIGER That's not so.
 As such times yields enough, and then mark me. CASTIZA
 HERSUS [aside to Vortiger] How? O my fears!
 My observance is all yours, you know't, my lord. VORTIGER [to Devonshire]
 [Aside] What careful ways some take t'abuse them- 60 selves! When she writ maid, my lord,
 But as there be assurers of men's goods You knew her otherwise.
 'Gainst storm or pirates, which gives venturers cour- DEVONSHIRE To speak but truth, age, I never knew her a great friend to mirth,
 30 So such there must be to make up man's theft, Nor taken much with any one delight,
 Or there would be no woman venturer left. Though there be many seemly and honourable
 See, now they find their seats. What a false knot To give content to ladies without taxing. 65
 Of amity he ties about her arm, VORTIGER [drinking]
 Which rage must part! In marriage 'tis no wonder My lord of Kent, this to thy full desert 35 Knots knit with kisses are oft broke with thunder. Which intimates thy higher flow to honour.
 Music HENGIST
 Music, then I have done; I always learn Which like a river shall return service
 To give my betters place. To the great master-fountain.
 VORTIGER Where's Captain Hersus? VORTIGER [to the Ladies] Where's your lord, HERSUS I missed him not 'til now, Lady, and yours? 70
 My lord. No marvel then we were so out o'th' way
 VORTIGER Of all pleasant discourse, they are the keys
 Sit, sit, we'll have a health anon Of human music. Sure, at their nativities
 To all good services. Great nature signed a general patent to 'em, HERSUS [sitting] They're poor in these days; To take up all the mirth in a whole kingdom. 75
 They had rather have the cup than the health, my lord. What's their employment now?
 40 I sit wrong now; he hears me not, and most great FIRST LADY May't please your grace, men We never are so far acquainted with 'em;
 Are deaf on that side. Nothing we know but what they cannot keep,
 That's even the fashion of 'em all, my lord.
 Song VORTIGER
 [SINGER] It seems you have great faith though in their con- 80
 stancy,
 If in music were a power And they in yours, you dare so trust each other.
 To breathe a welcome to thy worth, SECOND LADY
 45 This should be the ravishing hour Hope well we do, my lord, we have reason for't,
 To vent her spirit's treasure forth. Because they say brown men are honestest, HERSUS But she's a fool will swear for any colour.
 Welcome, o welcome, in that word alone.

4.2.19 shrewd nasty, unpleasant
 31 woman venturer whore

60 writ maid was unmarried, with an ironic pun on when she was virginal

65 taxing tiring (or causing censure?)
 83 brown... honestest proverbial

Act 4 Scene 2

the Mayor of Rieborough

VORTIGER
They would for yours.

85 SECOND LADY 'Troth, 'tis a doubtful question,
And I'd be loath to put mine to't, my lord.

VORTIGER
Faith, dare you swear for yourselves? That's a plain motion.

SECOND LADY
My lord?

VORTIGER
You cannot deny that with honour,
And since 'tis urged, I'll put you to't, in troth.

FIRST LADY
May't please your grace?

90 VORTIGER 'Twill please me wondrous well,
And here's a book, mine never goes without one,
She's an example to you all for purity.
Come swear, I have sworn you shall, that you never knew
The will of any man besides your husband's.

SECOND LADY
I'll swear, my lord, as far as my remembrance.

95 VORTIGER
How? Your remembrance! That were strange.

FIRST LADY
Your grace, hearing our just excuses, will not say so.

VORTIGER
Well, what's your just excuse? You're ne'er without some.

FIRST LADY
I'm often taken with a sleep, my lord,
100 The loudest thunder cannot waken me,
Not if a cannon's burden were discharged
Close by mine ear. The more may be my wrong;
There can be no infirmity, my lord,
That's more excusable in any woman.

SECOND LADY
105 And I'm so troubled with the mother too,
I have often called in help, I know not whom,
Three at once has been too weak to keep me down.

VORTIGER
I perceive there's no fastening. [To Castiza] Well fair one then
That ne'er deceives faith's anchor of her hold,
110 Come at all seasons. Here, be thou the star
To guide those erring women: show the way
Which I will make 'em follow. Why dost start,
Draw back and look so pale?

CASTIZA My lord?

VORTIGER Come hither,
115 Nothing but take that oath, thou'lt take a thousand.
A thousand, poor! A million, nay as many
As there be angels registers of oaths.
Why, look there, over-holy fearful chastity,

That sins in nothing but in too much niceness!
I'll begin first and swear for thee myself:
I know thee a perfection so unstained,
120 So sure, so absolute, I will not pant on't
But catch time greedily. By all these blessings,
That blows truth into fruitfulness, and those curses
That with their barren breaths blast perjury,
Thou art as pure as sanctity's best shrine
125 From all man's mixture, but what's lawful mine.

CASTIZA [aside]
O heaven forgive him, he's forsworn himself!

VORTIGER
Come, 'tis but going now my way.

CASTIZA [aside] That's bad enough.

VORTIGER I have cleared all doubts, you see.

CASTIZA
Good my lord, spare me.

VORTIGER How? It grows later now than so,
130 For modesty's sake, make more speed this way.

CASTIZA
Pardon me, my lord, I cannot.

VORTIGER What?

CASTIZA I dare not.

VORTIGER
Fail all confidence in thy weak kind forever!

DEVONSHIRE Here's a storm
Able to make all of our name inhumid
135 And raise 'em from their sleeps of peace and fame
To set the honour of their bloods right here
Hundred years after; a perpetual motion
Has their true glory been from seed to seed,
And cannot be choked now with a poor grain
140 Of dust and earth. We that remain, my lord,
Her uncle and myself, wild in this tempest,
As ever robbed man's peace, will undertake
Upon lives' deprivation, lands and honour,
And make one ruin serve our joys and yours.
145

CASTIZA [aside]
Why here's a height of misery never reached yet!
I lose myself and others.

DEVONSHIRE You may see
How much we lay in balance with your goodness,
And had we more, it went, for we presume
You cannot be religious and so vile.
150

CASTIZA
As to forswear myself: 'tis true, my lord,
I will not add a voluntary sin
To a constrained one. I confess, great sir,
The honour of your bed has been abused.

VORTIGER
O beyond patience!

CASTIZA Give me hearing, sir,
155 But far from my consent: I was surprised
By villains and so ravished.

85 'Troth In truth
105 the mother hysteria
121 pant on't i.e. pretend to be short-winded and unable to 'catch time'

122 catch time seize the opportunity

126 mixture sexual intercourse
135 inhumid buried or laid in a grave

Act 4 Scene 2

The Mayor of Rieborough

	Voice comes with troops, and they that entertain A mighty potentate must receive his train. Methinks I should not hear from fortune next Under an earldom now; she cannot spend 235 A night so idly but to make a lord With ease, methinks, and play. The Earl Kent Is calm and smooth, like a deep dangerous water, He has some secret way, I know his blood, The grave's not greedier, nor hell's lord more proud. 240 Somewhat will hap, for this astonishing choice Strikes pale the kingdom at which I rejoice. Exit	Enter Hengist, Gentleman, and Saxons 4.4 HENGIST If we let slip this opportuneful hour, Take leave of fortune, certainty, or thought Of ever fixing, we are loose at root, And the least storm may rend us from the bosom Of this land's hopes forever. But, dear Saxons, 5 Fasten we now, and our unshaken firmness Will assure after-ages. GENTLEMAN We are resolved, my lord. HENGIST Observed you not how Vortiger the king, Base in submission, threatened our expulsion, His arm held up against us? Is't not time 10 To make our best preventions? What should check me? He's perfected that great work in our daughter, And made her Queen, she can ascend no higher, Nor can the incessant flow of his love-praises, Which yet still sways, take from that height it raises. 15 She's sure enough. What rests then that but I Make happy mine own hopes; and policy Forbids no way, noble or treacherous ended, What best effects is of her best commended. 20 Therefore be quick, dispatch. Here every man Receive into the service of his vengeance An instrument of steel, which will unseen Lurk like the snake under the innocent shade Of a spread summer's leaf; and as great substance 25 Blocks itself up into less room in gold Than other metals, and less burdensome, So in the other hand lies all confined Full as much death as ever changed mankind. 'Tis all the same time that a small watch shows 30 As great church dials, and as have as those. Take heart, the commons loves us: those removed That are his nerves, our greatness stands improved. GENTLEMAN Give us the word, my lord, and we are perfect. HENGIST That's true, the word, I lose myself, 35 'Nemp your sexes', it shall be that. GENTLEMAN Enough, sir, then we strike. HENGIST But the King's mine, take heed you touch not him. GENTLEMAN We shall not be at leisure, never fear't, We shall have work enough of our own, my lord. HENGIST They come; calm looks but stormy souls possess you. 40
4.3	Oboes. Dumb Show: enter Lupus, Germanus, Devonshire and Stafford leading Vortiner; they seat him in the throne and crown him king. Enter Vortiger in great passion and submission; they neglect him, then Roxena expressing great fury and discontent; they lead out Vortiner, and leave Vortiger and Roxena; she suborns two Saxons to murder Vortiner; they swear performance and secrecy and exeunt with Roxena. Then Vortiger, left alone, draws his sword and offers to run himself thereon; enter Hersus and prevents him, then the Lords enter again and exit Hersus. Then is brought in the body of Vortiner in a chair dead, they all in amazement and sorrow take Vortiger, and upon his submission, restore him, swearing him against the Saxons. Then enter Hengist with diverse Saxons, Vortiger and the rest, with their swords drawn, threaten their expulsion; whereat Hengist amazed sends one to entreat a peaceable parley, which seeming to be granted by laying down their weapons, exeunt severally Enter Raynulp
	RAYNULPH Of pagan blood a queen being chose, Roxena hight, the Britons rose, And Vortiner they crown'd King, But she soon poisoned that sweet spring; 5 Then to rule they did restore Vortiger, and him they swore Against the Saxons. They, constrained, Begg'd peace-treaty, and obtained; And now in numbers equally 10 Upon the plain near Salisbury, A peaceful meeting they decreen Like men of love, no weapon seen; But Hengist that ambitious lord Full of guile corrupts his word, 15 As the sequel too well proves; On that your eyes, on us your loves. Exit

4.3.2 hight named
11 decreen decree, i.e. set up
4.4.18 ended in its ends?

33 perfect fully prepared
35 'Nemp your sexes' Draw your knives;
the Old English form would be 'Nimath ewre seax' (OED). Holinshed uses the form 'Nempt your sexes'.

Enter Vortiger and British Lords, [unarmed]

VORTIGER
We see you keep your word in all points firm.

HENGIST
No longer may we boast of so much breath
As goes to a word making than of care
In the preserving of it when 'tis made.

VORTIGER
45 You're in a virtuous way, my lord of Kent,
And since we're both sides well met like sons of peace,
All other arms laid by in sign of favour
If our conditions be embraced—

HENGIST
Th'are, th'are.

VORTIGER
We'll use no other but these only here.
[Vortiger and Hengist embrace]

HENGIST
Nemp your sexes!
[The Saxons draw their swords on the British Lords]

BRITISH LORDS
50 Treason, treason!

HENGIST
Follow to th' heart,
My trusty Saxons, 'tis your liberty,
Your wealth and honour!
[Hengist seizes Vortiger]
Soft, you're mine, my lord.

VORTIGER
Take me not basely when all sense and strength
Lies bound up in amazement at this treachery.

55 What devil hath breathed this everlasting part
Of falsehood into thee?

HENGIST
Let it suffice,
I have you and will hold you prisoner
As fast as death holds your best props in silence.
We know the hard conditions of our peace,
60 Slavery or diminution, which we hate
With a joint loathing: may all perish thus
That seek to subjugate or lessen us.

VORTIGER
O you strange nooks of guile and subtlety,
Where man so cunningly lies hid from man!
65 Who could expect such treason from the breast,
Such thunder from your voice, or take your pride
To imitate the fair uncertainty
Of a bright day that teems the sudden'st storm
When the world least expects one? But of all,
70 I'll never trust fair sky in man again;
Their's the deceitful weather. Will you heap
More guilt upon you by detaining me,
Like a cup taken after a full surfeit,
Even in contempt of health and heaven together?
What seek you?

75 HENGIST
Ransom for your liberty
As I shall like of, or you ne'er obtain't.

VORTIGER
Here's a most headstrong dangerous ambition.
Sow you the seeds of your aspiring hopes
In blood and treason, and must I pay for 'em?
Have not I raised you to this height?

HENGIST
80 My lord,
A work of mine own merit, since you enforce it.

VORTIGER
There's even the general thanks of all aspirers.
When they have all the honours kingdoms can impart
They write above it still their own desert.

HENGIST
I have writ mine true, my lord.

VORTIGER
85 That's all their sayings.
Have I not raised your daughter to Queen?

HENGIST
Why, y'have the harmony of your pleasure for't,
Y'have crowned your own desires, what's that to me?

VORTIGER
And what will crown yours, sirs?

HENGIST
Faith, things of reason:
I demand Kent.

VORTIGER
90 Why, y'have the earldom on't.

HENGIST
The kingdom on't I meant, without control,
The full possession.

VORTIGER
This is strange in you.

HENGIST
It seems you're not acquainted with my blood yet
To call this strange.

VORTIGER
Never was King of Kent yet
But who was general king.

95 HENGIST
I'll be the first then, everything has beginning.

VORTIGER
No less title?

HENGIST
Not if you hope for liberty, my lord.
So dear a happiness would be wronged by slighting.

VORTIGER
Well, take't, I resign't.

HENGIST
100 Why, I thank your grace.

VORTIGER
Is your great thirst sufficed yet?

HENGIST
Faith, my lord,
There's yet behind a pair of teeming sisters,
Norfolk and Suffolk, and I have done with you.

VORTIGER
Y'have got a fearful thirst, my lord, of late,
Howe'er you came by't.

HENGIST
105 It behoves me then
For my blood's health to seek all means to quench it.

VORTIGER
Them, too?

HENGIST
There's nothing will be abated sir.

50 heart puns on 'hart', imitating a hunting cry

95 general king king of England
96 everything has beginning proverbial, as in 'Everything has an end'; also, less widespread, 'Everything has its seed'.

Act 4 Scene 4

Mansion of Quinborough

Put your assurance in't.
 VORTIGER You have the advantage; he whom
 Fate captivates must yield to all; take 'em.
 HENGIST
 110 And you your liberty and peace, my lord,
 With our best love and wishes. Here's an hour
 Begins us Saxons in wealth, fame and power.
 [Exeunt all but Vortiger]
 VORTIGER
 Are these the noblest fruits and fairest requitals
 From works of our own raising?
 115 Methinks the murder of Constantius
 Speaks to me in the voice on't, and the wrongs
 Of our late Queen slipped both into one organ.
 Here is no safety for me but what's most doubtful;
 The rank rout love me not, and the strength I had 120 This foul devouring treachery has demolished.
 Enter Hersus
 Ambition, hell, mine own undoing lust,
 And all the brood of plagues conspire against me.
 HERSUS My lord, he dies
 That says it but yourself, were't that thief-king
 125 That has so boldly stol'n his honours from you,
 A treason that wrings tears from honest manhood.
 VORTIGER
 So rich am I now in thy love and pity
 I feel no loss at all. But we must part,
 My queen and I, to Cambria.
 HERSUS My lord,
 130 And I not named that have vowed lasting service
 To life's extremest minute to your fortunes?
 VORTIGER
 Is my ruined fate blest with so dear a friend?
 HERSUS
 My lord, not space in earth nor breadth in sea
 Shall divide me from you.
 VORTIGER O faithful treasure,
 135 All my lost happiness is made up in thee! Exit
 HERSUS
 I'll follow you through the world to cuckold you,
 That's my way now. Everyone has his toy
 While he lives here; some men delight in building
 A trick of Babel and will ne'er be left,
 140 Some in consuming what was raised with toiling,
 Hengist in getting honour, I in spoiling. Exit
 Finis Actus Quartus

Incipit Actus Quintus

5.1

Enter Simon, [Aminadab, his] Clerk, Glover, Fellmonger, Grazier, [and others].

Music

SIMON Is not that rebel Oliver, the fustian-weaver, that traitor to my year, 'prehended yet?
 CLERK Not yet, so please your worship.
 SIMON Not yet, say'st thou? How durst thou say 'not yet' and see me present, thou malapert clerk that's good for nothing but to write and read? Is his loom seized on? 5 CLERK Yes, an it like your worship, and sixteen yards of fustian.
 SIMON Good, let a yard be saved to mend me between the legs, the rest cut in pieces and given to the poor. 'Tis 10 heretic fustian and should be burnt indeed, but being worn threadbare, the shame will be as great. How think you neighbours?
 GLOVER
 Greater methinks the longer it is worn
 Where being once burnt, it can be burned no more. 15
 SIMON
 True, wise and most senseless.
 Enter Footman
 How now, sirrah,
 What's he approaching here in dusty pumps?
 CLERK
 A footman, sir, to the great King of Kent.
 SIMON
 The King of Kent? Shake him by the hand for me.
 Footman, thou art welcome; lo, my deputy shakes
 thee. 20
 Come when my year's out and I'll do't myself.
 An't 'twere a dog come from the King of Kent,
 I keep those officers would shake him, I trow.
 And what's the news with thee, well-stewed footman?
 FOOTMAN
 The King, my master—
 SIMON Hah?
 FOOTMAN With a few Saxons 25
 Intend this night to make merry with you.
 SIMON
 Merry with me? I should be sorry else, fellow,
 And take it in evil part, so tell Kent's king.
 Why was I chosen mayor but that great men
 Should make merry with me? There's a jest indeed. 30
 Tell him I looked for't, and me much he wrongs
 If he forget Simon that cut out his thongs.
 FOOTMAN
 I'll run with your worship's answer. Exit

119 rout common people
 129 Cambria Latin name for Wales
 139 A trick of Babel a visionary scheme, with an allusion to the Biblical tower of Babel ruined by God as punishment for over-reaching (as Vortiger's castle will be ruined with wildfire in 5.2)

 5.1.9 yard phallic quibble
 10-11 'Tis heretic fustian Traditionally, fustian was woven by Puritans, thus the cloth is heretical to Protestants such as

Simon.
 16 senseless Simon's error for 'sensible'
 17 dusty pumps soiled shoes (pumps were a type of shoe worn by servants)
 24 well-stewed drunken

- SIMON That fellow will be roasted against supper, he's half 35 enough already, his brows baste him. The King of Kent!
 The King of Christendom shall not be better welcome to me, for you must imagine now neighbours this is the time that Kent stands out of Christendom, for he that's King there now was never christened.
- 40 This for your more instruction I thought fit,
 That when you're dead you may teach your children
 wit.
 Clerk!
- CLERK
 At your worship's elbow.
- SIMON I must turn you from the hall into the kitchen tonight. Give order that twelve pigs be roasted yellow, 45 nine geese and some three larks for piddling-meat, but twenty woodcocks. I'll bid all my neighbours. Give charge the mutton come in all blood raw, that's infidel meat; the King of Kent's a pagan and must be served so.
 And let those officers that seldom or never go to Church
 50 bring't in, 'twill be well taken. Run. [Exit Clerk]
 Come hither you now, take all the cushions down and thwack 'em soundly after my feast of millers, for their buttocks has left a peck of flour in 'em. Beat 'em 55 carefully o'er a bolting-hutch, there'll be enough for a pan pudding as your dame will handle it. Then put fresh water into both the bough-pots, and burn a little juniper i'th' hall chimney. Like a beast as I was, I pissed out the fire last night and never thought of the King's coming.
 [Enter Clerk]
- 60 How now, returned so quickly?
 CLERK Please your worship, there's a certain company of players.
 SIMON Hah, players?
 CLERK Country comedians, interluders, sir, desires your 65 worship's leave and favour to enact in the town hall.
 SIMON I'th' town hall! 'Tis ten to one I never grant it. Call 'em before my worship. If my house will not serve their turn, I would fain see the proudest he lend a barn to
 'em.
 Enter [two] Cheaters, [a Clown, and others]
- 70 Now sirs, are you comedians?
- SECOND CHEATER We are anything sir: comedians, tragedians, tragicomedians, comi-tragedians, pastoralists, humorists, clowns and satirists. We have 'em, sir, from the smile to the laugh, from the laugh to the handkerchief. 75
- SIMON You are very strong i'th' wrists. And shall these good parts you're endowed withal be cast away among pedlars and malt-men?
- FIRST CHEATER For want of better company, an't please your worship. 80
- SIMON What think you of me, my masters? Have you audacity enough to play before so high a person? Will not my countenance daunt you? For if you play before me I shall often look at you, I give you that warning beforehand; take it not ill, my masters, I shall laugh at 85 you, and truly when I'm least offended with you. My humour 'tis, but be not you abashed.
- FIRST CHEATER Sir, we have played before a lord ere now, though we be country actors.
- SIMON A lord? Ha, ha, you'll find it a harder thing to please a mayor. 90
- FIRST CHEATER We have a play wherein we use a horse.
 SIMON Fellows, you use no horseplay in my house, my rooms are rubbed; keep it for hackney men.
- FIRST CHEATER We will not offer't to your worship, sir. 95
- SIMON Give me a play without a beast, I charge you.
- SECOND CHEATER That's hard without a cuckold or a drunkard.
- SIMON O those beasts are often the best men i'th' parish and must not be kept out. But which is your merriest 100 play now? That would I harken after.
- SECOND CHEATER Why, your worship shall hear the names all o'er and take your choice.
- SIMON And that's plain dealing, trust me. Come, begin,
 sir. 105
- SECOND CHEATER The Whirligig, The Whibble, Carwidgeon.
 SIMON Hey-day, what names are these?
- SECOND CHEATER New names of late. The Wild Goose Chase.
 SIMON I understand thee now.
- SECOND CHEATER Gull upon Gull. 110
- SIMON Why, this is somewhat plain yet.
- SECOND CHEATER Woodcock of our Side.

35 his brows baste him i.e., he's perspiring 45 piddling-meat trifling or insignificant meat
 46 woodcocks a type of bird much valued for its flavor, with an unintentional pun on woodcock as 'fool'
 54 bolting-hutch hutch used to store sifted meal
 56 bough-pots pots to hold boughs or flowers
 70-1 comedians...comedians Simon uses the word to mean 'actors'; the Second Cheater uses it to mean 'players of comedy'
 71-3 We...satirists Compare Hamlet,
 2.2.396-9, 'the best actors in the world,

either for tragedy, comedy, history, pastoral, pastoral-comical, historical-pastoral, tragical-historical, tragicalcomical-historical-pastoral'.
 78 malt-men men who make malt (beer)
 91 mayor puns on 'mare'
 94 rubbed polished by rubbing hackney men men who keep or attend to a hackney horse or carriage 106 The Whirligig, The Whibble, Carwidgeon These play titles, which mean, respectively, 'whirling toy', 'quibble', and 'pun' ('Carwidgeon' is a variant on 'carrivitchet' for the sake of a pun on 'widgeon', the first bird joke) and those at 5.1.110, 5.1.112, and 5.1.114

are apparently nonsense titles used by the Cheaters to convince Simon of their repertory. No plays with these titles are extant.
 108 The Wild Goose Chase punning allusion to Fletcher's play of the same name
 110 Gull upon Gull a nonsense title that puns on 'gull' as fool
 112 Woodcock of our Side A nonsense title that puns on 'woodcock' as fool; a work of this title is referred to by John Taylor
 the Water Poet in the preface to his Sir Gregory Nonsense His News from No Place of 1622.

Act 5 Scene 1

SIMON Get you farther off then.
 FIRST CHEATER The Cheater and the Clown.
 115 SIMON Is that come up again? That was a play when I was prentice first.
 SECOND CHEATER Ay, but the Cheater has learned more tricks since, sir, and gulls the Clown with new additions.
 SIMON Then is Clown a coxcomb; which is he?
 120 CLOWN I am the Clown, sir.
 SIMON He's too fair to make the people laugh.
 FIRST CHEATER Not as he may be dressed, sir.
 SIMON Faith, dress him how you will, I'll give him that gift, he'll never look half scurvily enough. O, the clowns that 125 I have seen in my time! The very peeping out of 'em would have made a young heir laugh if his father had lain a-dying. A man undone in law the day before, the saddest case that can be, might for his twopence have burst himself with laughing and ended all his miseries.
 130 Here was a merry world, my masters! Some talk of things of state, of puling stuff, there's nothing in a play to a clown's part, if he have the grace to hit on't, that's the thing indeed. The king shows well but he sets off the king.
 135 But not the King of Kent, I mean not so. The king I mean is one I do not know.
 SECOND CHEATER
 Your worship speaks with safety like a rich man,
 And for your finding fault our hope is greater,
 Neither with him the Clown, nor me the Cheater.
 SIMON
 140 Away then, shift, Clown, to thy motley crupper We'll see 'em first, the King shall after supper.
Exeunt Cheaters [and Clown]
 GLOVER I commend your worship's wisdom in that, Master Mayor.
 SIMON Nay, 'tis a point of justice, an't be well examined, not to offer the king worse than I'll see myself, for a play 145 may be dangerous, I have known a great man poisoned in a play.
 GLOVER What, have you, Master Mayor?
 SIMON But to what purpose, many times I know not.
 150 FELLMONGER Methinks they should destroy one another so.
 SIMON No, no, he that's poisoned is always made privy to it; that's one good order they have amongst 'em.
A shout within
 What joyful throat is that, Aminadab? What is the meaning of this cry?
 CLERK
 The Rebel's ta'en.

SIMON Oliver the Puritan? 155
Oliver is brought in
 CLERK
 Oliver, Puritan and fustian-weaver altogether.
 SIMON
 Fates, I thank you for this victorious day!
 Bonfires of pease-straw burn, let the bells ring.
 GLOVER
 There's two amending, sir, you know they cannot.
 SIMON
 'Las, the tenor's broken; ring forth the treble, 160
 I'm overcloyed with joy, welcome thou rebel.
 OLIVER
 I scorn thy welcome!
 SIMON Art thou yet so stout?
 Wilt thou not stoop for grace? Then get thee out.
 OLIVER
 I was not born to stoop but to my loom;
 That seized upon, my stooping days are doon. 165
 In plain terms, if thou hast anything to say to me, send me away quickly. This is not biding place, I understand there's players in the house, dispatch me, I charge thee, in the name of all the brethren.
 SIMON
 Nay, now proud rebel, I will make thee stay, 170
 And to thy greater torment see the play.
 OLIVER
 O Devil, I conjure thee by Amsterdam!
 SIMON Our word is past,
 Justice may wink awhile but see at last.
 The play begins; hold, stop him, stop him.
 [Trumpet]
 OLIVER O, O, that profane trumpet! 175
 SIMON
 Set him down there, I charge you, officers.
 OLIVER
 I'll hide mine ears, and stop mine eyes.
 SIMON
 Down with his golls, I charge you.
 OLIVER
 O tyranny! Revenge it, tribulation!
 SIMON
 For rebels there are many deaths, but sure the only 180 way
 To execute a Puritan is seeing of a play.
 OLIVER
 O, I shall swoon.
 SIMON But if thou dost, to fright thee

114 The Cheater and the Clown a nonsense title that, ironically sums up the play, or trick, being performed for Simon, who unwittingly plays the role of the Clown
 126 young heir laugh the joke is that it would not take much for the young heir to laugh at this 130 a merry world, my masters! Middleton's pun on the title of his play, A Mad

World, My Masters
 131 puling crying
 133-4 he...king i.e. the clown puts the King out of consideration
 158 Bonfires...ring Royal events or anniversaries were marked with bonfires and bell-ringing.
 169 brethren brothers, i.e. fellow citizens
 172 conjure presumably both 'solemnly call upon' and 'command by incantation' (as a spirit)

Amsterdam centre for Puritan refugees
 175 profane trumpet trumpets were played before and during play performances
 178 golls hands
 180-1 the...play Puritans considered plays sinful, thus Oliver thinks this play will cause his death and damnation.

A player's boy shall bring thee aqua vitae.
Enter First Cheater [in costume]

OLIVER
 O, I'll not swoon at all for't, though I die.

185 SIMON
 Peace, here's a rascal, list and edify.

FIRST CHEATER I say still he's an ass that cannot live by his wits.

SIMON What a bold rascal's this? He calls us all asses at first dash. Sure, none of us lives by our wits, neighbours, unless it be Oliver the Puritan.

190 OLIVER I scorn as much to live by my wits as the proudest on you all.

SIMON Why, you are are an ass for company, Oliver, and so hold your prating.
Enter Second Cheater [in costume]

195 SECOND CHEATER Fellows in arms, welcome! The news, the news?

SIMON 'Fellows in arms', quoth a? He may well call 'em fellows in ams for they are all out o'th' elbows.

FIRST CHEATER Be lively, my heart, be lively, the booty's in hand. He's but a fool of a yeoman's eldest son, he comes balanced on both sides, bully, he's going to pay rent with th'one pocket, and buy household stuff with th'other.

200 SECOND CHEATER 'And if this be his last day, my chuck, he shall forfeit his lease', quoth th'one pocket, 'and eat his meat i'th' old wooden platters', quoth th'other.

205 SIMON Faith, then he's not so wise as he ought to be, if he let such tatterdemalions get th'upper hand on him.
Enter Clown [in costume]

FIRST CHEATER He comes, he comes.

210 SECOND CHEATER Ay, but do you mark how he comes, small to our comfort, with both his hands in's pockets? How is't possible to pick a lock when the key's o'th' inside door?

SIMON Ay, here's the part now, neighbours, that carries away the play: if the clown miscarry, farewell my hopes forever, the play's spoiled.

215 CLOWN They say there's a foolish thing called cheaters abroad that will gull any yeoman's son of his purse, and laugh in's face like an Irishman. I would fain meet with one of those cheaters. I'm in as good state to be gulled now as ever I was in my life, for I have two purses at this time about me, and I'd fain be acquainted with that rascal that would but take one of 'em now.

220 SIMON Faith, thou mayst be acquainted with two or three that will do their good wills, I warrant you.

225

FIRST CHEATER
 That way's too plain, too easy, I'm afraid.

SECOND CHEATER
 Come, come, sir, your familiar cheats takes best, They show like natural things and least suspected. Give me a round shilling quickly.

FIRST CHEATER
 'Twill but fetch one of his hands neither, if it take.

230 SECOND CHEATER
 Thou art so covetous, let's have one at first, prithee. There's time enough to fetch out th'other after.
[The First Cheater gives him a coin]
 Thou liest, 'tis lawful money, current money.
They draw

FIRST CHEATER
 Ay, so is copper in some country, country sir.

CLOWN
 Here's a fray towards, but I'll hold my hands, Let whos' will part 'em.

235 SECOND CHEATER
 Copper! I defy thee, And now I shall disprove thee. Look you, sir, Here comes an honest yeoman's son o'th' country, A man of judgement.
[The Cheaters doff their caps]

CLOWN Pray be covered, sir, I have eggs in my cap and cannot put it off.

240 FIRST CHEATER [to Second Cheater]
 Will you be tried by him?

SECOND CHEATER
 I am content, sir.

SIMON They look rather as if they would be tried next sessions.

FIRST CHEATER [to the Clown]
 Pray give your judgement of this piece of coin, sir.

245 CLOWN Nay, an't be coin you strive about, let's see't, I love to handle money.

FIRST CHEATER
 Look on't well, sir.
They pick [the Clown's] pocket

SECOND CHEATER
 Let him do his worst, sir.

CLOWN You'd need to wear cut cloths, gentlemen, you're both so choleric.

250 SECOND CHEATER
 Nay, rub it and spare't not, sir.

CLOWN
 Now by this silver, gentlemen, 'tis good money, Would you'd a hundred of 'em.

SECOND CHEATER We hope well, sir. [Aside to First Cheater]

183 aqua vitae alcoholic spirits used to revive

198 out o'th' elbows wearing ragged clothes

200 yeoman's freeholding farmer's

201 bully a term of endearment

205-6 eat... platters a proverbial expression suggesting he will live in poverty

208 tatterdemalions persons in ragged clothing

235 hold my hands i.e. keep my hands in my pockets

244 sessions see note on 2.4.117

249-50 You'd... choleric Cholera induces heat, and the ornamental cuts in the cloth would afford ventilation.

Act 5 Scene 1

255 Th'other pocket now and we are made men.
Exeunt [First and Second Cheaters]
 SIMON O neighbours, I begin to be sick to see this fool so cozened, I would make the case mine own.
 CLOWN Still would I fain meet with this thing called cheaters.
 260 SIMON A whoreson coxcomb, they have met with thee! I can endure him no longer with patience.
 CLOWN O my rent, my whole year's rent!
 SIMON A murrain on you, this makes us landlords stay so long without our money.
 265 CLOWN The cheaters have been here.
 SIMON A scurvy hobby-horse that could not leave his money with me, having such a charge about him. A pox on thee for an ass! Thou play a clown? I will commit thee for offering on't. Officer, away with him.
[An Officer seizes the Clown]
 270 CLOWN With me? An't please your worship, 'twas my part.
 SIMON But 'twas as foolish a part as ever thou played'st in thy life, and I'll make thee smoke for't. I'll teach thee to understand to play a clown, thou shalt know every man is not born to't, look thee. Away with him quickly, 275 he'll have the other pocket, I hear him say't with mine own ears. See, he comes in another disguise to cheat thee again.
[Enter Second Cheater]
Exit [Officer with] Clown
 SECOND CHEATER Pish, whither goes he now? He spoils all my part.
 280 SIMON Come on, sir, let's see what your knaveship can do at me now.
He throws off his gown, discovering his doublet with a satin forepart and a canvas back
 You must think now, rascal, you have no fool in hand, the fool I have committed for playing the part so like an ass.
 285 SECOND CHEATER What's here to do?
 GLOVER [to Simon] Fie, good sir, come away. Will your worship base yourself to play a clown?
 SIMON Away, brother, 'tis not good to scorn anything, a man does not know what he may come to. Everyone 290 knows his ending but not his beginning. Proceed, varlet, do thy worst, I defy thee.
 SECOND CHEATER I beseech your worship, let's have our own clown. I know not how to go forward else.
 SIMON Knave, play out thy part with me, or I'll lay thee 295 by the fool all the days of thy life else. Why, how now, my masters, who's that laughed now? Cannot a man of worship play the clown a little for his pleasure but he must be laughed at? Do you know who I am? Is the King's Deputy of no better account amongst you? Was 300 I chosen to be laughed at? Where's my clerk?
 CLERK Here, an't please your worship.
 SIMON Take a note of all those that laugh at me, that when I have done, I may commit 'em. Let me see who dares do't now, and now to you once again, Sir Cheater. Look you, here's my purse-strings; I defy you. 305

 SECOND CHEATER Good sir, tempt me not, my part is so written that I should cheat your worship an you were my father.
 SIMON I should have much joy to have such a rascal to my son. 310
 SECOND CHEATER Therefore I beseech your worship pardon me, the part has more knavery than when your worship saw it at first, I assure you, you'll be deceived in't, sir, the new additions will take any man's purse in Kent or Christendom. 315
 SIMON An thou canst take mine now, I'll give't thee freely;
 and do thy worst, I charge you, as thou'lt answer't.
 SECOND CHEATER
 I shall offend your worship.
 SIMON Knave, do't quickly.
 SECOND CHEATER Say you so? Then, there's for you and here's for me then. 320
[He] throws meal in [Simon's] face, takes his purse and exits
 SIMON
 O bless me neighbours, I am in a fog,
 A cheater's fog, I can see nobody.
 GLOVER Run, follow him, officers. [Exit Clerk and Officers]
 SIMON Away, let him go, for he'll have all your purses and he come back. A pox of your new additions! They spoil 325 all the plays that ever they come in! The old way had no such roguery in't, remember! Call you this a merry comedy when as a man's eyes are put out? Brother Honeysuckle?
 GRAZIER What says your sweet worship? 330
 SIMON I make you my deputy to rule the town 'til I can see again, which I hope will be within nine days at the furthest. Nothing grieves me but that I hear Oliver the rebel laugh at me. A pox of your Puritan face, this will make you in love with plays ever hereafter, we shall 335 not keep you from 'em now.
 OLIVER In sincerity, I was never better pleased and edified at an exercise.
 SIMON Neighbours, what colour is that rascal's dust he threw in my face? 340
 GLOVER 'Tis meal, an't please your worship.
 SIMON Meal, I'm glad on't; I'll hang the Miller for selling
 on't.
 GLOVER Nay, ten to one the Cheater never bought it, he stole it certainly. 345
 SIMON Why then, I'll hang the Cheater for stealing on't and the Miller for being out of the way when he did it.
 FELLMONGER Ay, but your worship was in the fault yourself, you bade him do his worst.
 SIMON His worst, that's true, but he has done his best, 350
 the rascal, for I know not how a villain could put out a man's eyes better, and leave 'em in's head, than he has done.

260 coxcomb fool's cap

263 murrain plague

272 make thee smoke give you a roasting

289-90 Everyone...beginning inverted proverb

329 Honeysuckle a term of endearment

338 exercise religious service

Enter Clerk

CLERK Where's my master's worship?

355 SIMON How now, Aminadab? I hear thee though I see thee not.

CLERK You're sure cozened, sir, they are all cheaters professed. They have stolen three spoons too, and the Clown took his heels with all celerity. They only take the name of country comedians to abuse simple people, with a printed play or two they bought at Canterbury last week for sixpence, and which is worst, they speak but what they list on't and fribble out the rest.

SIMON

365 Here's no abuse to th' commonwealth,
If a man could see to look into't.
But mark the cunning of these cheating slaves,
First they make justice blind, then play the knaves.

Enter Hengist

GLOVER 'Ods precious brother, the King of Kent's new lighted.

SIMON

370 The King of Kent? Where is he, where is he?
O, that I should live to this day, and yet not live to see to bid him welcome!

HENGIST

Now where's Simonides, our friendly host?

SIMON

As blind as one that had been foxed a se'night.

375 HENGIST Why, how now, man?

SIMON

Faith, practising a clown's part for your grace,
I have practised both mine eyes out.

HENGIST

What need you practise that?

380 SIMON A man's never too old to learn: your grace will say so when you hear all the villainy. The truth 'tis, my lord, I meant to have been merry, and now 'tis my luck to weep water and oatmeal, but I shall see again at suppertime, I make no doubt on't.

Enter Gentleman

HENGIST

This is strange to me, sirs.

GENTLEMAN

Arm, arm, my lord!

HENGIST

What's that?

385 GENTLEMAN With swiftest speed, if ever
You'll behold the queen, your daughter, alive again.

HENGIST

Roxena?

GENTLEMAN

They're besieged.

390 Aurelius Ambrose and his brother, Uther,
With numbers infinite in Britain's forces,
Beset their castle, and they cannot 'scape

Without your speedy succour.

HENGIST

For her safety I'll forget food and rest. Away!

SIMON I hope your grace will hear the jest afore you go.

HENGIST

The jest! Torment me not. Set forward.

395 SIMON I'll follow you to Wales with a dog and a bell, but I'll tell't you.

HENGIST Unreasonable folly! Exit with Gentleman

SIMON

'Tis sign of war when great ones disagree.

Look to the rebel well till I can see,

400 And when my sight's recovered, I'll have his eyes pulled out for a fortnight.

OLIVER

Hang thee! Mine eyes? A deadly sin or two Shall pluck 'em out first, that's my resolution.

Exeunt

Enter Aurelius and Uther with Soldiers

5.2

UTHER

My lord, the castle is so fortified.

AURELIUS

So fortified? Let wildfire ruin it,

That his destruction may appear to him

I'th' figure of heaven's wrath at the last day.

5 That murderer of our brother haste away.

I'll send my heart no peace till't be consumed.

[His men set fire to the castle]

[Enter] Vortiger [and] Hersus, on the walls

UTHER

There he appears again, behold, my lord.

AURELIUS

O, that the zealous fire on my soul's altar,

To the high birth of virtue consecrated,

10 Would fit me with a sighting now to blast him,
Even as I look upon him.

UTHER

Good my lord,

Your anger is too noble and too precious

To waste it on guilt so foul as his.

Let ruin work her will.

VORTIGER

Begirt all round?

HERSUS

All, all, my lord, 'tis folly to make doubt on't.

15 You question things that horror long ago

Resolved us on.

VORTIGER

Give me leave, Hersus, though.

HERSUS

Do what you will, sir, question 'em again,

I'll tell 'em over to you.

VORTIGER

20 Not so, sir, I will not have 'em told again.

363 fribble stammer

368 'Ods precious brother God's precious brother (an oath)

374 foxed deluded

395 with a dog and a bell the proverbial companions of a blind beggar

5.2.2 Let wildfire ruin it This story appears in Holinshed's Chronicles. 'Wildfire' is a 'composition of highly inflammable substances readily ignited and very difficult to extinguish' (OED).

14 Begirt surrounded

Act 5 Scene 2

Maiden of Dunborough

HERSUS
It rests then.

VORTIGER
That's an ill word put in when thy heart knows
There is no rest at all, but torment making.

HERSUS
True, my heart finds it that sits weeping blood now
For poor Roxena's safety. You'll confess, my lord, 25 My love to you has brought me to this danger?
I could have lived like Hengist, King of Kent,
And London, York, Lincoln and Winchester
Under the power of my command: the portion 30 Of my most desert—it fell to't—enjoyed now
By lesser deservers.

VORTIGER Say you so, sir?
And you'll confess, since you begin confession—
A thing I should have died before I'd thought on—
I'm out of your love's debt, i'th' same condition.
35 You've marred the fashion of your affection utterly
In your own wicked counsel; there you paid me.
You could not but in conscience love me afterward,
You were bound to do't, as men in honesty
That vitiate virgins to give dowries to 'em.
40 My faith was pure before to faithful woman.

HERSUS
My lord, my counsel—

VORTIGER 'Tis the map now spread
That shows me all my miseries and discovers
Strange new-found ruin to me; all these objects
That in a dangerous ring circle my safety,
45 Are yours, and of your fashioning.

HERSUS
Death, mine? Extremity breeds the wildness of a desert Into your soul, and since, you've lost your thankfulness,
Which is the noblest part in king or subject,
My counsel do't.

VORTIGER Why, I'll be judged by those
50 That knit death in their brows, and think me now
Not worthy the acception of a flattery.
Most of those faces smiled when I smiled once.
[To Aurelius] My lord.

UTHER Reply not, brother.

VORTIGER Seeds of scorn,
I mind you not; I speak to those alone
Whose force makes yours a power, which else were 55 none.
Show me the main food of your hate, my lords,
Which cannot be the murder of Constantius
That crawls in your revenges, for your love
Was violent long since that.

GENTLEMAN And had been still,
60 If from that pagan woman thou'dst slept free;
But when thou fled'st from heaven we fled from thee.

VORTIGER [to Hersus]
Was this your counsel now?
HERSUS Mine? 'Twas the counsel
Of your own lust and blood; your appetite knows it.

VORTIGER [to Aurelius]
May thunder strike me from these walls, my lord,
65 And leave me many leagues off from your eyes,
If this be not the man whose Stygian soul
Breathed forth that counsel to me, and sole plotter
Of all these false injurious disgraces
That have abused the virtuous patience
Of our religious Queen.

HERSUS A devil in madness! 70

VORTIGER
Upon whose life I swear there sticks no stain
But what's most wrongful, and where now she thinks
A rape dwells in her honour, only I
Her ravisher was, and his the policy.

AURELIUS
Inhuman practice!

VORTIGER Now you know the truth, 75
Will his death serve your fury?

HERSUS Mine? My death?

VORTIGER Will't do't?

HERSUS What if it would?

VORTIGER Say, will it do't?

HERSUS Say they should, say it would?

VORTIGER Why then, it must.

HERSUS It must?

VORTIGER
It shall. Speak but the words, my lord,
He shall be yielded up.

HERSUS I, yielded up? 80
My lords, believe him not, he cannot do't.

VORTIGER Cannot?

HERSUS 'Tis but a false and base insinuation
For his own life, and like his late submission.

VORTIGER
O sting to honour, alive or dead thou goest
85 For that word's rudeness only.
[He] stabs [Hersus]

GENTLEMAN See, sin needs
No more destruction then it breeds
In its own bosom.

VORTIGER Such another brings him.

HERSUS
What, has thy wild rage stamped a wound upon me?
I'll send one to thy soul shall never heal for't. 90

VORTIGER
How, to my soul?

HERSUS It shall be thy master torment,

39 vitiate corrupt

Both for the pain and the everlastingness.
VORTIGER Ha, ha.
HERSUS
Dost laugh? Take leave on't, all eternity
95 Shall never see thee do so much again.
Know thou art a cuckold.
VORTIGER What?
HERSUS You change too soon, sir.
Roxena, whom thou'st raised to thine own ruin,
She was my whore in Germany.
VORTIGER Burst me open;
Your violence is whirlwinds!
HERSUS Hear me out first.
100 For her embrace, which yet my flesh sits warm in,
I was thy friend and follower.
VORTIGER Deafen me,
Thou most imperious noise that starts the world!
HERSUS
And to serve our lust, I practised with thee
Against thy virtuous queen.
VORTIGER
Bane to all comforts!
105 HERSUS Whose faithful sweetness,
Too precious for thy blood, I made thee change
For love's hypocrisy.
VORTIGER Insufferable!
HERSUS
Only to make my way to pleasure
Fearless, free and fluent.
110 VORTIGER Hell's trump is in that throat.
HERSUS
It shall sound shriller.
VORTIGER I'll dam it up with death first.
I am at thy heart, I hope.
HERSUS Hold out breath
And I shall find thee quickly.
[Vortiger and Hersus] stab each other [and continue fighting;] Roxena enters in fear
ROXENA O for succour!
115 Who's near me? Help me, save me, the flame follows
me,
It's the figure of poor Vortiner the prince
Whose life I took by poison.
VORTIGER I'll tug out thy soul here.
HERSUS
Do, monster!
ROXENA Vortiger!
VORTIGER Monster!
ROXENA My lord!
VORTIGER
Slave!

ROXENA
Hersus, Hersus!
HERSUS Murderer!
ROXENA My lord!
VORTIGER
Toad pagan!
HERSUS Viper Christian!
ROXENA Hear me, help me!
My love, my lord, I'm scorched! What, all in blood? 120
O happy men, that ebb shows you're near falling.
Have you chose that way yourselves rather to die
By your own swords than feel fire's keener torment,
And will not kill me that most needs that pity?
125 Captain, my lord, send me some speedier death
And one less painful; I have a woman's sufferings.
O think upon't: go not away so easily
And leave the harder conflict to my weakness.
Most wretched, I'm not worth so much destruction
As would destroy me quickly, and turn back 130
I cannot. O 'tis here, my lord, 'tis here!
Hersus, look up, if not to succour me,
To see me yet consumed. O what is love
When life is not regarded?
VORTIGER [to Hersus]
What strength is left I'll fix upon thy throat. 135
HERSUS I have some force yet.
Both stab; Hersus falls [and dies]
ROXENA
No way to 'scape. Is this the end of glory,
Doubly beset with enemies' wrath and fire?
See, for an arm of lust, I'm now embraced 140 With one that will destroy me, where I read
The horror of dishonest actions.
It waxes nearer now, rivers and fountains!
Guile and dissemblance! Tears were now a blessing.
It sucks away my breath! I cannot give
A curse to sin, and hear't out whilst I live. 145
O help, help, help!
She falls [into the flames and dies]
VORTIGER Burn, burn, now I can tend thee.
Take time with her in torments, call her life
Afar off to thee, dry up her strumpet blood
And hardly parch the skin, let one heat strangle her,
150 Another fetch her to her sense again,
And the worst pain be only her reviving.
Follow her eternally. Give her not o'er
But in a bitter shape. I shall be cold
Before thy rage reach me. O mystical harlot, Thou hast thy full due! Whom lust crowned Queen
before, 155
Flames crown her now for a triumphant whore,

110 trump trumpet

121 As in 3.1, Roxena's speech on the consequences for women of men's mistreatment of them has been cut; her lines beginning at l. 120 and ending after 'consumed' in l. 133 are marked for deletion in the manuscripts, and her lines beginning at the middle of l. 120 to 'my lord' in l. 131 do not appear in the quarto.

146 now...thee Vortiger implies he can take care of Roxena when they both reach hell.

149 hardly severely

154 mystical secret, unavowed (also 'mysterious' and 'allegorical embodiment of')

Act 5 Scene 2

Maison of Quinborough

And that end crowns 'em all!
He falls [and dies]

AURELIUS Our peace is full now
 In yon usurper's fall; nor have I known
 A judgement meet more fearfully.
 [To a Soldier] Here, take this ring, deliver the good 160 Queen,
 And those grave pledges of her injured honour,
 Her worthy father and her noble uncle,
 Too long too much abused, whose clear-eyed fames
 I reverence with respect to holiness due,
 165 A spotless name being sanctity now in few.
Enter Devonshire [and] Stafford, leading Hengist prisoner
 How now, my lords, the meaning of these sounds?
 HENGIST
 The consumer has been there; she's gone, she's lost.
 In glowing cinders lies all my joys,
 The headlong fortune of my rash captivity
 170 Strikes not so fierce a wound into my hopes
 As thy dear loss.
 AURELIUS Her father and her uncle!
 GENTLEMAN
 They are indeed, my lord.
 AURELIUS Part of my wishes!
 What fortunate power has prevented me,
 And, ere my love came, brought 'em victory?
 GENTLEMAN
 175 My wonder sticks in Hengist, King of Kent.
 DEVONSHIRE
 My lord, to make that plain which now I see
 Fixed in astonishment, the only name
 Of your return and being brought such gladness
 To this distracted kingdom that, to express 180 A thankfulness to heaven, it grew great
 In charitable actions, from which goodness
 We tasted liberty that lay engaged
 Upon the innocence of woman's honour,
 A kindness that even threatened to undo us;
 185 And having newly but enjoyed the benefit
 And fruits of our enlargement, 'twas our happiness
 To intercept this monster of ambition,
 Bred in these times of usurpation,
 The rankness of whose insolence and treason
 190 Grew to such height, 'twas armed to bid you battle,
 Whom as our fames' redemption, on our knees
 We present captive.
 AURELIUS Had it needed reason,
 You rightly came provided. What is he?
 GENTLEMAN
 My lord, that treacherous Hengist, King of Kent.
 AURELIUS
 195 I understand not your desert till now my lords.
 Is this that German Saxon whose least thirst

Could not be satisfied under a province?
 HENGIST
 Had but my fate directed this bold arm
 To thy life, the whole kingdom had been mine,
 That was my hopes' great aim. I have a thirst 200
 Could never have been full quenched under all,
 The whole land must, or nothing.
 AURELIUS A strange drought;
 And what a little ground shall death now teach you
 To be content withal!
 HENGIST Why, let it then,
 For none else can; you've named the only way. 205
 When I'm content, it must be when I'm clay.
 AURELIUS
 My lords, the best requital yet we give you
 Is a fair inward joy. Speak to your fame's Glories unblemished, for the queen your daughter
 Lives firm in honour, neither by consent 210
 Or act or violence stained, as her grief judges.
 'Twas her own lord abused her honest fear,
 Whose ends shamed him only to make her clear.
 DEVONSHIRE
 Had your grace given a kingdom for a gift
 It had not been so welcome. 215
Enter Castiza [and] a Gentleman
 AURELIUS [kneeling]
 Here she comes whose virtues I must reverence.
 CASTIZA [kneeling]
 O my lord, I kneel a wretched woman.
 AURELIUS Arise with me,
 Great in true joy and honour.
 [They rise]
 HENGIST This sight splits me,
 It brings Roxena's ruin to my memory. 220
 CASTIZA [to Aurelius]
 My lord, it is too great a joy for life!
 AURELIUS
 'Tis truth and that, I know, you ever joyed in.
 His end confessed it.
 CASTIZA Are you returned, soul's comforts?
 AURELIUS
 Nay, to approve thy pureness to posterity,
 The fruitful hopes of a fair peaceful kingdom 225
 Here will I plant.
 CASTIZA Too worthless are my merits.
 AURELIUS
 There speaks thy modesty and to the firmness of Truth's plantation in this land forever,
 Which always groans under some curse without it.
 As I begin my rule with the destruction 230
 Of this ambitious pagan, so shall all
 With his adulterate faith distained and soiled Either turn Christians, die, or live exiled.

167 consumer destroying fire
 171 her i.e. Castiza's
 214-34 DEVONSHIRE Had...virtues For a discussion of the dramatic impact of the revised ending of the play found in HER-RINGMAN, see the Textual Introduction.

the Maior of Rieborough

Epilogue

ALL
A blessing on those virtues.
Finis Actus Quintus

Flourish. Exeunt

As this were the first day they played;
And though some that give none their due
Please to mistake 'em, do not you,
Whose censures have been ever kind.
We hope 'tis good, but if we find
Your grace and love by pleased signs understood,
We cease to hope, for then we know 'tis good. Exit 10
Music
Finis

Epilogue Enter Raynulp

RAYNULPH
For story of truth compact
I chose these times, these men to act,
As careful now to make you glad

Epilogue.9 by pleased signs understood i.e.
through applause

WOMEN, BEWARE WOMEN: A TRAGEDY

Edited by John Jowett

SINCE Charles Lamb's favourable mention in Specimens of English Dramatic Poets (1808), Women, Beware Women has been central to Middleton's reputation as a major playwright. Appreciative criticism came long before stage revival, but a number of recent productions have confirmed that the play is a compelling stage work. Late twentieth-century sensibilities have responded positively to its precise, ironic, and intense concentration on sexuality in the field of power.

Thus, when the Royal Shakespeare Company staged the first modern production in 1962, in a ground-breaking studio production at the Arts Theatre, the London Times reviewer (5 July) wondered if 'squeamishness of taste' had previously kept the play off the boards, and Kenneth Tynan, reviewing in the Observer (8 July), saw its urgent significance to a period characterized in Philip Larkin's neatly exaggerated declaration that 'sexual intercourse was invented in 1963'. Granada Television might have noted such comments, for a televised performance was broadcast in 1965. The Traverse Theatre put on the first Scottish production for the Edinburgh Fringe Festival of 1968; it emphasized the play's austere and stylized qualities. The following year the RSC mounted a new full-scale production directed by Terry Hands. A chessboard set on which was placed a large statue of Venus emphasized the emblematic sexual manoeuvres. Bianca (Judi Dench) surrounded herself with a protective shell of apparent innocence, whilst Leantio (Richard Pasco), in contrast to Nicol Williamson's coarse and resentful proletarian of 1962, was exposed as a naïve victim out of his depths in Florentine sexual politics.

In 1986 the Royal Court Theatre staged an adaptation by Howard Barker. He described it in the playscript/programme as a piece of 'creative vandalism' in which a pared-down text of the first four acts was followed by a second part in modern idiom written entirely in Barker's own hand. Barker notes that in Middleton 'lust leads to the grave'; in his own version, which rejects the Cardinal's moralizations as a lie, 'desire alters perception', becoming a frenzy that leads towards political revolution. Kathleen McLuskie (1989) sees this chaotic and frank adaptation as confirming phallic power even as it demystifies it, and a theatrical riposte to Barker has come from Valerie Ellis, whose own adaptation for the American Repertory Theatre in Cambridge, Massachusetts, in 1991 responded to what she saw as the grotesque sexism of Barker's version. Meanwhile, the Birmingham Repertory Theatre had staged a revival of the Middleton play in 1989, and subsequently in 1995 Philip Prowse's production at the Glasgow Citizens' Theatre was played in modern dress on a set framed with skeletons.

When the RSC returned to the play in 2006, stylishly directed by Laurence Boswell, references to chess were present but muted. Costumes were predominantly Jacobean with inflections of post-punk. Careful blocking emphasized the physical distance between characters, a distance thrown into the vertical dimension when Bianca and Leantio's Mother appeared at a very high window. Age distances were strongly marked, with an immature Leantio looking young enough to be his old mother's grandson. Tim Pigott-Smith played a casually offhand but compelling Duke, and Penelope Wilton confirmed Livia as mainspring of the plot's manipulative cynicism.

Women, Beware Women finds no mention in records from before the Civil Wars, so information about early performances is confined to what can be inferred from the first printed edition of 1657. The men's parts might be performed by as few as seven adults. Middleton must have been especially confident in the strength of the envisaged company's boy actors, for few plays of the period have three more demanding female roles. The gamble seems to have paid off. The Calvinist poet and dramatist Nathaniel Richards in his commendatory verse in the 1657 edition claims to recall it being 'Acted in state, presented to the life', judging that 'Never came tragedy off with more applause'. If so, the applause was not renewed after 1660, despite the availability of a printed text. Women, Beware Women may have been too sociopolitically disturbing for Restoration tastes, and its stagecraft does not adapt readily to the proscenium-arch theatre. There are no recorded performances between 1642 and 1962.

The play maps out the progress of illicit desire in two thematically and structurally related plots. The events concerning Bianca come from Florentine history, and are close to the account in Celio Malespini's Ducento Novelle (1609), Part 2, novelle 84 and 85. Malespini's account ends with the murder of the character equivalent to Leantio, but an Italian manuscript continues the story to the death of Bianca and the Cardinal. A variation of this final episode is given in the unpublished manuscript chapters of Fynes Moryson's Itinerary Containing his Ten Years' Travel (completed 1619–20). Though Middleton may have consulted Moryson, his immediate source for the play's conclusion was probably an untraced manuscript. The Isabella plot derives from a French novella, Histoire véritable des infortunées et tragiques amours d'Hypolite et d'Isabella, Napolitains (1597). An English translation was published in 1628, after Middleton's death; Middleton may have seen the original French or a manuscript version of the translation. Middleton tightens up these source narratives and integrates them in a complicated way. His Hippolito and Livia have equivalents in both the sources; indeed Livia is based on no less than four characters. Middleton's conflation creates in Livia a complex and structurally central figure. She above all is the woman of whom others must 'beware'.

The title Women, Beware Women reflects on the debate between the castigators and defenders of women that took place in print and on stage during the middle and later Jacobean period. J. R. Mulryne, in his 1975 edition, heard in it an echo of words spoken by the character called Misogynous in the tragicomedy Swetnam the Woman-hater Arraigned by Women (performed in 1617-18 and published in 1620):

And Fortune, if thou be'st a deity,
Give me but opportunity that I
May all the follies of your sex declare,
That henceforth men of women may beware.

Middleton's title finds a still closer and hitherto unnoticed parallel in a ballad on the Overbury scandal (see The Masque of Cupids) called 'Mistress Turner's Farewell to all Women', which includes the admonition 'Women by me beware'. Here, in contrast with Swetnam, the address is to women, and beware has imperative force. In the illustrative woodcut Mistress Turner wears citizen garb that might be appropriate to Leantio's Mother, but her role as procuress and manipulator of sexual intrigue in the Overbury affair is closer to that of the play's other widow, Livia. Bianca might recall the woodcut's courtly 'Lady Pride', who is implied to be Frances Howard.

Comparison with the broadsheet ballad gives the play a precise orientation in relation to both anti-court and anti-woman satire. Richards thought that the play simply conformed to such models; he approved its presentation of 'drabs of state vexed' (sumptuous high-ranking whores provoked to anger). It is strange, then, that the initial scene of each plot establishes that all later female subterfuges have a base in male oppression. This is uncompromisingly clear in the case of Isabella, who faces an arranged marriage to the Ward. His and Sordido's desensitized physical grotesquerie is stranded in a society whose moral grotesquerie is glossed over by urbane worldliness. These two characters are funny to each other, embarrassing to all others. Despite the Ward's unsocialized sexuality and anti-woman rhetoric, Isabella's father Fabritio has chosen him to be her husband. There is satire here on the Court of Wards, an institution notorious for providing a source of royal revenue by farming out rich orphans. A guardian could reap a financial reward if his ward was married off before he reached maturity; he had invested in the ward and his stake was high. But marriages arranged for reasons of property were an object of more general criticism. The Ward gives flesh to a scenario in which marriage becomes a flawed institution orientated to the needs of those who dispose of wealth. Isabella's dowry can only buy her misery. When uncle Hippolito confesses his desire for his niece, Isabella's dilemmas deepen. She responds with horrified rejection, whilst parenthetically recognizing that pleasures are thereby denied: 'Though my joys fare the harder'. It takes Livia's lie that Isabella's uncle is no blood relative to make her openly acknowledge her physical attraction to him. Yet if she now thinks Hippolito is not her uncle, in social fact he must partly remain so, even to her.

For Isabella, marriage can become a mask for adultery. It is one way of coming to terms with her position as her father's disposable chattel, which is the fate Bianca has deliberately avoided. She has allowed herself to be 'stolen' from her family by her lover Leantio, but that romantic episode belongs to the past. The play opens more soberly with the newly married couple's return to Leantio's home, where he lives with his mother, who has the unusual privilege for a female character of speaking the play's first lines. Leantio is now confronted with translating sexual adventurism away from home into marital life within the physical bounds and psychopathology of everyday life. He must defer sensual pleasures, spending the week in commercial travelling so as to earn his living as a merchant's agent. His bourgeois values inform an alternately smug and anxious attitude to his gentlewomanly wife: she is a commodity, a jewel to be locked away from public sight. The habit of thought comes easily to him, but is reinforced by a fear of reprisals that might not be wholly fanciful: the English were aware of Italy as a place of violent and macabre family vengeance. To avoid such outcomes, Leantio constructs a marriage whose sensuality is hemmed in by possessiveness and guilt. As husband he imprisons the wife within the lustreless fabrics of middle-class existence.

Bianca, like Isabella, escapes from the patriarchal family only to become, eventually, mistress to a protective father substitute: in her case, the Duke of Florence. Livia uses Leantio's garrulous old mother as a means for drawing Bianca to her house; there Bianca is betrayed into the Duke's hands. Bianca is entrapped, threatened with violence, denied meaningful choice, restrained as she struggles ('strive not' says the Duke); she is raped (Gossett, 1984). Yet the emphasis on the event shifts even during its enactment from direct violence towards a subtler form of coercion whereby the violence is euphemized, as though the Duke did not understand the nature of consent. When he takes Bianca off-stage, he speaks of love, peace, and joy:

Should any doubt arise, let nothing trouble thee.
Put trust in our love for the managing
Of all to thy heart's peace. We'll walk together,
And show a thankful joy for both our fortunes.

Much of the episode is based on the techniques and language of political intrigue and diplomacy, as is emphasized in the emblematic commentary that emerges from the chess game played between Livia and the Mother below.

The threat of war has produced a capitulation, and now the Duke celebrates peace on his own terms. Bianca's final silence looks back to her equally cryptic silence in response to her 'purchase' by Leantio in the opening scene. As a response to threatened rape it is at sharp variance with that of Lucretia, whose technical consent under duress was sometimes cited to problematize her status as rape victim. Bianca's final silence forces the actor or reader to interpret what she fails verbally to express: at best 'a kind of constrained consent' (the words in the manuscript stage direction describing the dumb-show of Castiza's forced marriage in Hengist 2.2.0.17-22; the printed text says 'unwillingly'), or a dawning acceptance that an affair with the Duke might offer 'glory' as well as destruction; at worst the last resistance of the powerless.

The imagined offstage sex is over brutally soon (Dai-leader, 1998). When Bianca returns to the stage alone and altered, she expresses her horror at the moral corruption that has been forced on her in images of infectious mists and leprosy, whilst internalizing her entrapment as personal guilt. 'Sin and I'm acquainted' catches through personification the enigmatic conflict between sin seen as an otherly external agent (such as the Duke) and an inward state of being. Paradoxically it may seem, while castigating Guardiano for his role as procurer, she goes on to declare defiantly 'He likes the treason well, but hates the traitor'. The line marks a willed accommodation to her new situation that foreshadows her role in the rest of the play. Her lack of spontaneity is figured in the objectified, potentially regendered 'He', and the whole line is marked in the 1657 printed text as a sententia. As the previous line hints, it might be a 'politic' response to her new situation, advising Guardiano that she is able to accept a role as the Duke's mistress that will be dangerous to her betrayer. Yet that acceptance is without further regret; the private thoughts we hear are not of recrimination towards Guardiano or the Duke, but malice towards a Cardinal who first urges the Duke to abandon his courtesan and then tries to prevent their marriage. Gossett has urged that Middleton takes the misogynist view that she masochistically enjoys rape. But, especially seen in the context of a culture that habitually treated acknowledged victims of rape as dishonoured women, the speech we have been considering perhaps rather implies that she confronts an initially appalling prospect after her fate and her identity have been decided for her, and that she adapts to it. The Duke's ostentatious appreciation of her (unmatched by Leantio) and his provision of wealth both might reinforce her acceptance of the inevitable.

At all events her position as object and commodity is drastically redefined. Leantio feared Bianca's exchange value, and so feared and denied Bianca her social existence. She was his 'unvalued'st purchase': priceless, but also uniquely free from valuation, because unknown in Florence. When she is invited to the Duke's banquet, Leantio hides her in guilty darkness:

You know, mother,
At the end of the dark parlour there's a place
So artificially contrived for a conveyance
No search could ever find it. When my father
Kept in for manslaughter, it was his sanctuary.
There will I lock my life's best treasure up,
Bianca.

Only a few moments later, the Duke publicly celebrates her brightness as his paramour:

Methinks there is no spirit amongst us, gallants,
But what divinely sparkles from the eyes
Of bright Bianca; we sat all in darkness
But for that splendour.

Her affair with the Duke has set her in another box of male cultural construction; this one is not a dark prison but a theatre where she is object of the gaze of others.

John Stachniewski (1990) has suggested that a Calvinist sensibility might enable Middleton to intimate what we would now call the unconscious mind. The seeds of repressed sinfulness can lie buried in the soul of the apparently upright being, so that corruption is an ironic maturation of self. Events engineered cynically by Livia bring that potential, lurking as repressed fantasy, into fulfilment. Yet if such an approach, applied to Bianca, suggestively adds psychological depth to the character, it does so at the expense of blaming the victim for her fate. Her momentary excitement when the Duke notices her during the ducal procession in 1.3 cannot determine that she willingly capitulates under duress. If Middleton is working with ideas of predestination, he is offering a hugely secularized revision of them. Bianca faces a combination of naked power and the constraint of ideological emplacement. She has the designation 'strumpet' written upon her as though it were somehow innate. Herein lies the stronger determinism, the court's power to shape lives and to taint souls.

The play opens upon a conspicuously secular world. Livia betrays both women into the hands of men, but within her own frankly cynical and amoral horizon of meaning she provides them with self-fulfilment and sexual comfort. For Livia, morality is a mere instrument of oppression, a convention to be exploited and overturned. She ranks amongst the 'atheists' of Jacobean drama: characters who deny that divine providence can be effectual, who attempt to put human affairs firmly in human hands. When Bianca harshly denounces her after the entrapment scene, Livia muses:

'Tis but a qualm of honour; 'twill away;
A little bitter for the time, but lasts not.
Sin tastes at the first draught like wormwood water,
But drunk again, 'tis nectar ever after.

This, characteristically, reduces 'honour' to a fastidious stomach and 'Sin' to a taste impression. The joys of sin become quasi-religious ('nectar ever after') because they are only attained through suffering, and so sin assumes a perverse positive role in defining what has value. In this perspective it is a kindness to acquaint someone with sin, and Livia does not stint in doing so.

Livia was played as a terrifyingly inhuman figure in the RSC's 1962 production. She is the play's most powerful, enigmatic, and multifaceted dramatic role. Though her amorality is a matter of principle, she nonetheless takes delight in engineering other women's seductions and vicariously enjoys their pleasures. She claims to be an 'experienced widow' beyond love's foibles. As a manipulator, she is highly self-controlled, despite a hint of incest in her feelings for her brother Hippolito. But in Act 3 she succumbs to sudden and violent desire for Leantio, and surrenders her prized discretion. She offers to purchase his sexual favours, and he sees possibilities for evening the score with his wife. His cynical affair with Livia provides the trigger for an explosive undoing of all she has done, and so precipitates the revenge actions that are played out in the final scene.

Thus the first part of the play, up to the banquet scene (3.3), is based on Livia's amoral but constructive schemes; generically it is not too far removed from city comedy. The second part follows the consequences through to destruction and chaos. This generic shift towards tragedy introduces a second horizon of signification: the judgemental outlook articulated most forcefully by the Cardinal, who first speaks in 4.1. Criticism of the play's moral meaning, or lack of it, will focus on how effectively this new moralism supersedes the initial amorality associated with Livia, who loses ideological authority as she loses her grip on the play's action. Despite the hints of irony some critics find in Middleton's presentation of him, the Cardinal introduces an insistent note of Christian severity. His brother the Duke, previously the presiding figure in a satire against a sexually corrupt society, is now subject to momentary spiritual anguish. When he arranges Leantio's death in order to protect Bianca, marriage quickly follows; the Cardinal detects an astounding moral confusion, and it is hard to demur.

The Cardinal's prominence in the later scenes ensures that the spiritual hypocrisy he seeks to correct is firmly linked to the world of the court. The play enacts its own process of social mobility as it moves from the factor's dwelling to the aristocratic households of Livia and Guardiano, and so to the ducal court itself. Bianca and Leantio are refashioned by their lovers as spruce courtiers, and in a bitter exchange in 4.1 mock each other's sexually-purchased accoutrements. By the end of the play the Cardinal has emphasized the view that moral turpitude flows from the Duke downwards. Women, Beware Women cannot be seen as a programmatic anti-court satire without straitjacketing some of its complexities; it admits some fascination with the psychology of sexual corruption, and indeed treats the victims of passion with considerable sympathy. But the final contest between Bianca and the Cardinal allows a more condemnatory viewpoint, whereby religious censure and moral outrage have an inescapable political dimension. The play has become what Albert H. Tricomi (1989) calls an 'anatomy of court culture', and one way of reading it is as an articulation of anti-court grievances. Here the title's probable allusion to the Overbury scandal and the satire on wardship are equally relevant. Courtly power, supposedly directed to the common good, is seen as a vehicle to material and sensual gratification; courtly refinement is reduced to suave machination in the kingdom of lust. The final masque violently repudiates the Platonic idealizations of the Jacobean court masque, in which the court flattered itself in extravagant, high-minded entertainments. The scene resonates strongly with the often-expressed view that the court put on an outward show of finery and embraced a specious Platonism as a guise for sordid sexual transactions and secret acts of violence. In the play's court world, Bianca's first words after her entrapment, 'Now bless me from a blasting', are in vain; courtly advancement exacts the highest spiritual fee.

Middleton has created space for a view of political power that unremittingly strips illusions away. The play presents an image of the psychology of human behaviour that similarly denies sentiment or illusion, yet recognizes, especially in the case of Bianca, the force of human passions. It is in some ways misleading to call all this 'realism' or, in Lamb's admiring phrase, 'an immediate transcript from life', for the play is sometimes harshly caricatural, sometimes highly emblematic. The term 'realism' is, however, helpful in suggesting a style of depiction that can complicate stereotypical moral categories and demystify social processes. We may be reminded too of the play's careful observance of life's physical textures, and of the way characters speak almost obsessively of material value as if it were abstract value. In Middleton's Italy, though it is a country populated with strange vices, the human characters and social mores are disturbingly familiar. This is a class-conscious play, and Florence is Jacobean London writ large.

The dialogue is conducted with a naturalism alert to social nuance. Persistent sexual and spiritual consciousness in the undercurrents of language can be read equally for symbolic resonance and socio-historical truth to seventeenth-century life. Similarly, the techniques of characterization hover between an alienated sense of social life and emblematic counter-realism. Personal names, if given at all, are reserved for special purposes. Bianca's name appears only in Act 3, where it is an emotionally charged token of romantic and sexual contest between Leantio and the (unnamed) Duke. Similarly, Leantio is anonymous until Act 4, where he is the object of Livia's love and the Duke's enmity. Guardiano is not named at all (see note to 1.2.96). The audience is persistently denied the impression of easy familiarity afforded by personal names. In this respect the play on stage has a different texture from either the play as printed, replete with speech-prefixes and stage directions, or critical discussions such as the present one. The characters themselves normatively think of each other in terms of social roles and family relationships. Yet community and family are consistently ironized, and characters find their feelings dislocated from the object of those feelings and stranded in extended asides. Dialogue is instrumental, conflictual, insincere; established lovers are usually denied communication.

Even the most lifelike scenes are shaped by an artifice and theatricality that insistently estranges the impression of transcribed life. The limits of realism are most vividly defined in the play's often emblematic stagecraft. For instance, there are two processions of the Florentine state over the stage. The first is 'a yearly custom and solemnity | Religiously observed by th' Duke and state'. It excludes Bianca, who is the onlooker, but includes the Cardinal. The second procession shows Bianca at the Duke's side, but now the Cardinal is the outside figure; he breaks up the ceremony denouncing 'Religious honours done to sin'. The Cardinal embodies 'Religion'. Thus the entrapment scene is not unique in its emblematic dramaturgy.

Like a number of other commentators, Max Stafford-Clark, who inspired and directed Barker's adaptation, found Middleton's play marred by a last act that was 'unperformable and rather silly'. In the Citizens' Theatre production, the masque was replaced by successive descents through trapdoors to hell. Dorothy McMillan described the effect as 'hellish chic' (Times Literary Supplement, 17 February 1995), which, despite the alterations, is perhaps not far from the tone of the original text. Certainly the staging and orchestration of the final scene are complex, and exploit the full physical resources of the professional Jacobean stage. The masque represents the procedures of court masque, drawing on non-realistic traditions of drama that accommodate symbolic tableaux. It also depends on precedents in the revenge drama, not least for the convention of representing stylized but excessive retributions through the expedient device of court entertainment. Difficulties for modern theatrical practitioners are perhaps inevitable. But there are the questions of tone too. The revenges are emblematic witticisms, and amidst violent death the vein of humour refuses to dry. Tragedy competes with tragedy parodied; pity and horror compete with horrified laughter.

The effect of this final débâcle can be considered in relation to earlier scenes. As an ensemble portraying a state occasion, the masque recapitulates the banquet of 3.2, which similarly brought a major phase of the play to its logical close. But equally, the final scene, in its use of the upper acting space (but see commentary to 5.1.37.1-2), its division into separate stage groupings, and its emblematic qualities, recalls the game of chess in

2.2. Livia's control over the action of 2.2 is echoed in her control of the chess game. In 5.2 she presides over the masque, suspended from the heavens in the ironic role of Juno the marriage goddess; but by this time no character is able to take an overview of what is going on, much less control it. If both scenes work through high artifice, by the time of the final masque there is effectively no primary artificer (unless it be a vengeful God), for the plotters are many. Plurality, disharmony, and violent enmity invert the Platonic values intrinsic to masque, suggesting that the marriage it celebrates is itself a parody of holy matrimony. Even if one allows for the theatrical conventions at work, it remains possible to see the episode as attempting to represent something so anarchic as to be unrepresentable. Another critical but suggestive viewpoint is that the masque scene cannot adequately resolve conflicting interpretive and generic demands as, for example, between cynical realism and theological moralism. Both approaches recognize the play's ambitious complexity. But perhaps the scene's meaning, in relation to its audience, is spelled out most clearly by Hippolito:

DUKE

I have lost myself in this quite.

HIPPOLITO

My great lords, we are all confounded.

Women, Beware Women is an impressively stark and disturbing play. As in King Lear, the plots reinforce each other; each of the contrasted marriage-matches seals off the possibility of there being a happier alternative in its opposite. The language has a conversational surface that is firmly locked into a network of unremitting ironies. Characters speak of the immediate physical and emotional urge as if it were something of fundamental meaning. They are in the first instance trivial and mistaken in this, but ultimately they make themselves right in ways they fail to understand. In this way dramatic irony transports the everyday stuff of social comedy into a tragic world. The women are almost casually tricked into a deceptive sexual paradise; the paradise collapses into a disturbing but still ironized vision of earthly damnation. As she dies amongst strangers, Bianca, forgetting the Duke and Guardiano, blames women for it all—perhaps, in this at least, a woman of whom women should beware.

SEE ALSO

Textual introduction and apparatus: Companion, 1140

Authorship and date: Companion, 414

Women, Beware Women: A Tragedy

THE PERSONS OF THE PLAY

BIANCA Capella, a gentlewoman from Venice

LEANTIO, a factor, Bianca's husband

Leantio's MOTHER, a widow

Lady LIVIA, a widow

ISABELLA, Livia's niece

FABRITIO, Isabella's father and Livia's brother

HIPPOLITO, Isabella's uncle and Livia's brother

The WARD, a foolish rich young heir

SORDIDO, the Ward's man

GUARDIANO, the Ward's guardian

DUKE of Florence

The LORD CARDINAL, the Duke's brother

TWO LADIES

A LORD

Two other Cardinals

States of Florence

One or two CITIZENS

A PRENTICE

Two or three BOYS

MESSENGER

SERVANTS

A PAGE

Other lords, ladies, and attendants

In the Masque:

HEBE

HYMEN

GANYMEDE

Two Nymphs

Two Pages as Cupids

I. I Incipit Actus Primus
Enter Leantio, with Bianca and Mother. [Bianca stands apart]

MOTHER [to Leantio]

Thy sight was never yet more precious to me.
 Welcome with all the affection of a mother
 That comfort can express from natural love.
 Since thy birth-joy, a mother's chiefest gladness
 5 After she's undergone her curse of sorrows,
 Thou wast not more dear to me than this hour
 Presents thee to my heart. Welcome again.

LEANTIO [aside]

'Las, poor affectionate soul, how her joys speak to me!
 I have observed it often, and I know it is 10 The fortune commonly of knavish children
 To have the loving'st mothers.

MOTHER

What's this gentlewoman?

LEANTIO

O, you have named the most unvalued'st purchase

That youth of man had ever knowledge of.
 As often as I look upon that treasure
 And know it to be mine—there lies the blessing— 15
 It joys me that I ever was ordained
 To have a being and to live 'mongst men;
 Which is a fearful living, and a poor one,
 Let a man truly think on't.

To have the toil and griefs of fourscore years 20
 Put up in a white sheet, tied with two knots!
 Methinks it should strike earthquakes in adulterers
 When e'en the very sheets they commit sin in May prove, for aught they know, all their last garments.

O, what a mark were there for women then! 25
 But beauty able to content a conqueror
 Whom earth could scarce content keeps me in compass.

I find no wish in me bent sinfully
 To this man's sister or to that man's wife.

I. I. 3 comfort source of comfort, source of delight express elicit

natural i.e. maternal

5 curse of sorrows i.e. pain in child-birth, God's punishment of womankind for Eve's transgression: 'I will greatly increase thy sorrows' (Genesis 3:16).

12 unvalued'st priceless purchase acquisition (bought or stolen)

13 youth (i.e. when a man might expect to purchase a wife, but not to enjoy riches)

20 griefs hardships, sufferings

21 Put up placed for safe keeping sheet winding-sheet (and anticipating the bed-sheets of 23)

25 mark example

26-7 a . . . content (alludes to Alexander the Great, supposed to have wept because the world had insufficient lands for him to conquer)

27 earth the world in compass within bounds. Also a suggestion of the navigational compass, prompted by earth and taken up in bent, 'inclined, drawn': Leantio's compass-needle remains directed to Bianca.

- 30 In love's name, let 'em keep their honesties
And cleave to their own husbands; 'tis their duties.
Now when I go to church I can pray handsomely,
Not come like gallants only to see faces,
As if lust went to market still on Sundays.
- 35 I must confess I am guilty of one sin, mother,
More than I brought into the world with me,
But that I glory in. 'Tis theft, but noble
As ever greatness yet shot up withal.
- MOTHER
How's that?
- LEANTIO Never to be repented, mother,
40 Though sin be death. I had died if I had not sinned.
And here's my masterpiece; do you now behold her.
Look on her well, she's mine. Look on her better.
Now say if't be not the best piece of theft
That ever was committed. And I have my pardon
for't:
'Tis sealed from heaven by marriage.
- 45 MOTHER Married to her!
- LEANTIO
You must keep counsel, mother, I am undone else.
If it be known, I have lost her. Do but think now
What that loss is; life's but a trifle to't.
From Venice her consent and I have brought her,
50 From parents great in wealth, more now in rage;
But let storms spend their furies now we have got
A shelter o'er our quiet innocent loves.
We are contented. Little money she's brought me.
View but her face, you may see all her dowry,
55 Save that which lies locked up in hidden virtues
Like jewels kept in cabinets.
- MOTHER You're to blame,
If your obedience will give way to a check,
To wrong such a perfection.
- LEANTIO How?
- MOTHER Such a creature,
To draw her from her fortune, which no doubt
- At the full time might have proved rich and noble!
60 You know not what you have done. My life can give
you
But little helps, and my death lesser hopes;
And hitherto your own means has but made shift
To keep you single, and that hardly, too.
65 What ableness have you to do her right then
In maintenance fitting her birth and virtues?—
Which ev'ry woman of necessity looks for,
And most to go above it, not confined
By their conditions, virtues, bloods, or births,
But flowing to affections, wills and humours.
- 70 LEANTIO
Speak low, sweet mother. You are able to spoil as many
As come within the hearing. If it be not
Your fortune to mar all, I have much marvel.
I pray, do not you teach her to rebel,
When she's in a good way to obedience:
75 To rise with other women in commotion
Against their husbands for six gowns a year,
And so maintain their cause, when they're once up,
In all things else that require cost enough.
They are all of 'em a kind of spirits soon raised,
80 But not so soon laid, mother. As for example,
A woman's belly is got up in a trice;
A simple charge ere it be laid down again.
So ever in all their quarrels and their courses.
And, I'm a proud man, I hear nothing of 'em.
85 They're very still, I thank my happiness,
And sound asleep. Pray let not your tongue wake 'em.
If you can but rest quiet, she's contented
With all conditions that my fortunes bring her to:
To keep close as a wife that loves her husband,
90 To go after the rate of my ability,
Not the licentious swinge of her own will,
Like some of her old schoolfellows. She intends
To take out other works in a new sampler,

30 honesties chastities, marital fidelities
31 cleave The biblical term (Genesis 2:24, Matthew 19:5, etc.)
32 handsomely (a) fittingly, properly
(b) elegantly
33-4 Not . . . Sundays (an abuse of church-going noted by various writers of the time)
36 I . . . me (referring to humanity's innate 'original sin' resulting from the Fall of Adam and Eve, as distinct from sins committed in life)
38 shot up rapidly flourished 40 sin be death (from Romans 6:23, 'The wages of sin is death')
41 masterpiece (a) masterly achievement
(b) excellent art-object
43 piece (a) instance (b) article
46 keep counsel maintain secrecy

49 Venice (notorious for sexual license) 57 check rebuke (perhaps also suggesting the chess term, anticipating 2.2)
58 perfection perfect creature
63 but made shift barely managed
64 keep support
66 virtues good qualities
69 conditions social ranks
70 to according to. Affections, wills, and humours are seen as drawing a woman as the moon draws a tide.
affections inclinations
humours whims
76 commotion tumult, rebellion
78 up risen up, up in arms
80 spirits (a) animated people (b) ghosts, demons
raised (a) brought to rebellion
(b) summoned (as of ghosts) (c) swollen up 81 laid (a) overthrown, humbled (b) put to rest (as of ghosts) (c) made flat

82 got up made to swell
83 simple minor (ironic); or 'unmitigated' charge expense, responsibility
84 courses reprehensible conduct
90 keep close (a) stay shut up at home
(b) stay near 91 go . . . ability walk at the speed I can manage (with a sexual connotation taken up in licentious swinge); hence 'live at a rate I can afford'
92 swinge (a) free scope, impulse, power;
(b) copulation (see OED, v.1, 1e)
94 take out copy sampler piece of embroidery serving as a pattern

95 And frame the fashion of an honest love
Which knows no wants, but, mocking poverty,
Brings forth more children, to make rich men wonder
At divine providence that feeds mouths of infants,
And sends them none to feed, but stuffs their rooms
100 With fruitful bags, their beds with barren wombs.
Good mother, make not you things worse than they are
Out of your too much openness, pray take heed on't,
Nor imitate the envy of old people
That strive to mar good sport because they are perfect.
105 I would have you more pitiful to youth,
Especially to your own flesh and blood.
I'll prove an excellent husband, here's my hand,
Lay in provision, follow my business roundly,
And make you a grandmother in forty weeks.
110 Go, pray salute her, bid her welcome cheerfully.

MOTHER
Gentlewoman, thus much is a debt of courtesy
Which fashionable strangers pay each other
At a kind meeting.
[She kisses Bianca]
Then there's more than one
Due to the knowledge I have of your nearness.
115 I am bold to come again, and now salute you
By th' name of daughter, which may challenge more
Than ordinary respect.
[She kisses Bianca again]

LEANTIO [aside] Why, this is well now,
And I think few mothers of threescore will mend it.

MOTHER
What I can bid you welcome to is mean,
120 But make it all your own. We are full of wants,
And cannot welcome worth.

LEANTIO [aside] Now this is scurvy,
And spake as if a woman lacked her teeth.
These old folks talk of nothing but defects,
Because they grow so full of 'em themselves.

125 BIANCA
Kind mother, there is nothing can be wanting
To her that does enjoy all her desires.
Heaven send a quiet peace with this man's love,
And I am as rich as virtue can be poor,

Which were enough, after the rate of mind,
To erect temples for content placed here. 130
I have forsook friends, fortunes, and my country,
And hourly I rejoice in't. Here's my friends,
And few is the good number. [To Leantio] Thy successes,
Howe'er they look, I will still name my fortunes.
135 Hopeful or spiteful, they shall all be welcome.
Who invites many guests has of all sorts,
As he that traffics much drinks of all fortunes,
Yet they must all be welcome and used well.
I'll call this place the place of my birth now,
140 And rightly, too, for here my love was born,
And that's the birth-day of a woman's joys.
You have not bid me welcome since I came.

LEANTIO
That I did, questionless.

BIANCA No, sure. How was't?
I have quite forgot it.

LEANTIO Thus.
[He kisses her]

BIANCA O sir, 'tis true.
Now I remember well. I have done thee wrong. 145
Pray take't again, sir.
[She kisses him]

LEANTIO How many of these wrongs
Could I put up in an hour, and turn up the glass
For twice as many more!

MOTHER
Will't please you to walk in, daughter?

BIANCA Thanks, sweet mother.
150 The voice of her that bare me is not more pleasing.
Exeunt Mother and Bianca

LEANTIO
Though my own care and my rich master's trust
Lay their commands both on my factorship,
This day and night I'll know no other business
But her, and her dear welcome. 'Tis a bitterness
To think upon tomorrow: that I must leave her 155
Still to the sweet hopes of the week's end;
That pleasure should be so restrained and curbed,
After the course of a rich workmaster
That never pays till Saturday night.

95 frame (a) devise (b) impose over the frame used to stretch the embroidery cloth fashion (a) shape (b) current custom, taste
96-100 mocking... wombs Alludes to the supposed fecundity of the poor and sterility of the rich.
100 bags (of money)
104 perfect i.e. without sexual misdemeanor
108 business (with a sexual connotation)
roundly thoroughly (with a quibble on the rounding of the belly in pregnancy)
113 one i.e. one kiss
114 your nearness i.e. our kinship

116 challenge lay claim to 118 mend improve on
121 scurvy shabby, worthless. Also refers to the disease, a symptom of which was loss of teeth (122), though toothlessness also suggests age (123-4).
128 as... poor Virtue is proverbially its own reward.
129 after... mind i.e. if the scale of value is one that measures the mind's inclinations 130 for in gratitude for here i.e. (a) in Leantio's house (b) in Bianca's heart 131, 132 friends family

133 few is the good number The proverbial riposte to 'The more the merrier' is 'the fewer the better cheer'.
successes fortunes (good or bad)
137 traffics trades, travels to and fro
138 used treated 147 put up endure, store up glass hour-glass
151 my own care (a) my conscientiousness (b) self-regard 152 factorship post of merchant's agent. Leantio's travels are presumably to negotiate and effect purchases.
158 After the course in accordance with the practice

- 160 Marry, it comes together in a round sum then,
And does more good, you'll say. O fair-eyed Florence,
Didst thou but know what a most matchless jewel
Thou now art mistress of, a pride would take thee
Able to shoot destruction through the bloods
165 Of all thy youthful sons. But 'tis great policy
To keep choice treasures in obscurest places.
Should we show thieves our wealth, 'twould make 'em bolder.
Temptation is a devil will not stick
To fasten upon a saint; take heed of that.
170 The jewel is cased up from all men's eyes.
Who could imagine now a gem were kept
Of that great value under this plain roof?
But how in times of absence? What assurance
Of this restraint then? Yes, yes, there's one with her.
175 Old mothers know the world; and such as these,
When sons lock chests, are good to look to keys.
- Exit*
- I.2 Enter Guardiano, Fabritio, and Livia
GUARDIANO [to Fabritio]
What, has your daughter seen him yet? Know you that?
FABRITIO
No matter, she shall love him.
GUARDIANO Nay, let's have fair play.
He has been now my ward some fifteen year,
And 'tis my purpose, as time calls upon me,
5 By custom seconded, and such moral virtues,
To tender him a wife. Now, sir, this wife
I'd fain elect out of a daughter of yours.
You see my meaning's fair. If now this daughter
So tendered—let me come to your own phrase, sir—
10 Should offer to refuse him, I were handselled.
[Aside] Thus am I fain to calculate all my words
For the meridian of a foolish old man,
To take his understanding.—What do you answer,
sir?
FABRITIO
I say still she shall love him.
GUARDIANO Yet again?
15 And shall she have no reason for this love?
FABRITIO
Why, do you think that women love with reason?
- GUARDIANO [aside]
I perceive fools are not at all hours foolish,
No more than wise-men wise.
FABRITIO I had a wife;
She ran mad for me; she had no reason for't,
For aught I could perceive.—What think you, lady sister? 20
GUARDIANO [aside] 'Twas a fit match, that,
Being both out of their wits.—A loving wife: it seemed
She strove to come as near you as she could.
FABRITIO
An if her daughter prove not mad for love too,
She takes not after her; nor after me, 25
If she prefer reason before my pleasure.—
You're an experienced widow, lady sister,
I pray let your opinion come amongst us.
LIVIA
I must offend you then, if truth will do't,
And take my niece's part, and call't injustice 30
To force her love to one she never saw.
Maids should both see and like; all little enough.
If they love truly after that, 'tis well.
Counting the time she takes one man, till death,
That's a hard task, I tell you; but one may 35
Enquire at three years' end amongst young wives,
And mark how the game goes.
FABRITIO Why, is not man
Tied to the same observance, lady sister,
And in one woman?
LIVIA 'Tis enough for him.
Besides, he tastes of many sundry dishes 40
That we poor wretches never lay our lips to,
As obedience, forsooth, subjection, duty, and such kickshaws
All of our making, but served in to them;
And if we lick a finger then sometimes,
We are not to blame; your best cooks use it. 45
FABRITIO
Thou'rt a sweet lady, sister, and a witty.
LIVIA
A witty? O, the bud of commendation
Fit for a girl of sixteen. I am blown, man.
I should be wise by this time; and, for instance,
I have buried my two husbands in good fashion, 50
And never mean more to marry.

163 pride (a) self-esteem (b) sexual excitement take strike with disease
164 bloods (a) life (b) sexual passions
165 policy calculated prudence
168 stick scruple
1.2.3-10 He...handselled Orphaned children of the nobility became Wards of Court; i.e. their estates were held by the Crown until they were 21. Wardship was farmed out by the Crown, with possible financial benefit to the guardian. Guardiano would benefit from the marriage by being relieved of the Ward, and would be able to exact a payment from his estate if the Ward refused the marriage. See Introduction.

5 moral (a) righteous (b) customary
10 handselled given an auspicious present (ironic)
12 meridian special capacities. A figurative extension of the astrological term, which informs calculate (11) and take (13; see note).
13 take capture, secure (quibbling on 'measure by scientific observation')

17 fools... foolish (proverbial)
23 come as near be as like (quibbling on physical proximity, and perhaps nearness of orgasm)
34 Counting (a) considering (b) summing up
37 the game (with a sexual innuendo)
42 kickshaws fancy dishes (from French quelque chose) 45 your... it From the proverb 'he is a poor cook that cannot lick his fingers'.
use practise
48 am blown have blossomed; have seen better days

GUARDIANO No? Why so, lady? Like what you see. Do you hear me? There's no dallying;

LIVIA Because the third shall never bury me. The gentleman's almost twenty, and 'tis time I think I am more than witty.—How think you, sir? He were getting lawful heirs, and you a-breeding on 'em.

FABRITIO I have paid often fees to a counsellor Has had a weaker brain.

55 LIVIA Then I must tell you, FABRITIO Tell not me of tongues and rumours. 80
Your money was soon parted. You'll say the gentleman is somewhat simple; GUARDIANO [to Fabritio] Light her now, brother. The better for a husband, were you wise, LIVIA For those that marry fools live ladies' lives. On with the mask; I'll hear no more. He's rich; FABRITIO The fool's hid under bushels. [Isabella puts on her mask. The Ward is heard within]

60 LIVIA Not so hid, neither; 85
But here's a foul great piece of him, methinks. What will he be when he comes altogether? Enter the Ward, with a trapstick, and Sordido, his man

65 FABRITIO Look out her uncle and you're sure of her. Those two are ne'er asunder. They've been heard In argument at midnight; moonshine nights Are noon-days with them; they walk out their sleeps, Or rather at those hours appear like those That walk in 'em, for so they did to me. FABRITIO Look you, I told you truth. They're like a chain: Draw but one link, all follows. Enter Hippolito and Isabella the niece [hand in hand]

70 GUARDIANO O affinity, 90
What piece of excellent workmanship art thou! 'Tis work clean wrought, for there's no lust, but love, in't, And that abundantly; when in stranger things There is no love at all, but what lust brings. FABRITIO [to Isabella] On with your mask, for 'tis your part to see now, And not be seen. Go to, make use of your time. See what you mean to like; nay, and I charge you, WARD [to Sordido] Beat him? I beat him out o'th' field with his own catstick, Yet gave him the first hand.

SORDIDO O, strange!

WARD I did it. 90
Then he set jacks on me.

SORDIDO What, my ladies' tailor?

WARD Ay, and I beat him, too.

SORDIDO Nay, that's no wonder; He's used to beating.

WARD Nay, I tickled him When I came once to my tipplings.

SORDIDO Now you talk on 'em, there was a poulterer's wife made a great complaint of you last night to your guardianer, that you struck a bump in her child's head as big as an egg. 95

56 Your... parted Alludes to the proverb 'a fool and his money are soon parted'.
Light her (a) give her intellectual enlightenment (ironic: Fabritio has proved himself foolish); or (b) relieve, cheer her (urging Fabritio to cease defending loveless marriage) brother (referring probably to the projected relationship of brother-in-law)
60 stop halt, pause
61 As... land An allusion to hasty marriages of intending colonists.
64 argument discussion
65 walk out their sleeps use up their hours of sleep by walking 66-7 Or... 'em Sleep-walking suggests unawareness of spiritual peril.
69 affinity kinship
71 clean (a) adroitly (b) chastely
72 stranger things unrelated creatures
74-5 'tis... seen Draws on the proverbs

'Maidens should be seen, and not heard' and 'see and be seen'; also refers to the custom where the man and woman would not see each other before the betrothal day.
79 on of 80 tongues gossip
85 The... bushels 'Neither do men light a candle and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick' (Matthew 5:15).
bushels vessels used to measure eight gallons; hence 'large quantities (of money)'
85.1-2 The... within The exact staging is not clear. A loud flatulence seems suggested. Otherwise, the Ward might partially appear entering backwards.
86 piece (quibbling on the sense 'cask of liquor', which picks up on bushels, 85)
87.1 trapstick In the rustic game of

'cat' the trap-stick, or cat-stick, was a truncheon used to flick in the air and bat away the 'cat', an hourglass-shaped piece of wood.
88 Beat (a) defeated (b) cudgelled
90 hand stroke
91 jacks scoundrels. Sordido evidently hears 'jaques', the tailor's name.
my ladies' tailor Either 'my ladies'-tailor' or 'my lady's tailor'. Tailors were notoriously effeminate and cowardly.
93 tickled (euphemistic for 'thrashed')
94 When I came once once I came tipplings smart tappings (as to flick the 'cat' in the air) 96 guardianer An unusual form, spoken only by the Ward and Sordido, intermediate between guardian and Guardiano; the latter is used in stage directions but never in dialogue.

- WARD An egg may prove a chicken then in time: the poulterer's wife will get by't. When I am in game I am 100 furious: came my mother's eyes in my way, I would not lose a fair end; no, were she alive but with one tooth in her head, I should venture the striking out of that.
I think of nobody when I am in play, I am so earnest.
Coads me, my guardianer!
105 Prithce, lay up my cat and catstick safe.
- SORDIDO
Where, sir, i'th' chimney corner?
WARD Chimney corner?
SORDIDO
Yes, sir, your cats are always safe i'th' chimney corner,
Unless they burn their coats.
- WARD Marry, that I am afraid on.
SORDIDO
Why, then I will bestow your cat i'th' gutter,
And there she's safe, I am sure.
- 110 WARD If I but live
To keep a house, I'll make thee a great man,
If meat and drink can do't. I can stoop gallantly,
And pitch out, when I list; I'm dog at a hole.
I mar'l my guardianer does not seek a wife for me;
115 I protest I'll have a bout with the maids else,
Or contract myself at midnight to the larderwoman
In presence of a fool or a sack-posset.
- GUARDIANO Ward!
WARD [to Sordido]
I feel myself after any exercise
120 Horribly prone. Let me but ride, I'm lusty.—
A cock-horse straight, i'faith.
- GUARDIANO Why, ward, I say!
WARD [to Sordido]
I'll forswear eating eggs in moonshine nights.
- There's ne'er a one I eat but turns into a cock
In four-and-twenty hours. If my hot blood
Be not took down in time, sure 'twill crow shortly. 125
- GUARDIANO
Do you hear, sir? Follow me; I must new school you.
WARD
School me? I scorn that now; I am past schooling.
I am not so base to learn to write and read;
I was born to better fortunes in my cradle.
Exit [Guardiano, followed by Ward and Sordido]
- FABRITIO [to Isabella]
How do you like him, girl? This is your husband. 130
Like him or like him not, wench, you shall have him,
And you shall love him.
- LIVIA
O, soft there, brother! Though you be a justice,
Your warrant cannot be served out of your liberty.
You may compel, out of the power of father, 135
Things merely harsh to a maid's flesh and blood;
But when you come to love, there the soil alters;
You're in another country, where your laws
Are no more set by than the cacklings
Of geese in Rome's great Capitol.
- FABRITIO Marry him she shall, then 140
Let her agree upon love afterwards. Exit
- LIVIA
You speak now, brother, like an honest mortal
That walks upon th'earth with a staff:
You were up i'th' clouds before. You'd command love,
And so do most old folks that go without it. 145
[Livia embraces Hippolito]
My best and dearest brother, I could dwell here.
There is not such another seat on earth
Where all good parts better express themselves.
HIPPOLITO You'll make me blush anon.

- 99 get gain
in game (with a sexual innuendo)
101 fair end game promising a win
102 venture risk
104 Coads me (interjection of surprise) 106 chimney corner (quibbling on chimney as 'vagina')
107 cats Refers to the catstick as a phallic object; but also possibly suggests
'prostitutes'.
108 Unless... coats (alluding to the burning effects of syphilis)
109-10 I...sure Draws on the proverb
'they agree like two cats in the gutter';
gutter suggests the anus, as Sordido might indicate with a gesture of the 'cat'.
111 great (a) powerful (b) corpulent
112 stoop (a) crouch to pitch out the 'cat' (b) crouch in sexual intercourse
(c) debase myself (d) follow a scent
(anticipating dog)
113 pitch out (a) pitch the 'cat' (b) ejaculate dog at Proverbial for 'adept'; here also suggests a dog sniffing and digging at an animal's burrow.
hole (with the innuendo 'vagina')
114 mar'l marvel
117 In... sack-posset A witness was needed to make a verbal contract binding. A fool or a sack-posset would be conveniently at hand, and could be repudiated.
fool An idiot would not make a legal witness, but the context suggests also a custard or dish of whipped cream.
sack-posset hot milk curdled with white wine and flavoured with sugar and spices
120 prone eager (for a copulative ride)
121 cock-horse (a) hobby-horse (b) whore straight immediately
122 eating... nights Merges (a) eating eggs during moonlit nights with (b) eating eggs-in-moonshine (poached eggs with an onion sauce) at nights. Eggs were regarded as aphrodisiacs.
123 cock (a) male fowl (see 94-9) (b) erect penis
125 took down made to detumescere crow ejaculate
129 I... cradle A poorer man, or younger son, might need literacy to study for a career as clergyman, lawyer, etc.
134 liberty district within which a Justice of the Peace's warrant was valid
136 merely entirely
139 set by taken notice of 139-40 the... Capitol Refers to the sacred geese whose cackling awoke the Romans
during a night-time attack by the Gauls.
The point might be that they are ignored not in Rome but in other countries, but the image is rather confused.
139 cacklings Pronounced 'cackelings'.
142-4 like... before i.e. like a typical old man who assumes the authority of a god come to earth
145.1 Livia embraces Hippolito Alternatively, Livia's here, 146, means in gazing at Hippolito.
147 seat residence, place
148 parts qualities express manifest

LIVIA
 150 'Tis but like saying grace before a feast then,
 And that's most comely. Thou art all a feast,
 And she that has thee a most happy guest.
 Prithee, cheer up that niece with special counsel.
 [Exit]

HIPPOLITO [aside]
 155 I would 'twere fit to speak to her what I would, but
 'Twas not a thing ordained. Heaven has forbid it,
 And 'tis most meet that I should rather perish
 Than the decree divine receive least blemish.
 Feed inward, you my sorrows, make no noise,
 Consume me silent, let me be stark dead
 160 Ere the world know I'm sick. You see my honesty;
 If you befriend me, so.

ISABELLA [aside] Marry a fool!
 Can there be greater misery to a woman
 That means to keep her days true to her husband
 And know no other man? So virtue wills it.
 165 Why, how can I obey and honour him,
 But I must needs commit idolatry?
 A fool is but the image of a man,
 And that but ill-made neither. O, the heart-breakings
 Of miserable maids where love's enforced!
 170 The best condition is but bad enough:
 When women have their choices, commonly
 They do but buy their thraldoms, and bring great portions
 To men to keep 'em in subjection;
 As if a fearful prisoner should bribe 175 The keeper to be good to him, yet lies in still,
 And glad of a good usage, a good look Sometimes. By'r Lady, no misery surmounts a woman's.
 Men buy their slaves, but women buy their masters.
 Yet honesty and love makes all this happy
 180 And, next to angels', the most blest estate.
 That providence that has made ev'ry poison
 Good for some use, and sets four warring elements
 At peace in man, can make a harmony
 In things that are most strange to human reason.
 185 O, but this marriage!—What, are you sad too, uncle?
 Faith, then there's a whole household down together.
 Where shall I go to seek my comfort now

When my best friend's distressed? What is't afflicts you, sir?
 HIPPOLITO
 Faith, nothing but one grief that will not leave me,
 And now 'tis welcome. Ev'ry man has something 190 To bring him to his end, and this will serve—
 Joined with your father's cruelty to you;
 That helps it forward.

ISABELLA O, be cheered, sweet uncle!
 How long has't been upon you? I ne'er spied it.
 What a dull sight have I! How long, I pray, sir?
 195 HIPPOLITO
 Since I first saw you, niece, and left Bologna.

ISABELLA
 And could you deal so unkindly with my heart
 To keep it up so long hid from my pity?
 Alas, how shall I trust your love hereafter?
 200 Have we passed through so many arguments,
 And missed of that still, the most needful one?
 Walked out whole nights together in discourses,
 And the main point forgot? We are to blame both.
 This is an obstinate wilful forgetfulness,
 And faulty on both parts. Let's lose no time now.
 205 Begin, good uncle, you that feel't. What is it?

HIPPOLITO
 You of all creatures, niece, must never hear on't.
 'Tis not a thing ordained for you to know.

ISABELLA
 Not I, sir? All my joys that word cuts off.
 You made profession once you loved me best;
 210 'Twas but profession.

HIPPOLITO Yes, I do't too truly,
 And fear I shall be chid for't. Know the worst, then:
 I love thee dearlier than an uncle can.

ISABELLA
 Why, so you ever said, and I believed it.

HIPPOLITO [aside]
 So simple is the goodness of her thoughts,
 215 They understand not yet th'unhallowed language
 Of a near sinner. I must yet be forced,
 Though blushes be my venture, to come nearer.—
 As a man loves his wife, so love I thee.

ISABELLA What's that?
 220 Methought I heard ill news come toward me,
 Which commonly we understand too soon,

150 saying grace before (a) saying thanks-giving before (b) speaking of gracious qualities in front of

151 comely agreeable, fitting

160–1 You . . . so (still addressed to his sorrows, hoping that they will kill him)

167 image outward semblance. The fool is like a man in the same way an idol is like a god: the image without the substance.

168 neither as well

172 portions dowries

175 in i.e. in prison

182 warring elements i.e. earth, air, fire, and water, seen as the constituents of all matter. Equivalent to the four 'humours', the kinds of temperament thought to be variously mixed in each person.

186 down (as with sickness)

196 Bologna (in Middleton's source, Hippolito's birthplace)

198 keep it up shut his grief away

200 arguments topics of conversation

211 but profession i.e. merely words

217 near (a) nearby (b) almost (c) closely related

218 venture peril, risk nearer nearer to the point

221–3 Methought . . . hearing Developed from the proverb 'Ill news comes too soon'. Isabella refigures the ill news as something intuitively understood before it is heard. The intuitive hearing pre-empts the literal one.

- Then over-quick at hearing. I'll prevent it,
 Though my joys fare the harder. Welcome it?
 225 It shall ne'er come so near mine ear again.
 Farewell, all friendly solaces and discourses.
 I'll learn to live without ye, for your dangers Are greater than your comforts. What's become
 Of truth in love if such we cannot trust,
 230 When blood that should be love is mixed with lust?
 Exit
- HIPPOLITO
 The worst can be but death, and let it come.
 He that lives joyless, every day's his doom. Exit
- I.3 Enter Leantio, alone
- LEANTIO
 Methinks I'm e'en as dull now at departure
 As men observe great gallants the next day
 After a revels; you shall see 'em look
 Much of my fashion if you mark 'em well.
 5 'Tis e'en a second hell to part from pleasure
 When man has got a smack on't. As many holidays
 Coming together makes your poor heads idle
 A great while after, and are said to stick
 Fast in their fingers' ends; e'en so does game
 10 In a new-married couple: for the time
 It spoils all thrift, and indeed lies abed
 To invent all the new ways for great expenses.
 Enter Bianca and Mother above
 See an she be not got on purpose above now
 Into the window to look after me.
 15 I have no power to go now an I should be hanged.
 Farewell, all business. I desire no more Than I see yonder. Let the goods at quay
 Look to themselves. Why should I toil my youth out?
 It is but begging two or three year sooner,
 20 And stay with her continually: is't a match?
 O fie, what a religion have I leaped into!
- Get out again, for shame. The man loves best
 When his care's most; that shows his zeal to love.
 Fondness is but the idiot to affection,
 That plays hot-cockles with rich merchants' wives:
 25 Good to make sport withal when the chest's full
 And the long warehouse cracks. 'Tis time of day
 For us to be more wise; 'tis early with us;
 And if they lose the morning of their affairs
 They commonly lose the best part of the day.
 30 Those that are wealthy and have got enough,
 'Tis after sunset with 'em; they may rest,
 Grow fat with ease, banquet, and toy and play,
 When such as I enter the heat o'th' day;
 And I'll do't cheerfully.
- BIANCA I perceive, sir,
 You're not gone yet. I have good hope you'll stay
 now.
- LEANTIO Farewell; I must not.
- BIANCA Come, come, pray return.
 Tomorrow, adding but a little care more,
 Will dispatch all as well; believe me, 'twill, sir.
- LEANTIO
 I could well wish myself where you would have me;
 40 But love that's wanton must be ruled a while
 By that that's careful, or all goes to ruin.
 As fitting is a government in love
 As in a kingdom. Where 'tis all mere lust,
 'Tis like an insurrection in the people
 45 That, raised in self-will, wars against all reason;
 But love that is respectful for increase
 Is like a good king that keeps all in peace.
 Once more, farewell.
- BIANCA But this one night, I prithee.
- LEANTIO
 Alas, I'm in for twenty if I stay,
 50 And then for forty more. I have such luck to flesh

223 Then over-quick and we are then too hasty

224 Welcome it? A consideration prompted by the thought of her joys, and immediately rejected.

230 blood . . . lust consanguineous love is mixed with the 'blood' of lust

I.3 The location is the street outside Leantio's house, whose frontage would have been represented by the stage's rear wall. The upper acting space above the stage represents a window. Leantio enters as it were from the house; the procession after 101 passes over the stage in front of it.

3 revels night of revelry. Can suggest specifically 'lovemaking'.

6 smack taste

7 your poor heads the heads of poor people

8-9 stick . . . ends i.e. make them slow and clumsy in their work

9 game (a) sexual play (b) holiday activities

11 lies abed (as the game does figuratively and the couple do literally)

12 invent . . . expenses (with the quibbling sense 'try novel sexual techniques that produce great emissions of semen')

19 It is but i.e. staying at home merely leads to 20 match agreement, deal

24 Fondness infatuation the idiot to i.e. a mocking caricature as compared with the proper form of 25 That who hot-cockles A rustic game in which one player, kneeling with his head in another's lap, has to guess the identity of others who strike his back. The imputation is of casual and promiscuous sex, and perhaps also performance of cunnilingus.

26-7 when . . . cracks The merchants themselves are busy accumulating wealth. Their warehouses are full to bursting; analogously the adulterer is turgid. Chest implies 'testicles' and long warehouse is the penis ready to emit semen (crack).

29-30 if . . . day Proverbial; compare 'Some work in the morning may trimly be done, that all the day after may hardly be won.'

29 they The impersonal 'one'. Leantio is thinking of himself, in contrast with 'Those that are wealthy' (31).

33 toy dally amorously

43-4 As . . . kingdom i.e. discretion in matters of love is as needful as political authority in a kingdom

44 mere utter

47 respectful for considerate to, partial to increase increase of wealth (with an ironic glance at 'procreation')

51 to with respect to flesh (a) sensual appetites; sexual intercourse (b) animals

I never bought a horse but he bore double.
 If I stay any longer, I shall turn
 An everlasting spendthrift. As you love
 55 To be maintained well, do not call me again,
 For then I shall not care which end goes forward.
 Again farewell to thee.
 BIANCA [weeping] Since it must, farewell too.
 MOTHER Exit Leantio
 Faith, daughter, you're to blame; you take the course
 To make him an ill husband, troth you do;
 60 And that disease is catching, I can tell you,
 Ay, and soon taken by a young man's blood,
 And that with little urging. Nay, fie, see now,
 What cause have you to weep? Would I had no more,
 That have lived threescore years: there were a cause,
 65 An 'twere well thought on. Trust me, you're to blame.
 His absence cannot last five days at utmost.
 Why should those tears be fetched forth? Cannot love
 Be e'en as well expressed in a good look,
 But it must see her face still in a fountain?
 70 It shows like a country maid dressing her head
 By a dish of water. Come, 'tis an old custom
 To weep for love.
Enter two or three Boys, and a Citizen or two with an Apprentice
 BOYS
 Now they come, now they come!
 SECOND BOY The Duke!
 THIRD BOY The state!
 CITIZEN
 How near, boy?
 FIRST BOY I'th' next street, sir, hard at hand.
 CITIZEN [to his Apprentice]
 75 You, sirrah, get a standing for your mistress,
 The best in all the city.
 APPRENTICE I have't for her, sir.
 'Twas a thing I provided for her overnight;
 'Tis ready at her pleasure.
 CITIZEN Fetch her to't, then.
 Away, sir! [Exit Apprentice]
 BIANCA What's the meaning of this hurry?
 Can you tell, mother?
 80 MOTHER What a memory
 Have I! I see by that years come upon me.
 Why, 'tis a yearly custom and solemnity,

Religiously observed by th' Duke and state,
 To St Mark's Temple, the fifteenth of April.
 See if my dull brains had not quite forgot it.
 85 'Twas happily questioned of thee. I had gone down
 else,
 Sat like a drone below, and never thought on't.
 I would not be ten years younger again
 That you had lost the sight. Now you shall see
 Our Duke, a goodly gentleman of his years.
 90 BIANCA
 Is he old then?
 MOTHER About some fifty-five.
 BIANCA
 That's no great age in man; he's then at best
 For wisdom and for judgement.
 MOTHER The Lord Cardinal,
 His noble brother—there's a comely gentleman,
 And greater in devotion than in blood.
 95 BIANCA
 He's worthy to be marked.
 MOTHER You shall behold
 All our chief states of Florence. You came fortunately Against this solemn day.
 BIANCA I hope so always.
Music
 MOTHER
 I hear 'em near us now. Do you stand easily?
 BIANCA
 Exceeding well, good mother.
 MOTHER Take this stool.
 100 BIANCA
 I need it not, I thank you.
 MOTHER Use your will then.
*Enter in great solemnity six knights, bare-headed,
 then two cardinals, and then the Lord Cardinal, then the Duke; after him the states of Florence
 by two and two; with variety of music and song.
 [They pass over the stage and] exeunt.
 [Exeunt Citizens and Boys]*
 MOTHER
 How like you, daughter?
 BIANCA 'Tis a noble state.
 Methinks my soul could dwell upon the reverence
 Of such a solemn and most worthy custom.
 Did not the Duke look up? Methought he saw us.
 105

52 bore double carried two riders. As applied to Bianca, might imply that she will bear children, or (by dramatic irony) that she will bear a second man in copulation.
 56 which...forward what happens (proverbial). Leantio confuses business objectives with bodily 'ends' that might engage in sexual intercourse.
 60 that disease (i.e. self-indulgence)
 68 e'en just
 69 see...fountain i.e. ensure that her face is always in a fountain of tears (but see her face anticipates the country maid's dish of water) 70 shows like has the appearance of dressing arranging, tidying
 71 a dish of water Used to reflect, as a simple mirror. Presumably love, by implication, produces dish-fuls of tears.
 73 state nobility, rulers
 75 standing place to stand (but the Apprentice's reply quibbles on 'erection of the penis')
 78 Fetch (With the unintended bawdy 'arouse')
 82 solemnity ceremonial procession (pre-ates OED, 2b [1636]) 86 happily fortunately down downstairs
 95 blood birth
 98 Against in time for
 99 easily comfortably
 103 reverence solemnity

Act I Scene 3

Women beware Women.

MOTHER

That's everyone's conceit that sees a duke:
If he look steadfastly, he looks straight at them,
When he perhaps, good careful gentleman,
Never minds any, but the look he casts
110 Is at his own intentions, and his object
Only the public good.

BIANCA

Most likely so.

MOTHER

Come, come, we'll end this argument below. Exeunt
Finis Actus Primus

2.1

Incipit Actus Secundus
Enter Hippolito, and Lady Livia the widow

LIVIA

A strange affection, brother. When I think on't,
I wonder how thou cam'st by't.

HIPPOLITO

E'en as easily

As man comes by destruction, which oft-times
He wears in his own bosom.

LIVIA

Is the world

5 So populous in women, and creation
So prodigal in beauty and so various,
Yet does love turn thy point to thine own blood?
'Tis somewhat too unkindly. Must thy eye
Dwell evilly on the fairness of thy kindred,
10 And seek not where it should? It is confined
Now in a narrower prison than was made for't.
It is allowed a stranger; and where bounty
Is made the great man's honour, 'tis ill husbandry
To spare, and servants shall have small thanks for't.
15 So he heaven's bounty seems to scorn and mock
That spares free means, and spends of his own stock.

HIPPOLITO

Never was man's misery so soon summed up,
Counting how truly.

LIVIA

Nay, I love you so

20 That I shall venture much to keep a change from you
So fearful as this grief will bring upon you.
Faith, it even kills me when I see you faint
Under a reprehension; and I'll leave it,
Though I know nothing can be better for you.
Prithee, sweet brother, let not passion waste
25 The goodness of thy time and of thy fortune.
Thou keep'st the treasure of that life I love

As dearly as mine own; and if you think
My former words too bitter, which were ministered
By truth and zeal, 'tis but a hazarding
Of grace and virtue; and I can bring forth
30 As pleasant fruits as sensuality wishes
In all her teeming longings, this I can do.

HIPPOLITO

O, nothing that can make my wishes perfect!

LIVIA

I would that love of yours were pawned to't, brother,
And as soon lost that way as I could win.
35 Sir, I could give as shrewd a lift to chastity
As any she that wears a tongue in Florence.
She'd need be a good horse-woman, and sit fast,
Whom my strong argument could not fling at last.
Prithee, take courage, man. Though I should counsel
40 Another to despair, yet I am pitiful
To thy afflictions, and will venture hard—
I will not name for what; 'tis not handsome.
Find you the proof, and praise me.

HIPPOLITO

Then I fear me

I shall not praise you in haste.

LIVIA

This is the comfort:

45 You are not the first, brother, has attempted Things more forbidden than this seems to be.
I'll minister all cordials now to you,
Because I'll cheer you up, sir.

HIPPOLITO

I am past hope.

LIVIA

50 Love, thou shalt see me do a strange cure, then,
As e'er was wrought on a disease so mortal
And near akin to shame. When shall you see her?

HIPPOLITO

Never in comfort more.

LIVIA

You're so impatient, too.

HIPPOLITO

Will you believe death? She's forsworn my company,
And sealed it with a blush.

LIVIA

So, I perceive

55 All lies upon my hands then. Well, the more glory
When the work's finished.

Enter Servant

How now, sir, the news?

SERVANT

Madam, your niece, the virtuous Isabella,
Is lighted now to see you.

LIVIA [to Hippolito]

That's great fortune.

106 conceit thought, fancy

108 careful full of care

112 argument debate on a particular subject

2.1.7 point (a) compass-needle (b) sword
(with a phallic innuendo)

8 unkindly against family kind, unnatural

13 honour i.e. source of honour

16 spares (a) is niggardly of (b) avoids free (a) freely given (b) innocent spends...stock (a) wastes his own resources (b) releases his sexual energies

on his own family

17 summed up (a) summarized (b) counted up (responding to Livia's comments on husbandry)

18 Counting if one reckons

20 grief suffering

24 passion suffering

28 ministered prompted, administered (and dispensed like a medicine; see 48)

32 her teeming longings i.e. the longings
she produces in swarms

33 perfect realized, satisfied

36 shrewd (a) hard, sharp (b) wicked lift (a) attack (b) up-rearing (like a horse throwing its rider, anticipating 38-9)

37 wears has

43 handsome fitting

51 mortal (a) fatal (b) damnable

55 sealed confirmed. The blush is like red wax sealing a written oath.

59 Is lighted has descended from her coach

60 Sir, your stars bless you simply.—Lead her in.
Exit Servant
 HIPPOLITO
 What's this to me?
 LIVIA Your absence, gentle brother.
 I must bestir my wits for you.
 HIPPOLITO Ay, to great purpose.
Exit
 LIVIA
 Beshrew you! Would I loved you not so well
 I'll go to bed, and leave this deed undone.
 65 I am the fondest where I once affect,
 The careful'st of their healths and of their ease,
 forsooth,
 That I look still but slenderly to mine own.
 I take a course to pity him so much now
 That I have none left for modesty and myself.
 70 This 'tis to grow so liberal! You've few sisters
 That love their brothers' ease 'bove their own hon-esties;
 But if you question my affections,
 That will be found my fault.
Enter Isabella the niece
Niece, your love's welcome.
 Alas, what draws that paleness to thy cheeks—
 This enforced marriage towards?
 75 ISABELLA It helps, good aunt,
 Amongst some other griefs; but those I'll keep Locked up in modest silence, for they're sorrows
 Would shame the tongue more than they grieve the thought.
 LIVIA
 Indeed the ward is simple.
 ISABELLA Simple? That were well.
 Why, one might make good shift with such a hus-
 80 band;
 But he's a fool entailed; he halts downright in't.
 LIVIA
 And, knowing this, I hope 'tis at your choice
 To take or refuse, niece.
 ISABELLA You see it is not.
 I loath him more than beauty can hate death,
 Or age her spiteful neighbour.
 85 LIVIA Let't appear, then.
 ISABELLA
 How can I, being born with that obedience

That must submit unto a father's will?
 If he command, I must of force consent.
 LIVIA
 Alas, poor soul! Be not offended, prithee,
 If I set by the name of niece a while,
 90 And bring in pity in a stranger fashion.
 It lies here in this breast would cross this match.
 ISABELLA
 How, cross it, aunt?
 LIVIA Ay, and give thee more liberty
 Than thou hast reason yet to apprehend.
 ISABELLA
 Sweet aunt, in goodness keep not hid from me
 95 What may befriend my life.
 LIVIA Yes, yes, I must,
 When I return to reputation,
 And think upon the solemn vow I made
 To your dead mother, my most loving sister.
 As long as I have her memory 'twixt mine eyelids,
 100 Look for no pity now.
 ISABELLA Kind, sweet, dear aunt!
 LIVIA
 No, 'twas a secret I have took special care of,
 Delivered by your mother on her deathbed.
 That's nine years now, and I'll not part from't yet;
 Though ne'er was fitter time nor greater cause for't.
 105 ISABELLA
 As you desire the praises of a virgin—
 LIVIA
 Good sorrow! I would do thee any kindness
 Not wronging secrecy or reputation.
 ISABELLA
 Neither of which, as I have hope of fruitfulness,
 Shall receive wrong from me.
 LIVIA Nay, 'twould be your own wrong
 110 As much as any's, should it come to that once.
 ISABELLA
 I need no better means to work persuasion then.
 LIVIA
 Let it suffice you may refuse this fool;
 Or you may take him, as you see occasion
 For your advantage—the best wits will do't.
 115 You've liberty enough in your own will.
 You cannot be enforced; there grows the flower,
 If you could pick it out, makes whole life sweet to
 you.

60 simply absolutely
 61 Your absence Not a response to Hippolito's question, but an instruction to depart.
 64 I'll I'd
 65 fondest (a) most affectionate (b) most foolish
 66 ease Carries the specific sense 'sexual relief'.
 67 still always
 70 liberal (a) generous (b) unrestrained by prudence, licentious

73 That...fault From the proverb 'Every man has his faults'.
 75 towards about to take place
 80 make good shift manage well
 81 entailed with inalienable right to the title halts downright in't (a) comes to an absolute full-stop at it (b) is utterly defective in it (OED, halt, v.1, 4) 85 her spiteful neighbour The image of an envious old woman living next door to a beauty implies that old age maliciously follows soon after beauty. appear be made known

 88 of force of necessity
 91 stranger (a) previously unknown (b) appropriate to a non-relative
 99 sister i.e. sister-in-law
 107 sorrow (addressed to Isabella as sorrow personified)
 109 fruitfulness fertility, children
 111 once ever
 117 there in that

- That which you call your father's command's nothing;
 120 Then your obedience must needs be as little.
 If you can make shift here to taste your happiness,
 Or pick out aught that likes you, much good do you.
 You see your cheer; I'll make you no set dinner.
- ISABELLA
 And, trust me, I may starve for all the good 125 I can find yet in this. Sweet aunt, deal plainlier.
- LIVIA
 Say I should trust you now upon an oath,
 And give you in a secret that would start you;
 How am I sure of you in faith and silence?
- ISABELLA
 Equal assurance may I find in mercy
 As you for that in me.
- 130 LIVIA It shall suffice.
 Then know, however custom has made good,
 For reputation's sake, the names of niece
 And aunt 'twixt you and I, we're nothing less.
- ISABELLA
 How's that?
- LIVIA I told you I should start your blood.
 135 You are no more allied to any of us,
 Save what the courtesy of opinion casts
 Upon your mother's memory and your name,
 Than the mer'st stranger is, or one begot
 At Naples when the husband lies at Rome;
 There's so much odds betwixt us. Since your know-140 ledge
 Wished more instruction, and I have your oath
 In pledge for silence, it makes me talk the freelier.
 Did never the report of that famed Spaniard,
 Marquis of Coria, since your time was ripe
 145 For understanding, fill your ear with wonder?
- ISABELLA
 Yes; what of him? I have heard his deeds of honour
 Often related when we lived in Naples.
- LIVIA
 You heard the praises of your father then.
- ISABELLA
 My father!
- LIVIA That was he; but all the business
 150 So carefully and so discreetly carried
 That fame received no spot by't, not a blemish.
 Your mother was so wary to her end,
- None knew it but her conscience and her friend;
 Till penitent confession made it mine,
 And now my pity yours. It had been long else;
 155 And I hope care and love alike in you,
 Made good by oath, will see it take no wrong now.
 How weak his commands now whom you call father!
 How vain all his enforcements, your obedience!
 And what a largeness in your will and liberty,
 160 To take, or to reject, or to do both!—
 For fools will serve to father wise men's children.
 All this you've time to think on. O, my wench,
 Nothing o'erthrows our sex but indiscretion!
 We might do well else, of a brittle people,
 165 As any under the great canopy.
 I pray, forget not but to call me aunt still—
 Take heed of that; it may be marked in time else—
 But keep your thoughts to yourself, from all the world,
 Kindred or dearest friend; nay, I entreat you,
 170 From him that all this while you have called uncle;
 And though you love him dearly, as I know
 His deserts claim as much e'en from a stranger,
 Yet let not him know this, I priethee, do not.
 As ever thou hast hope of second pity
 175 If thou shouldst stand in need on't, do not do't.
- ISABELLA
 Believe my oath, I will not.
- LIVIA Why, well said!
 [Aside] Who shows more craft t'undo a maidenhead,
 I'll resign my part to her.
 Enter Hippolito
 She's thine own. Go. Exit
- HIPPOLITO [aside]
 Alas, fair flattery cannot cure my sorrows! 180
- ISABELLA [aside]
 Have I passed so much time in ignorance,
 And never had the means to know myself
 Till this blest hour, thanks to her virtuous pity
 That brought it now to light? Would I had known it 185 But one day sooner! He had then received
 In favours what, poor gentleman, he took
 In bitter words: a slight and harsh reward
 For one of his deserts.
- HIPPOLITO [aside] There seems to me now
 More anger and distraction in her looks.
 I'm gone; I'll not endure a second storm. 190

121 make shift contrive (and 'have a sexual affair')

here in this

122 do you may it do you

123 cheer (a) food offered as hospitality

(b) cause for cheerfulness

127 that that which start startle

129 mercy divine mercy

130 As you i.e. as much for you as 133 nothing less (a) anything rather than that (b) no less (picking up on the slang senses of niece as 'prostitute' and aunt as 'procuress')

134 start your blood (a) startle you

(b) arouse you

137 name (a) surname (b) reputation

140 odds difference

143 report renown

144 time age

149 business (with a sexual connotation)

153 friend lover

160 largeness unrestrained liberty

164 Nothing ... indiscretion Paraphrases the Latin tag 'Si non caste, tamen caute'.

165 of for brittle fragile, frail

166 great canopy sky, heavens

168 marked noticed

175 second pity i.e. another compassionate favour

The memory of the first is not past yet.
 ISABELLA [aside]
 Are you returned, you comforts of my life,
 In this man's presence? I will keep you fast now,
 And sooner part eternally from the world
 195 Than my good joys in you.—Prithee, forgive me.
 I did but chide in jest. The best loves use it
 Sometimes; it sets an edge upon affection.
 When we invite our best friends to a feast,
 'Tis not all sweetmeats that we set before them;
 200 There's somewhat sharp and salt, both to whet appetite
 And make 'em taste their wine well. So methinks
 After a friendly sharp and savoury chiding,
 A kiss tastes wondrous well, and full o'th' grape.
 [She kisses him]
 How think'st thou: does't not?
 HIPPOLITO 'Tis so excellent
 205 I know not how to praise it, what to say to't.
 ISABELLA
 This marriage shall go forward.
 HIPPOLITO With the ward?
 Are you in earnest?
 ISABELLA 'Twould be ill for us else.
 HIPPOLITO [aside]
 For us? How means she that?
 ISABELLA [aside] Troth, I begin
 210 To be so well, methinks, within this hour,
 For all this match able to kill one's heart,
 Nothing can pull me down now. Should my father
 Provide a worse fool yet, which I should think
 Were a hard thing to compass, I'd have him, either, 215 The worse the better; none can come amiss now
 If he want wit enough. So discretion love me,
 Desert and judgement, I have content sufficient.—
 She that comes once to be a housekeeper
 Must not look every day to fare well, sir,
 Like a young waiting-gentlewoman in service;
 220 For she feeds commonly as her lady does—
 No good bit passes her but she gets a taste on't—
 But when she comes to keep house for herself,
 She's glad of some choice cates then once a week,
 Or twice at most, and glad if she can get 'em.
 225 So must affection learn to fare with thankfulness.

Pray make your love no stranger, sir; that's all—[Aside] Though you be one yourself, and know not
 on't;
 And I have sworn you must not. Exit
 HIPPOLITO This is beyond me!
 Never came joys so unexpectedly
 To meet desires in man. How came she thus? 230
 What has she done to her? Can any tell?
 'Tis beyond sorcery this, drugs, or love-powders:
 Some art that has no name, sure, strange to me
 Of all the wonders I e'er met withal
 Throughout my ten years' travels. But I'm thankful
 235 for't.
 This marriage now must of necessity forward.
 It is the only veil wit can devise
 To keep our acts hid from sin-piercing eyes. Exit

Enter Guardiano and Livia 2.2
 LIVIA
 How, sir, a gentlewoman, so young, so fair
 As you set forth, spied from the widow's window?
 GUARDIANO
 She!
 LIVIA
 Our Sunday-dinner woman?
 GUARDIANO
 And Thursday-supper woman, the same still.
 I know not how she came by her, but I'll swear 5
 She's the prime gallant for a face in Florence;
 And no doubt other parts follow their leader.
 The Duke himself first spied her at the window;
 Then in a rapture, as if admiration
 10 Were poor when it were single, beckoned me,
 And pointed to the wonder warily,
 As one that feared she would draw in her splendour
 'Too soon if too much gazed at. I ne'er knew him
 So infinitely taken with a woman;
 15 Nor can I blame his appetite, or tax
 His raptures of slight folly: she's a creature
 Able to draw a state from serious business,
 And make it their best piece to do her service.
 What course shall we devise? He's spoke twice now.
 LIVIA
 Twice?

192 comforts sources of strength, succour, and delight
 197 sets... affection makes desire sharper (and gives it an erection)
 198 a feast (a sexual metaphor)
 211 pull me down make me ill
 215 So if
 215-16 discretion... judgement The qualities are (a) those Isabella sees in Hippolito, hence Hippolito himself (b) abstractions (such as Fortune) whose favour Isabella seeks, so as to succeed in her discretion (both discriminating choice and discreet behaviour), obtain her desert, and be vindicated in her judgement.

 217-25 She... thankfulness Isabella seems to be excusing her previous hostility to Hippolito as an effect of her (impending) marriage.
 217 once once and for all housekeeper woman who runs a household (as analogous to a wife)
 218 fare eat (as a metaphor for getting sexual gratification)
 220 commonly (a) usually (b) as widely 223 cates delicacies
 231 she (Livia)

233 Some... name (and so more mysterious and terrible than a named one)
 2.2.2 set forth describe spied from i.e. spied looking from 3-4 Our... woman The Mother either helped to prepare these meals or was invited as a lowly guest.
 6 gallant handsome person (sometimes applied, as here, to a woman)
 7 their leader (the face)
 16 slight folly foolish triviality
 17 state state council
 18 piece piece of work

GUARDIANO
 20 'Tis beyond your apprehension
 How strangely that one look has caught his heart.
 'Twould prove but too much worth in wealth and favour
 To those should work his peace.

LIVIA And if I do't not,
 Or at least come as near it—if your art
 25 Will take a little pains and second me—
 As any wench in Florence of my standing,
 I'll quite give o'er, and shut up shop in cunning.

GUARDIANO
 'Tis for the Duke; and if I fail your purpose,
 All means to come by riches or advancement
 Miss me and skip me over.

30 LIVIA Let the old woman then
 Be sent for with all speed; then I'll begin.

GUARDIANO
 A good conclusion follow, and a sweet one,
 After this stale beginning with old ware.—
 Within there!
Enter Servant

SERVANT Sir, do you call?

GUARDIANO Come near, list hither.
 [They talk apart]

LIVIA
 35 I long myself to see this absolute creature
 That wins the heart of love and praise so much.

GUARDIANO
 Go, sir, make haste.

LIVIA [to the Servant]
 Say I entreat her company.
 Do you hear, sir?

SERVANT Yes, madam. Exit

LIVIA That brings her quickly.

GUARDIANO
 40 I would 'twere done. The Duke waits the good hour,
 And I wait the good fortune that may spring from't.
 I have had a lucky hand these fifteen year
 At such court-passage with three dice in a dish.
Enter Fabritio
 Signor Fabritio!

FABRITIO
 O sir, I bring an alteration in my mouth now.

GUARDIANO [aside to Livia]
 An alteration! No wise speech, I hope;
 He means not to talk wisely, does he, trow?—
 Good! What's the change, I pray, sir?

FABRITIO A new change.

GUARDIANO
 Another yet! Faith, there's enough already.

FABRITIO
 My daughter loves him now.

GUARDIANO What, does she, sir?

FABRITIO
 Affects him beyond thought: who but the ward,
 forsooth? 50
 No talk but of the ward; she would have him
 To choose 'bove all the men she ever saw.
 My will goes not so fast as her consent now;
 Her duty gets before my command still.

GUARDIANO
 Why then, sir, if you'll have me speak my thoughts, 55
 I smell 'twill be a match.

FABRITIO Ay, and a sweet young couple,
 If I have any judgement.

GUARDIANO [aside] Faith, that's little.—
 Let her be sent tomorrow before noon,
 And handsomely tricked up; for 'bout that time
 I mean to bring her in and tender her to him. 60

FABRITIO
 I warrant you for handsome. I will see
 Her things laid ready, every one in order,
 And have some part of her tricked up tonight.

GUARDIANO
 Why, well said.

FABRITIO 'Twas a use her mother had
 When she was invited to an early wedding. 65
 She'd dress her head o'ernight, sponge up herself,
 And give her neck three lathers—

GUARDIANO [aside] Ne'er a halter?

FABRITIO
 On with her chain of pearl, her ruby bracelets,
 Lay ready all her tricks and jiggumbobs—

GUARDIANO
 So must your daughter.

FABRITIO I'll about it straight, sir. Exit 70

23 work bring about
 29–30 All...over (subjunctive: 'may all means...') 33 stale (a) past the prime of life (b) person, particularly a prostitute, used as bait to trap someone ware (suggests a metaphor of trading; also applies jocularly to a woman, and to the sexual organs)
 35 absolute perfect
 42 court-passage...dish Passage is a dice game using three dice in a dish; one player throws until two doubles show, and wins if they add up to over ten. The implication of an intrigue involving three people, two of whom will be matched, is strengthened by passage as 'amorous exchange'.

 44 an...mouth news of a changed attitude. Guardiano takes the phrase as 'a change in my speech'.
 46 trow I wonder
 48 Another...already Quibbles on the redundant new; and perhaps alludes to the New Change (i.e. financial exchange), opened in 1609 to supplement the Royal Exchange, and long considered superfluous.

54 before ahead of
 56 sweet Picks up on the literal meaning of smell.
 59, 63 tricked up decked out (and 'sexually aroused')
 64 use custom
 65 early (in the morning)
 67 lathers...halter 'Lather' was a variant of ladder; hence the quibble on halter, 'noose'.
 69 tricks ornaments (and possibly 'sexual know-how') jiggumbobs knick-knacks

LIVIA
How he sweats in the foolish zeal of fatherhood,
After six ounces an hour, and seems
To toil as much as if his cares were wise ones!

GUARDIANO
You've let his folly blood in the right vein, lady.

LIVIA
75 And here comes his sweet son-in-law that shall be.
They're both allied in wit before the marriage;
What will they be hereafter, when they are nearer?
Yet they can go no further than the fool:
There's the world's end in both of 'em.
Enter the Ward and Sordido, one with a shuttlecock, the other a battledore

GUARDIANO [to the Ward] Now, young heir!

WARD
80 What's the next business after shuttlecock now?

GUARDIANO
Tomorrow you shall see the gentlewoman
Must be your wife.

WARD There's e'en another thing too
Must be kept up with a pair of battledores.
My wife! What can she do?

GUARDIANO
85 Nay, that's a question you should ask yourself, ward,
When you're alone together.

WARD That's as I list.
A wife's to be asked anywhere, I hope.
I'll ask her in a congregation if I have a mind to't, and so save a licence. [To Sordido] My guard'ner has no 90 more wit than an herb-woman that sells away all her sweet-herbs and nose-gays, and keeps a stinking breath for her own pottage.

SORDIDO
Let me be at the choosing of your beloved
If you desire a woman of good parts.

WARD Thou shalt, sweet Sordido.

SORDIDO I have a plaguy guess. Let me alone to see what 95 she is; if I but look upon her cony-way, I know all the faults to a hair that you may refuse her for.

WARD
Dost thou? I prithee, let me hear 'em, Sordido.

SORDIDO
Well, mark 'em then. I have 'em all in rhyme.
The wife your guard'ner ought to tender
100 Should be pretty, straight, and slender;
Her hair not short, her foot not long,
Her hand not huge, nor too, too loud her tongue;
No pearl in eye, nor ruby in her nose,
No burn or cut but what the catalogue shows.
105 She must have teeth, and that no black ones,
And kiss most sweet when she does smack once.
Her skin must be both white and plumped,
Her body straight, not hopper-rumped,
Or wriggle sideways like a crab.
110 She must be neither slut nor drab,
Nor go too splay-foot with her shoes
To make her smock lick up the dews.
And two things more which I forgot to tell ye:
She neither must have bump in back nor belly.
115 These are the faults that will not make her pass.

WARD
And if I spy not these, I am a rank ass.

SORDIDO
Nay, more: by right, sir, you should see her naked,
For that's the ancient order.

WARD See her naked?
That were good sport, i'faith. I'll have the books 120 turned over,
And if I find 'her naked' on record
She shall not have a rag on. But stay, stay:
How if she should desire to see me so too?
I were in a sweet case then. Such foul skin!

SORDIDO
But you've a clean shirt, and that makes amends, sir.
125

72 After at the rate of
74 let... vein Literally, 'opened the correct vein to draw off blood tainted with his folly', as in the medical practice of letting blood. Quibbling on 'in the right vein' as colloquial for 'in the right way'.
78 the fool i.e. the position of being a fool
79 the world's end i.e. as far as it is possible to go
79.2 battledore racket
80 business... shuttlecock Both words have sexual innuendos.
82-3 There's... battledores Further sexual innuendos: another thing implies another (shuttle)cock; kept up is 'kept going' or 'kept erect'; the pair of battledores may imply the testes.
86 list please
88-9 I'll...licence Refers to asking the bans of marriage in church, without which a special licence was needed.

89, 100 guard'ner The form allows a pun on gardener that might be taken up in the references to herbs and pottage, and in tender (100) as 'tend'.
91-2 keeps... pottage Draws on proverbial 'keep your breath to cool your pottage' (thick soup); i.e. save your breath ((a) words (b) exhalation) for your own use.
94 parts (a) qualities (b) parts of the body
95 a plaguy (an intensifier, as in 'one hell of a')
96 cony-way i.e. rabbit burrow. Cony puns on con 'cunt', and also allows 'to a hair' ('exactly') to allude to pubic hair and pun on hare. The first printed edition of 1657 omits the obscenity, printing a long dash for cony.
100-16 The... pass Debases the medieval convention of the catalogue of female beauty.

104 pearl... ruby 'Cataract' and 'red pimple' respectively, with ironic reference to the jewels.
105 burn (probably alluding to venereal disease) cut (quibbling on the sense 'cunt')
107 smack kiss loudly
109 hopper-rumped (perhaps suggesting the jerky movements of the grain-hopper of the time as well as its conical shape)
112 go... with walk...in
115 belly Its bump might be of fatness or pregnancy.
118 see her naked Sir Thomas More related an imaginary custom whereby either partner of a couple entering a marriage-mat could be exhibited naked (Utopia, 1516).
124 case (a) situation (b) costume

WARD
I will not see her naked for that trick though. Exit

SORDIDO
Then take her with all faults, with her clothes on;
And they may hide a number with a bum-roll.
[To Guardiano] Faith, choosing of a wench in a huge farthingale
130 Is like the buying of ware under a great penthouse.
What, with the deceit of one,
And the false light of th'other—mark my speeches—
He may have a diseased wench in's bed,
And rotten stuff in's breeches. Exit

GUARDIANO
It may take handsomely.

135 LIVIA I see small hindrance.
Enter Mother
How now, so soon returned?

GUARDIANO She's come.

LIVIA That's well.
Widow, come, come, I have a great quarrel to you.
Faith, I must chide you that you must be sent for!
You make yourself so strange, never come at us;
140 And yet so near a neighbour, and so unkind.
Troth, you're to blame. You cannot be more welcome
To any house in Florence, that I'll tell you.

MOTHER
My thanks must need acknowledge so much, madam.

LIVIA
145 How can you be so strange then? I sit here
Sometime whole days together without company
When business draws this gentleman from home,
And should be happy in society,
Which I so well affect, as that of yours.
I know you're alone too. Why should not we 150 Like two kind neighbours, then, supply the wants
Of one another, having tongue, discourse,
Experience in the world, and such kind helps
To laugh down time and meet age merrily?

MOTHER
155 Age, madam? You speak mirth: 'tis at my door,
But a long journey from your ladyship yet.

LIVIA
My faith, I'm nine-and-thirty, every stroke, wench;
And 'tis a general observation
'Mongst knights' wives or widows, we account
Ourselves then old when young men's eyes leave 160 looking at's.
'Tis a true rule amongst us, and ne'er failed yet

In any but in one that I remember.
Indeed she had a friend at nine-and-forty.
Marry, she paid well for him, and in th'end
He kept a quean or two with her own money,
That robbed her of her plate, and cut her throat. 165

MOTHER
She had her punishment in this world, madam;
And a fair warning to all other women
That they live chaste at fifty.

LIVIA Ay, or never, wench.
Come, now I have thy company I'll not part with't
Till after supper.

MOTHER Yes, I must crave pardon, madam. 170

LIVIA
I swear you shall stay supper. We have no strangers, woman;
None but my sojourners and I, this gentleman
And the young heir his ward. You know our company.

MOTHER
Some other time I will make bold with you, madam.

GUARDIANO
Nay, pray stay, widow.

LIVIA Faith, she shall not go. 175
Do you think I'll be forsworn?
[Guardiano sets out] table and chess

MOTHER 'Tis a great while
Till supper time; I'll take my leave then now, madam,
And come again i'th' evening, since your ladyship
Will have it so.

LIVIA I'th' evening? By my troth, wench,
I'll keep you while I have you. You have great business, sure, 180
To sit alone at home! I wonder strangely
What pleasure you take in't. Were't to me, now,
I should be ever at one neighbour's house
Or other all day long. Having no charge,
Or none to chide you if you go or stay, 185
Who may live merrier, ay, or more at heartsease?
Come, we'll to chess or draughts. There are an hundred tricks
To drive out time till supper, never fear't, wench.

MOTHER
I'll but make one step home, and return straight, madam.

LIVIA
190 Come, I'll not trust you. You use more excuses
To your kind friends than ever I knew any.

126 for that trick on that account (or 'at the cost of her playing that trick')

128 bum-roll cushion worn around the hips, over which the woman's skirt hung

129 farthingale framework of hoops worn from the waist to extend the skirt outwards

130 penthouse annex (without external doors or windows)

132 false deceptive

134 rotten . . . breeches (a) breeches of rotten fabric (b) the effects of venereal disease inside his breeches

135 take take effect

139 so strange so much a stranger

150 neighbours Livia's diction is condescendingly citizen-like.

162 friend lover

164 quean prostitute

165 plate gold and silver ware

167 a . . . women Probably alludes to the play A Warning for Fair Women, 1599.

172 sojourners visiting guests

176 forsworn (see 171)

181 strangely exceedingly

187 chess (a game associated with sexual and political intrigue)

What business can you have, if you be sure You've locked the doors?—and that being all you have,
 I know you're careful on't. One afternoon
 So much to spend here? Say I should entreat you now
 To lie a night or two, or a week, with me,
 Or leave your own house for a month together?
 It were a kindness that long neighbourhood
 And friendship might well hope to prevail in.
 Would you deny such a request? I'faith,
 Speak truth, and freely.

MOTHER I were then uncivil, madam.
 LIVIA
 Go too then, set your men. We'll have whole nights
 Of mirth together ere we be much older, wench.
 MOTHER [aside]
 As good now tell her then, for she will know't.
 I have always found her a most friendly lady.

LIVIA
 Why, widow, where's your mind?
 MOTHER Troth, e'en at home, madam.
 To tell you truth, I left a gentlewoman
 E'en sitting all alone, which is uncomfortable,
 Especially to young bloods.
 LIVIA Another excuse!
 MOTHER
 No; as I hope for health, madam, that's a truth.
 Please you to send and see.
 LIVIA What gentlewoman? Pish!
 MOTHER
 Wife to my son, indeed—but not known, madam,
 To any but yourself.
 LIVIA Now I beshrew you!
 Could you be so unkind to her and me
 To come and not bring her? Faith, 'tis not friendly.

MOTHER
 I feared to be too bold.
 LIVIA Too bold? O, what's become
 Of the true hearty love was wont to be
 'Mongst neighbours in old time?
 MOTHER And she's a stranger, madam.
 LIVIA
 The more should be her welcome. When is courtesy
 In better practice than when 'tis employed
 In entertaining strangers? I could chide, i'faith.
 Leave her behind, poor gentlewoman, alone too?
 Make some amends, and send for her betimes; go.

MOTHER
 Please you command one of your servants, madam.
 LIVIA
 Within there!

Enter Servant

SERVANT Madam.
 LIVIA Attend the gentlewoman. 225
 MOTHER
 It must be carried wondrous privately
 From my son's knowledge; he'll break out in storms
 else.—
 Hark you, sir.
 [She speaks apart to the Servant; then exit Servant]
 LIVIA [to Guardiano]
 Now comes in the heat of your part.
 GUARDIANO
 True, I know it, lady; and if I be out,
 May the Duke banish me from all employments,
 Wanton or serious. 230
 LIVIA So, have you sent, widow?
 MOTHER
 Yes, madam; he's almost at home by this.
 LIVIA
 And, faith, let me entreat you that henceforward
 All such unkind faults may be swept from friendship,
 Which does but dim the lustre; and think thus much: 235
 It is a wrong to me, that have ability
 To bid friends welcome, when you keep 'em from me.
 You cannot set greater dishonour near me,
 For bounty is the credit and the glory
 Of those that have enough. I see you're sorry,
 And the good 'mends is made by't. 240

Enter Bianca and Servant

MOTHER Here she's, madam.
 [Exit Servant]
 BIANCA [aside]
 I wonder how she comes to send for me now?
 LIVIA
 Gentlewoman, you're most welcome, trust me, y'are,
 As courtesy can make one, or respect
 Due to the presence of you.
 BIANCA I give you thanks, lady. 245
 LIVIA
 I heard you were alone, and 't had appeared
 An ill condition in me, though I knew you not Nor ever saw you—yet humanity
 Thinks every case her own—to have kept our company
 Here from you, and left you all solitary. 250
 I rather ventured upon boldness then
 As the least fault, and wished your presence here—
 A thing most happily motioned of that gentleman,
 Whom I request you, for his care and pity,
 To honour and reward with your acquaintance; 255
 A gentleman that ladies' rights stands for,

202 men chessmen
 208 uncomfortable cheerless
 223 betimes forthwith, speedily
 228 heat intense stage part Guardiano understands the theatrical sense

 229 be out forget my lines
 232 by this by now
 235 Which does i.e. the faults do
 241 'mends amends

247 condition characteristic
 248 humanity the humane in a person
 253 motioned of suggested by 256 stands (with a phallic quibble)

- That's his profession.
 BIANCA 'Tis a noble one,
 And honours my acquaintance.
 GUARDIANO All my intentions
 Are servants to such mistresses.
 BIANCA 'Tis your modesty,
 260 It seems, that makes your dèserts speak so low, sir.
 LIVIA
 Come, widow.
 [Livia and Mother sit to play at chess]
 [To Bianca] Look you, lady, here's our business.
 Are we not well employed, think you?—an old quarrel
 Between us that will never be at an end.
 BIANCA
 No, and methinks there's men enough to part you, lady.
 LIVIA
 265 Ho, but they set us on! Let us come off
 As well as we can, poor souls; men care no farther.
 I pray sit down, forsooth, if you have the patience
 To look on two weak and tedious gamesters.
 GUARDIANO
 Faith, madam, set these by till evening;
 270 You'll have enough on't then. The gentlewoman,
 Being a stranger, would take more delight
 To see your rooms and pictures.
 LIVIA Marry, good sir,
 And well remembered. I beseech you, show 'em her;
 That will beguile time well; pray heartily, do, sir;
 275 I'll do as much for you. Here, take these keys.
 Show her the monument too—and that's a thing
 Everyone sees not; you can witness that, widow.
 MOTHER
 And that's worth sight indeed, madam.
 BIANCA Kind lady,
 I fear I came to be a trouble to you—
 LIVIA
 O, nothing less, forsooth.
 280 BIANCA And to this courteous gentleman
 That wears a kindness in his breast so noble
 And bounteous to the welcome of a stranger.
 GUARDIANO
 If you but give acceptance to my service,
- You do the greatest grace and honour to me
 That courtesy can merit.
 BIANCA I were to blame else, 285
 And out of fashion much. I pray you, lead, sir.
 LIVIA
 After a game or two we're for you gentlefolks.
 [She moves at chess]
 GUARDIANO
 We wish no better seconds in society
 Than your discourses, madam, and your partner's there.
 MOTHER
 I thank your praise, I listened to you, sir; 290
 Though when you spoke there came a paltry rook
 Full in my way, and chokes up all my game.
Exeunt Guardiano and Bianca
 LIVIA
 Alas, poor widow, I shall be too hard for thee.
 MOTHER
 You're cunning at the game, I'll be sworn, madam.
 LIVIA
 It will be found so, ere I give you over. 295
 She that can place her man well—
 MOTHER As you do, madam.
 LIVIA
 As I shall, wench—can never lose her game.
 [Mother offers to move at chess]
 Nay, nay, the black king's mine.
 MOTHER Cry you mercy, madam.
 LIVIA
 And this my queen.
 MOTHER I see't now.
 [She moves at chess]
 LIVIA Here's a duke
 Will strike a sure stroke for the game anon. 300
 [She moves at chess]
 Your pawn cannot come back to relieve itself.
 MOTHER
 I know that, madam.
 [She moves at chess]
 LIVIA You play well the whilst.
 How she belies her skill! I hold two ducats
 I give you check and mate to your white king—

257 his profession i.e. what he asserts and/or practices

258 honours my acquaintance bestows honour on my being acquainted with
 him

intentions endeavours
 264 men (a) chessmen (between the players)
 (b) human men (who might separate fighters or make the women quarrel)

265 set us on (a) incite us to quarrel
 (b) sexually excite us come off (a) retire from battle (b) achieve orgasm

276 monument statue

280 nothing less not at all

284 grace and honour (with a glance at the rewards expected from the Duke)

286 out of fashion lacking in polite behaviour

287 we're for we'll join

288 seconds in society i.e. encouragement to our social intercourse

291 paltry despicable

rook (the chess-piece)

292, 297 game (with the secondary sense, unintended by the Mother, 'sexual intrigue')

298 the black king's mine With an emblematic suggestion that Livia is evil. Compare

'your white king . . . your saintish king' (304–5).

Cry you mercy beg your pardon

299 duke Another name for the rook or castle in chess, but also referring to the person of the Duke.

300 strike . . . game Alludes to (a) the chess-game (b) the Duke's intrigue (c) thrusting in the game of copulation.

301 Your . . . itself A rule of chess that also applies to Bianca's situation.

303 hold offer as a wager

304–5 I . . . there See note on the black king, 298.

BIANCA	Why should you seek, sir, To take away that you can never give?	LIVIA	I'll swear they do, wench. Enter Guardiano [below]
DUKE	But I give better in exchange: wealth, honour. She that is fortunate in a duke's favour Lights on a tree that bears all women's wishes. If your own mother saw you pluck fruit there, She would commend your wit and praise the time Of your nativity. Take hold of glory. Do not I know you've cast away your life Upon necessities, means merely doubtful To keep you in indifferent health and fashion— A thing I heard too lately, and soon pitied— And can you be so much your beauty's enemy To kiss away a month or two in wedlock And weep whole years in wants for ever after? Come, play the wife, wench, and provide for ever. Let storms come when they list, they find thee sheltered. Should any doubt arise, let nothing trouble thee. Put trust in our love for the managing Of all to thy heart's peace. We'll walk together, And show a thankful joy for both our fortunes. Exeunt Duke and Bianca from above	GUARDIANO [aside] I can but smile as often as I think on't. How prettily the poor fool was beguiled, How unexpectedly! It's a witty age. Never were finer snares for women's honesties Than are devised in these days; no spider's web Made of a daintier thread than are now practised To catch love's flesh-fly by the silver wing. Yet to prepare her stomach by degrees To Cupid's feast, because I saw 'twas queasy, I showed her naked pictures by the way: A bit to stay the appetite. Well, advancement, I venture hard to find thee. If thou com'st With a greater title set upon thy crest, I'll take that first cross patiently, and wait Until some other comes greater than that. I'll endure all.	395 400 405
LIVIA	Did I not say my duke would fetch you over, widow?	LIVIA	The game's e'en at the best now. You may see, widow, How all things draw to an end.
MOTHER	I think you spoke in earnest when you said it, madam.	MOTHER	E'en so do I, madam.
LIVIA	And my black king makes all the haste he can, too.	LIVIA	I pray take some of your neighbours along with you.
MOTHER	Well, madam, we may meet with him in time yet.	MOTHER	They must be those are almost twice your years then, If they be chose fit matches for my time, madam.
LIVIA	I have given thee blind mate twice.	LIVIA	Has not my duke bestirred himself?
MOTHER	You may see, madam, My eyes begin to fail.	MOTHER	Yes, faith, madam; He's done me all the mischief in this game.
		LIVIA	He's showed himself in's kind.
		MOTHER	'In's kind' call you it? I may swear that.

370-1 a... there Recalls the serpent that induced Eve to eat the forbidden fruit of the Tree of Knowledge, Genesis, 3:1-6.

372-3 praise... nativity (as an auspicious time to be born)

375 merely entirely

381 play the wife i.e. (a) play the housewife, don't squander beauty but provide for ever (b) put yourself in the role of my wife (c) don't take being Leantio's wife too seriously, play the game

387-9 Did...too As an allusion to the betrayal of Bianca, Livia's duke is Hippolito, and her black king is the Duke.

387 fetch you over get the better of you
390 meet with (a) encounter in battle; or (b) be even with

391 blind mate Technically, a checkmate that the attacker claims as merely a check. Here it is the Mother who is blind, in the senses of being poorer at chess, oblivious to Bianca's entrapment, and, as she replies, literally poor-sighted. But Livia too has not actually seen the two traps sprung above that she has engineered. Blind also suggests 'secret, furtive' and implies spiritual blindness.

394 fool (more a term of pity than contempt)

399 flesh-fly blow-fly (specified for the sexual connotation of flesh)

400 stomach appetite

401 queasy (a) nauseous (b) fastidious

403 bit morsel

stay sustain, strengthen (with ironic reference to the usual sense in this situation, 'hold back, appease')

405 title inscription (the bearer's motto of his worth). The title in mind is presumably that of pandar.

crest device above the shield and helmet in a heraldic coat of arms. There is also probably a reference to cuckold's horns: Guardiano has abetted adultery.

406-8 I'll...all Cross and endure are ironic; Hippolito is pleased with himself.

406 cross thwarting (or perhaps a casually blasphemous use of the sense 'affliction borne for Christ's sake')

407 some other i.e. some other opportunity to gain a title

409-10 The...end (with a secondary allusion to the Duke and Bianca's game, reaching its sexual climax)

410 E'en so do I (referring to the approach of death)

411 I...you The imputation is apparently that the neighbours can be better spared from life than the Mother; numbers might increase her chance of survival.

413 time age

414 bestirred (with a sexual innuendo)

416 in's kind according to his nature (but he has been unkind to the Mother, hence her query)

LIVIA Yes, faith, and keep your oath.
 GUARDIANO Hark, list, there's somebody coming down; 'tis she.
Enter Bianca
 BIANCA [aside]
 420 Now bless me from a blasting! I saw that now Fearful for any woman's eye to look on.
 Infectious mists and mildews hang at's eyes.
 The weather of a doomsday dwells upon him.
 Yet since mine honour's leprous, why should I
 Preserve that fair that caused the leprosy?
 425 Come, poison all at once. [Aside to Guardiano] Thou in whose baseness
 The bane of virtue broods, I'm bound in soul
 Eternally to curse thy smooth-browed treachery,
 That wore the fair veil of a friendly welcome,
 And I a stranger. Think upon't, 'tis worth it.
 430 Murders piled up upon a guilty spirit
 At his last breath will not lie heavier
 Than this betraying act upon thy conscience.
 Beware of off'ring the first-fruits to sin.
 His weight is deadly who commits with strumpets
 435 After they have been abased and made for use;
 If they offend to th' death, as wise men know,
 How much more they then that first made 'em so?
 I give thee that to feed on. I'm made bold now,
 I thank thy treachery. Sin and I'm acquainted,
 440 No couple greater; and I'm like that great one
 Who, making politic use of a base villain,
 "He likes the treason well, but hates the traitor."
 So I hate thee, slave.
 GUARDIANO [aside] Well, so the Duke love me,
 I fare not much amiss then. Two great feasts
 445 Do seldom come together in one day;
 We must not look for 'em.
 BIANCA What, at it still, mother?
 MOTHER You see we sit by't. Are you so soon returned?
 LIVIA [aside] So lively and so cheerful: a good sign that.
 MOTHER You have not seen all since, sure?
 BIANCA That have I, mother,
 450 The monument and all. I'm so beholding

To this kind, honest, courteous gentleman
 You'd little think it, mother; showed me all,
 Had me from place to place, so fashionably.
 The kindness of some people, how't exceeds!
 Faith, I have seen that I little thought to see 455 I'th' morning when I rose.
 MOTHER Nay, so I told you
 Before you saw't, it would prove worth your sight.—
 I give you great thanks for my daughter, sir,
 And all your kindness towards her.
 GUARDIANO O good widow,
 Much good may't do her!—[Aside] forty weeks hence,
 i'faith.
 460 Enter Servant
 LIVIA Now, sir.
 SERVANT May't please you, madam, to walk in?
 Supper's upon the table.
 LIVIA Yes, we come. [Exit Servant]
 Will't please you, gentlewoman?
 BIANCA Thanks, virtuous lady.
 [Aside to her] You're a damned bawd. [Aloud] I'll follow you, forsooth.
 Pray take my mother in. [Aside to her] An old ass go with you.
 465 [Aloud] This gentleman and I vow not to part.
 LIVIA Then get you both before.
 BIANCA [aside] There lies his art.
Exeunt Guardiano and Bianca
 LIVIA Widow, I'll follow you. [Exit Mother]
 Is't so: 'damned bawd'?
 Are you so bitter? 'Tis but want of use.
 Her tender modesty is sea-sick a little,
 470 Being not accustomed to the breaking billow
 Of woman's wavering faith, blown with temptations.
 'Tis but a qualm of honour; 'twill away;
 A little bitter for the time, but lasts not.
 Sin tastes at the first draught like wormwood-water,
 475 But, drunk again, 'tis nectar ever after. Exit
Finis Actus Secundus

419 bless me i.e. may I be protected
a blasting (a) calumny, infamy, ruin
 (b) blighting by the Infectious mists and mildews of 421. Perhaps also 'the curse of heaven' (compare doomsday, 422).
 421 mists (thought to carry disease)
 428 veil (probably punning on vail, salutation by doffing the hat)
 433 first-fruits (alluding to Bianca herself, as newly married) to sin (rather than to God, to whom first-fruits were customarily offered)

436 they (i.e. those who consort with strumpets)
 437 'em (i.e. the strumpets themselves)
 440 greater more intimate and friendly (also anticipating great, 'powerful') that great one (probably referring to Machiavelli)
 442 He...traitor Italicized in the original edition, to mark the line's function as a sententia.
 443 so if
 446 look for expect

449 since already (OED, adv., 1c; sole example dated c.1553)
 453 Had (quibbling on sexual possession)
 467 There lies his art that's what he's skilful at (i.e. leading Bianca forward or astray)
 469 want of use lack of practice
 472 wavering...temptations (wordplay on wave and tempests)
 475 wormwood-water (a drink prepared with the proverbially bitter herb wormwood)

- 3.1 Incipit Actus Tertius
Enter Mother
- MOTHER
I would my son would either keep at home
Or I were in my grave.
She was but one day abroad, but ever since
She's grown so cutted there's no speaking to her.
5 Whether the sight of great cheer at my lady's
And such mean fare at home work discontent in her,
I know not; but I'm sure she's strangely altered.
I'll ne'er keep daughter-in-law i'th' house with me Again if I had an hundred. When read I of any 10 That agreed long together, but she and her mother
Fell out in the first quarter?—nay, sometime
A grudging of a scolding the first week, by'r Lady.
So takes the new disease, methinks, in my house.
I'm weary of my part. There's nothing likes her.
15 I know not how to please her here o' late.
Enter Bianca
And here she comes.
- BIANCA This is the strangest house
For all defects as ever gentlewoman
Made shift withal to pass away her love in.
Why is there not a cushion-cloth of drawn-work,
20 Or some fair cut-work pinned up in my bedchamber,
A silver and gilt casting-bottle hung by't?
Nay, since I am content to be so kind to you
To spare you for a silver basin and ewer,
Which one of my fashion looks for of duty:
25 She's never offered under where she sleeps.
- MOTHER
She talks of things here my whole state's not worth.
- BIANCA
Never a green silk quilt is there i'th' house, mother,
To cast upon my bed?
- MOTHER No, by troth, is there,
Nor orange tawny neither.
- BIANCA Here's a house
30 For a young gentlewoman to be got with child in!
- MOTHER
Yes, simple though you make it, there has been three
Got in a year in't, since you move me to't,
And all as sweet-faced children and as lovely
As you'll be mother of. I will not spare you:
- What, cannot children be begot, think you,
Without gilt casting-bottles; yes, and as sweet ones?
The miller's daughter brings forth as white boys
As she that bathes herself with milk and bean-flour.
'Tis an old saying: one may keep good cheer
In a mean house; so may love affect 40 After the rate of princes in a cottage.
- BIANCA
Troth, you speak wondrous well for your old house
here.
'Twill shortly fall down at your feet to thank you,
Or stoop when you go to bed, like a good child,
To ask you blessing. Must I live in want
45 Because my fortune matched me with your son?
Wives do not give away themselves to husbands
To the end to be quite cast away; they look
To be the better used and tendered, rather,
Higher respected, and maintained the richer.
50 They're well rewarded else for the free gift
Of their whole life to a husband! I ask less now
Than what I had at home when I was a maid,
And at my father's house kept short of that
Which a wife knows she must have—nay, and will,
55 Will, mother, if she be not a fool born.
And report went of me that I could wrangle
For what I wanted when I was two hours old;
And by that copy this land still I hold.
You hear me, mother. Exit
- MOTHER Ay, too plain, methinks;
60 And were I somewhat deafer when you spake,
'Twere ne'er a whit the worse for my quietness.
'Tis the most sudden'st, strangest alteration,
And the most subtlest, that e'er wit at threescore
Was puzzled to find out. I know no cause for't, but 65 She's no more like the gentlewoman at first
Than I am like her that ne'er lay with man yet;
And she's a very young thing, where'er she be.
When she first lighted here, I told her then How mean she should find all things. She was 70 pleased, forsooth,
None better. I laid open all defects to her;
She was contented still. But the devil's in her,
Nothing contents her, now. Tonight my son
Promised to be at home. Would he were come once,

3.1.4 cutted curt
12 grudging (as of an approaching disease, 13). The sense 'grumbling', though it doesn't fit the sentence, anticipates scolding.
13 takes catches the new disease (vogue term for any undiagnosed fever)
14 likes pleases
16–25 This... sleeps There is an under-current of bawdy carried in Made shift
(‘contrived for sexual purposes’), drawn (‘sexually used or drained’), cut-work
(‘cunt’), casting-bottle (‘penis’).

18 Made shift managed
19 cushion-cloth of drawn-work ornamented cushion cover. The patterns of drawn-work were made by drawing out particular threads.
20 cut-work embroidered lace
21 casting-bottle bottle for sprinkling perfume
23 To spare you for not to expect from you
24 looks for of duty expects as due to her
25 under less
26 state's estate's
29 orange tawny brownish orange (a fashionable, courtly colour)

37 white (a) dear, darling (b) the colour of flour and milk 38 bathes... bean-flour (an epitome of luxury)
41 After the rate of on the same scale as 49 tendered cherished
59 copy transcribed document establishing security of tenure from a landlord.
Bianca sees the verbal report of her success in wrangling as a document establishing her right to so continue.
62 quietness (a) peace of mind (b) enjoyment of silence
74 once finally

75 For I'm weary of my charge, and life too.
 She'd be served all in silver, by her good will,
 By night and day. She hates the name of pewterer
 More than sick men the noise, or diseased bones
 That quake at fall o'th' hammer, seeming to have 80 A fellow feeling with't at every blow.
 What course shall I think on? She frets me so.
 [She stands apart.] Enter Leantio
 LEANTIO
 How near am I now to a happiness
 That earth exceeds not, not another like it!
 The treasures of the deep are not so precious
 85 As are the concealed comforts of a man
 Locked up in woman's love. I scent the air
 Of blessings when I come but near the house.
 What a delicious breath marriage sends forth!
 The violet bed's not sweeter. Honest wedlock
 90 Is like a banqueting-house built in a garden
 On which the spring's chaste flowers take delight
 To cast their modest odours; when base lust
 With all her powders, paintings, and best pride
 Is but a fair house built by a ditch side.
 95 When I behold a glorious dangerous strumpet
 Sparkling in beauty, and destruction too,
 Both at a twinkling, I do liken straight
 Her beautified body to a goodly temple
 That's built on vaults where carcasses lie rotting;
 100 And so by little and little I shrink back again,
 And quench desire with a cool meditation.
 And I'm as well, methinks.
 [Enter Bianca]
 Now for a welcome
 Able to draw men's envies upon man;
 A kiss now that will hang upon my lip
 105 As sweet as morning dew upon a rose,
 And full as long. After a five-days' fast
 She'll be so greedy now, and cling about me,
 I take care how I shall be rid of her.
 And here't begins.

BIANCA O, sir, you're welcome home.
 MOTHER [aside]
 O, is he come? I'm glad on't.

110 LEANTIO [aside] Is that all?
 Why this?—as dreadful now as sudden death
 To some rich man that flatters all his sins

With promise of repentance when he's old,
 And dies in the midway before he comes to't.—
 Sure you're not well, Bianca! How dost, prithee?
 115 BIANCA
 I have been better than I am at this time.
 LEANTIO
 Alas, I thought so.
 BIANCA Nay, I have been worse, too,
 Than now you see me, sir.
 LEANTIO I'm glad thou mend'st yet;
 I feel my heart mend too. How came it to thee?
 Has anything disliked thee in my absence?
 120 BIANCA
 No, certain; I have had the best content
 That Florence can afford.
 LEANTIO Thou makest the best on't.—
 Speak, mother, what's the cause? You must needs know.
 MOTHER
 Troth, I know none, son; let her speak herself—
 [Aside] Unless it be the same gave Lucifer
 125 A tumbling cast; that's pride.
 BIANCA
 Methinks this house stands nothing to my mind.
 I'd have some pleasant lodging i'th' high street, sir;
 Or if 'twere near the court, sir, that were much better.
 'Tis a sweet recreation for a gentlewoman
 130 To stand in a bay window and see gallants.
 LEANTIO
 Now I have another temper, a mere stranger
 To that of yours, it seems. I should delight
 To see none but yourself.
 BIANCA I praise not that.
 Too fond is as unseemly as too churlish.
 135 I would not have a husband of that proneness
 To kiss me before company for a world.
 Beside, 'tis tedious to see one thing still, sir,
 Be it the best that ever heart affected.
 Nay, were't yourself, whose love had power, you
 know,
 140 To bring me from my friends, I would not stand thus
 And gaze upon you always; troth, I could not, sir.
 As good be blind and have no use of sight
 As look on one thing still. What's the eye's treasure
 But change of objects? You are learned, sir, 145

- | | | |
|--|--|--|
| 77 pewterer Cheaper vessels were made of pewter. | pride (a) ostentatious finery (b) sexual fervour (c) sinful self-regard | endures longer than most kisses, and might be thought to linger on the rose. |
| 78 the noise (of the pewterer's hammering) | 94 a fair...side Houses stood close by London's City Ditch, virtually an open sewer. | 108 take care worry |
| diseased i.e. brittle and wasted with venereal disease | 98–9 a...rotting One of many contemporary passages drawn from Matthew, 23:27, where Christ compares the hypocritical scribes and Pharisees to 'whited tombs, which appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones and all filthiness'. | 120 disliked displeased |
| 79 quake i.e. (a) tremble in fear (b) vibrate (anticipating the emotional and physical fellow feeling, 80) | 106 full as long Dew soon evaporates, but | 126 tumbling cast fall, throw (as in wrestling). With a sexual equivocation as applied to Bianca. |
| 90 banqueting-house garden house where snacks and delicacies were eaten (ironically, often a place of sexual assignation) | | 127 nothing to my mind not at all as I want it |
| 92 when whereas | | 135 churlish niggardly (also drawing on the literal meaning, 'peasant-like') |
| 93 powders, paintings i.e. cosmetics | | 136 proneness (a) inclination (b) sexual fervour |

Act 3 Scene 1

Women beware Women.

And know I speak not ill. 'Tis full as virtuous
 For woman's eye to look on several men
 As for her heart, sir, to be fixed on one.

LEANTIO
 Now thou com'st home to me. A kiss for that word.

BIANCA
 150 No matter for a kiss, sir; let it pass.
 'Tis but a toy; we'll not so much as mind it.
 Let's talk of other business, and forget it.
 What news now of the pirates? Any stirring?
 Prithee, discourse a little.

MOTHER [aside] I am glad he's here yet
 155 To see her tricks himself. I had lied monstrously
 If I had told 'em first.

LEANTIO [to Bianca] Speak, what's the humour, sweet,
 You make your lip so strange? This was not wont.

BIANCA
 Is there no kindness betwixt man and wife
 Unless they make a pigeon-house of friendship,
 160 And be still billing? 'Tis the idlest fondness
 That ever was invented, and 'tis pity
 It's grown a fashion for poor gentlewomen.
 There's many a disease kissed in a year by't,
 And a French curtsey made to't. Alas, sir,
 165 Think of the world, how we shall live. Grow serious;
 We have been married a whole fortnight now.

LEANTIO
 How, a whole fortnight? Why, is that so long?

BIANCA
 'Tis time to leave off dalliance: 'tis a doctrine
 Of your own teaching, if you be remembered,
 And I was bound to obey it.

MOTHER [aside] Here's one fits him!
 170 This was well caught, i'faith, son, like a fellow
 That rids another country of a plague,
 And brings it home with him to his own house.
Knock within
 Who knocks?

LEANTIO Who's there now? Withdraw you, Bianca.
 175 Thou art a gem no stranger's eye must see,
 Howe'er thou please now to look dull on me.
Exit Bianca
Enter Messenger
 You're welcome, sir. To whom your business, pray?

MESSENGER
 To one I see not here now.

LEANTIO Who should that be, sir?

MESSENGER
 A young gentlewoman I was sent to.

180 LEANTIO A young gentlewoman?

MESSENGER
 The man that sent me cannot be mistook.

LEANTIO Why, who is't sent you, sir?

MESSENGER The Duke.

LEANTIO The Duke? 185

MESSENGER Yes; he entreats her company at a banquet
 At Lady Livia's house.

LEANTIO Troth, shall I tell you, sir,
 It is the most erroneous business
 That e'er your honest pains was abused with.
 I pray forgive me if I smile a little;
 190 I cannot choose, i'faith, sir, at an error
 So comical as this.—I mean no harm though.—
 His grace has been most wondrous ill informed.
 Pray so return it, sir. What should her name be?

MESSENGER
 That I shall tell you straight, too: Bianca Capella. 195

LEANTIO How, sir, Bianca? What do you call th'other?

MESSENGER Capella. Sir, it seems you know no such then?

LEANTIO Who should this be? I never heard o'th' name.

MESSENGER Then 'tis a sure mistake.

LEANTIO What if you enquired
 200 In the next street, sir? I saw gallants there,
 In the new houses that are built of late.
 Ten to one, there you find her.

MESSENGER Nay, no matter.
 I will return the mistake, and seek no further.

LEANTIO Use your own will and pleasure, sir; you're welcome.
Exit Messenger
 205 What shall I think of first? Come forth, Bianca;
 Thou art betrayed, I fear me.
Enter Bianca
 Betrayed? How, sir?

BIANCA The Duke knows thee—

LEANTIO Knows me! How know you that, sir?

BIANCA Has got thy name.

LEANTIO Ay, and my good name too;

154 yet i.e. despite his discomfiture
 156 humour whim
 160 idlest most foolish
 fondness (a) silliness, timidity (b) affection 164 French curtsey (alluding to the supposed elaborate manners of the French, and to syphilis, the 'French disease')
 170 fits him punishes him fittingly 184 be mistook make a mistake (and 'be misrecognized')
 203 mistake i.e. allegation of a mistake
 207 knows knows of (but in Bianca's reply, 'knows carnally')
 208 good name reputation

That's worse o'th' twain.
 LEANTIO How comes this work about?
 BIANCA How should the Duke know me? Can you guess,
 210 mother?
 MOTHER Not I, with all my wits. Sure we kept house close.
 LEANTIO Kept close? Not all the locks in Italy
 Can keep you women so. You have been gadding,
 And ventured out at twilight to th' court green 215 yonder,
 And met the gallant bowlers coming home—
 Without your masks, too, both of you, I'll be hanged
 else.
 Thou hast been seen, Bianca, by some stranger;
 Never excuse it.
 BIANCA I'll not seek the way, sir.
 Do you think you've married me to mew me up 220 Not to be seen? What would you make of me?
 LEANTIO A good wife, nothing else.
 BIANCA Why, so are some
 That are seen every day, else the devil take 'em.
 LEANTIO No more then; I believe all virtuous in thee
 Without an argument. 'Twas but thy hard chance 225 To be seen somewhere; there lies all the mischief.
 But I have devised a riddance.
 MOTHER Now I can tell you, son,
 The time and place.
 LEANTIO When? Where?
 MOTHER What wits have I!
 When you last took your leave, if you remember,
 You left us both at window.
 LEANTIO Right, I know that.
 MOTHER And not the third part of an hour after,
 230 The Duke passed by in a great solemnity
 To St Mark's Temple; and, to my apprehension,
 He looked up twice to th' window.
 LEANTIO O, there quickened
 The mischief of this hour!
 BIANCA [aside] If you call't mischief;
 235 It is a thing I fear I am conceived with.
 LEANTIO [to Mother]
 Looked he up twice, and could you take no warning?

MOTHER Why, once may do as much harm, son, as a thousand.
 Do not you know one spark has fired an house
 As well as a whole furnace?
 LEANTIO My heart flames for't.
 Yet let's be wise, and keep all smothered closely. 240
 I have bethought a means. Is the door fast?
 MOTHER I locked it myself after him.
 LEANTIO You know, mother,
 At the end of the dark parlour there's a place
 So artificially contrived for a conveyance
 No search could ever find it. When my father 245
 Kept in for manslaughter, it was his sanctuary.
 There will I lock my life's best treasure up,
 Bianca.
 BIANCA Would you keep me closer yet?
 Have you the conscience? You're best e'en choke me up, sir!
 You make me fearful of your health and wits, 250
 You cleave to such wild courses. What's the matter?
 LEANTIO Why, are you so insensible of your danger
 To ask that now? The Duke himself has sent for you
 To Lady Livia's, to a banquet, forsooth.
 BIANCA Now I beshrew you heartily! Has he so, 255
 And you the man would never yet vouchsafe
 To tell me on't till now? You show your loyalty
 And honesty at once. And so, farewell, sir.
 LEANTIO Bianca, whither now?
 BIANCA Why, to the Duke, sir.
 You say he sent for me.
 LEANTIO But thou dost not mean 260
 To go, I hope.
 BIANCA No: I shall prove unmannerly,
 Rude, and uncivil, mad, and imitate you.
 Come, mother, come. Follow his humour no longer.
 We shall be all executed for treason shortly.
 MOTHER Not I, i'faith; I'll first obey the Duke, 265
 And taste of a good banquet; I'm of thy mind.
 I'll step but up and fetch two handkerchiefs

211 kept house close remained closely indoors

213 gadding wandering at large

215 gallant bowlers Bowling was a pastime for 'gallants'.

216 masks (worn by upper-class English women at entertainments, and by Italian women in public more generally)

219 mew coop

232 apprehension notice, knowledge

233 quickened Leantio uses metaphorically ('came to life'); Bianca takes literally ('became pregnant')

243 parlour side room, inner room

244 artificially skillfully for a conveyance (a) for an underhand dealing (b) as a secret passage

246 Kept in remained indoors for i.e. because of committing

249 You're... up you may as well suffocate me

254 banquet (either a large meal or a spread of sweetmeats and delicacies)

263 Follow his humour go along with his odd state of mind

267 step but up just go upstairs

- To pocket up some sweetmeats, and o'ertake thee. Exit
- BIANCA [aside]
Why, here's an old wench would trot into a bawd
now,
270 For some dry sucket or a colt in marzipan. Exit
- LEANTIO
O thou the ripe time of man's misery, wedlock;
When all his thoughts, like overladen trees,
Crack with the fruits they bear, in cares, in jealousies.
O, that's a fruit that ripens hastily
275 After 'tis knit to marriage. It begins,
As soon as the sun shines upon the bride,
A little to show colour. Blessèd powers,
Whence comes this alteration? The distractions,
The fears and doubts it brings are numberless,
280 And yet the cause I know not. What a peace
Has he that never marries! If he knew
The benefit he enjoyed, or had the fortune
To come and speak with me, he should know then
The infinite wealth he had, and discern rightly 285 The greatness of his treasure by my loss.
Nay, what a quietness has he 'bove mine
That wears his youth out in a strumpet's arms,
And never spends more care upon a woman
Than at the time of lust; but walks away,
290 And if he find her dead at his return
His pity is soon done: he breaks a sigh
In many parts, and gives her but a piece on't.
But all the fears, shames, jealousies, costs, and troubles,
And still-renewed cares of a marriage bed 295 Live in the issue when the wife is dead.
Enter Messenger
- MESSENGER
A good perfection to your thoughts.
- LEANTIO The news, sir?
- MESSENGER
Though you were pleased of late to pin an error on
me,
You must not shift another in your stead too:
The Duke has sent me for you.
- LEANTIO How, for me, sir?
[Aside] I see then 'tis my theft. We're both betrayed. 300
Well, I'm not the first has stol'n away a maid;
My countrymen have used it.—I'll along with you, sir.
Exeunt
- A banquet prepared. Enter Guardiano and Ward* 3.2
- GUARDIANO
Take you especial note of such a gentlewoman.
She's here on purpose. I have invited her,
Her father, and her uncle to this banquet.
Mark her behaviour well; it does concern you;
And what her good parts are, as far as time 5
And place can modestly require a knowledge of,
Shall be laid open to your understanding.
You know I'm both your guardian and your uncle:
My care of you is double, ward and nephew,
And I'll express it here.
- WARD Faith, I should know her 10
Now by her mark among a thousand women.
A little, pretty, deft, and tidy thing, you say.
- GUARDIANO Right.
- WARD
With a lusty sprouting sprig in her hair.
- GUARDIANO
Thou goest the right way still. Take one mark more: 15
Thou shalt ne'er find her hand out of her uncle's,
Or else his out of hers, if she be near him.
The love of kindred never yet stuck closer Than theirs to one another. He that weds her Marries her uncle's heart too.
Cornetts [sound within]
- WARD Say you so, sir? 20
Then I'll be asked i'th' church to both of them.
- GUARDIANO
Fall back; here comes the Duke.
- WARD He brings a gentlewoman:
I should fall forward rather.
Enter Duke, Bianca, Fabritio, Hippolito, Livia, Mother, Isabella, and attendants
- DUKE Come, Bianca:
Of purpose sent into the world to show

268 o'ertake catch up with

269 into into being

270 dry sucket (sweetmeat made by allowing rosewater-flavoured syrup to solidify around fruit)

in made out of

marzipan sweet confection of ground almonds (pronounced as two syllables)275 knit joined together (also suggesting the forming or setting of fruit)288 spends (with a quibble on emission of semen)

294 still-renewed ever-renewed

296 perfection completion, outcome

298 shift...stead (a) substitute another person for you (b) contrive another trick to your advantage.

300 'tis my theft Leantio thinks Bianca's family has caught up with him by way of the Duke.

302 used often done

3.2.0.1 prepared i.e. set out on the stage

6 require search for of them11 mark characteristic feature. Mark and thing (12) quibble on 'vulva', anticipating 13.14 lusty (a) large (b) vigorous(ly) (c) lustful(ly)sprig (a) sprig-like ornament (b) rod (phallic; ironically anticipating 15-20)

hair (with a suggestion of 'pubic hair')

21 asked (as at 2.2.88-9)

22 Fall back make way. Deliberately or stupidly misunderstood by the Ward in the literal sense.a gentlewoman Probably refers to Isabella (compare 1-3), but the Ward might have seen the Duke entering with Bianca.

23 fall forward (in sexual embrace)

23.2 Isabella Livia might be looking after the Mother and Isabella; but, if the list of names does not reflect theatrical practice, Isabella would more plausibly appear with Fabritio and Hippolito.

25 Perfection once in woman; I'll believe Henceforward they have every one a soul too,
'Gainst all the uncourteous opinions
That man's uncivil rudeness ever held of 'em.
Glory of Florence, light into mine arms!
Enter Leantio

BIANCA
30 Yon comes a grudging man will chide you, sir.
The storm is now in's heart, and would get nearer
And fall here if it durst; it pours down yonder.

DUKE
If that be he, the weather shall soon clear.
List, and I'll tell thee how.
[He whispers in her ear]

LEANTIO [aside] A-kissing too?
35 I see 'tis plain lust now, adultery boldened.
What will it prove anon when 'tis stuffed full
Of wine and sweetmeats, being so impudent fasting?

DUKE
We have heard of your good parts, sir, which we honour
With our embrace and love.
[Leantio kneels]

40 Is not the captainship
Of Ruinse citadel, since the late deceased,
Supplied by any yet?

GENTLEMAN By none, my lord.

DUKE [to Leantio]
Take it, the place is yours then; and as faithfulness
And desert grows, our favour shall grow with't.
Rise now the captain of our fort at Ruinse.

LEANTIO [rising]
45 The service of whole life give your grace thanks.

DUKE
Come, sit, Bianca.
[They sit. Leantio stands apart]

LEANTIO [aside] This is some good yet,
And more than e'er I looked for. A fine bit
To stay a cuckold's stomach! All preferment
That springs from sin and lust, it shoots up quickly,
50 As gardeners' crops do in the rotten'st grounds.
So is all means raised from base prostitution
E'en like a sallet growing upon a dunghill.
I'm like a thing that never was yet heard of:
Half merry and half mad, much like a fellow
55 That eats his meat with a good appetite,

And wears a plague-sore that would fright a country;
Or rather like the barren, hardened ass
That feeds on thistles till he bleeds again;
And such is the condition of my misery.

LIVIA
Is that your son, widow?
MOTHER Yes; did your ladyship 60
Never know that till now?
LIVIA No, trust me, did I;
[Aside] Nor ever truly felt the power of love
And pity to a man till now I knew him.
I have enough to buy me my desires,
And yet to spare; that's one good comfort. [To Leantio]
Hark you! 65
Pray let me speak with you, sir, before you go.

LEANTIO
With me, lady? You shall; I am at your service.—
What will she say now, trow? More goodness yet?

WARD
I see her now, I'm sure. The ape's so little
I shall scarce feel her. I have seen almost 70
As tall as she sold in the fair for tenpence.
See how she simpers it, as if marmalade Would not melt in her mouth. She might have the kindness, i'faith,
To send me a gilded bull from her own trencher,
A ram, a goat, or somewhat to be nibbling. 75
These women, when they come to sweet things once
They forget all their friends, they grow so greedy—
Nay, oftentimes their husbands.

DUKE Here's a health now, gallants,
To the best beauty at this day in Florence.

BIANCA
80 Whoe'er she be, she shall not go unpledged, sir.

DUKE
Nay, you're excused for this.

BIANCA Who, I, my lord?

DUKE
Yes, by the law of Bacchus. Plead your benefit;
You are not bound to pledge your own health, lady.

BIANCA
That's a good way, my lord, to keep me dry.

DUKE
Nay, then I will not offend Venus so much. 85
Let Bacchus seek his 'mends in another court.
Here's to thyself, Bianca.

26 they i.e. women. The view that women had no souls remained current in misogynist rhetoric.

37 impudent shameless

40 Ruinse Probably an Anglicization of 'Ruinat', a place near a fort on the walls of Florence whose name means 'ruinous'.

41 Supplied filled

47 bit morsel

51 means (a) opportunity (b) wealth (with a suggestion of 'all that is lowly')

52 sallet salad vegetable

55 meat food

57-8 the...again (with a glance at the proverb 'the ass loaded with gold still eats thistles')

57 barren poor, useless, stupid

71 sold...tenpence (referring to either apes or dolls)

72 marmalade jam (not necessarily of citrus fruits)

74 gilded bull One of the marzipan shapes. The bull, ram, and goat all suggest lechery.

trencher wooden plate

77-8 They...husbands The Duke's health (78-9) affirms the relevance to Bianca.

77 friends relatives

82 Plead your benefit Usually refers to the clergy's or peerage's benefits of exemption.

85 Venus (associated with warmth and moistness)

86 'mends amends

court (a) court of law (b) prince's court

BIANCA	Nothing comes More welcome to that name than your grace. [They drink]	GUARDIANO	My lord, he's a great ward, wealthy, but simple. His parts consist in acres.	115
LEANTIO [aside]	So, so.	DUKE	O, wise-acres.
90	Here stands the poor thief now that stole the treasure, And he's not thought on. Ours is near kin now To a twin misery born into the world: First the hard-conscienced worldling, he hoards wealth up; Then comes the next, and he feasts all upon't.	GUARDIANO	You've spoke him in a word, sir.
95	One's damned for getting, th'other for spending on't. O equal justice, thou hast met my sin With a full weight. I'm rightly now oppressed. All her friends' heavy hearts lie in my breast.	BIANCA	'Las, poor gentlewoman, She's ill bestead, unless she's dealt the wiselier And laid in more provision for her youth. Fools will not keep in summer.
		LEANTIO [aside]	No, nor such wives	120
		DUKE [to Fabritio]	Yea, the voice too, sir?
DUKE	Methinks there is no spirit amongst us, gallants, But what divinely sparkles from the eyes Of bright Bianca; we sat all in darkness But for that splendour. Who was't told us lately Of a match-making rite, a marriage tender?	FABRITIO	Ay, and a sweet breast too, my lord, I hope, Or I have cast away my money wisely! She took her pricksong earlier, my lord, Than any of her kindred ever did.	125
100		GUARDIANO	A rare child, though I say't—but I'd not have The baggage hear so much; 'twould make her swell straight; And maids of all things must not be puffed up.
GUARDIANO	'Twas I, my lord.	DUKE	Let's turn us to a better banquet then, For music bids the soul of man to a feast, And that's indeed a noble entertainment	130
DUKE	'Twas you indeed. Where is she?	GUARDIANO	Worthy Bianca's self. [To Bianca] You shall perceive, beauty, Our Florentine damsels are not brought up idly.
GUARDIANO	This is the gentlewoman.	BIANCA	They're wiser of themselves, it seems, my lord, And can take gifts when goodness offers 'em.	135
105	FABRITIO My lord, my daughter.	Music
DUKE	Why, here's some stirring yet.	LEANTIO [aside]	True, and damnation has taught you that wisdom; You can take gifts too. O, that music mocks me!
FABRITIO	She's a dear child to me.	LIVIA [aside]	I am as dumb to any language now, But love's, as one that never learned to speak. I am not yet so old but he may think of me.	140
DUKE	That must needs be; you say she is your daughter.		My own fault I have been idle a long time; But I'll begin the week and paint tomorrow, So follow my true labour day by day.
FABRITIO	Nay, my good lord, dear to my purse, I mean, Beside my person; I ne'er reckoned that.
110	She has the full qualities of a gentlewoman. I have brought her up to music, dancing, what not That may commend her sex and stir her husband.
DUKE	And which is he now?
GUARDIANO	This young heir, my lord.
DUKE	What is he brought up to?
HIPPOLITO	To cat-and-trap.

88 that name i.e. Bianca herself91 Ours i.e. the lot of me and those like me96 equal impartial97 oppressed (drawing on the literal sense 'pressed down, crushed')

98 friends' relatives'101 sat should have sat106 stirring excitement109 reckoned that included that in my reckoning112 stir sexually excite114 cat-and-trap (the game the Ward played in I.2)115 great (a) eminent in wealth (b) grown up (OED, adj. 7)116 parts (a) accomplishment, qualities

(b) possessions

120 Fools...keep (a) cream dishes will not stay fresh; hence (b) idiots have no sexual endurance121 From i.e. keep from becoming whores (perhaps quibbling on hoar, 'frost' or 'mold')the voice (i.e. Isabella's)122 breast singing voice (but see 155–60)123 wisely (ironic for 'foolishly')124 pricksong singing from written music, without improvisation (quibbling on prick, 'penis', anticipating 127–8)127 baggage (expression of worthlessness; at worst 'whore'; here perhaps 'little good-for-nothing')127–8 swell...puffed up (a) with pride

(b) with child

130 bids invites134 of themselves innately135 take gifts i.e. acquire talents. Leantio quibbles on gifts as (a) presents (b) what is given, and the physical endowments used, in sexual intercourse.135.1 Music Played on strings (see 154– 5). Either Isabella plays a lute type of instrument, or the Duke's musicians play viols.142 begin the week i.e. start afresh paint (with cosmetics)143 true labour vocation

I never thrived so well as when I used it.
 ISABELLA (sings)
 145 What harder chance can fall to woman
 Who was born to cleave to some man
 Than to bestow her time, youth, beauty,
 Life's observance, honour, duty,
 On a thing for no use good
 150 But to make physic work, or blood
 Force fresh in an old lady's cheek? She that would be Mother of fools, let her compound with me.
 WARD [speaking during the song] Here's a tune indeed! Pish, 155 I had rather hear one ballad sung i'th' nose now of the lamentable drowning of fat sheep and oxen, than all these simpering tunes played upon catsguts and sung by little kitlings.
 FABRITIO [to the Duke]
 How like you her breast now, my lord?
 BIANCA [aside] Her breast?
 160 He talks as if his daughter had given suck
 Before she were married—as her betters have.
 The next he praises, sure, will be her nipples.
 DUKE [to Fabritio]
 Methinks now, such a voice to such a husband
 Is like a jewel of unvalued worth
 Hung at a fool's ear.
 FABRITIO May it please your grace
 165 To give her leave to show another quality?
 DUKE
 Marry, as many good ones as you will, sir;
 The more, the better welcome.
 LEANTIO [aside] But the less,
 The better practised. That's soul's black indeed
 That cannot commend virtue; but who keeps it?
 170 The extortioner will say to a sick beggar
 'Heaven comfort thee!', though he give none himself.
 This good is common.
 FABRITIO [to Guardiano]
 Will it please you now, sir,
 To entreat your ward to take her by the hand,
 And lead her in a dance before the Duke?
 GUARDIANO
 175 That will I, sir; 'tis needful.—Hark you, nephew.
 FABRITIO
 Nay, you shall see, young heir, what you've for your money,
 Without fraud or imposture.
 WARD Dance with her?
 Not I, sweet guardianer; do not urge my heart to't;
 'Tis clean against my blood. Dance with a stranger?
 Let whos' will do't; I'll not begin first with her. 180
 HIPPOLITO [aside]
 No, fear't not, fool; she's took a better order.
 GUARDIANO
 Why, who shall take her then?
 WARD Some other gentleman.
 Look, here's her uncle, a fine-timbered reveller;
 Perhaps he knows the manner of her dancing too.
 I'll have him do't before me—I have sworn, guardianer— 185
 Then may I learn the better.
 GUARDIANO Thou'lt be an ass still.
 WARD
 Ay, all that 'uncle' shall not fool me out.
 Pish, I stick closer to myself than so.
 GUARDIANO [to Hippolito]
 I must entreat you, sir, to take your niece
 And dance with her. My ward's a little wilful;
 190 He would have you show him the way.
 HIPPOLITO Me, sir?
 He shall command it at all hours; pray tell him so.
 GUARDIANO
 I thank you for him; he has not wit himself, sir.
 HIPPOLITO [aside to Isabella]
 Come, my life's peace. [Aside] I have a strange office on't here.
 'Tis some man's luck to keep the joys he likes 195
 Concealed for his own bosom, but my fortune
 To set 'em out now for another's liking,
 Like the mad misery of necessitous man
 That parts from his good horse with many praises,
 And goes on foot himself. Need must be obeyed 200
 In every action; it mars man and maid.
Music. [Hippolito and Isabella] dance, making honours to the Duke and curtesy to themselves both before and after
 DUKE [speaking during the dance]
 Signor Fabritio, you're a happy father.
 Your cares and pains are fortunate, you see.
 Your cost bears noble fruits.—Hippolito, thanks.
 FABRITIO
 205 Here's some amends for all my charges yet.
 She wins both prick and praise where'er she comes.
 DUKE
 How lik'st, Bianca?

148 observance dutiful service
 150-1 to...cheek (examples of a fool's use as an amusing figure) 150 physic medicine (specifically laxative, which might work better when assisted by laughter)
 152 compound come to an agreement
 154 i'th' nose nasally
 157 kitlings kittens 158 breast singing voice (but Bianca takes as 'bosom')

162 to as against 163 unvalued priceless
 169 keeps practises
 177 Dance With the bawdy innuendo
 'copulate'.
 179 blood inclination (also suggesting 'sexual desire')
 180 whos' whose 181 took a better order made better arrangements 182 take (with a suggestion of 'take sexually')

 183 fine-timbered well-built
 185 before (a) in advance of (b) in front of 187 out out of my resolve 188 myself i.e. my (a) resolutions (b) self-interest (c) foolishness
 199 parts from i.e. sells
 201 mars (a) hinders (b) distresses (c) ruins
 201.2 honours bows
 206 both prick and praise praise for excellence (quibbling on prick, 'penis')

Act 3 Scene 2

Women beware Women.

BIANCA All things well, my lord,
 But this poor gentlewoman's fortune, that's the worst.

DUKE
 There is no doubt, Bianca, she'll find leisure
 210 To make that good enough: he's rich and simple.

BIANCA
 She has the better hope o'th' upper hand indeed,
 Which women strive for most.

GUARDIANO [to the Ward] Do't when I bid you, sir.

WARD
 I'll venture but a hornpipe with her, guardianer,
 Or some such married man's dance.

GUARDIANO Well, venture something, sir.

WARD
 I have rhyme for what I do.

215 GUARDIANO But little reason, I think.

WARD
 Plain men dance the measures; the cinquapace, the gay;
 Cuckolds dance the hornpipe, and farmers dance the hay;
 Your soldiers dance the round, and maidens that grow
 big;
 Your drunkards the canaries, your whore and bawd
 the jig.

220 Here's your eight kind of dancers. He that finds the ninth, let him pay the minstrels.
 [He offers to dance with Isabella]

DUKE
 O, here he appears once in his own person.
 I thought he would have married her by attorney,
 And lain with her so too.

BIANCA Nay, my kind lord,
 225 There's very seldom any found so foolish
 To give away his part there.

LEANTIO [aside] Bitter scoff;
 Yet I must do't. With what a cruel pride
 The glory of her sin strikes by my afflictions!
Music. Ward and Isabella dance; he ridiculously imitates Hippolito

DUKE [speaking during the dance]
 230 This thing will make shift, sirs, to make a husband,
 For aught I see in him. How think'st, Bianca?

BIANCA
 Faith, an ill-favoured shift, my lord, methinks.
 If he would take some voyage when he's married,
 Dangerous, or long enough, and scarce be seen

Once in nine year together, a wife then
 Might make indifferent shift to be content with him. 235

DUKE
 A kiss; that wit deserves to be made much on.
 [They kiss]
 Come, our caroche!

GUARDIANO Stands ready for your grace.

DUKE
 My thanks to all your loves. Come, fair Bianca.
 We have took special care of you, and provided
 Your lodging near us now.

BIANCA Your love is great, my lord. 240

DUKE
 Once more, our thanks to all.

OMNES All blest honours guard you!
Cornetts flourish. Exeunt all but Leantio and Livia

LEANTIO [aside]
 O, hast thou left me then, Bianca, utterly?
 Bianca! Now I miss thee, O, return,
 And save the faith of woman! I ne'er felt
 The loss of thee till now. 'Tis an affliction
 245 Of greater weight than youth was made to bear,
 As if a punishment of after-life
 Were fall'n upon man here. So new it is To flesh and blood, so strange, so insupportable
 A torment, e'en mistook as if a body 250 Whose death were drowning must needs therefore suffer it
 In scalding oil.

LIVIA Sweet sir!

LEANTIO [aside] As long as mine eye saw thee,
 I half enjoyed thee.

LIVIA Sir?

LEANTIO [aside] Canst thou forget
 The dear pains my love took, how it has watched
 Whole nights together in all weathers for thee,
 255 Yet stood in heart more merry than the tempests
 That sung about mine ears—like dangerous flatterers
 That can set all their mischief to sweet tunes—
 And then received thee from thy father's window
 Into these arms at midnight, when we embraced 260 As if we had been statues only made for't,
 To show art's life, so silent were our comforts,
 And kissed as if our lips had grown together?

LIVIA [aside]
 This makes me madder to enjoy him now.

213 hornpipe a vigorous dance usually for one dancer (with a quibble on the cuckold's horns)

216 the measures a slow and stately dance
cinquapace a lively dance

217 hay a country dance, like a reel (with a pun on the grass-crop)

218 round danced in a circle. Puns on the military round, 'inspection of sentinels', and on the roundness of pregnancy.

219 canaries (a) a lively Spanish dance (b) sweet white wine (both thought to originate from the Canary Islands)

jig (associated with lewdness)

220-1 the ninth (presumably copulation)

221 minstrels itinerant musicians who would play for a fee to gatherings in inns, etc.

222 once for once

223 by attorney by proxy

229 make shift (a) try hard, manage with difficulty (b) go through a comic performance. Bianca takes shift as 'set of clothes' in 231, then make shift as 'manage with difficulty' in 235.

231 ill-favoured offensive; i.e. smelly

237 caroche stately coach

262 show art's life i.e. demonstrate the lifelike qualities of art (because the statues are actually living)

LEANTIO
 265 Canst thou forget all this, and better joys
 That we met after this, which then new kisses
 Took pride to praise?
 LIVIA [aside] I shall grow madder yet.—Sir.
 LEANTIO [aside]
 This cannot be but of some close bawd's working.—
 Cry mercy, lady. What would you say to me?
 270 My sorrow makes me so unmannerly,
 So comfort bless me, I had quite forgot you.
 LIVIA
 Nothing but e'en in pity to that passion
 Would give your grief good counsel.
 LEANTIO Marry, and welcome, lady.
 It never could come better.
 LIVIA Then first, sir,
 275 To make away all your good thoughts at once of her,
 Know most assurèdly she is a strumpet.
 LEANTIO
 Ha: 'most assurèdly'! Speak not a thing
 So vile so certainly; leave it more doubtful.
 LIVIA
 280 Then I must leave all truth, and spare my knowledge;
 A sin which I too lately found and wept for.
 LEANTIO
 Found you it?
 LIVIA Ay, with wet eyes.
 LEANTIO O, perjurious friendship!
 LIVIA
 You missed your fortunes when you met with her, sir.
 Young gentlemen that only love for beauty,
 They love not wisely. Such a marriage rather 285 Proves the destruction of affection.
 It brings on want, and want's the key of whoredom.
 I think you'd small means with her.
 LEANTIO O, not any, lady.
 LIVIA
 290 Alas, poor gentleman! What, meant'st thou, sir,
 Quite to undo thyself with thine own kind heart?
 Thou art too good and pitiful to woman.
 Marry, sir, thank thy stars for this blest fortune
 That rids the summer of thy youth so well
 From many beggars that had lain a-sunning
 In thy beams only else, till thou hadst wasted
 295 The whole days of thy life in heat and labour.
 What would you say now to a creature found
 As pitiful to you, and, as it were,
 E'en sent on purpose from the whole sex general

To requite all that kindness you have shown to't?
 LEANTIO
 What's that, madam?
 LIVIA Nay, a gentlewoman, and one able 300
 To reward good things, ay, and bears a conscience to't.
 Couldst thou love such a one that, blow all fortunes,
 Would never see thee want,
 Nay, more, maintain thee to thine enemies' envy?—
 And shalt not spend a care for't, stir a thought, 305
 Nor break a sleep unless love's music waked thee;
 No storm of fortune should. Look upon me,
 And know that woman.
 LEANTIO O my life's wealth, Bianca!
 LIVIA
 Still with her name? Will nothing wear it out?
 That deep sigh went but for a strumpet, sir. 310
 LEANTIO
 It can go for no other that loves me.
 LIVIA [aside]
 He's vexed in mind; I came too soon to him.
 Where's my discretion now, my skill, my judgement?
 I'm cunning in all arts but my own love.
 'Tis as unseasonable to tempt him now, 315
 So soon, as a widow to be courted
 Following her husband's corpse, or to make bargain
 By the graveside, and take a young man there.
 Her strange departure stands like a hearse yet
 Before his eyes, which time will take down shortly. 320
 Exit

LEANTIO
 Is she my wife till death, yet no more mine?
 That's a hard measure. Then what's marriage good for?
 Methinks by right I should not now be living,
 And then 'twere all well. What a happiness
 Had I been made of had I never seen her; 325
 For nothing makes man's loss grievous to him
 But knowledge of the worth of what he loses,
 For what he never had he never misses.
 She's gone for ever, utterly. There is
 As much redemption of a soul from hell 330
 As a fair woman's body from his palace.
 Why should my love last longer than her truth?
 What is there good in woman to be loved
 When only that which makes her so has left her?
 I cannot love her now but I must like 335
 Her sin, and my own shame too, and be guilty

268 This i.e. Bianca's desertion to the Duke close furtive
 269 Cry mercy I beg your pardon
 271 So...me as I may be blessed with comfort (an asseveration)
 275 make away put an end to 280 found i.e. discovered in myself (the sin of leaving truth, ironically referring, unknown to Leantio, to her betrayal of Bianca). Alternatively 'discovered in Bianca', referring back to 276.

 293 beggars (Leantio's children)
 298 general collectively
 302 blow all fortunes i.e. whatever fortunes blow (anticipating storm of fortune, 311)
 312 vexed tormented
 319 hearse temporary but elaborate framework placed over a coffin before burial, bearing candles, banners, epitaphs, etc.
 322 measure (a) treatment (b) restriction

326-7 For...loses (drawing on the idea that the sense of loss is the greatest torment of the damned, as in Witch 2.1.219-23) 330 As...hell Proverbially there is no redemption from hell.
 335 but I must like i.e. unless I like 336-7 be...her i.e. share the guilt of committing adultery with her (by condoning
 it)

	Of law's breach with her, and mine own abusing; All which were monstrous. Then my safest course For health of mind and body is to turn	Only, sir, wear your heart of constant stuff. Do but you love enough, I'll give enough.	375
340	My heart and hate her, most extremely hate her. I have no other way. Those virtuous powers Which were chaste witnesses of both our troths Can witness she breaks first. And I'm rewarded With captainship o'th' fort—a place of credit,	LEANTIO Troth then, I'll love enough, and take enough.
345	I must confess, but poor. My factorship Shall not exchange means with't. He that died last in't, He was no drunkard, yet he died a beggar, For all his thrift. Besides, the place not fits me; It suits my resolution, not my breeding.	LIVIA Then we are both pleased enough. Exeunt
	Enter Livia	Enter Guardiano and Isabella at one door, and the Ward and Sordido at another	3.3
	LIVIA [aside]	GUARDIANO Now, nephew, here's the gentlewoman again.
350	I have tried all ways I can, and have not power To keep from sight of him.—How are you now, sir?	WARD Mass, here she's come again. Mark her now, Sordido.
	LEANTIO I feel a better ease, madam.	GUARDIANO This is the maid my love and care has chose Out for your wife, and so I tender her to you. Yourself has been eyewitness of some qualities That speak a courtly breeding and are costly. I bring you both to talk together now. 'Tis time you grew familiar in your tongues. Tomorrow you join hands, and one ring ties you, And one bed holds you, if you like the choice.	5
	LIVIA Thanks to blessedness. You will do well, I warrant you, fear it not, sir, Join but your own good will to't. He's not wise That loves his pain or sickness, or grows fond Of a disease whose property is to vex him And spitefully drink his blood up. Out upon't, sir, Youth knows no greater loss. I pray let's walk, sir.	WARD Like her or like her not; there's but two ways, And one your body, th'other your purse, pays.	10
355	You never saw the beauty of my house yet, Nor how abundantly fortune has blessed me In worldly treasure. Trust me, I have enough, sir, To make my friend a rich man in my life, A great man at my death; yourself will say so. If you want anything and spare to speak,	WARD I warrant you, guardianer, I'll not stand all day thrumming, But quickly shoot my bolt at your next coming.	15
360	Troth, I'll condemn you for a wilful man, sir.	GUARDIANO Well said. Good fortune in your birding then.
	LEANTIO Why, sure this can be but the flattery of some dream.	WARD I never missed mark yet. [Exit Guardiano]
	LIVIA [kissing him]	SORDIDO Troth, I think, master, if the truth were known, You never shot at any but the kitchen wench, And that was a she-woodcock, a mere innocent That was oft lost and cried at eight-and-twenty.	20
365	Now by this kiss, my love, my soul and riches, 'Tis all true substance. Come, you shall see my wealth. Take what you list. The gallanter you go, the more you please me. I will allow you too your page and footman, Your racehorses, or any various pleasure Exercised youth delights in; but to me	WARD No more of that meat, Sordido. Here's eggs o'th' spit now; We must turn gingerly. Draw out the catalogue Of all the faults of women.	25

339-40 turn... and hate her From Psalms, 105:25: 'He turned their heart to hate his people'.

345-6 My... with't i.e. the captainship will not provide an income equal to Leantio's factorship

348 place office

349 resolution i.e. determined animosity not my breeding Leantio is no soldier.

354 Join if you join

356 vex afflict

362 friend lover

374 constant stuff (as opposed to changeable stuff, glossy silk which changes hue when seen from different angles)

3.3.12 contract agreement of terms for the marriage

15 one... pays The cost is in lost pleasure to the body if the Ward does not like her, or financial expense if he does.

16 thrumming idly fidgetting (with a quibble on 'copulating', anticipated in stand as 'stay erect')

17 shoot my bolt i.e. let loose my tongue, give my decision. Proverbially 'a fool's bolt is soon shot'; i.e. he is quick to speak and exhaust his little wisdom. Also refers to hasty ejaculation.

18 birding chasing women. Literally 'fowling', taking up bolt as 'bird-bolt', the blunt-headed arrow used by fowlers.

19 mark target (hence also 'vulva')

22 she-woodcock (a) the bird (b) simpleton

innocent half-wit

23 cried called for by the town crier

(perhaps also 'wept')

24 eggs o'th' spit (proverbial for something that needs careful handling, as the dish needed careful cooking)

25 turn i.e. turn the spit. The Ward probably turns Isabella; compare 36.

SORDIDO How, all the faults? Have you so little reason to think so much paper will lie in my breeches? Why, ten carts will not carry it if you set down but the bawds. All the faults? Pray let's be content with a few of 'em; an if they were less you would find 'em enough, I warrant you. Look you, sir.
 [They pry at Isabella]

ISABELLA [aside]
 But that I have th'advantage of the fool
 As much as woman's heart can wish and joy at,
 What an infernal torment 'twere to be Thus bought and sold, and turned and pried into,
 when, alas,
 The worst bit is too good for him! And the comfort is He's but a cater's place on't, and provides
 All for another's table. Yet how curious
 The ass is!—like some nice professor on't
 That buys up all the daintiest food i'th' markets,
 And seldom licks his lips after a taste on't.

SORDIDO
 Now to her, now you've scanned all her parts over.

WARD
 But at what end shall I begin now, Sordido?

SORDIDO O, ever at a woman's lip. While you live, sir, do you ask that question?

WARD Methinks, Sordido, she's but a crabbed face to begin with.

SORDIDO A crabbed face? That will save money.

WARD How, save money, Sordido?

SORDIDO Ay, sir; for, having a crabbed face of her own, she'll eat the less verjuice with her mutton; 'twill save verjuice at year's end, sir.

WARD
 Nay, an your jests begin to be saucy once,
 I'll make you eat your meat without mustard.

SORDIDO
 And that in some kind is a punishment.

WARD Gentlewoman, they say 'tis your pleasure to be my wife, and you shall know shortly whether it be mine or no to be your husband; and thereupon thus I first enter upon you.
 [He kisses her]
 [Aside] O, most delicious scent! Methinks it tasted as if a man had stepped into a comfit-maker's shop to let a cart go by all the while I kissed her.—It is reported, gentlewoman, you'll run mad for me if you have me not.

ISABELLA
 I should be in great danger of my wits, sir,
 For being so forward—[Aside] should this ass kick backward now.

WARD
 Alas, poor soul! And is that hair your own?

ISABELLA
 Mine own, yes, sure, sir, I owe nothing for't.

WARD 'Tis a good hearing; I shall have the less to pay when I have married you. [To Sordido] Look, does her eyes stand well?

SORDIDO They cannot stand better
 Than in her head, I think. Where would you have them?
 And for her nose, 'tis of a very good last.

WARD I have known as good as that has not lasted a year though.

SORDIDO That's in the using of a thing. Will not any strong bridge fall down in time if we do nothing but beat at the bottom? A nose of buff would not last always, sir, especially if it came into th' camp once.

WARD But, Sordido, how shall we do to make her laugh, that I may see what teeth she has? For I'll not bate her a tooth, nor take a black one into th' bargain.

SORDIDO Why, do but you talk with her; you cannot choose but one time or other make her laugh, sir.

29 set down write down bawds (who might be punished by being displayed to public view in a cart)
 38 cater's purchaser of household provisions
 40 nice professor fastidious devotee
 42 after for
 45 lip (ambiguous: might indicate 'vulva')
 51–3 for...sir Crabbed suggests 'crab-apple', whose juice (verjuice) was used as apple sauce.
 54 saucy (a) impudent (b) pertaining to sauce (a legitimate usage)
 55 meat without mustard Picks up on saucy, and echoes the proverb 'after meat, mustard' (applied to wise words after the event).
 56 And...punishment The point is that the punishment is slight. Evidently alludes to a passage in Nashe's Pierce Penniless (1592), in which 'a mad ruffian on a time, being in danger of shipwreck by a tempest' makes the 'desperate jest' of vowing, if he is saved, 'never to eat haberdine [dried cod] more whilst I live'. After the storm abates, he adds: 'Not without mustard, good Lord, not without mustard'. Nashe comments, 'as though it had been the greatest torment in the world to have eaten haberdine without mustard' (Works, ed. McKerrow, I, 171).
 59–60 enter upon begin to deal with (also, 'assume possession of' and 'begin an attack upon')
 62 comfit-maker's comfit: a fruit and ginger sweetmeat 67 forward (a) pert, eager (b) close kick backward i.e. refuse the marriage
 68 is...own Wig-wearing was often considered a vice, and might be to conceal baldness as an effect of venereal disease. The boy-actor playing Isabella would in fact be wearing a wig.
 69 Mine...for't (taking your own as 'legally possessed')
 70 a good hearing good to hear it
 75 nose Acquires the innuendo 'sexual organs'.
last i.e. shape. Literally, the cobbler's last on which shoes were shaped. The Ward takes as 'duration'.
 76–81 I...once Venereal disease caused the nose-bones to collapse.
 78 using of a thing Quibbles on 'sexual using of genitals'.
 79 bridge (a) road-bridge (b) nose-bridge; hence (c) pubis beat i.e. (a) erode (b) copulate
 80 buff hard-wearing leather of which soldier's tunics were made
 81 camp soldiers' camp
 83 bate deduct (from the expected total)

- WARD It shall go hard, but I will. [To Isabella] Pray, what qualities have you beside singing and dancing? Can you play at shuttlecock, forsooth?
- 90 ISABELLA Ay, and at stool-ball too, sir; I have great luck at it.
- WARD Why, can you catch a ball well?
- ISABELLA I have catched two in my lap at one game.
- WARD What, have you, woman? I must have you learn To play at trap too; then you're full and whole.
- 95 ISABELLA Anything that you please to bring me up to I shall take pains to practise.
- WARD 'Twill not do, Sordido; we shall never get her mouth opened wide enough.
- SORDIDO No sir? That's strange! Then here's a trick for your learning.
- 100 He yawns. [Isabella yawns, covering her mouth with a handkerchief]
Look now, look now; quick, quick there!
- WARD Pox of that scurvy mannerly trick with handkerchief! It hindered me a little, but I am satisfied. When a fair woman gapes and stops her mouth so, I shows like a cloth stopple in a cream-pot. I have fair hope of her teeth now, Sordido.
- 105 SORDIDO Why then, you've all well, sir. For aught I see, She's right and straight enough now as she stands. They'll commonly lie crooked; that's no matter; wise gamesters
- 110 Never find fault with that; let 'em lie still so.
- WARD I'd fain mark how she goes, and then I have all. For of all creatures I cannot abide a splay-footed woman. She's an unlucky thing to meet in a morning! Her heels keep together so as if she were beginning an Irish dance still, and the wriggling of her bum playing the tune to't. But I have bethought a cleanly shift to find it. Dab down as you see me, and peep of one side when her back's toward you. I'll show you the way.
- 115 SORDIDO And you shall find me apt enough to peeping.
- I have been one of them has seen mad sights Under your scaffolds.
- WARD [to Isabella] Will it please you walk, forsooth, A turn or two by yourself? You are so pleasing to me I take delight to view you on both sides.
- ISABELLA I shall be glad to fetch a walk to your love, sir. 'Twill get affection a good stomach, sir— [Aside] Which I had need have, to fall to such coarse victuals. [She walks about. The Ward ducks down to peep at her legs]
- WARD [aside] Now go thy ways for a clean-treading wench As ever man in modesty peeped under. [Sordido ducks down]
- SORDIDO [aside] I see the sweetest sight to please my master. Never went Frenchman righter upon ropes Than she on Florentine rushes.
- WARD [to Isabella] 'Tis enough, forsooth.
- ISABELLA And how do you like me now, sir?
- WARD Faith, so well I never mean to part with thee, sweetheart, Under some sixteen children, and all boys.
- 135 ISABELLA You'll be at simple pains if you prove kind And breed 'em all in your teeth.
- WARD Nay, by my faith, What serves your belly for? 'Twould make my cheeks Look like blown bagpipes.
- Enter Guardianio*
- GUARDIANO How now, ward and nephew, Gentlewoman and niece? Speak, is it so, or not?
- 140 WARD 'Tis so; we are both agreed, sir.
- GUARDIANO In to your kindred then. There's friends and wine and music waits to welcome you.
- WARD Then I'll be drunk for joy.

89 shuttlecock A form of the word 'shuttlecock' in which here shit anticipates stool, and cock anticipates ball.

90 stool-ball A sort of indoor cricket, played mainly by women, using a stool as the wickets. See previous note.

92 I...game The suggestion of sexual gymnastics is developed in the Ward's reply.

95 bring me up to train me in

105 stopples plug

109 lie crooked (a) sleep in a crooked posture (b) are unfaithful in bed

gamesters (in copulation)

110 still always

111 goes walks

113 unlucky...morning (because splay-footed women were often thought to be witches)

116 cleanly shift clever trick
Dab dip, duck

121 your scaffolds (not possessive: 'scaffolds as you know them') scaffolds platforms for theatre stages, public executions etc., or for spectators to view processions

125 fetch perform to your love according to your desire

126 stomach appetite

128 clean-treading neatly-walking

131 Frenchman (referring to French rope-walkers)

132 rushes (spread on floors, especially for formal occasions, and on the theatre stage)

136 simple unqualified (punning on 'foolish')

kind affectionate (punning on 'in character')

137 breed...teeth Alludes to the superstition that an affectionate father had toothache while his wife was pregnant; but the Ward takes the expression literally.

LEANTIO	A sumptuous lodging.	BIANCA [aside] Lady Livia!
BIANCA	You've an excellent suit there.	Is't possible? Her worship was my pand'ress.	75
LEANTIO	A chair of velvet.	She dote, and send, and give, and all to him?
BIANCA	Is your cloak lined through, sir?	Why, here's a bawd plagued home!—You're simply happy, sir;
LEANTIO	You're very stately here.	Yet I'll not envy you.
BIANCA	Faith, something proud, sir.	LEANTIO No, court-saint, not thou!
LEANTIO	Stay, stay, let's see your cloth-of-silver slippers.	You keep some friend of a new fashion.	80
BIANCA	Who's your shoemaker? He's made you a neat boot.	There's no harm in your devil; he's a suckling;
LEANTIO	Will you have a pair?	But he will breed teeth shortly, will he not?
LEANTIO	The Duke will lend you spurs.	BIANCA
BIANCA	Yes, when I ride.	Take heed you play not, then, too long with him.
LEANTIO	'Tis a brave life you lead.	LEANTIO
BIANCA	I could ne'er see you	Yes, and the great one too. I shall find time
LEANTIO	In such good clothes in my time.	To play a hot religious bout with some of you,	85
BIANCA	Sure I think, sir,	And perhaps drive you and your course of sins
LEANTIO	In your time?	To their eternal kennels. I speak softly now—
BIANCA	We both thrive best asunder.	'Tis manners in a noble woman's lodgings,
LEANTIO	You're a whore.	An I well knew all my degrees of duty—
BIANCA	Fear nothing, sir.	But come I to your everlasting parting once,
LEANTIO	An impudent, spiteful strumpet.	Thunder shall seem soft music to that tempest.	90
BIANCA	O, sir, you give me thanks for your captainship.	BIANCA
LEANTIO	I thought you had forgot all your good manners.	'Twas said last week there would be change of
LEANTIO [showing her a letter]	And to spite thee as much, look there, there read,	weather,
LEANTIO	Vex, gnaw; thou shalt find there I am not love-starved.	When the moon hung so, and belike you heard it.
LEANTIO	The world was never yet so cold or pitiless	LEANTIO
LEANTIO	But there was ever still more charity found out	Why, here's sin made, and ne'er a conscience put
LEANTIO	Than at one proud fool's door, and 'twere hard, faith,	to't;
LEANTIO	If I could not pass that. Read, to thy shame, there.	A monster with all forehead and no eyes.
LEANTIO	A cheerful and a beauteous benefactor, too,	Why do I talk to thee of sense or virtue,	95
LEANTIO	As e'er erected the good works of love.	That art as dark as death? And as much madness
		To set light before thee as to lead blind folks
		To see the monuments, which they may smell as soon
		As they behold; marry, oft-times their heads,
		For want of light, may feel the hardness of 'em.	100
		So shall thy blind pride my revenge and anger,
		That canst not see it now; and it may fall
		At such an hour when thou least seest of all.
		So to an ignorance darker than thy womb
		I leave thy perjured soul. A plague will come. Exit	105

53 through throughout
 54 proud splendid
 58 lend you spurs With the innuendo 'apply the spurs to you' (i.e. excite you sexually), which Bianca takes up in her reply.
 63 Fear nothing don't fear for that (sarcastically polite)
 71 pass go beyond
 72 cheerful welcoming, hospitable
 73 erected...love (combines an image of a charitably-bequested building with a phallic innuendo)
 77 plagued home A forceful way of saying 'fittingly punished'.
 79 friend lover
 80 he's a suckling Perhaps alludes to the belief that witches suckled their familiar spirits.

81 breed teeth cut his teeth
 83 the great one i.e. the game for the highest stakes
 84 hot religious bout With an incongruous sexual reference. The exact nature of the threat is unclear, but as Leantio derives his confidence in affrontery from his own affair with Livia, his claim to the moral high-ground is insecure.
 85 course pack (as of hounds hunting hares). Also glancing at 'progress through successive stages', 'habit', and 'prescribed series of prayers' (ironic; compare religious).
 86 eternal kennels (i.e. of damnation)
 89 come I if I come your everlasting parting (of Bianca and the Duke, or of Bianca from life; in either case the meaning is 'your death')

91-2 'Twas...it Takes up Leantio's metaphorical thunder and tempest as if casual chat about the weather. Perhaps also refers to the 'horned' moon, emblematic of a cuckold.
 92 hung i.e. hung in the sky as it did 93 made created put added
 94 forehead assurance, impudence. Compare Jeremiah, 3:3, 'thou hadst a whore's forehead, thou wouldst not be ashamed'.
eyes (of conscience, as in many biblical usages)
 95 sense i.e. sight
 98 monuments (objects both visually impressive and morally edifying) 100 feel the hardness of i.e. bump into 103 when...all i.e. of greatest sinfulness
 105 plague calamitous divine punishment

BIANCA
 Get you gone first, and then I fear no greater;
 Nor thee will I fear long. I'll have this sauciness
 Soon banished from these lodgings, and the rooms
 Perfumed well after the corrupt air it leaves.
 110 His breath has made me almost sick, in troth.
 A poor, base start-up! Life! Because he's got Fair clothes by foul means, comes to rail, and show
 'em.
Enter the Duke

DUKE
 Who's that?
 BIANCA Cry you mercy, sir.
 DUKE Prithee, who's that?
 BIANCA
 The former thing, my lord, to whom you gave 115 The captainship. He eats his meat with grudging still.
 DUKE Still!
 BIANCA
 He comes vaunting here of his new love,
 And the new clothes she gave him. Lady Livia,
 Who but she now his mistress?
 DUKE Lady Livia?
 Be sure of what you say.
 BIANCA He showed me her name, sir,
 120 In perfumed paper, her vows, her letter,
 With an intent to spite me. So his heart said,
 And his threats made it good; they were as spiteful
 As ever malice uttered, and as dangerous
 Should his hand follow the copy.
 DUKE But that must not.
 125 Do not vex your mind. Prithee, to bed, go.
 All shall be well and quiet.
 BIANCA I love peace, sir.
 DUKE
 And so do all that love. Take you no care for't;
 It shall be still provided to your hand. Exit Bianca
 Who's near us there?
Enter Messenger
 MESSENGER My lord.
 DUKE Seek out Hippolito,
 130 Brother to Lady Livia, with all speed.
 MESSENGER
 He was the last man I saw, my lord.
 DUKE Make haste.
Exit Messenger

He is a blood soon stirred; and as he's quick
 To apprehend a wrong, he's bold and sudden
 In bringing forth a ruin. I know likewise
 The reputation of his sister's honour's
 135 As dear to him as life-blood to his heart.
 Beside, I'll flatter him with a goodness to her
 Which I now thought on—but ne'er meant to practise
 Because I know her base—and that wind drives him.
 The ulcerous reputation feels the poise
 140 Of lightest wrongs, as sores are vexed with flies.
Enter Hippolito
 He comes.—Hippolito, welcome.
 HIPPOLITO My loved lord.
 DUKE
 How does that lusty widow, thy kind sister?
 Is she not sped yet of a second husband?
 A bed-fellow she has; I ask not that;
 145 I know she's sped of him.
 HIPPOLITO Of him, my lord?
 DUKE
 Yes, of a bed-fellow. Is the news so strange to you?
 HIPPOLITO
 I hope 'tis so to all.
 DUKE I wish it were, sir;
 But 'tis confessed too fast her ignorant pleasures,
 Only by lust instructed, have received
 150 Into their services an impudent boaster:
 One that does raise his glory from her shame
 And tells the midday sun what's done in darkness;
 Yet, blinded with her appetite, wastes her wealth,
 Buys her disgraces at a dearer rate
 155 Than bounteous housekeepers purchase their honour.
 Nothing sads me so much as that in love
 To thee and to thy blood I had picked out
 A worthy match for her, the great Vincentio,
 High in our favour and in all men's thoughts.
 160 HIPPOLITO
 O thou destruction of all happy fortunes,
 Unsated blood! Know you the name, my lord,
 Of her abuser?
 DUKE One Leantio.
 HIPPOLITO
 He's a factor.
 DUKE He ne'er made so brave a voyage,
 By his own talk.
 HIPPOLITO The poor old widow's son.
 165 I humbly take my leave.

106 greater i.e. greater plague (in the weakened sense 'nuisance')
 108-9 the...leaves Refers to the practise of fumigating rooms with aromatic smoke, supposedly to rid them of plague infection.
 110 breath (a) exhaled air (b) speech
 111 start-up upstart
 124 Should...copy i.e. should his deeds follow the example set in his words. Literally, copy is the 'copy book' used to teach penmanship.

 128 provided to your hand i.e. given you
 132 blood man of spirit
 137 goodness beneficial intention
 138 now just now
 139 that wind drives him The image is of a sailing ship.
 140 poise weight, pressure
 144 Is...of has she not yet succeeded in obtaining second A minor inconsistency with

1.2.50.
 146 sped obtained her desire
 152 raise...shame A half-realized horticultural image; compare 3.2.48-52.
 156 honour reputation, social standing
 162 blood sexual appetite
 164 voyage Harks back to Leantio's venturings in trade, figuring Livia as a rich cargo. Compare his description of Bianca as an unvalued'st purchase (1.1.12).

DUKE [aside] I see 'tis done.—
Give her good counsel, make her see her error.
I know she'll hearken to you.

HIPPOLITO Yes, my lord,
I make no doubt, as I shall take the course,
170 Which she shall never know till it be acted;
And when she wakes to honour, then she'll thank me
for't.
I'll imitate the pities of old surgeons
To this lost limb, who ere they show their art
Cast one asleep, then cut the diseased part.
175 So, out of love to her I pity most,
She shall not feel him going till he's lost.
Then she'll commend the cure. Exit

DUKE The great cure's past;
I count this done already. His wrath's sure,
And speaks an injury deep. Farewell, Leantio.
180 This place will never hear thee murmur more.
Enter Lord Cardinal, attended [with Servants bearing lights]
Our noble brother, welcome!

LORD CARDINAL [to Servants] Set those lights down;
Depart till you be called. [Exeunt Servants]

DUKE [aside] There's serious business
Fixed in his look; nay, it inclines a little
To the dark colour of a discontentment.—
185 Brother, what is't commands your eye so powerfully?
Speak; you seem lost.

LORD CARDINAL The thing I look on seems so:
To my eyes, lost for ever.

DUKE You look on me.

LORD CARDINAL
What a grief 'tis to a religious feeling
To think a man should have a friend so goodly,
190 So wise, so noble, nay, a duke, a brother,
And all this certainly damned!

DUKE How?

LORD CARDINAL 'Tis no wonder
If your great sin can do't. Dare you look up,
For thinking of a vengeance? Dare you sleep,
For fear of never waking but to death,
195 And dedicate unto a strumpet's love
The strength of your affections, zeal, and health?
Here you stand now; can you assure your pleasures
You shall once more enjoy her, but once more?
Alas, you cannot. What a misery 'tis then 200 To be more certain of eternal death
Than of a next embrace! Nay, shall I show you

How more unfortunate you stand in sin
Than the love-private man? All his offences,
Like enclosed grounds, keep but about himself,
And seldom stretch beyond his own soul's bounds; 205
And when a man grows miserable, 'tis some comfort
When he's no further charged than with himself;
'Tis a sweet ease to wretchedness. But, great man,
Every sin thou commit'st shows like a flame
Upon a mountain: 'tis seen far about, 210
And with a big wind made of popular breath
The sparkles fly through cities; here one takes,
Another catches there, and in short time
Waste all to cinders. But remember still
What burnt the valleys first came from the hill. 215
Every offence draws his particular pain,
But 'tis example proves the great man's bane.
The sins of mean men lie like scattered parcels
Of an unperfect bill; but when such fall,
Then comes example, and that sums up all. 220
And this your reason grants: if men of good lives,
Who by their virtuous actions stir up others
To noble and religious imitation,
Receive the greater glory after death—
As sin must needs confess—what may they feel 225
In height of torments and in weight of vengeance,
Not only they themselves not doing well,
But sets a light up to show men to hell?

DUKE
If you have done, I have. No more, sweet brother.

LORD CARDINAL
I know time spent in goodness is too tedious. 230
This had not been a moment's space in lust now.
How dare you venture on eternal pain,
That cannot bear a minute's reprehension?
Methinks you should endure to hear that talked of Which you so strive to suffer. O my brother!
235 What were you if you were taken now?
My heart weeps blood to think on't. 'Tis a work
Of infinite mercy you can never merit
That yet you are not death-struck, no, not yet.
I dare not stay you long, for fear you should not 240 Have time enough allowed you to repent in.
There's but this wall betwixt you and destruction
When you're at strongest, and but poor thin clay.
Think upon't, brother. Can you come so near it
For a fair strumpet's love, and fall into 245
A torment that knows neither end nor bottom
For beauty but the deepness of a skin,

177 great cure's major surgery. Cure is also 'charge, care, duty'.

180 murmur mutter anger, complain

186 lost enraptured (but in the Cardinal's reply, 'damned')

203 love-private private in lovemaking

209-10 a...mountain (such as a signal beacon)

214 Waste all i.e. 'they waste all' or 'all wastes'

216 his its pain punishment

217 example setting the example

218 parcels separate items

219 unperfect not totalled up such i.e. great men

225 sin i.e. even sin, the sinful themselves

228 sets i.e. their example setting

233 reprehension rebuke

236 taken (by death)

242 this wall (the Duke's body; see following note)

243 clay Continues the wall metaphor. In biblical phraseology man is made from clay, to which he returns on death.

250 And that not of their own neither? Is she a thing Whom sickness dare not visit, or age look on,
Or death resist? Does the worm shun her grave?
If not—as your soul knows it—why should lust
Bring man to lasting pain, for rotten dust?

DUKE
255 Brother of spotless honour, let me weep
The first of my repentance in thy bosom,
And show the blest fruits of a thankful spirit;
And if I e'er keep woman more, unlawfully,
May I want penitence at my greatest need—
And wise men know there is no barren place
Threatens more famine than a dearth in grace.

LORD CARDINAL
260 Why, here's a conversion is at this time, brother,
Sung for a hymn in heaven, and at this instant
The powers of darkness' groan makes all hell sorry.
First I praise heaven; then in my work I glory.—
Who's there attends without?
Enter Servants

SERVANTS My lord.
LORD CARDINAL
265 Take up those lights. There was a thicker darkness
When they came first. The peace of a fair soul
Keep with my noble brother.

DUKE Joys be with you, sir.
Exit Cardinal, with Servants [bearing lights]
She lies alone tonight for't, and must still,
Though it be hard to conquer; but I have vowed 270 Never to know her as a strumpet more,
And I must save my oath. If fury fail not,
Her husband dies tonight, or at the most
Lives not to see the morning spent tomorrow.
Then will I make her lawfully mine own,
275 Without this sin and horror. Now I'm chidden
For what I shall enjoy then unforbidden;
And I'll not freeze in stoves. 'Tis but a while.
Live like a hopeful bridegroom, chaste from flesh,
And pleasure then will seem new, fair, and fresh.
Exit

4.2 Enter Hippolito
HIPPOLITO
The morning so far wasted, yet his baseness
So impudent? See if the very sun do not blush at him!
Dare he do thus much, and know me alive?

Put case one must be vicious, as I know myself
Monstrously guilty: there's a blind time made for't. 5
He might use only that; 'twere conscionable.
Art, silence, closeness, subtlety, and darkness
Are fit for such a business; but there's no pity
To be bestowed on an apparent sinner,
An impudent daylight lecher. The great zeal 10
I bear to her advancement in this match
With Lord Vincentio, as the Duke has wrought it
To the perpetual honour of our house,
Puts fire into my blood to purge the air
Of this corruption, fear it spread too far 15
And poison the whole hopes of this fair fortune.
I love her good so dearly that no brother
Shall venture farther for a sister's glory
Than I for her preferment.
Enter Leantio and a Page
LEANTIO [aside] Once again 20
I'll see that glist'ring whore, shines like a serpent
Now the court sun's upon her.—Page!
PAGE Anon, sir.
LEANTIO [aside]
I'll go in state too.—See the coach be ready.
I'll hurry away presently. [Exit Page]
HIPPOLITO Yes, you shall hurry,
And the devil after you.
[He strikes him]
Take that at setting forth.
[He draws his sword]
Now, an you'll draw, we are upon equal terms, sir. 25
Thou took'st advantage of my name in honour
Upon my sister. I ne'er saw the stroke
Come till I found my reputation bleeding,
And therefore count it I no sin to valour
To serve thy lust so. Now we are of even hand, 30
Take your best course against me. You must die.
LEANTIO [aside]
How close sticks envy to man's happiness!
When I was poor, and little cared for life,
I had no such means offered me to die;
No man's wrath minded me.
[He draws his sword]
Slave, I turn this to thee, 35
To call thee to account for a wound lately
Of a base stamp upon me.
HIPPOLITO 'Twas most fit

248 And...neither (because produced by cosmetics)
252 lasting everlasting rotten dust (all that will remain of the strumpet after death)
254 first (suggesting first-fruits, an idea developed in 255)
257 want lack 260-1 here's...heaven Compare Luke, 15:10, "There is joy in the presence of the angels of God for one sinner that coverteth'.

262 sorry woeful, wretched
266 fair unsullied
277 freeze in stoves i.e. be sexually continent in places suited to lechery. Stoves is probably 'hot air or vapour baths', and may, like stew, have suggested 'brothel'.
4.2.4 Put case suppose vicious full of vice
5 blind i.e. dark
7 Art cunning

closeness secrecy
9 apparent manifest
15 fear for fear
20 shines who shines
21 court sun's i.e. the Duke's
23 presently at once
27 stroke (of the penis as well as the sword)
30 of even hand on equal terms
37 stamp impression, character. Suggests the stamping of an illegitimate impression on a coin.

- For a base metal. Come and fetch one now
More noble then, for I will use thee fairer 40 Than thou hast done thine own soul, or our honour.
[They fight. Hippolito wounds Leantio, who falls]
And there I think 'tis for thee.
- VOICES WITHIN Help, help! O, part 'em!
LEANTIO
False wife! I feel now thou'st prayed heartily for me.
Rise, strumpet, by my fall; thy lust may reign now.
My heart-string and the marriage knot that tied thee
Breaks both together.
[He groans and dies]
45 HIPPOLITO There I heard the sound on't,
And never liked string better.
Enter Livia [at one door], Guardiano, Isabella, Ward, and Sordido [at another]
- LIVIA 'Tis my brother.
Are you hurt, sir?
HIPPOLITO Not anything.
LIVIA Blessèd fortune!
Shift for thyself. What is he thou hast killed?
HIPPOLITO Our honour's enemy.
GUARDIANO Know you this man, lady?
LIVIA
50 Leantio! My love's joy! [To Hippolito] Wounds stick upon thee
As deadly as thy sins. Art thou not hurt?
The devil take that fortune! And he dead!
Drop plagues into thy bowels without voice,
Secret and fearful.—Run for officers.
55 Let him be apprehended with all speed,
For fear he scape away. Lay hands on him;
We cannot be too sure; 'tis wilful murder.
You do heaven's vengeance, and the law just service.
You know him not as I do; he's a villain
60 As monstrous as a prodigy, and as dreadful.
- HIPPOLITO Will you but entertain a noble patience
Till you but hear the reason, worthy sister?
LIVIA
The reason! That's a jest hell falls a-laughing at.
Is there a reason found for the destruction
65 Of our more lawful loves, and was there none
To kill the black lust 'twixt thy niece and thee
- That has kept close so long?
GUARDIANO How's that, good madam?
LIVIA
Too true, sir. There she stands; let her deny't.
The deed cries shortly in the midwife's arms,
Unless the parents' sins strike it stillborn;
70 And if you be not deaf and ignorant,
You'll hear strange notes ere long.—Look upon me,
wench!
'Twas I betrayed thy honour subtly to him
Under a false tale. It lights upon me now.—
His arm has paid me home upon thy breast,
75 My sweet beloved Leantio!
- GUARDIANO Was my judgement
And care in choice so dev'lishly abused,
So beyond shamefully? All the world will grin at me.
WARD O Sordido, Sordido, I'm damned, I'm damned!
SORDIDO Damned? Why, sir?
80 WARD One of the wicked—dost not see't?—a cuckold, a plain reprobate cuckold.
SORDIDO Nay, an you be damned for that be of good cheer, sir; you've gallant company of all professions. I'll have a wife next Sunday too, because I'll along with you 85 myself.
- WARD That will be some comfort yet.
LIVIA [to Guardiano]
You, sir, that bear your load of injuries
As I of sorrows, lend me your grieved strength
90 To this sad burden, who in life wore actions:
Flames were not nimbler. We will talk of things
May have the luck to break our hearts together.
- GUARDIANO I'll list to nothing but revenge and anger,
Whose counsels I will follow.
Exeunt Livia and Guardiano [bearing Leantio's body]
- SORDIDO A wife, quoth a?
Here's a sweet plum-tree of your guard'ner's grafting!
95 WARD Nay, there's a worse name belongs to this fruit yet, an you could hit on't, a more open one; for he that marries a whore looks like a fellow bound all his lifetime to a medlar-tree—and that's good stuff: 'tis no sooner ripe but it looks rotten; and so do some queans at 100 nineteen. A pox on't, I thought there was some knavery abroach, for something stirred in her belly the first night
I lay with her.

38 metal Continues the coin image; also mettle, 'spirit'.

one i.e. a wound

44 heart-string Thought to brace and sustain the heart.

46 string Quibbles on the music of a stringed instrument.

50 Wounds stick (subjunctive: 'may wounds stick'; similarly Drop plagues, 53)

53 voice noise

60 prodigy deformed infant, whose birth was regarded as unnatural and a portent of evil

65 more lawful (than Hippolito's)

67 close secret, hidden

72 strange notes (of the infant's cries)

85 a wife next Sunday Proverbially, 'Who will have a handsome wife, let him choose her upon Saturday and not upon Sunday'. Women dressed up for church on Sunday; compare I.I.34.

90 wore displayed

92 to break of breaking

95 plum-tree Plum alludes to the pudenda. guard'ner's guardian's (punning on gardener's)

97 open Alludes to open-arse, the scurrilous name for the medlar fruit, so called because of the obvious 'eye' between the fruit lobes.

99 medlar-tree See previous note. The fruit was not ripe for eating until rotten and was therefore a common image for sexual degeneracy in women. Rotten
(100) suggests infestation with venereal disease.

100 queans whores

102 abroach begun, afoot (and 'had broached her')

SORDIDO What, what, sir!
 105 WARD This is she brought up so courtly, can sing and dance—and tumble too, methinks. I'll never marry wife again that has so many qualities.
 SORDIDO Indeed, they are seldom good, master; for likely when they are taught so many, they will have one trick more of their own finding out. Well, give me a wench but with one good quality, to lie with none but her husband, and that's bringing up enough for any woman breathing.
 110 WARD This was the fault when she was tendered to me. You never looked to this.
 SORDIDO Alas, how would you have me see through a great farthingale, sir? I cannot peep through a millstone, or in the going to see what's done i'th' bottom.
 WARD Her father praised her breast; she'd the voice, for-sooth.
 120 I marvelled she sung so small, indeed, being no maid. Now I perceive there's a young chorister in her belly. This breeds a singing in my head, I'm sure.
 SORDIDO 'Tis but the tune of your wife's cinquapace, danced in a feather bed. Faith, go lie down, master—but take heed your horns do not make holes in the pillow-beres. [The Ward begins to leave]
 125 I would not batter brows with him for a hogshead of angels; he would prick my skull as full of holes as a scrivener's sandbox. Exeunt Ward and Sordido
 ISABELLA [aside]
 130 Was ever maid so cruelly beguiled,
 To the confusion of life, soul, and honour,
 All of one woman's murd'ring? I'd fain bring
 Her name no nearer to my blood than woman,
 And 'tis too much of that. O shame and horror!
 135 In that small distance from yon man to me
 Lies sin enough to make a whole world perish.—
 'Tis time we parted, sir, and left the sight
 Of one another; nothing can be worse
 To hurt repentance, for our very eyes
 140 Are far more poisonous to religion
 Than basilisks to them. If any goodness
 Rest in you, hope of comforts, fear of judgements,
 My request is I ne'er may see you more;
 And so I turn me from you everlastingly,
 106 tumble (a) dance with contortions, perform acrobatics (b) copulate
 110 trick sexual device
 117 I...millstone From the proverb 'I can see as far into a millstone as another man', the point being the impossibility of doing so.
 118 going (a) the millstone's turning (b) Isabella's walking in 3.3 (c) copulative 'grinding' to see 'To' is redundant to the sense.
 i'th' bottom (a) underneath (b) in the anal/genital area. Also alludes to the expression 'search to the bottom', i.e. get to the heart of a matter.
 120 small gently, softly being no maid (something not actually known to the Ward at the time) 122 a...head the headache caused by cuckold's horns, 125
 123 cinquapace (a lively dance)
 126 pillow-beres pillow-cases
 127 hogshead large barrel
 128 angels gold coins
 129 sandbox box with perforated top used for sprinkling sand to blot wet ink
 131 confusion destruction
 133 blood family, kinship
 So is my hope to miss you. [Aside] But for her,
 145 That durst so dally with a sin so dangerous
 And lay a snare so spitefully for my youth,
 If the least means but favour my revenge
 That I may practise the like cruel cunning
 Upon her life as she has on mine honour,
 150 I'll act it without pity.
 HIPPOLITO [aside] Here's a care
 Of reputation, and a sister's fortune
 Sweetly rewarded by her! Would a silence
 As great as that which keeps among the graves
 Had everlastingly chained up her tongue!
 155 My love to her has made mine miserable.
Enter Guardiano and Livia
 GUARDIANO [aside to Livia]
 If you can but dissemble your heart's griefs now,
 Be but a woman so far.
 LIVIA [aside to Guardiano] Peace; I'll strive, sir.
 GUARDIANO [aside to Livia]
 As I can wear my injuries in a smile,
 Here's an occasion offered that gives anger
 160 Both liberty and safety to perform
 Things worth the fire it holds, without the fear
 Of danger or of law; for mischiefs acted
 Under the privilege of a marriage-triumph
 At the Duke's hasty nuptials will be thought 165 Things merely accidental, all 's by chance,
 Not got of their own natures.
 LIVIA [aside to Hippolito] I conceive you, sir,
 Even to a longing for performance on't;
 And here behold some fruits.
 [She kneels to Hippolito and Isabella]
 Forgive me both.
 What I am now returned to, sense and judgement,
 170 Is not the same rage and distraction
 Presented lately to you. That rude form
 Is gone for ever. I am now myself,
 That speaks all peace and friendship, and these tears
 Are the true springs of hearty penitent sorrow
 175 For those foul wrongs which my forgetful fury
 Slandered your virtues with. This gentleman
 Is well resolved now.
 GUARDIANO I was never otherways.
 134 'tis...that i.e. Livia is too full of the vices of women
 141 basilisks (in classical legend, reptiles whose glance was fatal)
 145 miss avoid
 164 marriage-triumph triumph: lavish spectacle
 166 's as
 167 conceive understand (with fruits suggesting wordplay on 'become pregnant') 176 For as for forgetful heedless
 178 resolved satisfied, reassured

Act 4 Scene 2

Women beware Women.

I knew, alas, 'twas but your anger spake it,
 And I ne'er thought on't more.

180 HIPPOLITO Pray rise, good sister.
 [She rises]

ISABELLA [aside]
 Here's e'en as sweet amends made for a wrong now
 As one that gives a wound and pays the surgeon:
 All the smart's nothing, the great loss of blood,
 Or time of hind'rance. Well, I had a mother;
 185 I can dissemble too.—What wrongs have slipped Through anger's ignorance, aunt, my heart forgives.

GUARDIANO [Aside]
 Why, this' tuneful now!

HIPPOLITO And what I did, sister,
 Was all for honour's cause, which time to come
 Will approve to you.

LIVIA Being awaked to goodness,
 190 I understand so much, sir, and praise now
 The fortune of your arm, and of your safety;
 For by his death you've rid me of a sin
 As costly as e'er woman doted on.
 'T has pleased the Duke so well too that, behold, sir,
 [She gives him a letter]

195 He's sent you here your pardon, which I kissed
 With most affectionate comfort. When 'twas brought,
 Then was my fit just passed; it came so well, me-
 thought,
 To glad my heart.

HIPPOLITO I see his grace thinks on me.

LIVIA
 There's no talk now but of the preparation
 For the great marriage.

200 HIPPOLITO Does he marry her then?

LIVIA
 With all speed, suddenly, as fast as cost
 Can be laid on with many thousand hands.
 This gentleman and I had once a purpose
 To have honoured the first marriage of the Duke
 205 With an invention of his own. 'Twas ready,
 The pains well past, most of the charge bestowed on't;
 Then came the death of your good mother, niece,
 And turned the glory of it all to black.
 'Tis a device would fit these times so well too:
 210 Art's treasury not better. If you'll join,
 It shall be done; the cost shall all be mine.

HIPPOLITO
 You've my voice first; 'twill well approve my thankfulness
 For the Duke's love and favour.

LIVIA What say you, niece?

ISABELLA
 I am content to make one.

GUARDIANO The plot's full then.
 [To Livia] Your pages, madam, will make shift for Cupids. 215

LIVIA
 That will they, sir.

GUARDIANO You'll play your old part still.

LIVIA
 What, is't good? Troth, I have e'en forgot it.

GUARDIANO
 Why, Juno Pronuba, the marriage goddess.

LIVIA
 'Tis right indeed.

GUARDIANO [to Isabella]
 And you shall play the nymph
 That offers sacrifice to appease her wrath. 220

ISABELLA
 Sacrifice, good sir?

LIVIA
 Must I be appeased then?

GUARDIANO
 That's as you list yourself, as you see cause.

LIVIA
 Methinks 'twould show the more state in her deity
 To be incensed.

ISABELLA 'Twould; but my sacrifice
 Shall take a course to appease you, or I'll fail in't— 225 [Aside] And teach a sinful bawd to play a goddess.

GUARDIANO [to Hippolito]
 For our parts, we'll not be ambitious, sir.
 Please you walk in and see the project drawn,
 Then take your choice.

HIPPOLITO I weigh not, so I have one.
 Exeunt all but Livia

LIVIA
 How much ado have I to restrain fury 230
 From breaking into curses! O, how painful 'tis
 To keep great sorrow smothered! Sure I think
 'Tis harder to dissemble grief than love.
 Leantio, here the weight of thy loss lies,
 Which nothing but destruction can suffice. Exit 235

184 hind'rance injury, incapacity
 187 this' this is 189 approve demonstrate, confirm
 197 came so thus came 205 invention...own theatrical entertainment he devised himself
 206 charge expense
 212 voice vote, support
 214 make one be included plot's plot: outline of the dramatic action (a document on which actors' names might be noted)

 215 make shift for improvise as 218 Juno (sister and wife of Jove; patroness of marriage, also an archetype of the jealous wife) Pronuba presiding over marriage (one of several names indicating Juno's special attributes) 224 incensed enraged (punning on 'perfumed with incense', as 'Juno' is in 5.2)

227 For our parts (a) for our roles (b) as for us
 228 project drawn Refers to the plot (214) and perhaps also designs for scenery and costumes.
 229 weigh not don't mind
 so so long as 233 dissemble disguise, pretend not to have 234 here Presumably Livia gestures to her heart.

4.3 Oboes. Enter in great state the Duke and Bianca, richly attired, with lords, cardinals, ladies, and other attendants. They pass solemnly over. Enter Lord Cardinal in a rage, seeming to break off the ceremony

LORD CARDINAL
Cease, cease! Religious honours done to sin
Disparage virtue's reverence, and will pull Heaven's thunder upon Florence. Holy ceremonies
Were made for sacred uses, not for sinful.
5 Are these the fruits of your repentance, brother?
Better it had been you had never sorrowed
Than to abuse the benefit and return
To worse than where sin left you.
Vowed you then never to keep strumpet more;
10 And are you now so swift in your desires
To knit your honours and your life fast to her?
Is not sin sure enough to wretched man,
But he must bind himself in chains to't? Worse:
Must marriage, that immaculate robe of honour
15 That renders virtue glorious, fair, and fruitful
To her great master, be now made the garment
Of leprosy and foulness? Is this penitence
To sanctify hot lust? What is it otherways
Than worship done to devils? Is this the best 20 Amends that sin can make after her riots,
As if a drunkard, to appease heaven's wrath,
Should offer up his surfeit for a sacrifice?
If that be comely, then lust's offerings are
On wedlock's sacred altar.

DUKE Here you're bitter
25 Without cause, brother. What I vowed, I keep
As safe as you your conscience, and this needs not.
I taste more wrath in't than I do religion,
And envy more than goodness. The path now
I tread is honest, leads to lawful love
30 Which virtue, in her strictness, would not check.
I vowed no more to keep a sensual woman.
'Tis done: I mean to make a lawful wife of her.

LORD CARDINAL
He that taught you that craft,
Call him not master long; he will undo you.
35 Grow not too cunning for your soul, good brother.

Is it enough to use adulterous thefts
And then take sanctuary in marriage?
I grant, so long as an offender keeps
Close in a privileged temple, his life's safe;
But if he ever venture to come out, 40
And so be taken, then he surely dies for't.
So now you're safe; but when you leave this body,
Man's only privileged temple upon earth
In which the guilty soul takes sanctuary,
Then you'll perceive what wrongs chaste vows endure 45
When lust usurps the bed that should be pure.

BIANCA
Sir, I have read you over all this while
In silence, and I find great knowledge in you,
And severe learning; yet 'mongst all your virtues
I see not charity written, which some call 50
The first-born of religion, and I wonder
I cannot see't in yours. Believe it, sir,
There is no virtue can be sooner missed
Or later welcomed; it begins the rest,
And sets 'em all in order. Heaven and angels 55
Take great delight in a converted sinner;
Why should you then, a servant and professor,
Differ so much from them? If every woman
That commits evil should be therefore kept
Back in desires of goodness, how should virtue 60
Be known and honoured? From a man that's blind
To take a burning taper 'tis no wrong,
He never misses it; but to take light
From one that sees, that's injury and spite.
Pray, whether is religion better served: 65
When lives that are licentious are made honest,
Than when they still run through a sinful blood?
'Tis nothing virtue's temples to deface;
But build the ruins, there's a work of grace.

DUKE
I kiss thee for that spirit. Thou hast praised thy wit 70
A modest way.—On, on, there! Oboes

LORD CARDINAL Lust is bold,
And will have vengeance speak ere't be controlled. Exeunt

Finis Actus Quartus

4.3.2 Disparage degrade

3 Florence i.e. (a) the city (b) the Duke

16 her great master i.e. God

22 surfeit (a) transgression (b) vomit

26 needs not is unnecessary

28 envy malice

33 He i.e. the devil

35 for for the good of

36 use adulterous thefts i.e. habitually steal the pleasures of adultery. Recalls Leantio's description of Bianca's seduction from her parents as a theft, 1.1.37, etc.

39 privileged (with right of sanctuary)

49 severe (a) censorious (b) grave

49-55 yet...order Alludes to 1 Corinthians,

13:13, 'And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity' (King James Bible; Geneva has 'love' for 'charity'). In Protestant thinking, however, charity and good works proceed from faith, which is more important for salvation than works.

54 later more belatedly begins brings into existence

57 servant (of God)

professor professed Christian

65 whether in which of the two

67 Than 'Or' is logically required.

68 nothing i.e. no effort

deface destroy

69 build rebuild

5.1

Incipit Actus Quintus[An altar set forth for the masque.]Enter Guardiano [with a caltrop] and Ward

GUARDIANO

Speak, hast thou any sense of thy abuse?

Dost thou know what wrong's done thee?

WARD

I were an ass else.

I cannot wash my face but I am feeling on't.

GUARDIANO

Here, take this caltrop, then convey it secretly

5

Into the place I showed you. Look you, sir,

This is the trapdoor to't.

WARD I know that of old, uncle, since the last triumph.

Here rose up a devil with one eye, I remember, with a company of fireworks at's tail.

GUARDIANO

10

Prithee leave squibbing now. Mark me, and fail not;

But when thou hear'st me give a stamp, down with't;

The villain's caught then.

WARD

If I miss you, hang me.

I love to catch a villain, and your stamp shall go current, I warrant you. But how shall I rise up and let him down too, all at one hole? That will be a horrible puzzle. You know I have a part in't; I play Slander.

15

GUARDIANO

True, but never make you ready for't.

WARD No? My clothes are bought and all, and a foul fiend's head with a long contumelious tongue i'th' chaps on't,

20

a very fit shape for Slander i'th' out-parishes.

GUARDIANO

It shall not come so far; thou understand'st it not.

WARD

O, O!

GUARDIANO

He shall lie deep enough ere that time,

And stick first upon those.

WARD

Now I conceive you, guardianer.

GUARDIANO

Away; list to the privy stamp, that's all thy part.

5.1.0.3 caltrop (an instrument of war with four metal spikes arranged so that one always projects upwards)

3 feeling on't (a) sensing the wrong done me

6 trapdoor A usual feature of Jacobean stages. The space below the stage was symbolically associated with hell, as it was in the last triumph.

8 devil with one eye The imagined pageant figure has a phallic innuendo.

10 squibbing (a) making witty comments (b) letting off squibs

11 with't i.e. with the trapdoor

13 stamp (a) stamp of the foot (b) impression on coin, coinage (hence go current)

14–15 how . . . hole (with a sexual innuendo)

19 contumelious insolent

20 out-parishes suburbs (as places of scandal-mongering or of play-acting)

21 so far (in the performance)

23 those i.e. the caltrop's spikes

24 privy secret

25–6 Stamp . . . cuckolds Horn was considered an antidote for poison; wine was often used as a base for medicines.

25 Stamp grind to a powder

27 present instant

29 As even though

'tis certain (to succeed)

30 present act

32 his part (of lovesick shepherd)

WARD Stamp my horns in a mortar if I miss you, and give the powder in white wine to sick cuckolds, a very present remedy for the headache.

Exit [through the trapdoor, with the caltrop]

GUARDIANO

If this should any way miscarry now,

As, if the fool be nimble enough, 'tis certain,

The pages that present the swift-winged Cupids

Are taught to hit him with their shafts of love—

Fitting his part—which I have cunningly poisoned.

He cannot scape my fury; and those ills

Will be laid all on fortune, not our wills,

That's all the sport on't. For who will imagine

That at the celebration of this night

Any mischance that haps can flow from spite? Exit

Flourish. Enter, above, Duke, Bianca, Lord Cardinal, Fabritio, and other cardinals, lords, and ladies, in state

DUKE

Now our fair duchess, your delight shall witness

How you're beloved and honoured. All the glories

Bestowed upon the gladness of this night

Are done for your bright sake.

BIANCA

I am the more

In debt, my lord, to loves and courtesies

That offer up themselves so bounteously

To do me honoured grace without my merit.

DUKE

A goodness set in greatness, how it sparkles

Afar off like pure diamonds set in gold!

[To Bianca and Lord Cardinal] How perfect my desires were might I witness

But a fair noble peace 'twixt your two spirits!

The reconciliation would be more sweet to me

Than longer life to him that fears to die.

Good sir!

LORD CARDINAL

I profess peace, and am content.

DUKE

I'll see the seal upon't, and then 'tis firm.

LORD CARDINAL

You shall have all your wish.

37.1 above The main part of the stage is reserved for the main action of the masque.

The number of people is exceptionally large for the upper gallery, and the masquers must be able to pass cups to their audience; a dais or raised platform may have been put in place before 5.1, though Leslie Thomson (Studies in English Literature, 1500–1900 26 (1986), 331–43) has defended the use of the upper acting area.

44 To . . . merit Alludes to the Protestant doctrine that God's grace does not depend on the recipient's merit.

47 perfect fully contented

[He kisses Bianca]

DUKE I have all indeed now.

BIANCA [aside] But I have made surer work. This shall not blind me.
 55 He that begins so early to reprove,
 Quickly rid him, or look for little love.
 Beware a brother's envy; he's next heir too.
 Cardinal, you die this night; the plot's laid surely.
 In time of sports death may steal in securely.
 60 Then 'tis least thought on.
 For he that's most religious, holy friend,
 Does not at all hours think upon his end.
 He has his times of frailty, and his thoughts
 Their transportations too through flesh and blood,
 65 For all his zeal, his learning, and his light,
 As well as we, poor souls, that sin by night.
 [Fabritio gives Duke a paper]

DUKE What's this, Fabritio?

FABRITIO Marry, my lord, the model
 Of what's presented.

DUKE O, we thank their loves.—
 Sweet duchess, take your seat; list to the argument.
 [They sit, and he] reads
 70 'There is a nymph that haunts the woods and springs,
 In love with two at once, and they with her.
 Equal it runs; but, to decide these things,
 The cause to mighty Juno they refer,
 She being the marriage goddess. The two lovers,
 75 They offer sighs, the nymph a sacrifice,
 All to please Juno, who by signs discovers
 How the event shall be. So that strife dies.
 Then springs a second, for the man refused
 Grows discontent and, out of love abused,
 80 He raises Slander up, like a black fiend,
 To disgrace th'other, which pays him i'th' end.'

BIANCA In troth, my lord, a pretty, pleasing argument,
 And fits th'occasion well. Envy and Slander
 Are things soon raised against two faithful lovers;
 85 But comfort is, they are not long unrewarded.

Music

DUKE This music shows they're upon entrance now.

BIANCA [aside] Then enter all my wishes.
Enter [below] Hymen in yellow, Ganymede in a blue robe powdered with stars, and Hebe in a white robe with golden stars, with covered cups in their hands. They dance a short dance, then, bowing to the Duke, etc., Hymen speaks

HYMEN [giving Bianca a cup]
 To thee, fair bride, Hymen offers up
 Of nuptial joys this the celestial cup.
 Taste it, and thou shalt ever find 90 Love in thy bed, peace in thy mind.

BIANCA We'll taste you sure; 'twere pity to disgrace
 So pretty a beginning.
 [She drinks]

DUKE 'Twas spoke nobly.

GANYMEDE Two cups of nectar have we begged from Jove.
 Hebe, give that to innocence, I this to love.
 95 [He gives Duke a cup, and Hebe gives Lord Cardinal a cup]
 Take heed of stumbling more; look to your way;
 Remember still the Via Lactea.
 [The Duke and Lord Cardinal drink]

HEBE Well, Ganymede, you have more faults, though not so known.
 I spilt one cup, but you have filched many a one.

HYMEN No more; forbear. For Hymen's heart
 100 In love we met, and so let's part. Exeunt masquers

DUKE But soft: here's no such persons in the argument
 As these three, Hymen, Hebe, Ganymede.
 The actors that this model here discovers
 Are only four, Juno, a nymph, two lovers.
 105

BIANCA This is some antemasque, belike, my lord,

64 transportations travellings too i.e. like ours
 65 light spiritual enlightenment
 67 model summary
 69 argument outline of the plot
 76 discovers reveals
 77 event outcome
 81 which pays him Either raising Slander chastizes (pays) th'other, or th'other chastizes him for doing so.
 85 unrewarded unpunished (for raising Envy and Slander)

 87.1-5.1.101 Enter...masquers This unexpected antemasque has been arranged by Bianca, in order to poison the Lord Cardinal.
 87.1 Hymen God of marriage. Yellow is the colour he traditionally wears.
Ganymede Zeus (Jove) was prompted by homoerotic desire to carry him off to be his cupbearer.
 87.2 powdered sprinkled

Hebe (daughter of Zeus)
 96-7 Take...Lactea Alludes to a myth about the formation of the Milky Way (Via Lactea) in which Hebe stumbled on a star and spilt the wine or milk that she was carrying in her cup.
 98-9 Well...one Ganymede's drunkenness accounts for confusion between the cups.
 99 spilt Perhaps jocular for 'drank'.
 106 antemasque An episode (usually comic) before the main masque.

[She throws flaming gold upon Isabella's lap]
 Our brother Jove
 155 Never denies us of his burning treasure,
 T'express bounty.
Isabella falls and dies
 DUKE She falls down upon't.
 What's the conceit of that?
 FABRITIO As overjoyed, belike.
 Too much prosperity overjoys us all,
 And she has her lapful, it seems, my lord.
 DUKE
 160 This swerves a little from the argument though.
 Look you, my lords.
 GUARDIANO [aside]
 All's fast. Now comes my part to toll him hither;
 Then with a stamp given he's dispatched as cunningly.
 HIPPOLITO
 Stark dead. O, treachery! Cruelly made away!
 [He strikes the floor in grief. The trapdoor opens, and Guardiano falls through] 165 How's that?
 FABRITIO
 Look, there's one of the lovers dropped away too.
 DUKE
 Why, sure this plot's drawn false; here's no such thing.
 LIVIA
 O, I am sick to th' death. Let me down quickly.
 This fume is deadly. O, 't has poisoned me!
 [She is let down to the stage, with the Cupids]
 170 My subtlety is sped: her art has quitted me;
 My own ambition pulls me down to ruin. [She dies]
 HIPPOLITO [to Isabella]
 Nay, then I kiss thy cold lips, and applaud
 This thy revenge in death.
Cupids shoot [at Hippolito]
 FABRITIO Look, Juno's down too.

What makes she there? Her pride should keep aloft.
 She was wont to scorn the earth in other shows.
 175 Methinks her peacock feathers are much pulled.
 HIPPOLITO
 O, death runs through my blood, in a wild flame too.
 Plague of those Cupids! Some lay hold on 'em.
 Let 'em not scape; they have spoiled me. The shaft's deadly.
 DUKE
 I have lost myself in this quite. 180
 HIPPOLITO
 My great lords, we are all confounded.
 DUKE How?
 HIPPOLITO
 Dead; and I worse.
 FABRITIO Dead? My girl dead? I hope
 My sister Juno has not served me so.
 HIPPOLITO
 Lust and forgetfulness has been amongst us,
 And we are brought to nothing. Some blest charity 185
 Lend me the speeding pity of his sword
 To quench this fire in blood. Leantio's death
 Has brought all this upon us—now I taste it—
 And made us lay plots to confound each other.
 The event so proves it; and man's understanding 190
 Is riper at his fall than all his lifetime.
 [Pointing to Livia] She, in a madness for her lover's death,
 Revealed a fearful lust in our near bloods,
 For which I am punished dreadfully and unlooked for;
 Proved her own ruin too. Vengeance met vengeance 195
 Like a set match, as if the plagues of sin
 Had been agreed to meet here all together.
 But how her fawning partner fell I reach not,
 Unless caught by some springe of his own setting;
 For, on my pain, he never dreamed of dying. 200
 The plot was all his own, and he had cunning
 Enough to save himself; but 'tis the property

154.1 flaming gold This and some other staging details come from a manuscript note in a copy of the 1657 edition. The reference to golden days (152) and Isabella's lapful of prosperity (158), taken with Livia's suggestion that the burning treasure (155) is borrowed from Jove, suggests that the effect is of a golden shaft of lightning or a shower of gold (see note to 159). An ornamented arrow or short spear might deliver the poison most effectively, and might be suitably phallic.
 155 burning Refers to the flames represented, and to the burning effects of the poison.
 157 conceit significance
 159 she has her lapful Apparently the flaming gold strikes Isabella in the lap. This suggests to Fabritio an analogy with Jupiter's rape of Danae in a shower of gold.

160 argument plot summary
 162 fast firmly in place toll him lure him (also 'ring his death-bell') hither i.e. to the trapdoor
 164 Stark... away Spoken of Isabella.
 170 is sped has succeeded (ironic)
quitted requited
 173.1 Cupids shoot As an ironized emblem of love this effectively coincides with Hippolito's embrace of Isabella.
 174 makes she is she doing
 175 other shows Alludes to masques with Juno such as Jonson's Hymenaei (1606) and the masque in Shakespeare's The Tempest (1610-11 onwards).
 176 peacock feathers See note to 134.1.
 179 spoiled destroyed
 180 I...quite The Duke is still trying to match the action with the written argument.

182 worse i.e. in agony from the poison
 184 forgetfulness moral obliviousness
 185 we... nothing Recalls Jeremiah, 10:24, 'O lord, correct me; but with judgement, not in thine anger, lest thou bring me to nothing'.
 186 speeding hastening
 188 taste it 'Taste death' is biblical.
 190 event outcome
 193 near closely related
 194 unlooked for unexpectedly
 195 Proved She proved
 196 set prearranged match (a) conspiracy to rob (the primary sense) (b) contest. Meet (197) accordingly suggests (a) gather, or (b) encounter as opponents.
 198 reach understand
 199 springe snare
 200 on my pain Refers to damnation or the effect of the poison.

- Of guilty deeds to draw your wise men downward;
Therefore the wonder ceases.—O, this torment!
- DUKE
Our guard below there!
Enter a Lord [below] with a guard [bearing halberds]
- LORD [to Hippolito] My lord.
205 HIPPOLITO [aside] Run and meet death then,
And cut off time and pain.
[He runs upon a halberd, and dies]
- LORD [to the Duke] Behold, my lord.
He's run his breast upon a weapon's point.
- DUKE
Upon the first night of our nuptial honours,
Destruction play her triumph, and great mischiefs
210 Masque in expected pleasures! 'Tis prodigious;
They're things most fearfully ominous; I like 'em not.
Remove these ruined bodies from our eyes.
[The Lord and guard exeunt with the bodies]
- BIANCA [aside, looking on Lord Cardinal]
Not yet? No change? When falls he to the earth?
[Enter a Lord, above]
- LORD [giving Duke a paper]
215 Please but your excellence to peruse that paper,
Which is a brief confession from the heart
Of him that fell first, ere his soul departed;
And there the darkness of these deeds speaks plainly.
'Tis the full scope, the manner, and intent.
His ward, that ignorantly let him down,
220 Fear put to present flight at the voice of him.
- BIANCA [aside] Nor yet?
DUKE [to Lord Cardinal]
Read, read; for I am lost in sight and strength.
- LORD CARDINAL
My noble brother!
- BIANCA O, the curse of wretchedness!
225 My deadly hand is fall'n upon my lord.
Destruction take me to thee!—Give me way.
The pains and plagues of a lost soul upon him
That hinders me a moment.
- DUKE
My heart swells bigger yet. Help here; break't ope.
My breast flies open next. [He dies]
- BIANCA O, with the poison
230 That was prepared for thee, thee, Cardinal.
'Twas meant for thee.
- LORD CARDINAL Poor prince!
BIANCA Accursèd error!
[To Duke] Give me thy last breath, thou infected bosom,
And wrap two spirits in one poisoned vapour. 235
[She kisses him]
Thus, thus reward thy murderer, and turn death
Into a parting kiss. My soul stands ready at my lips, E'en vexed to stay one minute after thee.
- LORD CARDINAL
The greatest sorrow and astonishment
That ever struck the general peace of Florence 240
Dwells in this hour.
- BIANCA So my desires are satisfied:
I feel death's power within me.
Thou hast prevailed in something, cursèd poison,
Though thy chief force was spent in my lord's bosom.
But my deformity in spirit's more foul; 245
A blemished face best fits a leprous soul.
What make I here? These are all strangers to me,
Not known but by their malice now thou'rt gone;
Nor do I seek their pities.
[She drinks from the poisoned cup]
- LORD CARDINAL O, restrain
Her ignorant wilful hand!
- BIANCA Now do; 'tis done. 250
Leantio, now I feel the breach of marriage
At my heart-breaking. O, the deadly snares
That women set for women, without pity
Either to soul or honour! Learn by me
To know your foes. In this belief I die: 255
Like our own sex we have no enemy, no enemy.
- LORD [to Lord Cardinal] See, my lord,
What shift she's made to be her own destruction.
- BIANCA
Pride, greatness, honours, beauty, youth, ambition,
You must all down together, there's no help for't. 260
Yet this my gladness is, that I remove Tasting the same death in a cup of love. [She dies]
- LORD CARDINAL
Sin, what thou art these ruins show too piteously.
Two kings on one throne cannot sit together,
But one must needs down, for his title's wrong; 265
So where lust reigns, that prince cannot reign long.
Exeunt [with the bodies]
- Finis

209 triumph (a) theatrical spectacle (b) celebration of victory (c) trump card
210 prodigious monstrous, ill-omened
216 him that fell first (Guardiano)
218 scope end in view
219 let him down (through the trapdoor)
223 wretchedness wickedness (both evil acts that misfire and the state of evil that leads to damnation)
228 My...bigger The blood was thought to swell up the heart at death.

239 astonishment shock, dismay
243 in something to some extent
246 A blemished face Bianca's face may be disfigured by the poison, or she may here scratch her face with her nails. Alternatively, Bianca claims that an unblemished face matched with a leprous soul, such as her own, is the greater deformity.
leprous Compare the application to Bianca at 2.2.423-4 and 4.3.17.

256 no enemy The repetition of these words might trail off into death or be spoken emphatically.
261 remove depart, die
264 Two...together From Seneca, Thyestes, 444, 'non capit regnum duos' (a throne will not hold two kings); possibly proverbial.
266 that prince i.e. the prince of that state

Women beware Women.

THE PARTS

Men

LEANTIO (504 lines): Citizen; Lord Cardinal (or Servant or Hymen or Lord), Hymen (or Lord Cardinal), Lord (or Lord Cardinal), Servant (or Lord Cardinal)
DUKE (271 lines): Sordido
GUARDIANO (244 lines): Hymen, Lord, [Messenger]
WARD (205 lines): Citizen, Servant, Hymen, Lord, [Messenger]
HIPPOLITO (180 lines): Hymen
LORD CARDINAL (130 lines): Messenger; Leantio or Sordido
SORDIDO (113 lines): Duke (or Lord Cardinal or Citizen or Servant or Messenger), Lord Cardinal (or Duke or Citizen or Servant), Citizen (or Duke or Lord Cardinal), Messenger (or Duke), Servant (or Duke or Lord Cardinal)
FABRITIO (98 lines): Messenger, [Servant]
MESSENGER (19 lines): any but Leantio, Duke, Hippolito, [Guardiano, Ward]
LORD (12 lines; 5.1): any but Duke, Lord Cardinal, Fabritio, Hippolito, Guardiano
SERVANT (7 lines): Citizen, Hymen, Lord; Leantio or Messenger; Ward [or Sordido]
HYMEN (6 lines; 5.1): any but Duke, Lord Cardinal, Fabritio, Hippolito, Guardiano CITIZEN (5 lines; 1.3): any but Duke, Lord Cardinal

Boys

LIVIA (581 lines): a Lady, Ganymede, Hebe, Page; a Boy or Apprentice
BIANCA (421 lines): Page
MOTHER (226 lines): a Lady, Page, Ganymede, Hebe
ISABELLA (215 lines): a Lady, Page; a Boy or Apprentice
FIRST LADY (10 lines; 4.1): any but Bianca, other Lady SECOND LADY (7 lines; 4.1): any but Bianca, other Lady
GANYMEDE (4 lines; 5.1): any but Bianca, Hebe, Isabella APPRENTICE (3 lines; 1.3): any but Mother, Bianca, Boys
HEBE (2 lines; 5.1): any but Bianca, Ganymede, Isabella
FIRST BOY (1 line; 1.3): any but Mother, Bianca, Apprentice, other Boys
SECOND BOY (1 line; 1.3): any but Mother, Bianca, Apprentice, other Boys
THIRD BOY (1 line; 1.3): any but Mother, Bianca, Apprentice, other Boys
PAGE (1 line; 4.2): any but Livia, Isabella Fabritio, Hippolito, and Guardiano probably appear among the knights and nobility in 1.3.
Most crowded scene: 5.1, excluding its opening episode: 12 characters (+ 2? cardinals, 2? lords, 2? ladies, all mute, with mute nymphs, and Cupids able to double with Hebe and Ganymede)

MEASURE FOR MEASURE: A GENETIC TEXT

Edited by John Jowett

Measure for Measure must have been first written and performed in 1603–4. On St Stephen's Night, 26 December 1604, the King's Men staged, according to the Revels office accounts, 'a play called Measure for Measure' by 'Shaxberd' as part of the Christmas festivities at the Whitehall Banqueting Hall. Measure first appeared in the Shakespeare First Folio of 1623 (JAGGARD). Its credentials as a Shakespeare play are sound. However, it seems clear that the 1623 text had undergone adaptation by Middleton. The present edition is accordingly designed to highlight Middleton's contribution.

Even before the hand of a reviser other than Shakespeare becomes an issue, there are grounds for asserting that Measure was revived no earlier than in the last years of Shakespeare's professional career. The purity of diction is implausible for a Shakespeare play of 1603–4, particularly one such as Measure that insistently intertwines the passionate and the scurrilous. Asseverations that do exist repeatedly use phrases that look like unShakespearean substitutions for Shakespearean oaths. The play has almost certainly been expurgated of oaths at some time after the 1606 Act of Parliament to restrain abuses of players had made blasphemy on stage illegal. JAGGARD's act divisions suggest a later date still. They are unlikely to have been present in the original playbook, which would have been written for performance without act-intervals, as was usual when the King's Men first brought a play to the stage. Act-breaks would have been needed for any production after about 1609, when the King's Men began to play at the Blackfriars and to observe the hall theatre convention of act-intervals. On both counts, the text printed in 1623 would seem to derive (indirectly) from a manuscript prepared for a revival.

The dating of this event can be pushed markedly later than 1609. The one and only song in Measure, 'Take, O take those lips away', happens to be positioned immediately after one of the act-breaks. This lyric also occurs, with a second stanza, in the Fletcherian tragedy Rollo, Duke of Normandy (1617–20; also known as The Bloody Brother). Every indication is that the song originated in Rollo. The song fits the context of Rollo considerably better than that of Measure, and, as the two stanzas were influenced by a common source, the Latin lyric 'Ad Lydiam', it can reasonably be inferred that they were written as a single piece. Accordingly, the song must have been introduced into Measure for the occasion of a revival staged several years after Shakespeare's death.

Before the introduction of 'Take, O take those lips away' into Measure, the Duke's passage through the city in the eventual Act 3 would lead directly to his meeting with Isabella at the moated grange after the song episode in the eventual Act 4. This conclusion seems inevitable unless an episode was deleted to make way for the new act-break and song. In either case, it seems that both sides of the act-break were affected by the alterations. The Duke's soliloquy 'He who the sword of heaven will bear', a moralizing summary written in sententious rhyming couplets, is well suited to its function at the end of JAGGARD's Act 3. In contrast, the six-line soliloquy 'O place and greatness' which in JAGGARD stands as the time allotted for Isabella to explain her plight to Mariana and put to her, without offence, the difficult proposal that she should substitute for Isabella as Angelo's sexual partner in the walled garden, has struck many critics as grotesquely short measure. It is further suspect because it is obscurely if at all relevant to its immediate context. This situation seems to have arisen because in the adaptation the two soliloquies were transposed. The longer one, previously in 4.1, could now produce an effective close to the act, matching the strong new opening to the fourth act with its interpolated song.

A short piece of dialogue forms a bridge between the song and Mariana's exit to leave the Duke and Isabella on stage (4.1.7–25). The technique hereabouts of reshaping extant text and adding minimal and merely functional new writing is a reminder that a posthumous revival is an enterprise of a fundamentally different complexion from dramatic authorship.

But a longer passage at the beginning of 1.2 is a more straightforward and sustained piece of composition for the adaptation. It can be dated with some confidence to a time after the composition of Rollo, so providing an independent affirmation that the play was adapted posthumously, and the case for Middleton's authorship of the passage is particularly strong. In JAGGARD, the first 79 lines of 1.2 marked in the present text as an interpolation and the episode after it marked as a cancel are printed as a continuous sequence. This causes a duplication. First Mistress Overdone delivers the news of Claudio's arrest for getting Juliet with child, then, suddenly ignorant of the situation, she prompts Pompey to deliver the same news to her. The sequence might be attributed to Shakespeare's oversight (though a rather puzzling one), or to a result of his revision, were it not that the opening episode includes a striking cluster of grammatical and lexical features that would not be expected in a Shakespeare text. It is Middleton who favours the linguistic forms that mark this passage out from the rest of the play and from Shakespere's usage more generally: 'has' (as against 'hath'), 'whilst' (as against 'while'), 'ay' (as against 'yes'), and 'between' (as against 'betwixt'). Together, these preferences not only distinguish Middleton from Shakespeare, but favour him against other possible candidates for a revision of a King's Men play such as Philip Massinger, John Webster, and John Fletcher. Furthermore, whereas only four relatively unremarkable words in the passage are found in Shakespeare's works but not Middleton's, an impressive array of individual words, distinctive phrases, and idiosyncratic turns of thought can be paralleled in Middleton but not Shakespeare. Finally, as described below, the passage is peculiarly rich in topical references; these are conspicuously awkward in relation to the play's date of original composition, but point strongly to 1621, a time when Shakespeare had been dead for several years, but Middleton remained an active dramatist. It seems, then, that Middleton wrote a passage to replace the original opening of the scene.

There are, then, two major alterations that, on account of a range of different but converging signals, can be assigned to a 1621 adaptation. Other changes made at the same time may be harder to detect, yet if adaptation affected two passages it could potentially affect others as well. And indeed it probably did so. With varying degrees of probability, a number of other changes can be identified.

First, and most certainly, the revision evidently accentuated the role of Juliet. This was achieved simply by bringing her onstage in two scenes. She is mentioned in 1.2, but she says nothing and is not referred to in any way that supposes her presence. Virtually the same situation happens again in Act 5. Notes to the stage directions for Juliet's first and final entries in the adapted manuscript would have allowed her to appear in both scenes as a silent moral comment, a visible reminder of at least one physical consequence of sexual activity (Overdone and the gentlemen embody others).

As is the case with Juliet's presence in both 1.2 and 5.1, the changes in 1.2 evidently led on to other, related alterations involving the roles of Lucio, the Bawd, and the Clown. Whereas Lucio's part in bringing the news of Claudio's arrest to Isabella undoubtedly belongs to the original text, his presence is suspect in 2.2, the scene in which Isabella first visits Angelo. It seems likely that some of the Provost's speeches were transferred to Lucio, and that some of his lines, such as those at 2.2.132, 135, and 159, were written in by Middleton. Lucio's fervent yet cynical support for Isabella both augments his role in the play and adds a note of ironic detachment to the intensity of her debate with Angelo.

More speculatively, the objective of highlighting Lucio's role in the early scenes may have affected the sequence of the scenes at the end of Act 1. As is explained in the commentary note to 1.3(b), there are indications that Shakespeare would originally have staged Lucio's interview with Isabella before the Duke's conversation with the Friar. Once again, an act break is implicated, for the final text puts Lucio on stage just before the first act interval. There may also have been considerations of doubling actors' roles (see commentary note to 1.3(a)).

The Bawd is both a disreputable figure, like Lucio and his companions, and probably a role for a boy actor, like Juliet and the singing boy. As has already been suggested, her first appearance in 1.2, like Lucio's, must belong to the adaptation. What was added to her role elsewhere was probably her name, Mistress Overdone, and the lines that make reference to it at 2.1.79–81, 2.1.187–94, and 4.3.1–38. Shakespeare's Bawd was probably nameless, like her equivalent in Pericles (and like other roles in many other Shakespeare plays, including, in Measure, the Duke—named nowhere in the dialogue, speech-prefixes and stage directions—and the Provost). The name is itself distinctively Middletonian. It can scarcely be coincidence that in No Wit a significant character who is a sexually decrepit gentleman is called Master Overdone. In principle, the influence between Measure and No Wit could run in either direction, but the type of name is also in Middleton's vein. He frequently coins names that involve a compound, and names that indicate a Jonsonian character-type. More specifically, his names often suggest a sexual identity: Mistress Newcut, Mistress Cleveland, Mistress Openwork, Castiza, Kix, Whorehound, Touchwood, De Flores, and so on. Shakespeare examples are far fewer, and they tend to include a forename; 'Mistress Kate Keepdown' in Measure itself is one example. A particularly striking Middleton parallel that involves a sexual identity constructed on 'Mistress' followed by the antithesis of Over followed by a monosyllable ending in 'n' is Mistress Underman in Chaste Maid. If the name is not in itself sufficient to prove Middleton's intervention, the inference is effectively confirmed by textual dislocations in all three passages mentioning it, as can be seen in the commentary notes.

The passages in 2.1 are brief enough, but the mention of Mistress Overdone in 4.3 falls within a substantial speech that can be demonstrated on other grounds to have been written by Middleton. As an entirely separate set-piece for a clown, this speech is characteristic of the kind of material that might be added during the adaptation of any play. In this case, the element of allusive social satire accords fully with Middleton, the device of the catalogue of representative figures has a close parallel elsewhere in his writing, and the speech contains a proliferation of words and phrases that are strikingly in Middleton's vein. The addition is consistent with other changes to the play, and adaptations more generally, in that it augments the role of a comic figure. It develops the play's picture of a violent and decadent society, using a comic mode of delivery to offer harsh glances at urban vices.

Another passage probably added by Middleton helps to counterpoise this added emphasis on the play's lawless characters. It is the brief and far from distinctively Shakespearean exchange between Escalus and the Justice at the end of 2.1, in which the need to restrain vice firmly is given almost choric articulation. The passage is, like Pompey's speech, separable from the rest of the action. It introduces a character, the Justice, who, like the two Gentlemen, appears nowhere else in the play. It contains sentiments that are surprising from Escalus, to the effect that mercy and pardon are dangerous and cannot be extended to Claudio. We might think of Escalus elsewhere as the voice of a Shakespearean tolerance; the more judgemental attitude of this brief dialogue might accord with the Calvinist temper found in Middleton, and, like the exposure of vice in 1.2, it modifies the play's opposition to puritanism. If the Duke's laxity has been extreme, the extension of secular law to punish moral lapses severely can accordingly be justified.

Even as the adaptation makes the action more rooted in a city that closely resembles London, it adds an urgent relevance to the play's setting in Vienna. This location would have had little special relevance in 1603-4, and in some respects is decidedly unexpected. None of the play's recognized sources or analogues is set in Vienna, and Shakespeare elsewhere shows virtually no interest in either Vienna or Austria. Moreover, in contradiction of the linguistically Germanic setting, the personal names in Measure are consistently Italian. Some of the analogues refer to the Duke of Ferrara. 'Ferrara' is metrically identical with 'Vienna', and is mentioned in Shakespeare and John Fletcher's All is True, 3.2.324 (in a passage usually attributed to Shakespeare). There are reasons to suppose that Shakespeare set the play in Italian Ferrara, and that Middleton altered the setting specifically in order to establish the Thirty Years War as a backdrop.

We suggest that Italian names were deleted from the dialogue in three places to make the change of location less obvious. At 1.1.2, and perhaps also elsewhere, defective metre suggests that Shakespeare may have given the Duke the personal name Vincentio—otherwise mysteriously absent, and preserved only in 'The Names of All the Actors'. Similar considerations apply to Francisca in 1.4: she is named in the opening stage direction but not the dialogue, and the verse at 1.4.2 is metrically defective. Earlier, Middleton seems to have reflected Measure's pairing of Isabella and Francisca when he made characters with the same names sisters-in-law in The Witch. Francisca in that play is therefore equivalent to Juliet in Measure, and, similarly, is pregnant: an unchaste sister-in-law rather than a member of a holy 'sisterhood'.

The adaptation may have introduced more substantial cuts. The extant text is one of the longer Shakespeare comedies, so the grounds for supposing extensive cutting are far slighter than in the case of Macbeth, which is conspicuously short for a Shakespeare tragedy. Nevertheless, any metrical irregularity or discontinuity in sense might hypothetically be the result of cutting. At 1.1.8-9 there is a crux that involves both sense and metre. Rather than emend, as in the Oxford Shakespeare text, we have here suggested a lacuna resulting from a cut.

Even before adaptation, Measure would have been amongst the most Middletonian of Shakespeare's plays. With the possible exception of the Plautine Comedy of Errors, Measure is Shakespeare's only strictly urban comedy. It has affinities of tone and subject matter with verse satire and satiric prose pamphlets, both of which are exemplified in Middleton's work. In the first instance Shakespeare was responding to writers of Middleton's ilk—witty, harsh, satiric, city-oriented. No other dramatist of the period is so persistently concerned with the politics of the libido and the economics of sexual exchange.

Measure itself seems to have influenced Middleton long before he adapted it. Though both Middleton and Fletcher had collaborated with Shakespeare, Middleton's predilections would certainly have made him the more obvious choice to adapt Measure. He had already adapted Macbeth, and indeed is the only person known to have adapted a Shakespeare play for the professional theatre (other than Shakespeare himself) before Sir William Davenant turned his hand to the trade after the Restoration. Davenant began, by coincidence or otherwise, with the very plays adapted by Middleton: Measure, adapted as The Law against Lovers (1662), and Macbeth (1663).

From the point of view of the King's Men and Middleton, Measure must have seemed pointedly significant in 1621 on account of its concern with justice. The word occurs considerably more often in this than any other Shakespeare play, and Measure shows justice as a principle whose enactment is both problematic and subject to considerable abuse. In 1621 the Lord Chancellor, Sir Francis Bacon, was impeached by Parliament on charges of bribery and corruption. Though the offences urged against him were financial rather than sexual, his impeachment drew attention to a conflict between personal gratification and the exercise of the highest judicial office in the land. As Bacon's adversary Sir Edward Coke declared, 'nothing is of so much moment as the taking away of corrupt judges'. The principles and morality of justice had therefore become specific matters of public concern and discussion in the very year Measure was evidently revived. In this edition we identify (on other grounds) Angelo's 'What knows the law | That thieves do pass on thieves?' (2.1.21-2) as Middleton's addition, and there may be other, less attributable, alterations of this kind. One can only speculate as to whether passages such as Isabella's offer to 'bribe' Angelo around 2.2.148 might have been slightly sharpened during adaptation. Few readers will doubt, however, that Isabella's explanation at 2.2.152-8 belongs to the original text. The Shakespearean play's concern with judicial process would have made it sharply pertinent in 1621 before any adaptation.

The new passage in 1.2 contained lines that were intensely topical to the early 1620s in other ways, and that both added to and thematized the play's participation in public debate. Lucio's conversation with his companions supplies a sensationalizing but localizing environment variously for the Duke's supposed urgent affairs out of Vienna, for Claudio's sexual misdemeanour as a topic for rumour-mongering, and for Lucio's role as news-bringer to Isabella in the convent, not to mention the rumours he later promotes about the Duke's sexual conduct.

The 'poverty' of 1.2.78 alludes to the economic depression of 1619-24, perhaps the severest England had experienced to that time, and another matter of debate in the 1621 Parliament. The opening lines refer to pirates. Only as of about 1609 did pirates become a regular menace to English shipping. Between 21 October 1620 and 22 September 1621 Sir Robert Mansell was at sea leading an expedition to strike against pirate bases in the Mediterranean, but with little success, and on 20 October 1621 John Chamberlain recorded news that pirates had captured no less than fifty-seven British merchant vessels.

Given the likelihood that Middleton switched the location from Ferrara to Vienna, the allusions to the Thirty Years War are especially significant. A few years later, in A Game at Chess, Middleton was to take a militant Protestant stance against the ambitions of Counter-Reformation diplomacy. He probably alludes to the Palatinate wars in that play, and certainly does so in World Tossed at Tennis (878–9) and Quiet Life (5.1.112). At the opening of 1.2 of Measure Middleton seizes on the significance of Vienna to the moment of the revival, as the seat of the Catholic Emperor Ferdinand II, and as a city at war. The Hungarian prince Bethlen Gábor (known to the English as Bethlehem Gabor or as Gabriel) had joined the Protestant alliance; as a gesture of defiance towards the Emperor's title of King of Hungary, he was elected King in 1620, so making a 'King of Hungary' an enemy of Vienna. His troops made incursions against Austrian strongholds in Bohemia, and into Austria itself; by mid-September 1621 they lay within sight of the walls of Vienna.

War in Europe prompted the innovation of newspapers, in the form of news-sheets or 'corantos' presenting regular reports from Vienna and other centres of conflict. The early issues (2 December 1620 to 2 September 1621) were printed in Holland, but production soon shifted to London. The news-sheets of 1621 gave constant reminders of the Hungarian troops' progress, new cities besieged, new villages burnt. But dispatches from Vienna in the news-sheets of 12 September and 6 October note a new move towards peace. Bethlen had begun working towards a separate peace with the Emperor, which materialized as the Treaty of Nikolsburg. By 13 December Hungarian forces in Bohemia had surrendered to the Emperor; the treaty was signed on 31 December, and by 11 February 1622 the Spanish ambassador in London, Count Gondomar, had declared that 'all the affairs of Hungary are settled'.

Measure was probably revised after 6 October, when the news-sheet was issued with details of lords of the Catholic League negotiating with Bethlen. If so, Middleton was writing at a time when the outcome was in the balance. Bethlen was in the midst of a rapid about-turn that could lead to a settlement. King James and others in England were dismayed by the alliance between James's son-in-law Frederick, the Elector Palatine, and Bethlen, as a prince supported by the Turks, and they were anxious for peace generally. A treaty between the Hungarians and Vienna would, however, be a deep disappointment to those who favoured a united military campaign against the Catholic Empire. In the mean time Bethlen's troops continued to raid and burn, and, as he had used similar negotiations earlier in the year merely to buy time whilst awaiting Turkish aid, a successful conclusion to the peace-talks was far from assured.

Lucio and the gentlemen are at once soldiers and, as JAGGARD's list of roles describes them, fantastics ('Lucio, a fantastique. | 2. Other like Gentlemen'). As soldiers they have a vested interest in the continuance of war: 'There's not a soldier of us all that in the thanksgiving before meat do relish the petition well that prays for peace'. Similarly, as frequenters of brothels they have a vested interest in Mistress Overdone and the domestic news she brings about Claudio's arrest. The adapted scene in Measure recognizes a double existence of news: on the one hand, a means whereby urgent external realities are negotiated (Parliament itself discussed the options of war and peace in late 1621); on the other hand, a trivial commodity-object in itself. When these gentlemen chat about war and plunder abroad, and then lechery and venereal disease at home, they have a high stake in the issues. But this does not prevent them from reducing mortal matters to topics for point-scoring and cynical banter, assigning to an item of news a value equivalent to an item of fashionable dress.

The instability of news in being at once important and ephemeral relates to the ambiguity of Vienna as a place of the here-and-now, like the audience's London, and as a faraway stronghold of an enemy power. Middleton's Vienna is a city at war with an immediacy that does not apply to London, and yet the actual Vienna, unlike England, was not in any obvious way a state whose well-being was threatened by pirates; unlike London, it was not a maritime city from which sailors would regularly put forth to sea. The references are eclectic; the effect is to locate the play both here and there. This 'here' and 'there' is defined by a particular textual transmission that runs from news-sheet correspondent to reader, and by a particular physical transmission along vulnerable trade routes from central Europe to the Low Countries and so to England. News of the peace negotiations is one of the very few things in the play to come from outside Vienna. Likewise, for the audience, the representation of news from afar is a thin slit of a window not only onto the London outside the theatre but also onto the distant city of Vienna itself. The momentous ephemerality of news is here absorbed to the stage, so as to correlate with the momentous ephemerality of theatre itself.

The revision was concerned not only to make the play topical, but also to intervene to make the play's structure, style, and fascinations match the dramaturgy of an indoor hall theatre in the early 1620s. The revision might have introduced all the act intervals, and Middleton approached the whole task of revision with a strong sense of structure. Critics have described the moment when the Duke steps forward in 3.1 to take control of Isabella's destiny as a crucial hinge that divides the play in two: between the predominance of Isabella and the Duke, verse and prose, passion and manipulation, the tragic and comic faces of tragicomedy. This structure has affinities with the emphatic division of Winter's Tale or The Changeling into two contrasted phases. But Winter's Tale interrupts the action with a Chorus who draws attention to the passage of seventeen years, and The Changeling introduces an extravagant dumb-show at the beginning of Act 4 to divide Beatrice-Joanna's maidenhood from her adulterous marriage; in contrast, the hinge moment in Measure is formally unmarked. It happens quite near the beginning of an exceptionally long sequence of action. From the point of view of a reviser establishing a five-part act structure, the hinge was unusable. The introduction of a unique song at the beginning of the new fourth act imposes a new two-part structure in which the song is a formal marker, like the Chorus in Winter's Tale, or the dumb-show in The Changeling. The act-interval moats the grange from Vienna; the song that follows it reinforces that separation and affirms a new turning point.

As the example of Macbeth shows, it was not unusual for revivals to introduce new songs into a play, and Middleton followed this practice. The revival of A Fair Quarrel similarly introduced (as the second-issue title-page of 1617 advertises) the new addition of the Bawd's song. At one stroke this combines salient features of the adaptation of Measure in 1.2, with the bawd, and in 4.1, with the song. Middleton adapted and shortened another writer's song at the beginning of a scene in Trick (4.5.1–4), where the initial spectacle is of Audrey spinning while either she or the Boy sings; Dampit's entry is a discovery. Middleton probably also cut a stanza from his own 'Venus is Cupid's only joy' when adapting it from Masque of Cupids to More Dissemblers. The dramatic technique compares strikingly with the 'melancholy strains' of the song 'To be chaste is woman's glory' at the beginning of More Dissemblers. This is sung offstage to give an emotive impression of the feelings and predicament of another woman, the Duchess in More Dissemblers. Her vows of celibacy after the death of her husband can be compared with Mariana's loyalty to the memory of the man who abandoned her. The Duchess, like Mariana (and indeed Dampit), is peculiarly isolated from the world of the court and city, and the song is one means whereby that isolation is expressed. Both songs are, moreover, strong moments of initiation. They introduce a new female character without any preceding dialogue, and in More Dissemblers the song begins not only an act but the entire play.

The new act-break and song in Measure pre-colour the action that follows. 'Take, O take those lips away' presents in tableau fashion the new figure of the jilted Mariana, who will unravel the plot whilst tangling up efficacy with ethics. The song highlights a romantic languor later celebrated in Alfred Tennyson's poem (1830) and Pre-Raphaelite paintings by Sir John Everett Millais and Dante Gabriel Rossetti, and so opens on a realm of experience remote from Vienna's rigorous nexus between sexual crime and punishment. Though all will not be well from here on, the song offers a prospect that a spirit of romantic tragicomedy might, perhaps, prevail. In this respect the adaptation is modish to the early 1620s, as is clearly suggested by the use of a song by Fletcher from a moment in Rollo of high emotional sensationalism.

Mariana's role as a keynote figure for the final two acts of the play corresponds with that of Lucio for the first three acts. In this respect the interpolated episode near the beginning of the play works in a remarkably similar way to the interpolated song. In the earlier episode too, a minor figure, Lucio, is presented so as to give him representative status, and the mode of dramatic writing is again almost exaggeratedly appropriate to the role. Here too, nothing much happens in the episode, but it gives a strong colouration to our view of the play's world; this is, after all, our first introduction to Vienna's street-life. The two major interventions, despite their differences of method and the contrast in their tone, are therefore of a piece.

In relocating and underscoring the play's 'hinge', Middleton identified and remedied an important but disconcerting aspect of its organization, and stressed the altered configurations that become possible once Mariana enters the play. Both in 1.2 and in the more local changes to the comic roles elsewhere, the adapted text gives a fuller impression of time, place, and manners, showing vice at home and warfare abroad as constituents of a newly vibrant and potentially subversive public discourse. These changes addressed important peripheries. They neither perceptibly added to nor perceptibly detracted from the roles of Isabella, Angelo, and the Duke (notwithstanding the latter's moved speeches). Yet the adaptation touches upon virtually every major aspect of Measure. Our engagement with the play is in some part Middleton's engagement with Shakespeare's play, and in some part our engagement with Middleton.

The text that follows highlights the changes that are thought to have been introduced (mostly or wholly) in 1621. Except in the case of the duplication in 1.2, where JAGGARD prints both passages, the adapted text broadly corresponds with JAGGARD. To indicate the changes attributed to the adaptation, text posited to have been deleted for the adaptation is printed in grey type, and added text is printed in bold type. Transposed lines are therefore printed in grey at their posited original position and printed in bold at the point to which they were relocated. Of course the presentation cannot allow for the varying shades of certainty with which the features of the adaptation can be identified; it is based on a balance of probability that includes everything from the reasonably likely to the almost certain. The commentary relinquishes the usual focus on glossing the text, in favour of providing further detail in support of the Middleton context that has been presented in this Introduction.

SEE ALSO

Music: Companion, 167

Textual introduction and apparatus: Companion, 681

Authorship and date: Companion, 417

Other Middleton-Shakespeare works: Timon, 467; Macbeth, 1165

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, adapted by THOMAS MIDDLETON

Measure for Measure

[for the King's Men]

THE NAMES OF ALL THE ACTORS

Vincentio, the DUKE
ANGELO, his deputy
ESCALUS, an ancient lord
CLAUDIO, a young gentleman
LUCIO, a fantastic
Two other like GENTLEMEN
PROVOST
Thomas, Peter, two FRIARS
ELBOW, a simple constable
FROTH, a foolish gentleman
Pompey, a CLOWN

ABHORSON, an executioner
BARNARDINE, a dissolute prisoner
JUSTICE BOY
ISABELLA, sister to Claudio
MARIANA, betrothed to Angelo
JULIET, beloved of Claudio
Francisca, a NUN
Mistress Overdone, a BAWD
Varrius and other lords, officers, citizens, servants

I. I

Sc. I I. I

Incipit Actus Primus

Enter Duke, Escalus, lords

DUKE Escalus.

ESCALUS My lord Vincentio.

DUKE

Of government the properties to unfold
Would seem in me t' affect speech and discourse,
Since I am put to know that your own science
Exceeds in that the lists of all advice
My strength can give you. Then no more remains
But that []
To your sufficiency, as your worth is able,
And let them work. The nature of our people,
Our city's institutions and the terms
For common justice, you're as pregnant in

As art and practice hath enrichèd any
That we remember.

[He gives Escalus papers]

There is our commission,

From which we would not have you warp.

[To a lord] Call hither,

I say bid come before us, Angelo. [Exit lord]

[To Escalus] What figure of us think you he will bear?—

For you must know we have with special soul
Elected him our absence to supply,
Lent him our terror, dressed him with our love,
And given his deputation all the organs
Of our own power. What think you of it?

ESCALUS

If any in Ferrara Vienna be of worth 15

20

10

This is a 'genetic' edition of the play: the text is presented to show the play's development from one state to another. The two states are the reconstructed Shakespearian original of 1603-4 and the Middletonian adaptation of 1621. See Critical Introduction, final paragraph.

Persons This list is based on that appended to the text in the 1623 Folio (JAGGARD), which gives prominence to Vienna as the location by printing 'The Scene Vienna.' above 'The names of all the Actors'. The 1623 list omits both the Justice of 2.3 and the Boy who sings the song in 4.1. These are the only speaking or singing parts not to be mentioned, which suggests that the list had its origin in a pre-adaptation document, and offers some support for the view that these roles are late additions. But there are characteristics of the adaptation present, for the list includes the '2. Other like Gentlemen' who accompany Lucio in the revised version of 1.2 and names 'Mistris Ouer-don'.

6 Two other like GENTLEMEN '[Number] other like [plural noun]' is unique in pre-1640 drama except for Nice Valour

5.1.79.1, 'Four other like fools'.

I. I. O. I SC. I I. I JAGGARD's system of act-breaks belongs to the adapted text. In 1603-4 the play would have been performed without act intervals. We provide both through-scene numbers (to reflect the structure of 1603-4 performance), and act-scene numbers (as a feature of the adaptation).

2 Vincentio See Introduction.

8 But that [] Difficulty in sense and irregular metre are possibly evidence of a cut.

23 Ferrara Vienna See Introduction.

- To undergo such ample grace and honour,
It is Lord Angelo.
Enter Angelo
- 25 DUKE Look where he comes.
ANGELO
Always obedient to your grace's will,
I come to know your pleasure.
- DUKE Angelo,
There is a kind of character in thy life
That to th' observer doth thy history
30 Fully unfold. Thyself and thy belongings
Are not thine own so proper as to waste
Thyself upon thy virtues, they on thee.
Heaven doth with us as we with torches do,
Not light them for themselves; for if our virtues
35 Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not. Spirits are not finely touched
But to fine issues; nor nature never lends
The smallest scruple of her excellence
But, like a thrifty goddess, she determines 40 Herself the glory of a creditor,
Both thanks and use. But I do bend my speech
To one that can my part in him advertise.
Hold therefore, Angelo.
In our remove be thou at full yourself.
45 Mortality and mercy in Ferrara Vienna
Live in thy tongue and heart. Old Escalus,
Though first in question, is thy secondary.
Take thy commission.
- ANGELO Now good my lord,
Let there be some more test made of my metal
50 Before so noble and so great a figure
Be stamped upon it.
- DUKE No more evasion.
We have with leavened and preparèd choice
Proceeded to you; therefore take your honours.
[Angelo takes his commission]
Our haste from hence is of so quick condition
55 That it prefers itself, and leaves unquestioned Matters of needful value. We shall write to you,
- As time and our concernings shall impòrtune,
How it goes with us—and do look to know
What doth befall you here. So fare you well.
To th' hopeful execution do I leave you
60 Of your commissions.
- ANGELO Yet give leave, my lord,
That we may bring you something on the way.
- DUKE My haste may not admit it;
Nor need you, on mine honour, have to do
65 With any scruple. Your scope is as mine own,
So to enforce or qualify the laws
As to your soul seems good. Give me your hand.
I'll privily away. I love the people,
But do not like to stage me to their eyes.
Though it do well, I do not relish well
70 Their loud applause and aves vehement;
Nor do I think the man of safe discretion
That does affect it. Once more, fare you well.
- ANGELO
The Lord heavens give safety to your purposes!
- ESCALUS
Lead forth and bring you back in happiness!
- DUKE I thank you. Fare you well. Exit
- ESCALUS
I shall desire you, sir, to give me leave
To have free speech with you; and it concerns me
To look into the bottom of my place.
A power I have, but of what strength and nature 80 I am not yet instructed.
- ANGELO
'Tis so with me. Let us withdraw together,
And we may soon our satisfaction have Touching that point.
- ESCALUS I'll wait upon your honour. Exeunt
- Enter Lucio, and two other Gentlemen I.2
- LUCIO If the Duke with the other dukes come not to composition with the King of Hungary, why then, all the dukes fall upon the King.

74 Lord heavens This is the first of a number of notes explaining conjecturally restored profanity in the original text. There is no Shakespeare parallel for "The heavens give".

I.2.0.1–I.2.79h Enter...him JAGGARD prints I.2.0.1–I.2.76, then the Bawd's speech "Thus... custom-shrunk" (77–9), then "How now? what's the newes with you." as part of the same speech, then "Enter Clowne.", then the remainder of the passage that is marked in our text as for cancellation. The opening dialogue is strongly Middletonian, and seems designed to replace the brief passage in which the Clown announces Claudio's imprisonment for "Groping for trouts in a peculiar river".

0.1–I.2.76 Enter...the truth of it. The Puritan also begins its second scene with a seedy, joking, and topical conversation in prose between characters, one of whom is a soldier, on the subject of war and peace. As in Measure, the dialogue is followed by the entry of a guarded prisoner passing over the stage on his way to prison, an event watched and discussed by the earlier conversants. Lucio's "Away; let's go learn the truth of it" compares with Pieboard's "but come; let's follow after to the prison, and know the nature of his offence". The conversation also recalls that between the Captain and the "soldiering fellows" in Phoenix Sc. 2. The staging, and the inconsequentiality of the episode, may be compared with Women Beware 4.1.1–22, where Bianca chats bawdily with two unnamed Ladies who appear nowhere else in the play.

0.1 and two other Gentlemen The list of "The names of all the Actors" describes Lucio as a 'fantastique', and the Gentlemen, who appear only in this scene, as 'Other like Gentlemen'. Lucio no doubt stands out as the extravagantly-dressed fop amongst fops.

I–5 If...Hungary's An allusion to events of the Thirty Years War in and around Vienna in 1621; see Introduction.

I–2 come...with An unShakespearean idiom, but compare Solomon 1.80.

FIRST GENTLEMAN Heaven grant us its peace, but not the 5 King of Hungary's!
 SECOND GENTLEMAN Amen.
 LUCIO Thou conclud'st like the sanctimonious pirate, that went to sea with the Ten Commandments, but scraped one out of the table.
 10 SECOND GENTLEMAN 'Thou shalt not steal'?
 LUCIO Ay, that he razed.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN Why, 'twas a commandment to command the captain and all the rest from their functions:
 they put forth to steal. There's not a soldier of us all that 15 in the thanksgiving before meat do relish the petition well that prays for peace.
 SECOND GENTLEMAN I never heard any soldier dislike it.
 LUCIO I believe thee, for I think thou never wast where grace was said.
 20 SECOND GENTLEMAN No? A dozen times at least.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN What, in metre?
 LUCIO In any proportion, or in any language.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN I think, or in any religion.
 LUCIO Ay, why not? Grace is grace despite of all contro-25 versy; as for example, thou thyself art a wicked villain despite of all grace.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN Well, there went but a pair of shears between us.
 LUCIO I grant—as there may between the lists and the 30 velvet. Thou art the list.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN And thou the velvet. Thou art good velvet: thou'rt a three-piled piece, I warrant thee. I had as lief be a list of an English kersey as be piled as thou art piled, for a French velvet. Do I speak feelingly now?

 LUCIO I think thou dost, and indeed with most painful 35 feeling of thy speech. I will out of thine own confession learn to begin thy health, but whilst I live forget to drink after thee.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN I think I have done myself wrong, have
 I not?
 40 SECOND GENTLEMAN Yes, that thou hast, whether thou art tainted or free.
Enter Bawd
 LUCIO Behold, behold, where Madam Mitigation comes!
 I have purchased as many diseases under her roof as 45 come to—
 SECOND GENTLEMAN To what, I pray?
 LUCIO Judge.
 SECOND GENTLEMAN To three thousand dolours a year?
 FIRST GENTLEMAN Ay, and more.
 LUCIO A French crown more.
 50 FIRST GENTLEMAN Thou art always figuring diseases in me, but thou art full of error—I am sound.
 LUCIO Nay not, as one would say, healthy, but so sound as things that are hollow—thy bones are hollow, impiety has made a feast of thee.
 55 FIRST GENTLEMAN [to Bawd] How now, which of your hips has the most profound sciatica?
 BAWD Well, well! There's one yonder arrested and carried to prison was worth five thousand of you all.
 60 SECOND GENTLEMAN Who's that, I prithee?
 BAWD Marry sir, that's Claudio, Signor Claudio.

4 its There is only one other Shakespeare example of possessive its in a play written before 1609. Its occurs regularly in Middleton works, especially from c.1614 onwards.
 7–14 Thou...steal See Introduction for the topicality of pirates in 1621. For the Middletonian idea of deleting 'Thou shalt not steal' from the Ten Commandments, see Five Gallants 3.4.106–10, and compare The Puritan 1.4.143–55; for more general contempt to the Commandments, see Hubburd 505–8, Trick 1.4.17–18, and Revenger 1.2.160–2. The phrase 'Thou shalt not steal' is not found in Shakespeare, and outside Middleton is probably without example in early modern drama.
 7 sanctimonious The ironic usage suggesting false piety is Middletonian. Measure is the earliest instance recorded in OED.
 18 I believe thee A phrase found in Middleton but not Shakespeare.
 18–21 I think...metre There is a metrical grace spoken in Timon at 2.6.1–70, in a passage attributed to Middleton.
 22 any language A phrase found in two Middleton plays of the 1620s (Game at Chess 1.1.147, Women Beware 3.2.138) and probably in no earlier extant English play. The jibe is at the Catholic use of Latin, a common subject of hostile comment in Middleton.

 23–5 religion...controversy The Thirty Years War was fought between Catholics and Protestants.
 24–5 controversy Middleton elsewhere refers to religious dispute as 'controversy'.
 25 as for example An idiom found at least six times in Middleton.
 34 speak feelingly Found also in Dissemblers 5.2.87.
 37 begin The required sense, 'initiate a toast', is common in Middleton (see especially Entertainments 1.84.2, 85).
 43 Behold, behold Compare Solomon 6.152–3, 9.13–14, etc.
Madam Mitigation The ironic title compares with 'fine Madam Tiptoos' in Microcynicon 3.89 and other Middleton examples. Mitigation is not elsewhere in Middleton.
 44 purchased as many diseases Patient Man 9.63–4 has 'To purchase | A filthy, loathed disease'. The passage attacks prostitution, and refers to pox as a 'French infant' (compare 34).
 48 dolours The pun dolours/dollars is Shakespearean (see Tragedy of King Lear, 2.2.229–30, and Tempest 2.1.17–21), but is found elsewhere too. The sense of dolours required here, 'physical pains, diseases', is Middletonian, but is not found in Shakespeare.

 51–2 diseases...full of error Compare Heroes 34, 'Full of diseases'.
 51–4 diseases...bones Middleton parallels include Quiet Life 3.1.123–7, 'Twill breed diseases in you', collocated with 'profoundly' and 'relish' (compare 15); Michaelmas 2.1.164, 'Diseases gnaw thy bones'; Tennis 582, 'To call diseases early into my bones'.
 54–5 impiety has made a feast of thee The idea that the body of the self-indulging sinner ironically becomes itself the object of devouring by an abstracted figure such as Impiety (or Destruction, or Lust and Forgetfulness) is characteristic of Middleton. Verbal parallels include Mad World 2.4.65, 'Pox feast you'; Tennis 806, 'With fat and filthy gain thy lust may feast'.
 59 worth...all That this is a Middletonian idiom is suggested by Roaring Girl 8.15, 'worth a thousand of your headborough's lanterns'; Trick 4.4.212, 'worth ten of her'; No Wit 6.135–6, 'worth a hundred of your sons and heirs'; Changeling 5.1.93, 'He's worth 'em all'.

- FIRST GENTLEMAN Claudio to prison? 'Tis not so.
 BAWD Nay, but I know 'tis so. I saw him arrested, saw him carried away; and, which is more, within these 65 three days his head to be chopped off.
 LUCIO But after all this fooling, I would not have it so. Art thou sure of this?
 BAWD I am too sure of it, and it is for getting Madam
 Julietta with child.
 70 LUCIO Believe me, this may be. He promised to meet me two hours since and he was ever precise in promise-keeping.
 SECOND GENTLEMAN Besides, you know, it draws something near to the speech we had to such a purpose.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN But most of all agreeing with the pro-75 clamation.
 LUCIO Away; let's go learn the truth of it.
Exit [Lucio, with Gentlemen]
 BAWD Thus, what with the war, what with the sweat, what with the gallows, and what with poverty, I am custom-shrunk.
Sc. 2
Enter Clown [and Bawd, meeting]
 79a [BAWD] How now, what's the news with you?
 79b CLOWN Yonder man is carried to prison.
 79c BAWD Well! What has he done?
 79d CLOWN A woman.
 79e BAWD But what's his offence?
 79f CLOWN Groping for trouts in a peculiar river.
 79g BAWD What, is there a maid with child by him?
- CLOWN No, but there's a woman with maid by him. 79h [CLOWN] You have not heard of the proclamation, have 80
 you?
 BAWD What proclamation, man?
 CLOWN All houses in the suburbs of Ferrara Vienna must be plucked down.
 BAWD And what shall become of those in the city? 85
 CLOWN They shall stand for seed. They had gone down too, but that a wise burgher put in for them.
 BAWD But shall all our houses of resort in the suburbs be pulled down?
 CLOWN To the ground, mistress. 90
 BAWD Why, here's a change indeed in the commonwealth.
 What shall become of me?
 CLOWN Come, fear not you. Good counsellors lack no clients. Though you change your place, you need not change your trade. I'll be your tapster still. Courage, 95 there will be pity taken on you. You that have worn your eyes almost out in the service, you will be considered.
[A noise within]
 BAWD What's to do here, Thomas Tapster? Let's withdraw!
Enter Provost, Claudio, Juliet, officers, Lucio and two Gentlemen
 CLOWN Here comes Signor Claudio, led by the Provost to prison; and there's Madam Juliet.
Exeunt Bawd and Clown

77-9 Thus...custom-shrunk Compare the Bawd's similar complaint that he is ruined by the 'poverty', the Devil's lengthy sceptical response, and the Bawd's insistence 'What with this long vacation... Pierce was never so penniless as poor Lieutenant Frig-beard', in Black Book 375-7. The same passage also includes an allusion to syphilis comparable with the Bawd's reference to its cure by 'the sweat', in 'Monsieur Dry-bone the Frenchman' (368). See also commentary to 4.3.17.

78 poverty The adaptation was prepared at a time of the severest economic depression in living memory. As the depression was fuelled by a slump in exports, it was largely an effect of trade with Europe, and so the allusion fits in with the European consciousness of the episode.

79 custom-shrunk Middleton repeatedly uses the verb shrink to indicate male withdrawal from, or incapacity for, sexual activity (No Wit 7.119, Weapons 1.1.241, Women Beware 3.1.100).

99-102 BAWD...Juliet Probably added for the adaptation. JAGGARD's 'and there's Madam Juliet' has to be an addition if Juliet is herself an addition, and this brings both speeches into question. The clumsy sequence of a natural exit point ('you will be considered'), then an interruption leading to a new exit point ('let's withdraw'), then a speech suggesting interest in the approaching figures ('Here comes...'), then an exeunt, is more likely to result from the disjunctions of a revised staging than to belong to the original text. In the fuller, more complex staging of the adapted text, the added lines establish the identities of the three characters entering for the first time.

100.1-2 Enter...Gentlemen The adaptation creates much more of a public shaming ritual. Lucio and the Gentlemen look on for a while before Lucio addresses Claudio. The Gentlemen have no part in the 1603-4 text, and serve in the adapted text only to change the emphasis of the staging. Without them, Lucio is redundant until he greets Claudio.

100.1 Juliet She has no part in the scene other than to appear visually as the observed, in a manner that contrasts in appearance and gender with the similarly silent but observing Gentlemen. Her theatrical function must be to be inscribed as visibly pregnant, 'With character too gross', and she may well have worn the gown of penance imposed on detected fornicators. It seems characteristic of the adaptation to add to and emblemize the presence of women: the expanded Bawd's role and Juliet in 1.2, Mariana (accompanied by a singing boy-actor) in 4.1, and Juliet in 5.1, where she makes another silent appearance. Pregnant unmarried women appear on stage to supply a visual and sometimes silent serio-comic comment on their misdeeds in No Wit (Grace), Witch (Francisca), Quarrel (Jane), Nice Valour (the 'Cupid') and Dissemblers (the 'Page').

officers The officers merely accompany Juliet and are unmentioned in the dialogue. The Clown announces that Claudio is simply 'led by the Provost', and at the end of the scene Claudio tells a single officer—the Provost again—'Come, officer, away'.

102 Madam Juliet The word 'madam' is found elsewhere in the play only in the Middletonian part of 1.2: when the Bawd is mocked as 'Madam Mitigation' at 1.2.43 and when Juliet herself is mentioned as 'Madam Julietta' at 1.2.68-9.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Lucio, and two other Gentlemen.

Luc. If the Duke, with the other Dukes, come not to composition with the King of Hungary, why then all the Dukes fall vpon the King.

1. Gent. Heauen grant vs its peace, but not the King of Hungaries.

2. Gent. Amen.

Luc. Thou conclud'it like the Sanctimonious Pirat, that went to sea with the ten Commandements, but scrap'd one out of the Table.

2. Gent. Thou shalt not Steale?

Luc. I, that he raz'd.

1. Gent. Why? 'twas a commandement, to command the Capitaine and all the rest from their functions: they put forth to steale: There's not a Souldier of vs all, that in the thank-giuing before meate, do rallish the petition well, that praises for peace.

2. Gent. I neuer heard any Souldier dislike it.

Luc. I beleuee thee: for I thinke thou neuer was't where Grace was said.

2. Gent. No? a dozen times at least.

1. Gent. What? In meeter?

Luc. In any proportion. or in any language.

1. Gent. I thinke, or in any Religion.

Luc. I, why not? Grace, is Grace, despiight of all controuersie: as for example; Thou thy selfe art a wicked villaine, despiight of all Grace.

1. Gent. Well: there went but a paire of sheeres betweene vs.

Luc. I grant: as there may betweene the Lifts, and the Veluet. Thou art the Lift.

1. Gent. And thou the Veluet; thou art good veluet; thou'rt a three pild-piece I warrant thee: I had as lief be a Lyft of an English Kersey, as be pild, as thou art pild, for a French Veluet. Do I speake feelingly now?

Luc. I thinke thou do'st: and indeed with most painfull feeling of thy speech: I will, out of thine owne confession, learne to begin thy health; but, whilst I liue forget to drinke after thee.

1. Gent. I think I haue done my selfe wrong, haue I not?

2. Gent. Yes, that thou hast: whether thou art tainted, or free.

Enter Bawd.

Luc. Behold, behold, where Madam Mitigation comes. I haue purchas'd as many diseases vnder her Roofe, As come to

2. Gent. To what, I pray?

Luc. Iudge.

2. Gent. To three thousand Dollours a yeare.

1. Gent. I, and more.

Luc. A French crowne more.

1. Gent. Thou art alwayes figuring diseases in me; but thou art full of error, I am sound.

Luc. Nay, not (as one would say) healthy: but so found, as things that are hollow; thy bones are hollow; Impiety has made a feast of thee.

1. Gent. How now, which of your hips has the most profound Ciatica?

Bawd. Well, well: there's one yonder arrested, and carried to prison, was worth fure thousand of you all.

2. Gent. Who's that I pray thee?

Bawd. Marry Sir, that's Claudio, Signior Claudio.

1. Gent. Claudio to prison? 'tis not so.

Bawd. Nay, but I know 'tis so: I saw him arrested: saw him carried away: and which is more, within these three daies his head to be chop'd off.

Luc. But, after all this fooling, I would not haue it so: Art thou sure of this?

Bawd. I am too sure of it: and it is for getting Madam Iulietta with childe.

Luc. Beleuee me this may be: he promis'd to meete me two howres since, and he was euer precise in promise keeping.

2. Gent. Besides you know, it draws something neere to the speech we had to such a purpose.

1. Gent. But most of all agreeing with the proclamation, Luc. Away: let's goe learne the truth of it. Exit.

Bawd. Thus, what with the war; what with the sweate, what with the gallowes, and what with pouerty, I am Custom-shrunke. How now? what's the newes with you. Enter Clowne.

Clow. Yonder man is carried to prison.

Baw. Well: what has he done?

Clow. A Woman.

Baw. But what's his offence?

Clow. Groping for Trovets, in a peculiar Riuer.

Baw. What? is there a maid with child by him?

Clow. No: but there's a woman with maid by him: you haue not heard of the proclamation, haue you?

Baw. What proclamation, man?

Clow. All howses in the Suburbs of Vienna must bee pluck'd downe.

Bawd. And what shall become of those in the Citie?

Clow. They shall stand for seed: they had gon down to, but that a wife Burger put in for them.

Bawd. But shall all our howses of resort in the Suburbs be puld downe?

Clow. To the ground, Miftris.

Bawd. Why heere's a change indeed in the Common-wealth: what shall become of me?

Clow. Come; feare not you: good Counsellors lacke no Clients: though you change your place, you neede not change your Trade: Ile bee your Tapster still; courage, there will bee pittie taken on you; you that haue worne your eyes almost out in the seruice, you will bee considered.

Bawd. What's to doe heere, Thomas Tapster? let's withdraw?

Clow. Here comes Signior Claudio, led by the Prouoft to prison: and there's Madam Iuliet. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Prouoft, Claudio, Iuliet, Officers, Lucio, & 2. Gent.

Claw. Fellow, why do'st thou show me thus to th' world? Beare me to prison, where I am committed.

Pro. I do it not in euill disposition,

But from Lord Angelo by speciall charge.

Claw. Thus can the demy-god (Authority)

Make vs pay downe, for our offence, by waight

The words of heauen; on whom it will, it will,

On whom it will not (soe) yet still 'tis iust.

(strait.)

Luc. Why how now Claudio? whence comes this te-

Claw. From too much liberty, (my Lucie) Liberty

As (suffet is the father of much fast,

So euery Scope by the immoderate vs

Turnes to restraint: Our Natures doe pursue

Like

Stage direction on same line as speech saves space

Reduced indent and shortened form of 'proclamation' save space

Stage direction on same line as speech saves space

Passage intended for deletion but actually printed takes extra space

Cramped spacing around scene heading saves space

Act I Scene 2

Measure for Measure.

Sc. 3

Enter Provost, Claudio

CLAUDIO
Fellow, why dost thou show me thus to th' world?
Bear me to prison, where I am committed.

PROVOST

105 I do it not in evil disposition,
But from Lord Angelo by special charge.

CLAUDIO

110 Thus can the demigod Authority
Make us pay down for our offence, by weight,
The bonds of heaven. On whom it will, it will;
On whom it will not, so; yet still 'tis just.

[Enter Lucio]

LUCIO

Why, how now, Claudio? Whence comes this restraint?

CLAUDIO

115 From too much liberty, my Lucio, liberty.
As surfeit is the father of much fast,
So every scope, by the immoderate use,
Turns to restraint. Our natures do pursue,
Like rats that raven down their proper bane,
A thirsty evil; and when we drink, we die.

LUCIO If I could speak so wisely under an arrest, I would 120 send for certain of my creditors. And yet, to say the truth, I had as lief have the foppery of freedom as the morality of imprisonment. What's thy offence, Claudio?

CLAUDIO

What but to speak of would offend again.

LUCIO

What, is't murder?

CLAUDIO No.

LUCIO Lechery?

CLAUDIO Call it so.

PROVOST Away, sir; you must go.

CLAUDIO

One word, good friend.

[Provost shows assent]

125 Lucio, a word with you.

LUCIO

A hundred, if they'll do you any good.

[Claudio and Lucio speak apart]

Is lechery so looked after?

CLAUDIO

130 Thus stands it with me. Upon a true contract,
I got possession of Julietta's bed.
You know the lady; she is fast my wife,
Save that we do the denunciation lack

Of outward order. This we came not to Only for propagation of a dower
Remaining in the coffer of her friends,
From whom we thought it meet to hide our love 135
Till time had made them for us. But it chances
The stealth of our most mutual entertainment
With character too gross is writ on Juliet.

LUCIO

With child, perhaps?

CLAUDIO

Unhapp'ly even so.
140 And the new deputy now for the Duke—
Whether it be the fault and glimpse of newness,
Or whether that the body public be
A horse whereon the governor doth ride,
Who, newly in the seat, that it may know
He can command, lets it straight feel the spur— 145
Whether the tyranny be in his place,
Or in his eminence that fills it up—
I stagger in. But this new governor
Awakes me all the enrolled penalties 150
Which have, like unscoured armour, hung by th' wall
So long that fourteen zodiacs have gone round,
And none of them been worn; and, for a name,
Now puts the drowsy and neglected act

LUCIO I warrant it is; and thy head stands so tickle on thy 155 shoulders that a milkmaid, if she be in love, may sigh it off. Send after the Duke, and appeal to him.

CLAUDIO

I have done so, but he's not to be found.
I prithee, Lucio, do me this kind service.
160 This day my sister should the cloister enter,
And there receive her approbation.
Acquaint her with the danger of my state.
Implore her in my voice that she make friends
To the strict deputy. Bid herself assay him.
I have great hope in that, for in her youth 165
There is a prone and speechless dialect
Such as move men; beside, she hath prosperous art
When she will play with reason and discourse,
And well she can persuade.

LUCIO

I pray she may—
170 as well for the encouragement of thy like, which else would stand under grievous imposition, as for the enjoying of thy life, who I would be sorry should be thus foolishly lost at a game of tick-tack.
I'll to her.

CLAUDIO I thank you, good friend Lucio.

102.2 Sc. 3 Noting the continuity of action, editors have removed the scene break printed in JAGGARD. Given the staging in the adapted text, it makes sense for the entry to happen before the Clown and Bawd withdraw, so that the Clown can identify the newcomers more effectively for the audience. But in JAGGARD, as marked in the present text of the original version, the entry follows the clearing of the stage that makes the scene-break. In the original staging the two speeches that establish continuity preceding JAGGARD's scene-header were probably absent.

111 Why...restraint Lucio's ignorance here is consistent with the postulated original 1603-4 text. In it, the Bawd would not previously have told Lucio of Claudio's imprisonment, as she has in the revised text.

LUCIO
 Within two hours.

175 CLAUDIO Come, officer; away.
*Exeunt [Lucio and gentlemen at one door;
 Claudio, Juliet, Provost, and officers at another]*

1.3(a) I.3
Enter Duke and Friar Thomas

DUKE
 No, holy father, throw away that thought.
 Believe not that the dribbling dart of love
 Can pierce a complete bosom. Why I desire thee
 To give me secret harbour hath a purpose
 5 More grave and wrinkled than the aims and ends
 Of burning youth.

FRIAR May your grace speak of it?

DUKE
 My holy sir, none better knows than you
 How I have ever loved the life removed,
 And held in idle price to haunt assemblies
 10 Where youth and cost a witless bravery keeps.
 I have delivered to Lord Angelo—
 A man of stricture and firm abstinence—
 My absolute power and place here in Vienna;
 And he supposes me travelled to Poland—
 15 For so I have strewed it in the common ear,
 And so it is received. Now, pious sir,
 You will demand of me why I do this.

FRIAR Gladly, my lord.

DUKE
 We have strict statutes and most biting laws,
 20 The needful bits and curbs to headstrong weeds,
 Which for this fourteen years we have let slip,
 Even like an o'ergrown lion in a cave
 That goes not out to prey. Now, as fond fathers,
 Having bound up the threat'ning twigs of birch
 25 Only to stick it in their children's sight
 For terror, not to use, in time the rod
 More mocked becomes than feared: so our decrees,
 Dead to infliction, to themselves are dead;
 And Liberty plucks Justice by the nose,
 30 The baby beats the nurse, and quite athwart
 Goes all decorum.

FRIAR It rested in your grace
 To unloose this tied-up Justice when you pleased,
 And it in you more dreadful would have seemed
 Than in Lord Angelo.

DUKE I do fear, too dreadful.
 35 Sith 'twas my fault to give the people scope,
 'Twould be my tyranny to strike and gall them
 For what I bid them do—for we bid this be done
 When evil deeds have their permissive pass,

And not the punishment. Therefore indeed, my father,
 I have on Angelo imposed the office,
 40 Who may in th'ambush of my name strike home,
 And yet my nature never in the fight
 T'allow in slander. And to behold his sway,
 I will as 'twere a brother of your order
 Visit both prince and people. Therefore, I prithee,
 45 Supply me with the habit, and instruct me
 How I may formally in person bear
 Like a true friar. More reasons for this action
 At our more leisure shall I render you.
 Only this one: Lord Angelo is precise,
 50 Stands at a guard with envy, scarce confesses
 That his blood flows, or that his appetite
 Is more to bread than stone. Hence shall we see
 If power change purpose, what our seemers be.

Exit [with Friar]

Sc. 4 I.4
Enter Isabella, and Francisca, a nun

ISABELLA
 And have you nuns no farther privileges,
 Holy Francisca?

NUN Are not these large enough?

ISABELLA
 Yes, truly. I speak not as desiring more,
 But rather wishing a more strict restraint
 Upon the sisterhood, the votarists of Saint Clare. 5

LUCIO (within)
 Ho, peace be in this place!

ISABELLA [to Francisca] Who's that which calls?

NUN
 It is a man's voice. Gentle Isabella,
 Turn you the key, and know his business of him.
 You may, I may not; you are yet unsworn.
 When you have vowed, you must not speak with men 10
 But in the presence of the prioress.
 Then if you speak, you must not show your face;
 Or if you show your face, you must not speak.
 [Lucio calls within]
 He calls again. I pray you answer him.
 [She stands aside]

ISABELLA
 Peace and prosperity! Who is't that calls? 15
 [She opens the door. Enter Lucio]

LUCIO
 Hail, virgin, if you be—as those cheek-roses
 Proclaim you are no less. Can you so stead me
 As bring me to the sight of Isabella,
 A novice of this place, and the fair sister
 20 To her unhappy brother Claudio?

1.3(a) The scene was printed here in JAGGARD, in a position it was probably given for the adapted text. Shakespeare conjecturally first placed it after 1.4. The revised arrangement facilitates the doubling of boys' parts, by allowing the Nun or Isabella to double with Juliet, a role new to Act 1. The most likely distribution of roles is (a) Isabella, (b) Bawd and Mariana, (c) Juliet, Nun, and Boy. See Introduction, and note to 1.3(b).

 1.4.2 Holy Francisca See Introduction.

Act I Scene 4

Measure for Measure.

ISABELLA
 Why 'her unhappy brother'? Let me ask,
 The rather for I now must make you know
 I am that Isabella, and his sister.

LUCIO
 Gentle and fair, your brother kindly greets you.
 Not to be weary with you, he's in prison.

ISABELLA Woe me! For what?

LUCIO
 For that which, if myself might be his judge,
 He should receive his punishment in thanks.
 He hath got his friend with child.

ISABELLA Sir, make me not your story.

LUCIO
 'Tis true. I would not—though 'tis my familiar sin
 With maids to seem the lapwing, and to jest
 Tongue far from heart—play with all virgins so.
 I hold you as a thing enskied and sainted
 By your renouncement, an immortal spirit,
 And to be talked with in sincerity
 As with a saint.

ISABELLA
 You do blaspheme the good in mocking me.

LUCIO
 Do not believe it. Fewness and truth, 'tis thus:
 Your brother and his lover have embraced.
 As those that feed grow full, as blossoming time
 That from the seedness the bare fallow brings
 To teeming foison, even so her plenteous womb
 Expresseth his full tilth and husbandry.

ISABELLA
 Someone with child by him? My cousin Juliet?

LUCIO Is she your cousin?

ISABELLA
 Adoptedly, as schoolmaids change their names
 By vain though apt affection.

LUCIO She it is.

ISABELLA
 O, let him marry her!

LUCIO This is the point.
 The Duke is very strangely gone from hence;
 Bore many gentlemen—myself being one—
 In hand and hope of action; but we do learn,
 By those that know the very nerves of state,
 His giving out were of an infinite distance
 From his true-meant design. Upon his place,

And with full line of his authority,
 Governs Lord Angelo—a man whose blood
 Is very snow-broth; one who never feels
 The wanton stings and motions of the sense,
 But doth rebate and blunt his natural edge
 With profits of the mind, study, and fast.
 He, to give fear to use and liberty,
 Which have for long run by the hideous law
 As mice by lions, hath picked out an act
 Under whose heavy sense your brother's life
 Falls into forfeit. He arrests him on it,
 And follows close the rigour of the statute
 To make him an example. All hope is gone,
 Unless you have the grace by your fair prayer
 To soften Angelo. And that's my pith
 Of business 'twixt you and your poor brother.

ISABELLA
 Doth he so seek his life?

LUCIO Has censured him already,
 And, as I hear, the Provost hath a warrant
 For's execution.

ISABELLA Alas, what poor
 Ability's in me to do him good?

LUCIO Assay the power you have.

ISABELLA My power? Alas, I doubt.

LUCIO Our doubts are traitors,
 And makes us lose the good we oft might win,
 By fearing to attempt. Go to Lord Angelo;
 And let him learn to know, when maidens sue,
 Men give like gods, but when they weep and kneel,
 All their petitions are as freely theirs
 As they themselves would owe them.

ISABELLA I'll see what I can do.

LUCIO
 But speedily.

ISABELLA I will about it straight,
 No longer staying but to give the Mother
 Notice of my affair. I humbly thank you.
 Commend me to my brother. Soon at night
 I'll send him certain word of my success.

LUCIO
 I take my leave of you.

ISABELLA Good sir, adieu.
Exeunt [Isabella and Nun at one door, Lucio at another door]

Finis Actus Primus

50-1 Bore...action This rumour-mongering is vague enough to be reasonably consistent with the adaptation at
 I.2.I-3.

1.3(b)

Sc. 5

Enter Duke and Friar Thomas

DUKE

No, holy father, throw away that thought.
Believe not that the dribbling dart of love
Can pierce a complete bosom. Why I desire thee
To give me secret harbour hath a purpose
More grave and wrinkled than the aims and ends
Of burning youth.

FRIAR

May your grace speak of it?

DUKE

My holy sir, none better knows than you
How I have ever loved the life removed,
And held in idle price to haunt assemblies
Where youth and cost a witless bravery keeps.
I have delivered to Lord Angelo—
A man of stricture and firm abstinence—
My absolute power and place here in Ferrara;
And he supposes me travelled to Poland—
For so I have strewed it in the common ear,
And so it is received. Now, pious sir,
You will demand of me why I do this.

FRIAR Gladly, my lord.

DUKE

We have strict statutes and most biting laws,
The needful bits and curbs to headstrong weeds,
Which for this fourteen years we have let slip,
Even like an o'ergrown lion in a cave
That goes not out to prey. Now, as fond fathers,
Having bound up the threat'ning twigs of birch
Only to stick it in their children's sight
For terror, not to use, in time the rod
More mocked becomes than feared: so our decrees,
Dead to infliction, to themselves are dead;
And Liberty plucks Justice by the nose,
The baby beats the nurse, and quite athwart
Goes all decorum.

FRIAR

It rested in your grace
To unloose this tied-up Justice when you pleased,
And it in you more dreadful would have seemed
Than in Lord Angelo.

DUKE

I do fear, too dreadful.
Sith 'twas my fault to give the people scope,

'Twould be my tyranny to strike and gall them
For what I bid them do—for we bid this be done
When evil deeds have their permissive pass,
And not the punishment. Therefore indeed, my father,
I have on Angelo imposed the office,
Who may in th'ambush of my name strike home,
And yet my nature never in the fight
T'allow in slander. And to behold his sway,
I will as 'twere a brother of your order
Visit both prince and people. Therefore, I prithee,
Supply me with the habit, and instruct me
How I may formally in person bear
Like a true friar. More reasons for this action
At our more leisure shall I render you.
Only this one: Lord Angelo is precise,
Stands at a guard with envy, scarce confesses
That his blood flows, or that his appetite
Is more to bread than stone. Hence shall we see
If power change purpose, what our seemers be.

Exit [with Friar]

Sc. 6 2.1

Incipit Actus Secundus

Enter Angelo, Escalus, and servants; Justice

2.1

ANGELO

We must not make a scarecrow of the law,
Setting it up to fear the birds of prey,
And let it keep one shape till custom make it
Their perch, and not their terror.

ESCALUS

Ay, but yet

Let us be keen, and rather cut a little
Than fall and bruise to death. Alas, this gentleman
Whom I would save had a most noble father.
Let but your honour know—
Whom I believe to be most strait in virtue—
That in the working of your own affections,
Had time cohered with place, or place with wishing,
Or that the resolute acting of your blood
Could have attained th'effect of your own purpose—
Whether you had not sometime in your life
Erred in this point which now you censure him,

5

10

15

1.3(b) In the original Shakespeare version this scene probably appeared here. With this sequence, the action is more strongly knitted and dramatically urgent in several ways. Lucio's agreement to speak to Isabella is followed immediately by him doing as anticipated. Their interview in 1.4 is not cushioned, as it is in the adapted text, by the audience's awareness that the disguised Duke will be keeping an eye on things. Isabella more intelligibly enters the nunnery seeking 'strict restraint' immediately after Lucio regrets the consequences to her brother of 'a game of tick-tack' at the end of 1.2. When placed before 1.3, the end of 1.4, with its reference to 'the Mother' of the nunnery, anticipates the opening line of 1.3, with its address to the 'holy father'; the novice nun's resolution to leave the nunnery to petition the Duke's deputy contrasts with the Duke's intention to take 'secret harbour' (as it at first seems) in the monastery. At the end of 1.3 the Duke determines to 'see | If power change purpose, what our seemers be', a couplet that strongly anticipates and frames the first entry of Angelo at the beginning of 2.1, and is effectively placed just before that entry. Moreover, the Duke's lament over the consequences 'When evil deeds have their permissive pass' in 1.3 finds quick uptake in Angelo's opening line, 'We must not make a scarecrow of the law'. The introduction of act-breaks would have considerably lessened the extent to which the latter considerations of sequence apply.

2.1.0.3 Justice Evidently tacked on after the original stage direction had been written; see Introduction.

	And pulled the law upon you.	ELBOW	If it please your honour, I am the poor Duke's constable, and my name is Elbow. I do lean upon justice, sir; and do bring in here before your good honour two notorious benefactors.	45
	ANGELO	'Tis one thing to be tempted, Escalus, Another thing to fall. I not deny The jury passing on the prisoner's life	ANGELO	Benefactors? Well! What benefactors are they? Are they not malefactors?
20	May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two Guiltier than him they try. What knows the law That thieves do pass on thieves? What's open made to justice,	ELBOW	If it please your honour, I know not well what they are; but precise villains they are, that I am sure of, and void of all profanation in the world that good Christians ought to have.	50
	That justice seizes. 'Tis very pregnant: The jewel that we find, we stoop and take't	ESCALUS	[to Angelo] This comes off well; here's a wise officer!	55
25	Because we see it, but what we do not see We tread upon and never think of it. You may not so extenuate his offence	ANGELO	Go to, what quality are they of? Elbow is your name? Why dost thou not speak, Elbow?
	For I have had such faults; but rather tell me, When I that censure him do so offend,	CLOWN	He cannot, sir; he's out at elbow.
30	Let mine own judgement pattern out my death, And nothing come in partial. Sir, he must die.	ANGELO	What are you, sir?	60
	ESCALUS	ELBOW	He, sir? A tapster, sir, parcel bawd; one that serves a bad woman whose house, sir, was, as they say, plucked down in the suburbs; and now she professes a hot-house, which I think is a very ill house too.
	Be it as your wisdom will.	ESCALUS	How know you that?	65
	ANGELO	ELBOW	My wife, sir, whom I detest before God heaven and your honour—
	Where is the Provost?	ESCALUS	How, thy wife?
	Enter Provost	ELBOW	Ay, sir, whom I thank heaven is an honest woman—	70
	PROVOST	ESCALUS	Dost thou detest her therefor?
	Here, if it like your honour.	ELBOW	I say, sir, I will detest myself also, as well as she, that this house, if it be not a bawd's house, it is pity of her life, for it is a naughty house.
	ANGELO	ESCALUS	How dost thou know that, constable?	75
	See that Claudio	ELBOW	Marry, sir, by my wife, who, if she had been a woman cardinally given, might have been accused in fornication, adultery, and all uncleanness there.
	Be execute by nine tomorrow morning.	ESCALUS	By this man's the woman's means?
35	Bring him his confessor, let him be prepared, For that's the utmost of his pilgrimage.	ELBOW	Ay, sir, by Master Froth's Mistress Overdone's means. But as she spit in his face, so she defied him.	80
	[Exit Provost]	CLOWN	[to Escalus] Sir, if it please your honour, this is not so.
	ESCALUS
	Well, heaven forgive him, and forgive us all! Some rise by sin, and some by virtue fall. Some run from breaks of ice, and answer none; And some condemn'd for a fault alone.
	Enter Elbow, Froth, Clown, officers
	ELBOW
	Come, bring them away. If these be good people in a commonweal, that do nothing but use their abuses in common houses, I know no law. Bring them away.
	ANGELO
	How now, sir? What's your name? And what's the matter?

21–2 What . . . on thieves? The line, printed after 'seizes' (23) in JAGGARD, seems to be a misplaced addition. As such, it potentially belongs to the adaptation. The picture of Law as an ideal abstraction that is crucially separated from its highly imperfect execution by corrupt individuals is Middletonian. See in particular Phoenix 4.200–30 and 12.195–200.

37–40 ESCALUS . . . alone. R. V. Holdsworth argues that this passage is 'a strong candidate' as an addition by Middleton, providing convincing Middleton parallels for the diction, imagery, thought, and rhymes. He effectively dismisses the case for the commonly accepted emendation of 'Ice' to 'vice', showing that a contrast between serious breaks in the ice of virginity and a mere fault or flaw is consistent with the temper and imagery of Middleton's writing.

66 God heaven 'Before God' appears 21 times elsewhere in Shakespeare; 'before heaven' occurs only once, in The Tempest (written after the 1606 Act outlawing profanity on stage).

79–80 the woman's . . . Mistress Overdone's The Bawd's name, and lines mentioning it, probably belong to the adaptation. As Samuel Johnson first noted, some mention of Froth seems necessary here. In the speech as printed in JAGGARD and therefore as in the adaptation, it is far from clear whom Elbow is talking about when he says 'as she spit in his face, so she defied him'. Even if this is allowable as comic confusion, it remains hard if at all possible to infer what Froth's misconduct is, why he has been brought before Angelo and Escalus, and why Elbow's wife spits in his face. Moreover, the spitting suggests a joke on his name, though this is far from apparent in JAGGARD as his name has not been mentioned. It seems that Mistress Overdone has been rather awkwardly substituted for Froth, perhaps to prepare for the joke on her name at 191–3.

85 ELBOW Prove it before these varlets here, thou honourable man, prove it.

ESCALUS [to Angelo] Do you hear how he misplaces?

CLOWN Sir, she came in great with child, and longing—saving your honour's reverence—for stewed prunes. Sir, we had but two in the house, which at that very distant time stood, as it were, in a fruit dish—a dish of some threepence; your honours have seen such dishes; they are not china dishes, but very good dishes.

90 ESCALUS
Go to, go to, no matter for the dish, sir.

CLOWN No, indeed, sir, not of a pin; you are therein in the right. But to the point. As I say, this Mistress Elbow, being, as I say, with child, and being great-bellied, and longing, as I said, for prunes; and having but two in the dish, as I said, Master Froth here, this very man, having eaten the rest, as I said, and, as I say, paying for them very honestly; for, as you know, Master Froth, I could not give you threepence again.

100 FROTH No, indeed.

CLOWN Very well. You being, then, if you be remembered, cracking the stones of the foresaid prunes—

105 FROTH Ay, so I did indeed.

CLOWN Why, very well.—I telling you then, if you be remembered, that such a one and such a one were past cure of the thing you wot of, unless they kept very good diet, as I told you—

110 FROTH All this is true.

CLOWN Why, very well then—

ESCALUS Come, you are a tedious fool. To the purpose. What was done to Elbow's wife that he hath cause to complain of? Come me to what was done to her.

115 CLOWN Sir, your honour cannot come to that yet.

ESCALUS No, sir, nor I mean it not.

CLOWN Sir, but you shall come to it, by your honour's leave. And I beseech you, look into Master Froth here, sir, a man of fourscore pound a year, whose father died at Hallowmas—was't not at Hallowmas, Master Froth?

120 FROTH All Hallow Eve.

CLOWN Why, very well. I hope here be truths. He, sir, sitting, as I say, in a lower chair, sir—'twas in the Bunch of Grapes, where indeed you have a delight to sit, have you not?

125 FROTH I have so, because it is an open room, and good for winter.

CLOWN Why, very well then. I hope here be truths.

ANGELO
This will last out a night in Russia,
When nights are longest there. [To Escalus] I'll take my leave,
And leave you to the hearing of the cause,
Hoping you'll find good cause to whip them all.

130 ESCALUS
I think no less. Good morrow to your lordship.

Exit Angelo

Now, sir, come on, what was done to Elbow's wife, once more? 135

CLOWN Once, sir? There was nothing done to her once.

ELBOW I beseech you, sir, ask him what this man did to my wife.

CLOWN I beseech your honour, ask me.

ESCALUS Well, sir, what did this gentleman to her? 140

CLOWN I beseech you, sir, look in this gentleman's face. Good Master Froth, look upon his honour. 'Tis for a good purpose. Doth your honour mark his face?

ESCALUS Ay, sir, very well.

CLOWN Nay, I beseech you, mark it well. 145

ESCALUS Well, I do so.

CLOWN Doth your honour see any harm in his face?

ESCALUS Why, no.

CLOWN I'll be supposed upon a book his face is the worst thing about him. Good, then—if his face be the worst thing about him, how could Master Froth do the constable's wife any harm? I would know that of your honour. 150

ESCALUS He's in the right, constable; what say you to it?

ELBOW First, an it like you, the house is a respected house; next, this is a respected fellow; and his mistress is a respected woman. 155

CLOWN [to Escalus] By this hand, sir, his wife is a more respected person than any of us all.

ELBOW Varlet, thou liest; thou liest, wicked varlet. The time is yet to come that she was ever respected with man, woman, or child. 160

CLOWN Sir, she was respected with him before he married with her.

ESCALUS Which is the wiser here, justice or iniquity? [To Elbow] Is this true? 165

ELBOW [to Clown] O thou caitiff, O thou varlet, O thou wicked Hannibal! I respected with her before I was married to her? [To Escalus] If ever I was respected with her, or she with me, let not your worship think me the poor Duke's officer. [To Clown] Prove this, thou wicked Hannibal, or I'll have mine action of batt'ry on thee. 170

ESCALUS If he took you a box o'th' ear you might have your action of slander too.

ELBOW Marry, I thank your good worship for it. What is't your worship's pleasure I shall do with this wicked caitiff? 175

ESCALUS Truly, officer, because he hath some offences in him that thou wouldst discover if thou couldst, let him continue in his courses till thou know'st what they are. 180

ELBOW Marry, I thank your worship for it.—Thou seest, thou wicked varlet now, what's come upon thee. Thou art to continue now, thou varlet, thou art to continue.

ESCALUS [to Froth] Where were you born, friend?

FROTH Here in Ferrara Vienna, sir. 185

ESCALUS Are you of fourscore pounds a year?

FROTH Yes, an't please you, sir.

ESCALUS So. [To Clown] What trade are you of, sir?

188–94 What...Nine?— This short passage is discontinuous with Escalus's address to Froth at both ends, and the language is Middletonian in every respect. The overt sexual joking is entirely in his vein.

- CLOWN A tapster, a poor widow's tapster.
 190 ESCALUS Your mistress's name?
 CLOWN Mistress Overdone.
 ESCALUS Hath she had any more than one husband?
 CLOWN Nine, sir—Overdone by the last.
 ESCALUS Nine?—Come hither to me, Master Froth. Master
 195 Froth, I would not have you acquainted with tapsters.
 They will draw you, Master Froth, and you will hang them. Get you gone, and let me hear no more of you.
 FROTH I thank your worship. For mine own part, I never come into any room in a tap-house but I am drawn in.
 200 ESCALUS Well, no more of it, Master Froth. Farewell.
 [Exit Froth]
 Come you hither to me, Master Tapster. What's your name, Master Tapster?
 CLOWN Pompey.
 ESCALUS What else?
 205 CLOWN Bum, sir.
 ESCALUS Troth, and your bum is the greatest thing about you; so that, in the beastliest sense, you are Pompey the Great. Pompey, you are partly a bawd, Pompey, howsoever you colour it in being a tapster, are you 210 not? Come, tell me true; it shall be the better for you.
 CLOWN Truly, sir, I am a poor fellow that would live.
 ESCALUS How would you live, Pompey? By being a bawd?
 What do you think of the trade, Pompey? Is it a lawful trade?
 215 CLOWN If the law would allow it, sir.
 ESCALUS But the law will not allow it, Pompey; nor it shall not be allowed in Ferrara Vienna.
 CLOWN Does your worship mean to geld and spay all the youth of the city?
 220 ESCALUS No, Pompey.
 CLOWN Truly, sir, in my poor opinion they will to't then.
 If your worship will take order for the drabs and the knaves, you need not to fear the bawds.
 ESCALUS There is pretty orders beginning, I can tell you. It 225 is but heading and hanging.
- CLOWN If you head and hang all that offend that way but for ten year together, you'll be glad to give out a commission for more heads. If this law hold in Ferrara Vienna ten year, I'll rent the fairest house in it after threepence a bay. If you live to see this come to pass, 230 say Pompey told you so.
 ESCALUS Thank you, good Pompey; and in requital of your prophecy, hark you. I advise you, let me not find you before me again upon any complaint whatsoever; no, not for dwelling where you do. If I do, Pompey, I shall 235 beat you to your tent, and prove a shrewd Caesar to you; in plain dealing, Pompey, I shall have you whipped. So for this time, Pompey, fare you well.
 CLOWN I thank your worship for your good counsel; [aside] but I shall follow it as the flesh and fortune shall better 240 determine.
 Whip me? No, no; let carman whip his jade.
 The valiant heart's not whipped out of his trade.
 Exit
 ESCALUS Come hither to me, Master Elbow; come hither, Master Constable. How long have you been in this place 245 of constable?
 ELBOW Seven year and a half, sir.
 ESCALUS I thought, by the readiness in the office, you had continued in it some time. You say seven years together? 250
 ELBOW And a half, sir.
 ESCALUS Alas, it hath been great pains to you. They do you wrong to put you so oft upon't. Are there not men in your ward sufficient to serve it?
 ELBOW Faith, sir, few of any wit in such matters. As they 255 are chosen, they are glad to choose me for them. I do it for some piece of money, and go through with all.
 ESCALUS Look you bring me in the names of some six or seven, the most sufficient of your parish.
 ELBOW To your worship's house, sir? 260
 ESCALUS To my house. Fare you well. [Exeunt]
 [Exeunt Elbow and officers]

189 poor widow's tapster Shakespeare nowhere else uses the possessive widow's with a qualifying adjective; Middleton not only does so, but he uses the same qualifier poor, and the referent is, as here, a man: 'poor old widow's son', Women Beware 4.1.165.
 192 any more than one Not found anywhere in Shakespeare, but occurs exactly in Middleton in Michaelmas 3.4.49. one husband Shakespeare never uses this phrase; Middleton does so at least three times: Five Gallants 5.1.14, Michaelmas 1.2.272-3, and Dissemblers 1.3.5. In the example from Five Gallants the implication is the same as in the Clown's comment: 'You broke the back of one husband already...'.

 193 Nine Middleton uses the number nine, in contrast with one, as a measure of excess in relation to sex and family relationships in Chaste Maid 2.1.178-80, 'There's a gentleman, | I haply have his name too, that has got | Nine children by one water that he useth'. (Mistress Overdone is again associated with nine in the passage evidently added at the beginning of 4.3, where nine score appears two lines below her name.) by the last Shakespeare never uses the phrase; Middleton does so. Moreover, he uses it with an antecedent referent, and with a verbal element expressing augmentation of what was begun by the first: 'Begun by yon first king, which does increase | Now by the last;' (Aries 206-7, where the mildly erotic imagery surrounding the line of kings in their relation to the city and nation compares with the overtly sexual implication of Mistress Overdone's line of nine husbands).

 203 Pompey Compare Shakespeare's Love's Labour's Lost 5.2, where the clownish Costard plays 'Pompey the Huge', and Middleton's Weapons, in which a major role is a clown called Pompey Doodle.

What's o'clock, think you?
 JUSTICE Eleven, sir.
 ESCALUS I pray you home to dinner with me.
 265 JUSTICE I humbly thank you.
 ESCALUS
 It grieves me for the death of Claudio,
 But there's no remedy.
 JUSTICE Lord Angelo is severe.
 ESCALUS It is but needful.
 270 Mercy is not itself that oft looks so;
 Pardon is still the nurse of second woe.
 But yet, poor Claudio! There is no remedy.
 Come, sir. Exeunt

2.2 Sc. 7 2.2
Enter Provost, Servant

SERVANT
 He's hearing of a cause; he will come straight.
 I'll tell him of you.
 PROVOST Pray you do. [Exit Servant]
 I'll know
 His pleasure; maybe he will relent. Alas,
 He hath but as offended in a dream.
 5 All sects, all ages, smack of this vice; and he
 To die for't!
Enter Angelo
 ANGELO Now, what's the matter, Provost?
 PROVOST
 Is it your will Claudio shall die tomorrow?
 ANGELO
 Did not I tell thee yea? Hadst thou not order?
 Why dost thou ask again?
 PROVOST Lest I might be too rash.
 10 Under your good correction, I have seen
 When after execution judgement hath Repented o'er his doom.
 ANGELO Go to; let that be mine.
 Do you your office, or give up your place,
 And you shall well be spared.
 PROVOST I crave your honour's pardon.
 15 What shall be done, sir, with the groaning Juliet?
 She's very near her hour.
 ANGELO Dispose of her
 To some more fitter place, and that with speed.

[Enter Servant]
 SERVANT
 Here is the sister of the man condemned
 Desires access to you.
 ANGELO Hath he a sister?
 PROVOST
 Ay, my good lord, a very virtuous maid,
 20 And to be shortly of a sisterhood,
 If not already.
 ANGELO Well, let her be admitted. [Exit Servant]
 See you the fornicatress be removed.
 Let her have needful but not lavish means.
 There shall be order for't.
Enter Lucio and Isabella
 PROVOST God save 'Save your honour. 25
 ANGELO
 Stay a little while. [To Isabella] You're welcome.
 What's your will?
 ISABELLA
 I am a woeful suitor to your honour.
 Please but your honour hear me.
 ANGELO Well, what's your suit?
 ISABELLA
 There is a vice that most I do abhor,
 And most desire should meet the blow of justice, 30 For which I would not plead, but that I must;
 For which I must not plead, but that I am
 At war 'twixt will and will not.
 ANGELO Well, the matter?
 ISABELLA
 I have a brother is condemned to die.
 I do beseech you, let it be his fault,
 35 And not my brother.
 PROVOST [aside] God Heaven give thee moving graces!
 ANGELO
 Condemn the fault, and not the actor of it?
 Why, every fault's condemned ere it be done.
 Mine were the very cipher of a function,
 To fine the faults whose fine stands in record,
 40 And let go by the actor.
 ISABELLA O just but severe law!
 I had a brother, then. God Heaven keep your honour.
 PROVOST LUCIO [aside to Isabella as she is going]
 Give't not o'er so. To him again; entreat him.

262-73 What's...sir. This passage, with its contrived dramaturgy and a character who appears nowhere else in the play, looks very much like an interpolation (see Introduction). The mixture of verse and prose is unShakespearean, but is Middletonian, and resembles that of the interpolation in 4.1. It also shares with that passage talk about the arrangements for and the timing of meetings (2.1.262-5, 4.1.7-9 and 17-25), clichés of thanks or apology, some sententious moralizing, and a couplet with exactly the same rhyme (so/woe).

 269 It is but needful Similarly Hengist 1.3.75, 'that's but needful'.
 271 nurse of second woe This phrase, with its theological connotations, has a good Middleton parallel in 'hope of second pity' (Women Beware 2.1.175). There is no other comparable phrase in early modern English drama.
 2.2.25.1 Lucio Probably introduced into this scene as part of the adaptation. Most of his speeches could have originally been spoken by the Provost, but those at 132, 135, and 159 are likely to be Middleton's additions.

 25, 163 God save 'Save The apostrophe and the irregular metre both point to expurgation.
 36 God Heaven 'Heaven give' occurs in Shakespeare only twice elsewhere, both times in expurgated texts.
 42 God Heaven In such phrases Shakespeare's usage is 'God', not 'heaven'. The formulation here is echoed at 2.2.159 and 2.4.34.

- 45 Kneel down before him; hang upon his gown.
You are too cold. If you should need a pin,
You could not with more tame a tongue desire it.
To him, I say!
- ISABELLA [returning to Angelo] Must he needs die?
ANGELO Maiden, no remedy.
- ISABELLA
50 Yes, I do think that you might pardon him,
And neither God heaven nor man grieve at the mercy.
- ANGELO
I will not do't.
- ISABELLA But can you if you would?
ANGELO
Look what I will not, that I cannot do.
- ISABELLA
55 But might you do't, and do the world no wrong,
If so your heart were touched with that remorse
As mine is to him?
- ANGELO He's sentenced; 'tis too late.
- PROVOST LUCIO [aside to Isabella] You are too cold.
- ISABELLA
60 Too late? Why, no; I that do speak a word
May call it again. Well, believe this,
No ceremony that to great ones 'longs,
Not the king's crown, nor the deputed sword,
The marshal's truncheon, nor the judge's robe,
65 As mercy does.
If he had been as you and you as he,
You would have slipped like him, but he, like you,
Would not have been so stern.
- ANGELO Pray you be gone.
- ISABELLA
70 I would to God heaven I had your potency,
And you were Isabel! Should it then be thus?
No; I would tell what 'twere to be a judge,
And what a prisoner.
- PROVOST LUCIO [aside to Isabella]
Ay, touch him; there's the vein.
- ANGELO
Your brother is a forfeit of the law,
And you but waste your words.
- ISABELLA Alas, alas!
75 Why, all the souls that were were forfeit once,
And He that might the vantage best have took Found out the remedy. How would you be
If He which is the top of judgement should
But judge you as you are? O, think on that, 80 And mercy then will breathe within your lips,
Like man new made.
- ANGELO Be you content, fair maid.
It is the law, not I, condemn your brother.
Were he my kinsman, brother, or my son,
- It should be thus with him. He must die tomorrow.
- ISABELLA
Tomorrow? O, that's sudden! Spare him, spare him! 85
He's not prepared for death. Even for our kitchens
We kill the fowl of season. Shall we serve God heaven
With less respect than we do minister
To our gross selves? Good good my lord, bethink you:
Who is it that hath died for this offence? 90
There's many have committed it.
- PROVOST LUCIO [aside] Ay, well said.
- ANGELO
The law hath not been dead, though it hath slept.
Those many had not dared to do that evil
If the first that did th'edict infringe
Had answered for his deed. Now 'tis awake, 95
Takes note of what is done, and, like a prophet,
Looks in a glass that shows what future evils,
Either raw, or by remissness new conceived
And so in progress to be hatched and born,
Are now to have no successive degrees, 100
But ere they live, to end.
- ISABELLA Yet show some pity.
- ANGELO
I show it most of all when I show justice,
For then I pity those I do not know
Which a dismissed offence would after gall,
And do him right that, answering one foul wrong, 105
Lives not to act another. Be satisfied.
Your brother dies tomorrow. Be content.
- ISABELLA
So you must be the first that gives this sentence,
And he that suffers. O, it is excellent
To have a giant's strength, but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant. 110
- PROVOST LUCIO That's well said.
- ISABELLA Could great men thunder
As Jove himself does, Jove would never be quiet,
For every pelting petty officer 115
Would use his heaven for thunder, nothing but thunder.
Merciful heaven,
Thou rather with thy sharp and sulphurous bolt
Split'st the unwedgeable and gnarlèd oak
Than the soft myrtle. But man, proud man, 120
Dressed in a little brief authority,
Most ignorant of what he's most assured,
His glassy essence, like an angry ape
Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven
As makes the angels weep, who, with our spleens, 125
Would all themselves laugh mortal.
- PROVOST LUCIO [aside]
O, to him, to him, wench! He will relent.
He's coming; I perceive't.

51 God heaven JAGGARD's 'heaven' hides a comparison between an anthropomorphic God and man.

69 God heaven JAGGARD gives an un-

Shakespearean usage.
87 God heaven JAGGARD's 'serve heaven' appears elsewhere in Shakespeare only in another expurgated text.

PROVOST [aside to Lucio] Pray God heaven she win him!

ISABELLA We cannot weigh our brother with ourself.
 130 Great men may jest with saints; 'tis wit in them,
 But in the less, foul profanation.

LUCIO [aside to Isabella] Thou'rt i'th' right, girl. More o' that.

ISABELLA That in the captain's but a choleric word,
 Which in the soldier is flat blasphemy.

135 LUCIO [aside to Isabella] Art advised o' that? More on't.
 ANGELO Why do you put these sayings upon me?

ISABELLA Because authority, though it err like others,
 Hath yet a kind of medicine in itself
 That skins the vice o'th' top. Go to your bosom;
 140 Knock there, and ask your heart what it doth know
 That's like my brother's fault. If it confess
 A natural guiltiness, such as is his,
 Let it not sound a thought upon your tongue
 Against my brother's life.

ANGELO [aside] She speaks, and 'tis such sense
 That my sense breeds with it. [To Isabella] Fare you 145 well.

ISABELLA Gentle my lord, turn back.

ANGELO I will bethink me. Come again tomorrow.

ISABELLA Hark how I'll bribe you; good my lord, turn back.
 ANGELO How, bribe me?

ISABELLA Ay, with such gifts that God heaven shall share with
 150 you.

PROVOST LUCIO [aside to Isabella] You had marred all else.

ISABELLA Not with fond shekels of the tested gold,
 Or stones whose rate are either rich or poor
 As fancy values them; but with true prayers,
 155 That shall be up at heaven and enter there
 Ere sunrise, prayers from preservèd souls,
 From fasting maids whose minds are dedicate
 To nothing temporal.

ANGELO Well, come to me
 Tomorrow.

LUCIO [aside to Isabella] Go to; 'tis well; away.

ISABELLA God Heaven keep your honour safe.

ANGELO [aside] Amen;

160 For I am that way going to temptation,
 Where prayer is crossed.

ISABELLA At what hour tomorrow

Shall I attend your lordship?
 ANGELO At any time fore noon.

ISABELLA God save 'Save your honour.
 ANGELO [aside] From thee; even from thy virtue.
 [Exeunt Isabella, Lucio, Provost]

What's this? What's this? Is this her fault or mine?
 The tempter or the tempted, who sins most, ha? 165
 Not she; nor doth she tempt; but it is I
 That, lying by the violet in the sun,
 Do, as the carrion does, not as the flower,
 Corrupt with virtuous season. Can it be
 That modesty may more betray our sense 170
 Than woman's lightness? Having waste ground enough,
 Shall we desire to raze the sanctuary,
 And pitch our evils there? O, fie, fie, fie!
 What dost thou, or what art thou, Angelo?
 Dost thou desire her foully for those things 175
 That make her good? O, let her brother live!
 Thieves for their robbery have authority,
 When judges steal themselves. What, do I love her,
 That I desire to hear her speak again,
 And feast upon her eyes? What is't I dream on? 180
 O cunning enemy, that, to catch a saint,
 With saints dost bait thy hook! Most dangerous
 Is that temptation that doth goad us on
 To sin in loving virtue. Never could the strumpet
 With all her double vigour—art and nature— 185
 Once stir my temper; but this virtuous maid
 Subdues me quite. Ever till now
 When men were fond, I smiled, and wondered how.
 Exit

Sc. 8 2.3 2.3
 Enter [at one door] Duke, [disguised as a friar,] and [at another door] Provost

DUKE Hail to you, Provost!—so I think you are.

PROVOST I am the Provost. What's your will, good friar?

DUKE Bound by my charity and my blest order,
 I come to visit the afflicted spirits
 Here in the prison. Do me the common right 5
 To let me see them, and to make me know
 The nature of their crimes, that I may minister
 To them accordingly.

PROVOST I would do more than that, if more were needful.
 Enter Juliet
 10 Look, here comes one, a gentlewoman of mine,

128 God heaven 'Pray God' is common in Shakespeare, and demonstrably expurgated seven times. 'Pray heaven' occurs only once in an unexpurgated text.
 132 Thou'rt...that; 135 Art...on't; 159

Go...away These speeches, unlike most of Lucio's other lines in the scene, sound unlikely to have been originally spoken by the Provost; the intrusion of prose and of cynical humour instead suggest interpolation by Middleton.

150 God Likely to be the original reading as it gives an echo of the biblical gift(s) of God, which was especially common in the Geneva bible; there are no occurrences of gift(s) of heaven.
 159 God Heaven See note to 2.2.42.

	Who, falling in the flaws of her own youth, Hath blistered her report. She is with child, And he that got it, sentenced—a young man More fit to do another such offence 15 Than die for this.		To several subjects: God heaven hath my empty words, Whilst my invention, hearing not my tongue, Anchors on Isabel; God heaven in my mouth, As if I did but only chew his name, 5 And in my heart the strong and swelling evil Of my conception. The state whereon I studied Is like a good thing, being often read, Grown seared and tedious. Yea, my gravity, Wherein—let no man hear me—I take pride, 10 Could I with boot change for an idle plume Which the air beats in vain. O place, O form, How often dost thou with thy case, thy habit, Wrench awe from fools, and tie the wiser souls To thy false seeming! Blood, thou art blood. 15 Let's write 'good angel' on the devil's horn— 'Tis now the devil's crest.
	DUKE When must he die? PROVOST As I do think, tomorrow. [To Juliet] I have provided for you. Stay a while, And you shall be conducted.		Enter Servant How now? Who's there?
	DUKE 20 Repent you, fair one, of the sin you carry? JULIET I do, and bear the shame most patiently.		SERVANT One Isabel, a sister, desires access to you.
	DUKE I'll teach you how you shall arraign your conscience, And try your penitence if it be sound Or hollowly put on.		ANGELO Teach her the way. [Exit Servant] O heavens, 20 Why does my blood thus muster to my heart, Making both it unable for itself, And dispossessing all my other parts Of necessary fitness?
	25 JULIET I'll gladly learn. DUKE Love you the man that wronged you? JULIET Yes, as I love the woman that wronged him.		25 So play the foolish throngs with one that swoons— Come all to help him, and so stop the air By which he should revive—and even so The general subject to a well-wished king Quit their own part and, in obsequious fondness, Crowd to his presence, where their untaught love Must needs appear offence.
	DUKE So then it seems your most offenceful act Was mutually committed? JULIET Mutually.		30 Enter Isabella How now, fair maid? 30
	DUKE 30 Then was your sin of heavier kind than his. JULIET I do confess it and repent it, father.		ISABELLA I am come to know your pleasure. ANGELO [aside] That you might know it would much better please me Than to demand what 'tis. [To Isabella] Your brother cannot live.
	DUKE 'Tis meet so, daughter. But lest you do repent As that the sin hath brought you to this shame— Which sorrow is always toward ourselves, not heaven, 35 Showing we would not spare heaven as we love it, But as we stand in fear—		ISABELLA Even so. God Heaven keep your honour. ANGELO Yet may he live a while, and it may be 35 As long as you or I. Yet he must die. ISABELLA Under your sentence? ANGELO Yea.
	JULIET I do repent me as it is an evil, And take the shame with joy.		ISABELLA When, I beseech you?—that in his reprieve, 40 Longer or shorter, he may be so fitted That his soul sicken not.
	DUKE There rest. Your partner, as I hear, must die tomorrow, And I am going with instruction to him. God's grace go with you. Benedicite!	Exit	ANGELO Ha, fie, these filthy vices! It were as good JULIET Must die tomorrow? O injurious law, That respites me a life whose very comfort Is still a dying horror!
	PROVOST 'Tis pity of him.	Exeunt
2.4	Sc. 9 2.4 Enter Angelo
	ANGELO When I would pray and think, I think and pray

2.3.41 grace The metrical irregularity might refer to expurgation of 'God's' here and at 5.1.393.

2.4.2, 4 God heaven In the Eucharist, the body of Christ is symbolically taken in the mouth. In Basilikon Doron (1599), to which Measure alludes elsewhere, the future James I wrote 'Keep God more sparingly in your mouth, but abundantly in your heart'. Consistency is probably required between 2 and 4.

34 God Heaven See note to 2.2.45.

To pardon him that hath from nature stol'n
 A man already made, as to remit
 Their saucy sweetness that do coin God's heaven's 45 image
 In stamps that are forbid. 'Tis all as easy
 Falsely to take away a life true made
 As to put metal in restrainèd moulds,
 To make a false one.

ISABELLA
 50 'Tis set down so in heaven, but not in earth.

ANGELO
 Say you so? Then I shall pose you quickly.
 Which had you rather: that the most just law
 Now took your brother's life, or, to redeem him,
 Give up your body to such sweet uncleanness
 As she that he hath stained?

55 ISABELLA Sir, believe this.
 I had rather give my body than my soul.

ANGELO
 I talk not of your soul. Our còmpelled sins
 Stand more for number than for account.

ISABELLA How say you?

ANGELO
 Nay, I'll not warrant that, for I can speak
 60 Against the thing I say. Answer to this.
 I now, the voice of the recorded law,
 Pronounce a sentence on your brother's life.
 Might there not be a charity in sin
 To save this brother's life?

ISABELLA Please you to do't,
 65 I'll take it as a peril to my soul
 It is no sin at all, but charity.

ANGELO
 Pleased you to do't at peril of your soul
 Were equal poise of sin and charity.

ISABELLA
 70 That I do beg his life, if it be sin,
 Heaven let me bear it. You granting of my suit,
 If that be sin, I'll make it my morn prayer
 To have it added to the faults of mine,
 And nothing of your answer.

ANGELO Nay, but hear me.
 Your sense pursues not mine. Either you are ignorant,
 75 Or seem so craftily, and that's not good.

ISABELLA
 Let me be ignorant, and in nothing good
 But graciously to know I am no better.

ANGELO
 Thus wisdom wishes to appear most bright
 80 When it doth tax itself: as these black masks
 Proclaim an enshield beauty ten times louder
 Than beauty could, displayed. But mark me.
 To be receivèd plain, I'll speak more gross.
 Your brother is to die.

ISABELLA So.

ANGELO
 And his offence is so, as it appears,
 Accountant to the law upon that pain.

ISABELLA True.

ANGELO
 Admit no other way to save his life—
 As I subscribe not that nor any other—
 But, in the loss of question, that you his sister,
 90 Finding yourself desired of such a person
 Whose credit with the judge, or own great place,
 Could fetch your brother from the manacles
 Of the all-binding law, and that there were
 No earthly mean to save him, but that either
 95 You must lay down the treasures of your body
 To this supposed, or else to let him suffer—
 What would you do?

ISABELLA
 As much for my poor brother as myself.
 That is, were I under the terms of death,
 100 Th'impression of keen whips I'd wear as rubies,
 And strip myself to death as to a bed
 That longing have been sick for, ere I'd yield
 My body up to shame.

ANGELO Then must your brother die.

ISABELLA And 'twere the cheaper way.
 Better it were a brother died at once
 Than that a sister, by redeeming him,
 Should die for ever.

ANGELO
 Were not you then as cruel as the sentence
 110 That you have slandered so?

ISABELLA
 Ignominy in ransom and free pardon
 Are of two houses; lawful mercy
 Is nothing kin to foul redemption.

ANGELO
 115 You seemed of late to make the law a tyrant,
 And rather proved the sliding of your brother
 A merriment than a vice.

ISABELLA
 O pardon me, my lord. It oft falls out
 To have what we would have, we speak not what we mean.
 120 I something do excuse the thing I hate
 For his advantage that I dearly love.

ANGELO
 We are all frail.

ISABELLA Else let my brother die—
 If not a federy, but only he,
 Owe and succeed thy weakness.

ANGELO Nay, women are frail too.

ISABELLA
 125 Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves,
 Which are as easy broke as they make forms.
 Women? Help, heaven! Men their creation mar

45 God's heaven's Humans were made in God's image, not heaven's (Genesis 1:27).

Act 2 Scene 4

Measure for Measure.

In profiting by them. Nay, call us ten times frail,
 For we are soft as our complexions are,
 And credulous to false prints.

130 ANGELO I think it well,
 And from this testimony of your own sex,
 Since I suppose we are made to be no stronger
 Than faults may shake our frames, let me be bold.
 I do arrest your words. Be that you are;
 135 That is, a woman. If you be more, you're none.
 If you be one, as you are well expressed
 By all external warrants, show it now,
 By putting on the destined livery.

ISABELLA
 I have no tongue but one. Gentle my lord, 140 Let me entreat you speak the former language.

ANGELO Plainly conceive, I love you.

ISABELLA
 My brother did love Juliet,
 And you tell me that he shall die for't.

ANGELO
 He shall not, Isabel, if you give me love.

ISABELLA
 145 I know your virtue hath a licence in't,
 Which seems a little fouler than it is,
 To pluck on others.

ANGELO Believe me, on mine honour,
 My words express my purpose.

ISABELLA
 150 Ha, little honour to be much believed,
 And most pernicious purpose! Seeming, seeming!
 I will proclaim thee, Angelo; look for't.
 Sign me a present pardon for my brother,
 Or with an outstretched throat I'll tell the world aloud
 What man thou art.

ANGELO Who will believe thee, Isabel?
 155 My unsoiled name, th'austereness of my life,
 My vouch against you, and my place i'th' state,
 Will so your accusation outweigh
 That you shall stifle in your own report,
 And smell of calumny. I have begun,
 160 And now I give my sensual race the rein.
 Fit thy consent to my sharp appetite.
 Lay by all nicety and prolixious blushes
 That banish what they sue for. Redeem thy brother
 By yielding up thy body to my will,
 165 Or else he must not only die the death,
 But thy unkindness shall his death draw out
 To ling'ring sufferance. Answer me tomorrow,
 Or by the affection that now guides me most,
 I'll prove a tyrant to him. As for you,
 170 Say what you can, my false o'erweighs your true.

Exit

ISABELLA
 To whom should I complain? Did I tell this,
 Who would believe me? O perilous mouths,
 That bear in them one and the selfsame tongue
 Either of condemnation or approof, 175 Bidding the law make curtsy to their will,

Hooking both right and wrong to th' appetite,
 To follow as it draws! I'll to my brother.
 Though he hath fall'n by prompture of the blood,
 Yet hath he in him such a mind of honour
 That had he twenty heads to tender down
 180 On twenty bloody blocks, he'd yield them up
 Before his sister should her body stoop
 To such abhorred pollution.
 Then Isabel live chaste, and brother die:
 More than our brother is our chastity.
 185 I'll tell him yet of Angelo's request,
 And fit his mind to death, for his soul's rest. Exit

Finis Actus Secundus

Sc. 10 3.1
Incipit Actus Tertius
 Enter Duke, [disguised as a friar,] Claudio, and Provost

DUKE
 3.1 So then you hope of pardon from Lord Angelo?

CLAUDIO
 The miserable have no other medicine
 But only hope.
 I've hope to live, and am prepared to die.

DUKE
 Be absolute for death. Either death or life
 5 Shall thereby be the sweeter. Reason thus with life.
 If I do lose thee, I do lose a thing
 That none but fools would keep. A breath thou art,
 Servile to all the skyey influences
 That dost this habitation where thou keep'st
 10 Hourly afflict. Merely thou art death's fool,
 For him thou labour'st by thy flight to shun,
 And yet runn'st toward him still. Thou art not noble,
 For all th'accommodations that thou bear'st
 Are nursed by baseness. Thou'rt by no means valiant,
 15 For thou dost fear the soft and tender fork
 Of a poor worm. Thy best of rest is sleep,
 And that thou oft provok'st, yet grossly fear'st
 Thy death, which is no more. Thou art not thyself,
 20 For thou exist'st on many a thousand grains
 That issue out of dust. Happy thou art not,
 For what thou hast not, still thou striv'st to get,
 And what thou hast, forget'st. Thou art not certain,
 For thy complexion shifts to strange effects
 25 After the moon. If thou art rich, thou'rt poor,
 For like an ass whose back with ingots bows,
 Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,
 And death unloads thee. Friend hast thou none,
 For thine own bowels, which do call thee sire,
 30 The mere effusion of thy proper loins,
 Do curse the gout, serpigo, and the rheum,
 For ending thee no sooner. Thou hast nor youth nor age,
 But as it were an after-dinner's sleep
 Dreaming on both; for all thy blessèd youth

35 Becomes as aged, and doth beg the alms
Of palsied old; and when thou art old and rich,
Thou hast neither heat, affection, limb, nor beauty,
To make thy riches pleasant. What's in this
That bears the name of life? Yet in this life
40 Lie hid more thousand deaths; yet death we fear
That makes these odds all even.

CLAUDIO I humbly thank you.
To sue to live, I find I seek to die,
And seeking death, find life. Let it come on.

ISABELLA [within]
What ho! Peace here, grace, and good company!

PROVOST
45 Who's there? Come in; the wish deserves a welcome.
Enter Isabella

DUKE [to Claudio]
Dear sir, ere long I'll visit you again.

CLAUDIO Most holy sir, I thank you.

ISABELLA
My business is a word or two with Claudio.

PROVOST
And very welcome.—Look, signor, here's your sister.

DUKE
Provost, a word with you.

50 PROVOST As many as you please.

DUKE
Bring me to hear them speak where I may be concealed.
[Exeunt]

CLAUDIO Now sister, what's the comfort?

ISABELLA
Why, as all comforts are: most good, most good indeed.
Lord Angelo, having affairs to heaven,
55 Intends you for his swift ambassador,
Where you shall be an everlasting leiger.
Therefore your best appointment make with speed.
Tomorrow you set on.

CLAUDIO Is there no remedy?

ISABELLA
None but such remedy as, to save a head,
60 To cleave a heart in twain.

CLAUDIO But is there any?

ISABELLA Yes, brother, you may live.
There is a devilish mercy in the judge,
If you'll implore it, that will free your life,
But fetter you till death.

65 CLAUDIO Perpetual durance?

ISABELLA
Ay, just, perpetual durance; a restraint,
Though all the world's vastidity you had,
To a determined scope.

CLAUDIO But in what nature?

ISABELLA
In such a one as you consenting to't
Would bark your honour from that trunk you bear, 70 And leave you naked.

CLAUDIO Let me know the point.

ISABELLA
O, I do fear thee, Claudio, and I quake
Lest thou a feverous life shouldst entertain,
And six or seven winters more respect
75 Than a perpetual honour. Dar'st thou die?
The sense of death is most in apprehension,
And the poor beetle that we tread upon
In corporal sufferance finds a pang as great
As when a giant dies.

CLAUDIO Why give you me this shame?
Think you I can a resolution fetch 80 From flow'ry tenderness? If I must die,
I will encounter darkness as a bride,
And hug it in mine arms.

ISABELLA
There spake my brother; there my father's grave
Did utter forth a voice. Yes, thou must die.
85 Thou art too noble to conserve a life
In base appliances. This outward-sainted deputy,
Whose settled visage and deliberate word
Nips youth i'th' head and follies doth enew
As falcon doth the fowl, is yet a devil.
90 His filth within being cast, he would appear
A pond as deep as hell.

CLAUDIO The precise Angelo?

ISABELLA
O, 'tis the cunning livery of hell
The damndest body to invest and cover
In precise guards! Dost thou think, Claudio:
95 If I would yield him my virginity,
Thou might'st be freed!

CLAUDIO O heavens, it cannot be!

ISABELLA
Yes, he would give't thee, from this rank offence,
So to offend him still. This night's the time
That I should do what I abhor to name,
100 Or else thou diest tomorrow.

CLAUDIO Thou shalt not do't.

ISABELLA O, were it but my life,
I'd throw it down for your deliverance
As frankly as a pin.

CLAUDIO Thanks, dear Isabel.

105 ISABELLA
Be ready, Claudio, for your death tomorrow.

CLAUDIO
As God's my judge Yes. Has he affections in him
That thus can make him bite the law by th' nose
When he would force it? Sure it is no sin,
110 Or of the deadly seven it is the least.

3.1.107 As God's my judge Yes 'Yes' is used with anomalous frequency in Measure, and substitution for profanity is one obvious cause. 'As God's my judge' makes up a short line to a pentameter, and is thematically appropriate to the play as a whole and the passage in particular.

- ISABELLA Which is the least?
 CLAUDIO
 If it were damnable, he being so wise,
 Why would he for the momentary trick
 Be perdurably fined? O Isabell!
- 115 ISABELLA What says my brother?
 CLAUDIO Death is a fearful thing.
 ISABELLA And shamed life a hateful.
 CLAUDIO
 Ay, but to die, and go we know not where;
 To lie in cold obstruction, and to rot;
 120 This sensible warm motion to become
 A kneaded clod, and the dilated spirit
 To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside
 In thrilling region of thick-ribbed ice;
 To be imprisoned in the viewless winds,
 125 And blown with restless violence round about
 The pendent world; or to be worse than worst
 Of those that lawless and incertain thought
 Imagine howling—'tis too horrible!
 The weariest and most loathed worldly life
 130 That age, ache, penury, and imprisonment
 Can lay on nature is a paradise
 To what we fear of death.
 ISABELLA Alas, alas!
 CLAUDIO Sweet sister, let me live.
 135 What sin you do to save a brother's life,
 Nature dispenses with the deed so far
 That it becomes a virtue.
- ISABELLA O, you beast!
 O faithless coward, O dishonest wretch,
 Wilt thou be made a man out of my vice?
 140 Is't not a kind of incest to take life
 From thine own sister's shame? What should I think?
 God Heaven shield my mother played my father fair,
 For such a warped slip of wilderness
 Ne'er issued from his blood. Take my defiance, 145 Die, perish! Might but my bending down
 Reprieve thee from thy fate, it should proceed.
 I'll pray a thousand prayers for thy death,
 No word to save thee.
- CLAUDIO Nay, hear me, Isabel.
 150 ISABELLA O fie, fie, fie!
 Thy sin's not accidental, but a trade.
 Mercy to thee would prove itself a bawd.
 'Tis best that thou diest quickly.
 [She parts from Claudio]
- CLAUDIO O hear me, Isabella.
 [Enter Duke]
- DUKE
 Vouchsafe a word, young sister, but one word.
- 155 ISABELLA What is your will?
 DUKE Might you dispense with your leisure, I would by and by have some speech with you. The satisfaction I would require is likewise your own benefit.
- ISABELLA I have no superfluous leisure; my stay must be stolen out of other affairs; but I will attend you a while. 160
 DUKE [standing apart with Claudio] Son, I have overheard what hath passed between you and your sister. Angelo had never the purpose to corrupt her; only he hath made an assay of her virtue, to practise his judgement with the disposition of natures. She, having the truth 165 of honour in her, hath made him that gracious denial which he is most glad to receive. I am confessor to Angelo, and I know this to be true. Therefore prepare yourself to death. Do not falsify your resolution with hopes that are fallible. Tomorrow you must die. Go to 170 your knees and make ready.
 CLAUDIO Let me ask my sister pardon. I am so out of love with life that I will sue to be rid of it.
 DUKE Hold you there. Farewell.
 [Claudio joins Isabella]
 Provost, a word with you. 175
 [Enter Provost]
 PROVOST What's your will, father?
 DUKE That now you are come, you will be gone. Leave me a while with the maid. My mind promises with my habit no loss shall touch her by my company.
 PROVOST In good time. Exit [with Claudio] 180
 DUKE The hand that hath made you fair hath made you good. The goodness that is cheap in beauty makes beauty brief in goodness; but grace, being the soul of your complexion, shall keep the body of it ever fair.
 The assault that Angelo hath made to you fortune 185 hath conveyed to my understanding; and but that frailty hath examples for his falling, I should wonder at Angelo. How will you do to content this substitute, and to save your brother?
- ISABELLA I am now going to resolve him. I had rather 190 my brother die by the law than my son should be unlawfully born. But O, how much is the good Duke deceived in Angelo! If ever he return and I can speak to him, I will open my lips in vain, or discover his government. 195
 DUKE That shall not be much amiss. Yet as the matter now stands, he will avoid your accusation: he made trial of you only. Therefore fasten your ear on my advisings. To the love I have in doing good, a remedy presents itself. I do make myself believe that you may 200 most uprightly do a poor wronged lady a merited benefit, redeem your brother from the angry law, do no stain to your own gracious person, and much please the absent Duke, if peradventure he shall ever return to have hearing of this business. 205 ISABELLA Let me hear you speak farther. I have spirit to do anything that appears not foul in the truth of my spirit.
 DUKE Virtue is bold, and goodness never fearful. Have you not heard speak of Mariana, the sister of Frederick, the 210 great soldier who miscarried at sea?

142 God Heaven 'Heaven shield' occurs nowhere else in Shakespeare; 'God shield' (or 'God ield') occurs six times.

ISABELLA I have heard of the lady, and good words went with her name.

215 DUKE She should this Angelo have married, was affianced to her oath, and the nuptial appointed; between which time of the contract and limit of the solemnity, her brother Frederick was wrecked at sea, having in that perished vessel the dowry of his sister. But mark how heavily this befell to the poor gentlewoman. There 220 she lost a noble and renowned brother, in his love toward her ever most kind and natural; with him, the portion and sinew of her fortune, her marriage dowry;
with both, her combinate husband, this well-seeming
Angelo.

225 ISABELLA Can this be so? Did Angelo so leave her?
DUKE Left her in her tears, and dried not one of them with his comfort; swallowed his vows whole, pretending in her discoveries of dishonour; in few, bestowed her on her own lamentation, which she yet wears for his sake; 230 and he, a marble to her tears, is washed with them, but relents not.

ISABELLA What a merit were it in death to take this poor maid from the world! What corruption in this life, that it will let this man live! But how out of this can she 235 avail?

DUKE It is a rupture that you may easily heal, and the cure of it not only saves your brother, but keeps you from dishonour in doing it.

ISABELLA Show me how, good father.

240 DUKE This forenamed maid hath yet in her the continuance of her first affection. His unjust unkindness, that in all reason should have quenched her love, hath, like an impediment in the current, made it more violent and unruly. Go you to Angelo, answer his requiring with 245 a plausible obedience, agree with his demands to the point; only refer yourself to this advantage: first, that your stay with him may not be long; that the time may have all shadow and silence in it; and the place answer to convenience. This being granted in course, and now 250 follows all. We shall advise this wronged maid to stand up your appointment, go in your place. If the encounter acknowledge itself hereafter, it may compel him to her recompense; and hear, by this is your brother saved, your honour untainted, the poor Mariana advantaged, 255 and the corrupt deputy scaled. The maid will I frame and make fit for his attempt. If you think well to carry this, as you may, the doubleness of the benefit defends the deceit from reproof. What think you of it?

ISABELLA The image of it gives me content already, and I 260 trust it will grow to a most prosperous perfection.

DUKE It lies much in your holding up. Haste you speedily to Angelo. If for this night he entreat you to his bed, give him promise of satisfaction. I will presently to Saint Luke's; there at the moated grange resides this dejected

Mariana. At that place call upon me; and dispatch with Angelo, that it may be quickly. 265

ISABELLA I thank you for this comfort. Fare you well, good father. Exit

Enter Elbow, Clown, officers

ELBOW Nay, if there be no remedy for it but that you will needs buy and sell men and women like beasts, we shall 270 have all the world drink brown and white bastard.

DUKE O heavens, what stuff is here?

CLOWN 'Twas never merry world since, of two usuries, the merriest was put down, and the worse allowed by order of law, a furred gown to keep him warm—and 275 furred with fox on lambskins too, to signify that craft, being richer than innocency, stands for the facing.

ELBOW Come your way, sir.—God bless 'Bless you, good father friar.

DUKE And you, good brother father. What offence hath 280 this man made you, sir?

ELBOW Marry, sir, he hath offended the law; and, sir, we take him to be a thief, too, sir, for we have found upon him, sir, a strange picklock, which we have sent to the deputy. 285

DUKE [to Clown] Fie, sirrah, a bawd, a wicked bawd!
The evil that thou causest to be done,
That is thy means to live. Do thou but think
What 'tis to cram a maw or clothe a back 290 From such a filthy vice. Say to thyself,
'From their abominable and beastly touches
I drink, I eat, array myself, and live'.
Canst thou believe thy living is a life,
So stinkingly depending? Go mend, go mend.

CLOWN Indeed it does stink in some sort, sir. But yet, sir, I 295 would prove—

DUKE
Nay, if the devil have given thee proofs for sin,
Thou wilt prove his.—Take him to prison, officer.
Correction and instruction must both work
Ere this rude beast will profit. 300

ELBOW He must before the deputy, sir; he has given him warning. The deputy cannot abide a whoremaster. If he be a whoremonger and comes before him, he were as good go a mile on his errand.

DUKE
That we were all as some would seem to be—305 Free from our faults, or faults from seeming free.

ELBOW His neck will come to your waist: a cord, sir.

Enter Lucio

CLOWN I spy comfort, I cry bail. Here's a gentleman, and a friend of mine.

LUCIO How now, noble Pompey? What, at the wheels of 310 Caesar? Art thou led in triumph? What, is there none of Pygmalion's images newly made woman to be had now, for putting the hand in the pocket and extracting clutched? What reply, ha? What sayst thou to this tune,

278, 341 God bless 'Bless The apostrophe in JAGGARD at 278 hints at an expurgation.
'God bless' is Shakespeare's preferred form, and elsewhere was demonstrably expurgated.

- 315 matter, and method? Is't not drowned i'th' last rain, ha? What sayst thou, trot? Is the world as it was, man?
Which is the way? Is it sad and few words? Or how?
The trick of it?
- DUKE Still thus and thus; still worse!
- 320 LUCIO How doth my dear morsel thy mistress? Procures she still, ha?
- CLOWN Troth, sir, she hath eaten up all her beef, and she is herself in the tub.
- LUCIO Why, 'tis good, it is the right of it, it must be so.
325 Ever your fresh whore and your powdered bawd; an unshunned consequence, it must be so. Art going to prison, Pompey?
- CLOWN Yes, faith, sir.
- LUCIO Why 'tis not amiss, Pompey. Farewell. Go; say I sent 330 thee thither. For debt, Pompey, or how?
- ELBOW For being a bawd, for being a bawd.
- LUCIO Well then, imprison him. If imprisonment be the due of a bawd, why, 'tis his right. Bawd is he doubtless, and of antiquity too—bawd born. Farewell, good Pompey.
- 335 Commend me to the prison, Pompey. You will turn good husband now, Pompey; you will keep the house.
- CLOWN I hope, sir, your good worship will be my bail?
- LUCIO No, in faith indeed, will I not, Pompey; it is not the wear. I will pray, Pompey, to increase your bondage. If 340 you take it not patiently, why, your mettle is the more.
Adieu, trusty Pompey.—God bless 'Bless you, friar.
- DUKE And you.
- LUCIO Does Bridget paint still, Pompey, ha?
- ELBOW [to Clown] Come your ways, sir, come.
- 345 CLOWN [to Lucio] You will not bail me then, sir?
- LUCIO Then, Pompey, nor now.—What news abroad, friar, what news?
- ELBOW [to Clown] Come your ways, sir, come.
- LUCIO Go to kennel, Pompey, go.
[Exeunt Elbow, Clown, and officers]
- 350 What news, friar, of the Duke?
- DUKE I know none. Can you tell me of any?
- LUCIO Some say he is with the Emperor of Russia; other some, he is in Rome. But where is he, think you?
- DUKE I know not where; but wheresoever, I wish him well.
- 355 LUCIO It was a mad, fantastical trick of him to steal from the state, and usurp the beggary he was never born to. Lord Angelo dukes it well in his absence; he puts transgression to't.
- DUKE He does well in't.
- 360 LUCIO A little more lenity to lechery would do no harm in him. Something too crabbed that way, friar.
- DUKE It is too general a vice, and severity must cure it.
- LUCIO Yes, in good faith sooth, the vice is of a great kindred, it is well allied. But it is impossible to extirp it quite, friar, till eating and drinking be put down. They 365 say this Angelo was not made by man and woman, after this downright way of creation. Is it true, think
you?
- DUKE How should he be made, then?
- LUCIO Some report a sea-maid spawned him, some that he 370 was begot between two stockfishes. But it is certain that when he makes water his urine is congealed ice; that I know to be true. And he is a motion ungenerative;
that's infallible.
- DUKE You are pleasant, sir, and speak apace. 375
- LUCIO Fore God Why, what a ruthless thing is this in him, for the rebellion of a codpiece to take away the life of a man! Would the Duke that is absent have done this?
Ere he would have hanged a man for the getting a 380 hundred bastards, he would have paid for the nursing a thousand. He had some feeling of the sport, he knew the service, and that instructed him to mercy.
- DUKE I never heard the absent Duke much detected for women; he was not inclined that way.
- LUCIO O sir, you are deceived. 385
- DUKE 'Tis not possible.
- LUCIO Who, not the Duke? 'Sblood Yes, your beggar of fifty; and his use was to put a ducat in her clack-dish.
The Duke had crochets in him. He would be drunk too, 390 that let me inform you.
- DUKE You do him wrong, surely.
- LUCIO Sir, I was an inward of his. A shy fellow was the Duke, and I believe I know the cause of his withdrawing.
- DUKE What, I prithe, might be the cause? 395
- LUCIO No, pardon, 'tis a secret must be locked within the teeth and the lips. But this I can let you understand.
The greater file of the subject held the Duke to be wise.
- DUKE Wise? Why, no question but he was.
- LUCIO A very superficial, ignorant, unweighing fellow. 400
- DUKE Either this is envy in you, folly, or mistaking.
The very stream of his life, and the business he hath helmed, must, upon a warranted need, give him a better proclamation. Let him be but testimonied in his own 405 bringings-forth, and he shall appear to the envious a scholar, a statesman, and a soldier. Therefore you speak unskilfully, or, if your knowledge be more, it is much darkened in your malice.
- LUCIO Sir, I know him and I love him.

363 faith sooth Lucio uses the very phrase Hotspur mocks in 1 Henry IV 3.1.242–52 as a protestation fit only for ‘Sunday citizens’ or ‘a comfit-maker’s wife’. Before the 1606 Act against profanity, it was used in Shakespeare only by Lady Percy, in the instance Hotspur mocks, Rosalind (As You Like It 3.2.378), and Pandarus, by way of demonstrating effete courtly diction (Troilus 3.1.55). In expurgated Shakespeare texts, ‘faith’ is twice weakened to ‘sooth’. ‘In good faith’ is spoken by Feste, Lavatch, and the First Clown in the grave-digger scene of Hamlet, and seems appropriate to a cynical comic.

376 Why Lucio’s claims become steadily more outrageous, and it might be expect-ted that his oaths would follow a similar course. A profanity such as ‘fore God’ may have been expurgated.

385 O An oath such as ‘By the mass’ might have been deleted.

387 'Sblood Yes ‘Yes’ is weak; a strong oath would be a comically offensive way of addressing the supposed friar, and ‘Sblood’ alliterates with ‘beggar’.

410 DUKE Love talks with better knowledge, and knowledge with dearer love.

LUCIO Swounds Come, sir, I know what I know.

DUKE I can hardly believe that, since you know not what you speak. But if ever the Duke return, as our prayers 415 are he may, let me desire you to make your answer before him. If it be honest you have spoke, you have courage to maintain it. I am bound to call upon you;
and I pray you, your name?

LUCIO Sir, my name is Lucio, well known to the Duke.

420 DUKE He shall know you better, sir, if I may live to report
you.

LUCIO I fear you not.

DUKE O, you hope the Duke will return no more, or you imagine me too unhurtful an opposite. But indeed I can 425 do you little harm; you'll forswear this again.

LUCIO I'll be hanged first. Thou art deceived in me, friar.
But no more of this. Canst thou tell if Claudio die tomorrow or no?

DUKE Why should he die, sir?

430 LUCIO Why? For filling a bottle with a tundish. I would the Duke we talk of were returned again; this ungenitured agent will unpeople the province with continency.
Sparrows must not build in his house-eaves, because they are lecherous. The Duke yet would have dark 435 deeds darkly answered: he would never bring them to light. Would he were returned. Marry, this Claudio is condemned for untrussing. Farewell, good friar. I prithe pray for me. The Duke, I say to thee again, would eat mutton on Fridays. He's not past it yet, and, 440 I say to thee, he would mouth with a beggar, though she smelt brown bread and garlic. Say that I said so.
Farewell. Exit

DUKE

No might nor greatness in mortality
Can censure scape; back-wounding calumny
445 The whitest virtue strikes. What king so strong
Can tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue?

Enter Escalus, Provost, and Bawd

But who comes here?

ESCALUS [to Provost]

Go, away with her to prison.

450 BAWD Good my lord, be good to me. Your honour is accounted a merciful man, good my lord.

ESCALUS Double and treble admonition, and still forfeit in the same kind! This would make mercy swear and play the tyrant.

PROVOST A bawd of eleven years' continuance, may it 455 please your honour.

BAWD My lord, this is one Lucio's information against me.
Mistress Kate Keepdown was with child by him in the Duke's time; he promised her marriage. His child is a year and a quarter old come Philip and Jacob. I have 460 kept it myself; and see how he goes about to abuse me.

412 Swounds Come The Duke's 'You'll forswear this again' implies that Lucio has sworn the truth of his slanders. In expurgated Shakespeare plays where the ESCALUS That fellow is a fellow of much licence. Let him be called before us. Away with her to prison.

Go to, no more words. Provost, my brother Angelo will not be altered; Claudio must die tomorrow. Let 465 him be furnished with divines, and have all charitable preparation. If my brother wrought by my pity, it should not be so with him.

PROVOST So please you, this friar hath been with him and advised him for th'entertainment of death.

[Exeunt Provost and Bawd]

ESCALUS Good even, good father.

DUKE Bliss and goodness on you.

ESCALUS Of whence are you?

DUKE

Not of this country, though my chance is now
To use it for my time. I am a brother
Of gracious order, late come from the See 475 In special business from his Holiness.

ESCALUS What news abroad i'th' world?

DUKE None, but that there is so great a fever on goodness that the dissolution of it must cure it. Novelty is only 480 in request, and it is as dangerous to be aged in any kind of course as it is virtuous to be inconstant in any undertaking. There is scarce truth enough alive to make societies secure, but security enough to make fellowships accursed. Much upon this riddle runs the wisdom of the world. This news is old enough, yet it is 485 every day's news. I pray you, sir, of what disposition was the Duke?

ESCALUS One that, above all other strifes, contended especially to know himself.

DUKE What pleasure was he given to?

ESCALUS Rather rejoicing to see another merry than merry at anything which professed to make him rejoice; a gentleman of all temperance. But leave we him to his events, with a prayer they may prove prosperous, and let me desire to know how you find Claudio prepared.
495 I am made to understand that you have lent him visitation.

DUKE He professes to have received no sinister measure from his judge, but most willingly humbles himself to the determination of justice. Yet had he framed to 500 himself, by the instruction of his frailty, many deceiving promises of life, which I, by my good leisure, have discredited to him; and now is he resolved to die.

ESCALUS You have paid the heavens your function, and the prisoner the very debt of your calling. I have laboured 505 for the poor gentleman to the extremest shore of my modesty, but my brother-justice have I found so severe that he hath forced me to tell him he is indeed justice.

DUKE If his own life answer the straitness of his proceeding, it shall become him well; wherein if he chance to fail, 510 he hath sentenced himself.

ESCALUS I am going to visit the prisoner. Fare you well.

original text can be compared, 'Come' is used three times to substitute for 'Swounds'.

	DUKE Peace be with you.	[Exit Escalus]	Incipit Actus Quartus	4.1
513a	O place and greatness, millions of false eyes		Mariana and Boy singing [discovered]
513b	Are stuck upon thee; volumes of report		Song
513c	Run with these false and most contrarious quests		[BOY]
513d	Upon thy doings; thousand escapes of wit		Take, O take those lips away
513e	Make thee the father of their idle dream, And rack thee in their fancies.		That so sweetly were forsworn, And those eyes, the break of day
	Enter Isabella		Lights that do mislead the morn; But my kisses bring again, bring again,	5
513f	Very well met.		Seals of love, though sealed in vain, sealed in vain.
515	He who the sword of heaven will bear Should be as holy as severe, Pattern in himself to know, Grace to stand, and virtue go, More nor less to others paying Than by self-offences weighing.		Enter Duke, [disguised as a friar]
520	Shame to him whose cruel striking Kills for faults of his own liking! Twice treble shame on Angelo, To weed my vice, and let his grow! O, what may man within him hide, Though angel on the outward side!		MARIANA Break off thy song, and haste thee quick away. Here comes a man of comfort, whose advice Hath often stilled my brawling discontent.
525	How may likeness made in crimes Make my practice on the times To draw with idle spiders' strings Most ponderous and substantial things?		[Exit Boy]
530	Craft against vice I must apply. With Angelo tonight shall lie His old betrothed but despised. So disguise shall, by th' disguisèd, Pay with falsehood false exacting,		I cry you mercy, sir, and well could wish You had not found me here so musical. Let me excuse me, and believe me so: My mirth it much displeasèd, but pleasèd my woe.	10
535	And perform an old contracting. Finis Actus Tertius	Exit	DUKE 'Tis good; though music oft hath such a charm To make bad good, and good provoke to harm. I pray you tell me, hath anybody enquired for me here today? Much upon this time have I promised here to meet.	15
			MARIANA You have not been enquired after; I have sat here all day.	20
			Enter Isabella
			DUKE I do constantly believe you; the time is come even now. I shall crave your forbearance a little. Maybe I will call upon you anon, for some advantage to yourself.
			MARIANA I am always bound to you. Exit

513c Run...quests JAGGARD'S 'Run with these false, and most contrarious Quest' can be emended 'these' to 'their' or 'Quest' to 'quests'. The first alternative is accepted in the present edition where the speech is printed in the same place as in JAGGARD, at 4.1.60, so that 'their' refers to 'false eyes'. 'These' quests refers to Lucio's slanders; the reading therefore works much more persuasively given the envisaged position of the speech before the adaptation took place, as here, after the Duke's encounter with Lucio and conversation with Escalus about his reputation.

514-35 He who...contracting JAGGARD prints the Duke's soliloquy 'He who the sword of heaven will bear' here, and the shorter 'O place and greatness' after 4.1.56. The adaptation probably introduced this arrangement by transposing the two speeches in the original text, to provide a longer and stronger close at the new act-break (see Introduction).

4.1 Before adaptation, the Duke would presumably have remained on stage, and the action would therefore have moved directly from his soliloquy to his meeting Isabella; Mariana would have first entered at 4.1.49.1. There would therefore have been no scene-break between the beginning of JAGGARD'S 3.1 and the end of JAGGARD'S 4.1.

1-6 Take...vain The song seems to have been added as part of the adaptation. The second stanza in the composer John Wilson's manuscript, and similarly most other texts including Rollo, Duke of Normandy, reads:

Hide, O hide those hills of snow
That thy frozen bosom bears,
On whose tops the pinks that grow
Are yet of those that April wears;
But first set my poor heart free,
Bound in those icy chains by thee.

This makes it certain that the addressee is a woman, whereas in Measure the song expresses Mariana's feelings towards Angelo. For the dramatic technique, see Introduction; for a musical setting, see Companion, p. 167.

8-9 Here...discontent Perhaps an inconsistency, as the Duke has evidently only recently assumed disguise as a friar.

8 comfort A key Middleton word and concept, often equivocating between the spiritual and the physical.

12-15 so...woe...charm...harm Compare the rhyme-sequence 'show...harm...woe...charm' in Solomon 13.97-100, where 'Striving to heal himself, did himself harm' has a similar thought and chiasmic structure to 4.1.15.

14-18 'Tis...meet The alternation between verse and prose within a single speech is Middletonian.

14-15 music...harm Middleton repeatedly refers to the evil potential of music (see for instance Witch 5.2.82-6, commenting on A charm song, and Ghost 346-52).

22 a little Printed in JAGGARD as one word, as it also appears in works by Middleton.

Added

Measure for Measure.

75

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Mariana, and Boy singing.

Song. Take, oh take those lips away, that so sweetly were forsworne,
And those eyes: the breakers of day lights: that doe mislead the Martne;
But my kisses bring againe, bring againe,
Scales of love, but seal'd in vaine, seal'd in vaine.

Enter Duke.

Mar. Breake off thy song, and haste thee quick away,
Here comes a man of comfort, whose aduice
Hath often still'd my brawling discontent.
I cry you mercie, Sir, and well could wish
You had not found me here so muscicall.
Let me excuse me, and belecue me so,
My mirth it much displeas'd, but pleas'd my woe.
Duk. 'Tis good; though Musick oft hath such a charme
To make bad, good; and good prouoake to harme.
I pray you tell me, hath any boody enquir'd for mee here to day; much vpon this time haue I promis'd here to meete.

Mar. You haue not bin enquir'd after: I haue sat heere all day.

Enter Isabell.

Duk. I doe constantly belecue you: the time is come euen now. I shall craue your forbearance a little, may be
I will call vpon you anon for some aduantage to your selfe.

Mar. I am alwayes bound to you. Exit.

Duk. Very well met, and well come:
What is the newes from this good Deputie?

Isab. He hath a Garden circummur'd with Bricke,
Whose westerne side is with a Vineyard back't;
And to that Vineyard is a planced gate,
That makes his opening with this bigger Key:
This other doth command a little doore,
Which from the Vineyard to the Garden leades,
There haue I made my promise, vpon the Heauy middle of the night, to call vpon him.

Duk. But shall you on your knowledge find this way?

Isab. I haue e'ne a due, and wary note vpon't,
With whispering, and most guiltie diligence,
In action all of precept, he did show me
The way twice ore.

Duk. Are there no other tokens
Betweene you 'greed, concerning her obseruance?

Isab. No: none but onely a repaite ith' darke,
And that I haue possess't him, my most stay
Can be but brieve: for I haue made him know,
I haue a Seruant comes with me along
That stiales vpon me; whose perswasion is,
I come about my Brother.

Duk. 'Tis well borne vp.
I haue not yet made knowne to Mariana

Enter Mariana.

A word of this: what hoa, within; come forth,
I pray you be acquainted with this Maid,
She comes to doe you good.

Isab. I doe desire the like.

Duk. Do you perswade your selfe that I respect you?

Mar. Good Frier, I know you do, and haue found it.

Duk. Take then this your companion by the hand
Who hath a storie readie for your care:
I shall attend your leisure, but make haste
The vaporeous night approaches.

Mar. Wilt please you walke aside. Exit.

Duc. Oh Place, and greatnes: millions of false eies
Are stucke vpon thee: volumes of report
Run with these false, and most contrarious Quest
Vpon thy doings: thousand escapes of wit
Make thee the father of their idle dreame,
And racke thee in their fancies. Welcome, how agreed?

Enter Mariana and Isabella.

Isab. Shee'll take the enterprize vpon her father,
If you aduise it.

Duk. It is not my consent,
But my entreaty too.

Isa. Little haue you to say
When you depart from him, but soft and low,
Remember now my brother.

Mar. Feare me not.
Duk. Nor gentle daughter, feare you not at all:
He is your husband on a pre-contract:
To bring you thus together 'tis no sinne,
Sith that the Iustice of your title to him
Doth flourish the deceit. Come, let vs goe.
Our Corne's to reape, for yet our Tithes to sowe. Exeunt.

Transposed

Scena Secunda.

Enter Prouost and Clowne.

Pro. Come hither sirra; can you cut off a mans head?

Cl. If the man be a Bachelor Sir, I can:
But if he be a married man, he's his wiues head,
And I can neuer cut off a womans head.

Pro. Come sir, leaue me your snatches, and yeeld mee
a direct answer. To morrow morning are to die Claudio and Barnardine: heere is in our prison a common executioner, who in his office lacks a helper, if you will take it on you to assist him, it shall redeeme you from your Gyues: if not, you shall haue your full time of imprisonment, and your deliuerance with an vnappitied whipping;
for you haue bene a notorious bawd.

Cl. Sir, I haue bene an vnlawfull bawd, time out of minde, but yet I will bee content to be a lawfull hangman: I would bee glad to receiue some instruction from my fellow partner.

Pro. What hoa, Abborson: where's Abborson there?

Enter Abborson.

Abb. Doe you call sir?

Pro. Sirra, here's a fellow will helpe you to morrow in your execution: if you thinke it meet, compound with him by the yeere, and let him abide here with you, if not, use him for the present, and dismiss him, hee cannot plead his estimation with you: he hath bene a Bawd.

Abb. A Bawd Sir? he vpon him, he will discredit our mysterie.

Pro. Goe too Sir, you waigh equallie: a feather will turne the Scale. Exit.

Cl. Pray fir, by your good fauor: for surely fir, a good fauor you haue, but that you haue a hanging look:
Doe you call fir, your occupation a Mysterie?

G 2

Abb. 1.

Measure for Measure sig. G2, showing the added lines at the start of 4.1 and the lines transposed from 3.1

- 25 DUKE Very well met, and welcome.
What is the news from this good deputy?
- ISABELLA He hath a garden circummured with brick,
Whose western side is with a vineyard backed;
And to that vineyard is a plankèd gate,
30 That makes his opening with this bigger key.
This other doth command a little door
Which from the vineyard to the garden leads.
There have I made my promise
Upon the heavy middle of the night
35 To call upon him.
- DUKE
But shall you on your knowledge find this way?
- ISABELLA
I have ta'en a due and wary note upon't.
With whispering and most guilty diligence,
In action all of precept, he did show me
The way twice o'er.
- 40 DUKE Are there no other tokens
Between you 'greed concerning her observance?
- ISABELLA
No, none, but only a repair i'th' dark,
And that I have possessed him my most stay
Can be but brief, for I have made him know
45 I have a servant comes with me along
That stays upon me, whose persuasion is
I come about my brother.
- DUKE 'Tis well borne up.
I have not yet made known to Mariana
A word of this.—What ho, within! Come forth!
Enter Mariana
50 [To Mariana] I pray you be acquainted with this maid.
She comes to do you good.
- ISABELLA I do desire the like.
- DUKE [to Mariana]
Do you persuade yourself that I respect you?
- MARIANA
Good friar, I know you do, and so have found it.
- DUKE
Take then this your companion by the hand,
55 Who hath a story ready for your ear.
I shall attend your leisure; but make haste,
The vaporous night approaches.
- MARIANA [to Isabella] Will't please you walk aside?
Exit [with Isabella]
- DUKE
He who the sword of heaven will bear
57a Should be as holy as severe,
57b Pattern in himself to know,
57c Grace to stand, and virtue go,
57d More nor less to others paying 57e Than by self-offences weighing.
57f Shame to him whose cruel striking
57g Kills for faults of his own liking!
57h Twice treble shame on Angelo,
57i
- To weed my vice, and let his grow!
O, what may man within him hide,
57k Though angel on the outward side!
57l How may likeness made in crimes
57m Make my practice on the times
57n To draw with idle spiders' strings
57o Most ponderous and substantial things?
57p Craft against vice I must apply.
57q With Angelo tonight shall lie
57r His old betrothed but despisèd.
57s So disguise shall, by th' disguisèd,
57t Pay with falsehood false exacting,
57u And perform an old contracting.
57v
- DUKE
O place and greatness, millions of false eyes
Are stuck upon thee; volumes of report
Run with their false and most contrarious quest
60 Upon thy doings; thousand escapes of wit
Make thee the father of their idle dream,
And rack thee in their fancies.
Enter Mariana and Isabella
- DUKE Welcome. How agreed?
- ISABELLA
She'll take the enterprise upon her, father,
If you advise it.
- DUKE It is not my consent,
65 But my entreaty too.
- ISABELLA [to Mariana]
Little have you to say
When you depart from him but, soft and low,
'Remember now my brother'.
- MARIANA Fear me not.
- DUKE
Nor, gentle daughter, fear you not at all.
He is your husband on a pre-contract.
70 To bring you thus together 'tis no sin,
Sith that the justice of your title to him
Doth flourish the deceit. Come, let us go.
Our corn's to reap, for yet our tilth's to sow. Exeunt
- Sc. II 4.2*
Enter Provost and Clown
4.2
- PROVOST Come hither, sirrah. Can you cut off a man's head?
- CLOWN If the man be a bachelor, sir, I can; but if he be a married man, he's his wife's head, and I can never cut off a woman's head. 5
- PROVOST Come, sir, leave me your snatches, and yield me
a direct answer. Tomorrow morning are to die Claudio and Barnardine. Here is in our prison a common executioner, who in his office lacks a helper. If you will take it on you to assist him, it shall redeem you 10 from your gyves; if not, you shall have your full time of imprisonment, and your deliverance with an unpitied whipping; for you have been a notorious bawd.

25 and welcome The words are metrically redundant, and the half-pun 'wel met... welcome (well come)' is a characteristic
Middleton tick.

57a-4.1.63 He...fancies See note to 3.1.514-35.
60 their...quest See note to 3.1.513c.

15 CLOWN Sir, I have been an unlawful bawd time out of mind, but yet I will be content to be a lawful hangman.
I would be glad to receive some instruction from my fellow partner.
PROVOST What ho, Abhorson! Where's Abhorson there?
Enter Abhorson
ABHORSON Do you call, sir?
20 PROVOST Sirrah, here's a fellow will help you tomorrow in your execution. If you think it meet, compound with him by the year, and let him abide here with you; if not, use him for the present, and dismiss him. He cannot plead his estimation with you; he hath been a bawd.
25 ABHORSON A bawd, sir? Fie upon him, he will discredit our mystery.
PROVOST Go to, sir, you weigh equally; a feather will turn the scale. Exit
CLOWN Pray, sir, by your good favour—for surely, sir, a 30 good favour you have, but that you have a hanging look—do you call, sir, your occupation a mystery?
ABHORSON Ay, sir, a mystery.
CLOWN Painting, sir, I have heard say is a mystery; and your whores, sir, being members of my occupation, 35 using painting, do prove my occupation a mystery. But what mystery there should be in hanging, if I should be hanged I cannot imagine.
ABHORSON Sir, it is a mystery.
CLOWN Proof.
40 ABHORSON Every true man's apparel fits your thief—
CLOWN If it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough. If it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough. So every true man's apparel fits your thief.
Enter Provost
45 PROVOST Are you agreed?
CLOWN Sir, I will serve him, for I do find your hangman is a more penitent trade than your bawd—he doth oftener ask forgiveness.
PROVOST [to Abhorson] You, sirrah, provide your block and 50 your axe tomorrow, four o'clock.
ABHORSON [to Clown] Come on, bawd, I will instruct thee in my trade. Follow.
CLOWN I do desire to learn, sir, and I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your own turn, you shall find 55 me yare. For truly, sir, for your kindness I owe you a good turn.
PROVOST
Call hither Barnardine and Claudio.
Exit [Clown with Abhorson]
Th'one has my pity; not a jot the other,
Being a murderer, though he were my brother.
Enter Claudio
60 Look, here's the warrant, Claudio, for thy death.
'Tis now dead midnight, and by eight tomorrow
Thou must be made immortal. Where's Barnardine?
CLAUDIO
As fast locked up in sleep as guiltless labour

When it lies starkly in the travailer's bones.
He will not wake.
PROVOST Who can do good on him?
65 Well, go prepare yourself.
[Knocking within]
But hark, what noise?
God Heaven give your spirits comfort! [Exit Claudio]
[Knocking again]
By and by!
I hope it is some pardon or reprieve
For the most gentle Claudio.
Enter Duke, [disguised as a friar]
Welcome, father.
DUKE
70 The best and wholesom'st spirits of the night
Envelop you, good Provost! Who called here of late?
PROVOST None since the curfew rung.
DUKE Not Isabel?
PROVOST No.
DUKE They will then, ere't be long. 75
PROVOST What comfort is for Claudio?
DUKE There's some in hope.
PROVOST It is a bitter deputy.
DUKE
80 Not so, not so; his life is paralleled
Even with the stroke and line of his great justice.
He doth with holy abstinence subdue
That in himself which he spurs on his power
To qualify in others. Were he mealed with that Which he corrects, then were he tyrannous;
But this being so, he's just.
[Knocking within]
Now are they come. 85
[Provost goes to a door]
This is a gentle Provost. Seldom when
The steelèd jailer is the friend of men.
[Knocking within]
[To Provost] How now, what noise? That spirit's possessed with haste
That wounds th'unlisting postern with these strokes.
PROVOST
90 There he must stay until the officer
Arise to let him in. He is called up.
DUKE
Have you no countermand for Claudio yet,
But he must die tomorrow?
PROVOST None, sir, none.
DUKE
As near the dawning, Provost, as it is,
You shall hear more ere morning.
PROVOST Happily 95
You something know, yet I believe there comes
No countermand. No such example have we;
Besides, upon the very siege of justice
Lord Angelo hath to the public ear
Professed the contrary. 100

Enter a Messenger

This is his lordship's man.

DUKE And here comes Claudio's pardon.

MESSENGER [giving a paper to Provost] My lord hath sent you this note, and by me this further charge: that you swerve not from the smallest article of it, neither in time, matter, or other circumstance. Good morrow; for, as I take it, it is almost day.

PROVOST I shall obey him. Exit Messenger

DUKE [aside] This is his pardon, purchased by such sin

For which the pardoner himself is in.

Hence hath offence his quick celerity,

When it is borne in high authority.

When vice makes mercy, mercy's so extended

That for the fault's love is th'offender friended.—

Now sir, what news?

PROVOST I told you: Lord Angelo, belike thinking me remiss in mine office, awakens me with this unwonted putting-on; methinks strangely, for he hath not used it before.

DUKE Pray you let's hear.

The letter

PROVOST [reading] 'Whatsoever you may hear to the contrary, let Claudio be executed by four of the clock, and in the afternoon Barnardine. For my better satisfaction, let me have Claudio's head sent me by five. Let this be duly performed, with a thought that more depends on it than we must yet deliver. Thus fail not to do your office, as you will answer it at your peril.'

What say you to this, sir?

DUKE What is that Barnardine, who is to be executed in th'afternoon?

PROVOST A Bohemian born, but here nursed up and bred; one that is a prisoner nine years old.

DUKE How came it that the absent Duke had not either delivered him to his liberty or executed him? I have heard it was ever his manner to do so.

PROVOST His friends still wrought reprieves for him; and indeed his fact, till now in the government of Lord Angelo, came not to an undoubtful proof.

DUKE It is now apparent?

PROVOST Most manifest, and not denied by himself.

DUKE Hath he borne himself penitently in prison? How seems he to be touched?

PROVOST A man that apprehends death no more dreadfully but as a drunken sleep; careless, reckless, and fearless of what's past, present, or to come; insensible of mortality, and desperately mortal. 145

DUKE He wants advice.

PROVOST He will hear none. He hath evermore had the liberty of the prison. Give him leave to escape hence, he would not. Drunk many times a day, if not many days entirely drunk. We have very oft awaked him as if to carry him to execution, and showed him a seeming warrant for it; it hath not moved him at all. 150

DUKE More of him anon. There is written in your brow, Provost, honesty and constancy. If I read it not truly, my ancient skill beguiles me. But in the boldness of my cunning, I will lay myself in hazard. Claudio, whom here you have warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the law than Angelo who hath sentenced him. To make you understand this in a manifested effect, I crave but four days' respite, for the which you are to do me both a present and a dangerous courtesy. 155

PROVOST Pray sir, in what?

DUKE In the delaying death.

PROVOST Alack, how may I do it, having the hour limited, and an express command under penalty to deliver his head in the view of Angelo? I may make my case as Claudio's to cross this in the smallest. 165

DUKE By the vow of mine order, I warrant you, if my instructions may be your guide, let this Barnardine be this morning executed, and his head borne to Angelo. 170

PROVOST Angelo hath seen them both, and will discover the favour.

DUKE O, death's a great disguiser, and you may add to it. Shave the head and tie the beard, and say it was the desire of the penitent to be so bared before his death; you know the course is common. If anything fall to you upon this more than thanks and good fortune, by the saint whom I profess, I will plead against it with my life. 175

PROVOST Pardon me, good father, it is against my oath.

DUKE Were you sworn to the Duke or to the deputy? 180

120.1 The letter The same heading is used in the autograph Trinity manuscript of Game at Chess at 2.1.15 and 3.1.33.

131 but...bred Bohemian potentially relates to the location in Vienna and the references to the Thirty Years War. King James's son-in-law Ferdinand and daughter Elizabeth were crowned King and Queen of Bohemia in 1619; their forces were decisively beaten at the Battle of the White Mountain, near Prague, in 1620. It is perhaps possible that in the original version of the play Barnardine was an inhabitant of somewhere else, closer to Italy. A Switzer, for instance, might be thought of as wearing a grisly beard, rough dress, and a large codpiece

(Sugden, p. 495). However, in the light of English support for Protestant Bohemia in 1621, it seems unlikely that the revision of Measure would turn the dissolute and anti-religious Barnardine into a Bohemian. Indeed it is the comment 'but here nursed up and bred' that might have been added, in order to distance Barnardine from Bohemia. In a text without sensitivity to the religious politics of 1621, this qualification curiously neutralizes the point about Barnardine's origin. In 1603-4, 'a Bohemian born', without such qualification, would have offered a simple implied explanation of Barnardine's barbarity. In 1621, 'a Bohemian born, but here nursed up and bred' might have suggested, contrariwise, that despite his birth in a good Protestant country Barnardine had been debauched by his upbringing in Catholic and dissolute Vienna. Shakespeare never used the expression nurse up, but Middleton did (Solomon 6.85).

174 O...it Possibly added by Middleton, the only dramatist in the period elsewhere to use disguiser (Holdsworth, private communication). In Tennis, Persons.15, it is again alliterative and personifying: 'Deceit, the disguiser'. Compare 'great disguiser' with 4.3.17, 'great doers', in a nearby speech that is attributed to Middleton and that accentuates death.

PROVOST To him and to his substitutes.

185 DUKE You will think you have made no offence if the Duke avouch the justice of your dealing?

PROVOST But what likelihood is in that?

DUKE Not a resemblance, but a certainty. Yet since I see you fearful, that neither my coat, integrity, nor persuasion can with ease attempt you, I will go further 190 than I meant, to pluck all fears out of you. [Showing a letter] Look you, sir, here is the hand and seal of the Duke. You know the character, I doubt not, and the signet is not strange to you?

PROVOST I know them both.

195 DUKE The contents of this is the return of the Duke. You shall anon over-read it at your pleasure, where you shall find within these two days he will be here. This is a thing that Angelo knows not, for he this very day receives letters of strange tenor, perchance of the Duke's 200 death, perchance entering into some monastery; but by chance nothing of what is writ. Look, th'unfolding star calls up the shepherd. Put not yourself into amazement how these things should be. All difficulties are but easy when they are known. Call your executioner, and off with Barnardine's head. I will give him a present shirt, and advise him for a better place. Yet you are amazed;

but this shall absolutely resolve you. Come away, it is almost clear dawn. Exit [with Provost]

4.3
Enter Clown

CLOWN I am as well acquainted here as I was in our house of profession. One would think it were Mistress Overdone's own house, for here be many of her old customers. First, here's young Master Rash; he's in for a commodity of brown paper and old ginger, nine score 5 and seventeen pounds, of which he made five marks ready money. Marry, then ginger was not much in request, for the old women were all dead. Then is there here one Master Caper, at the suit of Master Threepile
the mercer, for some four suits of peach-coloured satin, 10 which now peaches him a beggar. Then have we here

4.3.1-18 I...sake This survey of the former brothel-customers who are now prison inmates (mostly disreputable young gentlemen rather than professional criminals) seems to belong to the adaptation.
See Introduction. In the following notes the phrase is not found in Shakespeare unless noted otherwise. Neutral evidence is not mentioned.

1 as well acquainted here Compare Owl
18-19, 'as well acquainted'; Roaring Girl
3.1.8, 'familiarily acquainted there'.

2 One would think Found in Trick 1.1.141,
Phoenix 10.64.

2-4 One...customers For the sequence
[a woman's] own...many of her old customers', compare Women Beware
1.1.92-3: 'Not the licentious swinge
of her own will, | Like some of her old schoolfellows'. For 'own...old' collocated with a derivative of 'acquaint' and a metonymic form of 'our house', referring to a brothel, compare Patient Man 6.303-4, 'If yourself like our roof, such as it is, | Your own acquaintance may be as old as his'.

4 First, here's A similar catalogue occurs in His Lordship's Entertainment, where a descriptive list of artisans is 'read in the clerk's book' (66); it begins
'First, here's...' (there 'are six hundred more' in the clerk's book; compare 17). 'First, here's', found nowhere in Shakespeare, occurs also at Dissemblers
4.2.165; compare too Five Gallants
5.1.136, 'first here be'. The listing of imaginary characters could be based on a stage property, 'the book where all the prisoners' names stand' (Roaring Girl 7.154).

young Master Rash The phrase and name-type resemble Michaelmas 1.2.43 and 118, 'Young Master Easy'.

4-6 for...pounds Similar in thought and phrasing to Quiet Life 1.1.97-9,

'For tissue, cloth of gold, velvets and silks, about fifteen hundred pounds. |
Your money is ready'. The phrase 'a commodity of brown paper and old ginger' is very strongly paralleled in Michaelmas 2.3.219-20, 'commodities in hawks' hoods and brown paper'.
Other collocations of commodity with other words in the passage occur in
'Here's a coil for a dead commodity.—
'Sfoot, women when they are alive are but dead commodities' (Patient Man 1.91-2; scene perhaps of mixed authorship); Michaelmas 2.3.202-3, 'a commodity of two hundred pounds' worth of cloth';
Mad World 2.6.54-5, 'the commodity of keeping open house'. The sum 'nine score and seventeen pounds' is echoed in Lady 2.3.5, 'three score and seventeen'.
Shakespeare never has a sum amounting to a score and over.

6 five marks Also in Penniless Parliament
44 and Five Gallants 1.1.296.

7 ready money Also in Penniless Parliament
93, Michaelmas 2.3.233, and Quiet Life
4.1.14.

7-8 then ginger was not much in request
Compare Quarrel 2.2.232, 'then was wrestling in request'; Owl 1722-3,
'finally...much in request...because';
also Old Law 3.1.135, 'were never in more request', repeated at 139-40, where the phrase is collocated with 'commodities' (144). 'Not much in' occurs at Game of Chess 1.1.128.

9 Master Caper A similar dancing name is 'Signor Cinquepace', Dissemblers 5.1.92.

9-10 Master Threepile the mercer Mercer is common in Middleton but not found in Shakespeare. More specific parallels are Michaelmas 2.1.84, 'Master Gum, the merc', and 2.3.152, 'Master Gum or Master Profit, the mercer'. Three-piled in Measure at 1.2.32 gives a specific cross-reference to another adapted passage.

10 peach-coloured satin 'Peach-coloured' occurs in 2 Henry IV 2.2.14, referring to silk stockings. But compare Five Gallants
3.4.162, 'peach colour...watchet satin';
Michaelmas 4.1.81, 'peach-colour';
Patient Man 8.33-4, 'flame-coloured doublet, red satin hose'.

11 peaches him Middleton uses the verb transitively in Phoenix 15.249, 'peach
'em'. It is only intransitive in Shakespeare.

12 Dizzy Shakespeare does not use the word disparagingly to characterize a giddy-minded person. Middleton does so in Mad World 5.2.113-14, 'dizzy constables', and Phoenix 2.156, 'dizzy pates of fifteen attorneys'.

Deepvow Middleton has 'deep oath'
(Nice Valour 2.1.165). His references to deep pledges repeatedly imply that they were made while the participants were drinking deeply (Revenge 1.2.180 and No Wit 9.563, 'deep healths'; Patient Man 5.160, 'I'll pledge them deep'; Witch 2.1.202-4, 'We'll have one health...Ay, sir, a deep one, | Which you shall pledge too'), and there is a similar cynical connotation here. As a character name, 'Master Deepvow' can be compared with 'Corporal Oath' in Puritan.

12-13 Master Copperspur In Meeting there is a character similarly called Signor Jinglespur.

13 Starve-lackey Compare Hengist 1.3.204,
'starve the guard'. A role in Phoenix is that of 'Lackey'.

13-14 rapier and dagger man This compares closely with Phoenix, 9.186, 'rapier and dagger men'.

15 young Dizzy, and young Master Deepvow, and Master Copperspur and Master Starve-lackey the rapier and dagger man, and young Drop-heir that killed lusty Pudding, and Master Torchlight the tilter, and brave Master Shoe-tie the great traveller, and wild Half-can that stabbed Pots, and I think forty more, all great doers in our trade, and are now 'for the Lord's sake'.

Sc. 12

Enter Abhorson and Clown

20 ABHORSON Sirrah, bring Barnardine hither.
 CLOWN Master Barnardine! You must rise and be hanged, Master Barnardine!
 ABHORSON What ho, Barnardine!
 BARNARDINE (within) A pox o' your throats! Who makes that noise there? What are you?
 25 CLOWN Your friends, sir; the hangman. You must be so good, sir, to rise and be put to death.
 BARNARDINE Away, you rogue, away! I am sleepy.
 ABHORSON Tell him he must awake, and that quickly too.
 CLOWN Pray, Master Barnardine, awake till you are executed, and sleep afterwards.
 30 ABHORSON Go in to him and fetch him out.
 CLOWN He is coming, sir, he is coming. I hear his straw rustle.
 ABHORSON Is the axe upon the block, sirrah?
 35 CLOWN Very ready, sir.

Enter Barnardine

BARNARDINE How now, Abhorson, what's the news with you?

ABHORSON Truly, sir, I would desire you to clap into your prayers, for, look you, the warrant's come.

BARNARDINE You rogue, I have been drinking all night. I am not fitted for't. 40

CLOWN O, the better, sir; for he that drinks all night, and is hanged betimes in the morning, may sleep the sounder all the next day.

Enter Duke, [disguised as a friar]

ABHORSON [to Barnardine] Look you, sir, here comes your ghostly father. Do we jest now, think you? 45

DUKE [to Barnardine] Sir, induced by my charity, and hearing how hastily you are to depart, I am come to advise you, comfort you, and pray with you.

BARNARDINE Friar, not I. I have been drinking hard all night, and I will have more time to prepare me, or they shall beat out my brains with billets. I will not consent to die this day, that's certain. 50

DUKE

O sir, you must; and therefore, I beseech you, Look forward on the journey you shall go. 55

BARNARDINE Fore God, I swear I will not die today, for any man's persuasion.

DUKE But hear you—

BARNARDINE Not a word. If you have anything to say to me, come to my ward, for thence will not I today. Exit 60

DUKE

Unfit to live or die. O gravel heart!

After him, fellows; bring him to the block.

[Exeunt Abhorson and Clown]

14 young Drop-heir Compare Michaelmas 1.2.287–8, 'to shame my blood, | And drop my staining birth'; also 'young heir', Hengist 5.1.126 and five instances in Women Beware: 'lawful heirs' (1.2.79), 'Now, young heir!' (2.2.79), 'the young heir his ward' (2.2.173), 'this young heir' (3.2.113), and 'young heir' (3.2.176).

14–15 Drop-heir... Pudding Elements of the two names combine in Quarrel 4.1.221, 'thy pudding drop' (Rowley). 'Lusty Pudding' compares with another character named after a pudding, Captain Plumporridge in Heroes; he is described as 'lusty' at 56.

15 Master Torchlight the tilter Middleton never elsewhere uses the word tilter, but there is a character in Roaring Girl called Master Tiltyard, and Tilting has an explicit sexual connotation in that play at 7.35 and 9.173. Tilter itself has a sexual innuendo in Webster: White Devil 3.1.13, Westward Ho! 3.4.77, Northward Ho! 3.1.7.

Torchlight The misprint 'Forthlight' is usually emended to non-Middletonian 'Forthright'. The emended phrase favours Shakespeare's authorship, in that he elsewhere uses forthright whereas Middleton does not. But the reading is at least as likely to have been the Middletonian and alliterative 'Torchlight', which conjures up a figure of flaming and smoky temper, and perhaps suggests that his form of tilting involves sexual debauchery (specifically at court) of a kind Middleton elsewhere associates with torchlight. 'Torchlight' would be a valid and perhaps preferable alternative reading in any context, and is certainly to be preferred in the context of Middleton. Compare other character names that are compounded and have connotations of fire, such as Touchwood (again with a sexual implication), and Firestone.

16 the great traveller Compare Mad World 5.2.11, 'great travellers'.

16–17 Half-can... Pots Elements of these two drinking names combine in Roaring Girl 2.2.11, 'drink half-pots'.

17 and I think forty The phrase 'and I think' immediately followed by a number occurs in Quiet Life 5.2.78–8, 'and I think two'—near 'all' and 'tradesman'. forty more Also at Women Beware 1.3.51.

17–18 all...sake' For the summative all followed by our trade followed by a quotation of the appropriate catchphrase, compare Michaelmas 2.3.462–5: 'they're all willing to, because 'tis good for our trade... and indeed 'tis the fittest for a citizen's son, for our word is, "What do ye lack?"'. There are no instances of our trade in Shakespeare.

17 great doers John Davies of Hereford describes 'two queans' as 'good doers' in Wit's Bedlam (1617), Epi. 315. Middleton writes of the 'doings' in the trade of prostitution at Black Book 2.12–13 (punning on undone) and Widow 4.2.24. The latter occurs in a set-piece soliloquy in which a criminal (the thief Latrocinio) describes how his various victims are tricked into coming to him 'here i' my chamber', and is collocated with other phrases recalling Pompey's speech: 'all trades... have their dead time' (21–2), 'his trade' (29), and 'travellers' (21). The soliloquy in Widow correlates the effect of poverty on thieving and prostitution, and so offers an analogue also to the Bawd's speech at 1.2.77–9.

56 Fore God, I swear 'I swear' is unexpectedly tame for a man of Barnardine's temperament, and probably results from expurgation.

Enter Provost

PROVOST
Now, sir, how do you find the prisoner?

DUKE
A creature unprepared, unmeet for death;
And to transport him in the mind he is
Were damnable.

PROVOST
Here in the prison, father,
There died this morning of a cruel fever
One Ragusine, a most notorious pirate,
A man of Claudio's years, his beard and head
Just of his colour. What if we do omit
This reprobate till he were well inclined,
And satisfy the deputy with the visage
Of Ragusine, more like to Claudio?

DUKE
O, 'tis an accident that heaven provides.
Dispatch it presently; the hour draws on Prefixed by Angelo. See this be done,
And sent according to command, whiles I
Persuade this rude wretch willingly to die.

PROVOST
This shall be done, good father, presently.
But Barnardine must die this afternoon;
And how shall we continue Claudio,
To save me from the danger that might come
If he were known alive?

DUKE
Let this be done:
Put them in secret holds, both Barnardine and Claudio.

PROVOST
Ere twice the sun hath made his journal greeting
To yonder generation, you shall find
Your safety manifested.

DUKE
I am your free dependant.

DUKE
Quick, dispatch, and send the head to Angelo.

Exit [Provost]

Now will I write letters to Angelo—
The Provost, he shall bear them—whose contents
Shall witness to him I am near at home,
And that by great injunctions I am bound
To enter publicly. Him I'll desire
To meet me at the consecrated fount
A league below the city, and from thence,
By cold gradation and well-balanced form,
We shall proceed with Angelo.

Enter Provost, [with Ragusine's head]

PROVOST
Here is the head; I'll carry it myself.

DUKE
Convenient is it. Make a swift return,
For I would commune with you of such things
That want no ear but yours.

PROVOST I'll make all speed.

ISABELLA (within) Peace, ho, be here!

DUKE
The tongue of Isabel. She's come to know
If yet her brother's pardon be come hither;

But I will keep her ignorant of her good,
To make her heavenly comforts of despair
When it is least expected.

ISABELLA (within) Ho, by your leave!

Enter Isabella

DUKE
Good morning to you, fair and gracious daughter.

ISABELLA
The better, given me by so holy a man.
Hath yet the deputy sent my brother's pardon?

DUKE
He hath released him, Isabel, from the world.
His head is off and sent to Angelo.

ISABELLA
Nay, but it is not so.

DUKE
It is no other.
Show your wisdom, daughter, in your close patience.

ISABELLA
O, I will to him and pluck out his eyes!

DUKE
You shall not be admitted to his sight.

ISABELLA (weeping)
Unhappy Claudio! Wretched Isabel!
Injurious world! Most damnèd Angelo!

DUKE
This nor hurts him, nor profits you a jot.
Forbear it, therefore; give your cause to heaven.
Mark what I say, which you shall find
By every syllable a faithful verity.
The Duke comes home tomorrow—nay, dry your eyes—
One of our convent, and his confessor,
Gives me this instance. Already he hath carried Notice to Escalus and Angelo,
Who do prepare to meet him at the gates,
There to give up their power. If you can pace your wisdom
In that good path that I would wish it go,
And you shall have your bosom on this wretch,
Grace of the Duke, revenges to your heart,
And general honour.

ISABELLA
I am directed by you.

DUKE
This letter, then, to Friar Peter give.
'Tis that he sent me of the Duke's return.
Say by this token I desire his company
At Mariana's house tonight. Her cause and yours
I'll perfect him withal, and he shall bring you
Before the Duke, and to the head of Angelo
Accuse him home and home. For my poor self,
I am combined by a sacred vow,
And shall be absent. [Giving the letter] Wend you with this letter.
Command these fretting waters from your eyes
With a light heart. Trust not my holy order
If I pervert your course.

Enter Lucio

Who's here?

FRIAR PETER
 Come, I have found you out a stand most fit,
 Where you may have such vantage on the Duke
 He shall not pass you. Twice have the trumpets sounded.
 The generous and gravest citizens
 Have hent the gates, and very near upon
 The Duke is ent'ring; therefore hence, away. Exeunt

Finis Actus Quartus

❁

5.1 Sc. 16 5.1
Incipit Actus Quintus
Enter Duke, Varrius, lords; Angelo, Escalus, Lucio, citizens; at several doors

DUKE [to Angelo]
 My very worthy cousin, fairly met.
 [To Escalus] Our old and faithful friend, we are glad to see you.

ANGELO and ESCALUS
 Happy return be to your royal grace.

DUKE
 Many and hearty thankings to you both.
 We have made enquiry of you, and we hear
 Such goodness of your justice that our soul
 Cannot but yield you forth to public thanks,
 Forerunning more requital.

ANGELO You make my bonds still greater.

DUKE
 O, your desert speaks loud, and I should wrong it
 To lock it in the wards of covert bosom,
 When it deserves with characters of brass
 A fortified residence 'gainst the tooth of time
 And rature of oblivion. Give me your hand,
 And let the subject see, to make them know
 That outward courtesies would fain proclaim Favours that keep within. Come, Escalus,
 You must walk by us on our other hand,
 And good supporters are you.
 [They walk forward.]
Enter Friar Peter and Isabella

FRIAR PETER
 Now is your time. Speak loud, and kneel before him.

ISABELLA [kneeling]
 Justice, O royal Duke! Vail your regard
 Upon a wronged—I would fain have said, a maid.
 O worthy prince, dishonour not your eye
 By throwing it on any other object,
 Till you have heard me in my true complaint,
 And given me justice, justice, justice!

DUKE
 Relate your wrongs. In what? By whom? Be brief.
 Here is Lord Angelo shall give you justice.
 Reveal yourself to him.

ISABELLA O worthy Duke,
 You bid me seek redemption of the devil.
 Hear me yourself, for that which I must speak

Must either punish me, not being believed,
 Or wring redress from you. Hear me, O hear me, hear!

ANGELO
 My lord, her wits, I fear me, are not firm.
 She hath been a suitor to me for her brother,
 Cut off by course of justice.

ISABELLA [standing] By course of justice! 35

ANGELO
 And she will speak most bitterly and strange.

ISABELLA
 Most strange, but yet most truly, will I speak.
 That Angelo's forsworn, is it not strange?
 That Angelo's a murderer, is't not strange?
 That Angelo is an adulterous thief, 40
 An hypocrite, a virgin-violator,
 Is it not strange, and strange?

DUKE Nay, it is ten times strange!

ISABELLA
 It is not truer he is Angelo
 Than this is all as true as it is strange.
 Nay, it is ten times true, for truth is truth 45
 To th' end of reck'ning.

DUKE Away with her. Poor soul,
 She speaks this in th' infirmity of sense.

ISABELLA
 O prince, I conjure thee, as thou believ'st
 There is another comfort than this world,
 That thou neglect me not with that opinion 50
 That I am touched with madness. Make not impossible
 That which but seems unlike. 'Tis not impossible
 But one, the wicked'st caitiff on the ground,
 May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute, 55
 As Angelo; even so may Angelo,
 In all his dressings, characts, titles, forms,
 Be an arch-villain. Believe it, royal prince,
 If he be less, he's nothing; but he's more,
 Had I more name for badness.

DUKE By mine honesty,
 If she be mad, as I believe no other, 60
 Her madness hath the oddest frame of sense,
 Such a dependency of thing on thing
 As e'er I heard in madness.

ISABELLA O gracious Duke,
 Harp not on that, nor do not banish reason
 For inequality; but let your reason serve 65
 To make the truth appear where it seems hid,
 And hide the false seems true.

DUKE Many that are not mad
 Have sure more lack of reason. What would you say?

ISABELLA
 I am the sister of one Claudio,
 Condemned upon the act of fornication 70
 To lose his head, condemned by Angelo.
 I, in probation of a sisterhood,
 Was sent to by my brother, one Lucio
 As then the messenger.

LUCIO That's I, an't like your grace.

- 75 I came to her from Claudio, and desired her
To try her gracious fortune with Lord Angelo
For her poor brother's pardon.
- ISABELLA That's he indeed.
- DUKE [to Lucio]
You were not bid to speak.
- LUCIO No, my good lord,
Nor wished to hold my peace.
- DUKE
- 80 I wish you now, then. Pray you take note of it;
And when you have a business for yourself,
Pray God heaven you then be perfect.
- LUCIO I warrant your honour.
- DUKE
The warrant's for yourself; take heed to't.
- ISABELLA
This gentleman told somewhat of my tale—
- 85 LUCIO Right.
- DUKE
It may be right, but you are i' the wrong
To speak before your time. [To Isabella] Proceed.
- ISABELLA I went
To this pernicious caitiff deputy—
- DUKE
That's somewhat madly spoken.
- ISABELLA Pardon it;
The phrase is to the matter.
- 90 DUKE Mended again.
The matter; proceed.
- ISABELLA
In brief, to set the needless process by,
How I persuaded, how I prayed and kneeled,
How he refelled me, and how I replied—
- 95 For this was of much length—the vile conclusion
I now begin with grief and shame to utter.
He would not, but by gift of my chaste body
To his concupiscible intemperate lust,
Release my brother; and after much debatement,
100 My sisterly remorse confutes mine honour,
And I did yield to him. But the next morn betimes,
His purpose surfeiting, he sends a warrant
For my poor brother's head.
- DUKE This is most likely!
- ISABELLA
O, that it were as like as it is true!
- DUKE
By heaven, fond wretch, thou know'st not what thou 105 speak'st,
Or else thou art suborned against his honour
In hateful practice. First, his integrity
Stands without blemish. Next, it imports no reason
That with such vehemency he should pursue 110 Faults proper to himself. If he had so offended,
He would have weighed thy brother by himself,
- And not have cut him off. Someone hath set you on.
Confess the truth, and say by whose advice Thou cam'st here to complain.
- ISABELLA And is this all?
Then, O you blessèd ministers above,
115 Keep me in patience, and with ripened time
Unfold the evil which is here wrapped up In countenance! God Heaven shield your grace from woe,
As I, thus wronged, hence unbelievèd go.
- DUKE
I know you'd fain be gone. An officer!
120 To prison with her.
[An officer guards Isabella]
Shall we thus permit
A blasting and a scandalous breath to fall
On him so near us? This needs must be a practice.
Who knew of your intent and coming hither?
- ISABELLA
One that I would were here, Friar Lodowick.
125 [Exit, guarded]
- DUKE
A ghostly father, belike. Who knows that Lodowick?
- LUCIO
My lord, I know him. 'Tis a meddling friar;
I do not like the man. Had he been lay, my lord,
For certain words he spake against your grace
In your retirement, I had swung him soundly.
130
- DUKE
Words against me? This' a good friar, belike!
And to set on this wretched woman here
Against our substitute! Let this friar be found.
[Exit one or more]
- LUCIO
But yesternight, my lord, she and that friar,
I saw them at the prison. A saucy friar,
135 A very scurvy fellow.
- FRIAR PETER Blessed be your royal grace!
I have stood by, my lord, and I have heard
Your royal ear abused. First hath this woman
Most wrongfully accused your substitute,
Who is as free from touch or soil with her 140 As she from one ungot.
- DUKE We did believe no less.
Know you that Friar Lodowick that she speaks of?
- FRIAR PETER
I know him for a man divine and holy,
Not scurvy, nor a temporary meddler,
As he's reported by this gentleman;
145 And, by my faith on my trust, a man that never yet
Did, as he vouches, misreport your grace.
- LUCIO My lord, most villainously; believe it.
- FRIAR PETER
Well, he in time may come to clear himself;

5.1.82 God heaven See note to 2.2.128.

118 God Heaven See note to 3.1.142.

146 by my faith on my trust 'On my trust' is otherwise unexampled in Shakespeare;'by my faith' is common, and was removed by expurgators in three other Shakespeare plays.

150 But at this instant he is sick, my lord,
Of a strange fever. Upon his mere request,
Being come to knowledge that there was complaint
Intended 'gainst Lord Angelo, came I hither
To speak, as from his mouth, what he doth know 155 Is true and false, and what he with his oath
And all probation will make up full clear
Whensoever he's convented. First, for this woman:
To justify this worthy nobleman,
So vulgarly and personally accused,
160 Her shall you hear disprovèd to her eyes,
Till she herself confess it.

DUKE Good friar, let's hear it.
[Exit Friar Peter]
Do you not smile at this, Lord Angelo?
O God heaven, the vanity of wretched fools!
Give us some seats.
[Seats are brought in]
Come, cousin Angelo,
165 In this I'll be impartial; be you judge
Of your own cause.
[Duke and Angelo sit.] Enter [Friar Peter, and] Mariana, [veiled]
Is this the witness, friar?
First let her show her face, and after speak.

MARIANA Pardon, my lord, I will not show my face
Until my husband bid me.

170 DUKE What, are you married?
MARIANA No, my lord.
DUKE Are you a maid?
MARIANA No, my lord.
DUKE A widow then?
175 MARIANA Neither, my lord.
DUKE Why, you are nothing then; neither maid, widow,
nor wife!
LUCIO My lord, she may be a punk, for many of them are neither maid, widow, nor wife.

180 DUKE Silence that fellow. I would he had some cause to prattle for himself.
LUCIO Well, my lord.

MARIANA My lord, I do confess I ne'er was married,
And I confess besides, I am no maid.
185 I have known my husband, yet my husband
Knows not that ever he knew me.
LUCIO He was drunk then, my lord, it can be no better.
DUKE For the benefit of silence, would thou wert so too.
LUCIO Well, my lord.

DUKE This is no witness for Lord Angelo.

190 MARIANA Now I come to't, my lord.
She that accuses him of fornication
In self-same manner doth accuse my husband,
And charges him, my lord, with such a time

When I'll depose I had him in mine arms
195 With all th'effect of love.

ANGELO Charges she more than me?
MARIANA Not that I know.

DUKE No? You say your husband.

MARIANA Why just, my lord, and that is Angelo,
Who thinks he knows that he ne'er knew my body,
200 But knows, he thinks, that he knows Isabel's.

ANGELO This is a strange abuse. Let's see thy face.

MARIANA [unveiling]
My husband bids me; now I will unmask.
This is that face, thou cruel Angelo,
Which once thou swor'st was worth the looking on.
This is the hand which, with a vowed contract,
205 Was fast belocked in thine. This is the body
That took away the match from Isabel,
And did supply thee at thy garden-house
In her imagined person.

DUKE [to Angelo] Know you this woman?
210 LUCIO Carnally, she says.
DUKE Sirrah, no more!
LUCIO Enough, my lord.

ANGELO My lord, I must confess I know this woman;
And five years since there was some speech of marriage
215 Betwixt myself and her, which was broke off,
Partly for that her promised proportions
Came short of composition, but in chief
For that her reputation was disvalued
In levity; since which time of five years
220 I never spake with her, saw her, nor heard from her,
Upon my faith and honour.

MARIANA [kneeling before Duke]
Noble prince,
As there comes light from heaven, and words from breath,
As there is sense in truth, and truth in virtue,
I am affianced this man's wife, as strongly 225 As words could make up vows. And, my good lord,
But Tuesday night last gone, in's garden-house,
He knew me as a wife. As this is true,
Let me in safety raise me from my knees,
Or else forever be confixèd here,
230 A marble monument.

ANGELO I did but smile till now.
Now, good my lord, give me the scope of justice.
My patience here is touched. I do perceive
These poor informal women are no more
But instruments of some more mightier member 235 That sets them on. Let me have way, my lord,
To find this practice out.

163 God heaven JAGGARD gives an expur-gator's phrase untypical of Shakespeare's usage.

- DUKE [standing] Ay, with my heart,
And punish them e'en to your height of pleasure.—
Thou foolish friar, and thou pernicious woman Compact with her that's gone, think'st thou thy 240 oaths,
Though they would swear down each particular saint,
Were testimonies 'gainst his worth and credit
That's sealed in approbation? You, Lord Escalus,
Sit with my cousin; lend him your kind pains
245 To find out this abuse, whence 'tis derived.
There is another friar that set them on.
Let him be sent for.
[Escalus sits]
- FRIAR PETER
Would he were here, my lord, for he indeed
Hath set the women on to this complaint.
250 Your Provost knows the place where he abides,
And he may fetch him.
- DUKE [to one or more] Go, do it instantly.
[Exit one or more]
[To Angelo] And you, my noble and well-warranted cousin,
Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth,
Do with your injuries as seems you best 255 In any chastisement. I for a while will leave you,
But stir not you till you have well determined Upon these slanderers.
- ESCALUS My lord, we'll do it throughly.
[Exit [Duke]]
Signor Lucio, did not you say you knew that Friar Lodowick to be a dishonest person?
260 LUCIO Cucullus non facit monachum: honest in nothing but in his clothes; and one that hath spoke most villainous speeches of the Duke.
- ESCALUS We shall entreat you to abide here till he come, and enforce them against him. We shall find this friar 265 a notable fellow.
- LUCIO As any in Ferrara Vienna, on my word.
- ESCALUS Call that same Isabel here once again; I would speak with her. [Exit one or more]
[To Angelo] Pray you, my lord, give me leave to question.
270 You shall see how I'll handle her.
- LUCIO Not better than he, by her own report.
- ESCALUS Say you?
- LUCIO Marry, sir, I think if you handled her privately, she would sooner confess; perchance publicly she'll be 275 ashamed.
- ESCALUS I will go darkly to work with her.
- LUCIO That's the way, for women are light at midnight.
[Enter Isabella, [guarded, at one door, then] Duke, [disguised as a friar, hooded, and] Provost [at another door]]
ESCALUS [to Isabella] Come on, mistress, here's a gentlewo-man denies all that you have said.
280 LUCIO My lord, here comes the rascal I spoke of, here with the Provost.
- ESCALUS In very good time. Speak not you to him till we call upon you.
- LUCIO Mum.
- ESCALUS [to Duke] Come, sir, did you set these women on 285 to slander Lord Angelo? They have confessed you did.
- DUKE 'Tis false.
- ESCALUS How! Know you where you are?
- DUKE
Respect to your great place, and let the devil
Be sometime honoured fore his burning throne. 290
Where is the Duke? 'Tis he should hear me speak.
- ESCALUS
The Duke's in us, and we will hear you speak.
Look you speak justly.
- DUKE
Boldly at least. [To Isabella and Mariana]
But O, poor souls,
Come you to seek the lamb here of the fox,
Good night to your redress! Is the Duke gone? 295
Then is your cause gone too. The Duke's unjust
Thus to retort your manifest appeal,
And put your trial in the villain's mouth
Which here you come to accuse.
- LUCIO
This is the rascal, this is he I spoke of. 300
- ESCALUS
Why, thou unreverend and unhallowed friar,
Is't not enough thou hast suborned these women
To accuse this worthy man but, in foul mouth,
And in the witness of his proper ear,
To call him villain, and then to glance from him 305
To th' Duke himself, to tax him with injustice?
Take him hence; to th' rack with him. We'll touse
you
Joint by joint—but we will know his purpose.
What, 'unjust'?
- DUKE Be not so hot. The Duke
Dare no more stretch this finger of mine than he 310
Dare rack his own. His subject am I not,
Nor here provincial. My business in this state
Made me a looker-on here in Ferrara Vienna,
Where I have seen corruption boil and bubble
Till it o'errun the stew; laws for all faults, 315
But faults so countenanced that the strong statutes
Stand like the forfeits in a barber's shop,
As much in mock as mark.
- ESCALUS Slander to th' state!
Away with him to prison. 320
- ANGELO
What can you vouch against him, Signor Lucio?
Is this the man that you did tell us of?
- LUCIO 'Tis he, my lord.—Come hither, goodman bald-pate.
Do you know me?
- DUKE I remember you, sir, by the sound of your voice. I 325 met you at the prison, in the absence of the Duke.
- LUCIO O, did you so? And do you remember what you said
of the Duke?
- DUKE Most notably, sir.
- LUCIO Do you so, sir? And was the Duke a fleshmonger, a 330 fool, and a coward, as you then reported him to be?

DUKE You must, sir, change persons with me ere you make that my report. You indeed spoke so of him, and much more, much worse.

335 LUCIO O, thou damnable fellow! Did not I pluck thee by the nose for thy speeches?

DUKE I protest I love the Duke as I love myself.

ANGELO Hark how the villain would close now, after his treasonable abuses.

340 ESCALUS Such a fellow is not to be talked withal. Away with him to prison. Where is the Provost? Away with him to prison. Lay bolts enough upon him. Let him speak no more. Away with those giglets too, and with the other confederate companion.

[Mariana is raised to her feet, and is guarded.]
[Provost makes to seize the Duke]

345 DUKE Stay, sir, stay a while.

ANGELO What, resists he? Help him, Lucio.

LUCIO [to Duke] Come, sir; come, sir; come, sir! Foh, sir! Why, you bald-pated lying rascal, you must be hooded, must you? Show your knave's visage, with a pox to you! Show your sheep-biting face, and be hanged an hour! Will't not off?

350 [He pulls off the friar's hood, and discovers the Duke. Angelo and Escalus rise]

DUKE Thou art the first knave that e'er mad'st a duke. First, Provost, let me bail these gentle three.

[To Lucio] Sneak not away, sir, for the friar and you must have a word anon. [To one or more] Lay hold on him.

355 LUCIO This may prove worse than hanging.

DUKE [to Escalus] What you have spoke, I pardon. Sit you down.

We'll borrow place of him.

[Escalus sits]

[To Angelo] Sir, by your leave.

360 [He takes Angelo's seat]

Hast thou or word or wit or impudence That yet can do thee office? If thou hast, Rely upon it till my tale be heard, And hold no longer out.

ANGELO O my dread lord, I should be guiltier than my guiltiness

365 To think I can be undiscernible, When I perceive your grace, like power divine, Hath looked upon my passes. Then, good prince, No longer session hold upon my shame, But let my trial be mine own confession.

370 Immediate sentence then, and sequent death, Is all the grace I beg.

DUKE Come hither, Mariana.— Say, wast thou e'er contracted to this woman?

ANGELO I was, my lord.

DUKE Go, take her hence and marry her instantly.

Do you the office, friar; which consummate, Return him here again. Go with him, Provost.

Exit [Angelo, with Mariana, Friar Peter, and Provost]

ESCALUS My lord, I am more amazed at his dishonour Than at the strangeness of it.

DUKE Come hither, Isabel. Your friar is now your prince. As I was then Adverting and holy to your business, Not changing heart with habit I am still Attorneyed at your service.

ISABELLA O, give me pardon, That I, your vassal, have employed and pained Your unknown sovereignty.

DUKE You are pardoned, Isabel. And now, dear maid, be you as free to us. Your brother's death I know sits at your heart, And you may marvel why I obscured myself, Labouring to save his life, and would not rather Make rash remonstrance of my hidden power Than let him so be lost. O most kind maid, 390 It was the swift celerity of his death, Which I did think with slower foot came on, That brained my purpose. But peace be with him! That life is better life, past fearing death, Than that which lives to fear. Make it your comfort, So happy is your brother.

ISABELLA I do, my lord.

Enter Angelo, Mariana, Friar Peter, Provost

DUKE For this new-married man approaching here, Whose salt imagination yet hath wronged Your well-defended honour, you must pardon For Mariana's sake; but as he adjudged your brother—

400 Being criminal in double violation Of sacred chastity and of promise-breach, Thereon dependent, for your brother's life— The very mercy of the law cries out Most audible, even from his proper tongue,

405 'An Angelo for Claudio, death for death'. Haste still pays haste, and leisure answers leisure; Like doth quit like, and measure still for measure. Then, Angelo, thy fault's thus manifested, Which, though thou wouldst deny, denies thee vantage.

410 We do condemn thee to the very block Where Claudio stooped to death, and with like haste. Away with him.

MARIANA O my most gracious lord, I hope you will not mock me with a husband!

DUKE It is your husband mocked you with a husband. Consenting to the safeguard of your honour, I thought your marriage fit; else imputation,

415

	For that he knew you, might reproach your life, And choke your good to come. For his possessions, Although by confiscation they are ours, We do enstate and widow you with all, To buy you a better husband.	At an unusual hour? PROVOST It was commanded so.	455
420	MARIANA O my dear lord, I crave no other, nor no better man.	DUKE Had you a special warrant for the deed? PROVOST No, my good lord, it was by private message.
	DUKE Never crave him; we are definitive.	DUKE For which I do discharge you of your office. Give up your keys.
	MARIANA Gentle my liege—	PROVOST Pardon me, noble lord. I thought it was a fault, but knew it not,	460
425	DUKE You do but lose your labour.— Away with him to death. [To Lucio] Now, sir, to you.	DUKE Yet did repent me after more advice; For testimony whereof one in the prison That should by private order else have died I have reserved alive.
	MARIANA [kneeling] O my good lord!—Sweet Isabel, take my part; Lend me your knees, and all my life to come I'll lend you all my life to do you service.	DUKE What's he? PROVOST His name is Barnardine.	465
430	DUKE Against all sense you do impòrtune her. Should she kneel down in mercy of this fact, Her brother's ghost his paved bed would break, And take her hence in horror.	DUKE I would thou hadst done so by Claudio. Go fetch him hither. Let me look upon him.
	MARIANA Isabel, Sweet Isabel, do yet but kneel by me.	ESCALUS I am sorry one so learned and so wise As you, Lord Angelo, have still appeared, Should slip so grossly, both in the heat of blood And lack of tempered judgement afterward.	470
435	Hold up your hands; say nothing; I'll speak all. They say best men are moulded out of faults, And, for the most, become much more the better For being a little bad. So may my husband. O Isabel, will you not lend a knee?	ANGELO I am sorry that such sorrow I procure, And so deep sticks it in my penitent heart That I crave death more willingly than mercy. 'Tis my deserving, and I do entreat it.	475
	DUKE He dies for Claudio's death.	Enter Barnardine and Provost; Claudio, [muffled,] Julietta
440	ISABELLA [kneeling] Most bounteous sir, Look, if it please you, on this man condemned As if my brother lived. I partly think A due sincerity governed his deeds, Till he did look on me. Since it is so, Let him not die. My brother had but justice, In that he did the thing for which he died. For Angelo, His act did not o'ertake his bad intent, And must be buried but as an intent	DUKE Which is that Barnardine? PROVOST This, my lord. DUKE There was a friar told me of this man. [To Barnardine] Sirrah, thou art said to have a stubborn soul
445	That perished by the way. Thoughts are no subjects, Intent but merely thoughts.	DUKE That apprehends no further than this world, And squar'st thy life according. Thou'rt condemned; But, for those earthly faults, I quit them all, And pray thee take this mercy to provide For better times to come.—Friar, advise him. I leave him to your hand. [To Provost] What muffled fellow's that?	480
450	MARIANA Merely, my lord.	PROVOST This is another prisoner that I saved,	485
	DUKE Your suit's unprofitable. Stand up, I say. [Mariana and Isabella stand] I have bethought me of another fault. Provost, how came it Claudio was beheaded

476.2 Julietta The form 'Julietta' occurs elsewhere only in 1.2: in the Middletonian passage (1.2.69) and in Claudio's account of his crime, in a line that is metrically ambiguous and may have been altered ('I got possession of Julietta's bed', 1.2.129). As in 1.2 (see note to 1.2.102), nothing is made of Juliet's presence in the final scene; there is no exchange between her and Claudio, even though this is the only time they appear on stage together. The Duke refers to her, but he excludes her from his closing addresses to each character at the end of the play. Her presence was probably no more necessary in the staging of the original text than the apparently offstage 'punk' whom Lucio is forced to marry, and Juliet seems to have been added to the scene for the revival, as in 1.2. The theatrical dynamics of Isabella's reunion with her brother and the Duke's proposal to her will be affected significantly by the presence or absence of Juliet.

Measure for Measure.

Who should have died when Claudio lost his head,
As like almost to Claudio as himself.
[He unmuffles Claudio]
DUKE [to Isabella]
If he be like your brother, for his sake
490 Is he pardoned; and for your lovely sake
Give me your hand, and say you will be mine.
He is my brother too. But fitter time for that.
By this Lord Angelo perceives he's safe.
Methinks I see a quick'ning in his eye.
495 Well, Angelo, your evil quits you well.
Look that you love your wife, her worth worth yours.
I find an apt remission in myself;
And yet here's one in place I cannot pardon.
[To Lucio] You, sirrah, that knew me for a fool, a 500 coward,
One all of luxury, an ass, a madman,
Wherein have I so deserved of you
That you extol me thus?
LUCIO Faith, my lord, I spoke it but according to the trick.
If you will hang me for it, you may; but I had rather it
505 would please you I might be whipped.
DUKE Whipped first, sir, and hanged after.
Proclaim it, Provost, round about the city,
If any woman wronged by this lewd fellow,
As I have heard him swear himself there's one 510 Whom he begot with child, let her appear,
And he shall marry her. The nuptial finished,
Let him be whipped and hanged.

LUCIO I beseech your highness, do not marry me to a whore. Your highness said even now I made you a duke; good my lord, do not recompense me in making me a cuckold. 515

DUKE
Upon mine honour, thou shalt marry her.
Thy slanders I forgive, and therewithal
Remit thy other forfeits.—Take him to prison,
And see our pleasure herein executed. 520

LUCIO Marrying a punk, my lord, is pressing to death, whipping, and hanging.
DUKE Slandering a prince deserves it. [Exit Lucio guarded]
She, Claudio, that you wronged, look you restore.
Joy to you, Mariana. Love her, Angelo. 525
I have confessed her, and I know her virtue.
Thanks, good friend Escalus, for thy much goodness.
There's more behind that is more gratefully.
Thanks, Provost, for thy care and secrecy.
We shall employ thee in a worthier place. 530
Forgive him, Angelo, that brought you home
The head of Ragusine for Claudio's.
Th'offence pardons itself. Dear Isabel,
I have a motion much imports your good,
Whereto, if you'll a willing ear incline, 535
What's mine is yours, and what is yours is mine.
[To all] So bring us to our palace, where we'll show
What's yet behind that's meet you all should know.
[Exeunt]

Finis

THE PARTS

Adult Males
DUKE (925 lines): First or Second Gentleman; Froth or Justice
ANGELO (317 lines): Thomas, Abhorson
LUCIO (287 lines): Froth, Abhorson
ESCALUS (190 lines): Thomas, Abhorson
CLOWN (163 lines): Claudio (or First or Second Gentleman or Thomas or Peter); First or Second Gentleman (or Claudio or Thomas); Peter (or Claudio); Thomas (or Claudio or First or Second Gentleman)
PROVOST (161 lines): None
CLAUDIO (113 lines): Abhorson; Froth or Clown or Elbow or Justice
ELBOW (72 lines): any but Duke, Angelo, Escalus, Lucio, Provost, Froth, Clown, Justice
FRIAR PETER (36 lines): any but Duke, Angelo, Escalus, Lucio, Provost, Barnardine, Claudio
FIRST GENTLEMAN (1 scene; 25 lines): any but Angelo, Escalus, Second Gentleman, Lucio, Clown, Provost, Claudio, Duke, Thomas
ABHORSON (17 lines): any but Duke, Provost, Barnardine, Clown

BARNARDINE (15 lines): First or Second Gentleman or Thomas; Froth or Elbow or Justice
FRIAR THOMAS (1 scene; 12 lines): any but Duke, Lucio, First Gentleman, Second Gentleman, Claudio, Provost
SECOND GENTLEMAN (1 scene; 11 lines): any but Angelo, Escalus, First Gentleman, Lucio, Clown, Provost, Claudio, Duke, Thomas
FROTH (1 scene; 10 lines): any but Angelo, Escalus, Justice, Provost, Elbow, Clown
JUSTICE (3 lines): any but Angelo, Escalus, Povost, Elbow, Froth, Clown

Boys
ISABELLA (424 lines): Bawd; Boy?
MARIANA (68 lines): Bawd, Nun
BAWD (30 lines): Isabella, Nun, Mariana, Boy
JULIET (10 lines): Boy, Nun
NUN (9 lines): Mariana, Juliet, Bawd, Boy
BOY (6 lines): Isabella, Nun, Juliet, Bawd

Most crowded scene: 5.1 (8 men, 3 boys; mute lords including Varius; citizens, officers)

THE SUN IN ARIES

Text edited and annotated by David M. Bergeron, introduced by Michael Berlin

THE 'noble solemnity' performed at the inauguration of Edward Barkham as Lord Mayor of London in October 1621 was the fourth of such 'costly pageants' which Middleton composed for the annual celebrations on the beginning of the mayoral year of office. Produced at a cost to the Drapers' Company of £548 4s., The Sun in Aries was one of the least expensive of the Jacobean Lord Mayors' shows. At first sight one of the less developed of Middleton's civic pageants, a closer reading of the text and the context of the performance that it prefigures reveals that beneath the opaque surface of the conventional symbolism used this text can be read in ways which at first might not be apparent. In The Sun in Aries Middleton reworks the formulae of civic pageantry to comment on the nature of the social power of the magistrate and office holder in early modern England.

The pageant devices and characters which Middleton presented at different stages along the route of the mayoral entourage—Jason in a chariot of Honour; Fame in a 'brazen Tower of Virtue'; representations of the Tudor and Stuart monarchs; Phoebus on top of a mountain, surrounded by twelve celestial signs; Fame, again, flanked by a triple crowned fountain—were all part of a symbolic repertoire common to Jacobean pageant writers. Middleton makes use of these conventions as a means of making connections between various spheres: the political and the natural, the social and the supernatural, the historical and the mythical. Like other Lord Mayor's Shows, Middleton's in 1621 acted as an elaborate culmination of the rites of passage of the new Lord Mayor. This ritualistic element was at the very heart of the mayor-making ceremonies which took place prior to the pageants and is present in their form. The title sequence, with its emphasis on the astrological configuration of the sun in the sign of Aries, which occurs in April at the beginning of the new agrarian season, places the pageants and the political order which they celebrate within a symbolic temporal cycle in which the new Lord Mayor is the prime actor, serving by his presence to renew the office which he now holds. The beginning of the Lord Mayor's year in office is likened to the beginning of the new agrarian cycle, 'the springtime of right and justice'. This emphasis on political renewal, expressed through the astrological component links successive sequences of the pageants.

During the early seventeenth century the social identity of the city's livery companies was being transformed from within and without by the growing economic power of the city's haute bourgeoisie who came to dominate the upper echelons of the hierarchy of civic and livery company offices. This social group, of whom Barkham is a good representative, owed their wealth and position to their role in the national economy and in overseas and domestic trade and commerce, often connected with the monopolization of government concessions. The economic and social outlook of these men went beyond the corporate perspective of the majority of livery company members. For men like Barkham the companies represented a useful means of exercising the right to trade in the city via the 'Custom of London' (which enabled any member of a livery company to carry on any trade in the city regardless of the particular trade from which a livery company took its name). It was this group from which the ruling élite of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London were drawn. Membership of the livery companies was for this select group a way of carrying on trade and of gaining access to the social status associated with high office. The most prestige was attached to the twelve 'great' livery companies, of which the Drapers were one; membership of one of the twelve was a precondition of holding the city's highest office. Prospective candidates for mayoral office who were not members of one of the twelve great companies had to change membership or 'translate' into one of these.

It was this requirement which led Alderman Edward Barkham, a member of the Leathersellers' Company, to apply to the Drapers to secure translation into the Company in late June, 1621, prior to his election as Lord Mayor. The attitude of the Drapers to Barkham's request, vividly revealed in the Drapers' archives, provides some insight into the social context of The Sun in Aries. Barkham at first applied informally to be allowed into the Drapers company, only to be told that the company feared that it would be unable to pay for the pageants due to the weak state of its finances. The Company asked Barkham not to pursue the matter further as they thought that a formal refusal would 'tend somewhat to his disgrace'. Barkham reacted angrily to the Drapers' reply 'accounting himself wronged [and] unkindly dealt with' and uttering 'many disrespectful words touching that denial saying he would never be Lord Mayor unless he were a Draper'. At this stage the powerful Court of Aldermen intervened in an attempt to persuade the Drapers to accept Barkham. The Company put the matter to a vote of a General Court of the Drapers who unanimously rejected Barkham's request. The Court of Aldermen again asked the Company to reconsider its decision but the Company continued to bar admission to Barkham. The Drapers finally backed down after a month of resistance when the Privy Council intervened on Barkham's behalf.

Did this breach of civic custom affect the composition of Middleton's text? The playwright had the months of August and September in which to compose the pageants. Middleton, as the official chronologer of the city, would have been aware of the proceedings of the Court of Aldermen. The Drapers stated that their reluctance to accept Barkham was based on their fear that the company would be unable to meet the charge of the shows in a manner which would uphold 'the honour of this city and himself, and the credit and worship of this company'. The continual emphasis on 'honour' throughout the text suggests that the pageants were designed in part as a way of repairing the damage done to this breach in social relations. Honour is a unifying theme throughout the text; honour obtained through 'adventure', honour justified by industry, honour restored by re-edification of the urban fabric.

The myth of Jason and the Golden Fleece in the first pageant sequence legitimizes Barkham's election as Lord Mayor. The story of the epic journey to capture the magical fleece followed from the astrological invocation of Aries in the title sequence, for the mythical ram from which the Golden Fleece derived was associated with that celestial constellation. The image of the voyage of Jason becomes an extended metaphor for the Lord Mayor's year in office. A pun on Barkham's name made explicit the connection between the voyage and the mayoralty. Jason tells the audience 'the bark is under sail | For a year's voyage'. The dangers of the sea journey are compared to the social dangers of holding high office in the city: 'There is no voyage set forth to renown, | That does not sometimes meet with skies that frown, | With gusts of envy, billows of despite'. In the task of governing the Lord Mayor must serve as a cautious mariner, 'State is a sea; he must be wise indeed | That sounds its depth, or can the quicksands heed; | And honour is so nice and rare a prize, | 'Tis watched by dragons, venomous enemies'. The Lord Mayor is enjoined to be bound by the collective wisdom of the twenty-four Aldermen as Jason was by the Argonauts; 'they can instruct and guide thee, and each one | That must adventure, and are coming on | To this great expedition'. The element of moral injunction in Jason's speech mirrors the Lord Mayor's oath taking ceremony in which the new incumbent is ritually enjoined to govern with the assistance of the Alderman.

Yet Jason's voyage and the honour brought by his capture of the Golden Fleece serves a wider purpose, underlining the appropriateness of Barkham to the highest position in the city. Jason is identified as 'first adventurer for fame' while the capture of the Golden Fleece gives as an example of 'honour got by danger'. The source of Barkham's social position in the city was the material wealth garnered through his own 'adventure' or investment in various overseas trading enterprises. He was a charter member of the East India Company and of the Levant Company. Barkham's status as Lord Mayor is ratified by this association with overseas trade. Barkham's 'voyage' is 'for justice bound, | A coast that's not by every compass found, | And goes for honour, life's most precious trading.'

A similar note of moral injunction can be perceived in the next sequence, the central pageant or 'master triumph': the salutation of Fame before the Tower of Virtue, an elaborate movable 'brazen tower' adorned with representations of famous Drapers costumed as knights or 'virtue's champions'. The speech of Fame served to incorporate Barkham into the history of the company by placing him in succession to these predecessors. The archetypes drawn on (including Henry fitz Ailwin, London's first Lord Mayor; the builder of Leadenhall, Simon Eyre, made famous by Thomas Dekker; the Elizabethan adventurer Sir Francis Drake) provide examples by their 'good actions' of the moral qualities appropriate to the office holder by graphically reminding the audience of these precedents. Emphasis is given to the examples of benefactors who undertook charitable building projects ('college-founders, temple beautifiers') and to previous Draper Lord Mayors. In a direct reference to the circumstances of Barkham's mayoralty Middleton here included Sir Richard Pipe, Lord Mayor in 1578, who as a Leatherseller also translated into the Drapers. The new Lord Mayor is enjoined to follow their example: 'See here the glory of illustrious acts, | All of thine fraternity, whose tracts | 'Tis comely to pursue, all thy life's race, | Taking their virtues as thou hold'st their place'. These historical precedents served as a reminder of the moral obligations associated with high office.

The theme of re-edification of the civic fabric serving to renew the office of the Lord Mayor continues in the third pageant sequence, at the newly refurbished Standard conduit in Cheapside, sanctioning the Lord Mayor's role as the chief representative of the crown. The figure of the Standard, 'in a cloudy ruinous habit', wakes at the new Lord Mayor's approach and throwing off his 'unseemly garments' proceeds to deliver a speech which links the political stability of the dynastic succession to the election of the Lord Mayor by didactic reference to the statues of the six Tudor and Stuart monarchs which decorated the conduit. The Lord Mayor is called the king's 'honoured substitute'. Though the Lord Mayor was elected from amongst the ranks of the citizens he held office only with the approval of the monarch. This was the purpose of the ceremonial presentation of the new Lord Mayor to the Lord Chancellor and the Barons of the Exchequer at Westminster which occurred annually on the same day as the pageants were performed. This ceremony, with its recapitulation of the duties of the mayoralty in the forms of public oath taking, acted as a ritual re-edification of the office of Lord Mayor.

Middleton integrates this royal sanction for mayoral office with the idea of re-edification of the civic fabric. The city's rebuilding of the Standard is made to exemplify the way in which the yearly election of the Lord Mayor helps to renew the moral qualities of office. Renewal is seen as means of purging the collective memory of past ills: 'All blemish is forgot when they repair; | For what has been re-edified alate, | But lifts its head up in more glorious state: | 'Tis grown a principle; ruins built again | Come bettered both in monuments and men'. Later in the Standard's speech the security and stability of the city, ensured by the succession, is entrusted to the new Lord Mayor: 'Strive to preserve this city's famous peace | Begun by yon first king, which does increase | Now by the last; from Henry that joined roses, | To James that unites kingdoms'. This emphasis on the sanctity of the civic political order underwritten by the Stuart succession perhaps may be taken to throw some doubt on recent characterizations of Middleton's work for the city as 'oppositional' in the puritan parliamentary sense. Yet at the time of composition of this pageant relations between the city and the crown had not reached the fraught state that they were to later in the 1620s. Other evidence suggests that Barkham may have shared the puritan views of Middleton's other civic patrons: Middleton went on to write an 'invention' for a private entertainment at an Easter feast at Barkham's house the following April which made explicit reference to the role of the godly Christian magistrate combating sin.

In the fourth pageant sequence, the speech of Aries from a mountain, the last pageant of the forenoon, Middleton recapitulates the astrological theme which commenced the show. This pageant—'a mountain, artfully raised and replenished with fine woolly creatures'—featured Phoebus, the god of the sun, dressed as a shepherd, surrounded by the twelve celestial signs. In classical myth the magical ram of the Golden Fleece was associated with both Aries, the god of war, and Phoebus, the personification of sunlight. The property of sunlight acts as a metaphor for political power in which the mountain and the figure of Phoebus is formulated as a symbol of the exalted status of the Lord Mayor. The image of Phoebus in the mountain decorated by 'woolly creatures' points to the divine nature of mayoral government. The relationship between ruler and ruled is characterized as that of the shepherd and his flock. This political order is ordained by 'Holy writ', it is as natural as the sun's rays.

The use of light as dramatic device was a stock feature of Middleton's civic pageants. In the 1613 pageants, The Triumphs of Truth, light is used as an agency of religious enlightenment which drives out 'error'. In The Sun in Aries the evangelical element appears to be lacking. Light is a secular property which dispels '...bribery and injustice, deeds of night, | That fly the sunbeam'. Sunlight figures again in the final sequence of the show, performed in the evening outside Barkham's house, in which the heraldic emblem of the Drapers' Company—the triple crown represented by a fountain decorated with allegorical figures—becomes the focus for an encomium to the 'love' of the Drapers' fellowship for the new Lord Mayor as manifested in their provision of pageants. Middleton again invokes the restorative powers of celestial motion to point to the renewal of the honour of the office by the performance. The affection of the Drapers for Barkham is compared to the effect of sunlight after an eclipse, recalling Phoebus' mythical role in earlier sequences. Their affection is demonstrated by the provision of pageants 'with a content past expectation: | A care that has been comely, and a cost | That has been decent, cheerful, which is most | Fit for the service of so great a state'. Rather than suppressing the limited nature of the Company's expenditure for Barkham, Middleton elliptically acknowledges the earlier conflict between Barkham and the Drapers to make a general point about the nature of pageantry: 'And happily is cost requited then, | When men grace triumphs more than triumphs, men'. The pageants are merely an outward manifestation of the real virtues of office holders. Middleton thus attempts to impart these virtues to Barkham and to make him accountable to them.

SEE ALSO

Textual introduction and apparatus: Companion, 674

Authorship and date: Companion, 421

Middleton's Invention for Barkham: this volume, 1446

General introduction to the civic entertainments: this volume, 968

Other Middleton-Christmas works: Antiquity, 1397; Virtue, 1714; Integrity, 1766; Prosperity, 1901; lost pageant for Charles I, 1898

The Sun in Aries

A noble solemnity performed through the City, at the sole cost and charges of the honourable and ancient fraternity of Drapers, at the confirmation and establishment of their most worthy brother, the Right Honourable Edward Barkham, in the high office of his Majesty's Lieutenant, the Lord Mayor of the famous City of London.

5

Taking beginning at his Lordship's going, and perfecting itself after his return from receiving the oath of mayoralty at Westminster, on the morrow after Simon and Jude's Day, being the 29 of October, 1621.

10

To the honour of him, to whom the noble fraternity of Drapers, his worthy brothers, have dedicated their loves in costly triumphs, the Right Honourable Edward Barkham,

15

Lord Mayor of this renowned city

Your Honour being the centre, where the lines Of this day's glorious circle meets and joins; Love, joy, cost, triumph, all by you made blest; There does my service, too, desire to rest.

20

At your Lordship's command,
Tho. Middleton

The Sun in Aries

Pisces being the last of the signs and the wane of the sun's glory, how fitly and desiredly now the sun enters into Aries, for the comfort and refreshing of the creatures, and may be properly called the springtime of right and justice, observed by the shepherd's calendar in the mountain, to prove a happy year for poor men's causes, widows' and orphans' comforts; so much to make good the sun's entrance into that noble sign, I doubt not but the beams of his justice will make good themselves.

25

30

And first, to begin with the worthy love of his honourable society to his lordship, after his honour's return from Westminster, having received some service upon the water: the first triumph by land attends his lordship's most wished arrival in Paul's Churchyard, which is a chariot most artfully framed and adorned, bearing the title of the Chariot of Honour. In which chariot many worthies are placed that have got trophies of honour by their labours and deserts, such as Jason, whose illustration of honour is the golden fleece; Hercules, with his ne plus ultra upon pilasters of silver; a fair globe for conquering Alexander; a gilt laurel for triumphant Caesar, etc. Jason, at the approach of his lordship, being the personage most proper, by his manifestation, for the society's honour, lends a voice to these following words.

35

40

45

THE SPEECH PRESENTED BY JASON

*Be favourable, fates, and a fair sky
Smile on this expedition. Phoebus' eye,
Look cheerfully, the bark is under sail
For a year's voyage, and a blessed gale
Be ever with it. 'Tis for justice bound,
A coast that's not by every compass found,
And goes for honour, life's most precious trading.
May it return with most illustrious lading,
A thing both wished and hoped for. I am he,
To all adventurous voyages a free
And bountiful well-wisher, by my name
Hight Jason, first adventurer for fame,
Which now rewards my danger, and o'ertops
The memory of all peril or her stops;
Assisted by the noble hopes of Greece,
'Twas I from Colchis fetched the Golden Fleece;
And one of the first brothers on record
Of honour got by danger. So, great lord,
There is no voyage set forth to renown,
That does not sometimes meet with skies that frown,
With gusts of envy, billows of despite,
Which makes the purchase, once achieved, more bright.
"State is a sea; he must be wise indeed
That sounds its depth, or can the quicksands heed";
And honour is so nice and rare a prize,
'Tis watched by dragons, venomous enemies;
Then no small care belongs to't—but as I,
With my assisting Argonauts, did try
The utmost of adventure, and with bold
And constant courage brought the fleece of gold,
Whose illustration decks my memory
Through all posterities, naming but me—
So man of merit, never faint or fear;
Thou hast th' assistance of grave senators here,
Thy worthy brethren, some of which have passed
All dangerous gulfs, and in their bright fames placed,
They can instruct and guide thee, and each one
That must adventure, and are coming on
To this great expedition; they will be Cheerful and forward to encourage thee;
And blessings fall in a most infinite sum
Both on those past, thyself, and those to come.*

50

55

60

65

70

75

80

85

Passing from this, and more to encourage the labour of the magistrate, he is now conducted to the master triumph, called the Tower of Virtue, which for the strength, safety, and perpetuity, bears the name of the Brazen Tower;

90

5 Edward Barkham Sheriff, 1611-12; died 1634.

27 shepherd's calendar almanac

34-5 service... water refers to the entertainment on the river Thames

40 Jason mythological figure noted for his conquest of the Golden Fleece, leader of the Argonauts

41 ne plus ultra no further; highest point capable of being attained

42 pilasters square or rectangular column or pillar

45 manifestation i.e., the Golden Fleece

54 lading freight

58 Hight called

77 decks attires, clothes

80 senators i.e., the Aldermen

The Sunne in Aries.

of which Integrity keeps the keys, virtue being indeed 95 as a brazen wall to a city or commonwealth; and to illustrate the prosperity it brings to a kingdom, the top turrets or pinnacles of this Brazen Tower shine bright like gold. And upon the gilded battlements thereof stand six knights, three in silvered and three in gilt armour, 100 as virtue's standard-bearers or champions, holding six little streamers or silver bannerets, in each of which are displayed the arms of a noble brother and benefactor, Fame sounding forth their praises to the world, for the encouragement of after-ages, and Antiquity, the register of Fame, containing in her golden legend their names and 105 titles: as that of Sir Henry fitz Ailwin, Draper, lord mayor four-and-twenty years together; Sir John Norman, the first that was rowed in barge to Westminster with silver oars at his own cost and charges; Sir Francis Drake, the son of fame, who in two years and ten months, did cast a 110 girdle about the world; the unparalleled Sir Simon Eyre, who built Leadenhall at his own cost, a storehouse for the poor, both in the upper lofts and lower; the generous and memorable Sir Richard Champion and Sir John Milborne, two bountiful benefactors; Sir Richard Hardell, in the seat 115 of magistracy six years together; Sir John Poultney, four years, which Sir John founded a college in the parish of St Lawrence Poultney, by Candlewick Street; John Hinde, a re-edifier of the parish church of St Swithin 120 by London Stone; Sir Richard Pipe, who being free of the Leathersellers, was also from them translated to the ancient and honourable Society of Drapers; and many whose names for brevity's cause I must omit and hasten to the honour and service of the time present. From the tower, Fame, a personage properly adorned, thus salutes 125 the great master of the day and triumph.

THE SALUTATION OF FAME

*Welcome to Virtue's fortress, strong and clear.
 Thou art not only safe but glorious here;
 It is a tower of brightness. Such is truth,
 Whose strength and grace feels a perpetual youth;
 130 The walls are brass, the pyramids fine gold,
 Which shows 'tis safety's and prosperity's hold;
 Clear conscience is lieutenant, providence there,
 Watchfulness, wisdom, constancy, zeal, care,
 Are the six warders; keep the watch-tower sure, 135 That nothing enters but what's just and pure;*

98 gilt golden

105 Henry fitz Ailwin London's first elected mayor (1189-1212)

106 John Norman mayor, 1453-54; Middleton repeats the error about Norman's being the first to go by barge to Westminster; he may have been the first to go at his own cost.

108 Francis Drake famous English navigator and sailor; admitted to the Drapers in 1588

110 Simon Eyre mayor, 1445-56; built Leadenhall in 1419; Dekker makes Eyre a Shoemaker in his play, but Eyre was a Draper.

113 Richard Champion mayor, 1565-66; several times Master of the Drapers

John Milborne mayor, 1521-22; built some fourteen alms houses

114 Richard Hardell mayor, 1254-58; first name was Ralph

115 John Poultney mayor, 1330-32, 1336-37; Stow in his Survey (1598) says that Poultney left many 'legacies long to rehearse'.

117-18 John Hinde mayor, 1391-92, 1402-05

*For which effect, both to affright and shame
 All slothful bloods that blush to look on Fame,
 An ensign of good actions each displays,
 That worthy works may justly own their praise;
 And which is clearest to be understood, 140
 Thine shines amidst thy glorious brotherhood,
 Circled with arms of honour by those passed,
 As now with love's arms by the present graced;
 And how thy word does thy true worth display:
 Fortunæ mater, Diligentia, 145
 Fair Fortune's mother, all may read and see,
 Is diligence, endeavouring industry.
 See here the glory of illustrious acts,
 All of thy own fraternity, whose tracts
 'Tis comely to pursue, all thy life's race, 150
 Taking their virtues as thou hold'st their place;
 Some, college-founders, temple-beautifiers,
 Whose blest souls sing now in celestial choirs;
 Erecters some of granaries for the poor,
 Though now converted to some rich men's store 155
 (The more the age's misery), some so rare
 For this famed city's government and care,
 They kept the seat four years with a fair name;
 Some, six; but one, the miracle of fame,
 Which no society or time can match, 160
 Twenty-four years complete; he was truth's watch,
 He went so right and even, and the hand
 Of that fair motion bribe could ne'er make stand.
 And as men set their watches by the sun,
 Set justice but by that which he has done, 165
 And keep it even; so, from men to men,
 No magistrate need stir the work again:
 It lights into a noble hand today,
 And has passed many; many more it may.*

By this Tower of Virtue, his lordship being gracefully 170 conducted toward the new Standard, one in a cloudy, ruinous habit, leaning upon the turret, at a trumpet's sounding suddenly starts and wakes, and in amazement throws off his unseemly garments.

NEW STANDARD

*What noise is this wakes me from ruin's womb?
 175 Ha! bless me, Time, how brave am I become!
 Fame fixed upon my head. Beneath me, round,
 The figures of illustrious princes, crowned*

119 Richard Pipe mayor, 1578-79; like Barkham he had first been a Leatherseller

130 pyramids structures of pyramidal form

138 ensign banner, coat of arms

140 clearest most clear; form not attested in OED

149 tracts course of action

159 but one i.e., Henry fitz Ailwin

171 new Standard rebuilt in Cheapside in 1620-21, statue of Fame on top; served as water conduit

172 ruinous decayed, dilapidated

The Sunne in Aries.

180 As well for goodness as for state by birth,
Which makes 'em true heirs both to heaven and earth.
Just six in number and all blessed names,
Two Henrys, Edward, Mary, Eliza, James,
That joy of honest hearts; and there behold
His honoured substitute, whom worth makes bold
185 To undergo the weight of this degree,
Virtue's fair edifice, raised up like me:
Why, here's the city's goodness, shown in either,
To raise two worthy buildings both together;
For when they made that lord's election free,
190 I guess that time their charge did perfect me;
Nay, note the city's bounty in both still;
When they restore a ruin, 'tis their will
To be so noble in their cost and care,
All blemish is forgot when they repair;
195 For what has been re-edified o' late,
But lifts its head up in more glorious state:
"Tis grown a principle; ruins built again
Come bettered both in monuments and men":
The instance is apparent. On then, lord;
200 E'en at thy entrance thou'dst a great man's word,
The noblest testimony of fair worth
That ever lord had, when he first stood forth
Presented by the city: lose not then
A praise so dear, bestowed not on all men;
205 Strive to preserve this famous city's peace,
Begun by yon first king, which does increase
Now by the last; from Henry that joined roses,
To James that unites kingdoms, who encloses
All in the arms of love, maliced of none;
210 Our hearts find that, when neighbouring kingdoms groan;
Which in the magistrate's duty may well move
A zealous care, in all, a thankful love.

After this, for the full close of the forenoon's triumph, near St Lawrence Lane stands a mountain, artfully raised and 215 replenished with fine woolly creatures; Phoebus on the top, shining in a full glory, being circled with the twelve celestial signs. Aries, placed near the principal rays, the proper sign for illustration, thus greets his lordship.

ARIES

220 Bright thoughts, joy, and alacrity of heart
Bless thy great undertakings. 'Tis the part
And property of Phoebus with his rays
To cheer and to illumine good men's ways;
Eagle-eyed actions, that dare behold
His sparkling globe depart, tried all like gold;
225 'Tis bribery and injustice, deeds of night,
That fly the sunbeam, which makes good works bright;

182 Henry... James Henry VII, Henry VIII, Edward VI, Queen Mary, Queen Elizabeth, King James I
207-8 Henry... James from Henry VII who united the Yorks and Lancasters to King James I who united Scotland and England 214 St Lawrence Lane in Cheapside offering access to the Guildhall

215 Phoebus the god Apollo, god of sun and poetry
216-17 twelve celestial signs the twelve signs of the zodiac
224 tried refined
229 refulgent radiant, gleaming

Thine look upon't, undazzled; as one beam
Faces another, as we match a gem
With her refulgent fellow, from thy worth
Example sparkles as a star shoots forth. 230
This mount, the type of eminence and place,
Resembles magistracy's seat and grace;
The sun the magistrate himself implies;
These woolly creatures, all that part which lies
Under his charge and office; not unfit, 235
Since kings and rulers are in holy writ
With shepherds paralleled, nay, from shepherds reared,
And people and the flock as oft cohered.
Now, as it is the bounty of the sun
To spread his splendours and make gladness run 240
Over the drooping creatures, it ought so
To be his proper virtue that does owe
To justice his life's flame shot from above
To cheer oppressed right with looks of love;
Which nothing doubted; Truth's reward light on you, 245
The beams of all clear comforts shine upon you.

The great feast ended, the whole state of the triumph attends upon his lordship, both to Paul's and homeward; and near the entrance of his lordship's house, two parts of the triumph stand ready planted, viz. the Brazen Tower and the triple-crowned Fountain of Justice, this fountain being adorned with the lively figures of all those graces and virtues which belong to the faithful discharging of so high an office: as Justice, Sincerity, Meekness, Wisdom, Providence, Equality, Industry, Truth, Peace, Patience, 255 Hope, Harmony, all illustrated by proper emblems and expressions; as, Justice by a sword; Sincerity by a lamb; Meekness by a dove; Wisdom by a serpent; Providence
by an eagle; Equality by a silvered balance; Industry
by a golden ball, on which stands a Cupid, intimating 260 that industry brings both wealth and love; Truth with a fan of stars, with which she chases away Error; Peace with a branch of laurel; Patience a sprig of palm; Hope by a silvered anchor; Harmony by a swan; each at night holding a bright-burning taper in her hand, as a 265 manifestation of purity. His lordship being in sight and drawing near to his entrance, Fame, from the Brazen Tower, closes up the Triumph, his lordship's honourable welcome, with the noble demonstration of his worthy fraternity's affection, in this concluding speech. 270

FAME

I cannot better the comparison
Of thy fair brotherhood's love than to the sun
After a great eclipse. For as the sphere
Of that celestial motion shines more clear

238 cohered combined, made analogous
248 Paul's St Paul's Cathedral
251 triple-crowned refers to the three crowns in the arms of the Drapers
261-2 Truth... Error Compare the central battle between these two figures in The Triumphs of Truth (1613).

The Sunne in Aries.

275	After the interposing part is spent, Than to the eye before the darkness went Over the bright orb, so their love is shown With a content past expectation: A care that has been comely, and a cost	All their good is without 'em, not their own; When wise men to their virtues are best known. Behold yon fountain with the tripled crown, And through a cloud the sunbeam piercing down; So is the worthy magistrate made up;	295
280	That has been decent; cheerful, which is most, Fit for the service of so great a state, So famed a city, and a magistrate So worthy of it; all has been bestowed Upon thy triumph, which has clearly showed	The triple crown is charity, faith, and hope, Those three celestial sisters; the cloud too, That's care, and yet you see the beam strikes through; A care discharged with honour it presages, And may it so continue to all ages.	300
285	The loves of thy fraternity as great For thy first welcome to thy honoured seat; And happily is cost requited then, "When men grace triumphs more than triumphs, men: Diamonds will shine though set in lead; true worth Stands always in least need of setting forth."	It is thy brotherhood's arms; how well it fits Both thee and all that for Truth's honour sits. The time of rest draws near; triumph must cease; Joy to thy heart, to all a blessed peace.	305
290	What makes less noise than merit or less show Than virtue? 'Tis the undeservers owe All to vain-glory and to rumour still, Building their praises on the vulgar will;	FINIS. For the framework of the whole triumph, with all the proper beauties of workmanship, the credit of that justly appertains to the deserts of Master Garret Christmas, a man excellent in his art, and faithful in his performances.	310

298 cloud the sunbeam refers to the heraldic arms of the Drapers

312 Garret Christmas artificer whom Middleton regularly praises in the pageant texts

ANYTHING FOR A QUIET LIFE

Edited by Leslie Thomson

IN Anything for a Quiet Life (c. 1621), Middleton returned to the world of his earlier city comedies, and of his audience: commercial London. Together with John Webster, he created an intriguing combination of the immediately topical and timelessly theatrical—the one complementing and commenting on the other. Central to this mix is cloth, as a commodity and as clothing. Consequently, disguise and discovery, which often symbolize the deceptive difference between appearance and reality in plays of the period, are here not only effective and entertaining theatrical devices but also the means of putting visual and verbal focus on the cloth trade itself. With scenes about the buying and selling of fabric literally at the heart of the action, the numerous references to clothing, cloth, and even yarn, gain in significance until the conclusion, when clothes signal the resolution to each of the plots.

For those Londoners who came to Blackfriars Theatre to watch the King's Men perform the play, this emphasis on cloth and clothing would have been especially satisfying, since there could hardly have been anyone in the audience not somehow affected by the sharp decrease in the wool trade which had begun after 1614. By 1621, about when Anything for a Quiet Life was being written, the unhappy consequences of a disastrous change in the control of England's cloth trade with the Continent had become distressingly apparent. Middleton and Webster produced a play that in its comic business, wordplay and symbolism seems implicitly to acknowledge the importance of cloth in the real world of their audience.

Following the Anglo-Spanish treaty of 1604, the English trade in woollens (or cloth) grew rapidly—peace meant profit. Under the Merchant Adventurers' monopoly, production in the provinces, warehousing and distribution in London, and export of cloth to the Continent were organized and regulated largely by one group. New kinds of fabric, being produced in the Low Countries and Germany especially, were beginning to threaten the dominance of English woollens both at home and abroad, but more than ten years of growth in trade had fostered stability and complacency among domestic producers, merchants, and exporters. In 1614, however, the Cokayne project precipitated disastrous changes in England's major domestic and export businesses. Until then, the Merchant Adventurers had shipped mostly undyed, undressed cloth to Germany and the Low Countries to be finished. Alderman William Cokayne, a merchant, sold James on his plan to finish cloth before it was exported, and in December 1614 a proclamation abruptly ended the Merchant Adventurers' monopoly by giving a group led by Cokayne control over the export of cloth. The project was a fiasco. Evidence indicates that the new company, the King's Merchant Adventurers, never really intended to make the project a reality. No plans were put into place to dye and dress cloth, with the result that stocks accumulated in London, unfinished and unsold. The full story is long and complex, but the consequences were painfully simple. Before long, investment capital evaporated and the effects began to be felt in the provinces, where workers were laid off, and in the city, where distributors could not afford to warehouse unfinished stock and exporters were prevented from selling it. Almost simultaneously came a shift in domestic and foreign demand from the better quality, heavier wool England produced to the so-called 'new draperies' being manufactured on the continent. By 1617, when the Merchant Adventurers' monopoly was restored, conditions had changed irrevocably; by 1620 the English textile industry was at the beginning of a severe four-year depression (Supple). In 1621, Londoners could not but have had the cloth trade on their minds; in Anything for a Quiet Life Middleton and Webster can be seen to have simultaneously acknowledged and capitalized on very real and immediate social and economic concerns by writing a play focusing on cloth, clothing, and a clothseller.

The play's dramatis personae list indicates the importance of clothing as a silent but always visible signifier of function and class in society and therefore on the stage. Especially for spectators still influenced by earlier sumptuary laws, nuances of dress were infinite and telling, offering the playwrights a visual shorthand of implication and the audience a means of placing the various characters. Anything for a Quiet Life is populated by figures from virtually every level of early seventeenth-century London society, something their dress would have emphasized visually. Lord Beaufort would have worn expensive fabrics and trimmings to reflect his noble status, and Lady Cressingham's rich attire would have indicated her materialism and aspirations. Down the ladder in class and in dress—if not in morality—come the other characters. The audience would have seen clothing suitable for a knight and his wife, a country gentleman, a sea captain, a citizen and wife, a lawyer and wife, a page, a steward, a surveyor, a barber, a sergeant, a yeoman, apprentices, and a bawd.

But clothing is more than just a way of conveying information about characters; it is also given a central role both structurally and thematically through the shop of Walter Camlet, the mercer. On the unlocalized stage for which the play was written, this shop would have been the only fictional place with a physical presence. Bolts of cloth and possibly a counter in front of a tiring-house opening would have created the mercer's shop where several important scenes are staged. Perhaps these props were removed when the action was located elsewhere, but perhaps not; and if not, the ever-present shop would have provided a suggestive backdrop for the other plots which, although not about the cloth trade specifically, keep the audience's attention on clothing as a commodity, a symbol of status, and a means of deception.

The play has only just begun when references to cloth or clothing become a device of more specific characterization. Beaufort condemns Sir Francis Cressingham's folly in marrying a much younger woman with the judgement that: 'one new gown of hers | When 'tis paid for will eat you out the keeping | Of a bountiful Christmas' (1.1.12-14). Soon after, Walter Camlet tells Cressingham that his wedding purchases of 'tissue, cloth of gold, velvets and silks' will cost the enormous sum of 'about fifteen hundred pounds' (1.1.97-8). This impression of Lady Cressingham as a wife whose clothing purchases will bankrupt her husband is confirmed when she complains to Camlet that his fabrics are inferior, and says she plans to buy imported material instead—which seems likely to have earned her the condemnation of spectators feeling the real consequences of this attitude.

References to clothing elsewhere convey in material terms a character's questionable morality. The high-living Young Franklin protests that the salary offered by Beaufort will not keep him in 'scarlet and gold lace' (1.1.195). The despicable Knavesbe tries to persuade his wife to become Beaufort's mistress by using the analogy of his beaver hat, which he brushes first the wrong and then the right way: 'Look, this is all—smooth and keeps fashion still' (2.1.106-7). Beaufort begins his lustful advance on Sib Knavesbe by admiring her 'habit' and removing her glove; Sib makes Selenger her sexual 'captive' with a skein of symbolically gold thread, and says she will become Beaufort's mistress because he will put her 'into brave clothes and rich jewels' (2.1.188). To escape Sib, Selenger says he must serve Beaufort, 'or else I forfeit my recognizance, | The cloth I wear of his' (3.1.19-20). And Margarita, the bawd, is stigmatized as a 'French-hood' (4.1.333, 342; 4.2.27). These and similar plot-related images contribute to the play's distinctive language of the mercer, emphasizing the focus on Walter Camlet, the innocent and sympathetic victim. Given the hardship endured by men like him in the world of the audience, he is perhaps also representative of those victimized by Cokayne's fabrications.

Midway through Anything for a Quiet Life, Camlet, George and Ralph enter in the shop, the two apprentices singing a song advertising the kinds of cloth they have to sell. In the scene, Camlet is deceived by George Cressingham (Sir Francis's son) and Young Franklin, disguised as tailor and knight—clothing dupes the man who sells the fabric which makes it. Further, in the initial exchange between Rachel Camlet and the apprentice George, the bawdy wordplay on 'yard' uses the language of Camlet's trade to connect the play's concerns with sex and clothing. 'Yard' as a measure of cloth and as slang for penis is also central to the suggestive physical comedy of 2.4, when Ralph and the Barber talk at cross-purposes about his 'ware', another word with the same double meaning. The gulling of Camlet and his apprentices by George Cressingham and Young Franklin revolves around a lengthy transaction in which Young Franklin as Sir Andrew buys an inexpensive piece of cloth in order to trick Camlet into allowing him to have a more costly fabric on credit. Besides being good theatre, the scene presents a merchant and his apprentices at work: the bargaining, with its specific references to cloth quality and prices, would have given the action an everyday reality recognizable by spectators who frequented such shops, bargained for such fabrics.

During this transaction the importance of George, Camlet's apprentice, becomes apparent. He, not his master, does most of the negotiating, and as Camlet's problems grow so does the role of George. In a play concerned with social class and relationships of duty, obedience, and service, the role given this apprentice has thematic implications. As a character, George combines convention and invention. He has his origins in the crafty slave of Latin New Comedy: by trickery he reunites the bickering Camlets and helps restore order. But he is also very much a seventeenth-century London apprentice, with particular obligations and duties to his master. In attempting to serve Camlet, George earns the enmity of Rachel Camlet and is sent away before his time of service is completed. Defying Rachel's command to stop singing his song of wares, George insists on the reciprocity of his relationship to Camlet: 'Shall I not follow my trade? I'm bound to't, and my master bound to bring me up in't' (2.2.27-8). After Rachel has left him Camlet uses the same language in pleading with his apprentice to get her back: 'I love her, George, and I am bound to do so' (3.2.197). As both an abstract and concrete symbol of right service, George is a standard to set against the uncertain and inverted relationships of the play.

The deceptions of Anything for a Quiet Life are not only of some characters by others but also of the audience. Indeed, the play has been criticized for what have been seen as arbitrary reversals in character and plot. But the idea of thwarted expectations is set out in the first lines, when Beaufort scolds Francis Cressingham: 'you have in this one act | Overthrown the reputation the world | Held of your wisdom' (1.1.2-4). And when Cressingham tries to defend his wife Beaufort says, 'Come, come, you read | What you would have her to be, not what she is' (1.1.48-9)—a warning critics might also heed about the play. Near the end of the action, that same wife tells both her stepson, George Cressingham, and the audience, 'I will not be | The woman to you hereafter you expected' (5.1.251-2), anticipating her surprise reversal—one of several making up a series of unexpected and overtly ironic resolutions. Much of the action in the intervening scenes depends on visual and verbal deceptions, or defeated expectations. And several of these are achieved by disguises—changes of clothing—visual business more apparent to an audience than a reader. In particular, the deception which can be seen as a paradigm of the others, the gulling of Camlet and Ralph: (a) depends on the disguises of both Young Franklin and George Cressingham; (b) involves the theft of cloth; and (c) is successful because the Barber has been led to expect one thing, Ralph another.

Clothing, disguise, and defeated expectations are interwoven through Anything for a Quiet Life, indicating that Middleton and Webster worked together closely to dramatize certain themes, a process which culminates in the play's several surprise resolutions. Act 5 begins with the entrance of Old Franklin 'in mourning' and Young Franklin 'disguised like an old serving man'. After having tricked his son's creditors into accepting half of what they are owed, Old Franklin removes his supposedly dead son's disguise, bringing him 'back to life' (5.2.368)—a 'rebirth' that stretches the conventions of tragicomedy so far as to parody them. Perhaps the audience's expectations were fulfilled rather than thwarted by the discovery that Young Franklin was not dead; we cannot know how effective his disguise was meant to be. But in the case of Selenger, nothing in the stage directions or dialogue indicates that an audience was intended to realize before the end that the boy actor dressed as a page and seduced by Sib Knavesbe is really a woman in the fiction of the play. When in the last scene Selenger enters 'as a woman' (5.2.215.1), the clothes say it all (indeed, the actor does not speak in this scene; the character is literally a 'quiet wife'). Merely by standing there Selenger would have represented the many deceptions of both characters and audience. Of these, the surprise reversal by Lady Cressingham is probably the most disconcerting. Clothing is again the means by which this change is first conveyed: 'Enter Lady Cressingham in civil habit, Saunder, and [the two] children, very gallant' (5.2.260.1-2). Where before she has been extravagantly dressed, now she is in subdued clothes; conversely, Cressingham's two children, who have been shabbily clothed, are now in costly attire. Finally, in a notably different use of clothing, George the apprentice is rewarded for his service to the Camlets with 'two new suits' (5.2.329).

Each of the unexpected and therefore memorable resolutions somehow dramatizes the idea expressed in the prologue that men will do anything for a quiet life. At the play's end Beaufort, having avoided the censure he deserves, complacently describes a comic conclusion: 'Discorded friends atoned, men and their wives | This hope proclaims your after quiet lives.' This might seem merely a neatly rhymed summary of each plot—quiet wife equals quiet life—but in fact the verbal symmetry disguises some decidedly forced and ironic returns to 'quiet'. Of all the male characters, only Camlet achieves a quiet life without compromising himself; the rest are only too willing to do 'anything', pay any moral price, for marital or financial peace. Sir Francis Cressingham is prepared to sign away his children's inheritance to keep his wife in expensive clothes and houses. Knavesbe eagerly makes a deal with Beaufort to be cuckolded for leases and income. George Cressingham allows his wife to be employed by Beaufort—temporarily 'selling her', her name suggests. Old Franklin easily pretends his son is dead to avoid paying his debts in full. And Young Franklin enlists a prostitute to ensure the success of the second of his three self-enriching disguises. Even George lies to reunite his master and mistress, thereby regaining his job—and earning those two new suits.

Near the beginning of the action, Camlet accurately sums up Francis Cressingham's folly and his own attitude: 'He's tied to a new law, and a new wife, | Yet to my old proverb: "anything for a quiet life"' (1.1.312-13). The phrase certainly has a proverbial ring to it, but this may be the first time it was written down—in a sense it is Camlet's. There is a ballad with the same title printed about 1621—perhaps in acknowledgement of the play—which relates the story of a browbeaten husband and concludes by advising men to avoid marriage for as long as possible. The ballad's stereotypes emphasize the individuality of the play's characters, of whom the women are particularly effective embodiments of deception and its consequences. Not surprisingly, given the complex and memorable female characters created by both Middleton and Webster in other plays, each of the women in Anything for a Quiet Life is a means of dramatizing the movement from deception to reversal and discovery that is the action of the play. Because Lady Cressingham deceives her husband, he sends his two younger children to live with the Camlets. This leads Rachel Camlet to deceive herself into the belief that they are her husband's illegitimate progeny. As a consequence, Rachel threatens to leave Camlet and destroy his business by spreading rumours that his cloth is inferior. Also as a result of Lady Cressingham's deception, George Cressingham is effectively disinherited, leading him to disguise himself as a tailor to gull Camlet, and his wife, Selenger, to disguise herself as a page and work for Beaufort. This lord's sexual advances prompt Sib Knavesbe to deceive him and the audience into thinking she will become his mistress; as well, Sib is fooled by Selenger's disguise into propositioning 'him'. Finally, because Camlet believes that Margarita has helped him—when actually she has duped him by confirming Young Franklin's Frenchman disguise—Camlet offers to reward her. When George attempts to unite his master and mistress by tricking Rachel into believing that Camlet is about to marry Margarita, Rachel becomes violently jealous. Significantly, Walter Camlet, the unconventionally honest mercer and husband, is eventually the victim of most of these deceptions, which make his wife—and therefore his life—unquiet.

Camlet's shop is the Holy Lamb in Lombard Street, a telling combination of the sacred and profane; or perhaps of the innocent and mercantile—or mercenary. Amid the ironic ambiguities of the play's conclusion, Camlet gets

Any thing for a quiet Life.

the quiet wife and life he seeks, and deserves—a happy conclusion crafted by George, Camlet’s paragon of an apprentice. In the rest of the action Old Franklin, George’s country acquaintance, helps restore peace and order—quiet—with implications that seem decidedly more ambiguous. The deus ex machina quality of Old Franklin’s sudden appearance at the play’s end highlights the unexpectedness of the reversals. Lady Cressingham’s surprising about-face and Knavesbe’s unconvincing reformation are clear indications that it is still a fallen world. Middleton’s conclusions are invariably ironic reminders that perfection can be achieved only at the price of incredulity. Because he never pretends otherwise, the endings of his plays are, or should be, disturbing; but if we think they are inexplicable, we are deceiving ourselves—pulling the wool over our own eyes.

SEE ALSO

Textual introduction and apparatus: Companion, 1160

Authorship and date: Companion, 422

Other Middleton–Webster works: Caesar’s Fall, 328; Magnificent, 219; The Duchess of Malfi, 1886

THOMAS MIDDLETON and JOHN WEBSTER

Anything for a Quiet Life

[for the King’s Men at The Blackfriars]

THE PERSONS OF THE PLAY

LORD BEAUFORT

Sir Francis CRESSINGHAM, an alchemist

OLD FRANKLIN, a country gentleman

YOUNG CRESSINGHAM, son to Sir Francis

YOUNG FRANKLIN, a sea captain, son to Old Franklin, and companion to Young Cressingham

Master Walter CAMLET, a citizen and mercer

KNAVESBE, a lawyer, and pander to his wife

SELENGER, page to Lord Beaufort

SAUNDER, steward to Sir Francis

GEORGE, an apprentice to Walter Camlet

RALPH, an apprentice to Walter Camlet

A SURVEYOR

Sweetball, a BARBER-SURGEON

Barber’s BOY

FLESHHOOK, a yeoman

COUNTERBUFF, a sergeant

TWO CHILDREN of Sir Francis, boarded out to Walter Camlet

LADY CRESSINGHAM, wife to Sir Francis

RACHEL, wife to Walter Camlet

SIB, wife to Knavesbe

MARGARITA, a French bawd

3 or 4 Citizens (CREDITORS)

Prologue

Howe’er th’intents and appetites of men
Are different as their faces how and when T’employ their actions, yet all without strife
Meet in this point: anything for a quiet life.

Nor is there one, I think, that’s hither come
For his delight, but would find peace at home
On any terms. The lawyer does not cease
To talk himself into a sweat with pain,
And so his fees buy quiet, ’tis his gain;

5

Prologue.4 anything...life proverbial, but this is perhaps the first printed occurrence of the phrase. There is also a ballad, ‘Any thing for a quiet life; Or the married man’s bondage to a cursed wife’ (c.1620); and see The Stonyhurst Pageants (c.1610–25): ‘For he that doth intend to live & lead a quiet life | Must ever more contented be to be ruled by his wife’. When, as in JOHNSON and commonly at the time, ‘any thing’ is two words, the bawdy implications are more apparent. The play’s title and action are also summed up in another proverb:

‘Better enjoy a little with quietness than possess much with trouble’. quiet the word and its variants occur twenty-six times in the play, emphasizing the desire for peace and order at three levels: familial, social, political
5 hither to the theatre

10 The poor man does endure the scorching sun,
And feels no weariness his day-labour done,
So his wife entertain him with a smile,
And thank his travail, though she slept the while.
This being in men of all conditions true
15 Does give our play a name, and if to you
It yield content and usual delight,
For our parts we shall sleep secure tonight.

I. I Incipit Actus Primus
Enter the Lord Beaufort, and Sir Francis Cressingham

BEAUFORT
Away! I am ashamed of your proceedings,
And seriously you have in this one act
Overthrown the reputation the world
Held of your wisdom.

CRESSINGHAM Why, sir?

BEAUFORT Can you not see
5 Your error? That having buried so good a wife
Not a month since, one that, to speak the truth,
Had all those excellencies—which our books
Have only feigned for will eat you out the keeping 10 Most exactly in her in practice, and to marry
A girl of fifteen, one bred up i'th' court,
That by all consonancy of reason is like
To cross your estate. Why, one new gown of hers
When 'tis paid for will eat you out the keeping 15 Of a bountiful Christmas. I am ashamed of you,
For you shall make too dear a proof of it,
I fear, that in the election of a wife,
As in a project of war, to err but once
Is to be undone for ever.

CRESSINGHAM Good my lord,
I do beseech you let your better judgement
Go along with your reprehension.

20 BEAUFORT So it does,
And can find naught to extenuate your fault

But your dotage. You are a man well sunk in years
And to graft such a young blossom into your stock
Is the next way to make every carnal eye
25 Bespeak your injury. Troth, I pity her too;
She was not made to wither and go out
By painted fires that yields her no more heat
Than to be lodged in some bleak banqueting house
I'th' dead of winter. And what follows then?
Your shame and the ruin of your children, and there's 30 The end of a rash bargain.

CRESSINGHAM With your pardon,
That she is young is true, but that discretion
Has gone beyond her years and overta'en
Those of maturer age does more improve
35 Her goodness. I confess she was bred at court,
But so retiredly that—as still the best
In some place is to be learnt there—so her life
Did rectify itself more by the court chapel
Than by the Office of the Revels. Best of all virtues
40 Are to be found at court, and where you meet
With writings contrary to this known truth,
They are framed by men that never were so happy
To be planted there to know it. For the difference Between her youth and mine, if you will read
45 A matron's sober staidness in her eye
And all the other grave demeanour fitting
The governess of a house, you'll then confess
There's no disparity between us.

Enter Master Walter Camlet

BEAUFORT Come, come, you read
What you would have her to be, not what she is.—
50 O, Master Walter Camlet, you are welcome.

CAMLET I thank your lordship.

BEAUFORT And what news stirring in Cheapside?

CAMLET Nothing new there, my lord, but the Standard.

BEAUFORT O, that's

13 travail labour, with a probable pun on 'travel'
17 our parts (a) ourselves; (b) our roles
1.1 attributed to Webster
0.2 Beaufort perhaps ironic; French: beau: suitor, fort: strong
3 reputation good opinion
7-8 books... complete wife perhaps a specific allusion to Thomas Overbury's poem, 'The Wife' (1613), possibly edited by Webster; but the plural suggests the numerous domestic guidebooks popular at the time, such as The English Housewife. Containing the inward and outward virtues which ought to be in a complete woman, by Gervaise Markham (1615)
8 feigned fictitiously invented
12 cross deplete
16 election choice

17-18 project... for ever proverbial
20 reprehension rebuke
21 extenuate lessen
23 stock (a) trunk of a tree; (b) line of descent
24 carnal worldly
25 Bespeak your injury talk about your cuckolding (?)
27 painted fires pictures of fires rather than real ones; likely a euphemism for Cressingham's impotence: lack of 'fire'
28 banqueting house a semi-permanent building in Jacobean gardens, frequently used by lovers as meeting places
32 discretion judgement
34 improve prove
38 rectify improve
38-9 court chapel... Office of the Revels she has spent more time at prayer than at masques

45 staidness stability
48.1 Walter Camlet suggests 'watered camlet', a fabric with a wavy surface; 'camlet' was a name originally applied to a beautiful and costly eastern fabric, afterwards to more common imitations and substitutes; 'Water' is a variant of 'Walter'. Citizen: a man admitted to the freedom of the city through membership in a guild, a tradesman as opposed to a gentleman; mercer: a cloth merchant
51 Cheapside the chief commercial street of London, from St Paul's to the Poultry. Merchants such as clothsellers were located in streets running off Cheapside.
52 Standard The Standard in Cornhill was a square pillar with a fountain, statues around the sides, and the image of Fortune at the top.

A monument your wives take great delight in.
 I do hear you are grown a mighty purchaser;
 55 I hope shortly to find you a continual resident upon
 The north aisle of the Exchange.
 CAMLET Where? With the Scotsmen?
 BEAUFORT No sir, with the aldermen.
 CAMLET Believe it, I am a poor commoner.
 CRESSINGHAM Come, you are warm, and blessed with a fair wife.
 CAMLET There's it; her going brave has the only virtue
 60 To improve my credit in the subsidy book.
 BEAUFORT But, I pray, how thrives your new plantation of silkworms, those I saw last summer at your garden?
 CAMLET They are removed, sir.
 BEAUFORT Whither?
 65 CAMLET This winter my wife has removed them home to a fair chamber where divers courtiers use to come and see them, and my wife carries them up. I think shortly, what with the store of visitants, they'll prove as chargeable to me as the morrow after Simon and 70 Jude—only excepting the taking down and setting up again of my glass windows.
 BEAUFORT That a man of your estate should be so grippleminded and repining at his wife's bounty!
 CRESSINGHAM There are no such ridiculous things i'th' 75 world as those love money better than themselves. For though they have understanding to know riches, and a mind to seek them, and a wit to find them, and policy to keep them, and long life to possess them, yet commonly they have withal such a false sight, such bleared eyes, 80 all their wealth when it lies before them does seem poverty. And such a one are you.

 CAMLET Good Sir Francis, you have had sore eyes too—
 you have been a gamester—but you have given it o'er, and to redeem the vice belonged to't now you entertain certain parcels of silenced ministers, which I think will 85 equally undo you. Yet should these waste you but lenitively, your devising new watermill for recovery of drowned land and certain dreams you have in alchemy to find the philosopher's stone will certainly draw you to th' bottom. I speak freely, sir, and would not have 90 you angry, for I love you.
 CRESSINGHAM I am deeply in your books for furnishing my late wedding. Have you brought a note of the particulars?
 CAMLET No sir, at more leisure. 95
 CRESSINGHAM What comes the sum to?
 CAMLET For tissue, cloth of gold, velvets and silks, about fifteen hundred pounds.
 CRESSINGHAM Your money is ready.
 CAMLET Sir, I thank you. 100
 CRESSINGHAM And how do my two young children, whom
 I have put to board with you?
 BEAUFORT Have you put forth two of your children already?
 CRESSINGHAM 'Twas my wife's discretion to have it so.
 BEAUFORT Come, 'tis the first principle in a mother-in-105 law's chop-logic to divide the family, to remove from forth your sight the object that her cunning knows

53 monument . . . delight in with bawdy implications, given the shape of the Standard
 54 purchaser a money maker
 56 Exchange the Royal Exchange built in London by Sir Thomas Gresham in 1566, where merchants assembled
Scotsmen probably a reference to the many who had followed King James from Scotland when he became king and had been given knightships or had otherwise benefited from association with the court
 57 aldermen the chief officers of a city ward. Camlet's social position and allegiances are being defined.
 58 warm financially comfortable
 59 brave expensively dressed virtue power
 60 subsidy book tax roll
 61–2 plantation of silkworms The implication is that she lured men to her. Cf. The Fair Maid of the Inn (BEPD 668), 2.2.43: 'In England you have several adamant, to draw in spurs and rapiers; one keeps silkworms in a gallery. . . .'
 66 use to come are in the habit of coming 67 carries escorts
 68 store large number
 69 chargeable costly. Silkworms should be a source of income for Camlet rather than a cost incurred by his wife.

69–70 Simon and Jude the feast of Saints Simon and Jude, October 28, in honour of the two apostles martyred while preaching in Persia. October 29 was Lord Mayor's Day, when the new Lord Mayor of London assumed office. The livery company to which the Mayor belonged organized the costly celebrations, meeting expenses by levying a tax on its members.
 70–1 excepting . . . glass windows Perhaps this is a general comment on the expense of removing and installing the windows in the upper level(s) of Camlet's shop building; but it may refer to the fact that people came to his house to watch the Lord Mayor's Day parade from the upper windows, necessitating their removal and reinstallation.
 72–3 gripple-minded niggardly
 73 repining grumbling bounty liberality
 77 policy prudence
 79 false distorted
bleared eyes poor perception
 82 sore eyes from lack of sleep; see 2.1.104
 83 gamester a womanizer, or a gambler, probably the dominant meaning here
 84 redeem atone for 85 parcels a set or pack; said contemptuously

silenced ministers nonconformists forbidden to preach
 86 waste destroy
 87 lenitively gently
watermill a reference to a scheme to use watermills to drain the fens, a costly, impossible project
 89 philosopher's stone a supposed solid substance or preparation believed by alchemists to possess the property of changing other metals into gold or silver, the discovery of which was the aim of alchemy
 92 deeply . . . books indebted
 97 tissue a rich cloth, often interwoven with gold or silver, perhaps suggesting that his wife was dressing above his social class
 98 fifteen hundred pounds Conversion into today's dollars is difficult, but a pound in the early 1600s would roughly equal between $100 and $150 today; Cressingham has spent an extravagant amount on his wedding.
 102 put to board boarded out
 104 discretion choice
 105–6 mother-in-law's step-mother's 106 chop-logic sophistical or contentious argument

- would dull her insinuation. Had you been a kind father, it would have been your practice every day to have preached to these two young ones carefully your late wife's funeral sermon. 'Las, poor souls, are they turned so soon a-grazing?
- Enter Young Cressingham and Young Franklin*
- CAMLET My lord, they are placed where they shall be respected as mine own.
- BEAUFORT I make no question of it, good Master Camlet. See here your eldest son, George Cressingham.
- CRESSINGHAM You have displeased and grieved your mother-in-law, And till you have made submission and procured Her pardon, I'll not know you for my son.
- YOUNG CRESSINGHAM I have wrought her no offence, sir. The difference Grew about certain jewels which my mother— By your consent—lying upon her deathbed, Bequeathed to her three children. These I demanded, And being denied these, thought this sin of hers
- 125 To violate so gentle a request
Of her predecessor was an ill foregoing
Of a mother-in-law's harsh nature.
- CRESSINGHAM Sir, understand
My will moved in her denial. You have jewels
To pawn—or sell them! Sirrah, I will have you 130 As obedient to this woman as to myself.
Till then you are none of mine.
- CAMLET O, Master George,
Be ruled, do anything for a quiet life;
Your father's peace of life moves in it too.
I have a wife, when she is in the sullens,
135 Like a cook's dog that you see turn a wheel,
She will be sure to go and hide herself
Out of the way dinner and supper. And in These fits Bow bell is a still organ to her.
- When we were married first, I well remember,
Her railing did appear but a vision
140 Till certain scratches on my hand and face
Assured me it was substantial. She's a creature
Uses to waylay my faults, and more desires
To find them out than to have them amended.
She has a book, which I may truly nominate 145 Her Black Book, for she remembers in it in Short items all my misdemeanours, as:
Item, such a day I was got foxed with foolish metheglin in the company of certain Welsh chapmen. Item, such a day being at the Artillery Garden one of my neighbours 150 in courtesy to salute me with his musket set afire my fustian-and-apes breeches. Such a day I lost fifty pound in hugger-mugger at dice at the quest-house. Item, I lent money to a sea captain, on his bare 'Confound him, he would pay me again the next morning', and 155 suchlike.
For which she railed upon me when I should sleep,
And that's, you know, intolerable, for indeed
'Twill tame an elephant.
- YOUNG CRESSINGHAM 'Tis a shrewd vexation,
But your discretion, sir, does bear it out 160 With a month's sufferance.
- CAMLET Yes, and I would wish you
To follow mine example.
- YOUNG FRANKLIN [aside to Young Cressingham]
Here's small comfort,
George, from your father.—Here's a lord whom I
Have long depended upon for employment; I will see If my suit will thrive better. [To Beaufort] Please your 165 lordship,
You know I am a younger brother, and my fate
Throwing me upon the late ill-starred voyage
To Guiana, failing of our golden hopes,
I and my ship addressed ourselves to serve
The Duke of Florence.

108 insinuation stealing into the favour or affections by subtle means

112 a-grazing The analogy to animals suggests the seriousness of what Cressingham has done in farming out his young children.

112.1 Franklin A franklin was a landowner of free but not noble birth; the term also implied a liberal host.

116 George Cressingham George is the name of two characters, one the son of a knight, the other an apprentice; the duplication would not be as apparent in performance as on the page, but it is probably intentional, perhaps suggesting underlying similarities.

118 made submission yielded

129 Sirrah a term of reprimand, assumption of authority

138 Bow bell the bells of Bow Church (St Mary-le-Bow) in Cheapside, so called from the 'bows' or arches that supported its steeple still silent

140 railing abusive language

143 Uses to waylay has the habit of lying in wait for 146 Black Book (fig.) a book recording the names and crimes of those liable to censure or punishment; here a list of Camlet's follies, which suggest that he is a natural victim remembers records

148 Item an entry in an account or register foxed drunk

metheglin a liquor made by fermenting honey and water

149 chapmen merchants

150 Artillery Garden the soldiers' practising ground, outside Bishopsgate, London

151 salute greet musket a shotgun

152 fustian-and-apes cotton velvet; a corruption of 'fustian of Naples'

153 in hugger-mugger secretly quest-house a house where inquests in a ward or parish were held; also, apparently, a place for illegal gambling

159 shrewd severe

160 discretion prudence

bear it out endure

161 sufferance indulgence

162 small comfort literally, no money

167 late ill-starred voyage In June 1617, Sir Walter Raleigh departed on his second trip to Guiana, which was plagued by bad weather, disease, and attempted mutiny; when Raleigh returned to England in June 1618 without the gold he had agreed to deliver in return for freedom from imprisonment in the Tower, he was executed.

168 Guiana now part of north-eastern Venezuela along the Orinoco River failing of with the failure of

Act I Scene I

Any thing for a quiet Life.

170 BEAUFORT Yes, I understood so.
 YOUNG FRANKLIN Who gave me both encouragement and means
 To do him some small service 'gainst the Turk.
 Being settled there both in his pay and trust,
 Your lordship, minding to rig forth a ship
 175 To trade for the East Indies, sent for me.
 And what your promise was, if I would leave
 So great a fortune to become your servant,
 Your letters yet can witness.
 BEAUFORT Yes, what follows?
 YOUNG FRANKLIN That for aught I perceive, your former purpose
 180 Is quite forgotten. I have stayed here two months
 And find your intended voyage but a dream,
 And the ship you talk of as imaginary
 As that the astronomers point at in the clouds.
 I have spent two thousand ducats since my arrival.
 185 Men that have command, my lord, at sea, cannot live
 Ashore without money.
 BEAUFORT Know, sir, a late purchase
 Which cost me a great sum has diverted me
 From my former purpose. Besides, suits in law
 Do every term so trouble me by land
 190 I have forgot going by water. If you please
 To rank yourself among my followers
 You shall be welcome, and I'll make your means Better than any gentleman's I keep.
 YOUNG FRANKLIN Some twenty mark a year! Will that maintain 195 Scarlet and gold lace, play at th'ordinary,
 And bevers at the tavern?
 BEAUFORT I had thought
 To prefer you to have been captain of a ship
 That's bound for the Red Sea.
 YOUNG FRANKLIN What hinders it?

BEAUFORT Why, certainly the merchants are possessed
 You have been a pirate.
 YOUNG FRANKLIN Say I were one still?
 200 If I were past the line once, why, methinks
 I should do them better service.
Enter Knavesbe
 BEAUFORT Pray forbear;
 Here's a gentleman whose business must Engross me wholly.
 [Beaufort and Knavesbe talk apart]
 YOUNG CRESSINGHAM [to Young Franklin]
 What's he? Dost thou know him?
 YOUNG FRANKLIN A pox upon him! A very knave and rascal
 205 That goes a-hunting with the penal statutes,
 And good for naught but to persuade their lords
 To rack their rents and give o'er housekeeping.
 Such caterpillars may hang at their lords' ears
 When better men are neglected.
 YOUNG CRESSINGHAM What's his name?
 210 YOUNG FRANKLIN Knavesbe.
 YOUNG CRESSINGHAM Knavesbe!
 YOUNG FRANKLIN One that deals in a tenth share
 About projections. He and his partners, when
 They have got a suit once past the seal, will so Wrangle about partition, and sometimes
 They fall to th'ears about it, like your fencers
 215 That cudgel one another by patent. You shall see him
 So terribly bedashed in a Michaelmas term
 Coming from Westminster that you would swear
 He were lighted from a horse race. Hang him, hang him!
 He's a scurvy informer, has more cozenage
 220

- | | | |
|---|---|---|
| 172 the Turk the Turkish forces | 200 pirate This characterizes Young Franklin as a threat to trade. In October 1620 a fleet had been sent out to scatter pirates preying on English ships; it was only partly successful. | authorities |
| 174 rig forth ready [a ship] for the sea | 201 line equator | 214 partition division into shares |
| 175 East Indies probably a specific reference to the East India Company, a trading company formed in 1600 | 204 Engross occupy | 215 fall to th'ears said of animals fighting; hence of persons, to disagree violently |
| 182-3 ship... clouds the constellation Argo | 205 pox upon him an exclamation of irritation | 215-16 fencers... patent The lawyers put on a false show to distract clients from their collusion, just as fencers fought fixed bouts with harmless weapons. |
| 184 two thousand ducats A ducat was a gold coin worth about 9s.; the context indicates a considerable amount of money. | knave an unprincipled man; a base and crafty rogue | 217 bedashed splattered with mud. In Trick 1.4.42-45, Dampit, who bears a considerable resemblance to Knavesbe, describes himself in similar terms. |
| 189 term one of the three or four periods in the year when law courts were in session | 206 a-hunting... penal statutes uses the law to entrap | Michaelmas term a High Court term beginning soon after Michaelmas (29 September) |
| 194 twenty mark A mark was an amount, not a coin; it was two-thirds of a pound, 13s. 4d. | 208 rack... rents charge an extortionate rent for land | 218 Westminster Westminster Hall, site of the law courts |
| 195 Scarlet and gold lace expensive clothing | housekeeping hospitality | 220 scurvy contemptible cozenage fraud |
| 196 bevers drinks or snacks | 209 caterpillars (fig.) extortioners | |
| 199 possessed informed | hang at their lords' ears have influence | |
| | 212 projections business deals | |
| | 213 past the seal approved by the | |

- In him than is in five travelling lotteries.
 To feed a kite with the carrion of this knave
 When he's dead, and reclaim her—O, she would prove
 An excellent hawk for talon. H'as a fair creature
 To his wife too, and a witty rogue it is,
 And some men think this knave will wink at small faults.
 But, honest George, what shall become of us now?
 YOUNG CRESSINGHAM
 'Faith I am resolved to set up my rest
 For the Low Countries.
 YOUNG FRANKLIN To serve there?
 YOUNG CRESSINGHAM Yes, certain.
 YOUNG FRANKLIN There's thin commons;
 Besides, they have added one day more to th' week
 Than was in the creation. Art thou valiant,
 Art thou valiant, George?
 YOUNG CRESSINGHAM
 I may be, an I be put to't.
 YOUNG FRANKLIN O, never fear that.
 Thou canst not live two hours after thy landing
 Without a quarrel. Thou must resolve to fight,
 Or like a summer thou'lt be bastinadoed
 At every town's end. You shall have gallants there
 As ragged as the fall o'th' leaf, that live
 In Holland where the finest linen's made
 And yet wear ne'er a shirt. These will not only Quarrel with a newcomer when they are drunk,
 But they will quarrel with any man has means
 To be drunk after them. Follow my counsel, George;
 Thou shalt not go o'er, we'll live here i'th' city.
 YOUNG CRESSINGHAM
 But how?
 YOUNG FRANKLIN
 How? Why as other gallants do
 That feed high and play copiously yet brag
- They have but nine pound a year to live on. These Have wit to turn rich fools and gulls into quarter-days
 That bring them in certain payment. I have a project
 Reflects upon yon mercer. Master Camlet
 Shall put us into money.
 YOUNG CRESSINGHAM What is't?
 YOUNG FRANKLIN Nay,
 I will not stale it aforehand; 'tis a new one.
 Nor cheating amongst gallants may seem strange,
 Why, a reaching wit goes current on th'Exchange.
Exeunt Young Cressingham and Young Franklin
 KNAVESBE [to Beaufort] O, my lord, I remember you and I were students together at Cambridge, but believe me you went far beyond me.
 BEAUFORT When I studied there I had so fantastical a brain that like a fieldfare, frighted in winter by a birding-piece,
 I could settle nowhere: here and there a little of every several art, and away.
 KNAVESBE Now my wit, though it were more dull, yet I went slowly on, and, as divers others, when I could not prove an excellent scholar, by a plodding patience I attained to be a petty lawyer. And I thank my dullness for't—you may stamp in lead any figure, but in oil or quicksilver nothing can be imprinted, for they keep no certain station.
 BEAUFORT O, you tax me well of irresolution. But say, worthy friend, how thrives my weighty suit which I have trusted to your friendly bosom? Is there any hope to make me happy?
 KNAVESBE 'Tis yet questionable, for I have not broke the ice to her. An hour hence come to my house, and if it lie in man, be sure, as the law phrase says, I will create you Lord Paramount of your wishes.
 BEAUFORT O, my best friend, and one that takes the hardest course i'th' world to make himself so. [Exit Knavesbe]
 [To Cressingham] Sir, now I'll take my leave.
 CRESSINGHAM Nay, good my lord, my wife is coming down.

221 travelling lotteries There were 'standing' lotteries in London and other large towns from the mid-sixteenth century, then from 1618-21 there were the Virginia Running Lotteries, 'running' or 'ring' lotteries which travelled from one locality to another, organized for raising money in the provinces to support new-world settlement; the lotteries in general, and these in particular, were unsuccessful and perceived as scams.
 222 kite a bird of prey carrion carcass
 223 reclaim tame
 224 talon a bird's hind claw 226 will wink at small faults is willing to be cuckolded, probably with a double entendre; 'fault': female genitals 228 rest a metaphor from the game of primero, meaning to stand upon the cards you have in your hand in hopes they may prove better than your adversary's; to take a chance 229 Low Countries The Netherlands,

 Belgium and Holland, where England had retained a military base after settling the war with Spain in 1604
 230 thin commons Soldiers serving in the Low Countries were poorly paid.
 231 added . . . week a reference to the unpunctuality of soldiers' pay. Irregular payments allowed the captain to keep back more of his men's pay.
 232 valiant brave
 234 an if
 237 summer one who summoned people to appear in court
bastinadoed beaten with a stick
 238 town's end the outskirts of town
 245 city both greater London and the business district which included Cheapside
 247 feed high eat to excess 248 nine pound a year not enough to live in style

 249 quarter-days the due dates of rents and other quarterly charges; hence, sources of income
 251 Reflects casts blame upon 255 reaching far-reaching; perhaps suggesting 'overreaching'
goes current is common 259 fantastical impulsive
 260 fieldfare a species of thrush birding-piece a weapon for shooting birds
 262 art a university subject
 266 petty lawyer one who handles minor cases dullness mental slowness
 268 quicksilver mercury
 269 station place
 271 weighty suit important request
 277 Lord Paramount one who has supreme power or jurisdiction, likely with the bawdy implication of being 'on top'

Enter Lady Cressingham and Saunder

BEAUFORT [to Cressingham] Pray, pardon me, I have business so importunes me o'th' sudden I cannot stay. Deliver mine excuse, and in your ear this: let not a fair woman make you forget your children. [Exit]

285 LADY CRESSINGHAM [to Camlet] What? Are you taking leave too?

CAMLET Yes, good madam.

LADY CRESSINGHAM The rich stuff which my husband bought of you, the works of them are too common. I have got a Dutch painter to draw patterns which I'll have sent to your factors, as in Italy, at Florence and Ragusa where these stuffs are woven, to have pieces made for mine own wearing of a new invention.

290 CAMLET You may, lady, but 'twill be somewhat chargeable.

LADY CRESSINGHAM Chargeable! What of that? If I live another year I'll have my agents shall lie for me at Paris and at Venice and at Valladolid in Spain for intelligence of all new fashions.

300 CRESSINGHAM Do sweetest, thou deservest to be exquisite in all things.

CAMLET [to Lady Cressingham] The two children to which you are mother-in-law would be repaired too; 'tis time they had new clothing.

305 LADY CRESSINGHAM I pray sir, do not trouble me with them. They have a father indulgent and careful of them.

CRESSINGHAM [to Camlet] I am sorry you made the motion to her.

CAMLET [to Cressingham] I have done. [Aside] He has run himself into a pretty dotage. [To Lady Cressingham] Madam, with your leave. [Aside] He's tied to a new law, and a new wife, Yet to my old proverb: 'anything for a quiet life'. Exit

LADY CRESSINGHAM Good friend, I have a suit to you.

315 CRESSINGHAM Dearest self, you most powerfully sway me.

LADY CRESSINGHAM That you would give o'er this fruitless, if I may not say this idle, study of alchemy. Why, half your house looks like a glass-house.

SAUNDER And the smoke you make is a worse enemy to good housekeeping than tobacco.

320 LADY CRESSINGHAM Should one of your glasses break it might bring you to a dead palsy.

SAUNDER My Lord, your quicksilver has made all your more solid gold and silver fly in fume.

CRESSINGHAM [to Lady Cressingham] I'll be ruled by you in anything. 325

LADY CRESSINGHAM Go Saunder, break all the glasses.

SAUNDER I fly to't. Exit

LADY CRESSINGHAM Why, noble friend, would you find the true philosopher's stone indeed, my good housewifery should do it. You understand I was bred up with a great courtly lady. Do not think all women mind gay clothes and riot; there are some widows living have improved both their own fortunes and their children's. Would you take my counsel, I'd advise you to sell your land. 330

CRESSINGHAM My land!

LADY CRESSINGHAM Yes, and the manor house upon't, 'tis rotten. O, the new fashioned buildings brought from the Hague—'tis stately! I have intelligence of a purchase, an the title sound, will, for half the money you may sell yours for, bring you in more rent than yours now yields you. 335

CRESSINGHAM If it be so good a pennyworth, I need not sell my land to purchase it. I'll procure money to do it.

LADY CRESSINGHAM Where sir? 340

CRESSINGHAM Why, I'll take it up at interest.

LADY CRESSINGHAM Never did any man thrive that purchased with use-money.

CRESSINGHAM How come you to know these thrifty principles? 345

LADY CRESSINGHAM How? Why, my father was a lawyer and died in the commission, and may not I by a natural instinct have a reaching that way? There are on mine own knowledge some divines' daughters infinitely affected with reading controversies, and that, some think, has been a means to bring so many suits into the spiritual court. Pray, be advised, sell your land and purchase more. I knew a pedlar by being merchant this way is become lord of many manors. We should look to lengthen our estates as we do our lives. 350

Enter Saunder

And though I am young, yet I am confident Your able constitution of body When you are past fourscore shall keep you fresh Till I arrive at the neglected year 355

289 stuff a woven woollen material with no nap

290 works weaving; ornamentation. Lady Cressingham's desire for imported fabric would have made her unpopular with many in the audience.

291 Dutch painter The Dutch had a reputation for fine craftsmanship; these references to foreigners again indicate the threat that Lady Cressingham poses to the domestic cloth trade.

292 factors agents

293 Ragusa an ancient seaport and trade centre on the east coast of the Adriatic where silk and woollen goods were manufactured

294 new invention the latest fashion

295 chargeable costly

297 lie...at i.e. visit these places to work

298 Valladolid in Spain; a textile manufacturing centre

307 motion suggestion

312 new law new way of doing things (?)

318 glass-house a glass-making works. There was one in Blackfriars, near the theatre.

322 dead palsy paralysis

324 fume smoke

332 mind desire

338-9 the Hague The city was said to be the most attractive and best built in the Netherlands.

343 pennyworth bargain

346 take...interest borrow money at interest

348 use-money money borrowed at interest

352 in the commission as a justice of the peace

353 reaching ability

354 divines clergymen

355 controversies religious disputes

357 spiritual court the ecclesiastical courts, which had jurisdiction in matrimonial cases

364 neglected unthought of 365 That I am past childbearing. And yet even then Quick'ning our faint heats in a soft embrace,

 And kindling divine flames in fervent prayers,
 We may both go out together, and one tomb
 Quit our executors the rites of two.

CRESSINGHAM
 370 O, you are so wise and so good in everything.
 I move by your direction.

SAUNDER [aside] She has caught him!

Finis Actus Primus

⊗

2.1 Incipit Actus Secundus
A table [and chair]. Enter Knavesbe and his wife
Sib Knavesbe

KNAVESBE
 Have you drunk the eggs and muscadine I sent you?

SIB KNAVESBE
 No, they are too fulsome.

KNAVESBE Away, you're a fool.
 [Aside] How shall I begin to break the matter to her?
 —I do long, wife.

SIB KNAVESBE Long, sir?

KNAVESBE Long infinitely.
 Sit down.
 [She sits]

5 There is a penitential motion in me
 Which, if thou wilt but second, I shall be
 One of the happiest men in Europe.

SIB KNAVESBE What might that be?

KNAVESBE
 I had last night one of the strangest dreams.
 Methought I was thy confessor, thou mine,
 10 And we revealed between us privately
 How often we had wronged each other's bed
 Since we were married.

SIB KNAVESBE Came you drunk to bed?
 There was a dream with a witness.

KNAVESBE No, no witness.
 I dreamt nobody heard it but we two.

15 This dream, wife, do I long to put in act;

Let us confess each other, and I vow
 Whatever thou hast done with that sweet corpse
 In the way of natural frailty, I protest
 Most freely I will pardon.

SIB KNAVESBE Go sleep again.
 Was there ever such a motion?

KNAVESBE Nay, sweet woman,
 An thou wilt not have me run mad with my desire
 Be persuaded to't.

SIB KNAVESBE Well, be it your pleasure.

KNAVESBE
 But to answer truly.

SIB KNAVESBE O, most sincerely.

KNAVESBE Begin then, examine me first.

SIB KNAVESBE Why, I know not what to ask you.

25 KNAVESBE Let me see. Your father was a captain—demand of me how many dead pays I am to answer for in the musterbook of wedlock by the martial fault of borrowing from my neighbours.

SIB KNAVESBE Troth, I can ask no such foolish questions.

30 KNAVESBE Why then, open confession I hope, dear wife, will merit freer pardon. I sinned twice with my laundress, and last circuit there was at Banbury a she-chamberlain that had a spice of purity, but at last I prevailed over her.

35 SIB KNAVESBE O, you are an ungracious husband.

KNAVESBE I have made a vow never to ride abroad but in thy company. O, a little drink makes me clamber like a monkey. Now, sweet wife, you have been an out-lier too—which is best feed, in the forest or in the purlieus?

40 SIB KNAVESBE A foolish mind of you i' this.

KNAVESBE Nay, sweet love, confess freely; I have given you the example.

SIB KNAVESBE Why, you know I went last year to Sturbridge Fair.

45 KNAVESBE Yes.

SIB KNAVESBE And being in Cambridge, a handsome scholar, one of Emmanuel College, fell in love with me.

KNAVESBE [trying to embrace her] O, you sweet-breathed monkey.

50 SIB KNAVESBE [pushing him away] Go hang—you are so boisterous.

KNAVESBE But did this scholar show thee his chamber?

371 caught deceived
 2.1 attributed to Webster
 1 eggs and muscadine an aphrodisiac;
 muscadine is muscatel wine
 2 fulsome cloying
 5 penitential motion impulse to confess
 17 corpse living body
 18 natural frailty human predisposition to sin
 27 dead pays salary continued in the name of a soldier or sailor actually dead or discharged and appropriated by the officer
 28 musterbook book in which military forces are registered martial characteristic of soldiers; a continuation of the military imagery 33 circuit the journey of judges and lawyers like Knavesbe from town to town to hold court

Banbury a puritan market town in Oxfordshire
 33-4 she-chamberlain chambermaid at an inn
 34 spice trace
 37 ride (a) travel; (b) have sexual intercourse
 38-9 clamber...monkey Monkeys typified lechery; possibly this also describes Knavesbe's actions here.
 39 out-lier one who sleeps away from home

40 feed (a) food; (b) sexual intercourse purlieus (a) land on the border of a forest; (b) 'to hunt, follow one's game in the purlieus': to seek illicit sex
 44-5 Sturbridge Fair just north of Cambridge, the annual fair ran from 19
 September for two weeks
 48 Emmanuel College in Cambridge University, which was decidedly puritan at the time
 50 monkey In Sidney's Arcadia the monkey's sweet breath is said to be one of the gifts from beasts to women.
 52 boisterous exuberant; perhaps describing Knavesbe's actions

SIB KNAVESBE Yes.
 55 KNAVESBE And didst thou like him?
 SIB KNAVESBE Like him! O, he had the most enticingest straw-coloured beard, a woman with black eyes would have loved him like jet. He was the finest man with a formal wit, and he had a fine dog that sure was whelped 60 i'th' college, for he understood Latin.
 KNAVESBE Pue wawe! This is nothing till I know what he did in's chamber.
 SIB KNAVESBE He burnt wormwood in't to kill the fleas i'th' rushes.
 65 KNAVESBE But what did he to thee there?
 SIB KNAVESBE Some five-and-twenty years hence I may chance tell you. Fie upon you! What tricks, what crotchets are these? Have you placed anybody behind the arras to hear my confession? I heard one in England 70 got a divorce from's wife by such a trick. Were I disposed now I would make you as mad. You shall see me play
 the changeling.
 KNAVESBE No, no, wife; you shall see me play the changeling. Hadst thou confessed, this other suit I'll 75 now prefer to thee would have been dispatched in a trice.
 SIB KNAVESBE And what's that, sir?
 KNAVESBE Thou wilt wonder at it four-and-twenty years longer than nine days.
 80 SIB KNAVESBE I would very fain hear it.
 KNAVESBE There is a lord o'th' court, upon my credit a most dear, honourable friend of mine, that must lie with thee. Do you laugh? 'Tis not come to that you'll laugh when you know who 'tis.
 85 SIB KNAVESBE Are you stark mad?
 KNAVESBE
 On my religion, I have passed my word for't—
 'Tis the Lord Beaufort. Thou art made happy for ever—
 The generous and bountiful Lord Beaufort.
 You being both so excellent, 'twere pity
 90 If such rare pieces should not be conferred
 And sampled together.

SIB KNAVESBE Do you mean seriously?
 KNAVESBE
 As I hope for preferment.
 SIB KNAVESBE And can you loose me thus?
 KNAVESBE Loose you! I shall love you the better. Why, what's the viewing any wardrobe or jewel-house
 95 without a companion to confer their likings? Yet now
 I view thee well methinks thou art a rare monopoly, and great pity one man should enjoy thee.
 SIB KNAVESBE This is pretty!
 KNAVESBE Let's divorce ourselves so long, or think I am gone to th'Indies, or lie with him when I am asleep—100 for some familists of Amsterdam will tell you it may be done with a safe conscience. Come, you wanton, what hurt can this do to you? I protest, nothing so much as to keep company with an old woman has sore eyes—105 no more wrong than I do my beaver when I try it thus.
 [He brushes the fur of his hat the wrong way, then smooths it] Look, this is all—smooth, and keeps fashion still.
 SIB KNAVESBE
 You are one of the basest fellows.
 KNAVESBE I looked for chiding.
 I do make this a kind of fortitude
 The Romans never dreamt of—an 'twere known,
 110 I should be spoke and writ of when I am rotten,
 For 'tis beyond example.
 SIB KNAVESBE But, I pray, resolve me;
 Suppose this done, could you ever love me after?
 KNAVESBE
 I protest I never thought so well of thee
 Till I knew he took a fancy to thee—like one 115 That has variety of choice meat before him,
 Yet has no stomach to't until he hear
 Another praise.
Knock within
 Hark, my lord is coming.
 SIB KNAVESBE [aside] Possible?
 KNAVESBE And my preferment comes along with him. Be 120 wise, mind your good, and to confute all reason in the world which thou canst urge against it, when 'tis done

- | | | |
|---|---|--|
| 59 formal wit theoretical knowledge | former but the audience might hear the latter as well. | Holland and gained many followers in England during this period. The sect's theology scorned scripture and learning in favour of 'our most holy Service of Love', a tenet easily twisted into accusations of 'free love' by opponents of the sect. |
| 61 Pue wawe a version of phew or poo; an expression of impatience, or disdain; particular to Webster | 78-9 wonder... days a variant of the proverb, 'a wonder lasts but nine days' | 104 old woman... sore eyes The analogy is between an old woman who cannot sleep and Beaufort, but the specific meaning is unclear. |
| 63 wormwood a bitter tasting plant, the leaves and tops of which were used to protect clothes and bedding from moths and fleas | 80 fain eagerly | 105 beaver a beaver-skin hat |
| 64 rushes Green rushes were strewn on floors. | 90 conferred brought together | 110 Romans proverbially stoic |
| 68 crotchets whimsical fancies, perverse conceits | 91 sampled matched | 112 resolve answer |
| 69 arras a hanging screen of tapestry placed around the walls of a room (and on the tiring-house wall of the stage) | 92 preferment advancement in status | 117 stomach appetite |
| 74 changeling (a) a changeable person; (b) a half-wit, imbecile. Knavesbe means the | loose set free, release. 'Loose' and 'lose' were not differentiated by spelling and Knavesbe's response suggests that both verbs are active here; i.e. in losing her, he would lose her. | 120 preferment advancement |
| | 95 confer compare | 121 confute disprove |
| | 99 divorce separate | |
| | 101 familists of Amsterdam the Family of Love, a puritan sect which originated in | |

we will be married again wife, which some say is the only supersedeas about Limehouse to remove cuckoldry.
Enter Beaufort
 125 BEAUFORT Come, are you ready to attend me to the court?
 KNAVESBE Yes, my lord.
 BEAUFORT Is this fair one your wife?
 KNAVESBE At your lordship's service. I will look up some writings and return presently. Exit
 130 SIB KNAVESBE [aside] To see an the base fellow do not leave's alone too!
 BEAUFORT 'Tis an excellent habit this. Where were you born, sweet?
 SIB KNAVESBE I am a Suffolk woman, my lord.
 135 BEAUFORT Believe it, every country you breathe on is the sweeter for you. Let me see your hand. [He removes her glove] The case is loath to part with the jewel. Fairest one, I have skill in palmistry. [He studies her palm]
 SIB KNAVESBE Good my lord, what do you find there?
 140 BEAUFORT In good earnest I do find written here all my good fortune lies in your hand.
 SIB KNAVESBE You'll keep a very bad house then, you may see by the smallness of the table.
 BEAUFORT Who is your sweetheart?
 145 SIB KNAVESBE Sweetheart!
 BEAUFORT Yes, come, I must sift you to know it.
 SIB KNAVESBE I am a sieve too coarse for your lordship's manchet.
 BEAUFORT Nay, pray you tell me, for I see your husband is an unhandsome fellow.
 150 SIB KNAVESBE O, my lord, I took him by weight not fashion. Goldsmith's wives taught me that way of bargain, and some ladies swerve not to follow the example.
 BEAUFORT But will you not tell me who is your private friend?
 155 SIB KNAVESBE Yes, an you'll tell me who is yours.
 BEAUFORT Shall I show you her?
 SIB KNAVESBE Yes, when will you?
 BEAUFORT Instantly. [He hands her a mirror] Look you—160 there you may see her.
 SIB KNAVESBE I'll break the glass. 'Tis now worth nothing.
 BEAUFORT Why?
 SIB KNAVESBE You have made it a flattering one.

BEAUFORT I have a summer-house for you, a fine place to flatter solitariness. Will you come and lie there? 165
 SIB KNAVESBE No, my lord.
 BEAUFORT Your husband has promised me. Will you not?
 SIB KNAVESBE I must wink, I tell you, or say nothing.
 BEAUFORT So, I'll kiss you and wink too. Midnight is cupid's holiday. 170
Enter Knavesbe
 KNAVESBE [aside] By this time 'tis concluded.—[To Beaufort] Will you go my lord?
 BEAUFORT [to Sib Knavesbe] I leave with you my best wishes till I see you.
 KNAVESBE [aside to Beaufort] This now—if I may borrow our lawyers' phrase—is my wife's imparlance; at her next appearance she must answer your declaration. 175
BEAUFORT
 You follow it well, sir. Exeunt Beaufort and Knavesbe
 SIB KNAVESBE Did I not know my husband Of so base, contemptible nature I should think 'Twere but a trick to try me. But it seems 180 They are both in wicked earnest, and methinks Upon the sudden I have a great mind to loathe This scurvy unhandsome way my lord has ta'en To compass me. Why, 'tis for all the world As if he should come to steal some apricots 185 My husband kept for's own tooth, and climb up Upon his head and shoulders. I'll go to him; He will put me into brave clothes and rich jewels. 'Twere a very ill part in me not to go; His mercer and his goldsmith else might curse me. 190 And what I'll do there, o' my troth, yet I know not. Women though puzzled with these subtle deeds, May, as i'th' spring, pick physic out of weeds. Exit

Enter (a shop being discovered) Walter Camlet; two apprentices, George and Ralph 2.2
 GEORGE What is't you lack, you lack, you lack? 5
 Stuffs for the belly or the back?
 Silk-grograms, satins, velvet fine,
 The rosy-coloured carnadine,
 Your nutmeg hue, or gingerline,

124 supersedeas a writ commanding the stay of legal proceedings which ought otherwise to have proceeded, or suspending the power of an officer; so called from the occurrence of the word in the writ; (fig.) a prevention or remedy
 Limehouse a district on the north side of the Thames, between Wapping and Poplar, opposite Cuckold's Haven; the locale of prostitutes
 132 habit outfit
 134 Suffolk a largely puritan county on the east coast of England; a cloth-making centre
 142 keep...house be inhospitable
 143 table in palmistry, the quadrangle between the lines of Head, Heart, Fate and Apollo 146 sift question closely
 148 manchet the finest flour
 155 friend lover
 164 summer-house a garden house used for clandestine meetings
 168 wink i.e. be complaisant
 176 imparlance (fig.) an extension of time to put in a response in pleading a law case
 177 declaration (fig.) the plaintiff's statement of claim
 184 compass encompass
 186 tooth eating
 188 brave fine
 190 mercer seller of cloth and other goods
 191 o' my troth in truth
 193 physic medicine
 2.2 attributed to Middleton
 0.1 a shop being discovered Probably a curtain was pulled to reveal an area at the back of the stage or in the lower level of the tiring-house equipped with a few props to represent a mercer's shop.
 1 What is't you lack a traditional street-vendor's cry. The song, with its focus on the cloth trade, is unique.
 3 Silk-grograms coarse silk fabrics, often stiffened with gum
 4 carnadine red fabric
 5 nutmeg brown
 gingerline probably a shade of violet red

- Cloth of tissue, or tobine,
That like beaten gold will shine
In your amorous lady's eyne,
Whilst you their softer silks do twine.
Enter Rachel Camlet
10 What is't you lack, you lack, you lack?
RACHEL CAMLET I do lack content, sir, content I lack. Have you or your worshipful master here any content to sell?
GEORGE If content be a stuff to be sold by the yard, you may have content at home and never go abroad for't.
15 RACHEL CAMLET Do cut me three yards, I'll pay for 'em.
GEORGE There's all we have i'th' shop. We must know what you'll give for 'em first.
CAMLET
Why Rachel, sweet Rachel, my bosom Rachel,
How didst thou get forth? Thou wert here, sweet Rac,
20 Within this hour, even in my very heart.
RACHEL CAMLET
Away—or stay still—I'll away from thee.
One bed shall never hold us both again,
Nor one roof cover us. Didst thou bring home—
GEORGE What is't you lack, you lack, you lack?
25 RACHEL CAMLET Peace, bandog, bandog, give me leave to speak or I'll—
GEORGE Shall I not follow my trade? I'm bound to't, and my master bound to bring me up in't.
CAMLET
Peace, good George, give her anger leave;
30 Thy mistress will be quiet presently.
RACHEL CAMLET
Quiet! I defy thee and quiet too.
Quiet thy bastards thou hast brought home.
GEORGE and RALPH What is't you lack, you lack? etc.
RACHEL CAMLET
Death! Give me an ell; has one bawling cur
35 Raised up another? Two dogs upon me?
An the old bear-ward will not succour me,
I'll stave 'em off myself. Give me an ell, I say!
GEORGE Give her not an inch, master; she'll take two ells
if you do.
CAMLET
40 Peace, George and Ralph, no more words I charge
you.
And Rachel, sweet wife, be more temperate;
I know your tongue speaks not by the rule
And guidance of your heart when you proclaim
- The pretty children of my virtuous
And noble kinswoman—whom in life you knew
Above my praises' reach—to be my bastards.
This is not well. Although your anger did it,
Pray chide your anger for it.
RACHEL CAMLET Sir, sir, your gloss
Of kinswoman cannot serve turn, 'tis stale
And smells too rank. Though your shop wares you 50 vend
With your deceiving lights, yet your chamber stuff Shall not pass so with me. I say, and I will prove—
GEORGE What is't you lack?
Enter Cressingham's two children
CAMLET Why, George, I say—
RACHEL CAMLET
55 Lecher, I say. I'll be divorced from thee;
I'll prove 'em thy bastards and thou insufficient. Exit
FIRST CHILD
What said my angry cousin to you, sir?
That we were bastards?
SECOND CHILD I hope she meant not us.
CAMLET No, no, my pretty cousins, she meant George and 60 Ralph. Rage will speak anything, but they are ne'er the worse.
GEORGE Yes indeed, forsooth, she spoke to us, but chiefly to Ralph because she knows he has but one stone.
RALPH No more of that if you love me, George; this is not the way to keep a quiet house. 65
FIRST CHILD
Truly, sir, I would not for more treasure
Than ever I saw yet, be in your house
A cause of discord.
SECOND CHILD And do you think I would, sister?
FIRST CHILD No indeed, Ned.
Enter Young Franklin [disguised as Sir Andrew, a knight] and Young Cressingham disguised [as Gascoine, a tailor]
SECOND CHILD
70 Why did you not speak for me with you then,
And said we could not have done so?
CAMLET No more, sweet cousins, now.—Speak, George;
customers approach. [Exit children]
[Young Cressingham and Young Franklin talk apart]
YOUNG CRESSINGHAM Is the barber prepared?

6 tobine silk taffeta9 softer silks undergarments
10 twine embrace9.1 Rachel a name popular with Puritans; perhaps an allusion to the biblical Rachel who was for so long barren (Gen. 29)11 content (a) happiness; (b) sexual fulfilment13 yard (a) length of fabric; (b) penis.
The bawdy wordplay continues in the exchange between George and Rachel

Camlet.

25 bandog literally a chained, barking dog27 bound As an apprentice George is under a contract, or indenture, to serve Camlet for at least seven years; the word is used elsewhere in the play to refer to the ties of marriage.34 ell a measuring rod of forty-five inches36 bear-ward the keeper of a bear, who leads it about for public exhibition of its tricks48 gloss explanation51 deceiving lights London shopkeepers proverbially darkened their shops to deceive customers. In Michaelmas Term Quomodo, another cloth seller, has an assistant named Falselight.chamber stuff illegitimate children.
'Stuff' is also the term for a kind of cloth.56 insufficient incompetent63 stone testicle

- 75 YOUNG FRANKLIN With ignorance enough to go through with it; so near I am to him we must call cousins. Would thou wert as sure to hit the tailor.
YOUNG CRESSINGHAM If I do not steal away handsomely let me never play the tailor again.
- 80 GEORGE What is't you lack? etc.
YOUNG FRANKLIN Good satins, sir.
GEORGE The best in Europe, sir. [He shows a cloth] Here's a piece worth a piece, every yard of him; the King of Naples wears no better silk. Mark his gloss, he dazzles the eye to look upon him.
- 85 YOUNG FRANKLIN Is he not gummed?
GEORGE Gummed! He has neither mouth nor tooth, how can he be gummed?
YOUNG FRANKLIN Very pretty.
- 90 CAMLET An especial good piece of silk. The worm never spun a finer thread, believe it, sir.
YOUNG FRANKLIN [to Young Cressingham] Gascoine, you have some skill in it.
CAMLET Your tailor, sir?
YOUNG FRANKLIN Yes sir.
YOUNG CRESSINGHAM A good piece, sir, but let's see more choice.
- RALPH Tailor, drive through; you know your bribes.
YOUNG CRESSINGHAM [aside to Ralph] Mum. He bestows forty pounds if I say the word.
- 100 RALPH [aside to Young Cressingham] Strike through. There's poundage for you then.
YOUNG FRANKLIN Ay, marry! I like this better, what sayest thou, Gascoine?
YOUNG CRESSINGHAM A good piece indeed, sir.
GEORGE The great Turk has worse satin at's elbow than this, sir.
YOUNG FRANKLIN The price?
CAMLET Look on the mark, George.
- 110 GEORGE O. Souse, and P., by my facks, sir.
CAMLET The best sort then—sixteen a yard, nothing to be bated.
YOUNG FRANKLIN Fie, sir, fifteen's too high—yet so, for how many yards will serve for my suit, sirrah?
YOUNG CRESSINGHAM Nine yards; you can have no less, Sir Andrew.
- YOUNG FRANKLIN But I can, sir, if you please to steal less; I had but eight in my last suit.
YOUNG CRESSINGHAM You pinch us too near, in faith, Sir Andrew. 120
YOUNG FRANKLIN Yet can you pinch out a false pair of sleeves to a freezado doublet.
GEORGE No, sir, some purses and pin-pillows perhaps. A tailor pays for his kissing that ways.
YOUNG FRANKLIN Well, sir, eight yards, eight fifteens I give, and cut it. 125
CAMLET I cannot, truly, sir.
GEORGE My master must be no subsidy man, sir, if he take such fifteens.
YOUNG FRANKLIN I am at highest, sir, if you can take money. 130
CAMLET Well, sir, I'll give you the buying once; I hope to gain it in your custom. Want you nothing else, sir?
YOUNG FRANKLIN Not at this time, sir.
YOUNG CRESSINGHAM Indeed but you do, Sir Andrew. I must needs deliver my lady's message to you; she enjoined me by oath to do it. She commanded me to move you for a new gown. 135
YOUNG FRANKLIN Sirrah, I'll break your head if you motion it again. 140
YOUNG CRESSINGHAM I must endanger myself for my lady, sir. You know she's to go to my Lady Trenchmore's wedding, and to be seen there without a new gown—she'll have ne'er an eye to be seen there for her fingers in 'em. Nay, by my fack, sir, I do not think she'll go, and then the cause known, what a discredit 'twill be to you! 145
YOUNG FRANKLIN Not a word more, goodman Snipsnapper, for your ears. [To Walter Camlet] What comes this to, sir? 150
CAMLET Six pound, sir.
YOUNG FRANKLIN There's your money. [To Young Cressingham, giving him the cloth] Will you take this and be gone and about your business presently?
YOUNG CRESSINGHAM Troth, sir, I'll see some stuffs for my lady first. I'll tell her at least I did my good will. [To George] A fair piece of cloth of silver, pray you now. 155

76 near friendly; seemingly such close kin

77 hit represent successfully

78 handsomely cleverly. Tailors were proverbially untrustworthy.

83 piece the second use of the word refers to a gold coin worth twenty-two shillings

88 gummed Velvet and taffeta were sometimes stiffened with gum, which soon was rubbed out revealing the inferior quality.

92 Gascoine gaskin, a kind of breeches or hose from Gascony, where the fashion originated

93 skill knowledge

98 drive through bring to a settlement,

conclude

102 poundage a commission or fee, of so much a pound

109 mark a price code

110 O. Souse, and P. a price code; see 2.2.203; cf. Rowley, A New Wonder (BEPD 460) A2^v, and anon. Pedantius (BEPD L9), ll. 2610–2614 and note facks faith

111 sixteen i.e. shillings

112 bated bargained

121 pinch out eke out false simulated

122 freezado doublet a close-fitting garment of coarse woollen cloth

124 pays for his kissing makes small gifts for his girlfriends by skimming on material

128 subsidy man a man wealthy enough to pay taxes

130–1 if...money He offers to pay cash rather than buying on credit.

133 custom future business

142 Trenchmore's (fig.) a boisterous country dance

144–5 eye...fingers in 'em she will cry and rub her eyes; or she will pretend to cry

149 for your ears if you value your ears; an allusion to the punishment of cropping felons' ears

- GEORGE Or cloth of gold, if you please, sir, as rich as ever the Sophy wore.
- 160 YOUNG FRANKLIN You are the arrantest villain of a tailor that ever sat cross-legged. What do you think a gown of this stuff will come to?
- YOUNG CRESSINGHAM Why, say it be forty pound, sir; what's that to you? Three thousand a year I hope will maintain it.
- 165 YOUNG FRANKLIN It will, sir, very good, you were best be my overseer. Say I be not furnished with money, how then?
- YOUNG CRESSINGHAM A very fine excuse in you—which place of ten now will you send me for a hundred pound, to bring it presently?
- 170 CAMLET Sir, sir, your tailor persuades you well. 'Tis for your credit, and the great content of your lady.
- YOUNG FRANKLIN 'Tis for your content, sir, and my charges. [To Young Cressingham] Never think, Goodman Falsestitch, to come to the mercer's with me again. Pray, will you see if my cousin Sweetball the barber—he's nearest hand—be furnished, and bring me word instantly.
- 180 YOUNG CRESSINGHAM I fly, sir. Exit
- YOUNG FRANKLIN You may fly, sir; you have clipped somebody's wings for it to piece out your own. An arrant thief you are.
- CAMLET Indeed, he speaks honestly and justly, sir.
- 185 YOUNG FRANKLIN You expect some gain, sir, there's your cause of love.
- CAMLET Surely I do a little, sir.
- YOUNG FRANKLIN [examining another cloth] And what might be the price of this?
- 190 CAMLET This is thirty a yard; but if you'll go to forty, here's a nonpareil.
- YOUNG FRANKLIN So, there's a matter of forty pound for a gown cloth.
- CAMLET Thereabouts, sir. Why sir, there are far short of your means that wear the like.
- 195 YOUNG FRANKLIN Do you know my means, sir?
- GEORGE By overhearing your tailor, sir—three thousand a year—but if you'd have a petticoat for your lady, here's a stuff. [He shows another cloth]
- 200 YOUNG FRANKLIN Are you another tailor, sirrah? Here's a knave—what are you?
- GEORGE You are such another gentleman. But for the stuff, sir, 'tis L. SS. and K. For the turn stript o' purpose, a yard and a quarter broad too, which is the just depth of a woman's petticoat.
- 205 YOUNG FRANKLIN And why stript for a petticoat?
- GEORGE Because if they abuse their petticoats, there are abuses stript; then 'tis taking them up, and they may be stript and whipt too.
- 210 YOUNG FRANKLIN Very ingenious.
- GEORGE Then it is likewise stript standing, between which is discovered the open part, which is now called the placket.
- YOUNG FRANKLIN Why, was it ever called otherwise?
- 215 GEORGE Yes, while the word remained pure in his original, the Latin tongue, who have no Ks, it was called the placet, a placendo—a thing or place to please.
- Enter Young Cressingham [still disguised as a tailor]*
- YOUNG FRANKLIN Better and worse still. [To George Cressingham] Now, sir, you come in haste. What says my cousin?
- 220 YOUNG CRESSINGHAM Protests, sir. He's half angry that either you should think him unfurnished or not furnished for your use—there's a hundred pound ready for you. He desires you to pardon his coming, his folks are busy and his wife trimming a gentleman, but at your first approach the money wants but telling.
- 225 YOUNG FRANKLIN He would not trust you with it. I con him thanks for that—he knows what trade you are of. [To Camlet] Well sir, pray cut him patterns; he may in the mean time know my lady's liking. Let your man take the pieces whole, with the lowest prices, and walk with me to my cousin's.
- 230 CAMLET With all my heart, sir. Ralph, your cloak, and go with the gentleman; look you give good measure.
- YOUNG CRESSINGHAM Look you carry a good yard with you.
- 235 RALPH The best i'th' shop, sir, yet we have none bad. You'll have the stuff for the petticoat too?
- YOUNG FRANKLIN No, sir, the gown only.
- YOUNG CRESSINGHAM By all means, sir. Not the petticoat? That were holiday upon working day, i'faith.
- 240 YOUNG FRANKLIN You are so forward for a knave, sir.
- YOUNG CRESSINGHAM 'Tis for your credit and my lady's both I do it, sir.
- YOUNG FRANKLIN Your man is trusty, sir?
- 245 CAMLET O, sir, we keep none but those we dare trust, sir. Ralph, have a care of light gold.
- RALPH I warrant you, sir, I'll take none.

159 Sophy the Shah of Persia160 arrantest worst160-1 villain . . . cross-legged Tailors sat cross-legged to sew.164 Three thousand a year pounds; a considerable income*maintain* afford191 nonpareil unequalled

203 L. SS. and K. a price code; see 2.2.110

stript striped; but also stripped, revealed208 abuses stript an allusion to GeorgeWither's satiric poem, Abuses Stript andWhipt (1613). In the section on 'Vanitie', Wither specifically satirizes the demand for 'foreign trash' such as 'grograins, camlets, rash'.taking them up gathering the cloth209 whipt trimmed, ornamented; but also 'whipped'. Whipping was the usual punishment for prostitutes.213 placket (a) the opening or slit at the top of a skirt or petticoat; (b) the pudendum, especially the vulva217 placet Latin: he, she, it pleases*placendo* Latin: pleasing; with bawdy innuendo222-3 furnished provided with money224 pardon his coming excuse him from coming*folks* employees226 telling counting234-5 give good measure . . . carry a good yard with *doubles entendres*240 holiday upon working day (fig.) a fancy dress over a plain petticoat246 light gold debased or clipped coins

- BOY Ay, sir.
- 5 BARBER See if my lixivium, my fomentation be provided first, and get my rollers, bolsters, and pledgets armed.
- RALPH Nay, good sir, dispatch my business first. I should not stay from my shop.
- BARBER You must have a little patience, sir, when you are
- 10 a patient. If preputium be not too much perished you shall lose but little by it, believe my art for that.
- RALPH What's that, sir?
- BARBER Marry, if there be exulceration between preputium and glans, by my faith, the whole penis may be
- 15 endangered as far as os pubis.
- RALPH What's this you talk on, sir?
- BARBER If they be gangrened once, testiculi, vesica and all may run to mortification.
- RALPH What a pox does this barber talk on?
- 20 BARBER O fie, youth, 'pox' is no word of art. Morbus gallicus or neopolitanus had been well. Come, friend, you must not be nice; open your griefs freely to me.
- RALPH Why, sir, I open my grief to you: I want my money.
- BARBER Take you no care for that. Your worthy cousin
- 25 has given me part in hand and the rest I know he will upon your recovery, an I dare take his word.
- RALPH 'Sdeath! Where's my ware?
- BARBER Ware! That was well, the word is cleanly, though not artful. Your ware it is that I must see.
- 30 RALPH My tobine and cloth of tissue?
- BARBER You will neither have tissue nor issue if you linger in your malady. Better a member cut off than endanger the whole microcosm.
- RALPH Barber, you are not mad?
- 35 BARBER I do begin to fear you are subject to subeth, unkindly sleeps, which have bred oppilations in your brain. Take heed the symptoma will follow, and this may come to frenzy. Begin with the first cause, which is the pain of your member.
- 40 RALPH [showing his measuring-stick] Do you see my yard, barber?
- BARBER Now you come to the purpose; 'tis that I must see indeed.
- RALPH You shall feel it, sir. Death! Give me my fifty pounds or my ware again, or I'll measure out your anatomy by the yard.
- 45 BARBER Boy, my cauterizing iron, red hot.
Exit Boy, [and re-enter with iron]
- BOY 'Tis here, sir.
- BARBER If you go further, I take my dismembering knife.
- RALPH Where's the knight, your cousin the thief, and the
- 50 tailor with my cloth of gold and tissue?
- BOY The gentleman that sent away his man with the stuffs is gone a pretty while since; he has carried away our new brush.
- BARBER O, that brush hurts my heart's side. Cheated!
- 55 Cheated! He told me that your virga had a burning fever.
- RALPH Pox on your virga, barber.
- BARBER And that you would be bashful and ashamed to show your head.
- 60 RALPH I shall so hereafter. [He removes his hat] But here it is, you see yet my head, my hair, and my wit, and here are my heels that I must show to my master if the cheaters be not found. And, barber, provide three plasters; I will break thy head with every basin under the pole.
- 65 Exit
- BARBER
Cool the lixivium, and quench the cauterizer.
I am partly out of my wits, and partly mad.
My razor's at my heart. These storms will make My sweetballs stink, my harmless basins shake.
- 70 Exeunt
- Finis Actus Secundus*
- ⊙
- Incipit Actus Tertius*
- Enter Selenger and Sib Knavesbe*
- 3.I SELENGER You're welcome, mistress—as I may speak it—but my lord will give it a sweeter emphasis. I'll give him knowledge of you. Exiturus
- SIB KNAVESBE Good sir, stay; methinks it sounds sweetest upon your tongue. I'll wish you to go no further for my
- 5 welcome.

incomprehensible, a fact called attention to by those to whom he speaks. As a result, it is impossible to know if the errors in spelling and pronunciation in JOHNSON are the barber's, the writer's or the compositor's. The Textual Notes give the original of words corrected.

5 lixivium a solution of water and alkaline salts fomentation medicinal substance
6 rollers long rolled bandages bolsters compresses
pledgets small medicated compresses
10 preputium Latin: prepuce, the foreskin
13 exulceration a sore
14 glans Latin: the head of the penis

15 os pubis Latin: pubic bone
17 vesica Latin: bladder
18 mortification the death of a part of the body while the rest is living
20 pox syphilis
20-1 Morbus gallicus or neopolitanus syphilis
22 nice shy
29 ware Ralph means the cloth he brought; Sweetball means Ralph's penis.
30 tobine silk taffeta
33 microcosm the body
35 subeth unhealthy sleep
36 oppilations obstructions
37 symptoma Latin: symptoms

38 frenzy temporary insanity
39 member penis
40 yard Ralph means his yardstick; Sweetball means Ralph's penis.
56 virga Latin: rod, also slang for penis
60 head glans
65 plasters a healing substance applied to a cloth used for closing a wound
66 pole barber's pole
70 sweetballs probably with a double entendre: testicles
3.I attributed to Middleton
1 mistress ironic wordplay on the two meanings
3 Exiturus Latin: about to exit

SELENGER Mine! It seems you never heard good music that commend a bagpipe; hear his harmony.

10 SIB KNAVESBE Nay, good now, let me borrow of your patience. I'll pay you again before I rise tomorrow— if it please you.

SELENGER What would you, forsooth?

SIB KNAVESBE Your company, sir.

15 SELENGER My attendance you should have, mistress, but that my lord expects it, and 'tis his due.

SIB KNAVESBE And must be paid upon the hour! That's too strict. Any time of the day will serve.

SELENGER Alas, 'tis due every minute, and paid, 'tis due again, or else I forfeit my recognizance, the cloth I wear 20 of his.

SIB KNAVESBE Come, come, pay it double at another time and 'twill be quitted. I have a little use of you.

SELENGER Of me? Forsooth, small use can be made of me. If you have suit to my lord, none can speak better for 25 you than you may yourself.

SIB KNAVESBE O, but I am bashful.

SELENGER So am I, in troth, mistress.

SIB KNAVESBE Now I remember me, I have a toy to deliver your lord that's yet unfinished, and you may further 30 me. Pray you your hands, while I unwind this skein of gold from you. 'Twill not detain you long.

[She puts a skein of wool around Selenger's hands and begins to wind it onto a bobbin]

SELENGER You wind me into your service prettily. With all the haste you can, I beseech you.

SIB KNAVESBE If it tangle not I shall soon have done.

35 SELENGER No, it shall not tangle if I can help it, forsooth.

SIB KNAVESBE If it do I can help it. Fear not this thing of long length; you shall see I can bring you to a bottom.

SELENGER I think so too; if it be not bottomless this length will reach it.

40 SIB KNAVESBE It becomes you finely. But I forewarn you, and remember it, your enemy gain not this advantage of you—you are his prisoner then. For look you, you are mine now, my captive manacled—I have your hands in bondage.

[She grasps the skein between his hands]

45 SELENGER 'Tis a good lesson, mistress, and I am perfect in it; another time I'll take out this and learn another. Pray you, release me now.

SIB KNAVESBE I could kiss you now spite of your teeth if it please me.

50 SELENGER But you could not, for I could bite you with the spite of my teeth if it pleases me.

SIB KNAVESBE Well, I'll not tempt you so far; I show it but for rudiment.

SELENGER When I go a-wooing, I'll think on't again.

SIB KNAVESBE
55 In such an hour I learnt it. Say I should—
In recompense of your hands' courtesy—
Make you a fine wrist-favour of this gold,
With all the letters of your name embossed
On a soft tress of hair, which I shall cut
From mine own fillet, whose ends should meet and 60 close
In a fast true-love knot. Would you wear it
For my sake, sir?

SELENGER I think not, truly, mistress.
My wrists have enough of this gold already;
Would they were rid on't yet. Pray you, have done;
In troth, I'm weary.

SIB KNAVESBE And what a virtue
65 Is here expressed in you, which had lain hid
But for this trial. Weary of gold, sir!
O, that the close engrossers of this treasure
Could be so free to put it off of hand,
What a new-mended world would here be!
70 It shows a generous condition in you,
In sooth I think I shall love you dearly for't.

SELENGER
But if they were in prison, as I am,
They would be glad to buy their freedom with it.

SIB KNAVESBE
75 Surely, no. There are that rather than release
This dear companion do lie in prison with it—
Yes, and will die in prison too.

[Enter Beaufort]

SELENGER 'Twere pity but the hangman did enfranchise
both.

80 BEAUFORT Selenger, where are you?

SELENGER E'en here, my lord.—Mistress, pray you my liberty, you hinder my duty to my lord.

[Beaufort puts off his hat]

BEAUFORT Nay, sir, one courtesy shall serve us both at this time. You're busy, I perceive. When your leisure next serves you I would employ you.

85 SELENGER You must pardon me, my lord, you see I am entangled here. Mistress, I protest I'll break prison if you free me not—take you no notice?

SIB KNAVESBE [to Beaufort] O, cry your honour mercy. [To Selenger, as she releases her hold on the skein of wool] You are now at liberty, sir.

8 bagpipe an inferior instrument, musically and socially
 12 forsooth truly
 19 recognizance a bond of service
 28 remember me remember
 37 bottom a bobbin, around which wool is wound

44.1 [She]...hands By this action Sib seems to handcuff Selenger.
 48 spite...teeth in defiance of your opposition
 53 rudiment a first step
 56 your hands' courtesy courtesy in offering your hands

57 wrist-favour a bracelet given to a lover
 59 tress a long lock of hair
 60 fillet a headband
 68 close engrossers stingy monopolizers
 69 put it off of hand relinquish exclusive use 78 but unless enfranchise set free

Act 3 Scene 1

Any thing for a quiet Life.

SELENGER And I'm glad on't. I'll ne'er give both my hands at once again to a woman's command. I'll put one finger in a hole rather.

95 BEAUFORT Leave us.
 SELENGER Free leave have you, my lord. [Aside] So I think you may have.—Filthy beauty, what a white witch thou art! Exit

BEAUFORT Lady, you're welcome.
 SIB KNAVESBE
 I did believe it from your page, my lord.

100 BEAUFORT
 Your husband sent you to me.
 SIB KNAVESBE He did, my lord,
 With duty and commends unto your honour,
 Beseeching you to use me very kindly.
 By the same token your lordship gave him grant
 Of a new lease of threescore pounds a year,
 Which he and his should forty years enjoy.

105 BEAUFORT
 The token's true, and for your sake, lady,
 'Tis likely to be bettered. Not alone the lease,
 But the fee-simple may be his and yours.

SIB KNAVESBE
 I have a suit unto your lordship too,
 Only myself concerns.

BEAUFORT 'Twill be granted sure,
 Though it out-value thy husband's.

SIB KNAVESBE Nay, 'tis small charge:
 Only your good will and good word, my lord.

BEAUFORT
 The first is thine confirmed, the second then Cannot stay long behind.

115 SIB KNAVESBE I love your page, sir.
 BEAUFORT
 Love him! For what?
 SIB KNAVESBE O, the great wisdoms that
 Our grandsires had! Do you ask me reason for't?
 I love him because I like him, sir.

BEAUFORT My page!
 SIB KNAVESBE
 In mine eye he's a most delicate youth,
 But in my heart a thing that it would bleed for.

120 BEAUFORT
 Either your eye is blinded or your remembrance broken.
 Call to mind wherefore you came hither, lady.

SIB KNAVESBE
 I do my lord, for love, and I am in profoundly.

BEAUFORT
 You trifle sure. Do you long for unripe fruit?
 'Twill breed diseases in you.

SIB KNAVESBE Nothing but worms
 In my belly, and there's a seed to expel them.
 In mellow falling fruit I find no relish.

BEAUFORT
 'Tis true, the youngest vines yields the most clusters,
 But the old ever the sweetest grapes.

SIB KNAVESBE I can taste of both, sir.
 But with the old I am the soonest cloyed;
 The green keep still an edge on appetite.

BEAUFORT
 Sure you are a common creature.

SIB KNAVESBE Did you doubt it?
 Wherefore came I hither else? Did you think
 That honesty only had been immured for you
 And I should bring it as an offertory Unto your shrine of lust? As it was, my lord,
 'Twas meant to you had not the slippery wheel
 Of fancy turned when I beheld your page.
 Nay, had I seen another before him
 In mine eyes' better grace, he had been forestalled.

140 But as it is, all my strength cannot help—
 Beseech you your good will and good word, my lord;
 You may command him, sir—if not affection,
 Yet his body—and I desire but that. Do't
 And I'll command myself your prostitute.

145 BEAUFORT
 You're a base strumpet. I succeed my page!
 SIB KNAVESBE
 O, that's no wonder, my lord; the servant oft
 Tastes to his master of the daintiest dish
 He brings to him. Beseech you, my lord—

BEAUFORT
 You're a bold mischief—and to make me your spokesman,
 Your procurer to my servant!

150 SIB KNAVESBE Do you shrink at that?
 Why, you have done worse without the sense of ill,
 With a full free conscience of a libertine.
 Judge your own sin:
 Was it not worse with a damned broking-fee
 To corrupt a husband, state him a pander
 To his own wife by virtue of a lease
 Made to him and your bastard issue—could you get
 'em.
 What a degree of baseness call you this?

155

93-4 put one finger in a hole The idea is that he would do anything to avoid being caught this way again. Hole: rectum, as in 'sit on my thumb', or do nothing (?)
 97 white witch probably suggesting the proverb, 'the white witch is worse than the black', because more difficult to recognize 105 threescore sixty

109 fee-simple absolute ownership
 121 remembrance broken memory is faulty
 124 unripe fruit (fig.) young men
 125 worms from eating unripe fruit
 126 seed a child
 130 cloyed surfeited
 134 immured secluded
 135 offertory Communion offerings
 140 In mine eyes' better grace more appealing

 151 procurer a pander shrink recoil
 155 broking-fee payment for service as procurer
 156 state to give a person the status of (usually complimentary)
 158 bastard issue illegitimate children (by her)

- 160 'Tis a poor sheep-steal provoked by want Compared unto a capital traitor. The master
To his servant may be recompensed, but the husband
To his wife, never.
- BEAUFORT Your husband shall smart for this. Exit
- SIB KNAVESBE
Hang him, do; you have brought him to deserve it.
- 165 Bring him to the punishment; there I'll join with you.
I loathe him to the gallows. Hang your page too;
One mourning-gown shall serve for both of them.
This trick hath kept mine honesty secure.
Best soldiers use policy. The lion's skin
170 Becomes not the body when 'tis too great,
But then the fox's may sit close and neat. Exit
- 3.2 Enter Fleshhook, Counterbuff, and Sweetball the barber
- BARBER Now, Fleshhook, use thy talon—set upon his right shoulder—thy serjeant Counterbuff at the left, grasp in his jugulars and then let me alone to tickle his diaphragma.
- 5 FLESHHOOK You are sure he has no protection, sir?
BARBER A protection to cheat and cozen! There was never any granted to that purpose.
FLESHHOOK I grant you that too, sir, but that use has been made of 'em.
- 10 COUNTERBUFF Marry has there, sir. How could else so many broken bankrupts play up and down by their creditors' noses, and we dare not touch 'em?
BARBER That's another case, Counterbuff; there's privilege to cozen. But here cozenage went before, and there's 15 no privilege for that. To him boldly; I will spend all the scissors in my shop, but I'll have him snapped.
COUNTERBUFF Well, sir, if he come within the length of large mace once, we'll teach him to cozen.
- 163 smart suffer
168 trick stratagem
169 policy dissimulation
169–71 The lion's skin . . . neat a variant of the proverbial, 'if the lion's skin cannot,
the fox's shall'; i.e., the lion's strength must be combined with the fox's cunning
- 3.2 attributed to Middleton
0.1 Fleshhook a hook for removing meat from a pot; also slang for 'constable'; yeoman: a serjeant's subordinate Counterbuff a blow given in return, or an encounter where blows are exchanged
- 1 talon (fig.) hand
3 jugulars neck tickle ironic: beat
4 diaphragma (fig.) the chest
5 protection a document guaranteeing immunity from prosecution
6 cozen defraud
11–12 play . . . noses take advantage of;
cheat
- 13 privilege a right
14 went before preceded 16 snapped captured
18 mace (a) a club; (b) a spice, with puns following 23 Man in the Moon a tavern in Cheapside above stairs upstairs
24 Bush (a) the sign of a tavern; (b) with 'dog', allusions to the man in the moon whose props these were 27 Newgate a prison
29 master of my anatomy in charge of dissecting the next corpse at the barber-surgeons' hall
31 os coxendix Latin: hip bone
32 humour a disease resulting from the dominance of one humour (blood, phlegm, yellow bile, black bile), or lack of balance among them. The idea is that an excess of one causes Franklin to steal.
33 thorax Latin: chest fingers' ends because he is a thief
37 conquassation agitation
- BARBER Marry, hang him. Teach him no more cozenage;
he's too perfect in't already. Go gingerly about it; lay 20 your mace on gingerly and spice him soundly.
COUNTERBUFF He's at the tavern, you say?
BARBER At the Man in the Moon, above stairs. So soon as he comes down, and the Bush left at his back, Ralph is the dog behind him. He watches to give us notice. Be 25 ready then, my dear bloodhounds. You shall deliver him to Newgate, from thence to the hangman. His body I will beg of the sheriffs, for at the next lecture I am likely to be the master of my anatomy. Then will I vex every vein about him. I will find where his disease of 30 cozenage lay, whether in the vertebrae, or in os coxendix.
But I guess I shall find it descend from humour through the thorax, and lie just at his fingers' ends.
Enter Ralph
- RALPH Be in readiness, for he's coming this way—alone too. Stand to't like gentleman and yeoman; so soon as 35 he is in sight I'll go fetch my master.
BARBER I have had a conquassation in my cerebrum ever since the disaster, and now it takes me again. If it turn to a migraine I shall hardly abide the sight of him.
RALPH My action of defamation shall be clapped on him 40 too. I will make him appear to't in the shape of a white sheet all embroidered over with peccavis. Look about, I'll go fetch my master. [Exit]
Enter Young Franklin
- COUNTERBUFF I arrest you, sir.
YOUNG FRANKLIN Ha! Qui va là? Que pensez-vous faire,
45 messieurs? Me voulez-vous dérober? Je n'ai point d'argent.
Je suis un pauvre gentilhomme français.
BARBER Whoop! Pray you, sir, speak English. You did when you bought cloth of gold at six nihils a yard, when Ralph's preputium was exulcerated.
50 YOUNG FRANKLIN Que voulez-vous? Me voulez-vous tuer?
Les français ne sont point ennemis. Voilà ma bourse; que voulez-vous d'avantage?
- cerebrum* Latin: brain
38 the disaster the trick played on him
40 clapped served
41 appear to't appear in court
41–2 shape . . . peccavis wearing a gown with 'peccavi' (Latin: 'I have sinned') written on it
43.1 Franklin He is not disguised visually, only verbally; and his name likely hints at this deception: Frank: 'French'. The French spoken here is as colloquial as the English of the rest of the play and the translations aim at conveying this while remaining reasonably literal.
45–7 Ha! . . . français. Ha! Who's there?
What do you think you're doing, sirs?
Do you want to rob me? I have no money. I'm a poor French gentleman.
49 nihils Latin: nothings
51–3 Que . . . d'avantage? What do you want? Do you want to kill me? The French are not at all enemies. Here is my purse—what else do you want?

- COUNTERBUFF Is not your name Franklin, sir?
 55 YOUNG FRANKLIN Je n'ai point de joyaux que ceux-ci. Et c'est à monsieur l'ambassadeur; il m'envoie à ses affaires et vous empêchez mon service.
Enter Camlet and Ralph hastily
 COUNTERBUFF [to Camlet] Sir, we are mistaken for aught I perceive.
 60 CAMLET So, so, you have caught him; that's well.—How do you, sir?
 YOUNG FRANKLIN Vous semblez être un homme courtois. Je vous prie entendez mes affaires. Il y a ici deux ou trois canailles qui m'ont assiégé, un pauvre étranger qui ne leur ai fait nul mal, ni donné mauvaise parole, ni tiré mon épée. L'un me prend par une épaule, et me frappe deux livres pesant. L'autre me tire par le bras. Il parle je ne sais quoi. Je leur ai donné ma bourse, et s'ils ne me veulent point laisser aller, que ferai-je, monsieur?
 70 CAMLET This is a Frenchman it seems, sirs.
 COUNTERBUFF We can find no other in him, sir, and what that is we know not.
 CAMLET He's very like the man we seek for, else my lights go false.
 75 BARBER In your shop they may, sir, but here they go true. This is he.
 RALPH The very same, sir; as sure as I am Ralph, this is the rascal.
 COUNTERBUFF Sir, unless you will absolutely challenge him
 80 the man, we dare not proceed further.
Enter Margarita, a French bawd
 FLESHHOOK I fear we are too far already.
 CAMLET I know not what to say to't.
 MARGARITA Bonjour, bonjour, gentilhommes.
 BARBER How now! More news from France?
 85 YOUNG FRANKLIN Cette femme ici est de mon pays.—Madame, je vous prie leur dire mon pays. Ils m'ont retardé, je ne sais pourquoi.
 MARGARITA Etes-vous de France, monsieur?
- YOUNG FRANKLIN Madame, vrai est que je les ai trompés, et suis arrêté, et n'ai nul moyen d'échapper qu'en changeant mon langage. Aidez-moi en cette affaire. Je vous connais bien, où vous tenez un bordel. Vous et les vôtres en serez de mieux. 90
- MARGARITA Laissez-faire à moi. Etes-vous de Lyon, dites-vous?
 YOUNG FRANKLIN De Lyon, ma chère dame. 95
 MARGARITA Mon cousin! Je suis bien aise de vous voir en bonne disposition.
 [They] embrace and compliment
 YOUNG FRANKLIN Ma cousine!
 CAMLET This is a Frenchman sure.
 BARBER If he be, 'tis the likest an Englishman that ever I saw, all his dimensions, proportions! Had I but the dissecting of his heart, in capsula cordis could I find it now, for a Frenchman's heart is more quassative and subject to tremor than an Englishman's.
 CAMLET Stay, we'll further enquire of this gentlewoman. Mistress, if you have so much English to help us with—as I think you have, for I have long seen you about London—pray tell us, and truly tell us, is this gentleman a natural Frenchman or no?
 MARGARITA Ey begar, de Frenchman, born à Lyon, my cozín.
 CAMLET Your cousin? If he be not your cousin, he's my cousin sure.
 MARGARITA Ey connosh his père, what you call his fadre? He sell poissons.
 BARBER Sell poisons? His father was a pothecary then.
 MARGARITA No, no, poissons, what you call, fish, fish.
 BARBER O, he was a fishmonger.
 MARGARITA Oui, oui.
 CAMLET Well, well, we are mistaken I see. Pray you so tell him, and request him not to be offended. An honest man may look like a knave and be ne'er the worse for't. The error was in our eyes and now we find it in his tongue. 110 115 120

55–7 Je...service. I have no other jewels but these. And these belong to the ambassador; he sent me on his business and you are hindering my service.

62–9 Vous...monsieur? You seem to be a courteous man. I beg you to listen to my troubles. Here are two or three ruffians who have besieged me, a poor stranger who has done them no harm at all, nor spoken an ill word, nor drawn my sword. One takes me by one shoulder and strikes me two heavy blows. The other pulls me by the arm. He says I don't know what. I have given them my purse, and if they don't want to let me go, what shall I do, sir?

80.1 bawd prostitute

83 Bonjour...gentilhommes. Good day, good day, sirs.

84 news from France an allusion to short pieces by Thomas Overbury: 'News from Court', 'News from France', 'News from Rome', 'News from my Lodging'

85–7 Cette...pourquoi. This woman here is from my country.—Madame, I beg you to tell them my country. They have detained me, I don't know why.

88 Etes-vous...monsieur? Are you from France, sir?

89–93 Madame...mieux. Madame, the truth is that I have cozened them and am detained, and have no means of escaping except by changing my language. Help me in this business. I know you well, where you have a brothel. You and yours will benefit.

94 Laissez-faire...dites-vous? Leave it to me. You are from Lyon, you say?

94, 95 Lyon Lyon was a clothmaking city, but perhaps it was also chosen for the bawdy pun when the pronunciation is anglicized: 'Lie on'.

95 De...dame. From Lyon, my dear woman.

96–7 Mon...disposition. My cousin! I'm so pleased to see you in good health.

97.1 compliment a ceremonious greeting, probably they bow

98 Ma cousine! My cousin!

102 capsula cordis Latin: the centre of his heart

103 quassative inclined to shake

110 Ey begar a corruption of 'Yes, by God' à Lyon at Lyon

113 cousin punning on 'cozen', cheat

114 connosh a corruption of 'connais', to know

118 fishmonger (a) seller of fish; (b) pimp

- 125 MARGARITA J'essayerai encore une fois, monsieur cousin, pour votre sauveté. [He offers her money] Allez-vous en. Votre liberté est suffisante. Je gagnerai le reste pour mon devoir, et vous aurez votre part à mon école. J'ai une fille qui parle un peu français. Elle conversera avec vous à la Fleur-de-Lice en Turnbull Street. Mon cousin, ayez soin de vous-même, et trompez ces ignorans.
- 130 YOUNG FRANKLIN Cousine, pour l'amour de vous, et principalement pour moi, je suis content de m'en aller. Je trouverai votre école, et si vos écoliers me sont agréables, je tirerai à l'épée seule. Et si d'aventure je la rompe, je payerai dix sous. Et pour ce vieux fol et ces deux canailles, ce poulain Snip-snap, et l'autre bonnet rond, je les verrai pendre premier que je les vois. Exit
- 135 CAMLET So, so, she has got him off. But I perceive much anger in his countenance still. And what says he, madam?
- 140 MARGARITA Moosh moosh anger, but ey connosh heere lodging shall cool him very well. Dere is a kinse-womans can moosh allay heere heat and heere spleene. She shall do for my saka, and he no trobla you.
- 145 CAMLET [giving her money] Look, there is earnest, but thy reward's behind. Come to my shop, the Holy Lamb in Lombard Street; thou hast one friend more than e'er thou hadst.
- 150 MARGARITA Tank u monsieur. Shall visit u. Ey make all pacifie—à votre service très humblement. [Aside] Tree, four, five fool of u. Exit
- 155 CAMLET What's to be done now?
- COUNTERBUFF To pay us for our pains, sir, and better reward us that we may be provided against further danger that may come upon 's for false imprisonment.
- CAMLET All goes false I think. What do you, neighbour Sweetball?
- 160 BARBER I must phlebotomize, sir, but my almanac says the sign is in Taurus. I dare not cut my own throat, but if I find any precedent that ever barber hanged himself I'll be the second example.
- RALPH This was your ill lixivium, barber, to cause all to be cheated.
- COUNTERBUFF [to Camlet] What say you to us, sir? 165
- CAMLET Good friends, come to me at a calmer hour. My sorrows lie in heaps upon me now. What you have, keep; if further trouble follow I'll take it on me. I would be pressed to death.
- COUNTERBUFF Well, sir, for this time we'll leave you. 170
- BARBER I will go with you, officers. I will walk with you in the open street though it be a scandal to me. For now I have no care of my credit; a cacochymy is run all over me.
- Exeunt Sweetball the barber, Counterbuff and Fleshhook*
- CAMLET What shall we do now, Ralph? 175
- Enter George*
- RALPH Faith, I know not, sir. Here comes George, it may be he can tell you.
- CAMLET And there I look for more disaster still. Yet George appears in a smiling countenance. Ralph, home to the shop; leave George and I together. 180
- RALPH I am gone, sir. Exit
- CAMLET Now, George, what better news eastward? All goes ill t'other way.
- GEORGE I bring you the best news that ever came about your ears in your life, sir. 185
- CAMLET Thou putttest me in good comfort, George.
- GEORGE My mistress, your wife, will never trouble you more.
- CAMLET Ha? Never trouble me more? Of this, George, may be made a sad construction; that phrase we sometimes use when death makes the separation. I hope it is not so with her, George? 190
- GEORGE No, sir, but she vows she'll never come home again to you, so you shall live quietly. And this I took to be very good news, sir. 195
- CAMLET The worst that could be, this—candied poison.

125-31 J'essayerai... ignorans. I'll try once more, mister cousin, for your safety. He offers her money. Go away! Your freedom is enough. I'll earn the rest for my duty, and you'll have your share at my school. I have a girl who speaks some French. She'll talk with you at the Fleur-de-Lice in Turnbull Street. My cousin, take care of yourself—and cheat these fools.

128 école a euphemism for brothel

128-9 une fille qui parle un peu français a prostitute

129 conversera 'Talk' is a euphemism.

Fleur-de-Lice There was a tavern called the Fleur-de-Lis in Turnbull Street; the original spelling has been retained since it probably indicates pronunciation and implication: lice: fleas.

132-8 Cousine... vois. Cousin, for the love of you, and principally for me, I'm willing to go. I'll find your school, and if your students please me I'll draw one sword only. And if perchance I break it, I'll pay ten sous. And for this old fool and these two scoundrels, this snip-snapping colt and the other round hat, the next time I see them I'll see them hanged.

134-5 tirerai à l'épée seule with a double entendre: sword: penis

136-7 ce vieux fol... bonnet rond Franklin refers to Camlet, Counterbuff and Fleshhook, Sweetball, and Ralph.

146 earnest a sum of money paid as an instalment, especially to secure a bargain or contract

147 behind still to come

151 pacifie... humblement peaceful—at your very humble service

159 phlebotomize practise phlebotomy, or bloodletting

almanac a book of astrological charts

169 pressed to death the painful punishment for those who refused to plead either guilty or not guilty, of having the body pressed by heavy weights. Unlike the comparatively painless punishment of hanging, this saved forfeiture of the victim's goods to the crown.

172 scandal damaging his reputation because people will know he has been cheated (?)

173 credit reputation

cacochymy an unhealthy state of the humours or bodily fluids; see 3.2.32-3.

182 eastward (fig.) from elsewhere

I love her, George, and I am bound to do so.
 The tongue's bitterness must not separate
 The united souls. 'Twere base and cowardly
 200 For all to yield to the small tongue's assault.
 The whole building must not be taken down
 For the repairing of a broken window.
 GEORGE Ay, but this is a principle, sir. The truth is she will be divorced, she says, and is labouring with her cousin 205 Knave—what do you call him?—I have forgotten the latter end of his name.
 CAMLET Knavesbe, George.
 GEORGE Ay, Knave or Knavesbe; one I took it to be.
 CAMLET Why neither rage nor envy can make a cause,
 210 George.
 GEORGE Yes, sir, not only at your person, but she shoots at your shop too. She says you vend ware that is not warrantable, braided ware, and that you give not London measure. Women, you know, look for more 215 than a bare yard. And then you keep children in the name of your own which she suspects came not in at the right door.
 CAMLET She may as well suspect immaculate truth to be curs'd falsehood.
 220 GEORGE Ay, but if she will, she will; she's a woman, sir.
 CAMLET 'Tis most true, George. Well, that shall be red-dressed. My cousin Cressingham must yield me pardon;
 the children shall home again and thou shalt conduct
 'em, George.
 225 GEORGE That done, I'll be bold to venture once more for her recovery since you cannot live at liberty, but because you are a rich citizen you will have your chain about your neck. I think I have a device will bring you together by th'ears again, and then look to 'em as well 230 as you can.
 CAMLET
 O, George, amongst all my heavy troubles this
 Is the groaning weight. But restore my wife.
 GEORGE
 Although you ne'er lead hour of quiet life?
 CAMLET
 I will endeavour't, George, I'll lend her will 235 A power and rule to keep all hushed and still.

Eat we all sweetmeats we are soonest rotten.
 GEORGE
 A sentence! Pity't should have been forgotten.

Exeunt

Finis Actus Tertius

Incipit Actus Quartus

Enter Sir Francis Cressingham and a surveyor [severally]

4.1

SURVEYOR Where's Master Steward?
 CRESSINGHAM Within.—What are you, sir?
 SURVEYOR A surveyor, sir.
 CRESSINGHAM And an almanac-maker, I take it. Can you tell me what foul weather is toward?
 5 SURVEYOR Marry, the foulest weather is that your land is flying away. Exit
 CRESSINGHAM A most terrible prognostication! All the resort, all the business to my house is to my lady and Master Steward, whilst Sir Francis stands for a cipher. I 10 have made away myself and my power as if I had done it by deed of gift. Here comes the controller of the game.
 Enter Saunder [the steward]
 SAUNDER What, are you yet resolved to translate this unnecessary land into ready money?
 CRESSINGHAM Translate it?
 15 SAUNDER The conveyances are drawn and the money ready. My lady sent me to you to know directly if you meant to go through in the sale. If not, she resolves of another course.
 CRESSINGHAM Thou speakest this cheerfully methinks, 20 whereas faithful servants were wont to mourn when they beheld the lord that fed and cherished them is by cursed enchantment removed into another blood. Cress-ingham of Cressingham has continued many years, and must the name sink now?
 25 SAUNDER All this is nothing to my lady's resolution. It must be done or she'll not stay in England. She would know whether your son be sent for that must likewise set his hand to th' sale. For otherwise the lawyers say there cannot be a sure conveyance made to the buyer. 30

197 bound by marriage; also suggesting 'destined'
 209 cause the case of one party in a suit for divorce
 211-12 shoots at censures
 213 warrantable guaranteed as genuine braided ware goods that have changed colour, tarnished, or faded
 214 London measure London cloth-sellers gave a certain amount above the standard yard in their measurements. Another bawdy pun on 'yard' follows.
 216-17 came not in at the right door (fig.) are illegitimate; a variant of the proverb,

'To come in at the window'
 226 at liberty free
 227 chain worn by rich citizens, with an ironic glance at Rachel as Camlet's chain or restraint, threatening his business and therefore his social status
 228 device scheme
 229 by th'ears ironic; The phrase means to be at variance; also alluding to the loudness of Rachel Camlet's voice.
 236 all only
sweetmeats sweets
 237 sentence a maxim; a variant of the proverb, 'A little with quiet is the only diet'

 4.1 attributed to Webster
 4 I take it Perhaps the Surveyor is carrying charts.
 6-7 foulest...away punning on 'foulest'
 8 prognostication prediction
 9 resort visitors
 10 cipher zero; (fig.) a thing of no value 16 conveyances documents transferring property ownership
 22-3 is...removed...blood has lost the privileges of birth and rank 28-9 set his hand to authorize

CRESSINGHAM Yes, I have sent for him. But I pray thee think what a hard task 'twill be for a father to persuade his son and heir to make away his inheritance.

SAUNDER Nay, for that use your own logic. I have heard you talk at the sessions terribly against deer stealers, and that kept you from being put out of the commission.

Exit

Enter Young Cressingham [as himself]

CRESSINGHAM [aside] I do live to see two miseries: one to be commanded by my wife, the other to be censured by my slave.

40 YOUNG CRESSINGHAM [kneeling] That which I have wanted long and has been cause of my irregular courses, I beseech you, let raise me from the ground.

CRESSINGHAM Rise, George. [George rises] There's a hundred pounds for you, and my blessing; with these your mother's favour. But I hear your studies are become too licentious of late.

YOUNG CRESSINGHAM [aside] He's heard of my cozenage.

CRESSINGHAM What's that you are writing?

YOUNG CRESSINGHAM Sir, not anything.

50 CRESSINGHAM Come, I hear there's something coming forth of yours will be your undoing.

YOUNG CRESSINGHAM Of mine?

CRESSINGHAM Yes, of your writing; somewhat you should write will be dangerous to you.—I have a suit to you.

55 YOUNG CRESSINGHAM Sir, my obedience makes you commander in all things.

CRESSINGHAM
I pray, suppose I had committed some fault For which my life and sole estate were forfeit To the law, and that some great man near the king Should labour to get my pardon on condition He might enjoy my lordship. Could you prize Your father's life above the grievous loss Of your inheritance?

60 YOUNG CRESSINGHAM Yes, and my own life at stake too.

CRESSINGHAM
You promise fair; I come now to make trial of it.
You know I have married one whom I hold so dear That my whole life is nothing but a mere estate Depending upon her will and her affections to me. She deserves so well I cannot longer merit Than durante beneplacito. 'Tis her pleasure. And her wisdom moves in't too—of which I'll give you 70 Ample satisfaction hereafter—that I sell The land my father left me. You change colour!

I have promised her to do't and should I fail I must expect the remainder of my life As full of trouble and vexation 75 As the suit for a divorce. It lies in you By setting of your hand unto the sale To add length to his life that gave you yours.

YOUNG CRESSINGHAM
Sir, I do now ingeniously perceive Why you said lately somewhat I should write 80 Would be my undoing, meaning—as I take it— Setting my hand to this assurance. O, good sir, Shall I pass away my birthright? O, remember There is a malediction denounced against it In holy writ. Will you, for her pleasure, 85 The inheritance of desolation leave To your posterity? Think how compassionate The creatures of the field that only live On the wild benefits of nature are Unto their young ones. Think likewise you may 90 Have more children by this woman, and by this act You undo them too. 'Tis a strange precedent this, To see an obedient son labouring good counsel To the father! But know, sir, that the spirits Of my great-grandfather and your father moves 95 At this present in me; and what they bequeathed you, On your deathbed they charged you not to give away In the dalliance of a woman's bed. Good sir, Let it not be thought presumption in me that I have continued my speech unto this length. 100 The cause, sir, is urgent; and, believe it, you Shall find her beauty as malevolent unto you As a red morning that doth still foretell A foul day to follow. O, sir, keep your land; Keep that to keep your name immortal and you shall see 105 All that her malice and proud will procures Shall show her ugly heart, but hurt not yours.

CRESSINGHAM
O, I am distracted and my very soul Sends blushes into my cheeks.

Enter George with [Cressingham's] two children

YOUNG CRESSINGHAM See here an object To beget more compassion. 110

GEORGE O, Sir Francis, we have a most lamentable house at home, nothing to be heard in't but separation and divorces, and such a noise of the spiritual court as if it were a tenement upon London Bridge and built upon the arches. 115

35 sessions the periodical sittings of justices of the peace
36 commission the Commission of Peace; Cressingham is a Justice of the Peace
45 favour preference
46 licentious unrestrained by law or morality
66 estate condition
69 durante beneplacito Latin: during her good pleasure

79 ingeniously cleverly
84-5 malediction . . . holy writ Gen. 27
108 distracted disturbed
111 lamentable mournful
113 noise threatening talk spiritual court the court with religious and ecclesiastical jurisdiction

114 tenement upon London Bridge The bridge from the Tower across the Thames had houses and shops along its length on both sides.
115 arches a reference to the noisy arches of London Bridge, and an allusion to the Court of Arches where divorces were tried

Act 4 Scene 1

Any thing for a quiet Life.

CRESSINGHAM What's the matter?
 GEORGE All about boarding your children, my mistress is departed.
 CRESSINGHAM Dead?
 120 GEORGE In a sort she is, and laid out too, for she is run away from my master.
 CRESSINGHAM Whither?
 GEORGE Seven miles off, into Essex. She vowed never to leave Barking while she lived till these were brought home again.
 125 CRESSINGHAM O, they shall not offend her. I am sorry for't.
 FIRST CHILD I am glad we are come home, sir, for we lived in the unquietest house!
 SECOND CHILD The angry woman methought grudged us our victuals. Our new mother is a good soul and loves us and does not frown so like a vixen as she does.
 130 FIRST CHILD I am at home now, and in heaven methinks. What a comfort 'tis to be under your wing!
 SECOND CHILD Indeed my mother was wont to call me your nestlecock, and I love you as well as she did.
 135 Enter Saunder, Knavesbe, and Surveyor
 CRESSINGHAM You are my pretty souls.
 YOUNG CRESSINGHAM Does not the prattle of these move you?
 140 SAUNDER [to Cressingham] Look you, sir; here's the conveyance and my lady's solicitor. Pray resolve what to do; my lady is coming down.—How now, George, how does thy mistress that sits in a waistcoat gown like a citizen's lure to draw in customers? O, she's a pretty mousetrap!
 145 GEORGE She's ill-baited though to take a Welshman—she cannot away with cheese.
 CRESSINGHAM And what must I do now?
 KNAVESBE Acknowledge a fine and recovery of the land, then for possession the course is common.
 150 CRESSINGHAM Carry back the writings, sir; my mind is changed.
 SAUNDER Changed! Do not you mean to seal?
Enter Lady Cressingham
 CRESSINGHAM No sir, the tide's turned.
 SAUNDER [aside to Lady Cressingham] You must temper him like wax or he'll not seal.
 155

LADY CRESSINGHAM [to the children] Are you come back again? [To Cressingham] How now, have you done?
 FIRST CHILD How do you, Lady Mother?
 LADY CRESSINGHAM You are good children. [To George] Bid my woman give them some sweetmeats. 160
 FIRST CHILD Indeed, I thank you. Is not this a kind mother? [Exit George with children]
 YOUNG CRESSINGHAM Poor fools, you know not how dear you shall pay for this sugar.
 LADY CRESSINGHAM [to Cressingham] What, ha'n't you dispatched? 165
 CRESSINGHAM No sweetest. I am dissuaded by my son From the sale o'th' land.
 LADY CRESSINGHAM Dissuaded by your son!
 CRESSINGHAM I cannot get his hand to't.
 LADY CRESSINGHAM Where's our steward?
 [To Saunder] Cause presently that all my beds and hangings Be taken down. Provide carts, pack them up; 170
 I'll to my house i'th' country. [To Cressingham] Have I studied The way to your preferment and your children's And do you cool i'th' upshot?
 YOUNG CRESSINGHAM With your pardon, I cannot understand this course a way To any preferment; rather a direct 175
 Path to our ruin.
 LADY CRESSINGHAM O, sir, you are young-sighted. [To Knavesbe] Show them the project of the land I mean to buy in Ireland that shall out-value yours three thousand in a year.
 [Knavesbe shows a map]
 KNAVESBE Look you, sir, here is Clangibbon, a fruitful 180 country and well wooded.
 CRESSINGHAM What's this, marsh ground?
 KNAVESBE No these are bogs, but a little cost will drain them. This upper part that runs by the Blackwater is the Cusacks' land, a spacious country and yields excellent 185 profit by the salmon and fishing for herring. Here runs

120 laid out (a) prepared for burial; (b) spent, expended, (usually referring to money)
 123 Essex a mostly agricultural county on the east coast of England
 124 Barking a town in Essex; with a pun on 'barking'
 129 grudged begrudged
 130 victuals food
 131 vixen shrew
 135 nestlecock the last hatched bird or weaking of a brood, hence a mother's pet
 137 prattle childish chatter
 142 waistcoat a short, elaborate garment worn by women on the upper part of the body. To wear the waistcoat with no outer gown was disreputable; prostitutes were called 'waist-coaters'.

 145-6 Welshman . . . cheese The Welsh were said to be especially fond of cheese.
 146 away with tolerate
 148 fine and recovery A fine was an agreement of a suit, real or fictitious, whereby the lands in question were acknowledged to belong to one party ('fine' because final). Recovery was a complicated method of making a conveyance of fee-simple or lands held in tail.

 149 common Court of Common Pleas
 152 seal ratify the agreement
 154-5 temper . . . wax (fig.) manipulate carefully
 165 dispatched completed the transaction
 180 Clangibbon There was a Clangibbon in the south-west of Ireland, in Limerick County.
 184 Blackwater There was a Blackwater river in the south-east of Ireland, in Waterford County.
 185 Cusacks' Cusack or Cussack is a well-known Irish name.

the Kernesdale, admirable feed for cattle, and here about is St Patrick's Purgatory.
 190 YOUNG CRESSINGHAM Purgatory! Shall we purchase that too?
 LADY CRESSINGHAM
 Come, come, will you dispatch th'other business?
 We may go through with this?
 CRESSINGHAM My son's unwilling.
 LADY CRESSINGHAM
 Upon my soul, sir, I'll never bed with you
 Till you have sealed.
 195 CRESSINGHAM Thou hearest her. On thy blessing
 Follow me to th' court and seal.
 YOUNG CRESSINGHAM Sir, were it my death, were't to th' loss of my estate, I vow to obey you in all things. Yet with it remember there are two young ones living that may curse you. I pray dispose part of the money on 200 their generous educations.
 LADY CRESSINGHAM Fear not you, sir.—[She calls] The caroche there! [To Cressingham] When you have dispatched, you shall find me at the scrivener's where I shall receive the money.
 205 YOUNG CRESSINGHAM [aside] She'll devour that mass too.
 LADY CRESSINGHAM [to Saunder] How likest thou my power over him?
 SAUNDER Excellent.
 LADY CRESSINGHAM
 This is the height of a great lady's sway,
 210 When her night-service makes her rule i'th' day.
Exeunt, manet Knavesbe
Enter Knavesbe's wife [unseen by him]
 KNAVESBE Not yet, Sib? My lord keeps thee so long thou'rt welcome I see then, and pays sweetly too. A good wench, Sib, thou'rt, to obey thy husband. [He sees 215 her] She's come. A hundred mark a year. [He embraces her] How fine and easy it comes into mine arms now!
 Welcome home—what says my lord, Sib?
 SIB KNAVESBE My lord says you are a cuckold.
 KNAVESBE Ha, ha, ha, ha! I thank him for that bob, i'faith.
 I'll afford it him again at the same price a month 220 hence, and let the commodity grow as scarce as it will.
 'Cuckold' says his lordship! Ha, ha,
 I shall burst my sides with laughing, that's the worst.
 Name not a hundred a year, for then I burst.

It smarts not so much as a fillip on the forehead by five parts. What has his dalliance taken from thy lips? 'Tis 225 as sweet as e'er 'twas—let me try else. [He tries to kiss her] Buss me, sugar-candy.
 SIB KNAVESBE [pushing him away]
 Forbear; you presume to a lord's pleasure!
 KNAVESBE How's that?
 Not I, Sib?
 SIB KNAVESBE
 Never touch me more.
 I'll keep the noble stamp upon my lip,
 230 No underbaseness shall deface it now.
 You taught me the way, now I am in I'll keep it.
 I have kissed ambition and I love it.
 I loathe the memory of every touch
 My lip hath tasted from thee.
 235 KNAVESBE
 Nay, but sweet Sib, you do forget yourself.
 SIB KNAVESBE
 I will forget all that I ever was,
 And nourish new, sirrah. I am a lady.
 KNAVESBE
 Lord bless us, Madam.
 SIB KNAVESBE I have enjoyed a lord,
 That's real possession, and daily shall,
 240 The which all ladies have not with their lords.
 KNAVESBE But with your patience, madam, who was it that preferred you to this ladyship?
 SIB KNAVESBE
 'Tis all I am beholden to thee for;
 Thou'st brought me out of ignorance into light.
 245 Simple as I was, I thought thee a man
 Till I found the difference by a man.
 Thou art a beast, a hornèd beast, an ox.
 KNAVESBE
 Are these ladies' terms?
 SIB KNAVESBE For thy pander's fee,
 It shall be laid under the candlestick;
 250 Look for't, I'll leave it for thee.
 KNAVESBE A little lower,
 Good your ladyship, my cousin Camlet
 Is in the house. Let these things go no further.
 SIB KNAVESBE
 'Tis for mine own credit if I forbear,

187 Kernesdale or the dale of the Kernes, poor Irish footsoldiers or, more generally, rustics or boors. There was a Kearne near the Bay of Galway.

188 St Patrick's Purgatory It was in the north-west of Ireland, in Ulster. The places named are widely separated, implying that Lady Cressingham's plan is impossible.

189 purchase a reference to the sale of indulgences or pardons by the church

202 caroche a luxurious coach

210 night-service sexual intercourse

210.1 Exeunt, manet Knavesbe While the fictitious location changes to Knavesbe's house here, because Knavesbe remains on stage the scene does not change; from here to the end of the scene is attributed to Middleton.

214 A hundred mark a year about $1000 today

218 bob a taunt

220 commodity sexual favours

224 fillip a flick of the finger

224-5 five parts four fingers and a thumb

226 else to see if it isn't true

227 Buss kiss

248 beast . . . ox a cuckold; Sib Knavesbe has not committed adultery, but wants her husband to think she has 250 laid under the candlestick an allusion to the proverb, 'It is good to set a candlestick before the devil'. Sib means that Knavesbe has done the devil's work.

252 Camlet Rachel Camlet

- 255 Not thine, thou bugle-browed beast, thou.
Enter George with rolls of paper [seeming not to see the Knavesbes]
- GEORGE [to himself] Bidden, bidden, bidden, bidden. So, all these are passed, but here's as large a walk to come. If I do not get it up at the feast, I shall be leaner for bidding the guests, I'm sure.
- 260 KNAVESBE How now! Who's this?
 GEORGE [reading to himself] 'Doctor Glistler, et', what word's this? f-u-x-o-r? O, 'uxor', the Doctor and his wife. 'Master Body et uxor of Bow Lane, Master Knavesbe et uxor.'
- 265 KNAVESBE [to his wife] Ha! We are in, whatsoever the matter is.
 GEORGE Here's forty couple more in this quarter. But there the provision bringing in, that puzzles me most. 'One ox'—that will hardly serve for beef too—'five muttuns, ten lambs'—poor innocents they'll be devoured too—'three gross of capons.'
- KNAVESBE Mercy upon us! What a slaughterhouse is here!
 GEORGE 'Two bushels of small birds: plovers, snipes, woodcocks, partridge, larks'—then for baked meats.
- 275 KNAVESBE George, George, what feast is this? 'Tis not for St George's Day?
 GEORGE Cry you mercy sir, you and your wife are in my roll; my master invites you his guests tomorrow dinner.
 KNAVESBE Dinner, sayest thou? He means to feast a month sure.
- 280 GEORGE Nay, sir, you make up but a hundred couple.
 KNAVESBE Why, what ship has brought an India home to him that he's so bountiful? Or what friend dead—unknown to us—has so much left to him of arable land that he means to turn to pasture thus?
- 285 GEORGE Nay, 'tis a vessel, sir; a good estate comes all in one bottom to him, and 'tis a question whether ever he find the bottom or no. A thousand a year, that's the uppermost.
- 290 KNAVESBE A thousand a year!
 GEORGE To go no further about the bush, sir—[aside] now the bird is caught—my master is tomorrow to be married, and amongst the rest invites you a guest at his wedding dinner the second.
- 295 KNAVESBE Married!
 GEORGE There is no other remedy for flesh and blood, that will have leave to play whether we will or no, or wander into forbidden pastures.
- KNAVESBE Married! Why he is married, man—his wife is in my house now—thy mistress is alive, George. 300
 GEORGE She that was, it may be, sir, but dead to him. She played a little too rough with him and he has discarded her. He's divorced, sir.
 KNAVESBE He divorced! Then is her labour saved, for she was labouring a divorce from him. 305
 GEORGE They are well parted then, sir.
 KNAVESBE But wilt thou not speak with her? I'faith, invite her to't.
 GEORGE 'Tis not in my commission; I dare not. Fare you well, sir; I have much business in hand and the time is short. 310
 KNAVESBE Nay, but George, I prithee, stay. May I report this to her for a certain truth?
 GEORGE Wherefore am I employed in this invitation, sir?
 KNAVESBE Prithee, what is she, his second choice? 315
 GEORGE Truly a goodly presence, likely to bear great children and great store. She never saw five and thirty summers together in her life by her appearance, and comes in her French hood. By my fecks, a great match 'tis like to be. I am sorry for my old mistress but cannot help it. Pray you excuse me now, sir, for all the business goes through my hands, none employed but myself. 320
Exit
 KNAVESBE Why here is news that no man will believe but he that sees.
 SIB KNAVESBE This and your cuckoldry will be digestion throughout the city dinners and suppers for a month together; there will need no cheese. 325
Enter Rachel Camlet [unseen by the Knavesbes]
 KNAVESBE No more of that, Sib. I'll call my cousin Camlet and make her partaker of this sport. [He sees her] She's come already. Cousin, take't at once, you're a free woman—your late husband's to be married tomorrow. 330 RACHEL CAMLET Married! To whom?
 KNAVESBE To a French-hood, byrlakins, as I understand. Great cheer prepared and great guests invited, so far I know. 335
 RACHEL CAMLET What a cursed wretch was I to pare my nails today, a Friday too. I looked for some mischief.
 KNAVESBE Why, I did think this had accorded with your best liking: you sought for him what he has sought for you, a separation, and by divorce too. 340
 RACHEL CAMLET I'll divorce 'm! Is he to be married to a French-hood? I'll dress it the English fashion. Ne'er a

255 bugle-browed horned

256 bidden invited

258 get it up eat well

261 Glistler a suppository or enema

262 f-u-x-o-r phonetically, 'fucks 'er'

uxor Latin: wife

263 Bow Lane a street in Cheapside, formerly Cordwayner's Street, from the shoemakers who had shops there

267 quarter district

274 baked meats meat pies

276 St George's Day 23 April. St George was the patron saint of England. At 3.2.159-60 Sweetball says 'the sign is in

Taurus' (20 April-20 May), so Knavesbe makes a reasonable assumption. Taurus is the Bull, another allusion to cuckoldry.

282 India proverbial for its wealth in gold and gems

287 bottom (a) a ship; (b) an end

291-2 bush... caught alluding to the proverb, 'a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush'

319 French hood a hood of softly pleated fabric; also possibly a headdress worn by women when punished for unchastity

325 digestion (fig.) after-dinner talk

331 late past

333 byrlakins an expletive; a contraction of

'by our ladykin' (the Virgin Mary)

337 Friday... mischief because Friday was associated with Catholicism (?)

342 the English fashion the latest fashion

- coach to be had with six horses to strike fire i'th' streets as we go?
- 345 KNAVESBE Will you go home then?
- RACHEL CAMLET Good cousin, help me to whet one of my knives while I sharp the t'other; give me a sour apple to set my teeth an edge. I would give five pound for the paring of my nails again. Have you e'er a bird-spit i'th' house, I'll dress one dish to the wedding.
- 350 KNAVESBE This violence hurts yourself the most.
- RACHEL CAMLET I care not who I hurt. O, my heart, how it beats o' both sides! Will you run with me for a wager into Lombard Street now?
- 355 KNAVESBE I'll walk with you, cousin, a sufficient pace. Sib shall come softly after. I'll bring you through Bearbinder Lane.
- RACHEL CAMLET Bearbinder Lane cannot hold me. I'll the nearest way over St Mildred's Church. If I meet any French-hoods by the way I'll make black patches enough for the rheum. Exeunt, manet Sib Knavesbe
- SIB KNAVESBE
So, 'tis to my wish, Master Knavesbe.
Help to make peace abroad, here you'll find wars,
I'll have a divorce too, with locks and bars. Exit
- 4.2 Enter George, Margarita [at Camlet's shop]
- GEORGE Madam, but stay here a little; my master comes instantly. I heard him say he did owe you a good turn and now's the time to take it. I'll warrant you a sound reward ere you go.
- Enter Camlet*
- 5 MARGARITA Ey tank u de bon coeur, monsieur.
- GEORGE Look, he's here already. [Aside] Now would a skilful navigator take in his sails, for sure there is a storm towards. Exit
- 10 CAMLET O, Madam, I perceive in your countenance I am beholden to you—all is peace?
- MARGARITA All quiet, goor frends sheep, ey mooch a do, ey strive wid him, give goor worda for you, no more speak a de matra. All es undone—u no more trobla.
- Enter Rachel Camlet and Knavesbe [unseen by the others]*
- 15 CAMLET [giving her money] Look, there's the price of a fair pair of gloves, and wear 'em for my sake.
- RACHEL CAMLET [aside to Knavesbe] O, O, O, my heart's broke out of my ribs!
- KNAVESBE Nay, a little patience.
- MARGARITA [to Camlet] Ey tank u 'eartily, shall no bestow en gloves, shall put moosh more to dees and bestow your shop. Regardez dees stofa my petticoat—u no soosh anodre. Shall deal wid u for moosh. Take in your hand.
- CAMLET [taking up her petticoat] I see it, mistress, 'tis good stuff indeed, 'tis a silk rash—I can pattern it.
- 25 RACHEL CAMLET [aside] Shall he take up her coats before my face? [Coming forward] O, beastly creature! French-hood! French-hood! I will make your hair grow through!
- CAMLET My wife returned!—O, welcome home, sweet Rachel.
- 30 RACHEL CAMLET I forbid the banns! Lecher and strumpet, thou shalt bear children without noses.
- MARGARITA O, pardonnez-moi, by my trat ey mean u no hurta; wat u meant by dees?
- RACHEL CAMLET I will have thine eyes out, and thy bastards shall be as blind as puppies.
- 35 CAMLET Sweet Rachel. [To Knavesbe] Good cousin, help to pacify.
- RACHEL CAMLET I forbid the banns, adulterer.
- CAMLET [to Knavesbe] What means she by that, sir?
- 40 KNAVESBE [restraining Rachel Camlet] Good cousin, forbid your rage awhile. Unless you hear, by what sense will you receive satisfaction?
- RACHEL CAMLET [trying to free herself] By my hands and my teeth, sir—give me leave. Will you bind me whiles mine enemy kills me?
- 45 CAMLET Here all are your friends, sweet wife.
- RACHEL CAMLET Wilt have two wives? Do and be hanged, fornicator. I forbid the banns. Give me the French hood; I'll tread it under feet in a pair of pantofles.
- 50 MARGARITA Begar, shall save hood, head and all; shall come no more heer, ey warran u. Exit
- KNAVESBE
Sir, the truth is, report spoke it for truth,
You were tomorrow to be married.
- RACHEL CAMLET
I forbid the banns.
- 55 CAMLET Mercy deliver me—
If my grave embrace me in the bed of death,
I would to church with willing ceremony.
But for my wedlock-fellow—here she is,
The first and last that e'er my thoughts looked on.
- KNAVESBE [to Rachel Camlet]
Why law you, cousin; this was naught but error
- 60

346-7 one of my knives an allusion to a pair of knives worn at the girdle by a bride; see Edward III 2.2.171

350 dress cook

353 run . . . wager (fig.) race me for a prize

358 Bearbinder Lane a narrow street in Cheapside, now called George Street, running into Lombard Street

359 St Mildred's Church a church in London on the north side of the Poultry, a street connecting Cheapside and Cornhill

360-1 black patches . . . rheum Black patches were worn to hide signs of disease; here they are bruises.

4.2 attributed to Middleton

5 de bon coeur, monsieur from the bottom of my heart, sir

11 goor good; This 'franglais' is similar to that of a couplet in Black Book 497-8.

13 matra matter

21 stofa stuff, material

24 rash a smooth fabric pattern copy

27-8 make your hair grow through The implication seems to be that Rachel will tear holes in Margarita's hood.

31 banns the proclamation in church of an intended marriage, in order that those who know of any impediment may object

32 children without noses as a result of syphilis

33 trat troth, truth

36 blind as puppies puppies are blind at birth

50 pantofles high-heeled, cork-soled slippers

YOUNG CRESSINGHAM But would you please
 Out of a friendly reprehension
 40 To make him sensible of the weighty wrong
 He has done his children? Yet I would not have it Too bitter for he undergoes already
 Such torment in a woman's naughty pride
 Too harsh reproof would kill him.
 OLD FRANKLIN Leave you that 45 To my discretion. I have made myself
 My son's executor and am come up
 On purpose to collect his creditors,
 And where I find his pennyworth conscionable
 I'll make them in part satisfaction.—
Enter George
 50 O, this fellow was born near me and his trading here i'th' city may bring me to the knowledge of the men
 my son owed money to.
 GEORGE Your worship's welcome to London; and, I pray,
 how does all our good friends i'th' country?
 55 OLD FRANKLIN They are well, George. How thou art shot up since I saw thee! What, I think thou art almost out of thy time?
 GEORGE I am out of my wits, sir. I have lived in a kind of Bedlam these four years. How can I be mine own man
 60 then?
 OLD FRANKLIN Why, what's the matter?
 GEORGE I may turn soap-boiler—I have a loose body—I am turned away from my master.
 OLD FRANKLIN How! Turned away!
 65 GEORGE I am gone, sir—not in drink, and yet you may behold my indentures.
[He shows the] indenture
 O, the wicked wit of woman—for the good turn I did bringing her home she ne'er left sucking my master's 70 breath like a cat—kissing him I mean—till I was turned away!

OLD FRANKLIN I have heard she's a terrible woman.
 GEORGE Yes, and the miserablist! Her sparing in housekeeping has cost him somewhat, the Dagger pies can testify. She has stood in's light most miserably—like 75 your fasting days before red letters in the almanac—saying the pinching of our bellies would be a mean to make him wear scarlet the sooner. She had once persuaded him to have bought spectacles for all his servants that they might have worn 'em dinner and 80 supper.
 OLD FRANKLIN To what purpose?
 GEORGE Marry, to have made our victuals seem bigger than't was. She shows from whence she came, that my wind-colic can witness.
 OLD FRANKLIN Why, whence came she?
 85 GEORGE Marry, from a courtier, and an officer too, that was up and down I know not how often.
 OLD FRANKLIN Had he any great place?
 GEORGE Yes, and a very high one, but he got little by it. He was one that blew the organ in the court chapel. Our 90 puritans, especially your puritans in Scotland, could ne'er away with him.
 OLD FRANKLIN Is she one of the sect?
 GEORGE 'Faith, I think not, for I am certain she denies her husband the supremacy.
 95 OLD FRANKLIN Well, George, your difference may be reconciled. I am now to use your help in a business that concerns me. Here's a note of men's names here i'th' city unto whom my son owed money, but I do not know their dwelling.
 100 GEORGE Let me see, sir. [Reading] 'Fifty pound ta'en up at use of Master Water Thin, the brewer.'
 OLD FRANKLIN What's he?
 GEORGE An obstinate fellow, and one that denied payment of the groats till he lay by th' heels for't. I know him.
 105 [Reading] 'Item, fourscore pair of provant breeches o'th'

39 reprehension reprimand
 48 pennyworth conscionable a reasonable amount
 49 satisfaction repayment
 55-7 shot up . . . time George has grown so much he looks old enough to have almost completed his period of indenture as an apprentice (but if he has served only four years, he has at least three remaining).
 59 Bedlam a madhouse; from Bethlehem, a hospital for the insane
 62 soap-boiler Soap was used for suppositor-ies.
loose body because not bound to a master, with a pun on 'soap'
 63 turned sent
 66 indentures the contract by which an apprentice is bound to a master who undertakes to teach him his trade
 72 sparing niggardliness

73 Dagger pies pies from the Dagger, a tavern in Cheapside famous for its ale and pies, where George was forced to go for food
 74 stood in's light (fig.) harmed his interests
 75 fasting days . . . almanac Fasting preceded important feasts and saints' days. In almanacs and ecclesiastical calendars such days were printed in red, other days in black.
 77 wear scarlet become an alderman
 83 from whence she came probably an allusion to the court of James I, in which corruption and scandal were pervasive
 84 wind-colic intestinal gas
 87 up and down had a place at court and lost it
 88 great place powerful position
 89 got little by it did not make money from it 91 puritans in Scotland This suggests that the Scottish puritans were the most extreme of the sect in their hatred of music.

 92 away with tolerate
 93 sect a puritan
 94-5 denies . . . supremacy Puritan teaching insisted on the traditional family hierarchy; here there is probably a bawdy pun on 'supremacy': the uppermost position.
 101-2 ta'en up at use of borrowed at interest
 105 groats (a) hulled grain, chiefly oats, but also wheat, maize, and barley, of which beer is made; (b) a coin worth 4p.
lay by th' heels literally, was put in irons or the stocks; but also, imprisoned 106 fourscore eighty provant breeches breeches supplied to soldiers; provant: soldiers' allowance

- new fashion to Pinch Buttock, a hosier in Birchin Lane', so much.
- 110 OLD FRANKLIN What the devil did he with so many pair of breeces?
- YOUNG FRANKLIN [disguised as an old servingman] Supply a captain, sir, a friend of his went over to the Palatinate.
- GEORGE 'Item, to my tailor, Master Weatherwise, by St Clement's Church.'
- 115 YOUNG CRESSINGHAM Who should that be? It may be 'tis the new prophet, the astrological tailor.
- YOUNG FRANKLIN No, no, no, sir; we have nothing to do with him.
- GEORGE Well, I'll read no further; leave the note to my discretion. Do not fear but I'll enquire them all.
- 120 OLD FRANKLIN Why, I thank thee, George. [To George Cressingham] Sir, rest assured I shall in all your business be faithful to you, and at better leisure find time to imprint deeply in your father the wrong he has done
you. Exeunt Old Franklin, George, and Young Franklin
- 125 YOUNG CRESSINGHAM [to the departing Old Franklin] You are worthy in all things.
Enter Saunder
Is my father stirring?
- 130 SAUNDER Yes, sir; my lady wonders you are thus chargeable to your father and will not direct yourself unto some gainful study may quit him of your dependence.
- YOUNG CRESSINGHAM What study?
- 135 SAUNDER Why, the law, that law that takes up most o'th' wits i'th' kingdom—not for most good but most gain.
Or divinity—I have heard you talk well and I do not think but you'd prove a singular fine churchman.
- YOUNG CRESSINGHAM I should prove a plural better, if I could attain to fine benefices.
- 140 SAUNDER My lady, now she has money, is studying to do good works. She talked last night what a goodly act it was of a countess—Northamptonshire breed belike, or thereabouts—that to make Coventry a corporation rode through the city naked, and by daylight.
- YOUNG CRESSINGHAM I do not think but you have ladies living would discover as much in private to advance but some member of a corporation.
Enter Sir Francis Cressingham
- SAUNDER Well, sir, your wit is still goring at my lady's projects. Here's your father.
- 150 CRESSINGHAM Thou comest to chide me, hearing how like a ward I am handled since the sale of my land.
- YOUNG CRESSINGHAM No, sir, but to turn your eyes into your own bosom.
- CRESSINGHAM Why, I am become my wife's pensioner, am confined to a hundred mark a year, t'one suit, and one 155 man to attend me.
- SAUNDER And is not that enough for a private gentleman?
- CRESSINGHAM Peace, sirrah; there is nothing but knave speaks in thee. And my two poor children must be put forth to prentice.
- 160 YOUNG CRESSINGHAM
Ha! To prentice! Sir, I do not come
To grieve you but to show how wretched your Estate was that you could not come to see order
Until foul disorder pointed the way to't—
So inconsiderate yet so fruitful still 165 Is dotage to beget its own destruction.
- CRESSINGHAM
Surely I am nothing, and desire to be so.
[To Saunder] Pray thee, fellow, entreat her only to be quiet;
I have given her all my estate on that condition.
- SAUNDER
Yes, sir; her coffers are well lined, believe me.
- 170 CRESSINGHAM
And yet she is not contented. We observe
The moon is ne'er so pleasant and so clear
As when she is at the full.
- YOUNG CRESSINGHAM You did not use
My mother with this observance. You are like
The frogs, who, weary of their quiet king,
175 Consented to the election of the stork,
Who in the end devoured them.
- CRESSINGHAM You may see

107 new fashion the latest fashion
hosier one who sells hose, stockings;
more generally a men's outfitter, haberdasher

Birchin Lane a street running from Lombard Street to Cornhill, where drapers and secondhand clothes dealers were located

112 Palatinate a German protectorate.
James's daughter Elizabeth was married to the Elector of the Palatinate. English volunteers for its defence embarked in July 1620.

113 Master Weatherwise also the name of a character in No Wit

113-14 St Clement's Church actually St Clement Danes church, at the east end of the Strand

116 new prophet...tailor probably the prophet Ball, a Puritan tailor

127.1 Enter Saunder Although the stage is not cleared, the fictional location seems to have changed to Cressingham's house.

130 chargeable burdensome

138 plural a reference to the ecclesiastical practice of priests holding several benefices, or positions in different locations

139 benefices ecclesiastical livings or positions

140 studying planning

141-2 act... of a countess According to legend, Lady Godiva (1040-80) implored her husband Leofric to reduce Coventry's heavy taxes. He agreed on the condition that she ride naked through the city.
She did so, with her hair covering all her body except her legs. On her return Leofric issued a charter freeing Coventry

'from servitude'. An annual procession in her honour was held in Coventry. St
George headed the procession and Lady
Godiva was represented.

142 Northamptonshire the county adjacent to Warwickshire, where Coventry is 146 discover uncover

147 corporation city administration

148 goring at sneering, scoffing at

151 ward a person, usually a minor, subject to a guardian

166 dotage (a) infatuation; (b) senility

170 coffers boxes or chests for keeping money or valuables

175-7 frogs...them a folktale

- How apt man is to forfeit all his judgement
Upon the instant of his fall.
- YOUNG CRESSINGHAM Look up, sir.
CRESSINGHAM
- 180 O, my heart's broke. Weighty are injuries
That come from an enemy, but those are deadly
That come from a friend for we see commonly Those are ta'en most to heart. She comes.
Enter Lady Cressingham
- YOUNG CRESSINGHAM
What a terrible eye she darts on us.
- 185 CRESSINGHAM O, most natural for lightning to go before the thunder.
LADY CRESSINGHAM What? Are you in council? Are ye levying faction against us?
CRESSINGHAM Good friend—
- 190 LADY CRESSINGHAM Sir, sir, pray come hither. There is winter in your looks, a latter winter. Do you complain to your kindred? I'll make you fear extremely to show you have any cause to fear. [To Saunder] Are the bonds sealed for the six thousand pounds I put forth to use?
- 195 SAUNDER Yes, madam.
LADY CRESSINGHAM The bonds were made in my uncle's
name?
SAUNDER Yes.
LADY CRESSINGHAM 'Tis well.
- 200 CRESSINGHAM 'Tis strange, though.
LADY CRESSINGHAM Nothing strange. You'll think the allowance I have put you to as strange, but your judgement cannot reach the aim I have in't. You were pricked last year to be high sheriff, and what it would 205 have cost you I understand now. All this charge and the other by the sale of your land, and the money at my dispose, and your pension so small will settle you in quiet, make you master of a retired life. And our great ones may think you a politic man and that you are 210 aiming at some strange business, having made all over.
CRESSINGHAM I must leave you. Man is never truly awake till he be dead. Exeunt Cressingham and Saunder YOUNG CRESSINGHAM What a dream have you made of my father!
- 215 LADY CRESSINGHAM Let him be so, and keep the proper place of dreams, his bed, until I raise him.
YOUNG CRESSINGHAM Raise him! Not unlikely 'tis you have ruined him.
LADY CRESSINGHAM You do not come to quarrel?
- YOUNG CRESSINGHAM No, certain, but to persuade you to 220 a thing that in the virtue of it nobly carries its own commendation—and you shall gain much honour by it, which is the recompense of all virtuous actions—to use my father kindly.
- LADY CRESSINGHAM Why? Does he complain to you, sir? 225
YOUNG CRESSINGHAM Complain! Why should a king complain for anything but for his sins to heaven? The prerogative of husband is like to his—over his wife.
- LADY CRESSINGHAM
I am full of business, sir, and will not mind you.
- YOUNG CRESSINGHAM
I must not leave you thus. I tell you, mother, 230
'Tis dangerous to a woman when her mind
Raises her to such height it makes her only
Capable of her own merit, nothing of duty.
O, 'twas a strange, unfortunate o'erprising
Your beauty brought him—otherwise discreet— 235
Into the fatal neglect of his poor children.
What will you give us of the late sum you received?
- LADY CRESSINGHAM
Not a penny. Away! You are troublesome and saucy.
- YOUNG CRESSINGHAM
You are too cruel. Denials, even from princes— 240
Who may do what they list—should be supplied
With a gracious verbal usage, that though they do
Not cure the sore they may abate the sense of't.
The wealth you seem to command over is his,
And he I hope will dispose of't to our use.
- LADY CRESSINGHAM
When he can command my will.
- YOUNG CRESSINGHAM Have you made him 245
So miserable that he must take a law from his wife?
- LADY CRESSINGHAM
Have you not had some lawyers forced to groan
Under the burden?
- YOUNG CRESSINGHAM
O! But the greater the women 250
The more visible are their vices.
- LADY CRESSINGHAM
So, sir, you have been so bold. By all can bind 255
An oath, and I'll not break it, I will not be
The woman to you hereafter you expected.
- YOUNG CRESSINGHAM
Be not; be not yourself; be not my father's wife;
Be not my Lady Cressingham, and then
I'll thus speak to you. But you must not answer 255

179 Look up cheer up188 faction opposition194 put forth to use loaned at interest204 pricked A prick was made next to the selected names in the list of those eligible.210 made all over put everything in his wife's name213 dream She has made him into a 'dream come true'.217–18 Raise...ruined with a pun on
'raise'; also, with the reference to bed, probably a double entendre on 'raise'228 prerogative right of supremacy233 Capable able to perceive234 o'erprising overestimating, overvaluing240 list please242 sense (a) feeling; (b) meaning247 some lawyers a probable reference tothe quarrels of Sir Edward Coke and his wife Elizabeth Hatton over property and the intended marriage of their daughter Frances to Sir John Villiers.
Both husband and wife appeared before the Privy council in a famous series of confrontations. This allusion to a contemporary marriage that symbolized disorder is particularly apposite.

	In your own person.		Enter Lord Beaufort and Knavesbe
	LADY CRESSINGHAM A fine puppet play!		BEAUFORT	5.2
	YOUNG CRESSINGHAM		Sirrah, be gone, you're base.
	Good madam, please you pity the distress		KNAVESBE Base, my good lord?
	Of a poor gentleman that is undone		'Tis a ground part in music, trebles, means,
260	By a cruel mother-in-law. You do not know her,		All is but fiddling—your honour bore a part,
	Nor does she deserve the knowledge of any good one,		As my wife says, my lord.
	For she does not know herself. You would sigh for her		BEAUFORT Your wife's a strumpet.
	That e'er she took your sex if you but heard		KNAVESBE
	Her qualities.		Ah, ha! Is she so? I am glad to hear it;	5
	LADY CRESSINGHAM		Open confession, open payment.
	This is a fine crotchet.		The wager's mine then—a hundred a year my lord—
	YOUNG CRESSINGHAM		I said so before and staked my head against it.
	Envy and pride flow in her painted breasts,		Thus after darksome night the day is come, my lord.
265	She gives no other suck. All her attendants		BEAUFORT
	Do not belong to her husband. His money is hers;		Hence, hide thy branded head. Let no day see thee,	10
	Marry, his debts are his own. She bears such sway		Nor thou any but thy execution day.
	She will not suffer his religion be his own		KNAVESBE
	But what she please to turn it to.		That's the day after washing day, once a week,
	LADY CRESSINGHAM And all this while		I see 't at home, my lord.
	I am the woman you libel against.		BEAUFORT Go home and see
270	YOUNG CRESSINGHAM I remember		Thy prostituted wife—for sure 'tis so—
	Ere the land was sold you talked of going to Ireland,		Now folded in a boy's adultery.	15
	But should you touch there you would die presently.		My page, on whom the hot-reined harlot dotes—
	LADY CRESSINGHAM		This night he hath been her attendant—my house
	Why, man?		he's fled from
	YOUNG CRESSINGHAM		And must no more return. Go, and make haste, sir
	The country brooks no poison. Go—		Lest your reward be lost for want of looking to.
	You'll find how difficult a thing it is		KNAVESBE
275	To make a settled or assured estate		My reward lost? Is there nothing due	20
	Of things ill gotten. When my father's dead		For what is passed, my lord?
	The curse of lust and riot follow you—		BEAUFORT
	Marry some young gallant that may rifle you!		Yes, pander, wittol, macrio, basest of knaves,
	Yet add one blessing to your needy age,		Thou bolster-bawd to thine own infamy!
	That you may die full of repentance.		Go! I have no more about me at this time.
280	LADY CRESSINGHAM Ha, ha, ha!		When I am better stored thou shalt have more	25
	YOUNG CRESSINGHAM		Where'er I meet thee.
	O! She's lost to any kind of goodness.	Exeunt	KNAVESBE Pander, wittol, macrio, base knave, bolsterbawd; here is but five mark toward a hundred a year.
			This is poor payment if lords may be trusted no better than thus! I will go home and cut my wife's nose off;	30

256 puppet play popular entertainment263 crotchet whimsical fancy; perverse notion264 painted coloured with cosmetics273 country . . . poison St Patrick, according to legend, purged Ireland of venomous creatures.278 rifle rob thoroughly

5.2 attributed substantially to Middleton

1 base morally low; leads to musical pun2 ground part the plain-song or melody on which a descant is raised means the middle or intermediate part in any harmonized composition or performance, especially the tenor and alto

3 fiddling (a) playing the violin; (b) having illicit sexual intercoursebore a part cooperated, with a *double entendre*8 staked my head with the usual wordplay on 'horns'10 branded marked12 day after washing day perhaps meaning that executions (seizures of goods for debt) were made on clean linen every week in Knavesbe's house (?)

16 hot-reined lustful22 wittol contented cuckoldmacrio mackerel, from French:'maquereau': a pimp23 bolster-bawd pimp; bolster: pillow27-35 Pander . . . primo These lines might be spoken as an aside as Knavesbe exits, but he is angry enough not to care if Lord Beaufort hears him.28 five mark with a pun on 'mark', since Beaufort hurls five insults at Knavesbe, and perhaps strikes him five times30 cut . . . off probably a twisted version of 'cutting one's nose off to spite one's face'; similar confusions follow

I will turn over a new leaf and hang up the page; lastly I will put on a large pair of wet-leather boots and drown myself. I will sink at Queenhithe and rise again at Charing Cross contrary to the statute in Edwardo primo. Exit

35 Enter Old Franklin, Young Franklin still disguised as an old servingman, George, three or four citizens (creditors)

OLD FRANKLIN Good health to your lordship.

BEAUFORT Master Franklin, I heard of your arrival and the cause of this your sad appearance.

40 OLD FRANKLIN And 'tis no more than as your honour says—indeed, appearance—it has more form than feeling sorrow, sir. I must confess there's none of these gentlemen—though aliens in blood—but have as large cause of grief as I.

FIRST CREDITOR No, by your favour, sir, we are well satisfied. There was in his life a greater hope, but less assurance.

45 SECOND CREDITOR Sir, I wish all my debts of no better promise to pay me thus; fifty in the hundred comes fairly homewards.

50 YOUNG FRANKLIN [in disguise] Considering hard bargains and dead commodities, sir.

SECOND CREDITOR Thou sayest true, friend, and from a dead debtor too.

BEAUFORT And so you have compounded and agreed all your son's riotous debts?

55 OLD FRANKLIN There's behind but one cause of worse condition; that done, he may sleep quietly.

FIRST CREDITOR Yes, sure, my lord; this gentleman is come a wonder to us all that so fairly with half a loss could satisfy those debts were dead even with his son, and from whom we could have nothing claimed.

60 OLD FRANKLIN I showed my reason, I would have a good name live after him because he bore my name.

SECOND CREDITOR May his tongue perish first—and that will spoil his trade—that first gives him a syllable of ill.

65 Enter Camlet

BEAUFORT Why, this is friendly.

CAMLET My lord!

BEAUFORT Master Camlet! Very welcome.

CAMLET Master Franklin, I take it—these gentlemen I know well, good Master Pennystone, Master Phillip, Master Cheyney! I am glad I shall take my leave of so many of my good friends at once. [To Beaufort, shaking his hand] Your hand first, my lord, fare you well, sir. [To others] Nay, I must have all your hands to my pass. [They shake hands]

70

75

GEORGE Will you have mine too, sir?

CAMLET Yes, thy two hands, George, and I think two honest hands of a tradesman, George, as any between Cornhill and Lombard Street.

GEORGE Take heed what you say, sir; there's Birchin Lane between 'em.

80

BEAUFORT But what's the cause of this, Master Camlet?

CAMLET I have the cause in handling now, my lord. George, honest George, is the cause, yet no cause of George's. George is turned away one way and I must go another.

85

BEAUFORT And whither is your way, sir?

CAMLET

E'en to seek out a quiet life, my lord.
I do hear of a fine peaceable island.

BEAUFORT

Why 'tis the same you live in.

CAMLET

No, 'tis so famed,
But we th'inhabitants find it not so.
The place I speak of has been kept with thunder,
With frightful lightnings, amazing noises,
But now—th'enchantment broke—'tis the land of peace,
Where hogs and tobacco yield fair increase.

90

95

BEAUFORT This is a little wild, methinks.

CAMLET [starting to leave] Gentlemen, fare you well, I am for the Bermudas.

BEAUFORT Nay, good sir, stay—and is that your only cause, the loss of George?

100

CAMLET The loss of George, my lord! Make you that no cause? Why but examine, would it not break the stout heart of a nobleman to lose his george? Much more the tender bosom of a citizen.

31 hang up the page In a printing house a newly printed page was hung to dry; 'page' is also a reminder of Selenger.

32 wet-leather waterproof; which would seem to prevent, not permit, drowning

33 Queenhithe a quay on the north bank of the Thames west of Southwark Bridge, which was a landing place for goods brought to London by sea

34 Charing Cross the cross erected by Edward I in honour of Eleanor, his queen, at the then village of Charing Cross between London and Westminster

34-5 contrary ... Edwardo primo According to legend, Eleanor, queen of Edward I, denied her guilt in the murder of the Lady Mayoress of London, praying that the earth might swallow her if she lied.

She sank immediately to the spot where Charing Cross was later erected and rose again at Queenhithe. She died later, after confessing to all her crimes. Note that contrary to this, Knavesbe intends to sink at Queenhithe and rise at Charing Cross.

42 aliens in blood not related to Young Franklin

48 fifty in the hundred half of what is owed

51 dead commodities unsaleable goods

54 compounded settled

56 behind not yet mentioned

57 sleep quietly rest in peace

70 Pennystone or penistone, a coarse woollen cloth manufactured in the Yorkshire town of that name

70-1 Master Phillip, Master Cheyney

'Philip and Cheyney' was the name for a worsted material.

79 Cornhill a street in London running east from the end of the Poultry past the Royal Exchange to Leadenhall

80 Birchin Lane 'To send a person to Birchin Lane' was a proverbial phrase ordering him to be whipped or otherwise punished.

83 in handling he holds George's hands

92-5 The place ... increase a probable allusion to Shakespeare's Tempest

98 Bermudas The islands symbolized tempests and enchantments.

103 george the jewelled figure of St George, part of the insignia of the Order of the Garter

- 105 BEAUFORT Fie, fie, I'm sorry your gravity should run back to lightness thus. You go to the Bermoothes!
 OLD FRANKLIN Better to Ireland, sir.
 CAMLET The land of ire—that's too near home. My wife will be heard from Helbre to Divelin.
- 110 OLD FRANKLIN Sir, I must of necessity awhile detain you; I must acquaint you with a benefit that's coming towards you. You were cheated of some goods of late. Come, I'm a cunning man and will help you to the most part again, or some reasonable satisfaction.
Enter Rachel Camlet [neither husband nor wife seeing the other]
- 115 CAMLET That's another cause of my unquiet life, sir. Can you do that, I may chance stay another tide or two. [he sees his wife—My wife!—[To Old Franklin] I must speak more private with you. By forty foot pain of death I dare not reach her. No words of me, sweet gentlemen. (Slips behind the arras)
- GEORGE I had need hide too. [Slips behind the arras]
- RACHEL CAMLET O, my lord, I have scarce tongue enough yet to tell you—my husband, my husband's gone from me. Your warrant, good my lord, I never had such need of your warrant—my husband's gone from me.
- 125 BEAUFORT Going he is, 'tis true; and has ta'en his leave of me and all these gentlemen, and 'tis your sharp tongue that whips him forwards.
- RACHEL CAMLET A warrant, good my lord.
- 130 BEAUFORT You turn away his servants, such on whom his estate depends, he says, who know his books, his debts, his customers. The form and order of all his affairs you make orderless; chiefly, his George you have banished from him.
- 135 RACHEL CAMLET My lord, I will call George again.
 GEORGE (within) Call George again.
- BEAUFORT Why, hark you how high-voiced you are that raise an echo from my cellarage which we with modest loudness cannot.
- 140 RACHEL CAMLET My lord, do you think I speak too loud?
 GEORGE (within) Too loud.
- BEAUFORT Why hark, your own tongue answers you and reverberates your words into your teeth.
- RACHEL CAMLET I will speak lower all the days of my life. I never found the fault in myself till now. Your warrant, good my lord, to stay my husband.
- 145
- BEAUFORT Well, well, it shall o'ertake him ere he pass Gravesend, provided that he meet his quietness at home, else he's gone again.
- OLD FRANKLIN And withal to call George again. 150
- RACHEL CAMLET I will call George again.
 GEORGE [within] Call George again.
 BEAUFORT See, you are raised again; the echo tells you.
 RACHEL CAMLET I did forget myself indeed, my lord; this is my last fault. I will go make a silent enquiry after George; I will whisper half a score porters in the ear that shall run softly up and down the city to seek him. Be wi' ye, my lord; bye all gentlemen. Exit 155
[George and Camlet come out from behind the arras]
- BEAUFORT George, your way lies before you now; cross the street and come into her eyes. Your master's journey will be stayed. 160
- GEORGE I'll warrant you bring it to better subjection yet. [Exit]
- BEAUFORT These are fine flashes—how now, Master Camlet?
- CAMLET I had one ear lent to you-ward, my lord, And this o'th' t'other side; both sounded sweetly. 165 I have whole recovered my late losses, sir; Th'one half paid, the t'other is forgiven.
- BEAUFORT Then your journey is stayed?
Enter Barber and Knavesbe
- CAMLET Alas, my lord, that was a trick of age, For I had left never a trick of youth 170 Like it to succour me.
- BEAUFORT [seeing Barber and Knavesbe] How now? What new object's here?
- BARBER The next man we meet shall judge us.
- KNAVESBE Content, though he be but a common council man. 175
- BEAUFORT The one's a knave; I could know him at twelve-score distance.
- OLD FRANKLIN And t'other's a barber-surgeon, my lord.
- KNAVESBE I'll go no further; here is the honourable lord that I know will grant my request. My lord— 180
- BARBER Peace, I will make it plain to his lordship. My lord, a covenant by jus jurandum is between us: he is to

106 Bermoothes a contemporary spelling and pronunciation; also the name of a brothel district in the neighbourhood of Covent Garden

109 Helbre to Divelin Helbre: a small island in the mouth of the river Dee off West Kirby. Divelin: an old form of Dublin. With doubles entendres in 'Hell-bre' and 'Devil-in'. Rachel's strident voice will carry across the Irish sea.

113 cunning skilful, ingenious. But a 'cunning-man' was one who was thought to possess magical knowledge or skill, a quality in keeping with Old Franklin's surprise appearance and plot resolution.

118–19 By forty foot . . . reach her i.e. 'On pain of death I must not come within forty feet of her'; a reference in Doctor Faustus 2.19 suggests that the distance of forty feet from the gallows has particular significance

131 books accounts
 137 high-voiced loud

148 Gravesend a port in Kent on the south bank of the Thames, thirty miles below London; the limit of the Port of London

150 withal as well

158 Be wi' ye elliptical form of 'God be with you'

162 subjection control, submission

163 flashes empty phrases, vulgarisms (?)

171 succour assist

175 common council the administrative body of London

183 jus jurandum Latin: oath

185 suffocate my respiration by his capistrum and I to make incision so far as mortification by his jugulars.
 BEAUFORT This is not altogether so plain neither, sir.
 BARBER I can speak no plainer, my lord, unless I wrong mine art.
 190 KNAVESBE I can, my lord; I know some part of the law. I am to take him in this place where I find him and lead him from hence to the place of execution and there to hang him till he dies. He in equal courtesy is to cut my throat with his razor, and there's an end of both on's.
 BARBER There is the end, my lord, but we want the beginning. I stand upon it to be strangled first, before I touch either his gula or cervix.
 195 KNAVESBE I am against it, for how shall I be sure to have my throat cut after he's hanged?
 BEAUFORT Is this a condition betwixt you?
 200 KNAVESBE A firm covenant, signed and sealed by oath and handfast, and wants nothing but agreement.
 BEAUFORT A little pause—what might be the cause on either part?
 BARBER My passions are grown to putrefaction and my griefs are gangrened. Master Camlet has scarified me all over, besides the loss of my new brush.
 205 KNAVESBE I am kept out of mine own castle, my wife keeps the hold against me; your page, my lord, is her champion. I summoned a parle at the window, was answered with defiance. They confess they have lain together, but what they have done else I know not.
 210 BEAUFORT Thou canst have no wrong that deserves pity, thou art thyself so bad.
 KNAVESBE I thank your honour for that; let me have my throat cut then.
 215 Enter Selenger as a woman, and Sib Knavesbe
 CAMLET Sir, I can give you a better remedy than his capistrum—your ear a little.
 [Camlet and Barber talk apart]
 SIB KNAVESBE
 I come with a bold innocence to answer
 The best and worst that can accuse me here.
 BEAUFORT
 Your husband.
 220 SIB KNAVESBE He's the worst; I dare his worst!
 KNAVESBE
 Your page, your page!
 SIB KNAVESBE We lay together in bed,
 It is confessed. You and your ends of law
 Makes worser of it; I did it for reward.
 BEAUFORT I'll hear no more of this.—Come gentlemen, will 225 you walk?

184 capistrum Latin: halter

195 stand upon insist on

196 gula Latin: throat

cervix Latin: neck

201 handfast the joining of hands in making a bargain

205 scarified scarred, covered with scratches

209 parle parley: conference

230 bravely met finely dressed

241 pinnacle a small boat

248 lading loading

255 circumscribed fig. confined

256 Abridged deprived of extendure extent

Enter Young Cressingham

YOUNG CRESSINGHAM

My lord, a little stay. You'll see a sight
 That neighbour amity will be much pleased with.

Enter Cressingham [in rich new clothing]

'Tis come already—my father, sir.

BEAUFORT

There must be cause certain for this good change.
 Sir, you are bravely met; this is at the best
 I ever saw you.

230

CRESSINGHAM

My lord, I am amazement to myself.
 I slept in poverty and am awake
 Into this wonder. How I came thus brave
 My dreams did not so much as tell me of.
 I am of my kind son's new making up.
 It exceeds the pension much—that yesternight
 Allowed me—and my pockets centupled.
 But I am my son's child, sir; he knows of me
 More than I do myself.

235

YOUNG CRESSINGHAM

Sir, you yet have
 But earnest of your happiness, a pinnace
 Foreriding a goodly vessel, by this near anchor,
 Bulked like a castle and with jewels fraught—
 Joys above jewels, sir, from deck to keel.
 Make way for the receipt, empty your bosom
 Of all griefs and troubles, leave not a sigh
 To beat her back again, she is so stored
 Ye 'ad need have room enough to take her lading.

240

245

CRESSINGHAM

If one commodity be wanting now,
 All this is nothing.

YOUNG CRESSINGHAM

Tush, that must out too,
 There must be no remembrance, not the thought
 That ever youth in woman did abuse you,
 That e'er your children had a stepmother,
 That you sold lands to please your punishment,
 That you were circumscribed and taken in,
 Abridged the large extendure of your grounds
 And put into the pinfold that belonged to't,
 That your son did cheat for want of maintenance.
 That he did beg, you shall remember only,
 For I have begged off all these troubles from you.

250

255

Enter Lady Cressingham in civil habit, Saunder, and [the two] children, very gallant

BEAUFORT This was a good week's labour.

YOUNG CRESSINGHAM

Not an hour's, my lord, but 'twas a happy one—
 See, sir, a new day shines on you.

260

257 pinfold (fig.) a place of confinement

260.1 civil habit sober, subdued clothes, presumably in contrast to her previous apparel. The two children are now in fine clothing whereas before they were poorly dressed.

Any thing for a quiet Life.

- BEAUFORT Yes, yes, I dare; he will mend one day.
SIB KNAVESBE And be worse the next.
KNAVESBE
 Hang me the third then, dear merciful wife,
 I will do 'anything for a quiet life'.
360 BEAUFORT All then is reconciled?
BARBER Only my brush is lost, my dear new brush.
OLD FRANKLIN I will help you to satisfaction for that too,
 sir.
BARBER O, spermaceti, I feel it heal already.
365 OLD FRANKLIN Gentlemen, I have fully satisfied my dead son's debts?
OMNES All pleased, all paid, sir.
OLD FRANKLIN
 Then once more, here I bring him back to life,
 From my servant to my son.
 [He removes his son's disguise]
 Nay, wonder not—370 I have not dealt by fallacy with any;
My son was dead. Whoe'er outlives his virtues
Is a dead man, for when you hear of spirits
That walk in real bodies to the amaze
And cold astonishment of such as meet 'em,
375 And all would shun, those are men of vices
- Who nothing have but what is visible;
And so by consequence they have no souls;
But if the soul return he lives again,
Created newly. Such my son appears
By my blessing rooted, growing by his tears. 380
OMNES You have beguiled us honestly, sir.
YOUNG FRANKLIN And you shall have your brush again.
BARBER My basins shall all ring for joy.
BEAUFORT
 Why, this deserves a triumph, and my cost
 Shall begin a feast to't to which I do 385
 Invite you all. Such happy reconcilements
 Must not be passed without a health of joy.
 Discorded friends atoned, men and their wives,
 This hope proclaims your after quiet lives. Exeunt
 Finis
I am sent t'enquire your censure, and to know Epilogue
How you stand affected. Whether we do owe
Our service to your favours, or must strike
Our sails—though full of hope—to your dislike. 5
Howe'er, be pleased to think we purposed well,
And from my fellows thus much I must tell,
Instruct us but in what we went astray,
And to redeem it, we'll take any way.

THE PARTS

Adult Males

- CAMLET (284 lines): Surveyor
YOUNG CRESSINGHAM (276 lines): Surveyor; Fleshhook, or Counterbuff
KNAVESBE (256 lines): Surveyor; Fleshhook, or Counterbuff
GEORGE (238 lines): Surveyor; Fleshhook, or Counterbuff
BEAUFORT (226 lines): Surveyor; Fleshhook, or Counterbuff
YOUNG FRANKLIN (213 lines): Surveyor
CRESSINGHAM (176 lines): Fleshhook, or Counterbuff
BARBER (125 lines): Surveyor
OLD FRANKLIN (78 lines): Surveyor; Fleshhook, or Counterbuff, or Ralph
SAUNDER (49 lines): Surveyor; Fleshhook, or Counterbuff
RALPH (46 lines): Surveyor; creditor (5.2)
COUNTERBUFF (3.2; 19 lines): any adult male but Camlet,
 Young Franklin, Ralph, George, Sweetball, Fleshhook
Three or Four CREDITORS (5.2; 14 lines): Fleshhook; Counterbuff; Ralph; or Surveyor

- FLESHHOOK (3.2; 4 lines): any adult male but Camlet,
 Young Franklin, Ralph, George, Sweetball, Counterbuff
SURVEYOR (4.1; 4 lines): any adult male but Old Cressing-ham

Youths

- SELENGER (45 lines): [Prologue, Epilogue]

Boys

- SIB KNAVESBE (230 lines): Barber's boy
LADY CRESSINGHAM (150 lines): Margarita; Barber's boy
RACHEL CAMLET (86 lines): Margarita; Barber's boy
MARGARITA (37 lines): First Child, or Second Child;
 Barber's boy
FIRST CHILD (12 lines): Margarita; Barber's boy
SECOND CHILD (9 lines): Margarita; Barber's boy
BARBER'S BOY (2.3, 2.4; 8 lines): any woman or child

- Most crowded scene: 5.2: 13 speaking parts (+ 6 or 7 mute)

- 364 spermaceti a fatty substance from the sperm whale, used medicinally 369.1 He...disguise The dialogue suggests that some such action occurs.
371-7 Whoe'er...souls According to

- church doctrine, a living person could, through acts of treachery, lose possession of his soul before he died; then the devil inhabits the body until its natural death.
Epilogue.1 censure judgement

THE CHANGELING

Text edited and annotated by Douglas Bruster, introduced by Annabel Patterson

The Changeling has been, for at least a century, alive and well in the theatre as well as the classroom. Like Hamlet, as the play without which Shakespeare is unimaginable, it has defined Middleton's canon around itself. It has enhanced the otherwise slim reputation of William Rowley, Middleton's collaborator. Though most frequently performed in English-speaking countries, it is known in Europe, having been translated into French (1948, 1956, 1966), Italian (1946), Hungarian (1961), and Spanish (1973); and it has even entered the territory of general literacy. In a 1994 television series, To Play the King, De Flores's cynical line, 'Some women are odd feeders', was complacently quoted by the evil British Prime Minister. Like Hamlet, The Changeling is powered by a toxic brew of domestic violence, sexual obsession and madness. Unlike Hamlet, however, The Changeling locates those threats to 'normality' in the protagonist's consummated sexual relationship, whose electric charge disables or at least disrupts our evaluative reflexes.

One might not have written such a sentence fifty years ago; but films like Blue Velvet (1986), The Draughtsman's Contract (1982), and The Night Porter (1973) have inured us to studies in sexual obsession. The Night Porter, though the earliest of these deliberate shockers, is the most pertinent analogy, since it shows how a criminal record in the past (of a concentration camp official and his Jewish concubine) binds together in the postwar present the hotel servant and the beautiful aristocrat, their social roles reversed, their rediscovered passion entirely self-destructive and entirely convincing. What has come over the film industry, however, is only one of several changes that make it time for a new account of The Changeling, one that might beg to differ from N. W. Bawcutt's brilliant and humane introduction to his Revels edition in 1958.

Criticism of Jacobean drama was then predominantly ethical in tone. Bawcutt declared that 'the moral world' of the play 'is the orthodox Christian universe of sin and punishment', and at the end, as the betrayed husband offers his father-in-law the filial duty that his daughter had withheld, 'moral order is finally established'. Today, ethical judgement seems more complicated, and readers and audiences will have contradictory responses. For example, the tendency of feminism to see women as the victims of the system can produce a protagonist who merely overreacted to being forced to marry according to her father's will, not hers. But the critique of dynastic marriage seems less pertinent here, where the daughter suddenly changes her mind about whom she desires as a husband, than in Women, Beware Women, where Middleton himself writes a passionate speech (for the Isabella of that play) attacking it. And though Vermandero and Alsemero will now appear to share more of the blame, even today those who arrange for the murder of an inconvenient mate may send shudders down our spines. Horror, however, will not prevent us from identifying more readily with guilty, scheming Beatrice-Joanna than with the cool, hands-off Isabella of the hospital plot, or from imagining what De Flores would be like as a lover. Middleton added to his source the bad skin and 'dogface' that at some level attracts Beatrice as much as it repels her, and, more importantly, makes it clear from what De Flores says that his name matches his belief in defloration as the quintessential form of sexual possession. But would these reactions not have been equally possible for Jacobean audiences? Our answer today may be different from those who in the mid-century defined the 'moral temper' of Jacobean tragedy; but it will likewise be only a guess.

We can speak more securely about the moral temper of literary criticism, which has certainly changed. The Christian-ethical vocabulary has been forgotten by readers accustomed to Freudian and Lacanian psychoanalysis, for whom sexuality is the power to which we owe allegiance. This assumption competes with a renewed curiosity about the sociopolitical circumstances in which the English public theatre appeared and spread like some fabulous alien growth. The extent to which The Changeling was specifically a play for 1622 is now again an interesting question; a political explanation may actually be necessary for otherwise mysterious additions to the plot and inexplicable remarks. And whereas Marxist and feminist approaches, which may claim that The Changeling interrogates hierarchical assumptions in the state and the family, reverse the traditionally negative evaluations of characters who breach them, a more narrowly historical approach will not necessarily steer audience sympathy in the same direction. Ideally, one would want to acknowledge all these possibilities, while remaining sensitive to the play's capacity to make us believe in its characters and their predicament—the quality for which it continues to be successfully revived.

The Changeling was a late work of both Middleton and Rowley, and both seem to have profited from years of experience in a theatre where writerly collaboration was, as we sometimes forget, as common as individual authorship. It has been common practice since P. G. Wiggin's 1897 study to attribute to Middleton most of the castle plot, while to Rowley are assigned the hospital plot and the opening and closing scenes of the play. And one strain of modern criticism deriving from T. S. Eliot has wished the hospital plot entirely away. Samuel Schoenbaum, himself engaged in recuperating Middleton as a tragic writer, declared it 'stupid and tedious, and the treatment of insanity... offensive to the modern reader'. Others, however, have been sensitive to the parallel-with-difference structure, whereby Isabella's successful resistance of her two disguised suitors and the leering warder Lollo is the normative foil to Beatrice-Joanna's betrayals. Several striking verbal analogies between the two plots suggest how closely Middleton and Rowley intended them to be related. Thus the famous moment when De Flores picks up Beatrice-Joanna's gloves and visibly 'thrust[s] his | ... fingers into her sockets' (1.1.237-8) is followed in the next scene by the sexual banter between Lollo and his employer Alibius, who keeps the madhouse and who is also Isabella's newly-married and insanely jealous husband. Will he manage to keep his new 'ring' on his own finger? 'If it but lie by,' sneers Lollo, 'one or other will be thrusting into't' (1.2.30-1).

It seems obvious now that the madness and folly which are literal in the hospital plot metaphorically indict the behaviour of all the castle-plot characters; not least because an antemasque of madmen and idiots is to be included in the wedding festivities for Alsemero and Beatrice-Joanna. But Alibius's speech describing his commission suggests a still more mysterious relation between the two plots:

Only an unexpected passage over,
To make a frightful pleasure, that is all—
But not the all I aim at. Could we so act it
To teach it in a wild distracted measure, Though out of form and figure, breaking Time's
head—

(It were no matter, 'twould be healed again
In one age or other, if not in this). (3.3.280-6)

This enigmatic statement, so out of character for the profit-conscious entrepreneur, is reminiscent of Hamlet's advice to the players that the purpose of theatre is to 'show the very age and body of the time his form and pressure' (3.2.25). Its strangeness plausibly gives these playwrights an alibi for defining their larger purpose. For while 'frightful pleasure' implies the sexual Sublime, to break time's head and to imagine its healing in another era suggests not self-destruction but reconstructive zeal.

The two plots explicitly converge in the last scene, where Alsemero explicates the play's title by listing the 'changes' or exchanges they have witnessed; of Beatrice-Joanna into a whore, of De Flores into a murderer, of Diaphanta for her mistress in the nuptial bed, of Tomazo the avenger into a reasonable person. But he concludes with the wide-open question, 'Are there any more on's?' This permits the addition of not one but three changelings from the hospital plot, Antonio, Franciscus and Alibius, whose change, as Isabella points out, 'is still behind', by which she means ahead. The title is therefore retroactively rendered plural, The Changelings, and may even have extension into the world outside the play.

One should be wary, however, of taking Alsemero's complacent categories at face value, since he stands self-accused of substituting skin-deep for inner beauty, as also of susceptibility (as victim of a bed-trick) to the cynical view that all cats are grey in the dark. As for his remarkable observation that 'servant-obedience' has changed in the person of De Flores to 'a master-sin: imperious murder', it logically implies that murder is the privilege of the aristocracy. This locution might support a class-based analysis of the play such as proposed by Jonathan Dollimore and modified by Cristina Malcolmson; but it makes better sense in the context of a highly specific political interpretation.

The most strenuous effort to provide this appears in a 1990 collaborative study by A. A. Bromham and Zara Bruzzi, who read the entire play as a 'hieroglyph' of its times, specifically the 'years of crisis' from 1619 to 1624. This is specificity indeed. But they can rightly claim that Middleton signalled his general intentions by topical allusion to the scandalous divorce of Frances Howard, Countess of Essex, from Robert Devereux, third earl of Essex, and her remarriage to Robert Carr, Earl of Somerset, the King's current favourite. The divorce was achieved by the claim of non-consummation, confirmed by a panel of matrons who examined the Countess internally. There was widespread scepticism about this test, including rumours that an actual virgin had been substituted for the Countess, who insisted on remaining veiled. When Beatrice-Joanna, terrified lest Alsemero will discover on their wedding night that she is no longer intact, engages Diaphanta as her substitute, and experiments on her with the medical test intended for herself, Diaphanta mutters in an aside: 'She will not search me, will she, | Like the forewoman of a female jury?' (4.1.102-3).

This odd remark was acknowledged by A. H. Bullen in 1885 and by Margot Heinemann in 1980 as an unmistakable allusion to the Somerset scandal; but in the Modernist criticism of the interim its importance was submerged. For Schoenbaum the whole episode of the virginity test was 'ridiculous'. Bawcutt saw it as fantastic, and wondered whether Middleton himself 'took it very seriously'. But we should remember that while the name of De Flores appeared in Middleton's source, John Reynolds's The Triumphs of God's Revenge against the Crying and Execrable Sin of Murder, there is no such emphasis there on defloration. Middleton added the entire episode of the tests and the bed-trick, thereby making virginity and its overvaluation a central theme of his tragedy.

In 1616, Howard and Somerset were tried for the murder of a courtier, Sir Thomas Overbury, who had strenuously opposed the divorce and remarriage. They were found guilty; their accomplices were executed, but their own sentences were commuted by James, and in January 1622 they were released from their none-too-uncomfortable restraint in the Tower. In that year it would also, therefore, have been just possible to hear another topical allusion in Alsemero's strange remark about Vermandero: 'How shall I dare to venture in his castle

| When he discharges murderers at the gate?' (I.I.226–7). Editors gloss this remark with the information that 'murderers' was a contemporary term for small cannon, but the remark still seems unwarranted. Later, a textual echo reinforces the more commonplace meaning—Vermandero's discovery that Antonio and Franciscus have been missing from his retinue since the day of Piracquo's murder: 'The time accuses 'em; a charge of murder | Is brought within my castle gate' (4.2.10–11).

It may be that Middleton used these allusions as discreet reparation for his earlier response to the Howard-Somerset marriage, the Masque of Cupids written to celebrate it, of which no text survives. But by using the Somerset affair as their key to interpretation, Bromham and Bruzzi went far beyond seeing such hints at abuse of power and privilege. They constructed a huge allegorical edifice, in which almost every detail of the play text is pressed into service. Middleton becomes a Puritan propagandist like Thomas Scott, obsessed by the fear of Roman Catholicism, which the Howard family were suspected of promoting, but also packing his play with the language of contemporary propaganda against Arminianism, the halfway house of conservative theology. Popular opposition to the so-called Spanish marriage—James's plan to marry Prince Charles to the Spanish Infanta and so promote his dream of a Europe reunited by dynastic ties—also becomes part of this frame, as does the crisis in the Palatinate, where James's own daughter Elizabeth and her husband Frederick, the Elector Palatine of Bohemia, had been driven out by Spanish forces. The nature and fate of A Game at Chess proves that Middleton was concerned with these issues. In what follows I want to distinguish between that reasonable hypothesis and the manner in which Bromham and Bruzzi stretch it beyond plausibility; not least because they cite my own theories of how literature responds to censorship as encouragement for their methods.

That recent European history was supposed to be part of the interpretive context is signalled in the opening scene, where Alsemero and Vermandero identify themselves as Spaniards and hence as enemies of the Protestant Dutch. Vermandero refers to the death of Alsemero's father at the Battle of Gibraltar in 1607, in which 'those rebellious Hollanders' defeated the Spanish fleet, and Alsemero responds, 'Whose death I had revenged... had not the late league | Prevented me' (I.I.186–9). This locates the action as occurring shortly after the Treaty of the Hague in 1609, which provided for a twelve-year truce between Spain and the United Provinces. By the time The Changeling was staged, the truce had lapsed (in 1621), and those same 'rebellious Hollanders' had provided a haven for the King and Queen of Bohemia.

This opening gambit presented The Changeling to audiences of 1622 as a contemporary play about 'Spanish' values in the context of international relations; but 'Spain' is also in some sense England. In explaining to Beatrice-Joanna that he is not rash in declaring his love for her instantaneously, Alsemero compares his eyes to the House of Commons, his judgement to the Lords, their agreement to the legislative consent of both Houses, her agreement to the royal concurrence (I.I.78–82). This witticism, a combination of Rowley's punsterism with Middleton's mordant irony, would remind an alert audience not of the smooth functioning of a limited monarchy, but of the currently deadlocked relation between James I and his Parliament. In 1621 the Commons had petitioned the King to abandon his pro-Spanish policy and the Spanish marriage negotiations, and to engage instead in a war against Spain, which would also constitute positive intervention in the fate of the Palatinate. In response, the King, who had already prohibited discussion of these matters in the press or the pulpit, cut short official debate by dissolving his Parliament.

From 1620 to 1624, when Parliament reconvened, there were therefore unusually strong motives for the theatre to take up the foreign policy debate. Both Jerzy Limon and Thomas Cogswell have shown how censorship and resistance to it, in the form of libels, sermons and unlicensed pamphlets, were intensified in these years. In A Game at Chess Middleton asks a telling question:

Whose policy was't to put a silenced muzzle
On all the barking tongue-men of the time?
Made pictures, that were dumb enough before,
Poor sufferers in that politic restraint? (3.I.102–105)

And one of the strongest points made by Bromham and Bruzzi is that John Reynolds, the author whose story Middleton borrowed for The Changeling, was himself an anti-Spanish propagandist who suffered from this 'politic restraint', being unable to publish his Vox Coeli until 1624, and then finding himself in prison in consequence. Was The Triumph of God's Revenge, entered in the Stationers' Register on 7 June 1621, an alternative way of 'picturing' support for the Puritan/Protestant faction in England? The tone of this collection, its focus on murderers, and its prefatory reference to writers 'cautious to disguise and maske their Acts, under the vayles of other names' (sig. B2^v) would seem to answer yes. But there is nothing in Reynolds's version of Middleton's tragic plot that matches the political entry codes I have just observed in The Changeling.

Other evidence from theatre history supports the hypothesis of a European-political subtext. The Changeling was licensed for performance on 7 May 1622 by Sir John Astley. The theatre was the Phoenix, the company the Lady Elizabeth's, otherwise known as the Queen of Bohemia's, which had just been reconstituted for London business in 1621 or 1622. After the disruptive plague of 1625 some of its members would merge with the remnant of the Palsgrave's (the Elector Palatine's ancestor) in the King and Queen of Bohemia's Company. The company, then, implied an allegiance. The Changeling was the first of the plays licensed to the new company; and on 4 January 1624, Sir Henry Herbert recorded its court performance 'by the Queene of Bohemias company,... the prince only being there'. This special performance before Prince Charles, just back (in October) from his abortive courtship of the Spanish Infanta, was probably a sign that Charles and Buckingham had already switched their policy from Hispanophilia to its opposite. Ironically, then, Charles himself became one of the many ‘changelings’ whose inconstancy the play either feared or encouraged.

But the most that can be argued from this collage of internal signposts and stage historical detail is that The Changeling permitted its original audiences to intuit a connection between Spanish/Catholic interests, crimes of violence, and sexuality out of control. Even at the level of allusion to the Somerset scandal, if one extends the analogy and imagines Somerset as De Flores, or James I himself as Vermandero, discomfort sets in. While early modern audiences expected only a loose fit between fiction and recent history (and I have elsewhere argued that Jacobean drama often employed inexact analogy for the purposes of deniability), Bromham and Bruzzi strain credibility when they turn The Changeling into a hostile political allegory of Jacobean foreign and domestic policy.

And in so far as we must assess the claims of different interpretive approaches, it is important to recognize that in The Changeling, as is not the case in A Game at Chess, an anti-Catholic agenda runs athwart an audience’s tendency to identify emotionally with the most doomed and interesting characters. Such an agenda is logically incompatible with Marxist or feminist claims that the play supports its rebels against convention, even if only temporarily and before recontainment; but it is almost compatible with the old-fashioned moralism by which Beatrice is condemned, in Bawcutt’s terminology, as ‘selfish, proud, self-righteous to the point of complacency, and in the later scenes hard and unscrupulous’ (lv).

This interpretive impasse can be, if not resolved, rendered less trivial if we imagine that Middleton and Rowley deliberately created it. What makes The Changeling work, both on the page and on the stage, is something less schematic and more accessible to a mixed audience than political allegory (though it can certainly have political dimensions). That something is ethical undecidability, an experience much attested to in the seventeenth century, and almost endemic today. The reciprocal exchange of meaning between the two plots, with its broad suggestion that the madhouse is coextensive with the nation, is only part of the story. Another is simply the quality of the writing, the ‘frightful pleasure’ of the perfect blank verse line in appalling circumstances:

I have within mine eye all my desires (2.2.8)
 Methinks I feel her in mine arms already (2.2.149)
 I could not get the ring without the finger (3.4.29)
 This fellow has undone me endlessly (4.1.1)

More subliminal still is the unusual system of linguistic bonding that Middleton and Rowley devised for this play, the structure of keywords that stand for, and lock together, those major issues (then and now) that otherwise might tend to separate out and dominate a reading or production. Christopher Ricks wrote a brilliant essay on ‘moral and poetic’ structure as deducible from the play’s vocabulary; but his method can be extended to question, once again, the explanatory power of an exclusively moral thematics. Obviously ‘change’ (with nineteen occurrences) is a keyword in The Changeling, and ‘choice’, ‘judgement’ and ‘will’ (emphases noted, tellingly, by both Bawcutt and Bromham/Bruzzi) belong to the realm of ethical decision-making or its failure. But ‘service’, with seventeen occurrences, also demands attention. It belongs ambiguously to the territories of formalized Petrarchan courtship, copulation, and class hierarchy. ‘Danger’ and ‘secrets’ and their cognates are unsurprising in a Jacobean melodrama, but ‘blood’, with its double reference to aristocratic birth and butchery, is here used with absolute clarity to signify analytical confusion. ‘Push, you forget yourself!’ says De Flores to Beatrice-Joanna when she reacts with horror to his proposition, ‘A woman dipped in blood, and talk of modesty?’ (3.4.128–9). Bleeding from the fatal stab De Flores has given her, she cries to her father at the end, ‘I am that of your blood was taken from you | For your better health’ (5.3.150–1), alluding to the end of the dynasty as well as to the medical practice of blood-letting.

Ricks noted these significances in ‘blood’ and ‘service’, but not that ‘poison’ appears no less than thirteen times, a strange verbal obsession in a play in which (unlike Women, Beware Women) no literal poison is used. The word runs secretly through the veins of this text until we can feel it burning; and though to some in 1622 it might have suggested poor Sir Thomas Overbury poisoned in the Tower, Alsemero glosses it as phobia. Thus in a world of flawed personalities, wine, oil and the scent of roses may all be poisonous to someone, and Beatrice does well to ask, ‘And what may be your poison, Sir?’ (1.1.127). As for ‘pleasure’, poison’s opposite, we have already seen it rendered sublime and oxymoronic in Alibius’s ‘frightful pleasure’; but a careful reader can discover that elsewhere in the play it is always sexual, and especially a sign of De Flores’s priorities. ‘The wealth of all Valencia shall not buy,’ he says, forcing Beatrice-Joanna to recognize the colour of the coin in which she must pay for murder, ‘My pleasure from me’ (3.4.163–4). ‘Yes,’ he cries defiantly in the last scene, ‘and her honour’s prize | Was my reward. I thank life for nothing | But that pleasure’ (5.3.167–9). So much for the primacy of the economic.

In the live theatre, of course, we cannot count words to discover subliminal thematics, and such balancing acts as I have just performed between The Changeling’s preoccupations are usually impossible for a director. But in one respect the performance history of The Changeling actually intensifies the dilemma of the scholarly interpreter, at least when a historicizing criticism is at issue. For if we are correct in inferring from the text an ‘oppositional’ agenda in the earliest seventeenth-century productions, how long could it have lasted? What could the play have meant to a Restoration audience? In 1659 John Rhodes, a former actor who sensed another change of the political winds, assembled a new Duke of York’s Company which included

The Changeling in its repertoire. We do not know to what qualities Samuel Pepys referred when he recorded seeing it at the Whitefriars on 23 February 1661, with Thomas Betterton playing De Flores, and reported that 'it takes exceedingly'. Joost Daalder records a court performance on 30 November 1668; but this could scarcely have carried the same message as the one before Charles II's father forty-six years earlier.

The 1668 performance was the last recorded before the revivals of the twentieth century, where the universities were considerably ahead of the professional theatre. The first modern production recorded by Marilyn Roberts was a Yale University student performance in May 1924, when most of the hospital plot was cut. But this strategy seems to have been more typical of university, radio or television productions than for the professional theatre. For instance, the first professional stage performance, in 1961, was directed by Tony Richardson for the English Stage Company at the Royal Court. Richardson set the play in the period of Goya's Spain, and spent considerable effort in making the hospital plot integral. In 1970, Peter Stein's production at the Schauspielhaus in Zurich made it symbolic of a bleak modernity illuminated by blue neon, and illustrating, so Dieter Sturm wrote for the programme, our vacillation between 'Herrschaft and Sexualität, ... sozialer Ordnung und psychischer Unterdrückung'. Although one reviewer of the 1977 production by the Wiesbaden Theatre reminded his readers of English Hispanophobia in the 1620s, stage revivals unsurprisingly tend to favour the broader categories of psycho-social analysis over historical reconstruction. In Peter Gill's 1978 production at the Riverside Studios, Hammersmith, the audience seating was raised on scaffolding, creating an underground world in which the lunatics were allowed to roam like wild animals; while Terry Hands's production of the same year focused primarily on the sexuality of Beatrice-Joanna, emphasized the multiple sexual puns in the text, and created a stylized moral colour scheme of red and black, which is not so different, finally, from the black and white of an earlier ethical tradition.

But in Richard Eyre's notorious production for the Lyttleton Theatre in June 1988, the distinction between stage and study seems to have been deliberately, if confusingly, abrogated. The impact of new academic styles of criticism—Marxist, feminist and ethnic (and their competition)—was rendered explicit. The programme featured a portrait of Miranda Richardson as Beatrice-Joanna, with primitive symmetrical gashes on both cheeks, an effect repeated for De Flores. The Eyre programme also became a work of cross-cultural (and often self-contradictory) theory, featuring mini-essays on class and race, enforced dynastic marriage, the early modern madhouse, and the rise of capitalism. Eyre himself was quoted as saying: 'I have tried to make this [Jacobean] interdependence of rank and money visibly apparent, by transposing the play to a Spanish slave colony of the nineteenth century'. By way of Ronald Harwood's All the World's a Stage, readers were invited to locate the play specifically in early seventeenth-century England, and to imagine it imagining 'the internecine rage of the Civil War to come'. But this prophetic turn was itself compared to the nightmares of psychiatric patients in the 1920s and 1930s which Jung diagnosed as previews of Fascist horrors. We come full circle, then, to the world of The Night Porter.

Despite its confusions, one sentence in this medley will serve us well. 'Sometimes a nation', wrote Harwood, 'will choose the theatre to do its collective dreaming.' Provided we see them as sharing with us the diagnosis as well as the symptoms, it would be hard to write a better sentence in which to condense Middleton and Rowley's achievement, and to explain why The Changeling seems so disturbingly familiar today.

SEE ALSO

Textual introduction and apparatus: Companion, 1094

Authorship and date: Companion, 422

Other Middleton–Rowley works: Weapons, 980; Quarrel, 1209; Old Law, 1331; Tennis, 1405; Gypsy, 1723

WILLIAM ROWLEY and THOMAS MIDDLETON

The Changeling

[for Lady Elizabeth's Men at The Phoenix]

THE PERSONS OF THE PLAY

BEATRICE-Joanna, Daughter to Vermandero
DE FLORES, Servant to Vermandero
ALSEMERO, A Nobleman, afterwards married to Beatrice
JASPERINO, His friend
DIAPHANTA, Beatrice's Waiting-woman
VERMANDERO, A Noble captain, father to Beatrice
TOMAZO de Piracquo, A Noble lord
ALONZO de Piracquo, His brother, suitor to Beatrice
ISABELLA, Wife to Alibius

ALIBIUS, A jealous doctor
LOLLIO, His man
ANTONIO, A Gallant, and counterfeit fool
FRANCISCUS, A Gallant, and counterfeit madman
PEDRO, Friend to Antonio
MADMEN SERVANTS
Gentlemen
Gentlewomen
Gallants

I. I Incipit Actus Primus
 Enter Alsemero

ALSEMERO

'Twas in the temple where I first beheld her,
And now again the same; what omen yet
Follows of that? None but imaginary.
Why should my hopes of fate be timorous?
5 The place is holy, so is my intent:
I love her beauties to the holy purpose,
And that, methinks, admits comparison
With man's first creation, the place blest,
And is his right home back, if he achieve it.
10 The church hath first begun our interview

And that's the place must join us into one;
So there's beginning and perfection too.

Enter Jasperino

JASPERINO

O sir, are you here? Come, the wind's fair with you,
You're like to have a swift and pleasant passage.

ALSEMERO

Sure you're deceivèd, friend; 'tis contrary
In my best judgement.

15

JASPERINO

What, for Malta?

If you could buy a gale amongst the witches,
They could not serve you such a lucky pennyworth
As comes o' God's name.

Title Although Antonio is identified as 'the' changeling in the dramatis personae of the 1653 quarto, this may well have been a later interpolation. The word 'changeling' had numerous meanings, many of them applicable here: (a) a retarded (here 'foolish') or ugly child left in place of another child by fairies; (b) a fickle, inconstant person (compare Tilley C234), often with implications of sexual infidelity; (c) any person substituted for another. During the late 1610s and early 1620s 'changeling' began to be applied with increasing frequency to those who had changed and otherwise altered gender roles. Patrick Hannay's 1618/19 Happy Husband, for example, complains of a man 'so womaniz'd turn'd Dame,

| As place 'mongst Ovids changlings
he might claime'; and in The Spanish Gypsy (1623), Pretiosa vows to 'play the changeling', altering her shape, posture, and voice a thousand ways as she cross dresses (as a man) (2.1.106 ff).

I.1.6 the holy purpose marriage

8-12 the place... perfection too Alsemero persuades himself that his love of Beatrice-Joanna is as holy as the place where it began ('the temple'); that it is directed ('my intent') toward marriage ('the holy purpose'), a state comparable to that of Adam and Eve before the Fall ('man's first creation', where the Garden of Eden—'the place blessed'—is man's 'right home back'); and, because they will be married there, the church is the fitting place first to have seen each other.

10 interview literally: mutual view, sight of each other

14 like likely

15 contrary against him (a wind which blows away from Alicante (and Beatrice) is 'contrary' to his wishes)

17 buy... witches In Renaissance folklore, witches were believed to have power over the weather, especially that which could affect ships at sea.

18 lucky pennyworth bargain

19 o' God's name without charge—the grace of God not for sale.

- ALSEMERO Even now I observed
 20 The temple's vane to turn full in my face,
 I know 'tis against me.
- JASPERINO Against you?
 Then you know not where you are.
- ALSEMERO Not well indeed.
- JASPERINO Are you not well, sir?
 ALSEMERO Yes, Jasperino;
 Unless there be some hidden malady
 Within me, that I understand not.
- 25 JASPERINO And that
 I begin to doubt, sir: I never knew
 Your inclinations to travels at a pause
 With any cause to hinder it till now.
 Ashore you were wont to call your servants up,
 30 And help to trap your horses for the speed;
 At sea I have seen you weigh the anchor with 'em,
 Hoist sails for fear to lose the foremost breath,
 Be in continual prayers for fair winds,
 And have you changed your orisons?
- ALSEMERO No, friend;
 35 I keep the same church, same devotion.
- JASPERINO Lover I'm sure you're none; the stoic
 Was found in you long ago—your mother
 Nor best friends, who have set snares of beauty (Ay, and choice ones too), could never trap you that way.
 What might be the cause?
- 40 ALSEMERO Lord, how violent Thou art! I was but meditating of Somewhat I heard within the temple.
- JASPERINO Is this violence?
 'Tis but idleness compared with your haste yesterday.
- ALSEMERO I'm all this while a-going, man.
Enter Servants
- JASPERINO Backwards,
 45 I think, sir.—Look, your servants.
- FIRST SERVANT The seamen call; shall we board your trunks?
- ALSEMERO No, not today.
- JASPERINO 'Tis the critical day,
 It seems, and the sign in Aquarius.
- SECOND SERVANT [aside] We must not to sea today? This 50 smoke will bring forth fire.
- ALSEMERO Keep all on shore; I do not know the end,
 Which needs I must do, of an affair in hand
 Ere I can go to sea.
- FIRST SERVANT Well, your pleasure. 55
- SECOND SERVANT [aside] Let him e'en take his leisure, too;
 we are safer on land. Exeunt Servants
Enter Beatrice-Joanna, Diaphanta, and Servants.
 [Alsemero greets Beatrice and kisses her]
- JASPERINO [aside] How now! The laws of the Medes are changed, sure. Salute a woman? He kisses too: won-60 derful! Where learnt he this? And does it perfectly too; in my conscience he ne'er rehearsed it before. Nay, go on; this will be stranger and better news at Valencia than if he had ransomed half Greece from the Turk.
- BEATRICE You are a scholar, sir.
- ALSEMERO A weak one, lady.
- BEATRICE Which of the sciences is this love you speak of? 65
- ALSEMERO From your tongue I take it to be music.
- BEATRICE You are skilful in't, can sing at first sight.
- ALSEMERO And I have showed you all my skill at once.
 I want more words to express me further,
 And must be forced to repetition: 70
 I love you dearly.
- BEATRICE Be better advised, sir:
 Our eyes are sentinels unto our judgements,
 And should give certain judgement what they see;
 But they are rash sometimes, and tell us wonders
 Of common things, which when our judgements find, 75
 They can then check the eyes, and call them blind.
- ALSEMERO But I am further, lady; yesterday

30 trap harness, put trappings on for the speed to speed up the process
 31 'em the servants
 34 orisons prayers
 36 the stoic The stoic philosophers were believed to have shunned emotion and sentiment in favour of rational, dispassionate existence.
 42 Somewhat something
 48 critical (astrologically) crucial
 49 Aquarius in the zodiac, the water sign—propitious for sailing
 50–1 This smoke... fire proverbial: 'No smoke without some fire' (Tilley, Dent S569). The Second Servant hints at some hidden meaning behind the order not to board ship.

 57.1 Beatrice-Joanna Etymologically,
 'Beatrice' means 'one who blesses/makes happy', and 'Joanna' means 'the Lord's grace'. But a strong pejorative sense also obtained in each case: Beatrice was a common nickname for a brazen woman, and Joanna for a common one.
Diaphanta (from the Greek),
 'transparent', 'light-revealing', 'glowing (red-hot)'.
 58 laws of the Medes proverbially constant; compare Daniel 6:8: 'the law of the Medes & Persians, which altereth not'.

 59 Salute greet, address
 61 in my conscience truly, to my knowledge
 62 Valencia capital of the province of Valencia, on the east coast of Spain.
 63 than if... Turk (Greece was at this time controlled by Turkey) 67 sing at first sight sight-read (both love and music)—i.e. You waste no time.
 With understated bawdy.
 69 want lack
 75 Of concerning
 76 check rebuke, censure
 77 I... further I'm past that stage

Was mine eyes' employment, and hither now
 They brought my judgement, where are both agreed.
 80 Both Houses then consenting, 'tis agreed,
 Only there wants the confirmation
 By the hand royal—that's your part, lady.
 BEATRICE O, there's one above me, sir.
 [Aside] For five days past to be recalled!
 85 Sure mine eyes were mistaken: this was the man was meant me.
 That he should come so near his time, and miss it!
 JASPERINO [aside] We might have come by the carriers from Valencia, I see, and saved all our sea-provision; we are at farthest, sure. Methinks I should do something too; I 90 meant to be a venturer in this voyage. Yonder's another vessel; I'll board her: if she be lawful prize, down goes her topsail.
 [He crosses to and greets Diaphanta]
 Enter De Flores
 DE FLORES
 Lady, your father—
 BEATRICE Is in health, I hope.
 DE FLORES
 Your eye shall instantly instruct you, lady:
 He's coming hitherward.
 95 BEATRICE What needed, then,
 Your duteous preface? I had rather
 He had come unexpected; you must stall
 A good presence with unnecessary blabbing:
 And how welcome for your part you are,
 I'm sure you know.
 100 DE FLORES [aside] Will't never mend, this scorn,
 One side nor other? Must I be enjoined
 To follow still whilst she flies from me? Well, Fates do your worst, I'll please myself with sight

Of her at all opportunities,
 If but to spite her anger. I know she had 105 Rather see me dead than living, and yet
 She knows no cause for't but a peevish will.
 ALSEMERO
 You seemed displeas'd, lady, on the sudden.
 BEATRICE
 Your pardon, sir, 'tis my infirmity,
 Nor can I other reason render you,
 110 Than his or hers, of some particular thing
 They must abandon as a deadly poison,
 Which to a thousand other tastes were wholesome;
 Such to mine eyes is that same fellow there,
 The same that report speaks of the basilisk.
 115 ALSEMERO
 This is a frequent frailty in our nature;
 There's scarce a man amongst a thousand found
 But hath his imperfection: one distastes
 The scent of roses, which to infinites
 Most pleasing is, and odoriferous;
 120 One oil, the enemy of poison;
 Another wine, the cheerer of the heart,
 And lively refresher of the countenance.
 Indeed this fault, if so it be, is general:
 There's scarce a thing but is both loved and loathed.
 125 Myself, I must confess, have the same frailty.
 BEATRICE
 And what may be your poison, sir? I am bold with you.
 ALSEMERO
 What might be your desire, perhaps—a cherry.
 BEATRICE
 I am no enemy to any creature
 130 My memory has but yon gentleman.

80-2 Both Houses ... hand royal political metaphor drawing on the two 'Houses' of parliament ('eyes', 'judgement'), which could propose a measure to which the monarch ('hand royal') might assent; Alsemero implies he wants her hand in marriage.
 83 one above me i.e. her father
 84 five days past apparently the length of time since her betrothal, upon which she now wishes to recant
 87 by the carriers i.e. by land (thus slowly) instead of by sea
 89 at farthest at the end (i.e. of one's journey, abilities, or wits). Perhaps here: 'we are surely out of our minds'.
 90 a venturer a partner in the commercial 'venture' of the voyage (here metaphorical: 'venture' = love, wooing)
 91 vessel ship (= Diaphanta), continuing the nautical metaphor.
board come alongside (i.e. accost)
lawful prize Sea adventurers were supposed to obey certain laws in taking plunder; the metaphor is one of 'boarding' Diaphanta, which may depend on her marital status.
 92 topsail A lowered sail signalled surrender; here of the woman to her accoster.
 92.2 De Flores both 'of the flowers' and 'the deflowerer'
 95 What needed, then what need was there, then, for 97 unexpected i.e. unannounced stall (a) 'to bring to a standstill, render unable to proceed' (OED v. III. 111a) (b) 'to take away (a person's) appetite' (OED v. III. 12a) (c) = install, with play on political sense of 'presence' (l. 98), 'to place in a high office or dignity' (OED v. II. 7a) 98 A good presence more desirable company (i.e. of Vermandero) blabbing babbling
 101 One side nor other one way or another (see 'side' OED sb.¹ III.2) enjoined ordered (by the 'fates' of l. 103)
 102 still always
 110-11 reason ... Than his or hers, of than any other person's (i.e. idiosyncratic) reasons concerning
 111-13 some ... wholesome compare the proverb: 'One man's meat is another man's poison' (Tilley M483)
 112 abandon reject
 113 were would be
 114 that same fellow i.e. De Flores; here 'fellow' = a man of low worth 115 report legend, myth basilisk a mythological serpent which could kill by its look 118 distastes dislikes
 119 infinites an infinite number of people
 121 One i.e. one man
 122 cheerer of the heart proverbial
 123 countenance demeanour toward others as expressing good or ill will (OED sb. 7)
 127-8 poison ... a cherry probably a kiss of her cherry-like lips, hence instrument of her 'desire'—where 'poison' = her influence in love, greatly exaggerated for effect. But perhaps with bawdy as well.
 130 yon gentleman i.e. De Flores

- ALSEMERO
He does ill to tempt your sight, if he knew it.
- BEATRICE
He cannot be ignorant of that, sir:
I have not spared to tell him so; and I want
To help myself, since he's a gentleman
135 In good respect with my father, and follows him.
- ALSEMERO He's out of his place then now. [They talk apart]
JASPERINO [to Diaphanta] I am a mad wag, wench.
- DIAPHANTA So methinks; but for your comfort I can tell you, we have a doctor in the city that undertakes the 140 cure of such.
- JASPERINO Tush, I know what physic is best for the state of mine own body.
- DIAPHANTA 'Tis scarce a well-governed state, I believe.
- JASPERINO I could show thee such a thing with an ingredient that we two would compound together, and if it did 145 not tame the maddest blood i'th' town for two hours after, I'll ne'er profess physic again.
- DIAPHANTA A little poppy, sir, were good to cause you sleep.
- 150 JASPERINO Poppy? I'll give thee a pop i'th' lips for that first, and begin there. [He kisses her] Poppy is one simple indeed, and cuckoo what-you-call't another. I'll discover no more now; another time I'll show thee all.
They talk apart
Enter Vermandero and Servants
- 155 BEATRICE My father, sir.
VERMANDERO O Joanna, I came to meet thee.
Your devotion's ended?
- BEATRICE For this time, sir.
[Aside] I shall change my saint, I fear me; I find A giddy turning in me.—Sir, this while 160 I am beholden to this gentleman,
Who left his own way to keep me company,
And in discourse I find him much desirous
To see your castle: he hath deserved it, sir,
- If ye please to grant it.
- VERMANDERO With all my heart, sir.
Yet there's an article between: I must know
165 Your country; we use not to give survèy
Of our chief strengths to strangers. Our citadels
Are placed conspicuous to outward view
On promonts' tops; but within are secrets.
- ALSEMERO
A Valencian, sir.
- VERMANDERO A Valencian?
That's native, sir; of what name, I beseech you?
170
- ALSEMERO
Alsemero, sir.
- VERMANDERO Alsemero? Not the son
Of John de Alsemero?
- ALSEMERO The same, sir.
- VERMANDERO
My best love bids you welcome.
- BEATRICE [aside] He was wont
To call me so, and then he speaks a most 175 Unfeignèd truth.
- VERMANDERO O sir, I knew your father:
We two were in acquaintance long ago,
Before our chins were worth Iulan down,
And so continued till the stamp of time
Had coined us into silver. Well, he's gone;
180 A good soldier went with him.
- ALSEMERO You went together in that, sir.
- VERMANDERO No, by Saint Jaques, I came behind him.
Yet I have done somewhat too. An unhappy day
Swallowèd him at last at Gibraltar,
185 In fight with those rebellious Hollanders.
Was it not so?
- ALSEMERO Whose death I had revenged,
Or followed him in fate, had not the late league Prevented me.
- VERMANDERO Ay, ay, 'twas time to breathe.

- 131 tempt test
- 133-4 want | To help myself lack means to correct this (by banishing him)
- 135 respect repute follows serves
- 136 He's... now therefore he's in the wrong place (Vermandero being absent)
- 139 doctor i.e. Alibius (presented in the following scene)
- 141 Tush a Rowleyan interjection
physic medicine
state Diaphanta plays on the metaphor of state as 'body politic'.
- 144-5 I could... together Under cover of medicinal discourse, Jasperino hints plainly at his need for sexual gratification.
- 144 such a thing i.e. his penis
- 144-5 ingredient with bawdy play on the etymological sense of ingredient as 'a thing which enters in or penetrates' (OED sb. 2)
- 145 compound (a) mix (b) copulate.
Jasperino plays on the sexual symbolism of the mortar and pestle
- 146 blood the seat of passion and desire
- 148 poppy a sleep-inducing, opiate plant
- 152 simple medicine or herb cuckoo what-you-call't probably the plant called the 'cuckoo-pintle' (wild arum) used medicinally. 'Pintle' was slang or dialectal for 'penis'—thus Jasperino's leading 'what-you-call't'.
- 153 discover reveal
- 158 saint here (and later) a pun on saint as (a) religious figure and (b) lover; compare 5.3.53
- 165 article this metaphor turns on the notion of a legal contract which has a prior condition to be met.
- 166 use not are not accustomed
- survèy observation
- 169 promonts' promontories'
- 174-6 He was... truth i.e. because I am my father's 'best love' (174), he truthfully says that his best love bids Alsemero welcome
- 178 Iulan down referring to the Aeneid's youthful Iulus Ascanius, whose name may have come from the Greek word for 'first growth of the beard' (= 'down')
- 180 coined us into silver made our hair silvery grey
- 181 A good... him i.e. when he died, a good soldier died.
- 182 went... that were as fine a soldier as he
- 183 Saint Jaques St James the Greater, patron saint of Spain
- 185-6 Gibraltar... Hollanders referring to the 1607 siege of the fortress called Gibraltar on the south coast of Spain
- 187 had would have
- 188 the late league The treaty of the Hague in 1609 brought peace between Spain and the Netherlands for twelve years.
- 189 breathe i.e. take a respite from fighting

190 O Joanna, I should ha' told thee news: I would not change him for a son-in-law
 I saw Piracquo lately. For any he in Spain—the proudest he, 220
 BEATRICE [aside] That's ill news. And we have great ones, that you know.
 VERMANDERO He's hot preparing for this day of triumph; He's much Thou must be a bride within this sevensnight. Bound to you, sir.
 ALSEMERO [aside] Ha! He shall be bound to me,
 BEATRICE As fast as this tie can hold him; I'll want 195 Nay, good sir, be not so violent. With speed My will else.
 I cannot render satisfaction BEATRICE [aside]
 Unto the dear companion of my soul, I shall want mine if you do it.
 Virginity, whom I thus long have lived with, VERMANDERO
 And part with it so rude and suddenly; But come; by the way I'll tell you more of him. 225
 200 Can such friends divide, never to meet again, ALSEMERO [aside]
 Without a solemn farewell? How shall I dare to venture in his castle VERMANDERO Tush, tush, there's a toy. When he discharges murderers at the gate?
 ALSEMERO [aside] But I must on, for back I cannot go.
 I must now part, and never meet again BEATRICE [aside, seeing De Flores]
 With any joy on earth.—Sir, your pardon, Not this serpent gone yet? [She drops glove]
 My affairs call on me. VERMANDERO Look, girl: thy glove's fall'n; 205 How, sir? By no means. Stay, stay.—De Flores, help a little.
 Not changed so soon, I hope? You must see my castle [Exeunt Vermandero, Alsemero,
 And her best entertainment ere we part; Jasperino and Servants]
 I shall think myself unkindly used else. DE FLORES [retrieving glove] Here, lady. 230
 Come, come, let's on: I had good hope your stay BEATRICE
 Had been a while with us in Alicante; Mischief on your officious forwardness!
 210 I might have bid you to my daughter's wedding. Who bade you stoop? They touch my hand no more:
 ALSEMERO [aside] [She throws down the other glove]
 He means to feast me, and poisons me beforehand.— There, for t'other's sake I part with this.
 I should be dearly glad to be there, sir, Take 'em and draw thine own skin off with 'em.
 Did my occasions suit as I could wish. [Exeunt [all but De Flores]]
 BEATRICE DE FLORES Here's a favour come with a mischief! 235
 I shall be sorry if you be not there Now I know she had rather wear my pelt handed 215 When it is done, sir—but not so suddenly. In a pair of dancing pumps than I should thrust VERMANDERO My fingers into her sockets here.
 I tell you, sir, the gentleman's complete: [He thrusts his hand into the glove]
 A courtier and a gallant, enriched I know
 With many fair and noble ornaments; She hates me, yet cannot choose but love her.

191 I saw...ill news invoking the proverb 'ill news comes too soon' (Tilley N14)
 192 hot excitedly
 193 sevensnight week (probably pronounced 'sénnight')
 201 toy trifle
 209 Alicante a seaport of Valencia on the eastern coast of Spain, where the play's action is laid 210 I might have I would, then, have been able to 211 poisons here figuratively, but with (unconsciously) ominous overtones
 215 When it...so suddenly Beatrice has a double meaning; for Alsemero she hints that she hopes the wedding is postponed long enough so that he is the groom. Holdsworth suggests 'When it is done' carries a sexual connotation.

216 complete perfect, accomplished.
 'Complete gentleman' was a popular phrase: compare Henry Peacham's 1622 The Complete Gentleman.
 218 ornaments qualities
 220 he i.e. man
 221 that you know you know that to be true
 221-2 He's...sir i.e. He would thank you, if he were here, for that handsome compliment. But Vermandero answers with wordplay on 'bound' in the sense of 'attached through matrimony'.
 223 this tie i.e. Beatrice
 223-4 I'll...else Otherwise ('else') my wishes will be unfulfilled.
 224 want Beatrice may play on 'want' in the double sense of 'lack' and 'desire'.

227 murderers literally, small canon mounted at the entries to fortifications; here used figuratively
 233 t'other's the other's
 234 Take... 'em i.e. If you put my gloves on your hands, may they stick to your skin and thus strip you raw. (Perhaps following from 'serpent' (229), which would shed its skin.)
 235 favour generally, any good thing; more specifically: a love token, often worn on the body of the beloved. Here the glove, perhaps dropped for Alsemero—De Flores's presence has prevented them from talking.
 with a mischief with a vengeance
 238 sockets the finger sockets of the glove, but with connotation of her sexual body.

- 240 No matter: if but to vex her, I'll haunt her still;
Though I get nothing else, I'll have my will. Exit
- 1.2 Enter Alibius and Lollo
- ALIBIUS
Lollo, I must trust thee with a secret,
But thou must keep it.
- LOLLIO I was ever close to a secret, sir.
- ALIBIUS
The diligence that I have found in thee,
The care and industry already past,
Assures me of thy good continuance.
Lollo, I have a wife.
- LOLLIO Fie, sir, 'tis too late to keep her secret: she's known to be married all the town and country over.
- ALIBIUS
Thou goest too fast, my Lollo. That knowledge,
I allow, no man can be barred it;
But there is a knowledge which is nearer,
Deeper and sweeter, Lollo.
- LOLLIO Well, sir, let us handle that between you and I.
- ALIBIUS
'Tis that I go about, man; Lollo,
My wife is young.
- LOLLIO So much the worse to be kept secret, sir.
- ALIBIUS
Why, now thou meet'st the substance of the point;
I am old, Lollo.
- 20 LOLLIO No sir, 'tis I am old Lollo.
- ALIBIUS
Yet why may not this concórd and sympathise?
Old trees and young plants often grow together,
- Well enough agreeing.
LOLLIO Ay, sir. [He makes horns] But the old trees raise themselves higher and broader than the young plants. 25
ALIBIUS Shrewd application! There's the fear, man;
I would wear my ring on my own finger:
Whilst it is borrowed it is none of mine,
But his that useth it.
LOLLIO You must keep it on still, then; if it but lie by, one or other will be thrusting into't. 30
ALIBIUS
Thou conceiv'st me, Lollo; here thy watchful eye
Must have employment: I cannot always be at home.
LOLLIO I dare swear you cannot.
ALIBIUS I must look out. 35
LOLLIO I know't: you must look out, 'tis every man's case.
ALIBIUS
Here, I do say, must thy employment be:
To watch her treadings, and in my absence
Supply my place.
LOLLIO I'll do my best, sir; yet surely I cannot see who you should have cause to be jealous of. 40
ALIBIUS Thy reason for that Lollo?
'Tis a comfortable question.
LOLLIO We have but two sorts of people in the house, and both under the whip: that's fools and madmen. The 45 one has not wit enough to be knaves, and the other not knavery enough to be fools.
ALIBIUS
Ay, those are all my patients, Lollo.
I do profess the cure of either sort;
My trade, my living 'tis, I thrive by it. 50
But here's the care that mixes with my thrift:

241 will Throughout, this word has the connotations of volition, wilfulness, and sexual desire.

1.2.0.1 Alibius Latin: 'being in another place, elsewhere'. Probably a topical satire of Dr Hilckiah Croke, appointed keeper of Bedlam in 1619. He was notoriously absent from his duties there, and was investigated as early as 1625; both he and his steward were put on trial in 1632 for fraud and misappropriation of funds. Like Lollo, his steward apparently took bribes and otherwise cheated his charges monetarily.

Lollo see previous note

3 close to a secret literally, good at keeping a secret; but with a hint (which Alibius misses) at the sexual sense of 'secret' as in 'secret parts' (compare l. 8 below)

6 good continuance continual trustworthiness

8 to keep her secret literally, 'to hide knowledge of her', but Lollo may pun bawdily. The punning on 'knowledge' as sexual knowledge continues in ll. 10–12.

12 knowledge i.e. 'carnal' or sexual knowledge, intercourse

13 Deeper and sweeter proverbial (Dent D188), with sexual suggestion here

14 handle with a sexual connotation

17 the worse i.e. more difficult

20 I am old Lollo With the choplogic banter of servants, Lollo deliberately misunderstands Alibius's address to him in l. 19.

21 this i.e. our (Isabella's and Alibius's) disparate ages. He has ignored or not heard Lollo's response.

26 application Alibius finds his metaphor well applied to the situation by Lollo; here Alibius's age makes it more likely that his wife will give him cuckold's horns, thus making him 'higher and broader' than her.

27–9 I would wear... useth it While rings were a token of the trothplight in marriage that legitimates sex, the 'finger in the ring' metaphor was a common way of configuring sexual intercourse itself.

30 lie by (a) lie aside somewhere (b) facilitate an untruth (here, adultery). This pun is prominent in Middleton's practice; compare 4.1.15, 5.1.1.

32 conceiv'st understand (but the word has a sexual resonance in the context of this discussion)

33 employment... at home words often used with sexual suggestion (and compare 'employment' in l. 37 below)

35 look out go out and about (Lollo, though, plays on the sense of 'look[ing] out' for cuckoldry—'every man's case')

36 case This word could signify the vagina.

38 treadings literally, footsteps—but with overtones of 'sexual motion'; the word 'tread' is often used of copulating birds

39 Supply my place replace me. Here as elsewhere Alibius unwittingly invites Lollo to understand a sexual sense.

43 comfortable comforting (in that an answer is likely to placate or flatter)

45 fools and madmen separate categories: fools were born 'foolish', madmen those who had lost their wits.

48 are all the extent so far as 'sorts' go

49 profession have as my occupation, profession

either sort both sorts

51 my thrift my living, earnings, prosperity—that which Alibius 'thrive[s] by' (50).

	The daily visitants that come to see My brainsick patients I would not have To see my wife. Gallants I do observe	ALIBIUS Ay, ay, sir, 'Tis plain enough you mean him for my patient.	85
55	Of quick enticing eyes, rich in habits, Of stature and proportion very comely: These are most shrewd temptations, Lolloio.	PEDRO And if your pains prove but commodious, To give but some little strength to the sick And weak part of nature in him, these are But patterns to show you of the whole pieces That will follow to you, beside the charge	90
60	LOLLIO They may be easily answered, sir. If they come to see the fools and madmen, you and I may serve the turn, and let my mistress alone: she's of neither sort.	Fully defrayed. [He gives money]
	ALIBIUS 'Tis a good ward. Indeed, come they to see Our madmen or our fools, let 'em see no more Than what they come for. By that consequent They must not see her; I'm sure she's no fool.	ALIBIUS Believe it, sir, there shall no care be wanting.
65	LOLLIO And I'm sure she's no madman.	LOLLIO Sir, an officer in this place may deserve something; the trouble will pass through my hands.	95
	ALIBIUS Hold that buckler fast, Lolloio; my trust Is on thee, and I account it firm and strong. What hour is't, Lolloio?	PEDRO 'Tis fit something should come to your hands then, sir. [He gives money]
70	LOLLIO Towards belly-hour, sir.	LOLLIO Yes, sir: 'tis I must keep him sweet, and read to him. What is his name?
	ALIBIUS Dinner-time? Thou mean'st twelve o'clock.	PEDRO His name is Antonio. Marry, We use but half to him: only Tony.	100
75	LOLLIO Yes, sir, for every part has his hour: we wake at six and look about us, that's eye-hour; at seven we should pray, that's knee-hour; at eight walk, that's leg-hour; at nine gather flowers and pluck a rose, that's nose- hour; at ten we drink, that's mouth-hour; at eleven lay about us for victuals, that's hand-hour; at twelve go to dinner, that's belly-hour.	LOLLIO Tony? Tony? 'Tis enough, and a very good name for a fool. [To Antonio] What's your name, Tony? ANTONIO Hee, hee, hee! Well, I thank you cousin; hee, hee, hee!	105
	ALIBIUS Profoundly, Lolloio. It will be long Ere all thy scholars learn this lesson, and I did look to have a new one entered.—Stay, I think my expectation is come home.	LOLLIO Good boy! Hold up your head!— [To Pedro] He can laugh; I perceive by that he is no beast.	110
80	Enter Pedro, and Antonio like an idiot	PEDRO Well, sir, If you can raise him but to any height, Any degree of wit, might he attain (As I might say) to creep but on all four Towards the chair of wit, or walk on crutches, 'Twould add an honour to your worthy pains, And a great family might pray for you, To which he should be heir, had he discretion To claim and guide his own; assure you, sir, He is a gentleman.	115
	PEDRO Save you, sir. My business speaks itself: This sight takes off the labour of my tongue.
52	visitants At Bethlehem ('Bedlam') hospital outside London (see I.2.209– 10, 3.3.24 and notes) people of leisure— including the 'gallants' that Alibius especially fears (l. 54)—often came to divert themselves by viewing the residents.	61 ward defensive guard or pose taken in fencing	89 patterns samples
55	habits dress, apparel	63 By that consequent as a result of that	90 charge expense. It was customary to pay the expenses of private inmates at Bedlam.
57	shrewd (a) wicked (as it pertains to Isabella, morally; OED a. 1a) (b) mis- chievous, irksome (in so far as the pos- sibility of Isabella succumbing to such temptation troubles Alibius; OED a. 6a). That he follows his references to business and prosperity (ll. 49–51) with a mor- alistic cliché like 'shrewd temptations' (see OED a. 6b) suggests his affinity with contemporary puritanism.	66 buckler shield (used here metaphorically)	97 sweet clean
59–60	serve the turn answer to the occa- sion (with play on being 'turn-keys', or jailors); compare also the (unintended) implication that he and Lolloio might stand in as fools and madmen	74 pluck a rose with suggestion of a common meaning for this phrase, to urinate	101–2 good name for a fool 'good' because 'tony' seems by this time to have meant both (a) a foolish person, ninny, or madman (OED sb.¹), and (b) (as verb) to make a fool of, to fool, cheat, or swindle (OED v.). Rowley himself may have played a fool named 'Tony' in Fletcher's Wife for a Month in 1624.
		75–6 lay about search around	103 Antonio answers as though Lolloio had asked 'How are you?'
		80 entered enrolled	106 no beast Since Aristotle, it had been thought that the ability to laugh separ- ated humanity from the beasts.
		81.1 Enter . . . Antonio like an idiot per- haps illustrated in the frontispiece to Francis Kirkman's The Wits, or Sport upon Sport (1662), where a figure la- belled 'Changling' wears a long coat and pointed dunce's cap, and has a horn- book hanging from his wrist. Antonio is perhaps in the tradition of 'wise fools' associated with St Anthony.	116 gentleman More specific than today, 'gentleman' implied a high social status, a man of good family, rank, or breeding, also a land owner.
		82 Save you, sir i.e. 'God save you', a form of salutation
		83 This sight i.e. of Antonio
		86 commodious useful, beneficial

- LOLLIO Nay, there's nobody doubted that; at first sight I knew him for a gentleman: he looks no other yet.
- PEDRO
Let him have good attendance and sweet lodging.
- 120 LOLLIO As good as my mistress lies in, sir; and as you allow us time and means, we can raise him to the higher degree of discretion.
- PEDRO
Nay, there shall no cost want, sir.
- LOLLIO He will hardly be stretched up to the wit of a magnifico.
- 125 PEDRO O, no, that's not to be expected; Far shorter will be enough.
- LOLLIO I'll warrant you I'll make him fit to bear office in five weeks; I'll undertake to wind him up to the wit of constable.
- 130 PEDRO
If it be lower than that it might serve turn.
- LOLLIO No, fie! To level him with a headborough, beadle, or watchman were but little better than he is: constable I'll able him. If he do come to be a justice afterwards, let him thank the keeper. Or I'll go further with you: say I do bring him up to my own pitch, say I make him as wise as myself?
- 135 PEDRO
Why, there I would have it.
- LOLLIO Well, go to: either I'll be as arrant a fool as he, or he shall be as wise as I, and then I think 'twill serve his turn.
- 140 PEDRO Nay, I do like thy wit passing well.
- LOLLIO Yes, you may. Yet if I had not been a fool, I had had more wit than I have too: remember what state you find me in.
- 145 PEDRO I will, and so leave you:
[To Alibius] Your best cares, I beseech you.
- ALIBIUS
Take you none with you; leave 'em all with us.
- Exit Pedro*
- ANTONIO O, my cousin's gone! Cousin, cousin, O!
- LOLLIO Peace, peace, Tony! You must not cry, child; you must be whipped if you do. Your cousin is here still: I am your cousin, Tony.
- ANTONIO Hee, hee, then I'll not cry, if thou beest my cousin, hee, hee, hee!
- LOLLIO I were best try his wit a little, that I may know what form to place him in.
- 150 ALIBIUS
Ay, do, Lollio, do.
- LOLLIO I must ask him easy questions at first. Tony, how many true fingers has a tailor on his right hand?
- ANTONIO As many as on his left, cousin.
- 155 LOLLIO Good; and how many on both?
- ANTONIO Two less than a deuce, cousin.
- LOLLIO Very well answered. I come to you again, cousin Tony: how many fools goes to a wise man?
- ANTONIO Forty in a day sometimes, cousin.
- 160 LOLLIO Forty in a day? How prove you that?
- ANTONIO All that fall out amongst themselves, and go to a lawyer to be made friends.
- LOLLIO A parlous fool! He must sit in the fourth form at least, I perceive that. I come again, Tony: how many knaves make an honest man?
- 165 ANTONIO I know not that, cousin.
- LOLLIO No, the question is too hard for you. I'll tell you cousin: there's three knaves may make an honest man—a serjeant, a jailer, and a beadle; the serjeant catches him, the jailer holds him, and the beadle lashes him; and if he be not honest then, the hangman must cure him.
- 170 ANTONIO Ha, ha, ha, that's fine sport, cousin!
- ALIBIUS This was too deep a question for the fool, Lollio.
- LOLLIO Yes, this might have served yourself, though I say't. Once more and you shall go play, Tony.
- 175 ANTONIO Ay, play at push-pin, cousin; ha, hee!
- LOLLIO So thou shalt. Say how many fools are here—
- ANTONIO Two, cousin: thou and I!
- 180 LOLLIO Nay, you're too forward there, Tony. Mark my question: how many fools and knaves are here—A fool

118 he looks...yet (a) his madness hasn't affected his innately superior appearance (b) he doesn't look as foolish as he evidently wants to. (Lollio may see through Antonio's disguise quite early).

121 means i.e. money

121-2 raise...discretion (a) teach him more discernment (OED 3) (b) make him behave more discretely

123 there...want all your expense will be reimbursed

125 magnifico generally, a person of high standing in any social sphere.

131 serve turn suffice

132 headborough akin to a village-mayor; the lowest parochial authority beadle the lowest judicial authority (and public whipper)

133 watchman the lowest civil authority constable notoriously dim-witted and incompetent

134 able him make him capable of justice frequently portrayed as stupid (compare 4.1.130, note).

136 pitch level, height (in a figurative sense)

143-4 Yet...too i.e. If I'd had enough sense to turn down this job, I'd be smarter today. (Implying that the company of fools and madmen lowers his intelligence or 'wit'.)

144 what state i.e. my status as keeper of fools and madmen (and, perhaps, my financial condition).

149 cousin a term for a close relative. In ll. 151, Lollio may also hint at 'couzen', to cheat (a common pun).

159 true fingers has a tailor Antonio's answer of zero ('two less than a deuce', l. 162) depends on tailors' proverbial dishonesty. See Dent T16.01, T16.11.
right with play on 'honest'

164 goes to Lollio means 'constitute'; Antonio takes it as 'visit' (as indicated by his next speech in ll. 167-8).

167-8 All that...friends compare Tilley L130

169 A parlous (a) (as adv.) thoroughly a, excessively a (b) a cunning, shrewd

181 Yes...say't (a) this would have stumped even you (b) such a question involves you, as it concerns knaves

183 push-pin a child's game (here with sexual innuendo: he would like to play at 'push-pin' with Isabella) before a knave, a fool behind a knave, between every two fools a knave; how many fools, how many knaves?

 190 ANTONIO I never learnt so far, cousin.
 ALIBIUS
 Thou putt'st too hard questions to him, Lolloio.
 LOLLIO I'll make him understand it easily. Cousin, stand there.
 ANTONIO Ay, cousin.
 195 LOLLIO Master, stand you next the fool.
 ALIBIUS [at Antonio's side] Well, Lolloio?
 LOLLIO [at Alibius' side] Here's my place. Mark now, Tony: there's a fool before a knave.
 ANTONIO That's I, cousin.
 200 LOLLIO Here's a fool behind a knave—that's I—and between us two fools there is a knave—that's my master. 'Tis but 'we three', that's all.
 ANTONIO We three, we three, cousin!
Madmen within
 FIRST MADMAN Put's head i'th' pillory; the bread's too little!
 205 SECOND MADMAN Fly, fly, and he catches the swallow!
 THIRD MADMAN Give her more onion, or the devil put the rope about her crag!
 LOLLIO You may hear what time of day it is, the chimes of Bedlam goes.
 210 ALIBIUS [to Madmen within] Peace, peace, or the wire comes!
 THIRD MADMAN Cat-whore, cat-whore, her parmesant, her parmesant!
 215 ALIBIUS Peace, I say!—
 Their hour's come, they must be fed, Lolloio.
 LOLLIO There's no hope of recovery of that Welsh madman, was undone by a mouse that spoiled him a parmesant; lost his wits for't.
 ALIBIUS
 220 Go you to your charge, Lolloio; I'll to mine.
 LOLLIO Go you to your madmen's ward; let me alone with your fools.

ALIBIUS
 And remember my last charge, Lolloio. Exit
 LOLLIO [after Alibius] Of which your patients do you think I am? Come, Tony: you must amongst your schoolfellows now. There's pretty scholars amongst 'em, I can tell you; there's some of 'em at stultus, stulta, stultum.
 ANTONIO I would see the madmen, cousin, if they would not bite me.
 LOLLIO No, they shall not bite thee, Tony. 225
 ANTONIO They bite when they are at dinner, do they not, coz?
 LOLLIO They bite at dinner indeed, Tony. Well, I hope to get credit by thee; I like thee the best of all the scholars that ever I brought up, and thou shalt prove a wise man, or I'll prove a fool myself. Exeunt 230
Finis Actus Primus

⊗

Incipit Actus Secundus 2.1
Enter Beatrice and Jasperino severally

BEATRICE
 O sir, I'm ready now for that fair service
 Which makes the name of friend sit glorious on you.
 Good angels and this conduct be your guide.
 [She gives him a paper]
 Fitness of time and place is there set down, sir.
 JASPERINO
 The joy I shall return rewards my service. Exit 5
 BEATRICE
 How wise is Alsemero in his friend!
 It is a sign he makes his choice with judgement.
 Then I appear in nothing more approved
 Than making choice of him,
 For 'tis a principle: he that can choose 10
 That bosom well, who of his thoughts partakes,
 Proves most discreet in every choice he makes.
 Methinks I love now with the eyes of judgement,

202 'we three' comic situation defined by a sign saying 'We Three', with only two fools'- or asses'-heads depicted: the viewer's was the third.
 203.1 within i.e. behind the main stage
 204-5 Put's head... little a complaint about the size of a loaf of bread.
 206 Fly... swallow proverbial: 'Fly and you will catch the swallow' (Tilley S1024).
 207-8 onion... rope (a) the onion string ('rope') (b) a hangman's noose
 208 crag neck
 209-10 chimes of Bedlam bells of Bedlam, here used figuratively to describe the madmen's cries. See 1.2.52, note.
 211 wire whip. Whipping appears to have been the discipline of choice at Bedlam; compare ll. 45, 151-2 above.
 213 Cat-whore... parmesant the cat is called a 'whore' because she failed to stop a mouse from stealing 'parmesant' cheese her stage Welsh for 'the' or 'my'

 217-18 Welsh... parmesant the Welsh were thought abnormally fond of cheese—thus 'undone' (driven mad) by a mouse who stole ('spoiled') from him a portion of 'parmesant' (cheese)
 223 last charge final instruction (to watch Isabella)
 224-5 Of which... I am? Do you think I'm a fool or a madman? (Lolloio seems perturbed that Alibius should think he would forget.)
 227 stultus, stulta, stultum Latin for 'foolish' or 'stupid', here referring to the declensions repeated from memory at Renaissance grammar schools.
 232 coz shortened form of the familiar

'cousin', sometimes used for any relative, friend, or familiar; see note above at l. 151
 234 get credit gain recognition (perhaps money)
 2.1.0.2 severally from different sides of the stage (indicating a change of place; here an arranged meeting)
 3-5 Good angels... service Beatrice may invoke the common pun on 'angels' as coins, offering Alsemero's friend money for delivering the letter; Jasperino's reply indicates that the joy he will bring Alsemero (with the letter) (and, perhaps, to Beatrice, when he returns again) is sufficient reward.
 3 conduct note containing instructions (i.e. time and place—for a clandestine meeting with Alsemero)

- And see the way to merit, clearly see it.
 15 A true deserper like a diamond sparkles:
 In darkness you may see him that's in absence
 (Which is the greatest darkness falls on love),
 Yet is he best discerned then
 With intellectual eyesight. What's Piracquo
 20 My father spends his breath for? And his blessing
 Is only mine, as I regard his name,
 Else it goes from me, and turns head against me,
 Transformed into a curse. Some speedy way
 Must be remembered. He's so forward too,
 25 So urgent that way, scarce allows me breath
 To speak to my new comforts.
Enter De Flores
 DE FLORES [aside] Yonder's she.
 What ever ails me, now o' late especially?
 I can as well be hanged as refrain seeing her;
 Some twenty times a day—nay, not so little—
 30 Do I force errands, frame ways and excuses
 To come into her sight, and I have small reason for't,
 And less encouragement; for she baits me still
 Every time worse than other, does profess herself
 The cruellest enemy to my face in town,
 35 At no hand can abide the sight of me,
 As if danger or ill luck hung in my looks.
 I must confess my face is bad enough,
 But I know far worse has better fortune,
 And not endured alone, but doted on;
 40 And yet such pig-haired faces, chins like witches',
 Here and there five hairs, whispering in a corner,
 As if they grew in fear one of another,
 Wrinkles like troughs, where swine-deformity swills
 The tears of perjury that lie there like wash
 45 Fallen from the slimy and dishonest eye—
 Yet such a one plucked sweets without restraint,
 And has the grace of beauty to his sweet.
 Though my hard fate has thrust me out to servitude,
 I tumbled into th' world a gentleman.
 She turns her blessèd eye upon me now,
 50 And I'll endure all storms before I part with't.
 BEATRICE [aside] Again!
 This ominous ill-faced fellow more disturbs me
 Than all my other passions.
 DE FLORES [aside] Now't begins again;
 I'll stand this storm of hail though the stones pelt me. 55
 BEATRICE
 Thy business? What's thy business?
 DE FLORES [aside] Soft and fair!
 I cannot part so soon now.
 BEATRICE [aside] The villain's fixed.—
 Thou standing toad-pool!
 DE FLORES [aside] The shower falls amain now.
 BEATRICE
 Who sent thee? What's thy errand? Leave my sight.
 DE FLORES
 My lord your father charged me to deliver 60
 A message to you.
 BEATRICE What, another since?
 Do't, and be hanged then. Let me be rid of thee.
 DE FLORES
 True service merits mercy.
 BEATRICE What's thy message?
 DE FLORES
 Let beauty settle but in patience,
 You shall hear all.
 BEATRICE A dallying, trifling torment! 65
 DE FLORES
 Signor Alonzo de Piracquo, lady,
 Sole brother to Tomazo de Piracquo—
 BEATRICE
 Slave, when wilt make an end?
 DE FLORES [aside] Too soon I shall.
 BEATRICE
 What all this while of him?

15–19 A true... eyesight Even as a luminous diamond can shine in the absence of external light, one who truly deserves something can make his presence felt though absent—separation being, to him and his love, like night to a precious jewel (i.e. in that lustre [their love] increases with the external light [each other's company]). (Middleton alters the proverb 'A true friend is a great treasure' (Tilley F719) to work in a form of his keyword 'serve'.)
 19 With intellectual eyesight in the imagination, with one's 'mind's eye'
 20–3 And his blessing... into a curse My father's good will toward me exists only while I obey him ('as I regard his name'); otherwise it turns on me and becomes a curse.
 24 remembered devised
He's Vermandero (who so adamantly urges the marriage with Piracquo)

26 my new comforts i.e. Alsemero
 27 o' late lately, of late
 32 baits torments (as in animal 'baiting'; compare ll. 81–2, note, below)
 35 At no hand never, by no means
 38 I know far worse This begins what may be a topical allusion to some well-known individual 'in town' (l. 34)—a specific phrase for the fashionable society of a locality, increasingly used with reference to London. See his continued comparisons at ll. 46, 83 ff., and compare Middleton's topical satire in Game.
 39 alone only
 43–4 swine-deformity... wash Like swine that gorge themselves on 'wash' (= kitchen swill or brewery refuse: OED sb. 11), the deformity De Flores castigates here seems to thrive on perjured tears that trickle down the trough-like wrinkles of this ugly face.
 45 dishonest unchaste, lascivious

46 plucked sweets gained sweethearts (with sexual suggestion: compare 3.4.149, note)
 47 of beauty associated with beauty to his sweet (a) in the eyes of his lover (b) as his sweetheart
 55 this storm compare the proverb 'After a Storm comes a calm (fair weather)' (Tilley S908)
 56–7 Soft... now Calling on the proverb 'Soft and fair goes far' (Tilley, Dent S601), De Flores counsels himself that patience may bring what he wants.
 58 standing stagnant, foul (referring to his face)
amain at full force
 61 another since another message so soon
 63 mercy (a) forbearance (b) reward, thanks (with play on French merci)
 67 Tomazo perhaps with a sense of 'doubting Thomas' (compare John 20:25)

- You're nobly welcome, sirs.
Exeunt Vermandero and Beatrice
- TOMAZO
 125 So, did you mark the dullness of her parting now?
- ALONZO
 What dullness? Thou art so exceptional still!
- TOMAZO
 Why, let it go then: I am but a fool
 To mark your harms so heedfully.
- ALONZO
 Where's the oversight?
- TOMAZO
 130 Come, your faith's cozened in her, strongly cozened.
 Unsettle your affection with all speed
 Wisdom can bring it to; your peace is ruined else.
 Think what a torment 'tis to marry one
 Whose heart is leaped into another's bosom.
 If ever pleasure she receive from thee,
 135 It comes not in thy name, or of thy gift;
 She lies but with another in thine arms,
 He the half-father unto all thy children
 In the conception—if he get 'em not,
 She helps to get 'em for him in his absence.
 140 And how dangerous
 And shameful her restraint may go in time to,
 It is not to be thought on without sufferings.
- ALONZO
 You speak as if she loved some other, then.
- TOMAZO
 Do you apprehend so slowly?
- ALONZO
 145 Nay, an that
 Be your fear only, I am safe enough.
 Preserve your friendship and your counsel, brother,
 For times of more distress. I should depart
 An enemy, a dangerous, deadly one,
 To any but thyself, that should but think 150 She knew the meaning of inconstancy,
 Much less the use and practice. Yet we're friends;
 Pray let no more be urged. I can endure
 Much till I meet an injury to her,
 Then I am not myself. Farewell, sweet brother.
 155 How much we're bound to heaven to depart lovingly.
Exit
- TOMAZO
 Why, here is love's tame madness: thus a man
 Quickly steals into his vexation. Exit
- Enter Diaphanta and Alsemero* 2.2
- DIAPHANTA
 The place is my charge. You have kept your hour,
 And the reward of a just meeting bless you.
 I hear my lady coming. Complete gentleman,
 I dare not be too busy with my praises,
 They're dangerous things to deal with. Exit
- ALSEMERO
 This goes well. 5
 These women are their ladies' cabinets;
 Things of most precious trust are locked into 'em.
Enter Beatrice
- BEATRICE
 I have within mine eye all my desires.
 Requests that holy prayers ascend heaven for,
 And brings 'em down to furnish our defects, 10
 Come not more sweet to our necessities
 Than thou unto my wishes.
- ALSEMERO
 We're so like
 In our expressions, lady, that unless I borrow
 The same words, I shall never find their equals. [They embrace]
- BEATRICE
 How happy were this meeting, this embrace, 15
 If it were free from envy! This poor kiss,
 It has an enemy, a hateful one,
 That wishes poison to't: how well were I now
 If there were none such name known as Piracquo,
 20 Nor no such tie as the command of parents!
 I should be but too much blessed.
- ALSEMERO
 One good service
 Would strike off both your fears, and I'll go near it
 too,
 Since you are so distressed. Remove the cause,
 The command ceases; so, there's two fears blown out
 With one and the same blast.
- BEATRICE
 Pray let me find you, sir. 25
 What might that service be, so strangely happy?
- 125 dullness slowness to respond (especially from lack of interest)
- 126 exceptional contrary, contradictory
- 129 cozened cheated, deceived
- 131 bring it to effect
- 139 absence Tomazo implies that by thinking of her adulterous lover during sex with her husband, an adulterous woman effectively 'gets' (i.e. conceives and bears) a child for and of that lover. It was commonly thought that a woman's imagination could influence the body of a child at conception.
- 141 her restraint (a) her keeping (restraining-
 ing) her true passions to herself (b) her being restrained (by you)—as in 4.3.73
- 144 an if
- 145 your fear only your only fear
- 2.2.1 charge responsibility
- 4 I dare . . . with my praises Diaphanta here
 flirts with Alsemero.
- 6 women i.e. maidservants
- ladies' cabinets cabinets into which women locked their most personal and otherwise valuable possessions
- 10 And . . . defects and brings down the things we pray for in order to supply us with what we desire
- 'em i.e. requests
- 16 envy ill will
- 16–18 This poor kiss . . . poison to't i.e.
 Piracquo would wish the kiss I gave you were poisoned, if he knew.
- 22 strike off (a) cancel (as if by the stroke of a pen) an item from a list or record
 (b) remove (e.g. fetters or bonds) with a sharp blow
- I'll go near it (a) I'll be explicit about what it is (b) I won't shirk doing it
- 23–4 the cause . . . ceases The 'cause' is Alonzo, the 'command' Vermandero's wishes. Alsemero alters the Latin proverb Ablata causa, tollitur effectus, often paraphrased 'Remove the cause, and the effect ceases to be' (Dent, Tilley C202).
- 25 same blast breath (here blowing out two flames at once)
- find understand
- 26 strangely extremely, unexpectedly

ALSEMERO
 The honourablest piece 'bout man: valour.
 I'll send a challenge to Piracquo instantly.

BEATRICE
 How? Call you that extinguishing of fear
 30 When 'tis the only way to keep it flaming?
 Are not you ventured in the action,
 That's all my joys and comforts? Pray, no more, sir.
 Say you prevailed—your dangers and not mine,
 then—
 The law would claim you from me, or obscurity
 35 Be made the grave to bury you alive.
 I'm glad these thoughts come forth. O, keep not one
 Of this condition, sir. Here was a course
 Found to bring sorrow on her way to death:
 The tears would ne'er 'a' dried till dust had choked
 'em.
 40 Blood-guiltiness becomes a fouler visage.
 [Aside] And now I think on one. I was to blame:
 I ha' marred so good a market with my scorn;
 'T'ad been done questionless! The ugliest creature Creation framed for some use, yet to see 45 I could not mark so much where it should be!

ALSEMERO
 Lady—

BEATRICE [aside]
 Why, men of art make much of poison,
 Keep one to expel another. Where was my art?

ALSEMERO
 Lady, you hear not me.

BEATRICE I do especially, sir.
 The present times are not so sure of our side
 50 As those hereafter may be. We must use 'em, then,
 As thrifty folks their wealth: sparingly, now,
 Till the time opens.

ALSEMERO You teach wisdom, lady.

BEATRICE
 Within there: Diaphanta!
Enter Diaphanta

DIAPHANTA Do you call, madam?

BEATRICE
 Perfect your service, and conduct this gentleman
 The private way you brought him.

DIAPHANTA I shall, madam. 55

ALSEMERO
 My love's as firm as love e'er built upon.
Exeunt Diaphanta and Alsemero [one way; at another] enter De Flores

DE FLORES [aside]
 I have watched this meeting, and do wonder much
 What shall become of t'other; I'm sure both Cannot be served unless she transgress. Happily,
 Then, I'll put in for one; for if a woman
 60 Fly from one point, from him she makes a husband,
 She spreads and mounts then like arithmetic:
 One, ten, a hundred, a thousand, ten thousand—
 Proves in time sutler to an army royal.
 Now do I look to be most richly railed at,
 65 Yet I must see her.

BEATRICE [aside] Why, put case I loathed him
 As much as youth and beauty hates a sepulchre,
 Must I needs show it? Cannot I keep that secret
 And serve my turn upon him? See, he's here.—
 De Flores!

DE FLORES [aside]
 Ha, I shall run mad with joy!
 70 She called me fairly by my name, De Flores,
 And neither 'rogue' nor 'rascal'!

BEATRICE What ha' you done
 To your face o' late? You've met with some good physician;
 You've pruned yourself, methinks.
 You were not wont to look so amorously.

DE FLORES [aside] Not I; 75
 'Tis the same phys'nomy to a hair and pimple,
 Which she called scurvy scarce an hour ago:
 How is this?

BEATRICE Come hither. Nearer, man.

DE FLORES [aside, crossing to her]
 I'm up to the chin in heaven!

BEATRICE Turn, let me see.

- 37–8 Here was a course | Found this would be a way, indeed
- 38 sorrow . . . death i.e. not only to make me sorrowful but to push me toward death
- 41 one i.e. one 'fouler visage' (l. 40: De Flores)
- 42 marred . . . market spoiled such a good opportunity
- 44 my scorn my scornful behaviour toward De Flores
- 44 Creation . . . use a commonplace held that everything in nature had been created for some purpose ('use')
- 46 men of art doctors, apothecaries. 'Art' here means learning, knowledge.
- 46–7 make much . . . another proverbial: 'One poison expels another' (Tilley P457)
- 47 art cunning (in contrast to the learned 'art' of the 'men' in l. 46)
- 49–50 are not . . . may be are not as certainly favourable to us as we can hope future times may be
- 52 time opens the right moment reveals itself
- 54 Perfect finish, make complete
- 58 t'other the other (Alonzo)
- 59 served looked after (with strong sexual overtones)
- Happily perhaps, haply (as it was probably pronounced)
- 60 put in for one enter my own bid (i.e. as one of those seeking 'favours' from Beatrice-Joanna); with salacious overtones (compare 4.3.36)
- 61 Fly . . . point break away from a single position (i.e. constancy); with pun on decimal 'point', the woman shifts from 1.0 to 10.0, etc.
- 62 spreads and mounts lifts her wings and rises (but with a strong sense of 'spreads her legs and mounts men')
- 64 sutler provisioner (with play on 'prostitute')
- 66 put case suppose (as in presenting a hypothesis (often legal in nature); OED 12)
- 69 serve my turn upon him manipulate him to my advantage
- 74 pruned preened, groomed
- 75 amorously attractive; like a lover
- 76 phys'nomy physiognomy

- [She touches him] Faugh, 'tis but the heat of the liver, I perceive't.
80 I thought it had been worse.
DE FLORES [aside] Her fingers touched me! She smells all amber.
BEATRICE I'll make a water for you shall cleanse this Within a fortnight.
DE FLORES With your own hands, lady?
BEATRICE Yes, mine own, sir; in a work of cure, I'll 85 Trust no other.
DE FLORES [aside] 'Tis half an act of pleasure
To hear her talk thus to me.
BEATRICE [aside] When we're used
To a hard face, 'tis not so unpleasing.—
It mends still in opinion, hourly mends,
90 I see it by experience.
DE FLORES [aside] I was blessed to light upon this minute:
I'll make use on't.
BEATRICE Hardness becomes the visage of a man well;
It argues service, resolution, manhood,
If cause were of employment.
95 DE FLORES 'Twould be soon seen,
If e'er your ladyship had cause to use it.
I would but wish the honour of a service
So happy as that mounts to.
BEATRICE We shall try you—
O my De Flores!
DE FLORES [aside] How's that?
100 She calls me hers already, 'my De Flores'!—
You were about to sigh out somewhat, madam.
BEATRICE No, was I? I forgot—O!
DE FLORES There 'tis again—
The very fellow on't.
BEATRICE You are too quick, sir.
DE FLORES There's no excuse for't, now I heard it twice, madam.
105 That sigh would fain have utterance: take pity on't
- And lend it a free word; 'las, how it labours
For liberty! I hear the murmur yet
Beat at your bosom.
BEATRICE Would creation—
DE FLORES Ay, well said, that's it.
BEATRICE Had formed me man!
DE FLORES Nay, that's not it.
BEATRICE O, 'tis the soul of freedom! 110
I should not then be forced to marry one
I hate beyond all depths; I should have power
Then to oppose my loathings, nay, remove 'em
Forever from my sight.
DE FLORES O blest occasion!—
Without change to your sex, you have your wishes. 115
Claim so much man in me.
BEATRICE In thee, De Flores?
There's small cause for that.
DE FLORES Put it not from me;
It's a service that I kneel for to you. [He kneels]
BEATRICE You are too violent to mean faithfully:
There's horror in my service, blood and danger. 120
Can those be things to sue for?
DE FLORES If you knew
How sweet it were to me to be employed
In any act of yours, you would say then
I failed, and used not reverence enough
When I receive the charge on't.
BEATRICE [aside] This is much, methinks. 125
Belike his wants are greedy, and to such
Gold tastes like angels' food.—Rise.
DE FLORES I'll have the work first.
BEATRICE [aside] Possible his need is strong upon him.—
[She gives him money] There's to encourage thee.
As thou art forward and thy service dangerous, 130
Thy reward shall be precious.
DE FLORES That I have thought on;
I have assured myself of that beforehand
And know it will be precious: the thought ravishes.
BEATRICE Then take him to thy fury!

80 Faugh an interjection of impatience82 all amber like ambergris (a waxy substance from sperm whales, used in perfumes)83 water lotion; perhaps with bawdy as well86 act of pleasure sexual act89 mends still in opinion continually

becomes more acceptable

95–8 'Twould . . . to De Flores says she has only to test his resolution and ability, but his response also puns on the sexual implications of 'Hardness' (l. 93 = "Twould", 'it'), 'use it' (l. 96), 'service' (l. 97), and 'mounts' (l. 98).103 quick perceptive (with, perhaps, a hint of 'too quick to take up my words')106 And . . . word give it utterance108 creation i.e. the process of my creation109 that's it i.e. 'creation', which De Flores understands as 'procreation'110 O . . . freedom i.e. being a man114 occasion opportunity117 small cause for i.e. little reason for thinking so119 too . . . faithfully too eager truly to mean (i.e. have had time to consider fully) what you say123 any act of yours with ambivalent

sexual suggestion; see note at l. 86 above

125 the charge on't the orders you give me126 Belike perhaps127 angels' food manna from heaven; compare Psalm 78:25work commission128 Possible possibly130 forward bold131 reward Beatrice means financial 'reward'; De Flores makes it plain to the audience that he thinks in sexual terms (compare 'ravishes', l. 133).

DE FLORES I thirst for him. I will assure you, worth your time and sight, my lord.
 135 BEATRICE Alonzo de Piracquo! ALONZO Puh, that shall be no hind'rance.
 DE FLORES [rising] DE FLORES I'm your servant, then.
 His end's upon him; he shall be seen no more. 'Tis now near dinner-time; 'gainst your lordship's
 BEATRICE rising
 How lovely now dost thou appear to me! I'll have the keys about me. 165
 Never was man dearlier rewarded.
 DE FLORES I do think of that. ALONZO Thanks, kind De Flores.
 BEATRICE DE FLORES [aside]
 140 Be wondrous careful in the execution. He's safely thrust upon me beyond hopes. Exeunt
 DE FLORES Finis Actus Secundus
 Why, are not both our lives upon the cast?
 BEATRICE
 Then I throw all my fears upon thy service.
 DE FLORES
 They ne'er shall rise to hurt you. Incipit Actus Tertius 3.1
 BEATRICE When the deed's done, Enter Alonzo and De Flores
 I'll furnish thee with all things for thy flight; (In the Act time, De Flores hides a naked rapier)
 145 Thou mayst live bravely in another country. DE FLORES
 DE FLORES Yes, here are all the keys. I was afraid, my lord,
 I'd wanted for the postern; this is it.
 DE FLORES Ay, ay: we'll talk of that hereafter. I've all, I've all, my lord.
 BEATRICE [aside] I shall rid myself [He shows a large key]
 Of two inveterate loathings at one time: This for the sconce.
 Piracquo and his dog-face. Exit ALONZO
 DE FLORES O my blood! 'Tis a most spacious and impregnable fort.
 150 Methinks I feel her in mine arms already, DE FLORES
 Her wanton fingers combing out this beard, You'll tell me more, my lord. This descent 5
 And being pleased, praising this bad face. Is somewhat narrow. We shall never pass Hunger and pleasure: they'll commend sometimes Well with our weapons; they'll but trouble us.
 Slovenly dishes, and feed heartily on 'em; ALONZO 155 Nay, which is stranger, refuse daintier for 'em. Thou sayst true. [They disarm]
 Some women are odd feeders!—I'm too loud; DE FLORES Pray let me help your lordship.
 Here comes the man goes supperless to bed, ALONZO
 Yet shall not rise tomorrow to his dinner. 'Tis done. Thanks, kind De Flores.
Enter Alonzo DE FLORES Here are hooks, my lord,
 ALONZO To hang such things on purpose.
 De Flores. [He hangs up the rapiers]
 DE FLORES ALONZO Lead, I'll follow thee. 10
 My kind, honourable lord. Exeunt at one door and enter at the other
 ALONZO DE FLORES
 I am glad I ha' met with thee. All this is nothing. You shall see anon 3.2
 DE FLORES Sir? A place you little dream on.
 ALONZO Thou canst show me
 The full strength of the castle? ALONZO I am glad 160 DE FLORES That I can, sir. I have this leisure. All your master's house
 ALONZO Imagine I ha' taken a gondola.
 I much desire it. DE FLORES
 DE FLORES And if the ways and straits All but myself, sir—[aside] which makes up my
 Of some of the passages be not too tedious for you, safety.— 5

140 execution performance (with a grisly pun)

141 cast i.e. of the dice

145 bravely splendidly, openly

148 his i.e. De Flores's blood the inciter of sexual desire (for which it stands here)

155 are odd feeders have strange tastes

156–7 Here . . . dinner Here's the man who, though going to bed without eating, won't be rising tomorrow to eat.

165 'gainst in anticipation of

3.1.0.3 Act time interval between the Acts, when often music was played

2 I'd . . . postern that I was lacking the key for the small gate

3 sconce small fortification. Later, the word takes on the meaning of 'head', making for a grisly pun at 3.2.13–17.

5 You'll tell me more i.e. when you've seen the rest you'll praise it even more strongly

10.2 at one door and . . . the other implying a change of place (compare 2.1.0.2)

- My lord, I'll place you at a casement here
Will show you the full strength of all the castle.
Look, spend your eye a while upon that object.
- ALONZO
Here's rich variety, De Flores.
- DE FLORES Yes, sir.
- ALONZO
Goodly munition.
- 10 DE FLORES Ay, there's ordnance, sir—
No bastard metal—will ring you a peal
Like bells at great men's funerals; keep your eye straight, my lord,
Take special notice of that sconce before you:
There you may dwell awhile.
- ALONZO I am upon't.
- DE FLORES
And so am I.
[He clubs him with key]
- 15 ALONZO De Flores, O De Flores!
Whose malice hast thou put on?
- DE FLORES [retrieving rapier]
Do you question a work of secrecy?
I must silence you.
[He stabs him]
- ALONZO O, O, O!
- DE FLORES I must silence you. [He stabs him]
- 20 So, here's an undertaking well accomplished.
This vault serves to good use now.—Ha! what's that Threw sparkles in my eye? O, 'tis a diamond
He wears upon his finger. It was well found:
This will approve the work.
[He struggles with the ring]
- 25 What, so fast on?
Not part in death? I'll take a speedy course then:
Finger and all shall off. [He cuts off the finger] So, now
I'll clear
The passages from all suspect or fear. Exit with body
- Enter Isabella and Lollo
- ISABELLA
Why, sirrah, whence have you commission
To fetter the doors against me? If you
Keep me in a cage, pray whistle to me,
Let me be doing something.
- LOLLIO You shall be doing, if it please you; I'll whistle to 5
you if you'll pipe after.
- ISABELLA
Is it your master's pleasure, or your own,
To keep me in this pinfold?
- LOLLIO 'Tis for my master's pleasure, lest being taken in 10 another man's corn, you might be pounded in another place.
- ISABELLA
'Tis very well, and he'll prove very wise.
- LOLLIO He says you have company enough in the house,
if you please to be sociable, of all sorts of people.
- ISABELLA
Of all sorts? Why, here's none but fools and madmen. 15
- LOLLIO Very well: and where will you find any other, if you should go abroad? There's my master and I to boot, too.
- ISABELLA
Of either sort one, a madman and a fool.
- LOLLIO I would e'en participate of both, then, if I were as 20
you. I know you're half mad already; be half foolish too.
- ISABELLA
You're a brave, saucy rascal! Come on, sir:
Afford me then the pleasure of your Bedlam.
You were commending once today to me, 25
Your last-come lunatic—what a proper
Body there was without brains to guide it,
And what a pitiful delight appeared
In that defect, as if your wisdom had found
A mirth in madness. Pray, sir, let me partake 30
If there be such a pleasure.

3.2.6 casement (window) recess

10 munition (a) fortifications (b) ammunition, military stores

ordnance cannon

11 bastard metal probably referring to small cannon called 'bastards' (i.e. 'bastard culverin'), but perhaps with a sense of corrupt, adulterated (hence weaker), second-rate metal

13 sconce with pun on 'head'; compare 3.1.3, note

14 dwell look (with pun on 'reside'); De Flores's stratagem is to get Alonzo to look the other way upon't fixed upon it with my gaze. But De Flores replies with a grim joke: I'm about this business of killing you.

21 vault probably a hidden recess, with play on vault as 'burial chamber'; yet 'vault' could also mean 'a covered conduit for carrying away water or filth; a drain or sewer' (OED 4a); 'a privy' (OED 4c); or 'a deep hole or pit' (OED 5)

22 Threw that just threw

24 approve confirm my completion of

27 suspect suspicion

3.3.3 whistle to me i.e. as you would to caged bird

4 Let . . . doing something Isabella means only 'let me go about my business', but Lollo in his reply willfully puts a sexual interpretation on 'doing'.

5-6 whistle . . . pipe 'To dance after a person's pipe' can suggest sexual activity.

8 pinfold kennel, cage, 'pound' (compare 1.10)

9-10 in another man's corn in another man's (grain) field—i.e. arms

10-11 pounded in another place locked up, impounded elsewhere—with joke

(continuing the grain metaphor) on 'screwed somewhere else'

12 Isabella speaks ironically; this is far from well, and her husband is a fool.

19 Of either sort one one of each kind

20 participate partake (with sexual suggestion)

21 I know . . . foolish Lollo hints that she might take him, a fool, as her lover; because Isabella is the 'better half' of the mad Alibius, their marriage is 'half mad'.

23 brave daring, presumptuous

24 Bedlam lunatic asylum in London, often used generically (as a form of 'Bethlehem' Hospital) for 'madhouse'; compare 1.2.0.1, 1.2.52, notes

26 last-come lunatic the madman who has most recently arrived (Franciscus) proper handsome, attractive

LOLLIO If I do not show you the handsomest, discreetest madman—one that I may call the understanding madman—then say I am a fool.

35 ISABELLA Well, a match, I will say so.

LOLLIO When you have had a taste of the madman, you shall (if you please) see Fools' College, o'th' other side. I seldom lock there: 'tis but shooting a bolt or two, and you are amongst 'em.

Exit. Enter presently [with Franciscus]

40 Come on, sir, let me see how handsomely you'll behave yourself now.

FRANCISCUS How sweetly she looks! O, but there's a wrinkle in her brow as deep as philosophy. [To Lollio; he mimes giving him a cup] Anacreon, drink to my mistress' health, I'll pledge it. Stay, stay, there's a spider in the cup! No, 'tis but a grape-stone. Swallow it; fear nothing, poet. So, so, lift higher. [Lollio laughs]

45 ISABELLA [to Lollio]
Alack, alack, 'tis too full of pity
To be laughed at. How fell he mad? Canst thou tell?

50 LOLLIO For love, mistress. He was a pretty poet too, and that set him forwards first; the muses then forsook him, he ran mad for a chambermaid, yet she was but a dwarf neither.

FRANCISCUS [approaching Isabella] Hail, bright Titania!
55 Why standst thou idle on these flow'ry banks?
Oberon is dancing with his Dryades;
I'll gather daisies, primroses, violets,
And bind them in a verse of poesy.

LOLLIO Not too near! You see your danger. [He shows a whip]

60

FRANCISCUS O, hold thy hand, great Diomed; thou feedst thy horses well, they shall obey thee. [He kneels like a horse] Get up, Bucephalus kneels.

LOLLIO You see how I awe my flock: a shepherd has not his dog at more obedience. 65

ISABELLA
His conscience is unquiet—sure that was
The cause of this. A proper gentleman.

FRANCISCUS [rising] Come hither, Aesculapius; hide the poison.

LOLLIO [putting up whip] Well, 'tis hid. 70

FRANCISCUS Didst thou never hear of one Tiresias, a famous poet?

LOLLIO Yes, that kept tame wild-geese.

FRANCISCUS That's he! I am the man.

LOLLIO No! 75

FRANCISCUS Yes! But make no words on't; I was a man seven years ago.

LOLLIO A stripling, I think you might say.

FRANCISCUS Now I'm a woman, all feminine.

LOLLIO I would I might see that. 80

FRANCISCUS Juno struck me blind.

LOLLIO I'll ne'er believe that; for a woman, they say, has an eye more than a man.

FRANCISCUS I say she struck me blind.

LOLLIO And Luna made you mad. You have two trades to beg with. 85

FRANCISCUS
Luna is now big-bellied, and there's room
For both of us to ride with Hecatë;
I'll drag thee up into her silver sphere,
And there we'll kick the dog (and beat the bush) 90

- 35 a match an agreement, compact (i.e. 'that's a deal')
- 37 Fools' College the madmen and fools are kept apart; see 1.2.44, 2.2.1. As Bedlam hospital was divided into two wings, perhaps an actual practice is here referred to.
- 38 shooting a bolt sliding back the bolt on a door (but compare also the proverb 'A fool's bolt is soon shot' (Tilley, Dent F515), where 'bolt' = arrow).
- 44 Anacreon Greek lyric poet famous for his songs of love and wine-drinking. Franciscus's mad speech, unlike that of the 'Bedlam' madmen, continually centres on classical references; this may play on contemporary tavern culture.
- 45–6 spider in the cup It was thought that, seen in a cup, spiders had the power to poison.
- 46 grape-stone Anacreon was believed to have died from choking on the stone of a dried grape while drinking wine.
- 47 lift higher presumably Franciscus refers to lifting a cup higher while drinking. Here Lollio may indulge him by miming Anacreon drinking a 'health', or Franciscus may merely address an empty part of the stage.
- 51 set him forwards first first gave him a tendency (to madness)
- 52–3 yet... neither even though she was nothing but a dwarf
- 54–6 Titania... Oberon the queen and king of fairy land, known best from A Midsummer Night's Dream
- 56 dancing... Dryades sporting with his wood-nymphs. Franciscus uses the cover of madness to hint to Isabella that Alibius is 'dancing' (= copulating) with other women.
- 61 Diomed In mythology, Diomedes was king of the Bistones, in Thrace, whose mares (compare 'horses', l. 62) ate human flesh. (But compare also the Iliad 5, 10, where (another) Diomedes is associated with horses.)
- 63 Bucephalus horse of Alexander the Great, which only he could ride
- 67 this i.e. his madness
- 68 Aesculapius (Greek) patron divinity of medicine
- 69 poison Lollio's whip (compare ll. 94–5 below)
- 71 Tiresias mythological Theban sooth-sayer who, having been changed into a woman for seven years, was blinded by Juno as a punishment for revealing that women enjoy sex more than men do
- 71–2 famous poet Tiresias was a prophet, 'poet' in so far as prophets and seers were so considered.
- 73 tame wild-geese possibly a joke on 'goose' as slang for prostitute; the oxymoron seems also connected with the gender inversion of Tiresias as man and woman
- 77 seven years ago see note at l. 71.
- 78 stripling youth
- 81 Juno Juno was responsible for striking Tiresias blind.
- 83 an eye more sexual joke on the vagina as 'eye'
- 85 Luna the moon, and cause of 'lunacy'
- 85–6 two trades to beg with i.e. being blind and mad (beggars often pretended to be both)
- 87 big-bellied (a) full (b) pregnant
- 88 Hecatë a witch goddess, associated with the moon and black magic—here seen as a source of (supernatural) transportation
- 90 dog... bush The Man in the Moon was thought to have a dog and a bush.

- That barks against the witches of the night;
The swift lycanthropi that walks the round,
We'll tear their wolvisk skins, and save the sheep.
[He attempts to seize Lollio]
- 95 LOLLIO Is't come to this? [He flourishes the whip] Nay, then, my poison comes forth again, mad slave! Indeed, abuse your keeper!
- ISABELLA
I prithee, hence with him, now he grows dangerous.
- FRANCISCUS (sings)
Sweet love, pity me,
Give me leave to lie with thee.
- 100 LOLLIO No, I'll see you wiser first. To your own kennel.
- FRANCISCUS (sings)
No noise—she sleeps,
Draw all the curtains round;
Let no soft sound
Molest the pretty soul;
105 But love, and love,
Creeps in at a mouse-hole. Exit Franciscus
- LOLLIO [after him] I would you would get into your hole.
Now, mistress, I will bring you another sort: you shall be fooled another while. Tony! Come hither, Tony!
- 110 Enter Antonio
Look who's yonder, Tony.
- ANTONIO Cousin, is it not my aunt?
- LOLLIO Yes, 'tis one of 'em, Tony.
- ANTONIO Hee, hee! How do you, uncle?
- LOLLIO Fear him not, mistress: 'tis a gentle nidget; you 115 may play with him, as safely with him as with his bauble.
- ISABELLA How long hast thou been a fool?
- ANTONIO Ever since I came hither, cousin.
- ISABELLA
Cousin? I'm none of thy cousins, fool.
- 120 LOLLIO O mistress, fools have always so much wit as to claim their kindred.
- MADMAN (singing, within)
Bounce! Bounce!
He falls! He falls!
- ISABELLA
Hark you, your scholars in the upper room
Are out of order. 125
- LOLLIO [shouting offstage] Must I come amongst you there?—Keep you the fool, mistress. I'll go up and play left-handed Orlando amongst the madmen. Exit
- ISABELLA Well, sir.
- ANTONIO [removing disguise]
'Tis opportuneful now, sweet lady! Nay, 130 Cast no amazing eye upon this change.
- ISABELLA Ha!
- ANTONIO
This shape of folly shrouds your dearest love,
The truest servant to your powerful beauties,
Whose magic had this force thus to transform me. 135
- ISABELLA
You are a fine fool indeed.
- ANTONIO O, 'tis not strange:
Love has an intellect that runs through all
The scrutinous sciences; and like
A cunning poet, catches a quantity
Of every knowledge, yet brings all home
140 Into one mystery, into one secret
That he proceeds in.
- ISABELLA You're a parlous fool.
- ANTONIO
No danger in me: I bring naught but love
And his soft-wounding shafts to strike you with.
Try but one arrow; if it hurt you,
145 I'll stand you twenty back in recompense. [He kisses her]
- ISABELLA
A forward fool too!
- ANTONIO This was love's teaching:
A thousand ways she fashioned out my way,

92 lycanthropi wolf-men walks the round walk a regular circuit as a sentinel

95 slave rascal

100 your own kennel i.e. in contrast to those of the 'dog' (l. 90) and 'lycanthropi' (l. 92) he has threatened.
'kennel' = room, cell

105-6 love... mouse-hole i.e. love creeps in at any little crevice; with sexual innuendo of the vagina. 'Mouse' = diminutive for woman or sweetheart.

107 hole i.e. cell

109 fooled (a) amused by a fool (b) deceived

111 aunt 'Aunt' could mean 'bawd' or 'prostitute' as well as 'relative'; 'One of my aunts' (compare 112) was proverbial bawdy (see Tilley A398).

113 uncle If Antonio's 'aunts' and 'cousins' (ll. 118-19) are prostitutes,

then his 'uncle' is likely to be an 'uncle
Pandaros', as in Troilus and Cressida.

114 nidget idiot

116 bauble a toy or trifle. Technically, a bauble was a stick or baton with a carved ass's head and ears on top, used by a fool or court jester: see OED 4. Here it possesses a sexual sense.

118 cousin As Isabella realizes, like 'aunt' (l.
111), 'cousin' could refer to a prostitute or easy woman.

122 Bounce bang, the sound of a gun.

127 Keep you take care of 128 left-handed Orlando a clumsy, parodic, or perhaps even sinister version of the violent, mad hero of Ariosto's Orlando Furioso

130 opportuneful convenient. Antonio here drops his feigned madness to woo
Isabella.

131 amazing amazed

136 fine proper; also: intricate, complex.

Isabella speaks sardonically, with suggestion that Antonio is making a fool of himself in love.

138 scrutinous sciences searching, prying fields of learning

141 mystery secret (as in the following line), but also with a sense of a science, or special branch of learning or training

143 naught nothing

love i.e. Cupid

145 one arrow Antonio may mean 'arrow'
(i.e. of Cupid) as 'kiss'; it may also have a buried meaning of 'penis'.

146 stand you twenty back take twenty back from you in return. ('Stand' often had a connotation of male sexual arousal.)

150 And this I found the safest and the nearest
To tread the Galaxia to my star.

ISABELLA
Profound, withal! Certain you dreamed of this:
Love never taught it waking.

ANTONIO
Take no acquaintance of these outward follies;
There is within a gentleman that loves you.

ISABELLA
When I see him, I'll speak with him. So, in the mean
155 time,
Keep your habit; it becomes you well enough.
As you are a gentleman, I'll not discover you;
That's all the favour that you must expect:
When you are weary, you may leave the school,
160 For all this while you have but played the fool.
Enter Lollo
ANTONIO [disguising himself]
And must again;—
[As Tony] Hee, hee! I thank you, cousin! (sings)
I'll be your Valentine
Tomorrow morning.

165 LOLLIO How do you like the fool, mistress?
ISABELLA Passing well, sir.
LOLLIO Is he not witty, pretty well for a fool?
ISABELLA If he hold on as he begins, he is like to come to something.

170 LOLLIO Ay, thank a good tutor. You may put him to't; he begins to answer pretty hard questions. Tony: how many is five times six?
ANTONIO Five times six is six times five.
LOLLIO What arithmetician could have answered better?
175 How many is one hundred and seven?
ANTONIO One hundred and seven is seven hundred and one, cousin.

LOLLIO This is no wit to speak on. Will you be rid of the fool now?
ISABELLA By no means!—Let him stay a little. 180 MADMAN (within) Catch there! Catch the last couple in hell!
LOLLIO Again? Must I come amongst you?—Would my master were come home! I am not able to govern both these wards together. Exit 185
ANTONIO
Why should a minute of love's hour be lost?
ISABELLA
Fie, out again? I had rather you kept
Your other posture: you become not your tongue
When you speak from your clothes.
ANTONIO How can he freeze
Lives near so sweet a warmth? Shall I alone 190
Walk through the orchard of the Hesperides
And, cowardly, not dare to pull an apple?
This with the red cheeks I must venture for.
[He kisses her]
Enter Lollo above
ISABELLA Take heed, there's giants keep 'em.
[He kisses her again]
LOLLIO [aside] How now, fool: are you good at that? Have 195 you read Lipsius? He's past Ars Amandi; I believe I must put harder questions to him, I perceive that.
ISABELLA
You are bold without fear too.
ANTONIO What should I fear,
Having all joys about me? Do you but smile,
And love shall play the wanton on your lip, 200
Meet and retire, retire and meet again;
Look you but cheerfully, and in your eyes
I shall behold mine own deformity,
And dress myself up fairer. I know this shape
205 Becomes me not, but in those bright mirrors

150 Galaxia Milky Way
151 withal in addition to (or on top of) everything else, also 152 waking while you were awake (and presumably in possession of your rational faculties)
156 habit costume; with a glance at 'role' becomes suits
157 discover uncover, give you away
168–9 If he... come to something An ambiguous line: Antonio/Tony may 'come to something', signifying (a) to Lollo, that 'Tony' promises to advance in his education; and perhaps (b) to Antonio, that she may be open to his advances; and (c) to herself, that he may eventually come to grief, or ridicule. See following note.
170–1 Ay... hard questions On the surface,
Lollo understands Isabella's response
(ll. 168–9) to deal with his tutoring of 'Tony'—where 'put him to't' means 'put him to his examination, test his knowledge'; yet with 'pretty hard questions' ('hard' = erect), this line takes on a bawdy meaning.

178 no wit to speak on i.e. not a remarkable example of wit 181–2 Catch the last couple in hell In the outdoor (courting) game of barley-break, referred to again at 5.3.163, one couple would join hands within a marked-off, circular area called 'hell', and attempt to catch others as they ran through the circle. Those caught had to replace the original pair in 'hell'.
187 out i.e. of your role as a fool
188–9 you become not... clothes when Antonio speaks differently from how he is dressed (he is dressed as a fool), he does not adorn decorously ('becomes' OED III)
the body ('yourself') that wears fool's clothes. Compare l. 156 above, and note 189–90 How... warmth? (a) how could anyone not respond to you amorously?

(b) how can Alibius be so old and pas-sionless?
191 Hesperides three mythological nymphs whose orchard contained golden apples
193 This i.e. this golden apple (Isabella) 194 giants The Hesperides were the daughters of Atlas, a giant who placed a dragon guard over the golden apples.
195 that i.e. kissing or making love
196 Lipsius Lipse, a Renaissance humanist best known for his Latin epigrams and translations; here the joke is on the 'Lips'
in his name.
Ars Amandi Latin title of Ovid's Arts of Love; Lollo sardonically jests that Antonio appears to have graduated beyond Ovid's famous treatise. In view of the preceding pun on lips, 'Ars' here is probably a pun on 'arse'.
199 Do you but if you will only 205 mirrors i.e. of Isabella's eyes

- I shall array me handsomely.
 LOLLIO Cuckoo! Cuckoo!
Exit [Lollo. Antonio embraces Isabella. Lollo re-enters presently with] Madmen above, some as birds, others as beasts. [Antonio and Isabella part]
 ANTONIO
 What are these?
 ISABELLA Of fear enough to part us.
 Yet are they but our schools of lunatics,
 210 That act their fantasies in any shapes
 Suiting their present thoughts—if sad, they cry;
 If mirth be their conceit, they laugh again.
 Sometimes they imitate the beasts and birds,
 Singing, or howling, braying, barking; all
 215 As their wild fancies prompt 'em.
[Exeunt Madmen, above]
Enter Lollo
 ANTONIO
 These are no fears.
 ISABELLA But here's a large one: my man.
 ANTONIO [as Tony] Ha, hee! That's fine sport indeed, cousin.
 LOLLIO I would my master were come home. 'Tis too much 220 for one shepherd to govern two of these flocks; nor can
 I believe that one churchman can instruct two benefices at once—there will be some incurable mad of the one side, and very fools on the other. Come, Tony.
 ANTONIO Prithce cousin, let me stay here still.
 225 LOLLIO No, you must to your book now; you have played sufficiently.
 ISABELLA Your fool is grown wondrous witty.
 LOLLIO Well, I'll say nothing; but I do not think but he will put you down one of these days.
Exeunt Lollo and Antonio
 230 ISABELLA Here the restrained current might make breach,
 Spite of the watchful bankers. Would a woman stray,
 She need not gad abroad to seek her sin;
 It would be brought home one ways or other.
 The needle's point will to the fixed north,
- Such drawing arctics women's beauties are. 235
Enter Lollo
 LOLLIO How dost thou, sweet rogue?
 ISABELLA How now?
 LOLLIO Come, there are degrees; one fool may be better than another.
 ISABELLA What's the matter?
 240 LOLLIO Nay, if thou giv'st thy mind to fool's-flesh, have at thee! [He tries to kiss her]
 ISABELLA
 You bold slave, you!
 LOLLIO I could follow now as t'other fool did:
 'What should I fear,
 245 Having all joys about me? Do you but smile,
 And love shall play the wanton on your lip,
 Meet and retire, retire and meet again;
 Look you but cheerfully, and in your eyes
 I shall behold my own deformity,
 250 And dress myself up fairer; I know this shape
 Becomes me not—'
 And so as it follows. But is not this the more foolish way? Come, sweet rogue; kiss me, my little Lacedemonian. Let me feel how thy pulses beat. Thou hast a 255 thing about thee would do a man pleasure.—I'll lay my hand on't.
[He tries to embrace her]
 ISABELLA
 Sirrah, no more! I see you have discovered
 This love's knight-errant, who hath made adventure
 For purchase of my love. Be silent, mute—
 260 Mute as a statue—or his injunction
 For me enjoying shall be to cut thy throat;
 I'll do it, though for no other purpose,
 And be sure he'll not refuse it.
 LOLLIO My share, that's all. I'll have my fool's part with 265 you.
 ISABELLA
 No more: your master.

207 Cuckoo! Cuckoo! Lollo signals Alibius's cuckoldry by mimicking the cuckoo bird (which appropriates other birds' nests for its own use).

208 Of fear enough fearful enough, threatening enough

212 conceit thought, whim

216 no fears nothing to be afraid of here's a large one: my man 'one' = fear; 'man' = servant, i.e. Lollo. As Rowley the actor specialized in fat clown roles, 'large' may indicate that he intended to take the part of Lollo himself.

217 That's fine sport i.e.(a) watching the madmen (b) kissing Isabella 221-2 two benefices at once A single clergyman appointed to (and enjoying the income from, without paying full attention to) separate churches or livings ('benefices') was long a problem in England.

229 put you down i.e. in a battle of wits; but with a sexual sense of 'laying' a woman

230-1 restrained current... bankers i.e. the water might get through the dam even though some (e.g. Alibius) have taken precautions. A 'banker' is a labourer who makes earthen banks.

234 needle's point compass needle, with innuendo of penis fixed north magnetic North

235 Such... are women's beauties are just such North Poles with their attracting qualities

246-52 Do... not By quoting Antonio's wooing at ll. 199-205, Lollo reveals to Isabella that he has witnessed the attempted seduction. He now offers this information as sexual blackmail.

253 And so as it follows i.e. et cetera, and so forth

253-4 more foolish way (a) Antonio's (foolish) love poetry (b) what I (a fool) will do next: accost you

254-5 Lacedemonian (a) one of few words, 'laconic' of speech (b) slang for loose woman or whore

256 thing about thee i.e. between her legs
 259 love's knight-errant (romantic) adventurer in the service of love

263 though... purpose i.e. as if for the act's sake itself

265 part share, portion

Enter Alibius

ALIBIUS Sweet, how dost thou? brains down into their feet, that their wits lie more in their heels than in their heads.

ISABELLA Your bounden servant, sir. ALIBIUS 295 Honest Lollo, thou giv'st me a good reason, And a comfort in it.

ALIBIUS Fie, fie, sweet heart: ISABELLA You've a fine trade on't: Madmen and fools are a staple commodity.

ISABELLA You were best lock me up. ALIBIUS 300 ALIBIUS O wife, we must eat, wear clothes, and live. Just at the Lawyer's Haven we arrive; By madmen and by fools we both do thrive. Exeunt 300

270 In my arms and bosom, my sweet Isabella, [He embraces her]

I'll lock thee up most nearly.—Lollo, We have employment; we have task in hand. At noble Vermandero's, our castle captain, There is a nuptial to be solemnized—

275 Beatrice-Joanna, his fair daughter bride, For which the gentleman hath bespoke our pains: A mixture of our madmen and our fools, To finish (as it were) and make the fag Of all the revels, the third night from the first.

280 Only an unexpected passage over, To make a frightful pleasure, that is all— But not the all I aim at. Could we so act it To teach it in a wild distracted measure, Though out of form and figure, breaking Time's head—

285 (It were no matter, 'twould be healed again In one age or other, if not in this). 'Tis this, Lollo: there's a good reward begun, And will beget a bounty be it known.

LOLLIO This is easy, sir, I'll warrant you: you have about you fools and madmen that can dance very well, and 'tis no wonder—your best dancers are not the wisest men; the reason is, with often jumping they jolt their

Enter Vermandero, Alsemero, Jasperino, and Beatrice

VERMANDERO Valencia speaks so nobly of you, sir, I wish I had a daughter now for you.

ALSEMERO The fellow of this creature were a partner For a king's love.

VERMANDERO I had her fellow once, sir, But heaven has married her to joys eternal; 'Twere sin to wish her in this vale again. Come, sir: your friend and you shall see the pleasures Which my health chiefly joys in.

ALSEMERO I hear the beauty of this seat largely.

VERMANDERO It falls much short of that. Exeunt. Manet Beatrice

BEATRICE 10 So, here's one step Into my father's favour. Time will fix him. I have got him now the liberty of the house; So wisdom by degrees works out her freedom, And if that eye be darkened that offends me— I wait but that eclipse—this gentleman 15

268 bounden servant obligated servant; compare 1 Corinthians 7:39, and 'bounden duty and service' (Book of Common Prayer (1559), Holy Communion). With a suggestion that Isabella considers herself under undeserved duress and constraint—where 'bounden' = imprisoned, fettered.

271 nearly tightly

276 bespoke our pains solicited our services

278 fag end, as in 'fag end'

280 passage over Alibius anticipates that the madmen and fools will 'pass over' a stage-like area.

282–6 Could...this If we could perform this part of the revels with our madmen, presenting our show in a wild and distracted measure, even though this would be formless and disordering of Time itself it wouldn't matter, for it would all mend itself sooner or later.

284 breaking Time's head Alibius talks himself into a cuckold joke (a cuckold's head would be 'broken' by his horns), only to dismiss it.

287–8 'Tis...known We've already started to make money with our madmen and fools; once our show is seen ('known'), we will make even more.

297 staple most valuable (said with irony by Isabella)

299–300 Just...thrive Alibius responds to his wife's sarcasm by his own wry observation: we thrive by the aid of madmen and fools much as we see in the law courts ('Lawyer's Haven'—here ironic; a similar proverbial location was called 'Cuckold's Haven').

300 we both (a) both we and the lawyers (b) you and I (i.e. Alibius and Isabella)

3.4.3 The fellow...creature a woman equal to Beatrice (Alsemero hides his desire for Beatrice by saying he would give anything for a woman just like her)

4 I had her fellow once Vermandero probably refers to Beatrice's (dead) mother.

6 in this vale i.e. on earth, in this 'vale of tears'

9 seat residence (often of a person of authority) largely widely

10 Manet remains

11 fix him i.e. make Alsemero more permanent in 14 that eye...offends me i.e. Alonzo's. Compare Matthew 18:9: 'And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee'. Beatrice is offended by another's eye and plans to have it plucked out. With 'darkened', and 'eclipse' in the following line, 'eye' here has an astrological resonance: the sun or 'eye' of heaven, here to be eclipsed.

- Shall soon shine glorious in my father's liking,
Through the refulgent virtue of my love.
Enter De Flores
DE FLORES [aside]
My thoughts are at a banquet for the deed.
I feel no weight in't; 'tis but light and cheap
20 For the sweet recompense that I set down for't.
BEATRICE
De Flores.
DE FLORES
Lady.
BEATRICE Thy looks promise cheerfully.
DE FLORES All things are answerable: time,
Circumstance, your wishes, and my service.
BEATRICE
Is it done, then?
DE FLORES Piracquo is no more.
BEATRICE
25 My joys start at mine eyes; our sweet'st delights
Are evermore born weeping.
DE FLORES
I've a token for you.
BEATRICE For me?
DE FLORES
But it was sent somewhat unwillingly:
I could not get the ring without the finger.
[He shows her the finger]
30 BEATRICE Bless me! What hast thou done?
DE FLORES
Why, is that more than killing the whole man?
I cut his heart strings:
A greedy hand thrust in a dish at court
In a mistake hath had as much as this.
BEATRICE
35 'Tis the first token my father made me send him.
DE FLORES And I made him send it back again
For his last token; I was loath to leave it,
And I'm sure dead men have no use of jewels.
- He was as loath to part with't, for it stuck
As if the flesh and it were both one substance. 40
BEATRICE
At the stag's fall the keeper has his fees;
'Tis soon applied: all dead men's fees are yours, sir.
I pray, bury the finger, but the stone
You may make use on shortly: the true value,
Take't of my truth, is near three hundred ducats. 45
DE FLORES
'Twill hardly buy a capcase for one's conscience,
though,
To keep it from the worm, as fine as 'tis.
Well, being my fees I'll take it;
Great men have taught me that, or else my merit
Would scorn the way on't.
BEATRICE It might justly, sir. 50
Why, thou mistak'st, De Flores: 'tis not given
In state of recompense.
DE FLORES No, I hope so, lady:
You should soon witness my contempt to't then.
BEATRICE
Prithee, thou look'st as if thou wert offended.
DE FLORES
55 That were strange, lady: 'tis not possible
My service should draw such a cause from you.
Offended? Could you think so? That were much
For one of my performance, and so warm
Yet in my service.
BEATRICE
'Twere misery in me to give you cause, sir. 60
DE FLORES
I know so much, it were so: misery
In her most sharp condition.
BEATRICE 'Tis resolved then.
Look you, sir: here's three thousand golden florins;
[She gives him money]
I have not meanly thought upon thy merit.

17 refulgent bright, radiant virtue This word continues the astrological metaphor of ll. 14–17, since 'virtue' can mean power, influence—here in an astrological sense. The irony of the word's moral inappropriateness to Beatrice's plan is no less apparent.
18 are...deed feast on the imagining of what I have done
20 For in comparison with set down for't (a) set down in my imaginary account book as what I shall be paid for the murder (b) placed down as a wager 22 answerable correspondent, responsive to (Beatrice's) desire
25 start at mine eyes make me begin to weep
33 at court i.e. where, in a communal dish, it might be cut off by another hurried or greedy eater

41 At the stag's fall...fees proverbial: A traditional courtesy in hunting gave the gamekeeper the skin (and, often, horns) of a fallen stag.
42 applied brought to bear; compare 1.2.26, note
43 stone i.e. ring (by metonymy)
45 three hundred ducats The word 'ducat' could refer to many gold and silver coins. Here, perhaps, a good yearly income.
46–7 a capcase for one's conscience...
worm a case, bag, box, or other receptacle—here 'coffin' is strongly suggested, hence 'worm' in the following line ('the worm of conscience' was proverbial). There may also be a pun on 'case of conscience', a matter or question on which one's conscience may be in doubt (see 'case' *OED sb.*¹ 7).
48–9 Well...that (a) I've learned that one must accept favours from aristocrats and seem to do so gratefully (b) 'Great men' have taught me, by their example, to take such unethical 'fees'.

49–50 or else...on't i.e. otherwise, my sense of self worth would reject this subservience
50 It might justly i.e. your merit is indeed real enough that you might show your true feeling about gifts
56 cause accusation, blame (OED 9; from Latin causa)
61–2 I know...condition (a) I believe what you're saying (i.e. it would cause misery indeed) (b) I know so much (to your discredit) that it would indeed mean 'misery' for you (i.e. were I to reveal it)
63 three thousand golden florins Like 'ducat', 'florin' could refer to one of many coins. This amount is probably meant to sound like much more than the value of the ring (compare 'golden').

DE FLORES
 What, salary? Now you move me.
 65 BEATRICE How, De Flores?
 DE FLORES
 Do you place me in the rank of verminous fellows
 To destroy things for wages? Offer gold
 For the life-blood of man? Is any thing Valued too precious for my recompense?
 BEATRICE
 I understand thee not.
 70 DE FLORES I could ha' hired
 A journeyman in murder at this rate,
 And mine own conscience might have lain at ease,
 And have had the work brought home.
 BEATRICE [aside] I'm in a labyrinth!
 What will content him? I would fain be rid of him.—
 I'll double the sum, sir.
 75 DE FLORES You take a course
 To double my vexation, that's the good you do.
 BEATRICE [aside]
 Bless me! I am now in worse plight than I was;
 I know not what will please him!—For my fears' sake,
 I prithee make away with all speed possible.
 80 And if thou be'st so modest not to name
 The sum that will content thee, paper blushes not:
 Send thy demand in writing. It shall follow thee,
 But prithee take thy flight.
 DE FLORES You must fly too, then.
 BEATRICE I?
 DE FLORES
 I'll not stir a foot else.
 85 BEATRICE What's your meaning?
 DE FLORES
 Why, are not you as guilty, in, I'm sure,
 As deep as I? And we should stick together.
 Come, your fears counsel you but ill. My absence
 Would draw suspect upon you instantly;
 There were no rescue for you.
 90 BEATRICE [aside] He speaks home.
 DE FLORES
 Nor is it fit we two engaged so jointly
 Should part and live asunder. [He kisses her]
 BEATRICE How now, sir?
 This shows not well.
 DE FLORES What makes your lip so strange?

This must not be betwixt us.
 BEATRICE [aside] The man talks wildly.
 DE FLORES
 Come, kiss me with a zeal now.
 BEATRICE [aside] Heaven, I doubt him! 95
 DE FLORES
 I will not stand so long to beg 'em shortly.
 BEATRICE
 Take heed, De Flores, of forgetfulness;
 'Twill soon betray us.
 DE FLORES Take you heed first.
 Faith, you're grown much forgetful; you're to blame
 in't.
 BEATRICE [aside]
 He's bold, and I am blamed for't!
 DE FLORES I have eased you 100
 Of your trouble. Think on't: I'm in pain,
 And must be eased of you. 'Tis a charity.
 Justice invites your blood to understand me.
 BEATRICE
 I dare not.
 DE FLORES Quickly!
 BEATRICE O, I never shall!
 Speak it yet further off, that I may lose 105
 What has been spoken and no sound remain on't.
 I would not hear so much offence again
 For such another deed.
 DE FLORES Soft, lady, soft:
 The last is not yet paid for. O, this act
 Has put me into spirit; I was as greedy on't 110
 As the parched earth of moisture, when the clouds weep.
 Did you not mark? I wrought myself into't, Nay, sued and kneeled for't: why was all that pains took?
 You see I have thrown contempt upon your gold:
 Not that I want it not, for I do—piteously. 115
 In order I will come unto't, and make use on't,
 But 'twas not held so precious to begin with.
 For I place wealth after the heels of pleasure;
 And were I not resolved in my belief
 That thy virginity were perfect in thee, 120
 I should but take my recompense with grudging,
 As if I had but half my hopes I agreed for.

71 journeyman workman for hire
 73 brought home done (by an agent); here with a figurative sense, as in thrusting
 'home' a sharp object. See note at l. 90.
 78 For...sake on account of my fears (i.e.
 of what may happen when the murder is discovered)
 90 home to the point (painfully so)
 91 engaged...jointly brought together in collaboration (with a compelling undertone of erotic engagement) 93 strange distant, cold, unfriendly (OED a.
 11)

95 doubt him (a) fear him (b) am apprehensive about his motives
 96 I...so long i.e. I will not wait so long (with pun on sexual sense of 'stand'; compare 3.3.146, note).
 'em i.e. kisses
 97 forgetfulness i.e. of (a) propriety (b) the difference between our ranks
 99 forgetful i.e. of what you've had me do 100 I...for't i.e. He is the one who's forward, yet I am blamed.
 103 blood supposed seat of the emotions and passions

 108-9 Soft...for ironic: slow down, we've yet to settle for the last murder I committed.
 110 put me into spirit excited me; probably sexual excitement
 112 wrought myself into't (a) worked my way into position to perform the act ('work' OED v. 33b) (b) fashioned myself into your instrument (OED v. 3) 116 In order in proper sequence (according to rank, importance, etc.; OED sb. 27)

- BEATRICE
Why, 'tis impossible thou canst be so wicked,
Or shelter such a cunning cruelty;
125 To make his death the murderer of my honour!
Thy language is so bold and vicious
I cannot see which way I can forgive it
With any modesty.
- DE FLORES Push! You forget yourself.
A woman dipped in blood, and talk of modesty?
- BEATRICE
130 O misery of sin! Would I had been bound Perpetually unto my living hate
In that Piracquo than to hear these words.
Think but upon the distance that creation
Set 'twixt thy blood and mine, and keep thee there.
- DE FLORES
135 Look but into your conscience; read me there.
'Tis a true book; you'll find me there your equal.
Push! Fly not to your birth, but settle you
In what the act has made you. You're no more now;
You must forget your parentage to me.
- 140 You're the deed's creature; by that name you lost
Your first condition, and I challenge you,
As peace and innocency has turned you out,
And made you one with me.
- BEATRICE With thee, foul villain?
- DE FLORES Yes, my fair murd'ress. Do you urge me?
Though thou writ'st 'maid', thou whore in thy 145 affection,
'Twas changed from thy first love, and that's a kind
Of whoredom in thy heart; and he's changed now,
To bring thy second on, thy Alsemero,
Whom (by all sweets that ever darkness tasted),
150 If I enjoy thee not, thou ne'er enjoy'st.
I'll blast the hopes and joys of marriage.
I'll confess all; my life I rate at nothing.
- BEATRICE De Flores!—
- DE FLORES [aside]
I shall rest from all lovers' plagues then;
155 I live in pain now: that shooting eye
Will burn my heart to cinders.
- BEATRICE O sir, hear me!
- DE FLORES
She that in life and love refuses me,
In death and shame my partner she shall be.
- BEATRICE
Stay, hear me once for all. [She kneels, weeping] I make thee master
Of all the wealth I have in gold and jewels; 160
Let me go poor unto my bed with honour,
And I am rich in all things.
- DE FLORES Let this silence thee:
The wealth of all Valencia shall not buy
My pleasure from me.
Can you weep fate from its determined purpose? 165
So soon may you weep me.
- BEATRICE [aside] Vengeance begins;
Murder, I see, is followed by more sins.
Was my creation in the womb so cursed,
It must engender with a viper first?
- DE FLORES
170 Come, rise, and shroud your blushes in my bosom;
[Beatrice rises]
Silence is one of pleasure's best receipts:
Thy peace is wrought for ever in this yielding.
'Las, how the turtle pants! Thou'lt love anon
What thou so fear'st and faint'st to venture on.

Exeunt

Finis Actus Tertius

Incipit Actus Quartus

4.1

[Dumb Show]Enter Gentlemen, Vermadero meeting them with action of wonderment at the flight of Piracquo.Enter Alsemero, with Jasperino and Gallants; Vermadero points to him, the Gentlemen seeming to applaud the choice. [Exeunt in procession
Vermadero,] Alsemero, Jasperino, and Gentlemen, [Gallants]; Beatrice the bride following in great state, accompanied with Diaphanta, Isabella, and other Gentlewomen; De Flores after all, smiling at the accident. Alonzo's ghost appears to De Flores

- 125 honour chastity, reputation
- 128 Push an interjection preferred by Middleton
- 133 creation (a) Nature (b) God (compare 2.2.108)
- 139 parentage family, birth, rank to me (a) with me, in your new relation to me, when you talk to me (b) in favour of
- 140 the deed's creature what the deed has made you
- 141 Your first condition original innocence
- 141-3 I challenge . . . one with me I lay claim to you, inasmuch as peace and innocence have abandoned you, leaving you my partner (see 'challenge' OED v. 5).
- 143 one with me like me; also: my partner
- 144 urge provoke (OED v. 7)
- 145 affection lust, inclination
- 146 'Twas changed your affection changed
- 147 he's changed now Alonzo's now dead (changed from life to death, and exchanged for Alsemero).
- 149 by all sweets . . . tasted i.e. by all the acts of lust ever performed at night
- 151 blast ruin, destroy
- 155 shooting eye i.e. Beatrice's; see note to 3.3.82
- 159-62 I make . . . things Holdsworth points out the echoes here of 2 Corinthians 6:8-10.
- 167 Murder . . . sins proverbial: '(Every) sin brings in another' (Dent S467.1)
- 168 my creation the act of my begetting
- curled (a) wicked (b) put under God's curse (i.e. 'curled')
- 169 It . . . first i.e. that I must sleep first with a snake like De Flores (before doing so with a man)
- 170 shroud conceal
- 171 receipts (a) results (b) rewards
- 173 turtle turtle-dove (an emblem of perfect love and constancy—with irony here)
- 4.1.0.2 Dumb Show a unit of silent ('dumb') movement and activity on stage, often encapsulating events for which dialogue was redundant and otherwise undramatic
- 0.12 accident scene, event in the midst of his smile, startles him, showing him the hand whose finger he had cut off. They pass over in great solemnity [and so exeunt]

Enter Beatrice

BEATRICE

This fellow has undone me endlessly;
Never was bride so fearfully distressed.
The more I think upon th'ensuing night,
And whom I am to cope with in embraces—
5 One that's ennobled both in blood and mind,
So clear in understanding (that's my plague now),
Before whose judgement will my fault appear
Like malefactors' crimes before tribunals,
There is no hiding on't—the more I dive
10 Into my own distress. How a wise man Stands for a great calamity! There's no venturing
Into his bed, what course soe'er I light upon,
Without my shame, which may grow up to danger.
He cannot but in justice strangle me
15 As I lie by him—as a cheater use me.
'Tis a precious craft to play with a false die
Before a cunning gamester. Here's his closet,
The key left in't, and he abroad i'th' park.
Sure 'twas forgot. I'll be so bold as look in't.
[She unlocks the closet]
20 Bless me! A right physician's closet 'tis,
Set round with phials—every one her mark too.
Sure he does practise physic for his own use,
Which may be safely called your great man's wisdom.
What manuscript lies here? 'The Book of Experiment, 25 Called Secrets in Nature'. [She reads] So 'tis, 'tis so:
'How to know whether a woman be with child or no.'
I hope I am not yet. If he should try, though!
Let me see. 'Folio forty-five.' Here 'tis,
The leaf tucked down upon't, the place suspicious:

'If you would know whether a woman be with child or not, give her two spoonfuls of the white water in Glass C—' Where's that Glass C? O, yonder I see't now.
'—and if she be with child, she sleeps full twelve hours after; if not, not.'
35 None of that water comes into my belly!
I'll know you from a hundred. I could break you now,
Or turn you into milk, and so beguile
The master of the mystery, but I'll look to you.
Ha! That which is next is ten times worse:
40 'How to know whether a woman be a maid or not.'
If that should be applied, what would become of me?
Belike he has a strong faith of my purity,
That never yet made proof; but this he calls
'A merry sleight, but true experiment,
45 The author Antonius Mizaldus':
'Give the party you suspect the quantity of a spoonful of the water in the Glass M, which—upon her that is a maid—makes three several effects: 'twill make her incontinently gape, then fall into a sudden sneezing, last into a violent laughing, else dull, heavy, and lumpish.'
50 Where had I been?
I fear it, yet 'tis seven hours to bed-time.
Enter Diaphanta

DIAPHANTA

Cuds, madam; are you here?

BEATRICE [aside]

Seeing that wench now,

A trick comes in my mind—'Tis a nice piece
Gold cannot purchase.—I come hither, wench,
To look my lord.

55

DIAPHANTA [aside]

Would I had such a cause to look him, too!—
Why, he's i'th' park, madam.

BEATRICE

There let him be.

1 fellow (a) man of low rank—a meaning she has called on thrice before to describe him: 1.1.114, 2.1.52–3, 2.1.90; (b) counterpart, twin, double—an unintended meaning, but prepared for by De Flores (2.1.86, 2.2.13), Alsemero (3.4.3), and Vermandero (3.4.4).
undone ruined; with a sense here as well from 'endlessly') of 'sexually exhausted'
4 cope with (a) contend with (b) couple, copulate with 5–7 mind... understanding... judgement (Beatrice's first line to Alsemero described him as a 'scholar', 1.1.64.)
11 Stands for represents—here 'threatens me with (a calamity)'
15 As... me treat me as a cheater on my vows lie by (a) tell an untruth; and (b) recline next to. Middleton often puns on 'lie by': compare 1.2.30, 5.1.1 and notes.
21 her its 23 Which... wisdom i.e. because it gives him advantages (as the following experiments hint)

24 The Book of Experiment probably Alsemero's personal title for his 'book'—evidently either a commonplace book containing transcriptions of various 'experiments', or verbatim transcript of the book mentioned next 25 Secrets in Nature Antoine Mizauld (Antonius Mizaldus), l. 46, wrote a book of this title (De Arcanis Naturae), which has chastity tests; an experiment similar to this one can also be found in his Centuria IX. Memoribulum (1566/1613).
28 Folio leaf (Beatrice is reading a table of contents)
31 Glass phial
36 water... into my belly (a) I'll avoid drinking that (b) an (unconscious) semen joke set up by 'white water' in l. 31; see also 2.2.83, note
38 turn you into milk i.e. replace you with (harmless) milk 39 master of the mystery expert of the science, craft

look to watch out for 43 Belike probably, possibly 44 That... proof (a) (reading 'That' as 'he') who has not yet tested my virginity (b) (reading 'That' as 'purity') which has not passed any of the tests it has already been put to 45 sleight trick, device
50 incontinently immediately gape yawn, or stare with an open-mouth
51 else then, after that
52 Where had I been? what trouble would I have been in (had I not seen this)?
54 Cuds a mild oath (a periphrasis for 'God's') here i.e. in Alsemero's chamber before the wedding 55 piece i.e. Diaphanta, where 'nice piece' could mean (a) scrupulous woman, or (b) good-looking wench (i.e. 'piece' = piece of flesh)
56 Gold... purchase Compare the proverb 'Money will do anything' (Tilley M1084).
57 look seek, search for

- DIAPHANTA
60 Ay, madam, let him compass
Whole parks and forests, as great rangers do;
At roosting time a little lodge can hold 'em.
(Sings) Earth-conquering Alexander,
That thought the world too narrow for him,
65 In the end had but his pit-hole.
- BEATRICE
I fear thou art not modest, Diaphanta.
- DIAPHANTA
Your thoughts are so unwilling to be known, madam;
'Tis ever the bride's fashion towards bed-time
To set light by her joys, as if she owed 'em not.
- BEATRICE
Her joys? Her fears, thou wouldst say.
- 70 DIAPHANTA Fear of what?
- BEATRICE
Art thou a maid, and talkst so to a maid?
You leave a blushing business behind:
Beshrew your heart for't.
- DIAPHANTA Do you mean good sooth, madam?
- BEATRICE
Well, if I'd thought upon the fear at first,
Man should have been unknown.
- 75 DIAPHANTA Is't possible?
- BEATRICE
I will give a thousand ducats to that woman
Would try what my fear were, and tell me true
Tomorrow, when she gets from't. As she likes
I might perhaps be drawn to't.
- DIAPHANTA Are you in earnest?
- BEATRICE
80 Do you get the woman, then challenge me,
And see if I'll fly from't. But I must tell you
This, by the way: she must be a true maid,
Else there's no trial; my fears are not hers else.
- DIAPHANTA
Nay, she that I would put into your hands, madam,
Shall be a maid.
- 85 BEATRICE You know I should be shamed else,
- Because she lies for me.
- DIAPHANTA [aside] 'Tis a strange humour.—
But are you serious still? Would you resign
Your first night's pleasure, and give money too?
- BEATRICE
As willingly as live. [Aside] Alas, the gold
Is but a by-bet to wedge in the honour. 90
- DIAPHANTA [aside]
I do not know how the world goes abroad
For faith or honesty: there's both required in this.—
Madam, what say you to me, and stray no further?
I've a good mind, in troth, to earn your money.
- BEATRICE You're too quick, I fear, to be a maid. 95
- DIAPHANTA
How? Not a maid? Nay, then you urge me, madam:
Your honourable self is not a truer
With all your fears upon you—
- BEATRICE [aside] Bad enough then!
- DIAPHANTA
—than I with all my lightsome joys about me.
- BEATRICE
I'm glad to hear't, then. You dare put your honesty 100 Upon an easy trial?
- DIAPHANTA Easy? Anything!
- BEATRICE
I'll come to you straight. [She crosses to the closet]
DIAPHANTA [aside] She will not search me, will she,
Like the forewoman of a female jury?
- BEATRICE [aside]
Glass M. Ay, this is it.—Look, Diaphanta:
You take no worse than I do. [She drinks]
- DIAPHANTA And in so doing 105
I will not question what 'tis, but take it. [She drinks]
- BEATRICE [aside] Now if the experiment be true,
'Twill praise itself, and give me noble ease—[*Diaphanta
yawns*]
Begins already: there's the first symptom,
And what haste it makes to fall into the second—[Diaphanta sneezes] 110
There by this time! Most admirable secret!

- 61 rangers those who range
62 roosting time bedtime, lodging time little lodge small cabin (with 'vagina' strongly suggested) 65 pit-hole grave, with innuendo on 'sexual orifice'
66 modest chaste, virginal
67 Your... known perhaps you're not being entirely candid with yourself about love 69 set light by make light of owed 'em not were not responsible for them ('owed' = 'owned') 71 maid virgin
73 Beshrew shame (a mild rebuke)
 Do you mean good sooth are you in earnest
75 Man... unknown I would never have become engaged (with ironic subtext, perhaps intended by Beatrice: she has already 'known' De Flores)
- 78 gets from't finishes it 80 Do you... me go ahead and find a woman willing to do this, then try me
84 she Diaphanta means herself
86 lies for (a) lies down in place of (b) performs an untruthful action for. Compare 'lie by' and 4.1.15, note.
 humour turn of mood
90 by-bet side bet wedge in solidify, confirm 91 the world... abroad the common run of behaviour
95 quick eager, with pun on 'quick' = pregnant
96 urge me press, push me (to speak)
98 Bad enough then i.e. that comparison is bad enough
- 99 lightsome frivolous, flirtatious
100 honesty chastity
102 search examination—including a gynecological search as might be performed by a female 'forewoman' in a criminal case (l. 103). Such a search was performed in the divorce case of Frances Howard in 1613; claiming non-consummation of the marriage, she was subsequently examined physically for her virginity by a group of sixteen matrons and noblewomen.
106 I will not... take it compare the proverb 'Maids say nay and take it' (Dent M34)
108 noble splendid, with a sense of the dignity which her falsely-confirmed virginity will restore to her

On the contrary, it stirs not me a whit,
Which most concerns it.

DIAPHANTA
Ha, ha, ha!

BEATRICE [aside]
Just in all things, and in order,
115 As if 'twere circumscribed; one accident
Gives way unto another.

DIAPHANTA Ha, ha, ha!

BEATRICE How now, wench?

DIAPHANTA
Ha, ha, ha! I am so—so light at heart—Ha, ha, ha!— so pleasurable!

But one swig more, sweet madam!

BEATRICE Ay, tomorrow;
We shall have time to sit by't.

DIAPHANTA Now I'm sad again.

BEATRICE [aside]
120 It lays itself so gently too.—Come, wench,
Most honest Diaphanta I dare call thee now.

DIAPHANTA
Pray tell me, madam, what trick call you this?

BEATRICE I'll tell thee all hereafter. We must Study the carriage of this business.

DIAPHANTA
125 I shall carry't well, because I love the burden.

BEATRICE
About midnight you must not fail to steal forth gently,
That I may use the place.

DIAPHANTA O fear not, madam:
I shall be cool by that time. [Aside] The bride's place,
And with a thousand ducats! I'm for a justice now;

130 I bring a portion with me. I scorn small fools.

Exeunt

4.2 Enter Vermandero and Servant

VERMANDERO
I tell thee knave, mine honour is in question—
A thing till now free from suspicion—
Nor ever was there cause.
Who of my gentlemen are absent?

113 Which most concerns it whom it most concerns

114 Just correct

115 circumscribed pre-ordained, bound to this exact order

accident incident; here 'symptom'

119 sit by't spend as much time with it as we desire

120 lays itself allays, subsides

121 honest chaste

125 carry't well (a) carry off the business successfully (b) bear the weight (‘burden’, l. 125) of Alsemero

127 use assume, get into

128 cool i.e. sexually spent

129 for a justice i.e. wealthy enough to marry a judge

130 portion marriage portion, dowry

small fools (a) socially inferior men
(b) men less foolish than judges (compare 1.2.134 above, and note)

4.2.8 Briamata In this play's source, Briamata is a house ten leagues from Alicante.

12 answer faithfully account trustfully for 13 command of apprehension order for their arrest

15 discover reveal

17 set on again harassed once more (a metaphor from animal baiting; compare
2.1.81–2 above, and notes)

19 bloods relatives, or young men (also, with the following lines, ‘the blood your family and you will shed’)

Tell me and truly how many, and who. 5

SERVANT Antonio, sir, and Franciscus.

VERMANDERO
When did they leave the castle?

SERVANT Some ten days since, sir—
The one intending to Briamata, Th'other for Valencia.

VERMANDERO
The time accuses 'em; a charge of murder 10
Is brought within my castle gate: Piracquo's murder.
I dare not answer faithfully their absence;
A strict command of apprehension
Shall pursue 'em suddenly, and either wipe
The stain off clear, or openly discover it. 15
Provide me wingèd warrants for the purpose.

Exit Servant [one way, at another] enter Tomazo

See, I am set on again.

TOMAZO
I claim a brother of you.

VERMANDERO You're too hot;
Seek him not here.

TOMAZO Yes, 'mongst your dearest bloods,
If my peace find no fairer satisfaction;
20 This is the place must yield account for him,
For here I left him, and the hasty tie
Of this snatched marriage gives strong testimony
Of his most certain ruin.

VERMANDERO Certain falsehood!
This is the place indeed. His breach of faith 25
Has too much marred both my abusèd love—
The honourable love I reserved for him—
And mocked my daughter's joy. The prepared morning
Blushed at his infidelity. He left
Contempt and scorn to throw upon those friends 30
Whose belief hurt 'em. O, 'twas most ignoble
To take his flight so unexpectedly,
And throw such public wrongs on those that loved him.

TOMAZO
Then this is all your answer?

20 peace i.e. peace of mind satisfaction a technical term, meaning recompense for the dishonour I have received

23 snatched overly hasty. Tomazo is a type of the avenger in the Elizabethan revenge play. See Hamlet 1.2.177–80.

24 Certain falsehood i.e. that of Alonzo de Piracquo (whom Vermandero believes has voluntarily absconded from the castle)

28 prepared morning morning appointed for the wedding ceremony

29 Blushed with play on the natural ‘blush’ of sunrise

31 Whose . . . 'em who were hurt by trusting him too much

- VERMANDERO 'Tis too fair
 35 For one of his alliance; and I warn you
 That this place no more see you.
Exit Vermandero one way, at another enter De Flores
- TOMAZO [aside] The best is,
 There is more ground to meet a man's revenge on.—
 Honest De Flores!
- DE FLORES That's my name indeed.
 Saw you the bride? Good sweet sir, which way took she?
- TOMAZO
 40 I have blessed mine eyes from seeing such a false one.
 DE FLORES [aside]
 I'd fain get off; this man's not for my company.
 I smell his brother's blood when I come near him.
- TOMAZO
 Come hither, kind and true one. I remember
 My brother loved thee well.
- DE FLORES O purely, dear sir.
 45 [Aside] Methinks I am now again a-killing on him;
 He brings it so fresh to me.
- TOMAZO Thou canst guess, sirrah
 (One honest friend has an instinct of jealousy)
 At some foul guilty person?
- DE FLORES 'Las, sir:
 I am so charitable, I think none
 50 Worse than myself—You did not see the bride, then?
- TOMAZO
 I prithee name her not. Is she not wicked?
- DE FLORES
 No, no, a pretty, easy, round-packed sinner,
 As your most ladies are, else you might think
 I flattered her; but sir, at no hand wicked,
 55 Till they're so old their chins and noses meet,
 And they salute witches. I am called, I think, sir.
 [Aside] His company e'en o'erlays my conscience.
- TOMAZO
 That De Flores has a wondrous honest heart;
- HE'LL bring it out in time, I'm assured on't.
 O, here's the glorious master of the day's joy.
 'Twill not be long till he and I do reckon.
Enter Alsemero
- Sir!
- ALSEMERO
 You are most welcome.
- TOMAZO You may call that word back:
 I do not think I am, nor wish to be.
- ALSEMERO
 'Tis strange you found the way to this house then.
- TOMAZO [aside]
 Would I'd ne'er known the cause!—I'm none of those, sir,
 65 That come to give you joy, and swill your wine:
 'Tis a more precious liquor that must lay
 The fiery thirst I bring.
- ALSEMERO Your words and you
 Appear to me great strangers.
- TOMAZO Time and our swords
 May make us more acquainted. This the business:
 70 I should have a brother in your place.
 How treachery and malice have disposed of him,
 I'm bound to enquire of him which holds his right,
 Which never could come fairly.
- ALSEMERO You must look
 To answer for that word, sir.
- TOMAZO Fear you not;
 75 I'll have it ready drawn at our next meeting.
 Keep your day solemn. Farewell; I disturb it not.
 I'll bear the smart with patience for a time. Exit
- ALSEMERO
 'Tis somewhat ominous this, a quarrel entered Upon this day. My innocence relieves me,
 80 Enter Jasperino
 I should be wondrous sad else.—Jasperino!
 I have news to tell thee, strange news.
- JASPERINO I ha' some too,
 I think as strange as yours; would I might keep

- 35 alliance family
 37 There... on (a) this insult I've just received gives further grounds to justify my revenge (b) there are other places ('more ground') where I can exact my vengeance
 38 Honest at this time, a word of multiple meanings and resonances—compare
 'honest Iago' in Othello
 40 I have... one I have prayed that my eyes might be prevented from seeing one so false as Beatrice.
 47 jealousy suspicion, apprehension
 49–50 I... myself De Flores's speech is laden with ironic meaning.
 52 easy easily persuaded, tractable; with hint of sexual availability round-packed sinner one who is surrounded ('round-packed') by sin; with suggestion also of 'voluptuously shaped sinner'
- 53 your most most of your 55–6 Till... salute witches De Flores describes toothless old crones who
 (a) hail or (b) bring bad luck to ('salute') witches by kiss, word, other physical gesture, or merely their presence—perhaps just from the growing together of their 'chins and noses'.
 57 o'erlays lays heavy upon, oppresses
 59 bring it out (a) reveal the truth (compare 5.3.98–9) (b) reveal the contents of his heart
 60 the glorious... joy i.e. the bridegroom (ironic: it is the wedding day of Beatrice and Alsemero)
 61 reckon come to an accounting of or understanding about (i.e. through a duel)
 what Alsemero has done 65 the cause the reason he has found his way to this house (i.e. his brother's disappearance)
 67 precious liquor i.e. (Alsemero's) blood
 68–9 Your... strangers (a) I have neither seen you before nor know what you mean (b) what you are saying appears unsuited to your rank
 73 which holds his right who has usurped his place, what is rightfully his 74 Which... fairly which could never have been achieved legitimately, justly 76 I'll... drawn (a) I'll have the contract between us drawn up (b) I'll have my sword out of its sheath 77 solemn ceremoniously (hence undisturbed)
 79 ominous continuing the superstition with which Alsemero began the play: compare
 1.1.2

85 Mine, so my faith and friendship might be kept in't!
 Faith sir, dispense a little with my zeal
 And let it cool in this. 110

ALSEMERO This puts me on,
 And blames thee for thy slowness.

JASPERINO All may prove nothing;
 Only a friendly fear that leapt from me, sir.

ALSEMERO No question it may prove nothing: let's partake it
 though. 115

JASPERINO It shall be done, sir. Exit

90 'Twas Diaphanta's chance—for to that wench
 I pretend honest love, and she deserves it—
 To leave me in a back part of the house,
 A place we chose for private conference.
 She was no sooner gone, but instantly

95 I heard your bride's voice in the next room to me;
 And, lending more attention, found De Flores Louder than she.

ALSEMERO De Flores? Thou art out now.

JASPERINO You'll tell me more anon.

ALSEMERO Still, I'll prevent thee:
 The very sight of him is poison to her. 120

JASPERINO That made me stagger too, but Diaphanta
 At her return confirmed it.

ALSEMERO Diaphanta!

JASPERINO Then fell we both to listen, and words passed
 Like those that challenge interest in a woman.

ALSEMERO Peace! Quench thy zeal! 'Tis dangerous to thy bosom.

JASPERINO Then truth is full of peril.

105 ALSEMERO Such truths are.—
 O, were she the sole glory of the earth,
 Had eyes that could shoot fire into kings' breasts,
 And touched, she sleeps not here! Yet I have time,
 Though night be near, to be resolved hereof;

And prithee do not weigh me by my passions.

JASPERINO I never weighed friend so.

ALSEMERO Done charitably. [He gives a key]
 That key will lead thee to a pretty secret,
 By a Chaldean taught me, and I've spent
 My study upon some. Bring from my closet
 A glass inscribed there with the letter M,
 And question not my purpose. 115

JASPERINO It shall be done, sir. Exit

ALSEMERO How can this hang together? Not an hour since,
 Her woman came pleading her lady's fears,
 Delivered her for the most timorous virgin
 That ever shrunk at man's name, and so modest, 120
 She charged her weep out her request to me,
 That she might come obscurely to my bosom.

Enter Beatrice

BEATRICE [aside]
 All things go well. My woman's preparing yonder
 For her sweet voyage, which grieves me to lose.
 Necessity compels it: I lose all else. 125

ALSEMERO [aside]
 Push! Modesty's shrine is set in yonder forehead.
 I cannot be too sure, though.—My Joanna!

BEATRICE Sir, I was bold to weep a message to you;
 Pardon my modest fears.

ALSEMERO [aside] The dove's not meeker:
 She's abused, questionless.—
Enter Jasperino [with phial]

O, are you come, sir? 130

BEATRICE [aside]
 The glass, upon my life! I see the letter.

JASPERINO Sir, this is M.

ALSEMERO 'Tis it.

BEATRICE [aside] I am suspected.

84 so provided
 85 dispense a little with pardon
 86 in i.e. in light of puts me on whets me on 89 No question... though certainly it will turn out to be nothing—yet let's hear it.
 (Alsemero's asperity shows his resistance to what he senses Jasperino is about to tell him.) 91 pretend make, offer (with no sense of deception or falsity)
 97 out wide of the mark
 98 You'll...anon you'll be even more angry when you hear fully what I have to tell prevent anticipate (and thus forestall) 100 stagger (a) to reel, totter (b) to begin to doubt or waver in opinion, to become less confident or determined (OED v. 2).

103 challenge interest (a) lay claim to (i.e. De Flores's words lay a claim of his own to Beatrice; compare OED v. 5, and 3.4.141 above) (b) call in question, dispute (the words disputed Alsemero's claim to his 'interest' in Beatrice; compare OED v. 4). The effect of both readings is the same.
 104 'Tis...bosom i.e. you're risking death for speaking such slander 105 Then...are Jasperino stoically says that the truth is to be told no matter what the personal risk. Alsemero answers angrily that 'truths' like this are dangerous because they are lies.
 108 touched tainted, corrupted
 110 weigh me by my passions judge my value as a man by my passionate outbursts

 111 Done (you have) acted
 113 Chaldean here an epithet for one especially learned in the quasi-scientific experiments which Alsemero admires;
 in Daniel 2:2 ff., used as an occupational description alongside 'magicians',
 'astrologers', and 'sorcerers'
 114 some i.e. secrets
 119 Delivered her for represented her as 121 charged her commanded Diaphanta to 122 she i.e. Beatrice obscurely in darkness (Beatrice has by this time arranged for the 'bed-trick') 128 I...you I earlier sent a tearful message to you (via Diaphanta; compare ll. 117-22)
 131 the letter i.e. M

- ALSEMERO
How fitly our bride comes to partake with us!
[He offers a glass]
- BEATRICE
What is't, my lord?
- ALSEMERO
No hurt.
- BEATRICE
Sir, pardon me:
- 135 I seldom taste of any composition.
- ALSEMERO
But this, upon my warrant, you shall venture on.
[He gives her the glass]
- BEATRICE
I fear 'twill make me ill.
- ALSEMERO
Heaven forbid that.
- BEATRICE [aside]
I'm put now to my cunning; th'effects I know,
If I can now but feign 'em handsomely. [She drinks]
- ALSEMERO [aside to Jasperino]
140 It has that secret virtue it ne'er missed, sir,
Upon a virgin.
- JASPERINO
Treble-qualified?
[Beatrice gapes, then sneezes]
- ALSEMERO
By all that's virtuous, it takes there, proceeds!
- JASPERINO
This is the strangest trick to know a maid by.
- BEATRICE
Ha, ha, ha!
- 145 You have given me joy of heart to drink, my lord.
- ALSEMERO
No, thou hast given me such joy of heart,
That never can be blasted.
- BEATRICE
What's the matter, sir?
- ALSEMERO [to Jasperino]
See, now 'tis settled in a melancholy;
Keeps both the time and method. [He crosses to Be- atrice] My Joanna:
- 150 Chaste as the breath of heaven, or morning's womb,
That brings the day forth; thus my love encloses thee.
[He embraces her, and] Exeunt
- Enter Isabella [with a letter,] and Lollo*
- ISABELLA [aside, as she reads]
O heaven! Is this the waning moon?
Does love turn fool, run mad, and all at once?—
Sirrah, here's a madman, akin to the fool too—
A lunatic lover.
- LOLLIO
No, no, not he I brought the letter from.
- ISABELLA [giving letter]
Compare his inside with his out, and tell me.
- LOLLIO
The out's mad, I'm sure of that; I had a taste on't.
[He reads] 'To the bright Andromeda, chief chamber-maid to the Knight of the Sun, at the sign of Scorpio, in the middle region, sent by the bellows-mender of 10 Aeolus. Pay the post.' This is stark madness.
- ISABELLA
Now, mark the inside.
[She takes the letter from Lollo and reads]
'Sweet lady, having now cast off this counterfeit cover of a madman, I appear to your best judgement a true and faithful lover of your beauty.'
- 15 LOLLIO
He is mad still.
- ISABELLA
'If any fault you find, chide those perfections in you, which have made me imperfect: 'tis the same sun that causeth to grow, and enforceth to wither—'
- LOLLIO
O rogue!
- 20 ISABELLA
'—shapes and trans-shapes, destroys and builds again. I come in winter to you dismantled of my proper ornaments; by the sweet splendour of your cheerful smiles, I spring and live a lover.'
- LOLLIO
Mad rascal still!
- 25 ISABELLA
'Tread him not under foot that shall appear an honour to your bounties. I remain mad till I speak with you, from whom I expect my cure. Yours all, or one beside himself, Franciscus.'
- LOLLIO
You are like to have a fine time on't. My master and I may give over our professions; I do not think but 30 you can cure fools and madmen faster than we—with little pains too.
- ISABELLA
Very likely.

134 What is't i.e. what is this you'd have me drink?

135 composition compound, such as medicine or drink

140 It has...missed it has so secret a property or power ('virtue') that it has never failed

141 Treble-qualified? with three effects?

142 virtuous (a) efficacious (b) chaste

149 time and method pace and quality (of the drink's effects)

4.3.1 waning moon Isabella may mean that the 'lunatic' (l. 4) activity in the hospital changes with time (i.e. the more she learns about it), even as the moon does when it wanes.

3 here's referring to Franciscus within, as author of this letter

6 inside...out (a) what it says on the outside of the envelope in contrast to what the letter itself says (b) his appearance and behaviour versus his real self

7 out's outside (indicating the name and superscription) is

8-11 Andromeda...Aeolus more of Franciscus's classical references, perhaps made superficially meaningless to prevent Lollo from reading the inside

8 Andromeda in mythology, the beloved of Perseus, who rescued her from the rock to which she had been bound as sacrifice to a sea monster

9 Scorpio a sign of the zodiac, governing the genitals

10 middle region astronomically, the region governing the year's middle months, but with bawdy quibble on the 'middle region' of the body = the genital area

10-11 bellows-mender of Aeolus In mythology, Aeolus was god of the winds; following 'middle region', 'bellows-mender' may be a bawdy quibble, gathering both 'bellies' and 'billows' (compare ll. 121-2 and note).

11 Pay the post i.e. 'postage due'; a deliberately bathetic close to the salutation

21 trans-shapes metamorphoses

22 dismantled stripped

24 spring grow, with pun on the season (compare 'in winter', l. 22)

35 LOLLIO One thing I must tell you, mistress: you perceive that I am privy to your skill. If I find you minister once and set up the trade, I put in for my thirds. I shall be mad or fool else.

ISABELLA
The first place is thine, believe it, Lollo,

40 If I do fall—

LOLLIO I fall upon you.

ISABELLA So.

LOLLIO Well, I stand to my venture.

ISABELLA
But thy counsel now: how shall I deal with 'em?

45 LOLLIO Why, do you mean to deal with 'em?

ISABELLA
Nay, the fair understanding: how to use 'em.

LOLLIO Abuse 'em! That's the way to mad the fool, and make a fool of the madman, and then you use 'em kindly.

ISABELLA
'Tis easy: I'll practise. Do thou observe it;
The key of thy wardrobe.

LOLLIO There, fit yourself for 'em, and I'll fit 'em both for you. [He gives a key]

ISABELLA
Take thou no further notice than the outside. Exit

55 LOLLIO [after her] Not an inch. I'll put you to the inside.
Enter Alibius

ALIBIUS
Lollo, art there? Will all be perfect, think'st thou?
Tomorrow night, as if to close up the solemnity,
Vermandero expects us.

LOLLIO I mistrust the madmen most; the fools will do well enough: I have taken pains with them.

60 ALIBIUS
Tush, they cannot miss; the more absurdity,
The more commends it, so no rough behaviours
Affright the ladies; they are nice things, thou know'st.

LOLLIO You need not fear, sir; so long as we are there with our commanding pizzles, they'll be as tame as the ladies themselves. 65

ALIBIUS
I will see them once more rehearse before they go.

LOLLIO I was about it, sir: look you to the madmen's morris, and let me alone with the other; there is one or two that I mistrust their fooling. I'll instruct them, and then they shall rehearse the whole measure. 70

ALIBIUS
Do, do; I'll see the music prepared. But Lollo—
By the way, how does my wife brook her restraint?
Does she not grudge at it?

LOLLIO So so. She takes some pleasure in the house, she would abroad else. You must allow her a little more length: she's kept too short. 75

ALIBIUS
She shall along to Vermandero's with us;
That will serve her for a month's liberty.

LOLLIO What's that on your face, sir? 80

ALIBIUS
Where, Lollo? I see nothing.

LOLLIO Cry you mercy, sir: 'tis your nose; it showed like the trunk of a young elephant.

ALIBIUS
Away, rascal! I'll prepare the music, Lollo. Exit

LOLLIO Do, sir, and I'll dance the whilst. Tony, where art thou, Tony? 85

Enter Antonio

ANTONIO Here, cousin; where art thou?

LOLLIO Come, Tony: the footmanship I taught you.

ANTONIO I had rather ride, cousin.

LOLLIO Ay, a whip take you; but I'll keep you out. Vault in; look you, Tony: [He sings and dances] fa, la, la, la, la. 90

ANTONIO [imitating him] Fa, la, la, la, la.

LOLLIO There, an honour.

ANTONIO Is this an honour, coz? [He bows] 95

36 I am privy to (a) I recognize (b) I share
36-7 If... thirds Lollo says, literally, that if Isabella ever sets up in the business of curing (see 'minister') madmen, he wants a 'third' share, but the subtext of 'the trade' as whoring—an exaggeration of Isabella's potential infidelity—is too strong for her to miss. (Compare De Flores at 2.2.60, 'I'll put in for one'.)

41 I fall upon you Lollo responds with coarse wordplay to Isabella's suggestion, 'If I do fall', in l. 40. He will leap upon her.

43 I stand to sexual wordplay: (a) I stand by (b) I will be sexually aroused

45 deal with 'em Lollo deliberately interprets Isabella's remark sexually.

46 Nay... 'em i.e. nay, interpret my meaning charitably: I meant I will make use of them, not deal sexually with them.

47 Abuse Deceive

49 kindly (a) tenderly (b) according to their

'kind', as they deserve

50 practise (a) rehearse (i.e. theatrically) (b) act cunningly, scheme

52 fit make ready, but with suggestive wordplay: 'get yourself ready for these men, and I'll match you with them'.

54 Take... outside (a) don't pry into this affair; take it at face value (b) notice only the disguise I'll be wearing, not the person underneath

55 put you to the inside (a) get special access or accommodations for you (b) arrange it so that I or others can have sex with you

57 close... solemnity provide a finale for the wedding festivities

63 nice delicate, fastidious

65 pizzles whips made from dried bull penises (with obvious bawdy play on the 'pizzles' taming the 'ladies')

69 morris a festive dance sometimes put on for money during this period; here perhaps used generally, to refer to a group dance.

69-70 one or two i.e. Antonio and Francis-cus

71 measure dance

77 short i.e. on too short a leash, with obvious bawdy undertones on Alibius's sexual inadequacy as a husband

79 liberty (a) freedom (b) lack of sexual restraint

82 Cry you mercy I beg your pardon

82-3 nose... elephant an insulting suggestion that Alibius has a big nose, with a cuckold joke (where nose = horn) at Alibius's expense. To 'put one's nose out of joint' was to cuckold him.

90 out i.e. out of those bad habits; with secondary meaning of: keep you away from Isabella

94 honour a curtsy, bow

- LOLLIO [returning bow] Yes, an it please your worship.
 ANTONIO Does honour bend in the hams, coz?
 LOLLIO Marry, does it; as low as worship, squireship—nay, yeomanry itself sometimes, from whence it first 100 stiffened. There, rise: a caper.
 ANTONIO Caper after an honour, coz?
 LOLLIO Very proper; for honour is but a caper, rises as fast and high, has a knee or two, and falls to th' ground again. You can remember your figure, Tony? Exit 105 ANTONIO Yes, cousin, when I see thy figure, I can remember mine.
Enter Isabella [like a madwoman]
 ISABELLA Hey, how she treads the air: Shoo! shoo! t'other way! He burns his wings else. [She pulls Antonio down] Here's wax enough below, Icarus, more than will be 110 cancelled these eighteen moons.
 [She rises, (singing)] He's down, he's down,
 What a terrible fall he had!
 Stand up, thou son of Cretan Dedalus,
 And let us tread the lower labyrinth;
 115 I'll bring thee to the clue. [She raises him]
 ANTONIO
 Prithee, coz, let me alone.
 ISABELLA Art thou not drowned?
 About thy head I saw a heap of clouds Wrapped like a Turkish turban; on thy back, [She touches him]
 A crook'd chameleon-coloured rainbow hung
 120 Like a tiara down unto thy hams. [She kneels]
 Let me suck out those billows in thy belly;
 Hark how they roar and rumble in the straits!
 Bless thee from the pirates.
 ANTONIO [pulling free] Pox upon you! Let me alone.
- ISABELLA
 Why shouldst thou mount so high as Mercury,
 125 Unless thou hadst reversion of his place?
 Stay in the moon with me, Endymion, [She touches
him]
 And we will rule these wild rebellious waves
 That would have drowned my love.
 ANTONIO I'll kick thee if again thou touch me,
 130 Thou wild unshapen antic; I am no fool,
 You bedlam.
 ISABELLA [rising]
 But you are, as sure as I am—mad.
 Have I put on this habit of a frantic,
 With love as full of fury, to beguile
 The nimble eye of watchful jealousy
 135 And am I thus rewarded? [She reveals herself]
 ANTONIO
 Ha! Dearest beauty—
 ISABELLA No, I have no beauty now,
 Nor never had, but what was in my garments.
 You, a quick-sighted lover? Come not near me.
 140 Keep your caparisons; you're aptly clad,
 I came a feigner to return stark mad. Exit
Enter Lollio
 ANTONIO [after Isabella] Stay, or I shall change condition,
 And become as you are.
 LOLLIO Why, Tony, whither now? Why, fool?
 ANTONIO
 Whose fool, usher of idiots? You coxcomb!
 145 I have fooled too much.
 LOLLIO You were best be mad another while then.
 ANTONIO
 So I am, stark mad; I have cause enough,

98 Marry, does it i.e. by (the Virgin) Mary it does

98–9 low as . . . sometimes i.e. as low as these degrees of society traditionally bow to their social superiors

99 yeomanry compare the bawdy pun (on the vagina) by Jaques, played by Rowley, in All's Lost by Lust 1.3.14–15.

100 stiffened (a) grew rigid—perhaps with play on making rigid with starch, as in the starched ruffs and collars of the aristocracy (see OED v. 1) (b) assumed a permanent character (OED v. 2b, though not attested until 1697) (c) with bawdy pun on 'yeomanry' (see previous note) caper leap

102–4 honour . . . again honour is something insubstantial (like a jump or energetic dance step): it goes up, then it goes down

104 figure (dance) routine; also: visage, physiognomy

105–6 when . . . mine when I see how foolish you are, it's easy for me to remember how to be a fool

107–29 Isabella parodies Franciscus's learned nonsense, but in doing so stresses: a myth of male arrogance

(Icarus, who flew too close to the sun, ll. 107 ff.); one in which a male hero depends on a woman to help him (Theseus and Ariadne, ll. 114–15); and one in which a goddess (Selene, the Moon, ll. 127–9) effectively feminizes an attractive man (Endymion) for her enjoyment.

109–10 wax . . . cancelled to 'cancel' was to obliterate or otherwise damage (OED v. 1a, b); punning on the waxen wings of Icarus, Isabella refers to the wax seals of legal bonds or deeds which come to grief in the human society 'below' Icarus 115 clue literally, the secret thread which led Theseus out of Minos's labyrinth; but with obvious bawdy undertones.

117–20 About thy head . . . thy hams Isabella describes a (flying) Icarus touched by clouds and a rainbow. In Greek mythology, Icarus was given wings of feathers and wax with which to escape from where Minos, king of Crete, had imprisoned him with his father, the inventor Dedalus (compare l. 113). Enjoying the powers of flight, Icarus flew too close to the sun, which melted his wings and plunged him into the ocean.

120 tiara ceremonial headdress
hams knee-joints

121 suck out . . . belly drain the (sea) water that drowned you (with an innuendo of oral sex: as Daalder points out, 'billows' was often a homonym for 'bellows' = penis: see 4.3.10–11 and note)

125–6 Why . . . place? (a) why should you fly as high as Mercury unless you had claim to his role? (b) why should you take the sexual place (with play on 'Mount') of my husband unless you had legitimate claim to it?

126 reversion of claim to 131 antic grotesque figure, clown

133 habit costume

frantic mad person

140 caparisons rags, rough cloth

141 I came . . . mad i.e. I came in pretending to be a madwoman, but now I leave maddened and angered by your foolishness.

143 as you are i.e. actually mad (from unrequited love)

145 usher keeper
coxcomb fool

147 another while a different time

150 And I could throw the full effects on thee,
And beat thee like a fury!

LOLLIO Do not, do not: I shall not forbear the gentleman under the fool, if you do. Alas, I saw through your fox-skin before now. Come, I can give you comfort: my mistress loves you, and there is as arrant a madman i'th' house as you are a fool—your rival, whom she loves not. If after the masque we can rid her of him, you earn her love, she says, and the fool shall ride her.

155 ANTONIO May I believe thee?

LOLLIO Yes, or you may choose whether you will or no.

ANTONIO

160 She's eased of him; I have a good quarrel on't.

LOLLIO Well, keep your old station yet, and be quiet.

ANTONIO

Tell her I will deserve her love.

LOLLIO And you are like to have your desire.
[Exit Antonio one way.] Enter [at another]
Franciscus

FRANCISCUS [singing]

165 Down, down, down a-down a-down.
And then with a horse-trick
To kick Latona's forehead,
And break her bowstring.

LOLLIO [aside] This is t'other counterfeit: I'll put him out of his humour.—[He retrieves the letter and reads] 'Sweet lady, having now cast off this counterfeit cover of a madman, I appear to your best judgement a true and faithful lover of your beauty.' This is pretty well for a madman.

FRANCISCUS Ha! What's that?

175 LOLLIO 'Chide those perfections in you which have made me imperfect.'

FRANCISCUS [aside] I am discovered to the fool.

LOLLIO [aside] I hope to discover the fool in you, ere I have done with you.—'Yours all, or one beside himself, Franciscus.' This madman will mend, sure.

180 FRANCISCUS What do you read, sirrah?

LOLLIO Your destiny, sir: you'll be hanged for this trick, and another that I know.

FRANCISCUS Art thou of counsel with thy mistress?

LOLLIO Next her apron strings. 185

FRANCISCUS Give me thy hand.

LOLLIO Stay, let me put yours in my pocket first. [He puts up letter] Your hand is true, is it not? It will not pick? I partly fear it, because I think it does lie.

FRANCISCUS Not in a syllable. 190

LOLLIO So, if you love my mistress so well as you have handled the matter here, you are like to be cured of your madness.

FRANCISCUS And none but she can cure it.

LOLLIO Well, I'll give you over then, and she shall cast your water next. 195

FRANCISCUS [giving money] Take for thy pains past.

LOLLIO I shall deserve more, sir, I hope. My mistress loves you, but must have some proof of your love to her.

FRANCISCUS There I meet my wishes. 200

LOLLIO That will not serve; you must meet her enemy and yours.

FRANCISCUS He's dead already.

LOLLIO Will you tell me that, and I parted but now with him? 205

FRANCISCUS Show me the man.

LOLLIO Ay, that's a right course now. See him before you kill him in any case, and yet it needs not go so far, neither: 'tis but a fool that haunts the house—and my mistress—in the shape of an idiot. Bang but his fool's coat well-favouredly, and 'tis well. 210

FRANCISCUS Soundly, soundly!

LOLLIO Only, reserve him till the masque be past, and if you find him not now in the dance yourself, I'll show you. In, in! My master! 215

Enter Alibius

FRANCISCUS He handles him like a feather. Hey!
[Exit, dancing]

ALIBIUS Well said! In a readiness, Lollio?

151–2 I shall not . . . fool I will not spare you for the gentleman you are under your disguise of fool.

153 fox-skin disguise—foxes were proverbially wily

157 ride (a) control, enjoy (b) have sex with 160 She's . . . on't she can forget about him; he's as good as dead (I have a good excuse to pick a quarrel with him and do him in)

161 old station disguise as a fool

163 And . . . desire with ironic double meaning: (a) you're in a fair way to being favoured with her love (b) you're going to get what's coming to you

164 Down, down a burden or refrain common to several popular ballads

165–7 horse-trick . . . bowstring on the surface, mad nonsense. But a 'horse trick' was an energetic dance step or kick, and Franciscus perhaps puns bawdily as well. Latona (Greek, 'Leto') is here probably an epithet for the chaste Artemis/Diana, who, as a hunter, used a bow.

177–8 discovered . . . discover wordplay: revealed in my identity . . . uncover, expose

183 another that I know Lollio perhaps knows of the warrant issued for their arrest.

184 of counsel with a confidant of 186–7 hand . . . yours Lollio puns in response to Franciscus's offering of a handshake with a jest about the hand that picks pockets. If he puts Franciscus's 'hand' ((handwritten) letter) in his pocket, won't that hand pick his pocket?

188 true honest
pick pick pockets

192–3 you are like . . . madness Lollio puns: (a) you're likely to be cured by obtaining your wish, the lack of which has driven you mad (b) you're likely to be cured by not getting her at all, which will remove the cause of your distemper. Franciscus's reply indicates he hears only the first, as Lollio intends.

195–6 cast your water (a) diagnose your urine, acting as your doctor to cure you (b) throw it and you away, throw you over (c) make you ejaculate (compare 2.2.83, 4.1.36 and notes)

201–2 her enemy and yours i.e. Antonio
203 He's dead already he's as good as dead
204–5 Will . . . him? Lollio jokingly takes Franciscus literally: Here you tell me he's already dead; why have I just seen him alive?

217 Well said! Well done!

	LOLLIO Yes, sir.		Who'd trust a waiting-woman?
	ALIBIUS		BEATRICE I must trust somebody.	15
220	Away then, and guide them in, Lollo; Entreat your mistress to see this sight. Hark, is there not one incurable fool That might be begged? I have friends.		DE FLORES Push! They are termagants, Especially when they fall upon their masters And have their ladies' first-fruits. They're mad whelps; You cannot stave 'em off from game royal then.
	LOLLIO [exiting]		You are so harsh and hardy, ask no counsel, And I could have helped you to a pothecary's daughter	20
	I have him for you, one that shall deserve it too. [Enter Isabella, then Lollo with Madmen and Fools]		Would have fall'n off before eleven, and thanked you too.
	ALIBIUS Good boy, Lollo. The Madmen and Fools dance [to music]		BEATRICE
225	'Tis perfect; well, fit but once these strains, We shall have coin and credit for our pains. Exeunt Finis Actus Quartus	Exeunt	O me, not yet? This whore forgets herself.
	⊗		DE FLORES
			The rascal fares so well. Look, you're undone: The day-star, by this hand! See Phosphorus plain yonder.	25
5.1	Incipit Actus Quintus Enter Beatrice. A clock strikes one		BEATRICE
	BEATRICE		Advise me now to fall upon some ruin, There is no counsel safe else.
	One struck, and yet she lies by't.—O my fears! This strumpet serves her own ends, 'tis apparent now, Devours the pleasure with a greedy appetite, And never minds my honour or my peace,		DE FLORES	Peace, I ha't now: For we must force a rising, there's no remedy.
5	Makes havoc of my right; but she pays dearly for't, No trusting of her life with such a secret, That cannot rule her blood to keep her promise. Beside, I have some suspicion of her faith to me, Because I was suspected of my lord,		BEATRICE	How? Take heed of that.
10	And it must come from her.—Hark! By my horrors: Strike two Another clock strikes two. Enter De Flores		DE FLORES	Tush, be you quiet, Or else give over all.
	DE FLORES		BEATRICE	Prithee, I ha' done then.
	BEATRICE		DE FLORES	30 This is my reach: I'll set some part a-fire Of Diaphanta's chamber.
	DE FLORES		BEATRICE	How? Fire, sir? That may endanger the whole house!
	BEATRICE		DE FLORES	You talk of danger when your fame's on fire?
	DE FLORES	Pist! Where are you?	BEATRICE	That's true; do what thou wilt now.
	BEATRICE	De Flores?	DE FLORES	35 Push! I aim At a most rich success strikes all dead sure; The chimney being a-fire, and some light parcels Of the least danger in her chamber only; If Diaphanta should be met by chance then,
	DE FLORES	Ay—Is she not come from him yet?
	BEATRICE	As I am a living soul, not.
	DE FLORES	Sure the devil hath sowed his itch within her.

221–2 is there . . . friends Alibius asks if there isn't an incurable fool somewhere they might ask for, to help in their entertainment. But 'begging' a fool also meant applying for legal guardianship of an insane person: their guardians stood to inherit or control any wealth which the fools had coming to them.

223 I have him Lollo means Franciscus

225 strains strains of music

5.1.1 she i.e. Diaphanta (but see 5.1.67 below, and note)

9 of by

10 And it . . . from her i.e. Diaphanta must be the source of this damning information.

10.1 Strike two probably an imperative, directing a stage hand to 'strike two' on a gong or bell

16 termagants Termagant was thought to be a violent, blustering god of the Muslims. This word came to mean 'an overbearing, quarrelsome woman' (OED 2b).

18 first-fruits first produce of the year (thus the property of a privileged few), with innuendo of 'taking their virginity'

18–19 mad whelps . . . royal i.e. they are like young dogs that disobey commands to leave animals owned by the monarch alone ('game royal' has a sexual suggestion as well)

20 harsh and hardy rash and daring

25 Phosphorus the 'daystar', the planet Venus which appeared before the sun in the morning

26 fall upon some ruin come across some desperate plan

28 force a rising make it necessary for everyone to get out of bed

31 reach plan

34 fame's reputation's

36 success outcome

strikes all dead sure i.e. (which) makes everything a dead certainty; with ominous overtones

37–8 light . . . only some small things (least likely to produce a large fire) in her lodgings alone

40 Far from her lodging—which is now suspicious—
It would be thought her fears and affrights then Drove her to seek for succour; if not seen
Or met at all (as that's the likeliest),
For her own shame she'll hasten towards her lodging.
45 I will be ready with a piece high-charged,
As 'twere to cleanse the chimney: there 'tis proper
now,
But she shall be the mark.
BEATRICE I'm forced to love thee now,
'Cause thou provid'st so carefully for my honour.
DE FLORES
'Slid, it concerns the safety of us both,
Our pleasure and continuance.
50 BEATRICE One word now, prithee.
How for the servants?
DE FLORES I'll dispatch them,
Some one way, some another in the hurry
For buckets, hooks, ladders. Fear not you.
The deed shall find its time, and I've thought since 55 Upon a safe conveyance for the body too.
How this fire purifies wit! Watch you your minute.
BEATRICE
Fear keeps my soul upon't, I cannot stray from't.
Enter Alonzo's ghost
DE FLORES
Ha! What art thou that tak'st away the light
'Twixt that star and me? I dread thee not!
60 'Twas but a mist of conscience. All's clear again.
[Exit De Flores]
BEATRICE
Who's that, De Flores? Bless me! It slides by.
[Exit ghost]
Some ill thing haunts the house; 't'as left behind it
A shivering sweat upon me: I'm afraid now.
This night hath been so tedious. O this strumpet!
65 Had she a thousand lives, he should not leave her Till he had destroyed the last.
Struck three o'clock
List! O my terrors:
Three struck by Saint Sebastian's.
VOICES (within) Fire! Fire! Fire!
BEATRICE
Already? How rare is that man's speed!
How heartily he serves me! His face loathes one,

But look upon his care, who would not love him?
The east is not more beauteous than his service.
VOICES (within) Fire! Fire! Fire!
Enter De Flores, Servants
DE FLORES
Away, dispatch! Hooks, buckets, ladders!
[The Servants] pass over. Ring a bell
That's well said.
The fire-bell rings, the chimney works, my charge;
The piece is ready.
75
Exit [De Flores, one way.]
Enter [at another] Diaphanta
BEATRICE
Here's a man worth loving.—[To Diaphanta] O, you're a jewel.
DIAPHANTA Pardon frailty, madam;
In troth I was so well I e'en forgot myself.
BEATRICE
You've made trim work.
DIAPHANTA What?
BEATRICE Hie quickly to your chamber:
Your reward follows you.
DIAPHANTA I never made
80 So sweet a bargain. Exit
Enter Alsemero
ALSEMERO O my dear Joanna:
Alas, art thou risen too? I was coming,
My absolute treasure.
BEATRICE
When I missed you, I could not choose but follow.
ALSEMERO
Thou'rt all sweetness! The fire is not so dangerous.
85
BEATRICE
Think you so, sir?
ALSEMERO I prithee, tremble not:
Believe me, 'tis not.
Enter Vermandero, Jasperino
VERMANDERO
O bless my house and me!
ALSEMERO [to Beatrice] My lord your father.
Enter De Flores with a piece
VERMANDERO
Knave, whither goes that piece?
DE FLORES To scour the chimney.
Exit [another way]

40 suspicious unlikely, doubtful. De Flores thinks it unlikely that Diaphanta will be found far from her lodging; if she is, he's ready with a plausible story as to why she would have been there.
45 piece high-charged gun, heavily loaded
48 honour The word expresses an unconscious irony.
49 'Slid an oath: by God's eyelid
50 continuance (a) continued relationship (b) survival.

54 The deed i.e. Diaphanta's murder
65 he i.e. De Flores
67 Three struck by Saint Sebastian's three chimes from the bell tower of the local church, which would sound the passing hours
69 loathes is loathsome to
71 The east The rising sun and the Far East were both associated with the beauty of orient pearls.
73 well said well done, good

79 You've made trim work ironic: (a) you've done a fine job (b) you've had a fine time at your sexual pleasure (where 'trim work' plays on the meaning of 'to trim' = to copulate)
80 Your reward follows you grim comic irony: (a) you're about to receive your reward for faithful service (b) you'll get what's coming to you. Beatrice's joke is much like Lollio's at 4.3.163.
84 I...follow ironically echoed at 5.3.108

- 90 VERMANDERO O well said, well said!
That fellow's good on all occasions.
- BEATRICE
A wondrous necessary man, my lord.
- VERMANDERO
He hath a ready wit. He's worth 'em all, sir.
Dog at a house of fire, I ha' seen him singed ere now.
The piece goes off
- 95 Ha, there he goes.
- BEATRICE 'Tis done.
- ALSEMERO
Come, sweet; to bed now. Alas, thou wilt get cold.
- BEATRICE Alas, the fear keeps that out.
My heart will find no quiet till I hear
- 100 How Diaphanta, my poor woman, fares:
It is her chamber, sir, her lodging chamber.
- VERMANDERO How should the fire come there?
- BEATRICE
As good a soul as ever lady countenanced,
But in her chamber negligent and heavy:
She 'scaped a ruin twice.
- VERMANDERO Twice?
- 105 BEATRICE Strangely, twice, sir.
- VERMANDERO
Those sleepy sluts are dangerous in a house,
An they be ne'er so good.
Enter De Flores [with corpse of Diaphanta, covered]
- DE FLORES O poor virginity!
Thou hast paid dearly for't.
- VERMANDERO Bless us! What's that?
- DE FLORES
A thing you all knew once: Diaphanta's burnt.
- BEATRICE
My woman! O, my woman!
- 110 DE FLORES Now the flames
Are greedy of her. Burnt, burnt, burnt to death, sir!
- BEATRICE
O my presaging soul!
- ALSEMERO Not a tear more;
I charge you by the last embrace I gave you
In bed before this raised us.
- BEATRICE Now you tie me.
- 115 Were it my sister now she gets no more.
Enter Servant
- VERMANDERO How now?
- SERVANT
All danger's past. You may now take your rests,
My lords, the fire is thoroughly quenched.
Ah, poor gentlewoman, how soon was she stifled!
- BEATRICE
De Flores, what is left of her inter, 120
And we as mourners all will follow her:
I will entreat that honour to my servant,
E'en of my lord himself.
- ALSEMERO Command it, sweetness.
- BEATRICE
Which of you spied the fire first?
- DE FLORES 'Twas I, madam.
- BEATRICE
And took such pains in't too? A double goodness!— 125
'Twere well he were rewarded.
- VERMANDERO He shall be.—
De Flores, call upon me.
- ALSEMERO And upon me, sir.
Exeunt [all but De Flores]
- DE FLORES
Rewarded? Precious, here's a trick beyond me!
I see in all bouts, both of sport and wit,
Always a woman strives for the last hit. Exit 130
- Enter Tomazo* 5.2
- TOMAZO
I cannot taste the benefits of life
With the same relish I was wont to do.
Man I grow weary of, and hold his fellowship
A treacherous bloody friendship; and because I am ignorant in whom my wrath should settle, 5
I must think all men villains, and the next
I meet—whoe'er he be—the murderer
Of my most worthy brother.
Enter De Flores, passes over the stage
Ha! What's he?
O, the fellow that some call honest De Flores,
But methinks honesty was hard bestead 10
To come there for a lodging, as if a queen
Should make her palace of a pest-house.
I find a contrariety in nature
Betwixt that face and me. The least occasion
Would give me game upon him. Yet he's so foul 15
One would scarce touch him with a sword he loved
And made account of. So most deadly venomous,

94 Dog at keen, hot on the trail of—the metaphor from dogs pursuing other animals of on 103 countenanced favoured
104 heavy sluggish
106 sluts servant women (no sexual sense implied)
107 An...good be they ever so good
107-8 O poor virginity!...for't De Flores seems to be suggesting, publicly, that Diaphanta has tempted the Fates too much through the perfection of her chastity; on another level, though, he speaks of the 'bargain' her virginity has led her to enter into with Beatrice.

112 O my presaging soul With some irony, Beatrice pretends to have had intuition of Diaphanta's death ('presaging' = prophetic). Compare Hamlet 1.5.41: 'O my prophetic soul!'
118 thoroughly thoroughly
128 here's...beyond me i.e. she's outdone me; my pupil has outsmarted me as her master in this kind of duplicity (by arranging that both Alsemero and Vermadero will now reward me for my 'service')

5.2.10 hard bestead poorly accommodated (thus sorely pressed)
12 pest-house hospital for those with infectious diseases (especially the plague)
15 give me game upon offer me a chance to provoke
16 he i.e. the one who owns the sword

He would go near to poison any weapon
 That should draw blood on him—one must resolve 20 Never to use that sword again in fight,
 In way of honest manhood, that strikes him;
 Some river must devour't, 'twere not fit
 That any man should find it.
Enter De Flores
 What, again?
 He walks o' purpose by, sure, to choke me up,
 To infect my blood.
 25 DE FLORES My worthy noble lord!
 TOMAZO
 Dost offer to come near and breathe upon me? [He strikes him]
 DE FLORES [drawing his rapier]
 A blow?
 TOMAZO Yea, are you so prepared?
 I'll rather like a soldier die by th' sword
 Than like a politician by thy poison. [He draws his rapier]
 DE FLORES
 30 Hold, my lord, as you are honourable.
 TOMAZO
 All slaves that kill by poison are still cowards.
 DE FLORES [aside]
 I cannot strike. I see his brother's wounds
 Fresh bleeding in his eye, as in a crystal!—[He sheathes rapier]
 I will not question this: I know you're noble.
 35 I take my injury with thanks given, sir,
 Like a wise lawyer; and as a favour
 Will wear it for the worthy hand that gave it.
 [Aside] Why this from him, that yesterday appeared
 So strangely loving to me?
 40 O, but instinct is of a subtler strain;
 Guilt must not walk so near his lodge again.
 He came near me now.
 TOMAZO [sheathing rapier]
 All league with mankind I renounce for ever,
 Till I find this murderer. Not so much
 45 As common courtesy but I'll lock up:
 For in the state of ignorance I live in,
 A brother may salute his brother's murderer.
 And wish good speed to th' villain in a greeting.
Enter Vermandero, Alibius, and Isabella
 VERMANDERO
 Noble Piracquo!
 TOMAZO Pray keep on your way, sir.

I've nothing to say to you.
 VERMANDERO Comforts bless you, sir. 50
 TOMAZO
 I have forsworn compliment; in troth I have, sir:
 As you are merely man, I have not left
 A good wish for you, nor any here.
 VERMANDERO
 Unless you be so far in love with grief
 You will not part from't upon any terms, 55
 We bring that news will make a welcome for us.
 TOMAZO
 What news can that be?
 VERMANDERO Throw no scornful smile
 Upon the zeal I bring you. 'Tis worth more, sir.
 Two of the chiefest men I kept about me
 I hide not from the law or your just vengeance. 60
 TOMAZO Ha!
 VERMANDERO
 To give your peace more ample satisfaction,
 Thank these discoverers.
 TOMAZO If you bring that calm,
 Name but the manner I shall ask forgiveness in
 For that contemptuous smile upon you: 65
 I'll perfect it with reverence that belongs
 Unto a sacred altar. [He kneels]
 VERMANDERO Good sir, rise:
 Why, now you overdo as much o' this hand,
 As you fell short o' t'other.—Speak, Alibius.
 ALIBIUS
 'Twas my wife's fortune—as she is most lucky 70
 At a discovery—to find out lately
 Within our hospital of fools and madmen
 Two counterfeits slipped into these disguises,
 Their names Franciscus and Antonio.
 VERMANDERO
 Both mine, sir, and I ask no favour for 'em. 75
 ALIBIUS
 Now that which draws suspicion to their habits:
 The time of their disguisings agrees justly
 With the day of the murder.
 TOMAZO [rising] O blest revelation!
 VERMANDERO
 Nay, more; nay, more, sir: I'll not spare mine own
 In way of justice. They both feigned a journey 80
 To Briamata, and so wrought out their leaves.
 My love was so abused in't.
 TOMAZO Time's too precious
 To run in waste now. You have brought a peace

18 He De Flores
 29 politician i.e. cunning plotter
 33 crystal reflecting surface, such as a glass
 35-6 I take...lawyer compare the proverb
 'A good lawyer must be a great liar'
 (ODEP, p. 447)
 36 favour see I.I.235, note.
 43 league alliance
 44-5 Not so...lock up I'll repress and avoid 46-7 For...murderer Tomazo speaks with an irony of which he is unaware: 'in my state of ignorance, I might, for all I know, actually give a good morning greeting to my brother's murderer'.
 (Tomazo has just been talking to the very man.)
 56 will i.e. which will 63 discoverers revealers of the news (i.e.
 Alibius and Isabella)
 68 o' this hand in this direction 70-1 as she...discovery probably an unintentional joke on 'discovery' = disor uncovering a body of its clothing
 76 draws...habits makes their disguises (especially) suspicious
 81 wrought out obtained

- 85 The riches of five kingdoms could not purchase.
Be my most happy conduct; I thirst for 'em:
Like subtle lightning will I wind about 'em
And melt their marrow in 'em. Exeunt
- 5.3 Enter Alsemero and Jasperino
JASPERINO
Your confidence, I'm sure, is now of proof.
The prospect from the garden has showed enough
For deep suspicion.
ALSEMERO The black mask
That so continually was worn upon't
5 Condemns the face for ugly ere't be seen.
Her despite to him, and so seeming bottomless—
JASPERINO
Touch it home then! 'Tis not a shallow probe
Can search this ulcer soundly; I fear you'll find it
Full of corruption. 'Tis fit I leave you:
10 She meets you opportunely from that walk;
She took the back door at his parting with her. Exit Jasperino
- ALSEMERO
Did my fate wait for this unhappy stroke
At my first sight of woman?
Enter Beatrice
She's here.
- BEATRICE
Alsemero!
ALSEMERO
How do you?
BEATRICE How do I?
15 Alas, how do you? You look not well.
ALSEMERO
You read me well enough. I am not well.
BEATRICE
Not well, sir? Is't in my power to better you?
ALSEMERO
Yes.
BEATRICE
Nay, then you're cured again.
ALSEMERO
Pray resolve me one question, lady.
- BEATRICE If I can.
ALSEMERO None can so sure. Are you honest? 20
BEATRICE
Ha, ha, ha! That's a broad question, my lord.
ALSEMERO
But that's not a modest answer, my lady.
Do you laugh? My doubts are strong upon me.
BEATRICE
'Tis innocence that smiles, and no rough brow
Can take away the dimple in her cheek. 25
Say I should strain a tear to fill the vault,
Which would you give the better faith to?
ALSEMERO
'Twere but hypocrisy of a sadder colour,
But the same stuff. Neither your smiles nor tears
Shall move or flatter me from my belief: 30
You are a whore.
BEATRICE What a horrid sound it hath!
It blasts a beauty to deformity.
Upon what face soever that breath falls,
It strikes it ugly. O, you have ruined
What you can ne'er repair again. 35
ALSEMERO
I'll all demolish, and seek out truth within you,
If there be any left. Let your sweet tongue
Prevent your heart's rifling, there I'll ransack
And tear out my suspicion.
BEATRICE You may, sir;
40 'Tis an easy passage. Yet, if you please,
Show me the ground whereon you lost your love.
My spotless virtue may but tread on that
Before I perish.
ALSEMERO Unanswerable,
A ground you cannot stand on! You fall down
Beneath all grace and goodness when you set
Your ticklish heel on't. There was a visor
O'er that cunning face, and that became you;
Now impudence in triumph rides upon't.
How comes this tender reconciliation else
'Twixt you and your despite—your rancorous loath-
ing, 50
De Flores? He that your eye was sore at sight of,
- 85 conduct document ensuring safe passage
'em i.e. Franciscus and Alonzo, who Tomazo believes to have murdered his brother
86-7 lightning...marrow proverbial:
'Lightning (thunder) bruises the tree (melts the marrow) but breaks not the bark (skin)' (Tilley, Dent L280).
5.3.1 Your...of proof your suspicion is now confirmed
2 from the garden Jasperino and Alsemero appear to have spied on Beatrice and De Flores sometime since 5.1.
3 black mask Beatrice's pretence of loathing De Flores
7 Touch strike
7-8 probe...ulcer A 'probe' was a blunt surgical instrument, typically metal, for exploring the depth and direction of wounds and sinuses.
13 At...woman i.e. at my first insight into what women are really like. (Alsemero's image reprises the Garden of Eden conceit from the play's first speech.)
14 How do you? a deliberately cool greeting (especially for newlyweds)
18 Nay...again i.e. if all that's needed to make you well again is for me to offer my help, consider it done
20 honest (a) truthful (b) chaste
21 broad (a) general (hence vague)
(b) bawdy (a sense Alsemero picks up in 'modest', l. 22)
26 vault (a) the cavity of her dimple (l.
25)—but 'vault' could mean drain, sewer, or privy (compare 3.2.21 and note)
28 sadder darker
32 blasts...to (violently) transforms...into 37-8 Let...rifling i.e. Even if your sweet tongue tries to forestall me, I'll ransack your heart to learn the truth.
41 ground (a) spot, place (b) grounds, basis.
Beatrice continues the metaphor with 'tread' in the next line, and Alsemero picks it up in l. 44, saying 'You have no basis on which to defend yourself honourably'.
46 ticklish (a) slippery (b) lascivious, wanton
50 despite contempt

He's now become your arm's supporter,
Your lip's saint!
BEATRICE Is there the cause?
ALSEMERO Worse, your lust's devil,
Your adultery!
BEATRICE Would any but yourself say that,
'Twould turn him to a villain.
55 ALSEMERO 'Twas witnessed
By the counsel of your bosom, Diaphanta.
BEATRICE
Is your witness dead then?
ALSEMERO 'Tis to be feared
It was the wages of her knowledge, poor soul;
She lived not long after the discovery.
BEATRICE
60 Then hear a story of not much less horror
Than this your false suspicion is beguiled with,
To your bed's scandal. I stand up innocence,
Which even the guilt of one black other deed
Will stand for proof of: your love has made me
A cruel murd'ress.
ALSEMERO Ha!
65 BEATRICE A bloody one.
I have kissed poison for't, stroked a serpent.
That thing of hate, worthy in my esteem,
Of no better employment, and him most worthy
To be so employed, I caused to murder
70 That innocent Piracquo, having no Better means than that worst, to assure Yourself to me.
ALSEMERO O, the place itself e'er since
Has crying been for vengeance, the temple
Where blood and beauty first unlawfully
75 Fir'd their devotion, and quenched the right one;
'Twas in my fears at first; 'twill have it now,
O, thou art all deformed!
BEATRICE Forget not, sir,
It for your sake was done! Shall greater dangers
Make the less welcome?
ALSEMERO O, thou shouldst have gone
80 A thousand leagues about to have avoided
This dangerous bridge of blood! Here we are lost.
BEATRICE
Remember I am true unto your bed.

ALSEMERO
The bed itself's a charnel, the sheets shrouds
For murdered carcasses. It must ask pause
What I must do in this; meantime you shall 85 Be my prisoner only. Enter my closet.
[Exit Beatrice into closet]
I'll be your keeper yet. O, in what part
Of this sad story shall I first begin?
Enter De Flores
Ha! This same fellow has put me in.—De Flores!
DE FLORES
Noble Alsemero!
ALSEMERO I can tell you news, sir:
90 My wife has her commended to you.
DE FLORES
That's news indeed, my lord; I think she would Commend me to the gallows if she could,
She ever loved me so well, I thank her.
ALSEMERO
What's this blood upon your band, De Flores?
95 DE FLORES
Blood? No, sure. 'Twas washed since.
ALSEMERO Since when, man?
DE FLORES
Since t'other day I got a knock
In a sword-and-dagger school. I think 'tis out.
ALSEMERO
Yes, 'tis almost out, but 'tis perceived though.
I had forgot my message. This it is:
100 What price goes murder?
DE FLORES How, sir?
ALSEMERO I ask you, sir.
My wife's behindhand with you, she tells me,
For a brave bloody blow you gave for her sake
Upon Piracquo.
DE FLORES [aside]
Upon? 'Twas quite through him, sure.—
Has she confessed it?
ALSEMERO As sure as death to both of you,
105 And much more than that.
DE FLORES It could not be much more:
'Twas but one thing, and that is she's a whore.
ALSEMERO
It could not choose but follow. O cunning devils!

53 Is there the cause? (a) is that what you are so exercised about? (b) is that the accusation? (compare 3.4.56, note)
53-4 Worse... adultery And what's worse, he, De Flores, is your tempter to lust and adultery
58 wages of price paid for 62 stand up innocence am innocent
64 your love love of you
71 than that worst i.e. than De Flores
75 Fir'd... one set afire their devotion and extinguished (i.e. suppressed) the proper one (i.e. to God: compare 'devotion' at 1.1.157)

76 'twill have it now probably 'the place' (l. 72), which has been 'crying for vengeance' (l. 73), and will now get it
87 keeper 'Keeper' here has resonances of (a) jailor (b) (with pun) keeper of prostitutes, pimp (c) keeper of lunatics (as at 1.2.134, 3.3.95).
89 put me in (a) put me in mind of (b) given me an idea or cue (theatrical)
95 band i.e. collar (of garment)
98-9 out... out with bitter wordplay: drawn... revealed 102 behindhand with in debt to (also suggesting 'behind' in the sense of backing up, conspiring with, 'in back of') 103 brave splendid, daring

104 Upon... Upon grim punning: on the body of... on the surface (as distinguished from all the way through) 106 And... than that much more than death—eternal damnation. In his reply, De Flores misunderstands or deliberately twists Alsemero's meaning, taking it to refer to how much Beatrice has confessed to.

- How should blind men know you from fair-faced saints?
- 110 BEATRICE (within) He lies! The villain does belie me!
DE FLORES
Let me go to her, sir.
- ALSEMERO Nay, you shall to her.
[To Beatrice] Peace, crying crocodile, your sounds are heard!
Take your prey to you.—Get you in to her, sir.
[Exit De Flores into closet. Alsemero locks them in]
I'll be your pander now; rehearse again
- 115 Your scene of lust, that you may be perfect
When you shall come to act it to the black audience
Where howls and gnashings shall be music to you.
Clip your adulteress freely; 'tis the pilot
Will guide you to the Mare Mortuum,
- 120 Where you shall sink to fathoms bottomless.
Enter Vermandero, Alibius, Isabella, Tomazo, Franciscus, and Antonio
- VERMANDERO
O, Alsemero, I have a wonder for you.
- ALSEMERO
No, sir. 'Tis I, I have a wonder for you.
- VERMANDERO
I have suspicion near as proof itself
For Piracquo's murder.
- ALSEMERO Sir, I have proof
125 Beyond suspicion for Piracquo's murder.
- VERMANDERO
Beseech you hear me: these two have been disguised
E'er since the deed was done.
- ALSEMERO I have two other
That were more close disguised than your two could be,
E'er since the deed was done.
- 130 VERMANDERO You'll hear me! These mine own servants—
ALSEMERO Hear me! Those nearer than your servants
That shall acquit them, and prove them guiltless.
- 111 Let . . . shall to her more grim punning: De Flores asks to be united with Beatrice, to which Alsemero answers that De Flores will share her fate.
Nay Indeed
- 112 crying crocodile The crocodile was thought to cry false tears to trap its prey, and to cry hypocritically as it devoured it.
- 116 black audience i.e. devils in hell
- 117 howls and gnashings compare Matthew 13:42: (in Hell) 'there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth'
- 118 Clip embrace
- 119–20 Mare Mortuum* . . . bottomless Alsemero alludes to hell with its rivers. The Dead Sea was thought, like hell, to be bottomless.
- 127 two other i.e. Franciscus and Antonio (to whom Vermandero likely gestures here)
- 134 banded tossed aside (hence ignored)
- FRANCISCUS
That may be done with easy truth, sir.
- TOMAZO
How is my cause bandied through your delays!
'Tis urgent in my blood, and calls for haste. 135
Give me a brother alive or dead:
Alive, a wife with him; if dead, for both
A recompense—for murder and adultery.
- BEATRICE (within)
O, O, O!
- ALSEMERO
Hark, 'tis coming to you.
- DE FLORES (within)
Nay, I'll along for company!
- BEATRICE (within) O, O! 140
- VERMANDERO What horrid sounds are these?
ALSEMERO [unlocking closet]
Come forth, you twins of mischief.
Enter De Flores, bringing in Beatrice, [wounded]
- DE FLORES
Here we are. If you have any more
To say to us, speak quickly: I shall not Give you the hearing else. I am so stout yet, 145
And so, I think, that broken rib of mankind.
- VERMANDERO
An host of enemies entered my citadel
Could not amaze like this. Joanna! Beatrice-Joanna!
- BEATRICE
O come not near me, sir. I shall defile you.
I am that of your blood was taken from you 150
For your better health. Look no more upon't,
But cast it to the ground regardlessly;
Let the common sewer take it from distinction.
Beneath the stars, upon yon meteor
Ever hung my fate, 'mongst things corruptible. 155
I ne'er could pluck it from him; my loathing
Was prophet to the rest, but ne'er believed.
Mine honour fell with him, and now my life.
- (Genesis 2:21–2).
- 150–1 I am that . . . better health I have been taken from you this way to remove the contamination which I now infect you with. (The metaphor is from blood-letting, a standard medical procedure at the time. Beatrice describes herself as a phial of tainted blood which Vermandero should immediately discard.)
- 152 it your blood; me
- 153 common sewer With 'defile' in l. 149 and 'cast' in l. 152, compare Matthew 15:17–20 (Rheims).
take it from distinction sweep it away where it will be indistinguishable from all the wasted matter of this corrupted world
- 154 yon meteor i.e. De Flores, who is like an ill-omened meteor beneath the constant and pure 'stars' (proverbial).
- 156 him De Flores
- 157 the rest i.e. subsequent events
- 138 adultery Presumably Tomazo regards Beatrice as his brother's 'wife' (l. 137), hence her marriage to Alsemero is adulterous.
- 139 O, O, O! It is strategically unclear what transpires in the closet; along with their implication of violence, Beatrice's cries (and those of De Flores) are apt to remind the audience of the sounds lovers make in their passionate embrace. Alsemero's 'Hark, 'Tis coming to you' in l. 139 helps prepare for this sexual suggestion.
'tis i.e. Tomazo's 'recompense' (l. 138)
- 145 stout (a) strong (i.e. strong enough to hear a brief speech) (b) defiant, unpromising
- 146 that i.e. is that broken rib of mankind i.e. Beatrice. De Flores speaks misogynistically of Beatrice as a daughter of Eve, the first woman, whom God made out of Adam's rib

160 Alsemero, I am a stranger to your bed;
Your bed was cozened on the nuptial night,
For which your false-bride died.

ALSEMERO Diaphanta!

DE FLORES
Yes, and the while I coupled with your mate
At barley-break; now we are left in hell.

VERMANDERO We are all there. It circumscribes us here.

DE FLORES
165 I loved this woman in spite of her heart;
Her love I earned out of Piracquo's murder.

TOMAZO
Ha! My brother's murderer!

DE FLORES Yes, and her honour's prize
Was my reward. I thank life for nothing
But that pleasure, it was so sweet to me
170 That I have drunk up all, left none behind
For any man to pledge me.

VERMANDERO Horrid villain!
Keep life in him for further tortures.

DE FLORES No,
I can prevent you: here's my penknife still;
It is but one thread more—
[He cuts himself]

—and now 'tis cut.

175 Make haste, Joanna, by that token to thee:
Canst not forget, so lately put in mind,
I would not go to leave thee far behind. (Dies)

BEATRICE
Forgive me, Alsemero, all forgive:
'Tis time to die when 'tis a shame to live. (Dies)

VERMANDERO
180 O, my name is entered now in that record
Where till this fatal hour 'twas never read.

ALSEMERO
Let it be blotted out; let your heart lose it,
And it can never look you in the face,
Nor tell a tale behind the back of life
185 To your dishonour. Justice hath so right
The guilty hit, that innocence is quit

By proclamation, and may joy again.
Sir, you are sensible of what truth hath done;
'Tis the best comfort that your grief can find.

TOMAZO
Sir, I am satisfied: my injuries
Lie dead before me. I can exact no more
Unless my soul were loose, and could o'ertake
Those black fugitives that are fled from thence,
To take a second vengeance; but there are wraths
Deeper than mine, 'tis to be feared, about 'em.

190

195

ALSEMERO
What an opacous body had that moon
That last changed on us! Here's beauty changed
To ugly whoredom; here, servant-obedience
To a master-sin: imperious murder!
I, a supposed husband, changed embraces
200 With wantonness, but that was paid before.
[To Tomazo] Your change is come too: from an ignorant wrath
To knowing friendship.—Are there any more on's?

ANTONIO Yes, sir: I was changed too, from a little ass as I was, to a great fool as I am; and had like to ha' 205 been changed to the gallows, but that you know my innocence always excuses me.

FRANCISCUS
I was changed from a little wit to be stark mad,
Almost for the same purpose.

ISABELLA [to Alibius] Your change is still behind,
But deserve best your transformation.
210 You are a jealous coxcomb; keep schools of folly,
And teach your scholars how to break your own head.

ALIBIUS
I see all apparent, wife, and will change now
Into a better husband, and never keep Scholars that shall be wiser than myself.
215

ALSEMERO [to Vermandero]
Sir, you have yet a son's duty living;
Please you accept it. Let that your sorrow
As it goes from your eye, go from your heart;
Man and his sorrow at the grave must part.

163 barley-break . . . hell see 3.3.181–2, note
164 It circumscribes us here compare Doctor Faustus, 5.121–2 (A-text): 'Hell hath no limits, nor is circumscribed | In one self place; for where we are is hell, | And where hell is, must we ever be'.
165 in spite of her heart (a) despite her disposition toward me (b) despite her inconstant heart
167 her honour's prize her virginity
175 token probably his wound—perhaps the gesture of cutting himself
180 that record i.e. the heavenly book listing earthly rights and wrongs
186–7 quit | By proclamation acquitted or absolved by public proclamation

188–90 Sir . . . Sir Alsemero may address either Vermandero or Tomazo; Tomazo may address Vermandero or Alsemero.
192 loose freed
193 black fugitives . . . thence i.e. sooty or evil devils (here = the souls of) (Beatrice and De Flores), newly departed from their bodies ('thence'). See 5.3.116 and note.
194–5 there . . . about 'em divine vengeance, more profound even than mine, is perhaps even now encompassing them
196 opacous shadowy, not illuminating

201 but . . . before but that monstrous charge has already been paid for (by the deaths of Beatrice, Diaphanta, and De Flores)
207 innocence (a) guiltlessness (b) idiocy
209 still behind yet to come
212 break your own head crack your skull; with clear suggestion of cuckoldry 215 that shall i.e. who may seem to be 216 son's duty living (a) the duty of a son-in-law, still alive (b) continuing fealty from someone once your son
217 Let . . . sorrow let that which sorrows you 218 from your eye i.e. as tears

The Changeling.

Epilogue [Spoken by Alsemero]

All we can do to comfort one another,
To stay a brother's sorrow for a brother,
To dry a child from the kind father's eyes,
Is to no purpose; it rather multiplies.

Your only smiles have power to cause re-live
The dead again, or in their rooms to give Brother a new brother, father a child:
If these appear, all griefs are reconciled.

Exeunt omnes [with the bodies]

Finis

5

THE PARTS

BEATRICE (541 lines): Madmen

DE FLORES (422 lines): Jasperino, Pedro, Madmen, Servants, Diaphanta

LOLLIO (324 lines): Tomazo or Alonzo or Servants or Diaphanta or Gentlemen or Gallants or Gentlewomen

ALSEMERO (284 lines): Alonzo or Lollo or Pedro or Madmen

VERMANDERO (148 lines): Pedro; Madmen (4.3)

ISABELLA (146 lines): Jasperino, Pedro, Servants

TOMAZO (128 lines): Jasperino; Lollo or Pedro; Madmen; Servants; Diaphanta or Gentlemen or Gallants or Gentlewomen

ALIBIUS (124 lines): Jasperino; Servants; Alonzo or Diaphanta or Gentlemen or Gallants or Gentlewomen

ANTONIO (102 lines): Alonzo, Jasperino, Servants, Diaphanta, Gentlemen, Gallants, Gentlewomen

JASPERINO (89 lines): any but Alsemero, Servants, Beatrice, Diaphanta, Isabella, De Flores, Lollo, Alonzo, and Gentles (4.1)

DIAPHANTA (63 lines): Alibius, Lollo, Pedro, Antonio, Franciscus, Madmen, Servants

FRANCISCUS (59 lines): Alonzo, Jasperino, Pedro, Servants, Diaphanta, Gentlemen, Gallants, Gentlewomen

ALONZO (48 lines): Alibius or Lollo or Pedro or Antonio or Franciscus or Madmen or Servants

PEDRO (31 lines; 1.2): any but Lollo, Alibius, Antonio

4? MADMEN and FOOLS (11 lines; 1.2, 3.3, and 4.3): any but Alibius, Lollo, Antonio, Isabella

Vermandero's FIRST SERVANT (7 lines; 1.1, 4.2, and 5.1): any but Alsemero, Jasperino, Vermandero's Second Servant, Beatrice's First Servant, Beatrice's Second Servant, Beatrice, Diaphanta, De Flores, Vermandero, Tomazo

Alsemero's SECOND SERVANT (4 lines; 1.1): any but Alsemero, Jasperino, Alsemero's First Servant, Beatrice, Diaphanta

Alsemero's FIRST SERVANT (3 lines; 1.1): any but Alsemero, Jasperino, Alsemero's Second Servant, Beatrice, Diaphanta

Vermandero's Second SERVANT (no lines; 1.1 and 5.1): any but Alsemero, Jasperino, Vermandero's First Servant, Beatrice's First Servant, Beatrice's Second Servant, Beatrice, Diaphanta, De Flores, Vermandero

Beatrice's First SERVANT (no lines; 1.1): any but Alsemero, Jasperino, Beatrice's Second Servant, Vermandero's First Servant, Vermandero's Second Servant, Beatrice, Diaphanta, De Flores, Vermandero

Beatrice's Second SERVANT (no lines; 1.1): any but Alsemero, Jasperino, Beatrice's First Servant, Vermandero's First Servant, Vermandero's Second Servant, Beatrice, Diaphanta, De Flores, Vermandero

2? GENTLEMEN (dumb show, 4.1): Tomazo; servants; Alibius or Lollo or Pedro or Antonio or Franciscus

2? GALLANTS (dumb show, 4.1): Tomazo; servants; Alibius or Lollo or Pedro or Antonio or Franciscus

2? GENTLEWOMEN (dumb show, 4.1): Tomazo; Alibius or Lollo or Pedro or Antonio or Franciscus

Most crowded scene: 4.1, Dumb show: 8 characters (+2? mute gentlemen, 2? mute gallants, 2? mute gentlewomen)

Missing from 4.1 dumb show (characters who would have a narrative reason to be present): Alibius, Lollo

Missing from 5.3 (characters who would have a narrative reason to be present): Lollo, Jasperino

Epilogue.2 stay eradicate, forestall

5 Your only i.e. Only your

6 their rooms their place

THE NICE VALOUR; OR, THE PASSIONATE MADMAN

Text introduced and annotated by Susan Wiseman, edited by Gary Taylor

The Nice Valour is an enigmatic play. Who wrote it, the date of composition, and the circumstances of its theatrical production—for the prologue and epilogue do imply that it was not only performed but revived—have all been disputed. But no such uncertainties surround its publication. It first appeared in print—in the folio Comedies and Tragedies attributed to Francis Beaumont and John Fletcher—in 1647, a time of famines and disorders as the Civil War dragged to a close (the last royalist castle, at Harlech, fell only in March 1647); Charles I was in custody, unable to raise an army in the field. It could be said that the war on the battlefield gave way to cultural polemic, and certainly books were read as partisan. Momentarily, in 1648, there were seventeen newspapers. The ‘Beaumont and Fletcher’ folio occupied a special place in the royalist publication drive and, following the various strictures against theatres after the closure of 1642, theatre had come to occupy an overtly politicized and contested position, with the composite name ‘Beaumont and Fletcher’ signalling the ‘true’ and élite value of royalist culture, aligned with ‘romance’ rather than city comedy. The composite name might well also have connoted the idealized royalist understanding of masculine friendship and honour—implications which echo some of the concerns of Valour. Such values, of course, were far from ‘purely’ ‘literary’ or ideal: throughout the Civil War and Interregnum genre and proper name were aesthetic capital in political debate.

In Civil War invocations of the writers valued by royalists, Middleton is notably absent. For example, The Famous Tragedy of Charles I (1649) includes a ‘Prologue to the Gentry’ which invokes the names of ‘Jonson, Shakespeare, Goffe, and Davenant, | Brave Suckling, Beaumont, Fletcher, Shirley’, claiming that they are ‘loathed, by the Monsters of the times’—thereby constructing both the desired audience for the play and articulating in full the royalist claim to cultural capital. Middleton is missing. Although the writers claimed in this list were not, necessarily, producers of plays which simply served the dominant ideology of the pre-war period and the threatened royalist position of the Civil War period, Middleton’s output differs from theirs in terms, simply, of the number of his plays which deal with the city in whatever terms. This made Middleton’s an unlikely name to conjure royalism. As Martin Butler and Margot Heinneman have argued, his influence can be traced in the employment of political satire, and he probably influenced interregnum political playlets: Samuel Sheppard’s The Committee Man Curried, for instance, transposes the conventions of city comedy to Civil War London. But with regard to the printing of Valour in a book designed, as the ‘Beaumont and Fletcher’ folio in part was, as royalist cultural capital, the value of Middleton’s name—even assuming his connection with the play was remembered—would have been trivial or even, possibly, negative. So the Civil War circumstances may have aided the effacement of authorship, and thereby facilitated Valour’s cultural disappearance into the quantity argument for royalist values exemplified by the folio ‘Beaumont and Fletcher’, a claim reiterated in the 1679 edition’s claim to reprint ‘fifty plays’.

To the extent that the publication of the Beaumont and Fletcher folio relied on the ‘content’ of the texts that it contained rather than invoking their totemic status as produced by the co-opted ‘royalists’ Beaumont and Fletcher, as a tragicomedy Valour could also be read as shaping experience in terms of the restitution of a questioned social order; such tragicomic shaping was to become crucial to royalist dramatic production during the 1650s. And royalist associations also encircle one aspect of Valour which certainly did have a cultural afterlife in mid-century: the song sung by the Passionate Lord in 3.3, ‘Hence all you vain delights’, more often anthologized than any other lyric from the early modern English stage. Although it appears in manuscript miscellanies dating from as early as 1624, it is especially common in Oxford miscellanies of the troubled decades from 1630 to 1660. In the overtly royalist anthology Wit Restored (1658), the song reappears after political poems of the 1640s and 1650s, suggesting that the play’s most famous moment was incorporated into the cultural capital of royalist publication.

But most scholars now agree that Middleton wrote much (and probably all) of the play, and he certainly wrote it years before Charles I polarized English politics into royalist and roundhead. The associations which have governed all previous readings of the printed text are therefore, at best, anachronistic. Valour is not Fletcherian but Middletonian, not Caroline but Jacobean. And what it meant to its author and first audiences would have depended, in part, on exactly when in the reign of James I it premiered. The previously conjectured date of composition (‘1615–16’) has recently been reassessed by Gary Taylor, who concludes that the play was written in the summer or autumn of 1622. Taylor reads ‘Hence all you vain delights’ as an epitome of melancholy in contrast to Robert Burton’s sprawling Anatomy of Melancholy (1621); he also argues that the play adopts and adapts the innovative technique of John Barclay’s internationally acclaimed political romance Argenis (1621), allegorizing the contemporary British court as Barclay had allegorized its French counterpart. Taylor's redating of the play's composition radically changes Valour's place in the sequence of Middleton's works, bringing it much closer to the date of A Game at Chess. Taylor's argument grounds the plot in relation to the court of King James and, in doing so, gives the play a cultural context unavailable when Valour was lost among the 'fifty plays' of the amorphous 'Beaumont and Fletcher canon'.

Valour uses a genre of court tragicomedy to articulate problems about the codification, meaning and regulation of violence and desire. Though the level of detail of court events known to the dramatist or recognized by spectators remains a matter of speculation, it does seem likely that Valour responds to events at court in the last decade of the reign of King James. In doing so it uses figures in the grip of the passions to represent threats to the stability of the social order and to illuminate the tendency of the rules supporting that order—such as the rules of honour—to generate the very antisocial behaviour they are imagined as regulating. The play's first scenes suggest both the analogy with James's court and the dramatic use of emotional excess to make a point about the rules shaping social behaviour. The Duke returns to court from hunting (James's favourite sport); there he meets his dear friend Chamont (who has the kind of relationship with his sovereign that James's court favourite enjoyed). Chamont is a close adherent of the code of honour, which required the individual male to police all social actions, relations and bodily boundaries for possible infringements; he is contrasted with the Duke's kinsman, 'the Passionate Lord' (associated by Taylor with the Duke of Buckingham's mentally unstable brother), who systematically violates physical boundaries. Chamont and the Passionate Lord both observe Chamont's brother, 'the Soldier', making love to a chaste court Lady (the Duke's sister), an object of the Passionate Lord's promiscuous desires and of Chamont's fantasies about honour and chastity. While Chamont stands in a jealous reverie the Duke enters and, attempting to catch his attention, taps him with a switch—thereby initiating the potentially tragic second part of the action. Mortally wounded in his honour but unable to challenge his sovereign to a duel, Chamont, evading the Duke's many attempts to call him back, retreats to the country. As Baldwin Maxwell suggested, this way of configuring the question of honour and status may draw on an incident when James I kicked one of his courtiers. In the play, it precipitates the Duke's dismissal of his entire entourage (which resembles the major upheavals in court personnel between 1616 and 1622). Apparently shocked at the effect of the code of honour on the interrelationship of 'worth' and 'blood', the Duke decides to employ solely lowly 'grooms'. Thus it is the Duke, keystone of hierarchy, who in the end challenges social status—an example of the play's critical attention to the way in which the rules which apparently shape society generate their own transgression.

The play again twins issues of violence and status in the actions of the Soldier (whom Taylor associates with English involvement in the Thirty Years War). When the Passionate Lord sends men to beat the Soldier, he responds by running the Lord through, apparently killing him. The Duke's sister pleads for the Soldier's pardon (unsuccessfully); the First Gentleman of the Duke's bedchamber posts to Chamont's retreat and persuades him to come and plead for his brother (successfully). However, in the tragicomic denouement the Passionate Lord reappears, not only alive but cured. The conflict between honour and status is reconciled through the exchange of women; as Mario DiGangi argues, heterosexuality here serves the needs of an overwhelmingly homosocial male court. The disciplining of the antisocial promiscuous desire of the Passionate Lord and the hypermasculine militarism of the Soldier and Chamont is dramatized in a classic 'comic' conclusion of betrothal: the Passionate Lord marries the Cupid, Chamont marries the Lady. That ending could be read or staged as reintroducing gender relations (which permits an ideological rather than a physical regulation of masculine violence) or as imposing marital contracts on a play which derives its energy from the intimate violence produced by contradictory masculine codes.

Each of the plot's three strands concerns both 'proper' masculine behaviour and the passions, with the relationship between the two organized by violence. The figure of Chamont suggests that honour is a highly codified form of violence. The excesses of the Passionate Lord—licensed by the Duke—call attention to the problematic interrelationship of individual conduct (even under the sign of 'madness') and state regulation of violence. And the masochistic social climber Lepet—busy formulating and printing a code of submission, and turning blows to pragmatic and economic ends—presents a 'cowardly' counter-logic in which the violence generated by social relations is absorbed, literally, by the bodies of social inferiors.

In voicing questions about status, violence and 'worth', the text deploys a complex range of references which find more and less precise resonance in issues, incidents and figures of significance in Jacobean England. For example, 'Frenchness' in the plot might draw on the French wars of religion—'La Nove' (5.2.24) was the name of a Protestant commander in those wars. Considered in terms of their relationship to violence, the warlike eponym La Nove—potentially tragic—contrasts with the Italian and comic 'wetness' of Galoshio. However, 'Frenchness' has further connotations: the office of Gentlemen of the Bedchamber (referred to, for example, by Lepet's wife at I.I.178–9) was a French as well as English office of courtly nobility, and its representation seems to hint at a theme of sexual licence when the Passionate Lord calls for Margaret de Valois and two of her waiting women (2.1.142). Margaret de Valois (who married Henry IV to produce the mixing of Catholic and Protestant dynasties in France) was accused by her brother, Henry III, of having affairs; he arrested and had interrogated two of her attendants—Dame de Béthune and Dame de Duras—who were denounced as improper company for the queen. De Valois (who died in 1615) might have sprung to mind because she was divorced at the time of her death and, after 1615, any association of divorce and sexual excess might well have recalled the murder scandal around Sir Thomas Overbury, poisoned by Frances Howard because of his opposition to her divorce. While Valour indeed seems to use ‘topical’ material, the way it shapes such material contrasts markedly with A Game at Chess, working by implication rather than direct political analogy.

Middleton in 1614 had written Masque of Cupids in celebration of the marriage of the couple later convicted for Overbury’s murder—Robert Carr and Frances Howard, the Earl and Countess of Somerset. Carr was then (like Chamont) the acknowledged favourite of his sovereign, and Chamont’s petulance recalls the ‘strange streams of inquietness, passion, fury, and insolent pride’ which King James condemned in Carr, who at times seemed to assume that the king ‘dare not offend you or resist your appetites’. The appearance of Cupid in Valour, now in ruined or disgraced form, might be read as a return to the idea of Cupid in the later context of the couple’s disgrace. Like the masquers of the Stuart court, Cupid attempts to turn a device or apparently playful disguise not only towards a ‘cure’ of the Passionate Lord but significantly towards her own needs. However, like Aurelia, the mistress disguised as a page in More Dissemblers Beside Women, this Cupid is pregnant, and her swollen figure increasingly threatens to destroy her disguise. As Bruce Smith has noted, such uses of ‘female’ disguise configure gender very differently from the gender-ambiguous page. The growing bigness of the Cupid invites a reading of the body (penetrated, bruised, mixed) as the place in which the transgression of social codes might become visible.

Here and elsewhere, the play investigates assessments of female chastity and moral fortitude. Except in the case of Chamont, where the integrity of the male body itself becomes explicitly the locus of dispute, women provide the focus, or pretext, of violent relations between men. They are repeatedly exchanged between men (like the Cupid), competed for (like the Lady) or used as a pretext or face-saving device (as Lepet uses his wife). The Passionate Lord—apparently unable to distinguish men from women in masculine dress—‘sees’ the First Gentleman as a woman disguised; this bawdy episode is symptomatic of the place of female figures in the play as a whole. Typically, it situates women as promiscuous and sexually desiring. Though this construction of femininity is promulgated by the Passionate Lord, it is shared by other men—hence Chamont’s implicit surprise at, and corresponding overvaluation of, the Lady’s chastity.

As suggested by the importance the play accords to female chastity and to the borders of the male body, Valour traces a sequence of quarrels between men which hover on the borders between ‘private’ and ‘public’ acts and the implications of border violation. This is significantly explored (as Taylor also argues) in the play’s treatment of duelling. Duels had been the object of much royal attention and subject to three royal actions by 1615, but scandalous duels involving important courtiers continued throughout James I’s reign. James may have found duels personally repellent, but (as David Wilson Harris notes) they were also ‘an affront to public justice’, because the aristocratic implications of their rule-dominated structure for controlling violence both challenged and replicated or mimicked government authority.

Historians suggest that the challenge to a duel implied claims to status which contrasted with the ‘killing affray’ in a hierarchy of violence—both, notably, outside government control. Challenging someone to duel itself asserted a particular social position: in Valour duels appear most specifically at 4.1, where social hierarchy is rendered problematic by the ambiguity of dress codes and the return of blows. The question of redress is crucial, too, where the code of honour is brought into direct conflict with the state through Chamont’s conflict with his ruler.

The on-stage circulation of violence takes place in tandem with continued questioning of the meaning or stability of social codes and hierarchy. The question of violence is worked out in terms of a contrast between Chamont’s code of honour and Lepet’s reverse code of cowardice: Lepet links pragmatic responses to violence with social and financial gain, and his book codifies cowardice in a way that mimics the code of honour. Disrupting this binary contrast is the Passionate Lord’s violence: apparently random, but authorized by his social status. The play reserves the label ‘madman’ for this perpetrator of acts which lack codification. But of course, as Sander Gilman argues, the representation of madness acts as a sign of difference, a function of ‘historical and cultural continuity, rather than any quality of the process of insanity or of the actual individual’ represented. In the theatre, madness can, as here, stand as a shorthand for crises in social relations. Specifically, in Valour madness localizes a crisis in the enforcement of rules: in the rule-bound court the rule for this figure is rulelessness. In the ‘case’ of the Passionate Lord the passions follow each other sequentially, as he transgresses various court codes and—particularly—violates social boundaries around the body. Not only has the Lord impregnated the Cupid, but he also keeps the clown Galoshio as a ‘carcass’ to beat: as Gilman notes, in seventeenth-century iconography ‘the pinwheel, the cudgel (which the madman mounts like a hobby-horse), and the disordered clothing’ all signify the madman. In The Passions of the Mind in General (1604), Thomas Wright compared human passions to the desires of animals: ‘as we see beasts hate, love, fear and hope,’ and that they act ‘seducing the will, inducing . . . to vice, and commonly withdrawing from virtue’, whereas properly governed passions enable a man to make the world productive for himself. The theatrical and signifying nature of passion described by Wright—‘Extraordinary apparel of body declareth well the apparel of the mind’—resembles Valour’s staging of excess in the Passionate Lord’s defence of loose garments. The Passionate Lord is coded in stage directions in terms of that iconography of madness, putting into circulation the question of the relationship between reason and passion, a psychological hierarchy related to social hierarchies.

As a relative of the Duke (a 'cousin'), the Passionate Lord is not restrained but humoured. (Even the First Gentleman enters into cross-gendered wordplay with him.) But when he crosses the Soldier and sends a group of bravos to beat him, he precipitates the revenge scenario which dominates Acts 4 and 5. Thus the Passionate Lord is, like Chamont, placed in a problematic relationship to the twin discourses of hierarchy and violence; his passionate outbursts question the boundaries of courtesy and hierarchy. The implication of the Passionate Lord's licence is that at court the passions are allowed to reign: the courtiers are controlled by one who is in turn controlled by his passions, and who exceeds decorum in dress, speech, sexual appetite and violent behaviour.

Seen this way, the Passionate Lord once again invokes the paradox of blood and worth, posed also by the touchy honour and violence of Chamont, and taken up again in Lepet's receipts for receiving blows and his willingness to give up his newly bought title of gentleman for profit and a place in the Duke's service. Where Chamont insists on observing the code of honour to the letter, the Passionate Lord refuses to observe any form of propriety; his acts of violence are sanctioned by his relative, the Duke, and therefore by his 'blood'. Chamont sticks to the code of personal valour, but the Passionate Lord sends a group to beat up the Soldier.

The complexity and confusion of the relationship between worth and blood reaches a climax in 4.1. The Duke, the supreme hierarchical authority, nevertheless apologizes to Chamont in terms of his offended honour: 'So that, what you in tenderness of honour, | Conceive to be loss to you... | I'll restore again'. When scornfully rejected by Chamont ('O miserable satisfaction, | Ten times more wretched than the wrong itself'), the Duke dismisses all the gentlemen of his chamber, saying 'Your worths will find you fortunes'. This claim, demonstrating his adherence to the elaborate code of honour articulated by Chamont, draws out the code's full implications: 'worth' can actually replace 'blood' (that is, inherited social status) in the establishment of individual fortune—an implication questioned by the dismissed gentlemen. The complexity is increased when we find that the comparison to Chamont is not, precisely, that the gentleman should have behaved like him, but that the Duke seeks men of lower social status—'Men more insensible of reputation' (worth), 'grooms' who are less ambiguously situated in the social hierarchy—so that 'if my anger chance let fall a stroke, | ... it may pass... undisputed.'

The possibility that value might centre on the individual, bypassing social forms and hierarchical expectations, is hinted at here. 'Worth' (worthiness) is also understood as an expression of the hierarchy which ought to generate it and which it, circularly, seems to uphold: although the play teases out the implicit contradictions between 'merit' and 'lineage' implicit in Stuart society, those contradictions are not, here, in open conflict. 'Worth' literally retreats in a direct conflict with 'blood' when the altercation between Chamont and the Duke causes Chamont's retirement. Like the disgraced Earl of Essex (who in order to secure Frances Howard's divorce was publicly declared impotent), the humiliated Chamont will remain available for the defence of his country, but he will no longer participate in court life.

The Duke calls for men of lower social status, assuming that they, at least, will be below the social ladder of honour and personal affront. Likewise, by subordinating concerns of 'worth' and blood to economic questions, Lepet finds employment receiving the blows which are forbidden by social custom and which—as the revenge of the Soldier on the Passionate Lord suggests—lead to combat between men of rank. In the second part of the same scene, when the First Gentleman is attempting to find the Duke new servants, violence passes down the social hierarchy. The Gallant provokes the First Gentleman, who challenges him; the Gallant backs down; emboldened by this success, the Gentleman next encounters a Plain Fellow and jostles him. However, rather than accede to the right to do violence as conferred by visible social position, the Plain Fellow returns the blow—indicating once again the instability of social hierarchy marked by dress ('Who would ha' thought this would prove a gentleman?'). The Plain Fellow poses a further problem about the code of honour: its lack of transparency. Is he responding outside the code of challenges and outside the code of elaborately hierarchized court violence, returning impromptu an affront?—or does he (as the First Gentleman interprets him) by the blow assert his claim to be a gentleman? In this instance, the blow itself is taken as proof of social status.

Finally, Lepet enters—the play's funniest and most original character. Lepet's coward's code rejects both 'worth' and 'blood'. He eschews the code of honour to absorb the blows of other men; he has purchased the rank of gentleman, but would surrender it for money. Moreover, Lepet's behaviour, like that prescribing rules for duels and court etiquette, is about to be printed in a book setting out the rules for cowards; albeit comically, this radical cowardice is articulated as a systematic (if unmasculine) set of responses to violence. In this inverted code life and limb are preserved overall—though worn and bruised. The preservation rather than expenditure of life is linked to the exchange value which Lepet ascribes to the body in service: under this code the individual, by electing to eschew all ideal values, is free to attempt to turn all social interaction to his own gain outside any intertwining of worth, blood and place. Thus, Lepet's worthlessness, his lack of attachment to the social hierarchy (which he is nevertheless attempting to climb), render him the codifier of laws of ignobility which might be made productive by individuals with no integral place in the social system. Lepet's book begins to articulate the social code of those placed by behaviour beyond both worth and blood and, therefore, outside the binary competition between them.

Lepet receives blows—and produces texts. He corrects proofs and guides readers to particular passages of his book; he belongs to Middleton’s gallery of satirical portraits of authorship, always ‘implicated’ and ‘never innocent’ (Taylor 1994). The innovative subject position embodied in Lepet, inside the market but outside of ‘blood’ and ‘worth’, is, according to Middleton, the not so nice status of an author.

SEE ALSO

Music and dance: Companion, 169

Textual introduction and apparatus: Companion, 1070

Authorship and date: Companion, 423

The Nice Valour

Or, The Passionate Madman

THE PERSONS

A DUKE

CHAMONT, a gentleman, the Duke’s favourite

A SOLDIER, Chamont’s brother

A LADY, the Duke’s Sister, Chamont’s beloved

A PASSIONATE LORD, the Duke’s distracted kinsman

CUPID, personated by a lady, affecting the Passionate Lord

TWO BROTHERS to the Cupid

BASE, the Passionate Lord’s jester

First GENTLEMAN of the Duke’s Chamber

Three other GENTLEMEN of the Duke’s Chamber

LEPET, an author and a gentleman about the court

CLOWN (named Galoshio), another tried piece of man’s flesh, later servant to Lepet

Lepet’s WIFE

POLTROT

MOULEBAISER } two mushroom courtiers

A GALLANT of the same temper

FIRST WOMEN MASQUER

A PLAIN FELLOW

A PRIEST

A HUNTSMAN

TWO SERVANTS

EPILOGUE

Dancers, Court Officers, five other woman masquers

I. I

Incipit Actus Primus

[Enter] Duke, Chamont, and Four Gentlemen [of the Chamber]

DUKE

Chamont, welcome. We have missed thee long,
Though absent but two days: I hope your sports
Answered your time and wishes.

CHAMONT

Very nobly, sir:

We found game worthy your delight, my lord,
It was so royal.

5

DUKE

I’ve enough to hear on’t.

Prithee bestow’t upon me in discourse.

[They walk apart]

FIRST GENTLEMAN

What is this gentleman, coz? You are a courtier, Therefore know all their insides.

SECOND GENTLEMAN

No farther than the taffeta goes, good coz,
For the most part, which is indeed the best part
Of the most general inside. Marry, thus far
I can with boldness speak this one man’s character,
And upon honour pass it for a true one:

10

Title Nice either ‘excessively fastidious’ (like Chamont) or ‘effeminate, unmanly’ (like Lepet)

Persons. I DUKE No dukedom is specified, but the play’s combination of French and Italian names might have suggested Savoy, then an independent state.

9 GENTLEMAN of the Duke’s Chamber (an important office at court, with direct and intimate access to the sovereign)

1.1.5 royal magnificent (but literally ‘appropriate to a king’, like James I, who was an avid huntsman)

1.2 character as in Sir Thomas Overbury’s Characters: description of a type

- 15 He has that strength of manly merit in him,
That it exceeds his sovereign's power of gracing.
He's faithfully true to valour, that he hates
The man from Caesar's time, or farther off,
That ever took disgraces unrevenged:
20 And if he chance to read his abject story,
He tears his memory out, and holds it virtuous
Not to let shame have so much life amongst us.
There is not such a curious piece of courage
Amongst man's fellowship, or one so jealous
Of honour's loss or reputation's glory:
25 There's so much perfect of his growing story.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN
'Twould make one dote on virtue, as you tell it.
- SECOND GENTLEMAN
I ha' told it to much loss, believe it, coz.
- THIRD GENTLEMAN [to Fourth Gentleman]
How the Duke graces him! What is he, brother?
- FOURTH GENTLEMAN
Do you not yet know him? A vainglorious coxcomb 30 As proud as he that fell for't.
Set but aside his valour—which is indeed
No virtue, and not fit for any courtier—
And we his fellows are as good as he,
Perhaps as capable of favour too,
35 For one thing or another, if 'twere looked into.
Give me a man, were I a sovereign now,
Has a good stroke at tennis and a stiff one,
Can play at equinoctium with the line
As even as the thirteenth of September,
40 When day and night lie in a scale together:
Or may I thrive as I deserve at billiards,
No otherwise at chess or at primero.
These are the parts required; why not advanced?
- DUKE [to Chamont]
Trust me, it was no less than excellent pleasure,
- And I'm right glad 'twas thine.—How fares our kinsman?
Who can resolve us best?
FIRST GENTLEMAN I can, my lord.
DUKE
There if I had a pity without bounds,
It might be all bestowed—a man so lost
In the wild ways of passion that he's sensible
Of naught but what torments him.
FIRST GENTLEMAN True, my lord,
50 He runs through all the passions of mankind,
And shifts 'em strangely too: one while in love—
And that so violent, that for want of business
He'll court the very pretence of a laundress,
Though she have kibed heels—and, in's melancholy
again,
55 He will not brook an empress, though thrice fairer
Than ever Maud was, or higher-spirited
Than Cleopatra or your English Countess.
Then on a sudden he's so merry again,
Outlaughs a waiting-woman, before her first child;
60 And in the turning of a hand, so angry—
He's almost beat the northern fellow blind,
That is for that use only. If that mood hold, my lord,
He'd need of a fresh man; I'll undertake
He shall bruise three a month.
- DUKE I pity him dearly.
65 And let it be your charge, with his kind brother,
To see his moods observed. Let every passion
Be fed ev'n to a surfeit, which in time
May breed a loathing. Let him have enough
Of every object that his sense is rapt with;
70 And being once glutted, then the taste of folly
Will come into disrelish.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN I shall see

20 his memory i.e. the pages which recall the man who acted ignobly

22 curious (a) precise in the maintenance of standards (here of courage) (b) overly fastidious

25 growing story unfolding or continuing life story

29 coxcomb foolish person (term derived from the cap worn by a professional fool, like a cock's comb in shape)

30 he... for't Satan, whose pride led him to challenge God

38 equinoctium equinox; equality between day and night. Here suggesting even-handedness but also the temporizing or fence-sitting talents of the courtier.

39 thirteenth of September day in the unreformed English calendar (ten days behind the correct Gregorian calendar) on which day and night were of equal length

40 in a scale equally weighted, without one exceeding the other

42 primero card and gambling game in which each player received four cards and each card had three times its usual value

49 passion regarded as intensifying feelings which might already be present in the psychological 'humours': see Thomas Wright, Passions of the Mind (1601). The Passionate Lord articulates the moods generated by humoral dispositions with a passionate immoderacy.

52 one while at one moment, for a time

53 want of business lack of (sexual) opportunity, or exercise

54 laundress (such a lowly occupation that it did not have a guild and therefore had no formal apprenticeships)

55 kibed with chilblains; may imply a woman with sores from venereal disease

57 Maud or Matilda (1102–1167), the daughter of Henry I. Named as her father's heir to English throne but eventually gave up her claim to her son, Henry II.

58 English Countess Frances Howard, Countess of Somerset, who divorced the Earl of Essex to marry Robert Carr. See Introduction.

62 northern fellow probably the clown Galoshio, regularly beaten by the Passionate Lord. 'Northern' seems to imply that he comes from the north of England (or Scotland)

66 kind brother (a ghost character who does not appear on stage)

67 his moods observed The Duke's treatment of such passions is unusual in permitting rather than forcibly restraining them; contrast the Soldier's reaction and its effect on the Passionate Lord.

Your charge, my lord, most faithfully effected.
Exit [Duke and other gentlemen]
 And how does noble Chamont?
 CHAMONT Never ill, man,
 75 Until I hear of baseness; then I sicken.
 I am the healthfull'st man i'th' kingdom else.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN
 Be armed then for a fit.
Enter Lepet [aloof off]
 Here comes a fellow
 Will make you sick at heart, if baseness do't.
 CHAMONT
 Let me be gone. What is he?
 FIRST GENTLEMAN Let me tell you first.
 80 It can be but a qualm; pray, stay it out, sir.
 Come, you've borne more than this.
 CHAMONT Borne? Never anything
 That was injurious.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN Ha, I am far from that.
 CHAMONT
 He looks as like a man as I have seen one.
 What would you speak of him? Speak well, I prithee,
 Even for humanity's cause.
 85 FIRST GENTLEMAN You'd have it truth, though?
 CHAMONT
 What else, sir? I have no reason to wrong heav'n
 To favour nature; let her bear her own shame
 If she be faulty.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN
 Monstrous faulty there, sir.
 CHAMONT
 I'm ill at ease already.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN Pray, bear up, sir.
 CHAMONT
 90 I prithee, let me take him down with speed then,
 Like a wild object that I would not look upon.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN
 Then thus: he's one that will endure as much
 As can be laid upon him.
 CHAMONT That may be noble.
 I'm kept too long from his acquaintance.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN O sir,
 95 Take heed of rash repentance; you're too forward
 To find out virtue where it never settled.
 Take the particulars first of what he endures:
Videlicet, bastinadoes by the great.
 CHAMONT How!

FIRST GENTLEMAN
 Thumps by the dozen and your kicks by wholesale. 100
 CHAMONT No more of him.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN
 The twinges by the nostril he snuffs up,
 And holds it the best remedy for sneezing.
 CHAMONT Away.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN
 He's been thrice switched from seven o'clock till nine, 105
 Yet with a cart-horse stomach fell to breakfast,
 Forgetful of his smart.
 CHAMONT Nay, the disgrace on't;
 There is no smart but that. Base things are felt
 More by their shames than hurts.
 [Chamont meets Lepet]
 Sir, I know you not,
 But that you live an injury to nature 110
 I'm heartily angry with you.
 LEPET
 Pray give your blow or kick, and begone then:
 For I ne'er saw you before, and indeed
 Have nothing to say to you, for I know you not.
 CHAMONT
 Why, wouldst thou take a blow?
 LEPET I would not, sir, 115
 Unless 'twere offered me; and if from an enemy—
 I'd be loath to deny it from a stranger.
 CHAMONT What, a blow?
 Endure a blow? And shall he live that gives it?
 LEPET
 Many a fair year—why not, sir?
 CHAMONT Let me wonder! 120
 As full a man to see too, and as perfect—
 I prithee, live not long.
 LEPET How?
 CHAMONT Let me entreat it.
 Thou dost not know what wrong thou dost mankind
 To walk so long here, not to die betimes.
 Let me advise thee, while thou hast to live here, 125
 Ev'n for man's honour's sake, take not a blow more.
 LEPET
 You should advise them not to strike me then, sir,
 For I'll take none, assure you, 'less they are given.
 CHAMONT
 How fain would I preserve man's form from shame
 And cannot get it done!—However, sir, 130
 I charge thee live not long.
 LEPET This is worse than beating.

76 kingdom (here as elsewhere suggesting that the play's real locale is the kingdom of England, not an unnamed dukedom) else otherwise
 86-7 wrong... nature lie (before God) to protect man (nature)
 87 her (nature was often more or less definitely personified as a female being) 91 wild object something beyond the laws of nature and culture, excessive, implicitly monstrous 98 Videlicet 'that is to say', or 'namely' (Latin); introduces amplification or explanation bastinadoes blows with sticks or cudgels by the great at a fixed price for the whole amount

99 How (expression of shock)
 100 your one's, anyone's
 102 twinges... nostril physical abuse with the implication of social provocation
 105 switched hit with a switch
 106 cart-horse stomach with huge and hearty appetite
 124 betimes forthwith, speedily

- CHAMONT
Of what profession art thou—tell me, sir—
Besides a tailor? For I'll know the truth. 160
- LEPET
A tailor? I'm as good a gentleman—
Can show my arms and all.
- 135 CHAMONT How black and blue they are?
Is that your manifestation? Upon pain
Of pounding thee to dust, assume not wrongfully
The name of gentleman—because I am one,
That must not let thee live.
- LEPET I have done, I have done, sir!
140 If there be any harm, beshrew the herald.
I'm sure I ha' not been so long a gentleman
To make this anger; I have nothing nowhere
But what I dearly pay for.
- CHAMONT Groom, begone! Exit Lepet
I never was so heartsick yet of man.
Enter Lady (the Duke's sister) and Lepet's wife
- FIRST GENTLEMAN
145 Here comes a cordial, sir, from t'other sex,
Able to make a dying face look cheerful.
- CHAMONT [to Lady]
The blessedness of ladies—
- LADY You're well met, sir.
- CHAMONT
The sight of you has put an evil from me,
Whose breath was able to make virtue sicken.
- LADY
150 I'm glad I came so fortunately. What was't, sir?
- CHAMONT
A thing that takes a blow, lives and eats after it,
In very good health; you ha' not seen the like,
madam.
A monster worth your sixpence, lovely worth.
- LADY
155 Speak low, sir; by all likelihoods 'tis her husband,
That now bestowed a visitation on me.
Farewell, sir. Exit
- CHAMONT
'Husband'? Is't possible he has a wife?
Would any creature have him? 'Twas some forced match.
- If he were not kicked to th' church o'th' wedding day,
I'll never come at court. Can be no otherwise. 160
Perhaps he was rich.—Speak, Mistress Lepet, was it not so?
WIFE Nay, that's without all question.
- CHAMONT
O ho! He would not want kickers enough then.
If you are wise, I much suspect your honesty,
For wisdom never fastens constantly 165
But upon merit. If you incline to fool,
You are alike unfit for his society.
Nay, if it were not boldness in the man
That honours you, to advise you—troth, his company
Should not be frequent with you.
- WIFE 'Tis good counsel, sir. 170
- CHAMONT
O I am so careful where I reverence—
So just to goodness and her precious purity,
I am as equally jealous and as fearful
That any undeservèd stain might fall 175
Upon her sanctified whiteness, as of the sin
That comes by wilfulness.
- WIFE Sir, I love your thoughts,
And honour you for your counsel and your care.
- CHAMONT [bowing]
We are your servants.
- WIFE [aside] He's but a gentleman
O'th' chamber; he might have kissed me. Faith,
Where shall one find less courtesy than at court? 180
Say I have an undeserver to my husband;
That's ne'er the worse for him. Well, strange-lipped
men,
'Tis but a kiss lost; there'll more come again. Exit
Enter the Passionate Lord (the Duke's kinsman), makes a congee or two to nothing
- FIRST GENTLEMAN [aside to Chamont]
Look who comes here, sir. His love fit's upon him.
I know it by that set smile and those congees. 185
How courteous he's to nothing—which, indeed,
Is the next kin to woman; only shadow
The elder sister of the twain, because 'tis seen too.
See how it kisses the forefinger still—
Which is the last edition, and (being come 190

133 tailor (term of abuse or ridicule; also suggests he is fashionably dressed)

135 arms coat of arms, to indicate his rank

136 manifestation demonstration or revelation of qualities; suggests the heraldic display of arms; emblem. Pun on 'man'.

140 herald herald at arms who regulated the devices of the gentry and aristocracy

141–3 I ha'...for (he has only recently been elevated to the gentry and has paid for the privilege)

143 Groom (insult because of the groom's low social status; the dominant modern sense of 'one who attends horses' was only used contextually)

145 cordial invigorating, medicinal thing; heartening

153 monster...sixpence (freaks were displayed at fairs for profit) lovely worth (sarcastic: 'and what a charming thing you see for your money')

154 low softly

158 forced match 'arranged marriage' or 'shotgun wedding'

164 honesty chastity

179 chamber reception room in a palace and therefore a court office kissed social greeting (refers to gentleman of l. 178)

180 courtesy (pun on 'court')

182 strange-lipped unwilling to be kissed

183.2 congee bow, in courtesy

186–8 nothing...too although, like a shadow, woman is effectively nothing—yet she is visible

189 it derogatory term for 'him'

kisses...forefinger (fashionable behaviour)

190 Which...edition courtesy learnt from courtesy books of the latest edition—i.e. fashion. (Also possibly the Passionate Lord is kissing his fingers, and this refers to the last finger before the thumb.)

So near the thumb) every cobbler has got it.
 CHAMONT
 What a ridiculous piece humanity
 Here makes itself!
 FIRST GENTLEMAN Nay, good, give leave a little, sir,
 You're so precise a manhood—
 CHAMONT It afflicts me
 195 When I behold unseemliness in an image
 So near the Godhead; 'tis an injury
 To glorious eternity.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN Pray use patience, sir.
 PASSIONATE LORD [to First Gentleman]
 I do confess it freely, precious lady—
 And love's suit is so, the longer it hangs 200 The worse it is; better cut off, sweet madam.
 O that same drawing-in your nether lip there Foreshows no goodness, lady. Make you question
 on't?
 Shame on me but I love you.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN Who is't, sir,
 You are at all this pains for? May I know her?
 PASSIONATE LORD
 205 For thee thou fairest, yet the falsest woman,
 That ever broke man's heartstrings.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN How? How's this, sir?
 PASSIONATE LORD
 What, the old trick of ladies, man's apparel?
 Will't ne'er be left amongst you? steal from court in't?
 FIRST GENTLEMAN [to Chamont]
 I see the fit grows stronger.
 PASSIONATE LORD Pray, let's talk a little.
 CHAMONT
 I can endure no more.
 210 FIRST GENTLEMAN Good, let us alone a little.
 You are so exact a work: love light things somewhat,
 sir.
 CHAMONT
 They're all but shames.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN [to Passionate Lord]
 What is't you'd say to me, sir?

PASSIONATE LORD
 Can you be so forgetful to enquire it, lady?
 FIRST GENTLEMAN
 Yes, truly, sir.
 PASSIONATE LORD
 The more I admire your flintiness.
 What cause have I given you, illustrious madam,
 215 To play this strange part with me?
 FIRST GENTLEMAN Cause enough.
 Do but look back, sir, into your memory,
 Your love to other women. O lewd man,
 It's almost killed my heart! You see I'm changed with
 it;
 I ha' lost the fashion of my sex with grief on't,
 220 When I have seen you courting of a dowdy,
 Compared with me, and kissing your forefinger
 'To one o'th' blackguard's mistresses. Would not this Crack a poor lady's heart, that believed love,
 And waited for the comfort? But 'twas said, sir, 225 A lady of my hair cannot want pitying.
 The country's coming up; farewell to you, sir.
 PASSIONATE LORD
 Whither intend you, sir?
 FIRST GENTLEMAN A long journey, sir.
 The truth is, I'm with child, and go to travel.
 PASSIONATE LORD
 With child? I never got it.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN I heard you were busy
 230 At the same time, sir, and was loath to trouble you.
 PASSIONATE LORD
 Why, are not you a whore then, excellent madam?
 FIRST GENTLEMAN
 O, by no means! 'Twas done, sir, in the state
 Of my belief in you, and that quits me;
 It lies upon your falsehood.
 PASSIONATE LORD Does it so?— 235 You shall not carry her though, sir; she's my contract.
 CHAMONT
 I prithee, thou four elements ill-brewed,
 Torment none but thyself. Away, I say,

191 thumb (biting the thumb implied aggressive intention) cobbler manual labourer (thumbs are associated with work and with measurement at work) 194 precise punctilious about
 195-6 image... Godhead (alluding to the idea that man is made in God's image)
 198 lady (he assumes the First Gentleman is a woman in disguise)
 200 cut off 'abridged, abrupt' (declaration of love) or 'castrated'
 201 nether lip lower lip (also suggesting vulva; the tightness of the lips suggests she will not be sexually open)
 208 steal from court possibly referring to Arabella Stuart's escape from the court

in 1610
 221 dowdy shabby or unattractively dressed woman
 223 blackguard's criminal, vagabond, idler
 225 comfort consolation (here the consolation or invigorating influence of knowing oneself to be loved, with an ambiguity about whether the anticipated consolation is spiritual or physical, sexual) 226 hair appearance, type
want lack
 227 country's coming up people (here presumably potential suitors) are coming to London to attend court
 228 sir (a possible form of address to females as well as males)

229 travel pun on 'travail' (labour, child-birth)
 233-5 'Twas... falsehood (the logic of this claim seems to be that because 'she' was in a state of belief in, or fantasy about, the Passionate Lord when the child was conceived, the conception does not constitute unfaithfulness)
 236 contract bargain, property (also implying 'contracted' to be married)
 237 four elements in humoral theory earth, water, air, and fire were seen as the elements which constituted personality, and imbalance in the elements (as in the case of the Passionate Lord) was seen as causing behavioural patterns and changes

240	Thou beast of passion, as the drunkard is The beast of wine; dishonour to thy making, Thou man in fragments.		[Incipient] Actus Secundus [Chairs.] Enter Chamont's brother (a Soldier) and a Lady (the Duke's sister)	2.1
	PASSIONATE LORD [kneeling to First Gentleman] Hear me, precious madam.		LADY There should be in this gallery—O they're here. [She sits]
	CHAMONT Kneel for thy wits to heaven.		LADY Pray, sit down; believe me, sir, I'm weary.
	PASSIONATE LORD Lady, I'll father it, Whoe'er begot it; 'tis the curse of greatness.		SOLDIER It well becomes a Lady to complain a little Of what she never feels. Your walk was short, madam.
	CHAMONT How virtue groans at this!		SOLDIER You can be but afraid of weariness (Which well employs the softness of your sex); As for the thing itself, you never came to't.	5
245	PASSIONATE LORD I'll raise the court, but I will stay your flight. Exit Passionate Lord		LADY You're wondrously well read in ladies, sir.
	CHAMONT How wretched is that piece!		SOLDIER Shall I think such a creature as you, madam, Was ever born to feel pain, but in travail?	10
	FIRST GENTLEMAN He's the Duke's kinsman, sir.		SOLDIER There's your full portion, Besides a little toothache in the breeding, Which a kind husband too takes from you, madam.
	CHAMONT That cannot take away a passion, sir, Nor cut a fit but one poor hour shorter. He must endure as much as the poor'st beggar		LADY But where do ladies, sir, find such kind husbands? Perhaps you have heard	15
250	That cannot change his money; there's the equality In our impartial essence. Enter a Servant		LADY The rheumatic story of some loving chandler now, Or some such melting fellow, that you talk So prodigal of men's kindness. I confess, sir, Many of those wives are happy their ambition Does reach no higher than to love and ignorance,	20
	SERVANT Your worthy brother, sir, has left his charge, And come to see you. Enter Chamont's brother (a soldier)		LADY Now sir, your great ones aim at height and cunning, And so are oft deceived. Yet they must venture it; For 'tis a lady's contumely, sir, To have a lord an ignorant; then the world's voice Will deem her for a wanton ere she taste on't.	25
	CHAMONT [embracing him] O the noblest welcome That ever came from man meet thy deservings!		LADY But to deceive a wise man, to whose circumspection The world resigns itself (with all his envy), 'Tis less dishonour to us then to fall, Because his believed wisdom keeps out all.	30
255	Methinks I've all joy's treasure in mine arms now.		SOLDIER Would I were the man, lady, that should venture His wisdom to your goodness.
	SOLDIER You are so fortunate in prevention, brother, You always leave the answerer barren, sir; You comprehend in few words so much worth—		LADY You might fail In the return, as many men have done, sir. I dare not justify what is to come of me,
	CHAMONT 'Tis all too little for thee. Come, thou'rt welcome. So I include all: take especial knowledge, pray, Of this dear gentleman (my absolute friend) That loves a soldier far above a mistress, Though excellently faithful to 'em both; But love to manhood owns the purer troth. Exeunt

242 father act as the male parent and therefore give his name 245 raise arouse, alert, disturb stay your flight prevent your escape 246 wretched (a) miserable (b) base, contemptibly low in status piece man, creature (as in 'piece of flesh') 250 change his money transform his fortunes
258 comprehend sum up

264 owns has a claim to being
2.1.12 toothache (considered a side effect of pregnancy) breeding (a) pregnancy (b) sexual intercourse 13 kind husband the husband removes her 'ache', perhaps implying her desire 16 rheumatic tearful, weeping chandler maker or seller of candles
17 melting sentimental, drippy
22 height and cunning high position and cleverness (here qualities seen as incompatible with male marital fidelity) 24 contumely reproach, insult

25 ignorant idiot
31-2 venture... goodness risk his wisdom in trusting to her sexual fidelity and deserved good name
33 return profit which comes back from on commodities risked in a trading 'venture' (the outcome of taking a risk on a woman's 'goodness')

35 Because I know it not, though I hope virtuously; Marry, what's past or present, I durst put Into a good man's hand, which if he take Upon my word for good, it shall not cozen him.

SOLDIER
No, nor hereafter?

LADY It may hap so too, sir.

40 A woman's goodness, when she is a wife,
Lies much upon a man's desert, believe it, sir.
If there be fault in her, I'll pawn my life on't,
'Tis first in him, if she were ever good.
That makes me, knowing not a husband yet,
45 Or what he may be, promise no more virtues
Than I may well perform, for that were cozenage.

SOLDIER
Happy were he that had you with all fears!
That's my opinion, lady.
Enter Chamont and a servant list'ning. [They talk apart]

SERVANT What say you now, sir?
Dare you give confidence to your own eyes?

CHAMONT
Not yet, I dare not.

SERVANT No?

50 CHAMONT Scarce yet, or yet—
Although I see 'tis he. Why, can a thing
That's but myself divided be so false?

SERVANT
Nay, do but mark how the chair plays his part too;
How amorously 'tis bent.

CHAMONT Hell take thy bad thoughts!
55 For they are strange ones; never take delight
To make a torment worse.—Look on 'em, heaven,
For that's a brother. Send me a fair enemy,
And take him; for a fouler fiend there breathes not.
I will not sin, to think there's ill in her 60 But what's of his producing.
Yet goodness, whose enclosure is but flesh,
Holds out oft times but sorrily. But as black, sir,
As ever kindred was, I hate mine own blood,
Because it is so near thine. Live without honesty,
65 And mayst thou die with an unmoistened eye,
And no tear follow thee. Exeunt Chamont, Servant

LADY You're wondrous merry, sir;
I would your brother heard you.

SOLDIER Or my sister;
I would not out o'th' way let fall my words, lady,

For the precisest humour.
Enter Passionate Lord
PASSIONATE LORD [aside] Yea, so close?
SOLDIER
They're merry; that's the worst you can report on
'em; 70
They're neither dangerous nor immodest.
PASSIONATE LORD So, sir,
Shall I believe you, think you?
SOLDIER Who's this, lady?
LADY
O, the Duke's cousin; he came late from travel, sir.
SOLDIER
Respect belongs to him.
PASSIONATE LORD For as I said, lady,
'They're merry; that's the worst you can report on
'em. 75
They're neither dangerous nor immodest.'
SOLDIER
How's this?
PASSIONATE LORD
And there I think I left.
SOLDIER [aside] Abuses me!
[The Soldier stands apart]
PASSIONATE LORD
Now to proceed, lady. Perhaps I swore I loved you;
If you believe me not, you're much the wiser.
SOLDIER [aside]
80 He speaks still in my person, and derides me.
PASSIONATE LORD
For I can cog with you.
LADY You can all do so.
We make no question of men's promptness that way.
PASSIONATE LORD
And smile, and wave a chair with comely grace too,
Play with our tassel gently, and do fine things
That catch a lady sooner than a virtue. 85
SOLDIER [aside]
I never used to let man live so long that wronged me.
PASSIONATE LORD
Talk of battalions, woo you in a skirmish,
Divulge my mind to you, lady, and (being sharp set)
Can court you at half-pike, or name your weapon—
We cannot fail you, lady.
Enter First Gentleman [behind]
SOLDIER [aside] Now he dies 90
Were all succeeding hopes stored up within him.

38 cozen deceive

43 'Tis... good i.e., if a woman ever had any virtue, her fall from it must have occurred because she was corrupted by some man, who fell before she did

44 That makes me i.e., the foregoing logic is why I

53 chair (seems to imply that Soldier is leaning towards the Lady, using a chair as an aid to flirtation)

62 sorrily feebly

67 would wish that

sister sister-in-law (assuming she will marry Chamont)

68-9 I... humour (A precisian is exact in observing forms, so perhaps the Soldier is suggesting that he would be unhappy for his words to wander 'out of the way', the strict path, followed by the most correct and exact observer of forms—as Chamont might be said to be.)

75-6 They're... immodest (Passionate Lord mimics the Soldier's manner.)

81 cog play or deal dishonestly

84 tassel (a) part of clothing (b) penis

(c) 'tassel gentle'—the male hawk

88 sharp set (a) set on edge, having an appetite (b) prepared with a sharp weapon

89 weapon (a) military skill (b) penis

91 succeeding hopes 'hopes of succession', i.e. chances for the continuation of the ruling line

[He draws his sword]
 FIRST GENTLEMAN [to Soldier]
 O fie, i'th' court, sir?
 SOLDIER I most dearly thank you, sir.
 [He sheathes his sword]
 FIRST GENTLEMAN
 'Tis rage ill spent upon a passionate madman.
 SOLDIER
 That shall not privilege him for ever, sir.
 A madman call you him? I have found too much
 95 reason
 Sound in his injury to me to believe him so.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN
 If ever truth from man's lips may be held
 In reputation with you, give this confidence;
 And this' his love-fit, which we observe still,
 100 By's flattering and his fineness: at some other time,
 He'll go as slovenly as heart can wish.
 The love and pity that his highness shows to him
 Makes every man the more respectful of him:
 Has never a passion, but is well provided for—105 As this of love. He is full fed in all;
 His swinge, as I may term it. Have but patience,
 And ye shall witness somewhat.
 SOLDIER Still he mocks me,
 Look you, in action, in behaviour.
 [The Soldier addresses the Passionate Lord]
 Sir,
 Hold still the chair, with a grand mischief to you,
 110 Or I'll set so much strength upon your heart, sir—
 PASSIONATE LORD
 I feel some power has restrained me, lady.
 If it be sent from love, say, I obey it,
 And ever keep a voice to welcome it.
 [The Passionate Lord sings]
 115 Thou deity, swift-wingèd love,
 Sometimes below, sometimes above,
 Little in shape, but great in power,
 Thou that mak'st a heart thy tower,
 And thy loop-holes, ladies' eyes,
 From whence thou strik'st the fond and wise.
 120 Did all the shafts in thy fair quiver
 Stick fast in my ambitious liver,
 Yet thy power would I adore
 And call upon thee to shoot more.
 Shoot more, shoot more.
 Enter one like a Cupid off'ring to shoot at him
 I prithee hold though, sweet celestial boy. 125
 I'm not requited yet with love enough
 For the first arrow that I have within me.
 And if thou be an equal archer, Cupid,
 Shoot this lady, and twenty more for me.
 LADY Me, sir? 130
 FIRST GENTLEMAN
 'Tis nothing but device; fear it not, lady.
 You may be as good a maid after that shaft, madam,
 As e'er your mother was at twelve and a half.
 'Tis like the boy that draws it; 't'as no sting yet.
 CUPID (aside)
 'Tis like the miserable maid that draws it, 135
 That sees no comfort yet, seeing him so passionate.
 PASSIONATE LORD
 Strike me the Duchess of Valois in love with me,
 With all the speed thou canst, and two of her women.
 CUPID
 You shall have more. Exit
 PASSIONATE LORD Tell 'em I tarry for 'em.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN [to Soldier]
 Who would be angry with that walking trouble now 140
 That hurts none but itself?
 SOLDIER I am better quieted.
 PASSIONATE LORD
 I'll have all womenkind struck in time for me
 After thirteen once.
 —I see this Cupid will not let me want;
 And let him spend his forty shafts an hour, 145
 They shall be all found from the Duke's exchequer.
 He's come already.
 Enter again the same Cupid, two Brothers, six women Masquers, Cupid's bow bent all the way towards them, the first woman singing and playing; a Priest
 FIRST WOMAN MASQUER (sings)
 O turn thy bow!
 Thy power we feel and know;
 Fair Cupid, turn away thy bow. 150

92 i'th' court (where drawing of weapons was forbidden)
 99 this' this is
 100 By's by his, visible in his 102 his highness i.e. the Duke (although the title is usually reserved for kings) 106 swinge (a) blow (b) scope or free course to indulge one's inclinations
 108 action gesture
 115 below ... above (a) devilish ... heavenly
 (b) ethereal, intellectual ... physical (c) on the upper parts of the body ... on the lower parts
 116 Little alluding to the small size of

(a) Cupid (b) a penis
 118 loop-holes vertical opening in fortification to allow the firing of missiles
 119 fond foolish
 121 liver organ which secretes bile; the seat of violent passion
 128 equal impartial
 131 device conceit, or play-acting elaborating a symbolic story
 132 shaft pun on (a) stalk of Cupid's arrow
 (b) penis in sexual intercourse 133 twelve and a half (too young to have had intercourse)
 134 sting (a) power to hurt, or 'bite' (b) pole used as a weapon, or organ used to insert poisonous fluid—hence, 'erect penis'

 137 Duchess of Valois See Introduction.
 142 in time (a) eventually (b) at an appropriate time
 143 After thirteen once For the audience this picks up and twists the first gentleman's words to the Lady: he intends to have sex once with every female who has passed her thirteenth birthday
 (normal age of puberty)
 146 They ... exchequer i.e. they will be paid for out of the national treasury

	Here comes his highness, sir. Enter Duke, and Lords [among them, the second, third, and fourth Gentlemen]	No man else should. Stood forty lives before him, By this I would have oped my way to him. It could not be you, sir; excuse him not, Whate'er he be. Speak, as you're dear to honour, That I may find my peace again.	230
SOLDIER	I'll walk to cool myself. Exit
DUKE	Who's that?	DUKE	Forbear, I say. Upon my love to truth, 'twas none but I.
FIRST GENTLEMAN	The brother of Chamont.	CHAMONT	Still miserable!
DUKE	He's brother then	DUKE	Come, come, what ails you, sir?
200	To all the court's love—they that love discreetly, And place their friendliness upon desert. As for the rest, that with a double face Look upon merit (much like Fortune's visage, That looks two ways, both to life's calms and storms),	CHAMONT	Never sat shame cooling so long upon me Without a satisfaction in revenge, And heaven has made it here a sin to wish it.	235
205	I'll so provide for him, chiefly for him, He shall not wish their loves, nor dread their envies. And here comes my Chamont. Enter Chamont [speaking to himself]	DUKE	Hark you, sir.
CHAMONT	That lady's virtues are my only joys, And he to offer to lay siege to them?	CHAMONT	O you've undone me. DUKE	How?
210	DUKE [to Chamont] Chamont.	CHAMONT	Cruelly undone me! I have lost my peace and reputation by you. Sir, pardon me, I can never love you more.	240
CHAMONT	Her goodness is my pride; in all discourses, As often as I hear rash-tongued gallants Speak rudely of a woman, presently I give in but her name, and they're all silent. O, who would lose this benefit?	DUKE	What language call you this, sirs?	Exit
215	DUKE [to Chamont] Come hither, sir.	FIRST GENTLEMAN	Truth my Lord, I've seldom heard a stranger.
CHAMONT	'Tis like the gift of healing, but diviner, For that but cures diseases in the body; This works a cure on fame, on reputation— The noblest piece of surgery upon earth.	SECOND GENTLEMAN	He is a man of a most curious valour, Wondrous precise and punctual in that virtue.	245
220	DUKE Chamont!—He minds me not. CHAMONT A brother do't? DUKE Chamont, I say. He gives him a touch with his switch	DUKE	But why to me so punctual? My last thought Was most entirely fixed on his advancement. Why, I came now to put him in possession Of his fair fortunes—what a misconceiver 'tis!— And from a Gentleman of our Chamber merely Make him Vice-Admiral. I was settled in't; I love him next to health. Call him, gentlemen.	250
225	CHAMONT Ha? If he be mortal, by this hand he perishes. [He draws his sword]		Exit First Gentleman
230	Unless it be a stroke from heaven, he dies for't.	SECOND GENTLEMAN	Troth, I think we should, my lord, And there's a fellow walks about the court Would take a hundred of 'em.	255
DUKE	Why, how now, sir? 'Twas I.	DUKE	I hate you all for't, And rather praise his high-pitched fortitude, Though in extremes for niceness. Now I think on't, I would I had never done't.
CHAMONT	The more's my misery.		Enter First Gentleman
DUKE	Why, what's the matter, prithee?		Now, sir, where is he?
CHAMONT	Can you ask it, sir?	FIRST GENTLEMAN	His suit is only, sir, to be excused.	260

203 Fortune's visage i.e. Fortune's 'double face' may smile or frown

229 this (a) now (b) this sword

244 curious particular, precise

245 punctual exact in every point; accurate, superscrupulous

250 merely both 'only' (referring backward to 'Gentleman of our Chamber', an office of personal attendance on the sovereign, without official function in governance) and 'actually' (referring forward to 'Make him...')

251 Vice-Admiral naval position second to admiral or commander of a national fleet. (Buckingham, James I's favourite, was Admiral of England.)

258 niceness fastidiousness

DUKE
 He shall not be excused. I love him dearlier.
 Say we entreat him; go, he must not leave us.
Exit two Gentlemen
 So virtue bless me, I ne'er knew him paralleled.
 Why, he's more precious to me now than ever.
Enter two Gentlemen and Chamont [who stands apart]

265 SECOND GENTLEMAN
 With much fair language, sir, we've brought him.
 DUKE Thanks.

Where is he?
 SECOND GENTLEMAN Yonder, sir.
 DUKE [to Chamont] Come forward, man.
 CHAMONT Pray, pardon me. I'm ashamed to be seen, sir.

DUKE Was ever such a touchy man heard of?—
 Prithee, come nearer.

270 CHAMONT More into the light?
 Put not such cruelty into your requests, my Lord,
 First to disgrace me publicly, and then draw me
 Into men's eyesight, with the shame yet hot
 Upon my reputation.

DUKE What disgrace, sir?
 CHAMONT What?
 Such as there can be no forgiveness for,
 That I can find in honour.

275 DUKE That's most strange, sir.
 CHAMONT Yet I have searched my bosom to find one,
 And wrestled with my inclination,
 But 'twill not be. Would you had killed me, sir!
 With what an ease had I forgiven you then!
 280 But to endure a stroke from any hand
 Under a punishing angel's (which is justice),
 Honour disclaim that man, for my part chiefly:
 Had it been yet the malice of your sword,
 Though it had cleft me, 't had been noble to me;
 285 You should have found my thanks paid in a smile
 If I had fell unwor'ded. But to shame me,
 With the correction that your horse should have,
 Were you ten thousand times my royal lord,
 I cannot love you, never, nor desire to serve you
 more.

If your drum call me, I am vowed to valour,
 But peace shall never know me yours again,
 Because I've lost mine own. I speak to die, sir.
 Would you were gracious that way to take off shame
 With the same swiftness as you pour it on:
 295 And since it is not in the power of monarchs
 To make a gentleman (which is a substance
 Only begot of merit), they should be careful
 Not to destroy the worth of one so rare
 Which neither they can make; nor, lost, repair.
Exit [behind]

DUKE [to Chamont]
 You've set a fair light, sir, before my judgement, 300 Which burns with wondrous clearness; I acknowledge
 it,
 And your worth with it. But then, sir, my love,
 My love—what, gone again?

FIRST GENTLEMAN And full of scorn, my lord.
 DUKE That language will undo the man that keeps it,
 Who knows no difference 'twixt contempt and manhood.
 305 Upon your love to goodness, gentlemen,
 Let me not lose him long.
Enter a huntsman

How now?
 HUNTSMAN The game's at height, my lord.
 DUKE Confound both thee and it! Hence, break it off!
 [Exit Huntsman]

310 He hates me brings me news of any pleasure.
 I felt not such a conflict since I could Distinguish betwixt worthiness and blood. Exeunt

●

[Incipit Actus Tertius
Enter the two Brothers, First Gentleman, with those that were the Masquers, and the Cupid]
 3.1

FIRST GENTLEMAN
 I heartily commend your project, gentlemen.
 'Twas wise and virtuous.

FIRST BROTHER 'Twas for the safety
 Of precious honour, sir, which near blood binds us to.
 He promised the poor easy fool there marriage.
 5 There was a good maidenhead lost i'th' belief on't.

281 punishing angel's angel employed by deity to exact retribution
 282 disclaim disown
 287 your horse (Buckingham was the King's Master of the Horse.)
 288 my royal lord (like 'monarchs' at l. 301, encouraging the audience to think of a king rather than a 'Duke')
 290 drum military drum, used to summon soldiers to combat 292 mine own i.e. my inner peace speak to die (a) request death (b) speak

so bluntly that I may be executed for it 295-6 it...gentleman A paradoxical claim, since a monarch can enoble even a commoner. But 'gentleman' is here considered a category of intrinsic personal worth and accomplishment ('merit'), which cannot be bestowed by anyone else.
 308 game's hunt's
 309-10 Confound...pleasure (a reaction in striking contrast to King James, who refused to interrupt his hunting when told of the Spanish attack on his son-in-law's territory)

 3.1.1-2 your project... 'Twas The 'project' here spoken of in the past tense is the marriage of the Passionate Lord and Cupid, apparently offstage during the interval between Acts 2 and 3; the Cupid is now legally married, but must still win her new husband's 'love, the main point' (3.1.13).
 3 near blood close kinship

- Beshrew her hasty confidence!
- FIRST GENTLEMAN O, no more, sir,
You make her weep again!—Alas, poor Cupid.—
Shall she not shift herself?
- FIRST BROTHER O by no means, sir:
We dare not have her seen yet. All the while
She keeps this shape, 'tis but thought device,
And she may follow him so, without suspicion—
To see if she can draw all his wild passions
To one point only, and that's love, the main point.
So far his highness grants, and gave at first
Large approbation to the quick conceit,
Which then was quick indeed.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN You make her blush, in sooth.
- FIRST BROTHER
I fear 'tis more the flag of shame than grace, sir.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN
They both give but one kind of colour, sir.
If it be bashfulness in that kind taken,
It is the same with grace—and there she weeps again.
In truth you're too hard, much much too bitter, sir,
Unless you mean to have her weep her eyes out,
To play a cupid truly.
- FIRST BROTHER Come, ha' done then.
We should all fear to sin first; for 'tis certain,
When 'tis once lodged, though entertained in mirth,
It must be wept out, if it e'er come forth.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN
Now 'tis so well, I'll leave you.
- FIRST BROTHER Faithfully welcome, sir.
[Exit First Gentleman]
Go, Cupid, to your charge. He's your own now;
If he want love, none will be blamed but you.
- CUPID
The strangest marriage and unfortunat'st bride
That ever human memory contained!
I cannot be myself for't. Exit [Cupid and Masquers]
Enter the Clown
- CLOWN
O gentlemen!
- FIRST BROTHER
How now, sir, what's the matter?
- CLOWN
His melancholy passion is half spent already;
Then comes his angry fit at the very tail on't.
Then comes in my pain, gentlemen; he's beat me
E'en to a cullis. I am nothing, right worshipful,
But very pap and jelly: I have no bones.
My body's all one burstness. They talk of ribs
And chines most freely abroad i'th' world;
Why, I have no such thing. Whoever lives
To see me dead, gentlemen, shall find me all mummy,
Good to fill gallipots and long dildo-glasses.
I shall not have a bone to throw at a dog.
- AMBO
Alas, poor vassal, how he goes!
- CLOWN O, gentlemen,
I am unjointed; do but think o' that.
My breast is beat into my maw, that what I eat
I am fain to take't in all at mouth with spoons
(A lamentable hearing)—and 'tis well known, my belly
Is driven into my back.
I earned four crowns a month most dearly, gentlemen,
And one he must have when the fit's upon him;
The privy purse allows it, and 'tis thriftiness.
He would break else some forty pounds in casements,
And in five hundred years undo the kingdom:
I have cast it up to a quarrel.
- FIRST BROTHER There's a fellow
Kicked about court; I would he had his place, brother,
But for one fit of his indignation.
- SECOND BROTHER
And suddenly I have thought upon a means for't.
- FIRST BROTHER
I prithee, how?
- SECOND BROTHER
'Tis but preferring, brother,
This stockfish to his service, with a letter
Of commendations, the same way he wishes it.
And then you win his heart: for o' my knowledge
He has laid wait this half-year for a fellow
That will be beaten; and with a safe conscience
We may commend the carriage of this man in't.
No servants he has kept, lusty tall feeders,

8 shift change her costume (i.e. put on a woman's clothes again)
15 quick conceit rapidly imagined joke or device (of disguising her as Cupid)
16 quick pregnant
23 truly accurately, i.e. by being blind, like Cupid
26 wept out (alluding again to pains of childbirth, but also to repentance more generally)
28 your own i.e., your husband
37 cullis a thick broth with meat
38 pap soft, semi-liquid food
40 chines spine; also used of joints of meat

using the spine
42 mummy ointment used in making mummy; the flesh of the mummy, embalmed 43 gallipots earthenware vessels used by apothecaries dildo-glasses cylindrical glasses (but also a reference to the penis as meat without a bone)
45 goes walks
51 crowns coins worth five shillings apiece
52 one i.e. someone to beat
53 privy purse (a) budget for the personal expenses of the sovereign and his household entourage (b) official responsible for that budget

54 He... casements (apparently alluding to a notorious fit of madness in which Buckingham's elder brother, John Villiers, broke windows with his bare hands)
56 cast... quarrel calculated to the cost of a square pane in a casement (a 'quarrel')
57-8 he... his... his Lepet... the Clown's... the Passionate Lord's 61 stockfish codfish, split open and beaten before cooking (i.e. the Clown) his Lepet's
67 tall feeders large eaters

But they have beat him, and turned themselves away.
 Now one that would endure is like to stay,
 70 And get good wages of him—and the service too
 Is ten times milder, brother; I would not wish it else.
 I see the fellow has a sore crushed body,
 And the more need he has to be kicked at ease.

CLOWN
 Ay, sweet gentlemen, a kick of ease—
 Send me to such a master.

75 SECOND BROTHER No more, I say;
 We have one for thee, a soft-footed master,
 One that wears wool in's toes.

CLOWN O gentlemen,
 Soft garments may you wear,
 Soft skins may you wed,
 80 But as plump as pillows,
 Both for white and red.
 And now will I reveal a secret to you,
 Since you provide for my poor flesh so tenderly:
 He's hired mere rogues, out of his chamber window,
 85 To beat the soldier, Monsieur Chamont's brother—

FIRST BROTHER
 That nothing concerns us, sir.

CLOWN —For no cause, gentlemen,
 Unless it be for wearing shoulder points
 With longer tags than his.

SECOND BROTHER Is not that somewhat?
 By'rlakin, sir, the difference of long tags
 90 Has cost many a man's life, and advanced other some.
 Come, follow me. [Exeunt two Brothers]

CLOWN See what a gull am I!
 O every man in his profession.
 I know a thump now as judiciously
 As the proudest he that walks; I'll except none.
 95 Come to a tag, how short I fall!—I'm gone. [Exit]

3.2 Enter Lepet

LEPET
 I have been ruminating with myself
 What honour a man loses by a kick.
 Why, what's a kick? The fury of a foot,
 Whose indignation commonly is stamped
 5 Upon the hinder quarter of a man—
 Which is a place very unfit for honour;
 The world will confess so much.

Then what disgrace, I pray, does that part suffer
 Where honour never comes? I'd fain know that.
 This being well forced and urged, may have the power 10
 To move most gallants to take kicks in time,
 And spurn out the duelloes out o'th' kingdom.
 For they that stand upon their honour most
 When they conceive there is no honour lost—
 As by a table, that I have invented 15
 For that purpose alone, shall appear plainly,
 Which shows the vanity of all blows at large,
 And with what ease they may be took of all sides,
 Numbering but twice o'er the letters 'Patience',
 From P. to E. I doubt not but in small time 20
 To see a dissolution of all bloodshed,
 If the reformed kick do but once get up.
 For what a lamentable folly 'tis,
 If we observe't, for every little jostle
 (Which is but the ninth part of a sound thump, 25 In our meek computation) we must fight forsooth, yes,
 If I kill, I'm hanged; if I be killed myself,
 I die for't also. Is not this trim wisdom?
 Now for the con: a man may be well beaten,
 Yet pass away his fourscore years smooth after. 30
 I had a father did it, and to my power
 I will not be behind him.

Enter Chamont

CHAMONT O, well met.

LEPET [aside]
 Now a fine punch or two, I look for't duly.

CHAMONT
 I've been to seek you.

LEPET Let me know your lodging, sir;
 I'll come to you once a day and use your pleasure, sir. 35

CHAMONT
 I'm made the fittest man for thy society:
 I'll live and die with thee. Come, show me a chamber;
 There is no house but thine, but only thine,
 That's fit to cover me. I've took a blow, sirrah.

LEPET
 I would you had indeed. Why, you may see, sir; 40
 You'll all come to't in time, when my book's out.

CHAMONT
 Since I did see thee last, I've took a blow.

LEPET
 Pha, sir! That's nothing; I ha' took forty since.

68 But they except that they—i.e. they have all taken this course
 89 By'rlakin oath: by Our Lady (i.e. Virgin Mary)
 71 milder less violent (than waiting on the Passionate Lord)
 73 at ease in comfortable circumstances (comparatively)
 87 shoulder points ties, here on the shoulders, using thread etc., to join garments
 88 longer tags (a) pointed hanging pieces for fastening or metal points at the end of a lace to insert through an eye; (b) trivial matters over which quarrels might start
 91 gull person easily deceived
 92 in his profession to his own business
 95 short I fall (a) fall short of being fully informed (b) small my penis hangs down
 3.2.4 stamped (a) kicked (b) officially marked and validated (used of coins and printing presses)
 9 fain be glad to 12 duelloes duels (Italian)
 15 table engraved picture or chart
 19 letters 'Patience' (possible pun on Letters Patent)
 22 reformed (word with strong connotations of a project of social and religious reformation)
 29 con abbreviated form of Latin preposition 'contra'; the other side of the coin, the argument against

- CHAMONT
What? and I charged thee thou shouldst not?
- LEPET Ay, sir,
You might charge your pleasure, but they would 45 give't me,
Whether I would or no.
- CHAMONT O, I walk
Without my peace; I've no companion now.
Prithee resolve me, for I cannot ask
A man more beaten to experience
50 Than thou art in this kind: what manner of blow
Is held the most disgraceful or distasteful?
For thou dost only censure 'em by the hurt,
Not by the shame they do thee: yet having felt Abuses of all kinds, thou mayst deliver,
55 Though't be by chance, the most injurious one.
- LEPET
You put me to't, sir. But to tell you truth,
They're all as one with me, little exception.
- CHAMONT
That little may do much; let's have it from you.
- LEPET
60 With all the speed I may. First, then, and foremost,
I hold so reverently of the bastinado, sir,
That if it were the dearest friend i'th' world,
I'd put it into his hand.
- CHAMONT Go to, I'll pass that then.
- LEPET You're the more happy, sir.
65 Would I were past it too! But being accustomed to't,
It is the better carried.
- CHAMONT Will you forward?
- LEPET
Then there's your souse, your wherret, and your douse,
Tugs on the hair, your bob o'th' lips, a whelk on't—
I ne'er could find much difference. Now your thump
70 (A thing derived first from your hemp-beaters)
Takes a man's wind away, most spitefully:
There's nothing that destroys a colic like it,
For't leaves no wind i'th' body.
- CHAMONT On, sir, on.
- LEPET
Pray, give me leave; I'm out of breath with thinking
on't.
- CHAMONT
This is far off yet.
- LEPET For the twinge by th' nose,
75 'Tis certainly unsightly—so my table says—
- But helps against the headache, wondrous strangely.
CHAMONT Is't possible?
LEPET
O your crushed nostrils slakes your opilation
And makes your pent powers flush to wholesome sneezes. 80
- CHAMONT
I never thought there had been half that virtue
In a wrung nose before.
- LEPET O, plenitude, sir!
Now come we lower, to our modern kick,
Which has been mightily in use of late,
Since our young men drank coltsfoot: and I grant you 85
'Tis a most scornful wrong, cause the foot plays it.
But mark again, how we that take't, requite it
With the like scorn, for we receive it backward—
And can there be a worse disgrace retorted?
- CHAMONT
And is this all?
- LEPET All but a lug by th' ear, 90
Or such a trifle.
- CHAMONT Happy sufferer!
All this is nothing to the wrong I bear.
I see the worst disgrace thou never felt'st yet.
It is so far from thee, thou canst not think on't;
Nor dare I let thee know, it is so abject. 95
- LEPET
I would you would, though, that I might prepare for't,
For I shall ha't at one time or another.
If't be a thwack, I make account of that;
There's no new-fashioned swap that e'er came up yet,
But I've the first on 'em, I thank 'em for't. 100
Enter the Lady and Servants
- LADY
Hast thou inquired?
- FIRST SERVANT But can hear nothing, madam.
- CHAMONT [aside, to Lepet]
If there be but so much substance in thee
To make a shelter for a man disgraced,
Hide my departure from that glorious woman
That comes with all perfection about her, 105
So noble, that I dare not be seen of her,
Since shame took hold of me. Upon thy life,
No mention of me!
- LEPET [aside, to Chamont]
I'll cut out my tongue first,
Before I'll lose my life; there's more belongs to't.
[Exit Chamont]

60 bastinado blow with a stick or cudgel67 souse blowwherret a box on the ear or slap in the facedouse heavy blow, given with force and noise68 bob blow with the fist (see also 4.1.340-1)whelk pimple, pustule, cold sore70 hemp-beaters those who pound the thick fibre into tractable material79 slakes slackens, relaxes, makes less intense and painfulopilation obstruction80 flush rush, start, spring85 drank (a) swallowed (b) inhaledcoltsfoot an infusion made from leaves of the plant; also smoked as a cure for asthma. Lepet suggests that the medicine conveys to its users the fondness for kicking characteristic of colts.89 retorted turned against an opponent, with the back turned to the giver99 swap sudden harsh blow

LADY
110 See there's a gentleman, inquire of him.
SECOND SERVANT
For Monsieur Chamont, madam?
LADY For whom else, sir?
FIRST SERVANT
Why, this fellow dares not see him.
LADY How?
FIRST SERVANT Chamont, madam?
His very name's worse than a fever to him,
And when he cries, there's nothing stills him sooner.
115 Madam, your page of thirteen is too hard for him;
'Twas tried i'th' woodyard.
LADY Alas, poor grievèd merit!
What is become of him? If he once fail,
Virtue shall find small friendship. Farewell, then,
To ladies' worths, for any hope in men.
120 He loved for goodness, not for wealth or lust,
After the world's foul dotage; he ne'er courted
The body but the beauty of the mind,
A thing which common courtship never thinks on.
All his affections were so sweet and fair,
125 There is no hope for fame if he despair.
Exeunt Lady and Servants
Enter the Clown [behind]. He kicks Lepet [and presents a letter]
LEPET
Good morrow to you again most heartily, sir.
[Lepet kicks Clown]
Cry you mercy, I heard you not; I was somewhat busy.
CLOWN [aside]
He takes it as familiarly as an Ave,
Or precious salutation. I was sick
130 Till I had one, because I am so used to't.
LEPET
However you deserve, your friends and mine here
Give you large commendations i' this letter.
They say you will endure well.
CLOWN I'd be loath
To prove 'em liars: I've endured as much 135 As mortal pen and ink can set me down for.
LEPET
Say you me so?
CLOWN I know and feel it so, sir.
I have it under black and white already;
I need no pen to paint me out.
LEPET [aside] He fits me,
And hits my wishes pat, pat. I was ne'er
140 In possibility to be better manned,
For he's half-lamed already; I see't plain,
But take no notice on't, for fear I make
The rascal proud and dear, to advance his wages.—
First, let me grow into particulars with you.
145 What have you endured of worth? Let me hear.
CLOWN
Marry, sir, I'm almost beaten blind.
LEPET
That's pretty well for a beginning,
But many a mill-horse has endured as much.
CLOWN
Shame o' the miller's heart for his unkindness then!
LEPET Well, sir, what then? 150
CLOWN
I've been twice thrown down stairs, just before supper.
LEPET
Puh, so have I; that's nothing.
CLOWN Ay, but sir,
Was yours, pray, before supper?
LEPET There thou passet me.
CLOWN
Ay, marry, that's it; 'thad been less grief to me,
Had I but filled my belly, and then tumbled.
155 But to be flung down fasting, there's the dolour.
LEPET
It would have grieved me, that, indeed. Proceed, sir.
CLOWN
I have been plucked and tugged by th' hair o'th' head
About a gallery, half an acre long.
LEPET
Yes, that's a good one, I must needs confess,
160 A principal good one that, an absolute good one.
I have been trod upon, and spurned about,
But never tugged by th' hair, I thank my fates.
CLOWN
O 'tis a spiteful pain.
LEPET Peace, never speak on't,
For putting men in mind on't.
CLOWN To conclude,
165 I'm bursten, sir. My belly will hold no meat.
LEPET
No? That makes amends for all.
CLOWN Unless't be puddings,
Or such fast food. Any loose thing beguiles me;
I'm ne'er the better for't.
LEPET Sheepheads will stay with thee?
CLOWN
Yes, sir, or chaldrons.
170 LEPET Very well, sir: 170

116 woodyard place where wood was chopped etc., presumably a lowly location at court (here, a place for a fight, where Lepet was bested by a thirteen-year-old)

128 it i.e. a kick as a form of greeting
Ave from 'Ave Maria', salutation to the Virgin Mary used as a part of devotional address, still familiar by the Latin name after the Reformation. A penance prescribed to follow confession and said by rote because the words are so familiar.

139 pat exactly

156 dolour pain

165 men...on't the idea in people's heads

166 meat food

168 fast stodgy, binding

169 Sheepheads dish consisting of the head of a sheep; also a fool or simpleton

170 chaldrons entrails, offal

	Any your bursten fellows must take heed of surfeits. Strange things, it seems, you have endured.		To a brown baker's chimney; he shall be sure there To hear the bird screech sometimes after twilight. What a fine thing 'tis, methinks, to have our gar- ments
	CLOWN Too true, sir.		Sit loose upon us thus, thus carelessly.
	LEPET But now the question is: what you will endure Hereafter in my service?		It is more manly and more mortifying,	15
	CLOWN Anything		For we're so much the readier for our shrouds—
175	That shall be reason, sir, for I'm but froth, Much like a thing new-calved, or (come more nearer, sir),		For how ridiculous were't, to have death come And take a fellow pinned up like a mistress? About his neck a ruff like a pinched lantern,
	You've seen a cluster of frog-spawns in April? E'en such a starch am I, as weak and tender As a green woman yet.		Which schoolboys make in winter, and his doublet	20
	LEPET Now I know this,		So close and pent, as if he feared one prison Would not be strong enough to keep his soul in, But's tailor makes another.
180	I will be very gently angry with thee, And kick thee carefully.		And trust me—for I knew't when I loved, Cupid— He does endure much pain for the poor praise	25
	CLOWN O ay, sweet sir.		Of a neat-sitting suit.
	LEPET Peace, when thou art offered well, lest I begin now. Your friends and mine have writ here, for your truth They'll pass their words themselves, and I must meet 'em.		CUPID One may be handsome, sir, And yet not pained, nor proud.
	CLOWN Then have you all.	Exit Lepet	PASSIONATE LORD There you lie, Cupid, As bad as Mercury. There is no handsomeness But has a wash of pride and luxury, And you go there too, Cupid. Away, dissembler!	30
185	As for my honesty, there is no fear of that, For I have ne'er a whole bone about me.	Exit	Thou tak'st the deed's part which befools us all; Thy arrowheads shoot but sinners. Hence, away! And after thee I'll send a powerful charm Shall banish thee forever.
3.3	Music. Enter the Passionate cousin, rudely and carelessly apparelled, unbraced and untrussed, [and] the Cupid following		CUPID Never, never, I am too sure thine own.	Exit Cupid 35
	CUPID Think upon love, which makes all creatures hand- some, Seemly for eyesight; go not so diffusedly. There are great ladies purpose, sir, to visit you.		PASSIONATE LORD (sings) Hence, all you vain delights, As short as are the nights Wherein you spend your folly. There's naught in this life sweet, If men were wise to see't,	40
	PASSIONATE LORD Grand plagues! Shut in my casements, that the breaths		O sweetest melancholy.
5	Of their coach-mares reek not into my nostrils; Those beasts are but a kind of bawdy forerunners.		Welcome folded arms and fixèd eyes, A sigh that piercing mortifies, A look that's fastened to the ground, A tongue chained up without a sound, Fountain-heads and pathless groves (Places which pale passion loves),	45
	CUPID It is not well with you, When you speak ill of fair mistresses.
	PASSIONATE LORD Fair mischiefs! Give me a nest of owls and take 'em.
10	Happy is he, say I, whose window opens
171	surfeits eating to excess provoking nausea	worth having in exchange for beautiful women)	and trickery
179	green young unripe pre-sexual	12 bird i.e. owl	29 luxury sumptuous enjoyment, lechery
187	whole bone (a) unbroken bone (b) hole- bone, hard penis	18 pinned . . . mistress enclosed or confined by tight or complex clothing	31 deed's sexual act's
3.3.0.2	unbraced without clothes fasten- ings, or with clasps undone untrussed pantsless. (Trusses were close-fitting breeches or drawers covering buttocks and tops of thighs.)	19 ruff neck decoration made of stiffly starched linen or muslin pinched closely covered	36–54 Hence . . . melancholy (This poem is more widely anthologized, in manuscript and print, than any theatrical song of the period; it was particularly popular from the mid-1620s to the 1650s, in private manuscript anthologies as well as printed ones. For musical settings, see Companion , 169.)
3	purpose intend	20 doublet close-fitting garment for male body	36 vain (a) proud (b) futile
4	Grand plagues i.e. great ladies	23 But's unless his	38 spend (a) expend, pass away (b) ejaculate
9	nest of owls collection of melancholy ominous nightbirds (which would be	28 Mercury messenger of gods; associated with news, furtiveness, oratorical ability

50 Moonlight walks, when all the fowls
Are warmly housed, save bats and owls.
A midnight bell, a parting groan,
These are the sounds we feed upon.
Then stretch our bones in a still gloomy valley:
Nothing's so dainty sweet as lovely melancholy.
Exit [at one door]

3.4 Enter at another door Lepet, the Cupid's Brothers watching his coming

FIRST BROTHER

So, so, the woodcock's ginned; keep this door fast,
brother.

SECOND BROTHER

I'll warrant this.

FIRST BROTHER I'll go incense him instantly;

I know the way to't.

SECOND BROTHER Will't not be too soon,

Think you, and make two fits break into one?

FIRST BROTHER

5 Pah, no, no. The tail of his melancholy
Is always the head of his anger, and follows
As close as the report follows the powder.
[Exeunt Brothers, at separate doors]

LEPET

This is the appointed place, and the hour struck.
If I can get security for's truth,
10 I'll never mind his honesty. Poor worm,
I durst lay him by my wife, which is a benefit
Which many masters ha' not. I shall ha' no maid
Now got with child, but what I get myself,
And that's no small felicity; in most places
15 They're got by th' men, and put upon the masters.
Nor shall I be resisted when I strike,
For he can hardly stand. These are great blessings.

PASSIONATE LORD (within)

I want my food; deliver me a varlet.

LEPET

How now: from whence comes that?

PASSIONATE LORD [within] I am allowed

20 A carcass to insult on: where's the villain?

LEPET

He means not me, I hope.

PASSIONATE LORD [within] My maintenance rascals,

My bulk, my exhibition!

LEPET

Bless us all,
What names are these? Would I were gone again.

The passionate man enters in fury, with a truncheon

PASSIONATE LORD (sings)

A curse upon thee for a slave!
Art thou here, and heard'st me rave? 25
Fly not sparkles from mine eye
To show my indignation nigh?
Am I not all foam and fire?
With voice as hoarse as a town-crier?
How my back opes and shuts together 30
With fury, as old men's with weather!
Couldst thou not hear my teeth gnash hither?

LEPET

No, truly, sir, I thought 'thad been a squirrel,
Shaving a hazelnut.

PASSIONATE LORD

Death, hell, fiends, and darkness! 35

I will thrash thy mangy carcass.

[He beats Lepet]

LEPET O sweet sir!

PASSIONATE LORD

There cannot be too many tortures
Spent upon those lousy quarters.

[He beats Lepet]

LEPET

Hold, O! 40

[Lepet] falls down for dead

PASSIONATE LORD

Thy bones shall rue, thy bones shall rue.

[He] sings again

Thou nasty, scurvy, mongrel toad,
Mischief on thee! Light upon thee
All the plagues that can confound thee
Or did ever reign abroad: 45
Better a thousand lives it cost
Than have brave anger spilt or lost. Exit

LEPET

May I open mine eyes yet, and safely peep?

I'll try a groan first—O!—Nay, then, he's gone.

There was no other policy but to die; 50

He would ha' made me else. Ribs, are you sore?

I was ne'er beaten to a tune before.

Enter the two Brothers

FIRST BROTHER

Lepet—

LEPET

Again?

[He] falls again

FIRST BROTHER [to Second Brother]

Look, look, he's flat again,
And stretched out like a corpse, a handful longer

49 fowls birds

51 parting (a) dying (b) departing

53 stretch our bones (a) lie down on the ground (b) die

still (a) quiet (b) perpetually

3.4.1 woodcock's edible bird, fool; person

ensnared by trickery

ginned snared; a gin is a sprung trap

2 warrant guarantee

7 report... powder noise follows the shot

22 bulk heap or cargo; also applied to the belly

exhibition allowance

30-1 my... weather my body twisted in anger resembles the spinal misshaping caused by age

39 lousy infested with lice; valueless

54 handful longer i.e. stretched out flat

- 55 Than he walks; trust me, brother.—Why, Lepet!—
I hold my life we shall not get him speak now.—
Monsieur Lepet!—It must be a privy token,
If any thing fetch him; he's so far gone.—
We come to pass our words for your man's truth.
- LEPET [rising]
60 O gentlemen, you're welcome: I have been thrashed, i'faith.
- SECOND BROTHER
How? thrashed, sir?
- LEPET Never was Shrove-Tuesday bird
So cudgelled, gentlemen.
- FIRST BROTHER Pray, how? by whom, sir?
- LEPET Nay, that I know not.
- FIRST BROTHER Not who did this wrong?
- LEPET Only a thing came like a walking song.
- FIRST BROTHER
75 What, beaten with a song?
- LEPET Never more tightly, gentlemen.
Such crotchets happen now and then, methinks;
He that endures well, of all waters drinks. Exeunt
- ⊗
- 4.1 [Incipit] Actus Quartus
Enter Chamont's Brother (the Soldier), [having been beaten], and First Gentleman
- SOLDIER
Yes, yes, this was a madman, sir, with you,
'A passionate madman'.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN Who would ha' looked for this, sir?
- SOLDIER
8 'And must be privileged'. A pox privilege him!
I was never so dry-beat since I was born—
And by a litter of rogues, mere rogues. The whole 5 twenty
Had not above nine elbows 'mongst 'em all too;
And the most part of those left-handed rascals—
The very vomit, sir, of hospitals,
Bridewells, and spital-houses—such nasty smellers,
10 That if they'd been unfurnished of club-truncheons,
They might have cudgelled me with their very stinks;
It was so strong and sturdy. And shall this,
This filthy injury, be set off with madness?
- FIRST GENTLEMAN
15 Nay, take your own blood's counsel, sir, hereafter;
I'll deal no further in't. If you remember,
- It was not come to blows when I advised you.
- SOLDIER
No, but I ever said, 'twould come to something,
And 'tis upon me, thank him. Were he kin
To all the mighty emperors upon earth,
He has not now in life three hours to reckon;
20 I watch but a free time.
Enter Chamont
- FIRST GENTLEMAN
Your noble brother, sir; I'll leave you now. Exit
- CHAMONT
Soldier, I would I could persuade my thoughts
From thinking thee a brother, as I can
My tongue from naming on't. Thou hast no friend
25 here
But fortune and thy own strength; trust to them.
- SOLDIER
How? What's the incitement, sir?
- CHAMONT Treachery to virtue,
Thy treachery, thy faithless circumvention.
Has Honour so few daughters—never fewer—
30 And must thou aim thy treachery at the best?
The very front of virtue? that blest lady?
The Duke's sister?
Created more for admiration's cause
Than for love's ends; whose excellency sparkles
More in divinity than mortal beauty;
35 And as much difference 'twixt her mind and body
As 'twixt this earth's poor centre and the sun.
And couldst thou be so injurious to fair goodness
Once to attempt to court her down to frailty?
Or put her but in mind that there is weakness,
40 Sin, and desire, which she should never hear of?
Wretch, thou'st committed worse than sacrilege
In the attempting on't, and oughtst to die for't.
- SOLDIER
I rather ought to do my best to live, sir.
Provoke me not, for I've a wrong sits on me
45 That makes me apt for mischief. I shall lose
All respects suddenly of friendship, brotherhood,
Or any sound that way.
- CHAMONT But 'ware me most,
For I come with a two-edged injury:
Both my disgrace and thy apparent falsehood,
50 Which must be dangerous.
- SOLDIER I courted her, sir:
Love starve me with delays when I confess it not—
- CHAMONT There's nothing then but death
Can be a penance fit for that confession.

57 privy token something of intimate significance

61–2 Never...cudgelled (referring to a Shrovetide amusement in which people throw cudgels at a cock until he is killed)

66 crotchets idiosyncracies (punning on musical sense)

67 well (punning on wells as a source of water)

4.1.8 hospitals charitable institutions for housing those who are destitute or ill

9 Bridewells places of correction or forced labour, like the London prison so named spital-houses lower class of hospital, associated with 'unclean' diseases such as leprosy

14 blood's (used in a range of ways in this scene; temper, temperament, kinship: see ll. 82, 113)

29 daughters women who as the children of Honour (personified) are therefore honourable themselves

31 front forehead as well as foremost part; therefore the part of the body on which virtue can be read

SOLDIER
—But far from any vicious taint.

55 CHAMONT O, sir,
Vice is a mighty stranger grown to courtship.

SOLDIER
Nay, then, the fury of my wrong light on thee.
[They draw]
Enter First Gentleman, and other [gentlemen]

FIRST GENTLEMAN
Forbear, the Duke's at hand, here, hard at hand,
Upon my reputation.

60 SOLDIER I must do something now. Exit Soldier

CHAMONT I'll follow you close, sir.

FIRST GENTLEMAN
We must entreat you must not, for the Duke
Desires some conference with you.

CHAMONT Let me go,
As you're gentlemen.

SECOND GENTLEMAN Faith, we dare not, sir.

CHAMONT
65 Dare ye be false to honour, and yet dare not
Do a man justice? give me leave—

FIRST GENTLEMAN Good, sweet sir,
He's sent twice for you.

CHAMONT Is this brave, or manly?

FIRST GENTLEMAN
I prithee be conformed.

CHAMONT Death!—
Enter Duke

SECOND GENTLEMAN Peace, he's come in truth.

CHAMONT
O, have you betrayed me to my shame afresh?
How am I bound to loathe you!

70 DUKE Chamont, welcome.
I sent twice.

SECOND GENTLEMAN
But, my lord, he never heard on't.

CHAMONT [to Duke]
Pray, pardon him for his falseness; I did, sir,
Both times. I'd rather be found rude than faithless.

DUKE
I love that bluntness dearly: [aside] ha's no vice,
75 But is more manly than some other's virtue,
That sets it out only for show or profit.

CHAMONT [to First Gentleman]
Will't please you quit me, sir? I've urgent business.
[Exeunt Gentlemen]

DUKE
Come, you're so hasty now; I sent for you
To a better end.

CHAMONT And if it be an end,
80 Better or worse, I thank your goodness for't.

DUKE
I've ever kept that bounty in condition

And thankfulness in blood, which well becomes
Both prince and subject, that where any wrong
Bears my impression, or the hasty figure
Of my repented anger, I'm a law
85 Ev'n to myself, and doom myself most strictly
To justice and a noble satisfaction.
So that, what you in tenderness of honour
Conceive to be loss to you—which is nothing
But curious opinion—I'll restore again,
90 Although I give you the best part of Genoa
And take to boot but thanks for your amends.

CHAMONT
O miserable satisfaction,
Ten times more wretched than the wrong itself!
Never was ill better made good with worse.
95 Shall it be said that my posterity
Shall live the sole heirs of their father's shame?
And raise their wealth and glory from my stripes?
You have provided nobly, bounteous sir,
For my disgrace, to make it live for ever,
100 Outlasting brass or marble.
This is my fear's construction, and a deep one,
Which neither argument nor time can alter;
Yet I durst swear, I wrong your goodness in't, sir,
And the most fair intent on't, which I reverence
105 With admiration, that in you (a prince)
Should be so sweet and temperate a condition
To offer to restore where you may ruin,
And do't with justice, and in me (a servant)
So harsh a disposition that I cannot 110 Forgive where I should honour, and am bound to't.
But I have ever had that curiosity
In blood, and tenderness of reputation,
Such an antipathy against a blow—
I cannot speak the rest. Good sir, discharge me.
115 It is not fit that I should serve you more,
Nor come so near you. I'm made now for privacy
And a retired condition; that's my suit,
To part from court for ever, my last suit.
And as you profess bounty, grant me that, sir.
120

DUKE
I would deny thee nothing.

CHAMONT Health reward you, sir. Exit

DUKE
He's gone again already, and takes hold
Of any opportunity; not riches
Can purchase him, nor honours, peaceably,
And force were brutish. What a great worth's gone
125 with him—
And but a gentleman? Well, for his sake,
I'll ne'er offend more those I cannot make:
They were his words, and shall be dear to memory.
Say I desire to see him once again?

85-6 I'm... myself (refers in paradoxical fashion to the question of whether the King is above the law or vice versa. The Duke argues that the ruler as law-giver should punish himself.)

106 prince monarch

- 130 Yet stay: he's so well forward of his peace
 'Twere pity to disturb him. He would groan
 Like a soul fetched again, and that were injury,
 And I've wronged his degree too much already.—
 Call forth the gentlemen of our chamber instantly.
 FIRST SERVANT (within)
 I shall, my lord.
- 135 DUKE I may forget again,
 And therefore will prevent. The strain of this Troubles me so, one would not hazard more.
Enter First Gentleman and divers others [including the other three Gentlemen]
- GENTLEMEN
 Your will, my lord?
- DUKE Yes, I discharge you all.
- SECOND GENTLEMAN My lord—
- DUKE
 140 Your places shall be otherwise disposed of.
- FOURTH GENTLEMAN
 Why, sir?
- DUKE Reply not; I dismiss you all.
 You're gentlemen; your worths will find you fortunes.
 Nor shall your farewell tax me of ingratitude;
 I'll give you all noble remembrances
 145 As testimonies 'gainst reproach and malice,
 That you departed loved.
- THIRD GENTLEMAN This is most strange, sir.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN [to Duke]
 But how is your grace furnished, these dismissed?
- DUKE Seek me out grooms,
 Men more insensible of reputation,
 150 Less curious and precise in terms of honour,
 That if my anger chance let fall a stroke
 (As we are all subject to impetuous passions),
 Yet it may pass un murmured, undisputed,
 And not with braver fury prosecuted.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN
 It shall be done, my lord. [Exit Duke]
- 155 THIRD GENTLEMAN Know you the cause, sir?
- FIRST GENTLEMAN
 Not I, kind gentlemen, but by conjectures,
 And so much shall be yours, when you please.
- FOURTH GENTLEMAN Thanks, sir.
- THIRD GENTLEMAN
 We shall i'th' mean time think ourselves guilty
 Of some foul fault, through ignorance committed.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN
 No, 'tis not that, nor that way.
- 160 FOURTH GENTLEMAN For my part,
 I shall be disinherited; I know so much.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN
 Why, sir, for what?
- FOURTH GENTLEMAN My sire's of a strange humour:
 He'll form faults for me, and then swear 'em mine—
 And commonly he first begins with lechery;
 He knows his own youth's trespass.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN Before you go, 165
 I'll come and take my leave, and tell you all, sirs.
- THIRD GENTLEMAN
 Thou wert ever just and kind.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN That's my poor virtue, sir,
 And parcel valiant; but it's hard to be perfect.
 [Exeunt other gentlemen]
- The choosing of these fellows now will puzzle me,
 Horribly puzzle me—and there's no judgement 170
 Goes true upon man's outside; there's the mischief.
 He must be touched and tried, for gold or dross;
 There is no other way for't, and that's dangerous too.
 But since I'm put in trust, I will attempt it:
 The Duke shall keep one daring man about him. 175
- Enter a Gallant*
 Soft, who comes here? A pretty bravery this.
 Everyone goes so like a gentleman,
 'Tis hard to find a difference, but by th' touch.
 I'll try your mettle sure.
- [He boxes the Gallant's ear]
- GALLANT Why, what do you mean, sir?
- FIRST GENTLEMAN
 Nay, an you understand it not, I do not. 180
- GALLANT Yes, would you should well know,
 I understand it for a box o'th' ear, sir.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN
 And o' my troth, that's all I gave it for.
- GALLANT
 'Twere best it be so.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN [aside]
 This is a brave coward,
 A jolly threat'ning coward; he shall be captain.— 185
 Sir, let me meet you an hour hence i'th' lobby.
- GALLANT
 Meet you? The world might laugh at me then, i'faith.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN
 Lay by your scorn and pride—they're scurvy qualities—
 And meet me, or I'll box you while I have you,
 And carry you gambrelled thither like a mutton. 190
- GALLANT
 Nay, an you be in earnest, here's my hand
 I will not fail you.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN 'Tis for your own good.

148 grooms men of inferior social position, serving-men

150 curious punctilious

168 parcel in part, in portion—having valour as one of his constituent parts

172 touched and tried as a touchstone tries, or tests, gold

178 touch (a) testing of metal (b) physical contact

179 mettle nature, quality (pun on 'metal')

180 an if

185 captain The gallant's particularly cowardly response suits him to be a leader in the Duke's army: he is suitable to be a captain in the ranks of cowardice.

186 meet seemingly, a challenge to a duel; here, an arrangement to enter the Duke's service

190 gambrelled hung upon a stick like a large piece of meat

GALLANT Away!
 FIRST GENTLEMAN
 Too much for your own good, sir—a pox on you!
 GALLANT
 I prithee curse me all day long so.
 195 FIRST GENTLEMAN Hang you!
 GALLANT [aside]
 I'll make him mad; he's loath to curse too much to
 me.
 Indeed, I never yet took box o'th' ear
 But it redounded; I must needs say so.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN
 Will you be gone?
 GALLANT Curse, curse, and then I go.
 200 [Aside] Look how he grins. I've angered him to th' kidneys.
 Exit
 FIRST GENTLEMAN
 Was ever such a priggish coxcomb seen?
 One might have beat him dumb now in this humour,
 And he'd ha' grinned it out still.
 Enter a Plain Fellow
 O, here's one
 205 Made to my hand; methinks looks like a craven.
 Less pains will serve his trial—some slight jostle.
 [He jostles the Plain Fellow]
 PLAIN FELLOW
 How? Take you that, sir:
 [He cuffs the First Gentleman]
 And if that content you not—
 FIRST GENTLEMAN
 Yes, very well, sir; I desire no more.
 PLAIN FELLOW
 I think you need not, for you have not lost by't.
 Exit
 FIRST GENTLEMAN
 Who would ha' thought this would have proved a
 gentleman?
 210 I'll never trust long chins and little legs again—
 I'll know 'em sure for gentlemen hereafter.
 A gristle but in show, but gave his cuff
 With such a fetch and reach of gentry,
 As if he'd had his arms before the flood.
 I have took a villainous hard task upon me;
 215 Now I begin to have a feeling on't.
 Enter Lepet [with proofs], and Clown his servant,
 and so habited
 O, here comes a tried piece, now, the reformed kick.
 The millions of punches, spurns, and nips
 That he has endured! His buttock's all black lead;
 He's half a negro backward. He was past a Spaniard 220 In eighty-eight, and more Egyptian-like.
 His table and his book come both out shortly,
 And all the cowards in the town expect it.
 So, if I fail of my full number now,
 I shall be sure to find 'em at church corners,
 225 Where Dives and the suff'ring ballads hang.
 LEPET [to Clown]
 Well, since thou art of so mild a temper,
 Of so meek a spirit, thou mayst live with me
 Till better times do smile on thy deserts.
 I am glad I am got home again.
 230 CLOWN
 I am happy in your service, sir;
 You'll keep me from the hospital.
 LEPET
 So, bring me the last proof; this is corrected.
 [Lepet gives proofs to Clown]
 CLOWN
 Ay, you're too full of your correction, sir.
 LEPET
 Look I have perfect books within this half hour.
 235 CLOWN Yes, sir.
 LEPET
 Bid him put all the thumps in pica roman—
 And with great T's, you vermin, as thumps should be.
 CLOWN
 Then in what letter will you have your kicks?
 LEPET
 All in italica—your backward blows
 240 All in italica, you hermaphrodite.
 When shall I teach you wit?

193 Away quit talking nonsense
 200 grins grimaces to th' kidneys to the depth of his constitution 201 priggish haggling, over-precise (used of thieves)
 coxcomb foolish, showy, conceited person 204 craven cock that is not game to fight;
 hence, coward
 212 gristle cartilage, unformed bones as in infancy
 213 fetch sweep, sweeping movement
 214 arms (a) coat of arms (b) limbs flood Biblical flood survived by Noah
 219 black lead graphite
 220 a negro i.e., so bruised and beaten that he looks like a black man (punning on heraldic discourse)

 Spaniard i.e. more dark-complexioned than an Englishman
 221 eighty-eight the year of the Armada 225 church corners the outside, rather than the inside, of churches used for the displaying of wares for sale. It suggests St Paul's churchyard, the main bookselling district in London.
 226 Dives rich man in the parable (Luke 16). Here suggests the titles or topics of printed sermons (a very popular genre at the time).
 the suff'ring ballads The ballads—very cheap but also very popular commodities—may be suffering because they are pinned up for sale, or because ballads often describe sensational tragedies.

 233 proof sheets of printed book sent for examination and correction before it is finally published
 237 pica roman (a common typeface)
 238 great T's capital letter T, or T in a larger typeface
 239 letter typeface
 240 italica italic (a kind of type in which the letters slope towards the right) backward blows blows to the backside—with connotations of sodomy (associated with Italy)
 241 hermaphrodite person in whom the characteristics of both sexes are combined

Act 4 Scene 1

The Nice Valour: Or,

- CLOWN [aside] O, let it alone,
Till you have some yourself, sir.
- LEPET You mumble?
- CLOWN The victuals are locked up; I'm kept from mumbling.
Exit
- LEPET He prints my blows upon pot-paper too, the rogue,
Which had been proper for some drunken pamphlet.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN Monsieur Lepet? How the world rings of you, sir!
Your name sounds far and near.
- LEPET A good report it bears
For an enduring name—
- FIRST GENTLEMAN What luck have you, sir!
- LEPET Why, what's the matter?
- 250 FIRST GENTLEMAN I'm but thinking on't.
I've heard you wish this five year for a place.
Now there's one fall'n, and freely without money too,
And empty yet—and yet you cannot have't.
- LEPET No? What's the reason? I'll give money for't Rather than go without, sir.
- 255 FIRST GENTLEMAN That's not it, sir.
The truth is, there's no gentleman must have it Either for love or money; 'tis decreed so.
I was heartily sorry when I thought upon you.
Had you not been a gentleman, I had fitted you.
- LEPET Who, I, a gentleman? A pox! I'm none, sir.
- 260 FIRST GENTLEMAN How?
- LEPET How? Why, did you ever think I was?
- FIRST GENTLEMAN What? Not a gentleman?
- LEPET I would thou'dst put it upon me, i'faith.
Did not my grandfather cry cony-skins?
265 My father aqua vitae? (A hot gentleman.)
All this I speak on i' your time and memory too;
Only a rich uncle died and left me chattels.
You know all this so well too—
- FIRST GENTLEMAN Pray, excuse me, sir,
- Ha' not you arms?
- LEPET Yes, a poor couple here,
That serve to thrust in wild-fowl.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN Herald's arms, 270
Symbols of gentry, sir: you know my meaning.
They've been shown and seen.
- LEPET They have?
- FIRST GENTLEMAN I'f'ax, have they.
- LEPET Why, I confess, at my wife's instigation once
(As women love these herald's kickshaws, naturally)
I bought 'em—but what are they, think you? Puffs. 275
- FIRST GENTLEMAN Why, that's proper to your name, being Lepet,
Which is 'Le Fart', after the English letter.
- LEPET The herald, sir, had much ado to find it.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN And can you blame him?
280 Why, 'tis the only thing that puzzles the devil.
- LEPET At last he looked upon my name again,
And having well compared it, this he gave me:
The two colics playing upon a wind instrument.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN An excellent proper one: but I pray tell me, 285 How does he express the colics? They are hard things.
- LEPET The colics? With hot trenchers at their bellies.
There's nothing better, sir, to blaze a colic.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN And are not you a gentleman by this, sir?
- LEPET No, I disclaim't.
290 No bellyache on earth shall make me one.
He shall not think to put his gripes upon me,
And wring out gentry so, and ten pound firm.
If the wind instrument will make my wife one,
Let her enjoy't, for she was a harper's grandchild;
But sir, for my particular, I renounce it. 295
- FIRST GENTLEMAN Or to be called so?
- LEPET Ay, sir, or imagined.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN None fitter for the place. Give me thy hand.

244 mumbling (a) muttering (b) chewing245 pot-paper poor quality paper246 drunken pamphlet cheap, insignificant, publication which was rhetorically crazy or about drinking and, for either reason, might appropriately be printed on 'pot-paper' (punning on 'drinking pot')248 report sound (alluding to his name, 'the fart')251 place position at court264 cry sell as a street vendorcony-skins rabbit-skins (possibly implying that his grandfather was a poacher)265 aqua vitae general term for distilled spirits; alcoholhot choleric—both needing liquid to cool him and 'spiritedly' hot in temperament269 arms (a) coat of arms as a sign of gentility (b) physical arms as employed in the lowest kind of work—cleaning out the gizzards of wild-fowl272 I'f'ax in faith (but f'ax also means 'waste, excrement' and so carries on the joke)274 kickshaws trifles275 Puffs air, emptiness, nothing280 'tis...devil (proverbial)283 colics bellyaches, intestinal pains (one for each colon)286 trenchers plates287 blaze blazon, demonstrate or symbolize as in heraldry (with a pun on the burning sensations of indigestion)291 gripes (a) stomach pains (b) greedy, gripping hands294 harper's one who plays upon a harp, of low social status

LEPET
A hundred thousand thanks—beside a bribe—sir.

FIRST GENTLEMAN
You must take heed of thinking toward a gentleman,
now.

LEPET
300 Pish, I am not mad, I warrant you. Nay more, sir,
If one should twit me i'th' teeth that I'm a gentleman,
Twit me their worst, I am but one since Lammas;
That I can prove, if they would see my heart out.

FIRST GENTLEMAN
Marry, in any case, keep me that evidence.
Enter Clown [with proofs]

LEPET
305 Here comes my servant, sir, Galoshio.
Has not his name for naught; he will be trod upon.—
What says my printer now?

CLOWN
Here's your last proof, sir.
You shall have perfect books now in a twinkling.

LEPET
These marks are ugly.

CLOWN
He says, sir, they're proper:
Blows should have marks, or else they are nothing 310 worth.

LEPET
But why a pilcrow here?

CLOWN
I told 'im so, sir:
A scare-crow had been better.

LEPET
How, slave? Look you, sir,
Did not I say, this wherret and this bob
Should be both pica roman?

CLOWN
So said I sir,
315 Both pikèd Romans, and he has made 'em Welsh bills;
Indeed, I know not what to make on 'em.

LEPET
Hey-day! A souse, italica?

CLOWN
Yes, that may hold, sir.
Souse is a bona-roba; so is Flops too.

LEPET
But why stands bastinado so far off here?

CLOWN
320 Alas, you must allow him room to lay about him, sir.

LEPET
Why lies this spurn lower than that spurn, sir?

CLOWN
Marry, this signifies one kicked down stairs, sir;
The other, in a gallery.
I asked him all these questions.

FIRST GENTLEMAN
Your book's name?

LEPET
325 Prithee, Lepet, mind me; you never told me yet.

LEPET
Marry, but shall, sir:
'Tis called The Uprising of the Kick
And the Downfall of the Duello.

FIRST GENTLEMAN
Bring that to pass, you'll prove a happy member,
And do your country service. Your young bloods 330 Will thank you then, when they see fourscore.

LEPET
I hope
To save my hundred gentlemen a month by't,
Which will be very good for the private house.

CLOWN
Look you, your table's finished, sir, already.

LEPET [to First Gentleman]
Why, then, behold my masterpiece. See, see, sir:
335 Here's all your blows and blow-men whatsoever,
Set in their lively colours—givers and takers.

FIRST GENTLEMAN
Troth, wondrous fine, sir.

LEPET
Nay, but mark the postures.
The standing of the takers I admire
340 More than the givers: they stand scornfully,
Most contumeliously. I like not them.
O here's one cast into a comely figure.

CLOWN [to First Gentleman]
My master means him there that's cast down headlong.

LEPET
How sweetly does this fellow take his douse?
345 Stoops like a camel, that heroic beast,
At a great load of nutmegs. And how meekly
This other fellow here receives his wherret!

CLOWN
O master, here's a fellow stands most gallantly,
Taking his kick in private behind the hangings,
350 And raising up his hips to't. But O, sir,
How daintily this man lies trampled on?
Would I were in thy place, whate'er thou art.
How lovely he endures it!

301 twit mock, taunt provokingly

302 Lammas 1 August

303 see my heart out (referring to the punishment for traitors, who were disembowelled and had their hearts torn out)

305 Galoshio galoshes (Italian)

307 last proof final stop-press proofsheets, made during the actual printing

309 marks (a) printer's characters (b) marks on the body made by a blow

311 pilcrow paragraph

315 pikèd carrying pikes, weapons with long shafts and pointed heads

Welsh bills offensive weapons, like halberds

317 souse strike suddenly as a bird strikes prey

318 bona-roba prostitute (Italian)

Flops (a) bump or thud, heavy movement (b) name of prostitute (like 'Souse')

321 spurn part of a type, or letter, which descends below the line

329 happy member useful limb of the body politic, fortunate member of Parliament

333 private house an enclosed London theatre, such as the Blackfriars, which charged more than open air theatres like the Globe, and so depended upon a more élite clientele

345-6 camel ... nutmegs i.e. kneeling, front lowered first, or sway-backed yet also lumpy-backed, like an overladen camel. Nutmeg may be suggested by the pageants of Lord Mayors' Shows (honouring the Grocers' Company).

349-50 Taking ... to't (suggesting sodomy)

Act 4 Scene 1

The Nice Valour: Or,

FIRST GENTLEMAN
But will not these things, sir, be hard to practise, think you?
LEPET
355 O, easy, sir: I'll teach 'em in a dance.
FIRST GENTLEMAN
How? In a dance?
LEPET I'll lose my new place else,
Whate'er it be; I know not what 'tis yet.
FIRST GENTLEMAN
And now you put me in mind, I could employ it well,
For your grace specially, for the Duke's cousin
360 Is by this time in's violent fit of mirth,
And a device must be sought out for suddenly
To overcloy the passion.
LEPET Say no more, sir.
I'll fit you with my scholars, new practitioners,
Endurers of the time.
CLOWN Whereof I am one, sir.
FIRST GENTLEMAN
365 You carry it away smooth; give me thy hand, sir.
Exeunt

⊙

5.1 [Incipit] Actus Quintus
Enter the Two Brothers
PASSIONATE LORD (within) Ha, ha, ha.
SECOND BROTHER Hark, hark! How loud his fit's grown.
PASSIONATE LORD [within] Ha, ha, ha.
FIRST BROTHER
Now let our sister lose no time, but ply it
With all the power she has.
5 FIRST BROTHER Her shame grows big, brother;
The Cupid's shape will hardly hold it longer.
'Twould take up half an ell of China damask more,
And all too little: it struts per'lously.
There is no tamp'ring with these Cupids long;
10 The mere conceit with womankind works strong.
PASSIONATE LORD [within]
Ha, ha, ha.
SECOND BROTHER
The laugh comes nearer now.
'Twere good we were not seen yet.
Exeunt Brothers [at one door]
Enter Passionate Lord and Base (his jester) [at another door]
PASSIONATE LORD Ha, ha, ha.
And was he bastinadoed to the life? Ha, ha, ha.
I prithee say, Lord General, how did the rascals
Entrench themselves? 15
BASE Most deeply, politicly, all in ditches.
PASSIONATE LORD Ha, ha, ha.
BASE 'Tis thought he'll ne'er bear arms i'th' field again;
Has much ado to lift 'em to his head, sir.
PASSIONATE LORD I would he had. 20
BASE On either side round truncheons played so thick
That shoulders, chines, nay flanks were paid to th' quick.
PASSIONATE LORD
Well said, Lord General: ha, ha, ha.
BASE But pray, how grew the difference first betwixt you?
PASSIONATE LORD
25 There was never any, sir; there lies the jest, man.
Only because he was taller than his brother,
There's all my quarrel to him—and methought
He should be beaten for't; my mind so gave me, sir.
I could not sleep for't. Ha, ha, ha, ha.
Another good jest quickly, while 'tis hot now. 30
Let me not laugh in vain. Ply me, O ply me,
As you will answer't to my cousin Duke.
BASE [to the spectators] Alas, who has a good jest?
PASSIONATE LORD I fall, I dwindle in't.
BASE [to the spectators] Ten crowns for a good jest! 35
Enter Servant
Ha' you a good jest, sir?
SERVANT A pretty moral one.
BASE
Let's ha't, whate'er it be.
SERVANT There comes a Cupid
Drawn by six fools.
BASE That's nothing.
PASSIONATE LORD Help it, help it, then!
BASE
40 I ha' known six hundred fools drawn by a Cupid.
PASSIONATE LORD
Ay, that, that! That's the smarter moral—ha, ha, ha.
Now I begin to be song-ripe methinks.
BASE
I'll sing you a pleasant air, sir, before you ebb.
Song
PASSIONATE LORD [sings]
O how my lungs do tickle! ha, ha, ha!
BASE [sings]
O how my lungs do tickle! ho, ho, ho! 45

363 scholars those who are learning his new code

5.1.1 Ha, ha, ha (a stage direction for laughter)

7 ell measurement of length, e.g. of cloth damask rich silk fabric woven with designs

8 struts walks like someone with a great belly

10 conceit (a) idea with an additional implication of (b) conception

34 I fall...in't my mirthful humour is fading

39 Drawn...fools (a) pulled as in a cart drawn by fools (b) attracted by the presence of the fools, ready victims for Cupid's arrows

40 six...Cupid hundreds of people directed by sexual passion

42 song-ripe ready to sing

PASSIONATE LORD [sings]
 Set a sharp jest
 Against my breast;
 Then how my lungs do tickle!
 As nightingales
 And things in cambric rails
 Sing best against a prickle.
 Ha, ha, ha, ha!

BASE [sings]
 Ho, ho, ho, ho, ha!

PASSIONATE LORD [sings]
 Laugh,
 BASE [sings]
 Laugh,
 PASSIONATE LORD [sings]
 Laugh,
 BASE [sings] Laugh,
 PASSIONATE LORD [sings] Wide,
 BASE [sings] Loud,
 PASSIONATE LORD [sings] And vary!

BASE [sings]
 A smile is for a simpering novice,
 PASSIONATE LORD [sings]
 One that ne'er tasted caviary,
 BASE [sings]
 Nor knows the smack of dear anchovies.
 PASSIONATE LORD [sings]
 Ha, ha, ha, ha, ha!

BASE [sings]
 Ho, ho, ho, ho, ho!

PASSIONATE LORD [sings]
 A giggling waiting wench for me,
 That shows her teeth how white they be:
 BASE [sings]
 A thing not fit for gravity,
 For theirs are foul and hardly three.
 PASSIONATE LORD [sings]
 Ha, ha, ha!

BASE [sings]
 Ho, ho, ho!

PASSIONATE LORD [sings]
 Democritus, thou ancient fleerer,
 How I miss thy laugh, and ha' since!
 BASE [sings]
 There you named the famous jeerer

That ever jeered in Rome, or Athens.
 PASSIONATE LORD [sings]
 Ha, ha, ha!

BASE [sings]
 Ho, ho, ho!

PASSIONATE LORD [sings]
 How brave lives he that keeps a fool,
 Although the rate be deeper!

BASE [sings]
 But he that is his own fool, sir,
 Does live a great deal cheaper.

PASSIONATE LORD [sings]
 Sure I shall burst, burst, quite break; thou art so witty.
 BASE [sings]
 'Tis rare to break at court, for that belongs to th' city.
 PASSIONATE LORD [sings]
 Ha, ha, my spleen is almost worn to the last laughter.
 BASE [sings]
 O keep a corner for a friend: a jest may come hereafter.
Enter Lepet and Clown, and four other like fools, dancing, the Cupid leading, and bearing his Table, and holding it up to Lepet at every strain, and acting the postures
 [First strain]

LEPET
 Twinge all, now; twinge, I say.

Second strain
 Souse upon souse.

Third strain
 Douses single.

Fourth strain
 Jostle sides.

Fifth strain
 Knee belly.

Sixth strain
 Kicksy buttock.

Seventh strain
 Down derry.
Enter Soldier (Chamont's brother), his sword drawn

SOLDIER
 Not angry law nor doors of brass shall keep me
 From my wrong's expiation. To thy bowels

50 rails upper garment or jacket worn by women
 51 prickle (a) thorn (b) penis
 55 novice (a) probationer in religious house (b) amateur, inexperienced laughter
 56 caviary caviar (rhymes with 'vary'), as an example of exquisiteness of taste (in mirth)
 57 anchovies (rhymes with novice)
 66 Democritus 'the laughing philosopher' who laughed at the follies of men (often opposed to Heraclitus, who wept)
 fleerer jeerer, scorner

67 since long since
 68 famous most famous
 77 break become bankrupt
 78 spleen organ understood as seat of melancholy and morose feelings, thereby associated with laughter last laughter death throes
 79 hereafter (cue for entry of Lepet's masquer)
 79.1 like dressed as, similar
 79.2 leading drawing in behind them: see l. 39
 79.4 the postures (a) physical positions indicated in Lepet's table (b) title of 'Aretino's postures', a famous set of pornographic images; hence, the dance postures may be suggestively sexual 84 Knee belly (which would cause them to bend over in agony, thus preparing them to be kicked in the butt) 85 Kicksy (invented word, perhaps suggesting French pronunciation 'kick zhe' = kick the)

 86 Down derry possibly refers to a final posture, flat on the floor as after the impact of a kick

- [He stabs the Passionate Lord]
 I return my disgrace, and after turn
 90 My face to any death that can be sentenced.
 [He throws down and tramples upon Lepet and Clown, and exit]
- BASE
 Murder, O murder, stop the murderer there!
 [Exeunt Base and four dancers, following Soldier]
- LEPET
 I am glad he's gone; he's almost trod my guts out.
 Follow him who list. For me, I'll ha' no hand in't.
- CLOWN
 O 'twas your luck and mine to be squelched, master.
 95 He's stamped my very puddings into pancakes.
 [Exeunt Lepet and Clown at another door]
- CUPID [calling]
 O brothers!—O, I fear 'tis mortal.—Help! O help!—
 I'm made the wretched'st woman, by this accident,
 That ever love beguiled.
 Enter two Brothers
- SECOND BROTHER We are undone, brother;
 Our shames are too apparent.—Away, receptacle
 100 Of luxury and dishonour! Most unfortunate,
 To make thyself but lackey to thy spoil,
 After thy sex's manner.—Lift him up, brother.
 He breathes not to our comfort; he's too wasted
 Ever to cheer us more. A surgeon speedily!—
 105 Hence, the unhappiest that e'er stepped aside!—
 She'll be a mother ere she's known a bride.
 [Exeunt Brothers carrying Passionate Lord]
- CUPID [to her unborn child]
 Thou hadst a most unfortunate conception,
 Whate'er thou prov'st to be. In midst of mirth Comes ruin, for a welcome, to thy birth. [Exit]
- 5.2 Enter Chamont
- CHAMONT
 This is a beautiful life now: privacy,
 The sweetness and the benefit of essence.
 I see there is no man but may make his paradise,
 And it is nothing, but his love and dotage
 5 Upon the world's foul joys, that keeps him out on't.
 For he that lives retired in mind and spirit
 Is still in paradise, and has his innocence
 Partly allowed for his companion too,
 As much as stands with justice. Here no eyes
 10 Shoot their sharp-pointed scorns upon my shame;
 They know no terms of reputation here,
- No punctual limits or precise dimensions.
 Plain downright honesty is all the beauty
 And elegance of life found amongst shepherds;
 For knowing nothing nicely, or desiring it, 15
 Quits many a vexation from the mind,
 With which our quainter knowledge does abuse us;
 The name of envy is a stranger here,
 That dries men's bloods abroad, robs health and rest;
 Why, here's no such fury thought on. No, nor falsehood, 20
 That brotherly disease, fellow-like devil,
 That plays within our bosom and betrays us.
 Enter First Gentleman
- FIRST GENTLEMAN
 O are you here?
- CHAMONT La Nove, 'tis strange to see thee.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN
 I ha' rid one horse to death, to find you out, sir.
- CHAMONT [going]
 I am not to be found of any man 25
 That saw my shame, nor seen long.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN Good, your attention:
 You ought to be seen now, and found out, sir,
 If ever you desire before your ending
 To perform one good office—nay, a dear one;
 Man's time can hardly match it.
- CHAMONT Be't as precious 30
 As reputation, if it come from court
 I will not hear on't.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN You must hear of this, sir.
- CHAMONT
 Must?
- FIRST GENTLEMAN
 You shall hear it.
- CHAMONT I love thee, that thou'lt die.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN 'Twere nobler in me, 35
 Than in you living: you will live a murderer
 If you deny this office.
- CHAMONT Ev'n to death, sir.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN
 Why, then you'll kill your brother.
- CHAMONT How?
- FIRST GENTLEMAN Your brother, sir.
 Bear witness, heaven: this man destroys his brother
 When he may save him, his least breath may save
 him. 40
 Can there be wilfuller destruction?—
 He was forced to take a most unmanly wrong,

95 puddings entrails, guts

100 luxury lechery

101 lackey servant

spoil ruin

5.2.7 Is... paradise remains in an unfallen, prelapsarian world7-8 innocence... companion (in contrast with Adam, whose companion was not innocence but Eve)

17 quainter more sophisticated

20 fury (a) rage (b) avenging infernal deity

21 brotherly close, similar yet unlike (envy); here, associated with his brother (whom he believes false)33 shall will, must (whether you want to or not)—a very provocative idiom for an inferior to use to a superior

34 thou'lt die i.e. you are willing to die (as indicated by your acting in a way that will make me kill you, in defence of my honour)35-6 'Twere... living nobler for First Gentleman to die than for Chamont to live37 Ev'n to (I will deny it) even if it results in, even to the extent of

Above the suffering virtue of a soldier;
 He's killed his injurer—a work of honour,
 45 For which (unless you save him) he dies speedily.
 My conscience is discharged. I'm but a friend;
 A brother should go forward where I end. Exit

CHAMONT Dies?
 Say he be naught; that's nothing to my goodness,
 50 Which ought to shine through use, or else it loses
 The glorious name 'tis known by. He's my brother.
 Yet peace is above blood. Let him go. Ay,
 But where's the noblesse of affection then?
 That must be cared for too, or I'm imperfect.
 55 The same blood that stood up in wrath against him
 Now in his misery runs all to pity.
 I'd rather die than speak one syllable
 To save myself; but living as I am,
 There's no avoiding on't; the world's humanity
 60 Expects it hourly from me. Curse of fortune!
 I took my leave so well, too.—Let him die;
 'Tis but a brother lost. So pleasingly
 And swiftly I came off, 'twere more than irksomeness
 To tread that path again, and I shall never 65 Depart so handsomely.—But then where's posterity?
 The consummation of our house and name?
 I'm torn in pieces betwixt love and shame. Exit

5.3 Enter Lepet, Clown [with books], Poltrot, Moulebaisier, and others, the new Court Officers

LEPET
 Good morrow, fellow Poltrot, and Moulebaiser;
 Good morrow, fellows all.

POLTROT Monsieur Lepet!

LEPET
 Look, I've remembered you; here's books apiece for
 you.
 [Lepet gives books to them all]

MOULEBAISER
 O sir, we dearly thank you.

LEPET
 So you may.

There's two impressions gone already, sirs. 5

POLTROT
 What? No! In so short a time?

LEPET
 'Tis as I tell you, sir.

My Kick sells gallantly, I thank my stars.

CLOWN
 So does your table; you may thank the moon, too.

LEPET
 'Tis the book sells the table.

CLOWN
 But 'tis the bookseller
 That has the money for 'em; I'm sure o' that. 10

LEPET
 'Twill much enrich the Company of Stationers.
 'Tis thought 'twill prove a lasting benefit,
 Like The Wise Masters and the almanacs,
The Hundred Novels and The Book of Cookery—
 For they begin already to engross it 15
 And make it a stock-book, thinking indeed
 'Twill prove too great a benefit and help
 For one that's new set up; they know their way,
 And make him Warden ere his beard be grey.

MOULEBAISER
 Is't possible such virtue should lie hid, 20
 And in so little paper?

LEPET
 How? Why, there was The Carpenter,
 An unknown thing, an odoriferous pamphlet,
 Yet no more paper, by all computation,

53 noblesse nobility
 65 handsomely (Chamont is congratulating himself on the elegance of his departure from court.)
where's posterity what about future generations of his family (what will they think of him, or will they even exist)
 66 consummation (a) perfection (b) death, end
 5.3.0.1 Poltrot coward (French)
 0.1-2 Moulebaaiser mussel-kisser (French slang for 'pussy-kisser')
 5 impressions gone printings sold-out (i.e. his book is in its third edition)
 8 moon (apparently influencing lunatics to buy the table; almanacs included tables showing the lunar months)
 9-10 bookseller . . . 'em (Authors did not receive royalties; the wholesale and retail booksellers therefore pocketed all profits)

 11 Company of Stationers trade association of booksellers and printers
 13 Wise Masters probably The Wise Masters of Rome, a popular sixteenth-century collection almanacs books published annually containing tables of months and days with astronomical and astrological data, predictions and information—very popular, and profitable to booksellers 14 Hundred Novels Boccaccio's Decameron—or the popular jestbook A Hundred Merry Tales
Book of Cookery (probably indicating a popular genre, rather than any particular title)
 16 stock-book part of 'the English Stock', a set of profitable titles jointly owned by a monopoly of wealthy booksellers

 18 one . . . up a young member of the company only recently having finished his apprenticeship and set up in business
 19 Warden elected member of the governing body of the Stationers' Company, under the authority of the Master
 20 virtue . . . hid (an echo of the parable of the talents, Matthew 25)
 21 The Carpenter probably A Little Tractate, entitled The Carpenter
 22 odoriferous having a scent or fragrance, here ironically 'smelly'
 23-4 no . . . once (a) no more toilet paper than Ajax would use to wipe himself (b) no more paper than used in the small print run of an edition of an ancient Greek play

- Than Ajax Telamon would use at once.
 25 Your Herring proved the like, able to buy Another Fisher's Folly, and your Pasquil
 Went not below the madcaps of that time—
 And shall my elaborate Kick come behind, think you?
 CLOWN
 Yes, it must come behind; 'tis in italica too,
 According to your humour.
 30 LEPET Not in sale, varlet.
 CLOWN
 In sale, sir? It shall sail beyond 'em all, I trow.
 LEPET [looking over the shoulder of a reader]
 What have you there now? O, page 21.
 CLOWN
 That page is come to his years, he should be a servingman.
 LEPET [to his readers]
 Mark how I snap up The Duello there.
 35 One would not use a dog so,
 I must needs say; but's for the common good.
 CLOWN
 Nay sir, your commons seldom fight at sharp,
 But buffet in a warehouse.
 LEPET [to his readers] This will save
 Many a gentleman of good blood from bleeding, sirs.
 40 I have a curse from many a barber-surgeon;
 They'd give but too much money to call't in.
 Turn to page 45. See what you find there.
 CLOWN O, out upon him!
 Page, 45? That's an old thief indeed.
Enter Duke, the Lady (his sister), First Gentleman
 LEPET [to his readers]
 45 The duke! Clap down your books.—Away, Galoshio!
 CLOWN
 Indeed, I am too foul to be i'th' presence;
 They use to shake me off at the chamber door still.
 Exit
- LADY [kneeling to Duke]
 Good my lord, grant my suit; let me not rise
 Without the comfort on't. I have not often
 Been tedious in this kind.
 DUKE Sister, you wrong yourself, 50
 And those great virtues that your fame is made of,
 To waste so much breath for a murderer's life.
 LADY
 You cannot hate th'offence more than I do, sir,
 Nor the offender. The respect I owe Unto his absent brother makes me a suitor, 55
 A most importunate sister. Make me worthy
 But of this one request.
 DUKE I am deaf
 To any importunacy, and sorry
 For your forgetfulness. You never injured
 Your worth so much; you ought to be rebuked for't. 60
 Pursue good ways; end as you did begin.
 'Tis half the guilt to speak for such a sin.
 LADY [rising]
 This is love's beggary right, that now is ours:
 When ladies love, and cannot show their powers. Exit
- DUKE
 La Nove?
 FIRST GENTLEMAN
 My lord.
 DUKE Are these our new attendants? 65
 LEPET
 We are, my lord, and will endure as much
 As better men, my lord—and more, I trust.
 DUKE [to First Gentleman]
 What's he?
 FIRST GENTLEMAN
 My lord, a decayed gentleman,
 That will do any service.
 DUKE A decayed one?

24 Ajax Telamon (a) tragedy of Sophocles in which 'the madman' scourges a ram which he thinks is Ulysses (b) punning on 'a jakes' or 'lavatory', as in Harington's Metamorphosis of Ajax
 25 Herring Probably Thomas Nashe's Lenten Stuff, containing a Description and first Procreation and Increase of the town of Great Yarmouth in Norfolk; With a new Play, never printed before, of the praise of the Red Herring.
 26 Fisher's Folly (a) a well-known house sold in July 1616 to Lady Harrington (b) punning on 'Fisher' in relation to 'Herring' (c) perhaps punning on the Jesuit named Fisher, allegedly responsible for converting Buckingham's mother to Catholicism Pasquil satirical text—probably the series of best-selling pamphlets by Nicholas Breton: Pasquil's Madcap, The Second Part of Pasquil's Madcap, Pasquil's Fools-cap (all 1600)

 28 come behind (a) fall short of the example of these other books (b) punning on a kick on the backside
 30 in sale ('come behind') in the sense of not selling so many copies
 32-3 page . . . page page of his book . . . boy or adolescent in personal attendance on a person of high rank
 33 That . . . years (Pages of the Bedchamber in the court of James I often kept their positions as adults. See l. 44.)
 34 snap up take up sharply in an argument (using the figurative sense drawn from biting or snapping)
The Duello (a) duelling (b) John Selden's The Duello (1610). Publication on duelling in France and Italy was intense: see for instance Pierre de Boissat, Recherches sur les Duels (Lyon, 1610) and Charles Bodin, Discours contre les Duels (Paris, 1618).

37 commons (a) lower orders (b) members of the House of Commons, involved in incidents of hitting and shoving in the Parliament of 1621
at sharp with pointed weapons (as in a duel)
 40 barber-surgeon Of lower status than a physician who dealt with medicine, barber-surgeons dealt with surgery, and so were likely to be called to attend to wounds caused in duelling; hence, a decline in duelling would reduce their business.
 41 call't in take the book off the market (like Lady Mary Wroth's Urania of 1621)
 46-7 too foul . . . door (equating himself with the galoshes for which he is named) presence . . . chamber Presence Chamber, where suitors and ambassadors were formally admitted into the King's presence

FIRST GENTLEMAN
 70 A renounced one, indeed; for this place only.
 DUKE
 We renounce him then. Go, discharge him instantly.
 He that disclaims his gentry for mere gains,
 That man's too base to make a vassal on.
 LEPET [to First Gentleman]
 What says the Duke?
 FIRST GENTLEMAN Faith, little to your comfort, sir.
 75 You must be a gentleman again.
 LEPET How?
 FIRST GENTLEMAN There's no remedy.
 LEPET
 Marry, the fates forfend!—Ne'er while I breathe, sir.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN
 The Duke will have it so; there's no resisting.
 He spied it i' your forehead.
 80 LEPET My wife's doing.
 She thought she should be put below her betters now,
 And sued to ha' me made a gentleman again.
 FIRST GENTLEMAN And very likely, sir.
 Marry, I'll give you this comfort: when all's done,
 85 You'll never pass but for a scurvy one.
 That's all the help you have. Come, show your pace.
 LEPET
 The heaviest gentleman that e'er lost place.
 Bear witness: I'm forced to't. Exit
 DUKE [to the remaining officers]
 Though you have a coarser title yet upon you 90 Than those that left your places without blame,
 'Tis in your power to make yourselves the same.
 I cannot make you gentlemen; that's a work
 Raised from your own deservings; merit, manners,
 And inborn virtue does it. Let your own goodness
 95 Make you so great, my power shall make you greater.
 And more t'encourage you, this I add again:
 There's many grooms now exact gentlemen.
Enter Chamont [and stands aloof]
 CHAMONT
 Methinks 'tis strange to me to enter here.
 Is there in nature such an awful power
 100 To force me to this place, and make me do this?
 Is man's affection stronger than his will?
 His resolution? Was I not resolved
 Never to see this place more? Do I bear
 Within my breast one blood that confounds th'other?
 105 The blood of love and will, and the last weakest?
 Had I ten millions, I would give it all now
 I were but past it, or 'twould never come;
 For I shall never do't, or not do't well,
 But spoil it utterly betwixt two passions.
 Yonder's the Duke himself.—I will not do't now, 110 Had twenty lives their several sufferings in him. Exit
 DUKE
 Who's that went out now?
 POLTROT I saw none, my lord.
 DUKE
 Nor you?
 MOULEBAISER
 I saw the glimpse of one, my lord.
 DUKE
 Whate'er it was, methought it pleased me strangely,
 And suddenly my joy was ready for't. 115
 Did you not mark it better?
 POLTROT and MOULEBAISER Troth, my lord,
 We gave no great heed to't.
Enter Chamont
 CHAMONT [aside] 'Twill not be answered;
 It brings me hither still, by main force hither.
 Either I must give over to profess humanity
 Or I must speak for him.
 DUKE 'Tis here again: 120
 [Aside] No marvel 'twas so pleasing: 'tis delight
 And worth itself, now it appears unclouded.
 CHAMONT My lord—
 [Aside] He turns away from me. By this hand,
 I am ill-used of all sides! 'Tis a fault 125
 That fortune ever had, t'abuse a goodness.
 DUKE
 Methought you were saying somewhat.
 CHAMONT [aside] Mark the language:
 As coy as fate. I see 'twill ne'er be granted.
 DUKE
 We little looked, in troth, to see you here yet.
 CHAMONT [aside] 130
 Not till the day after my brother's death, I think.
 DUKE
 Sure some great business drew you.
 CHAMONT No, in sooth, sir:
 Only to come to see a brother die, sir,
 That I may learn to go too—and if he deceive me not,
 I think he will do well in't of a soldier,
 135 Manly and honestly. And if he weep then,
 I shall not think the worse on's manhood for't,
 Because he's leaving of that part that has it.
 DUKE
 He's slain a noble gentleman; think on't, sir.
 CHAMONT
 I would I could not, sir.
 DUKE Our kinsman, too.

80 spied... forehead saw it written on your noble brow (with a suggestion of cuckoldry, taken up implicitly in Lepet's response)
 81 put below (a) given a lower rank than (b) sexually mounted by. (There may be an allusion to a dispute about precedence in the 1621 Parliament.)

 86 show your pace a command to leave (perhaps—given Lepet's earlier display of 'the postures'—an opportunity for the actor to display a characteristic 'funny walk' in his exit)
 87 heaviest saddest (but perhaps alluding to the size of the comic actor William Rowley, who was a gentleman, and may have originated the role) 104 blood the competing codes of conduct, association and family which bind society together

 111 him the Soldier

- CHAMONT
All this is but worse, sir.
- 140 DUKE When 'tis at worst,
Yet seeing thee, he lives.
- CHAMONT My lord—
- DUKE He lives.
Believe it as thy bliss; he dies not for't.
Will this make satisfaction for things past?
- CHAMONT [kneeling]
O, my lord—
- DUKE Will it? Speak.
- CHAMONT
145 With greater shame to my unworthiness.
- DUKE
Rise then; we're ev'n. I never found it harder
To keep just with a man. My great work's ended.
I knew your brother's pardon was your suit, sir,
However your nice modesty held it back.
- CHAMONT
150 I take a joy now to confess it, sir.
Enter First Gentleman
- FIRST GENTLEMAN
My lord—
- DUKE Hear me first, sir, whate'er your news be:
Set free the soldier instantly.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN 'Tis done, my Lord.
- DUKE How?
- FIRST GENTLEMAN
In effect. 'Twas part of my news too.
There's fair hope of your noble kinsman's life, sir.
- DUKE
What sayst thou?
- 155 FIRST GENTLEMAN And the most admirèd change
That living flesh e'er had: he's not the man, my lord.
Death cannot be more free from passions, sir,
Than he is at this instant. He's so meek now,
He makes those seem passionate were never thought
of.
- 160 And for he fears his moods have oft disturbed you, sir,
He's only hasty now for his forgiveness—
And here behold him, sir.
Enter Passionate Lord [bandaged], the Cupid, and two Brothers
- DUKE Let me give thanks first.
Our worthy cousin—
- PASSIONATE LORD Your unworthy trouble, sir—
For which, with all acknowledged reverence,
165 I ask your pardon. And for injury
More known and wilfull, I have chose a wife,
Without your counsel or consent, my lord.
- DUKE
A wife? Where is she, sir?
- PASSIONATE LORD [introducing the Cupid]
This noble gentlewoman.
- DUKE How?
- PASSIONATE LORD
Whose honour my forgetful times much wronged. 170
- DUKE [to First Gentleman]
He's madder than he was.
- FIRST GENTLEMAN I would ha' sworn for him.
- DUKE The Cupid, cousin?
- PASSIONATE LORD Yes, this worthy lady, sir.
- DUKE [to First Gentleman] Still worse and worse.
- FIRST BROTHER
Our sister, under pardon, my lord.
- DUKE What? 175
- SECOND BROTHER
Which shape love taught her to assume.
- DUKE Is't truth then?
- FIRST GENTLEMAN
It appears plainly now below the waist, my lord.
- DUKE
Chamont, didst ever read of a she-Cupid?
- CHAMONT
Never in fiction yet, but it might hold, sir,
For desire is of both genders.
Enter [Lady] (the Duke's sister)
- DUKE Make that good here: 180
He joins Chamont's hand and his sister's
I take thee at thy word, sir.
- CHAMONT O my lord,
Love would appear too bold and rude from me.
Honour and admiration are her rights;
Her goodness is my saint, my lord.
- DUKE I see,
185 You're both too modest to bestow yourselves.
I'll save that virtue still; 'tis but my pains. Come,
It shall be so.
- CHAMONT
This gift does but set forth my poverty.
- LADY
Sir, that which you complain of is my riches.
Enter Chamont's brother (the Soldier)
- DUKE
Soldier, now every noise sounds peace, thou'rt welcome. 190
- SOLDIER [kneeling]
Sir, my repentance sues for your blest favour—
Which, once obtained, no injury shall lose it.
I'll suffer mightier wrongs.
- DUKE [raising Soldier] Rise, loved and pardoned.
For where hope failed—nay, art itself resigned—

156 not the man no longer who he used to be 166-7 I...consent (as did Kit Villiers, Buckingham's brother)

171 madder more deluded (because he has just called the apparently male Cupid a woman)
180 desire... genders i.e. the Cupid could have been female for, although Cupid traditionally is represented as male, yet both men and women experience sexual desire

195 Thou'rt wrought that cure which skill could never find;
 Nor did there cease, but to our peace extend.
 Never could wrongs boast of a nobler end. Exeunt

Epilogue [Enter] the Epilogue
 Our poet bid us say, for his own part,
 He cannot lay too much forth of his art,
 But fears our over-acting passions may,

As not adorn, deface his laboured play.
 Yet still he is resolute for what is writ
 Of nicer valour, and assumes the wit:
 But for the love-scenes (which he ever meant Cupid, in's petticoat, should represent)
 He'll stand no shock of censure. The play's good;
 He says he knows it (if well understood).
 But we (blind god) beg, if thou art divine,
 Thou'lt shoot thy arrows round; this play was thine.
[Exit]

5
 10

Epilogue.o.I Enter the Epilogue Who speaks this final speech will strongly affect its interpretation: it could plausibly be spoken by Lepet (an author speaking for the author, who is offstage at play's end and could enter as the others exit), or by Chamont, the Soldier, Passionate Lord, or Cupid.

1 part (punning on 'actor's role')
 2 lay . . . of (a) boast too much about (b) bet too much money on (c) reveal too much about

3 over-acting passions (paradoxically applying action to what is passive)
 4 laboured play playing on labour and 'play'; the play, designed to give delight, on which he has worked so hard (and which contains a pregnant woman)
 5 writ scripted (what the writer did in contrast to what the actors did)

 6 assumes claims as his own
 11 blind god Cupid
 12 Thou'lt . . . round You will shoot your arrows at the circle of spectators (and so make them fall in love with us, the actors) thine (i.e. not the author's work, or the actors')

THE TRIUMPHS OF HONOUR AND VIRTUE

Text edited and annotated by David M. Bergeron, introduced by Ania Loomba

The Triumphs of Honour and Virtue, Middleton's third pageant for the Company of Grocers, encapsulates crucial aspects of the cultural politics of English overseas expansion during the early seventeenth century, some of which are neglected by Renaissance criticism today. It was commissioned to celebrate the inauguration of Sir Peter Proby as Lord Mayor of London in 1622; Middleton collaborated with Garret Christmas for its production, and they received £220 as gross payment for it. At first glance, one might be tempted to dismiss it as a collage of snippets of Middleton's earlier pageants, or as an undistinguished example of the formula followed by most Lord Mayor's shows. But the ways in which this pageant follows, adds to, and departs from the pattern of both Middleton's pageants and other mayoral shows through the seventeenth century indicates some of the ideological parameters within which English trade was conducted.

The opening paragraph is identical to that of The Triumphs of Love and Antiquity which Middleton had written in 1619 for the Skinners' Company. Middleton is confident that his pageant, 'where invention flourishes,' will be popularly received, because even inferior triumphs, 'wherein art hath been weakly imitated and most beggarly worded' have been successful (24–5). It is significant, however, that Middleton claims that these inferior pageants have been applauded by 'foreign nations'; by implication, his own shows are designed for a more discerning English audience. This nationalistic appeal is appropriate in the context of the mayoral pageants, which celebrated not only the civic organization of London, and the livery companies that controlled it, but also the colonial possibilities of trade and commerce. The Grocers, it should be recalled, were then the second most powerful of the twelve major livery companies of London. Honour and Virtue enacts aspects of the colonial drama which were yet to unfold; it canvasses for a national pride which was both the necessary condition for colonial ventures and their outcome.

From the 1619 pageant Middleton also transported the figure of Antiquity, who, in both shows, traces the lineage of the company in question. Such an exercise reminds us of the negotiations between ascendant mercantile capital and the Crown: not only is the 'family tree' of the company an appropriation of feudal and royal practices, it also seeks to demonstrate the connections between the merchants and the nobility by including the names of royal and noble patrons of the livery companies. The heritage of the morality play is evident in this, as in all the mayoral shows, with the newly appointed mayor cast as a sort of Everyman who must resist temptation in order to govern well. The prolonged moral see-saw of the more lavishly produced The Triumphs of Truth, Middleton's second show for the Grocers, however, is truncated here because there is no personification of evil and therefore no elaborate temptations are enacted. Its four major figures are all 'good': Honour, Virtue, Antiquity, and 'a black personage representing India, called, for her odours and riches, the Queen of Merchandise' and 'attended by Indians in antique habits: Commerce, Adventure and Traffic' (41–6).

This last figure is what makes this pageant remarkable—even though she is not unique. Visual entertainments and pageants, from at least the first decade of the sixteenth century, had repeatedly featured an enormous variety of racial outsiders as well as personifications of lands with which there was real or desired trade. The praise of an uncivilized outsider for the ruler was obviously an effective way to indicate the power of the latter. During the entertainments for Elizabeth at Kenilworth Castle in 1575, for example, it was arranged that a Hombre Salvaggio or wild man should testify to the Queen's 'glorie' (Bergeron). The King's Entertainment written for James in 1604 by Dekker, features 'Arabia Britannica' represented as a woman in white, who is sad until the arrival of the King. Jonson's The Masque of Blackness (1605) had Queen Anne and her ladies in blackface as the daughters of the River Niger. Blacks and other outsiders were represented even more insistently in the Jacobean mayoral shows: their presence, either within the spectacle or in processions preceding it, signified the new territories that held the promise of commercial expansion for the Companies that sponsored the pageants. In Anthony Munday's The Triumphs of Re-United Britannia (1605), for example, an Indian King and Queen come to England, bringing with them 'no mean quantity of Indian Gold'; in his show for the Ironmongers in 1609, a whale is featured with a 'Black More' in its mouth; and in Chruso-thrambos, The Triumphs of Gold (written by Munday in 1611), a 'King of Moors' appears 'gallantly mounted on a golden leopard, he hurling gold and silver every way about him' and accompanied by 'six tributarie kings'.

Middleton's Indian Queen, then, not only resembles his King of Moors who appears in The Triumphs of Truth, but is part of a pattern which was to continue throughout the century. To take a few examples just from pageants sponsored by the Grocers, Middleton's The Triumphs of Honour and Industry (1617) contains a personification of India, 'the seat of merchandise'; in John Squire's The Triumphs of Peace (1620) the figures of America, Asia, and Africa crown Europe as Empress of the earth; John Tatham's London's Triumph (1659) depicts 'several of the places or countries, in which the commodities belonging to the Grocers Trade do grow, and the natives disporting therein, in habits of each nation'; Thomas Jordan's London Triumphant (1672), also written for the Grocers, includes an Indian Emperor, 'negroes in Indian habits' and the figure of America; London in its Splendour (1673) by the same writer again shows 'two negroes properly mounted, in East Indian shapes' and Jordan's The Triumphs of London (1678) has an East Indian deity 'called Opulenta, a representative of all the intrinsic treasure in the Oriental Indies' whom the 'idolatrous natives' worship 'with pagan piety, and diabolical devotion'. Opulenta is accompanied by 'three black Indian princes, viz., Animalia, Mineralia and Vegetabilia'. The Grocers' shows routinely began with black boys, mounted on griffins or camels, strewing the streets with the 'delicious traffic of the Grocers Company': company records show payments for '50 sugar loaves, 36 pounds of nutmegs, 24 pounds of dates and 114 pounds of ginger' which were used for this purpose in the 1617 show (Heath). Middleton is the first, to the best of my knowledge, to give blacks a speaking part in the civic pageants, although Jonson's Masque of Blackness had done so earlier with respect to courtly shows.

Given the expansion of English overseas trade during this period, as also the fact that these shows were sponsored by companies who had a direct stake in the trade, the recurrence of such figures is not surprising. Various cultural and racial 'others'—the natives of different parts of the New World, Africans and Asians—are often confused with each other so we get composite figures that seem to belong to no specific place; at other times they are represented as the same so that in certain respects there is no distinction between the King of Moors and the Indian Queen. These blurrings, as well as the specificity of each figure, are important for unravelling the politics of English trade and colonial contact during the period. The Indian Queen in Honour and Virtue, like the Moorish King in Truth, offers her own conversion to Christianity as a justification for English trading practices overseas. She asks the viewer to observe her 'with an intellectual eye', to see beyond her native blackness, which was commonly associated with the devil, with depravity, sin and filth, and to perceive her inner goodness, which, she suggests, is made possible by her new faith (55–8).

The impossibility of 'washing the Ethiopie white' was an old idea (the Moorish servant girl Zanche in Webster's The White Devil calls it a 'sunburnt proverb') which was commonly used to indicate the difficulty of changing outward realities like one's physique as well as inner qualities, such as one's disposition and faith. Both variants show up in contemporary emblem books, which influenced the imagery and iconography of Middleton's pageants. Thomas Palmer's Two Hundred Posies (1565), England's earliest known emblem book, depicts, under the title 'Impossible things', two white men washing a black man. The accompanying lines specifically refer to the impossibility of religious conversions:

Ripa's emblem for 'wasted labour'.

Why washest thou the man of Inde? . . .
 Indurat heart of heretics
 Much blacker than the mole;
 With word or writte who seeks to purge
 Starke dead he blows the coal.

Geoffrey Whitney's A Choice of Emblems (1586), reproduces a similar picture, under the title 'Æthiopem laure', and advises that it is useless to battle against the power of Nature and whiten the 'blackamore'. Cesare Ripa's influential Iconologia, various editions of which were issued from different places on the Continent beginning in 1593, also depicts a black figure or 'More' as the emblem for 'wasted labour', with an explanatory legend that echoes Palmer and Whitney. In Middleton's representation of India, what was once impossible is now rendered feasible by English merchants. Commerce can whiten the 'indurat heart of heretikes' but in order to do so, skin colour must be unyoked from moral qualities. (In Jonson's Masque of Blackness such unyoking is seen as a possibility because Niger's black daughters are 'bright' within. But Niger in that pageant wants to restore them to their original white exteriors and hence match the outside with the inside.) It is ironic, and even paradoxical, that mercantilist-colonialist discourse, which was to help institutionalize, rationalize, and circulate such a variety of racial prejudice, should in its infancy need to posit such a divorce.

India's speech in Middleton's pageant intricately mixes the language of religion with that of commerce. 'Blest commerce' is literally a crusader for Christianity and 'settles such happiness' on the Indian Queen that the English merchants' cargo of 'gums and fragrant spices', indeed all 'the riches and the sweetness of the east', are only fair exchange for the 'celestial knowledge' that is now hers (62–80). This is again a theme that runs through the Mayoral shows where a variety of colonized people celebrate the civilizational and moral qualities of English trading practices and contrast them to the barbarity of the Dutch, the Portuguese, and the Spanish.

This contrast, and indeed the fact that it is traders who are agents of religious conversion, reminds us of the context in which these pageants were being enacted. In the mayoral shows, most of the black, brown, and tawny figures that praise the might of London, England, and English trade are not simply savage or wild peoples: more often than not they are emperors, queens, or other representatives of riches, plenitude, and exotic grandeur. They are born of the newly established spice trade during the period, which brought the British into contact with the highly stratified societies of Asia, with their sophisticated courts and long standing commercial and trading histories, in contrast to the societies they encountered in the New World which were more tribal, and hence more readily regarded as primitive and uncultured. In the East, the first English travellers like Ralph Fitch found cities 'much greater then London' (Ramsay). Thomas Coryat wrote home in 1615 that Lahore, part of the Mughal empire in India, was 'one of the largest cities of the whole universe' (Purchas). Here the English had to literally beg for favours from potentates who were wealthier and at least as whimsical as European monarchs. The Turkish Sultan, the Sultan of Achin, and the powerful Mughal rulers, for example, had to be approached with deference, with expensive gifts (no glass beads would do in the face of their own huge treasuries and developed economies), and with patience. After spending many years at the court of Jehangir 'The Great Mogor', William Hawkins found that his efforts to secure trading privileges had come to naught. Hawkins, Nicholas Downton, Thomas Roe, and other pioneering English merchant-sailors were also frustrated by the layers of bureaucracy that they had to negotiate with before they could even approach the kings (Purchas).

It is no accident, then, that the Indian woman in Honour and Virtue, like so many other related figures, is both royal and compliant to the English will: the splendour and wealth that the East promised the English but had not yet delivered is in this way rendered available. Representations of exotic royalty in city pageants had a precedent in countries which had a longer history of contact with the East. The triumphal arches and pedestals erected in Lisbon when Philip of Spain made his formal entry there in 1581 depicted personifications of various territories in the East which had been conquered by Portugal, all offering their products to the new king. Goa, Portugal's main outpost in India, was represented as 'Queen of the East' and occupied a central position in the show. Even though the Spanish, the English, the Dutch, and the Portuguese were bitter rivals in their dealings overseas, there was a flow of information and of materials such as travelogues and paintings and art objects from one country to another, just as there was the attempt to guard them from each other (Lach).

The literature produced during the period of the spice trade, including the mayoral pageants, both invoked medieval images of India (and the East generally), and recast these according to the newer dynamics of contact (Hahn). In recent writing on early modern Europe, this history of the 'old world' contact has been neglected in favour of the new world expansion, which has therefore become the dominant model for most work on colonial discourse during the period. Middleton's Indian Queen is a useful reminder of the other half of the picture.

The Grocers' Company, Middleton's patron for this show, had an obvious connection with Eastern trade: its founders had once been known as the Pepperers, and following a treaty between Elizabeth I and Sultan Murad II of Turkey, the Levant Company was established in 1581. The Grocers had control over all druggists, confectioners, tobacconists, and tobacco cutters, and the founders of the East India Company included such well known Grocers as Sir John Moore and Middleton's famous namesake Sir Thomas Myddelton. England had remained remarkably tardy in acquiring information generated by European, especially Portuguese, ventures into Asia so that the Tudor image of India was largely one derived from ancient Greek and medieval sources as a land of monsters, heathens, and untold splendour and wealth. But several parallel developments towards the end of the sixteenth century changed all that. Firstly, new materials began to circulate. The English translation of the Dutch Jan van Linschoten's work Itinerario in 1598 made a great impact on English merchants, as did Theodor de Bry's lavish travel collection, Collectiones peregrinationum in Indiam Orientalem et Occidentalims, (issued from Frankfurt between 1590 and 1634). Richard Hakluyt had hardly touched on Asian materials in the first edition of Principall Navigations, but after 1590 he became one of the most assiduous collectors of information on Asia, reproducing travel narratives with the object of providing the first fleets bound for India with as much authoritative data as possible. He also took an active part in the founding of the East India Company: a memorial written in 1600, probably by him, is called 'Certain Reasons Why the English Merchants May Trade into the East Indies', and it argued for trade with the East in the same way as his 'Discourse on Western Planting' pleaded for colonization in the New World. Hakluyt persuaded Ralph Fitch, who had returned from India in 1599, to write his 'wonderful travailes', which became the first English account of India. The final edition of Principall Navigations (1598–1600) carried that account, as well as a translation of the Venetian merchant Cesare Fedrici's book on India, along with John Newberry's letters from that country and other related documents (Hakluyt). The other pioneering English collector of travel accounts, Richard Eden, was similarly interested in stimulating interest in expansion (Lach).

Secondly, travel narratives were complemented by the goods and profits gleaned from actual voyages which also served to reopen the Orient for the English. Trading stations sprang up all over the Ottoman Empire following the Anglo-Turkish treaty which generated firsthand accounts of the East. In March 1588, The Hercules returned from Tripoli in Syria, 'the richest ship of English merchant goods that ever was known to come into this realme' as John Eldred described it (Hakluyt). Its cargo included 'silk from Persia, indigo and cotton from India, cinnamon from Ceylon, pepper from Sumatra and nutmegs, cloves and mace from the Moluccas', convincing sceptics about the viability of trade in the East Indies. The huge profits made by the Dutch East India Company, the defeat of the Armada, and the continual and steep rise in pepper prices between 1592 and 1599, all contributed to the initiation of direct English trade with India. The East India Company was set up (only four years after its Dutch counterpart), on the last day of 1600, with a capital of £50,000. Elizabeth I granted monopoly of trade with the east to the Company 'for the honour of our nation, the welfare of the people, the increase of our navigation, and the advancement of lawful traffic to the benefit of the commonwealth'. Unlike the contact with America, which rested almost entirely on colonization, the English presence in India remained, through the century, largely mercantile. The East India Company's profits averaged over 101 per cent for the first five voyages. By 1620, the Company possessed factories in Sumatra, India, Japan, Java, Borneo, Malacca, Celebes, Siam, and Malabar. The specificity of these places was blurred in their representation as 'the spice islands', a blurring that is reflected in the mayoral pageants where we have 'negroes in Indian clothes', or the word 'Moor' applied to everyone. But the confusion also testifies to the bewildering variety of peoples that Europeans actually found in India, where, in addition to the internal variegation of peoples, Arabs, Ethiopians, and Persians mingled with Kaffirs from Mozambique, Turks, and Jews (Lach).

The Portuguese had justified their eastward expansion by seeing it as an extension of the Crusades: India, it was argued, was being colonized by Moors and needed to be saved. But they had had very limited success in this regard. The British, in contrast, had little crusading zeal in India initially. Thus it is especially significant that the Indian Queen in Honour and Virtue, and indeed many other 'black' figures in the pageants, should cast English trading practices as achieving missionary ends. In reality, Oriental populations, let alone the monarchs, were hardly as tractable as Middleton's Indian Queen or King of Moors. The Mughal emperors, for example, were intellectually interested in Christianity, thanks to the established presence of the Jesuits in India. Akbar even tried to experiment with a composite faith that would synthesize Hinduism, Islam, and Christianity, and his son Jehangir, according to Thomas Coryat, 'speaketh very reverently of our saviour'. But none of them came even remotely close to converting, and Jehangir, Coryat says, regarded all conversions as evidence of fickleness.

Ripa's figures of Asia, Africa, Europe, and America.

Nor was English trade quite as secure as the shows might lead us to believe. It is true that in 1622, the same year that Middleton wrote this pageant, the East India Company defeated the Portuguese at Ormuz in the Persian Gulf and negotiated to become the maritime auxiliary of the Mughals. But in the same year too, on 11 February, many English traders had been massacred by the Dutch in Amboyna, an event about which there was much publicity and 'much complaint in England', according to Purchas. Since 1606, the merchants of the East India Company had petitioned the Privy Council to authorize use of force against the Dutch; in 1609 and 1611 they complained to the Lord Treasurer about Portuguese and Dutch behaviour. Later pageants castigated the Dutch and Spanish trading practices as barbaric, in contrast with the English merchants, who are 'Peacable and kind | Full of Humanity' (London Triumphant, 1672). While Middleton may not be as explicit, his Queen does insist that she is 'by English merchants first enlightened' (62). Moreover, his selective use of recent events is significant. It is Ormuz rather than Amboyna that resonates in his pageant, not only because it marked a rare victory for the English over their rivals but because in 1586, its Queen had come to Goa to be converted to Christianity after her marriage to a Portuguese. Middleton's pageant for the Grocers then is clearly meant to assuage very real anxieties and bolster hopes that were, in reality, rather far from being realized.

The Indian Queen is not just a generalized seventeenth-century trope for a feminized Orient but marks a specific playing with specific histories. Of course, routine representations of Asia as female in books such as Ripa's Iconologia must certainly have contributed to the way in which she was presented in the actual pageant. One can only speculate what other factors might have contributed to the image: Elizabeth herself had often dressed in Oriental garb. In 1599 she received Thomas Platter at Nonsuch Castle wearing 'a gown of pure white satin, gold-embroidered with a whole bird of paradise', and thus showing 'her continental visitor that she, like any ruler of the distant Moluccas, knew how to wear a plumage headdress of the rare bird of paradise found only in the East' (Lach). The representation may also have been influenced by other contemporary images of Oriental women: Cesare Vecellio's Habiti antichi et moderni di tutto il mondo (1598) offered remarkably detailed pictures of African, Asian, and American as well as European peoples, classified according to both class and gender.

In the last part of Honour and Virtue, the throne of Virtue is joined by 'the Globe of Honour', a contraption that must have called for much expense and ingenuity, for it flies open into eight parts revealing eight personifications of moral qualities such as Clear Conscience and Peace of Heart, and four 'cardinal virtues, Wisdom, Justice, Fortitude, and Temperance' who display the arms of the City of London, the Grocers, the Mayor, and the 'Noble East India Company' (232-63). The Globe itself includes 'that prosperous plantation in the Colony Of Virginia and the Bermudas, with all good wishes to the Governors, Traders, and Adventurers unto those Christianly reformed islands' (266-9). The Pageant, then, develops from a specific representation of British trade, via the genealogy of worthy merchants (some of whom had colonial connections) to an image of global victory for English trade. Beginning with a moral victory over the interiority of the colonized woman, it moves to a very physical image of victory, with Honour mounted over the globe.

The mayoral pageants are testimonies to the almost oligarchic power of the livery companies, and hymns to the new god of mercantilism. And yet the new religion was still far from secure: James had renewed the charter of the East India Company in 1607, but was drawn into making huge concessions to the Dutch, who, along with the Portuguese, were still creating difficulties for English trade in India. The Company of Grocers had their own problems: James sought to take away certain privileges from them in favour of the Apothecaries. He did so in a language that still disdained the ascendant commercial spirit, calling the Grocers 'but Merchants' who are lacking 'the mystery' of the Apothecaries, and accusing them of bringing 'home rotten wares from the Indies, Persia and Greece' and of thinking that 'no man must control them' (Rees). Some of the triumphs of The Triumphs of Honour and Virtue, then, were real, some merely wishful thinking, and some yet to come. In putting on a show for Sir Peter Proby, Middleton created a fantasy that enacts the possibilities of contemporary colonial trading practices, and thereby mobilizes the national pride and commercial optimism necessary for such ventures.

Vecellio's 'Donna Indiana Orientale Di Conditione'.

SEE ALSO

Textual introduction and apparatus: Companion, 676

Authorship and date: Companion, 427

General introduction to the civic entertainments: this volume, 963

Other Middleton-Christmas works: Antiquity, 1397; Aries, 1586; Integrity, 1766; Prosperity, 1901; lost pageant for Charles I, 1898

The Triumphs of Honour and Virtue

A noble solemnity, performed through the City, at the sole cost and charges of the Honourable Fraternity of Grocers, at the confirmation and establishment of their most worthy brother, the Right Honourable Peter Proby, in the high office of His Majesty's lieutenant, Lord Mayor and chancellor of the famous City of London.

Taking beginning at his lordship's going and perfecting itself after his return from receiving the oath of mayoralty at Westminster, on the morrow after Simon and Jude's Day, being the 29 of October 1622.

To the honour of him, to whom the noble Fraternity of Grocers, his worthy brothers, have dedicated their loves in costly triumphs, the Right Honourable Peter Proby,

Lord Mayor of this renowned city

To be his servant that hath served
Two royal princes and deserved
So worthily of both; the same
Call not service, rather fame.

At your lordship's command:
Tho. Middleton.

The Triumphs of Honour and Virtue

If foreign nations have been struck with admiration at the form, state, and splendour of some yearly triumphs, wherein art hath been but faintly imitated, there is fair hope that things where invention flourishes, clear art and her graceful proprieties, should receive favour and encouragement from the content of the spectator, which, next to the service of his Honour and honourable society, is the principal reward it looks for; then, not despairing of that common favour, this takes delight to present itself.

And first, to begin with the worthy love of his noble fraternity, after his Honour's return from Westminster, having received some service upon the water, by the conduct of two artful triumphs, viz., the Throne of Virtue and the Continent of India, which also by land attends his lordship's most wished arrival, accompanied with the whole body of the triumph, which, near upon the time of his Honour's approach, are decently and distinctly placed; the first, bearing the title of the Continent of India, a triumph replenished with all manner of spice-plants and trees bearing odour, attends his Honour's arrival in Paul's Churchyard: a black personage representing India, called, for her odours and riches, the Queen of Merchandise, challenging the most eminent seat, advanceth herself upon a bed of spices, attended by Indians in antique habits: Commerce, Adventure and Traffic, three habited like merchants, presenting to her view a bright figure, bearing the inscription of Knowledge, a sun appearing above the trees in brightest splendour and glory. The black Queen before mentioned lending a voice to these following words. 50

THE SPEECH OF THE BLACK QUEEN

You that have eyes of judgement and discern Things that the best of man and life concern, Draw near: this black is but my native dye, But view me with an intellectual eye, 55 As wise men shoot their beams forth, you'll then find A change in the complexion of the mind: I'm beauteous in my blackness. O ye sons Of fame and honour, through my best part runs A spring of living waters, clear and true, Found first by knowledge, which came first by you, By you, and your examples, blessed commerce, That by exchange settles such happiness. Of gums and fragrant spices I confess, My climate heaven does with abundance bless, 60 And those you have from me; but what are they Compared with odours whose scent ne'er decay? And those I have from you, plants of your youth, The savour of eternal life, sweet truth, Exceeding all the odoriferous scent, 70 That from the beds of spices ever went: I that command (being prosp'rously possessed) The riches and the sweetness of the east, To that famed mountain Taurus spreading forth My balmy arm, whose height does kiss the north, 75 And in the Sea Enos lave this hand, Account my blessings not in those to stand, Though they be large and fruitful, but confess All wealth consists in Christian holiness. To such celestial knowledge I was led, 80 By English merchants first enlighten'd In honour of whose memory only three I instance here, all of this brotherhood free; To whose fames the great honour of this hour Aptly belongs, but to that man of power 85 The first and chiefest, to whose worth so clear, Justice hath given her sword up for a year: And as yon sun his perfect splendour shows, Cheering the plants, and no clouds interpose His radiant comforts, so no earthy part, 90 Which makes eclipses in a ruler's heart, (As in that glorious planet) must come nigh The sun of justice: all such mists must fly.

4 Peter Proby (1565-1625), born in Chester; Sheriff 1614-15; served also as Member of Parliament

16 Two royal princes Elizabeth and James 41-2 Paul's Churchyard area at the east end of St Paul's Cathedral

45 antique ancient, possibly old-fashioned

70 odoriferous fragrant

74 Taurus mountain chain in southern Turkey

76 Sea Enos an apparent reference to the Gulf of Enos, an inlet of the Aegean Sea, in Turkey
lave wash

The Triumphs of Honor and Vertue.

- 95 *You're in an orb of brightness placed and fixed,
And with no soil must honour be commixed:
So to your worthy progress zeal commends
Your lordship, with your grave and noble friends.*
- The speech being ended, to add a little more help to the fainter apprehensions, the three merchants placed in the Continent have reference to the lord mayor and sheriffs, all three being this year brothers of this ancient and honourable society, which triple or threefold honour happened to this worthy company in the year 1577, Sir Thomas Ramsay being then lord mayor, and Master 100 Nicholas Backhouse and Master Francis Bowyer, sheriffs; having coherence with this year's honour, matched and paralleled with these three their as worthy successors: the Right Honourable Peter Proby, and the generous and nobly affected Master John Hodges, and Sir Humphrey 110 Handford, sheriffs and aldermen.
- By this time his lordship being gracefully conducted toward the Chariot of Fame, which awaits his Honour's approach near the Little Conduit in Cheap, Antiquity, a grave and reverend personage with a golden register-book in his hand, gives life to these words.
- 115 THE SPEECH OF ANTIQUITY
- Objects of years and reverence greet mine eye,
A sight most pleasing to Antiquity.
I never could unclasp this book of fame
Where worthies dwell by a distinguished name,
At a more comely season I shall tell
Things sprung from truth, near kin to miracle.
With that of later days I first begin,
So back into the deeper times again:
I only touch thy memory (which I know
In thankfulness can never be found slow)
With Heaven's miraculous mercy to thy health
After so long a sickness: all the wealth
Which thou with an unmeasuring hand hast got,
Which is not the least wonder-worthy note,
130 (Truth makes me speak things freely) cannot be
A greater work than thy recovery.
Nine brethren-senators, thy seniors all,
Whose times had been before thee, Death did call
To their eternal peace from this degree,
135 Leaving their earthly honour now to thee;
Think and be thankful still, this seems the more.
Another observation kept in store,
For seventeen senators since thy time were chose,
And to this minute not one dead of those.
140 Those are not usual notes; nor here it ends,
The court and city, two most noble friends,*
- 109 John Hodges Grocer, Alderman of Cordwainer Street; died 1629
- 109-10 Humphrey Handford (1565-1625), Grocer, Alderman of Castle Baynard
- 113 Little Conduit water source located in Cheapside, frequently used as a place of dramatic representation in the mayoral pageants
- 147 Solomon's wise Biblical king of Israel
- 157 God grant grace motto of the Grocers
- 169-70 Andrew Bockerell mayor for seven years, 1231-37
- 172-3 Allen de la Zouch mayor, 1267-68
- 176 Thomas Knowles mayor 1399 and 1410, began to build the Guildhall
- 181 St Anthony's Church St Anthony, patron saint of the Grocers; church located in Cordwainer Street ward
- 182-4 William Sevenock . . . Laxton William Sevenock, mayor 1418; Robert Chichley, mayor 1411 and 1421; Stephen Browne, mayor 1438; Henry Keble, mayor 1510; William Laxton, mayor 1544
- 145 *Have made exchange o'late: I read from hence,
There has gone some most worthy citizens
Up to the court's advance; in lieu of that,
You have a courtier now your magistrate,
A servant to Elizabeth the blest,
Since to King James that reigns with Solomon's breast;
Kept the records for both; from the Queen took Charge of three hundred horse, three thousand foot.
Four attributes cleaves to this man of men,
150 A scholar, soldier, courtier, citizen:
These are no usual touches, to conclude
(Like to his life with blessings so endured)
He's chose his brotherhood, men of that fame
For bounty, amity, and honoured name,
155 The city bounds transcend not in their place,
And their word makes 'em prosper, God grant grace.
Honour they never wanted: when was't seen,
But they had senators to their brethren?
Nay, one record here to make joy more glad,
160 I find seventeen that were in scarlet clad,
All at one time of this fraternity;
Now five, for this hour's honour brings forth three,
Fame triple will make triple virtue strive
At whose triumphant throne you next arrive.* 165
- For farther illustration, there are contained in Antiquity's golden legend the names of many worthies of ancient time, by whom this noble fraternity has received much honour; such as were the worthy and famous Sir Andrew Bockerell, who was lord mayor of this city the sixteenth 170 year of King Henry the Third, and continued in the magistracy seven years together; also the noble Allen de la Zouch, who for his good government in the time of his mayoralty, was by King Henry the Third created both a Baron of this realm, and Lord Chief Justice of 175 England. Also that famous worthy, Sir Thomas Knowles, twice lord mayor of this honourable city, which said Sir Thomas began at his own charge that famous building of Guildhall in London, and other memorable works both in the city and in his own company, re-edifying also 180 St Anthony's Church, with many others that are fair ornaments to memory, viz., Sir William Sevenock, Sir Robert Chichsley, Sir Stephen Browne, Sir Henry Keble, Sir William Laxton, etc. Who by those virtues that they were most addicted unto in their lifetime, are illustrated by persons of brightness in the Throne of Virtue, the next 185 part of triumph that presents itself. Next beneath Antiquity sits Authority, placed between Wisdom and Innocence, holding a naked sword, a serpent wound about the blade thereof, two doves standing upon the crossbar of the hilt, 190

The Triumphs of Honor and Vertue.

and two hands meeting at the pummel, intimating Mercy and Justice; accompanied with Magistracy, who holds in his hand a key of gold, signifying both the key of Knowledge and of Confidence, the city magistrate taking 195 into his trust the custody of the King's chamber, the proper title of the City; and which key of gold also stands in his lordship's crest, viz., an ostrich holding a key of gold in his mouth, his neck circled with a golden crown.

200 His lordship, by this time arriving at the Throne of Virtue, placed near St Lawrence Lane end, receives this greeting from her deity.

THE SPEECH OF VIRTUE

*I see great power approach, here makes a stand;
Would it with Virtue ought? for some command
Seems so complete in self-opinion's eye, 205 It will scarce look on me, but passes by;
As if the essence of my deity
Were raised by power, and not power raised by me:
But let such rulers know that so command,
They build the empire of their hopes on sand.
210 Still this remains, with eye upon me fixed
As if he sought to have his splendours mixed
With these of mine, which makes authority meek,
And I'm so sick of love to those that seek
I cannot choose but yield; nor does it wrong
215 Great power to come to Virtue to be strong,
Being but a woman, merciful and mild:
Therein is Heaven with greater glory stiled
That makes weak things, as clemency and right,
Sway power, which would else rule all by might.
220 It may be said you but late pass by
Some part of triumph that spake virtuously,
And one such speech suffices: 'tis not so
In taking of your office; there you go
From court to court before you be confirmed 225 In this high place, which praetorship is termed.
From Virtue, if to Virtue you resort,
It is but the same course you have in court
In settling of your honour, which should be Redoubled rather; that I hope to see:
230 So power and virtue, when they fill one seat,
The city's blessed, the magistrate complete.*

At the close of the speech, this Throne of Virtue with all her celestial concomitants and the other parts of the triumph take leave of his lordship for that time, and till 235 after the feast at Guildhall rests from service; but the feast ended, the whole state of the triumph attends upon his lordship, both to St Paul's and homeward. And in Soper Lane two parts of the triumph stand ready planted; viz., the Throne of Virtue and the Globe of Honour, which 240 Globe, suddenly opening and flying into eight cants or distinct parts, discovers in a twinkling eight bright personages most gloriously decked, representing (as it were) the inward man, the intentions of a virtuous and worthy breast by the graces of the mind and soul, such as Clear 245 Conscience, Divine Speculation, Peace of Heart, Integrity, Watchfulness, Equality, Providence, Impartiality, each expressed by its proper illustration. And because man's perfection can receive no constant attribute in this life, the cloud of frailty, ever and anon shadowing and darkening our brightest intentions, makes good the morality

250 of those cants, or parts, when they fall and close into the full round of a globe again, showing, that as the brightest day has his overcastings, so the best men in this life have their imperfections; and worldly mists oftentimes interpose the clearest cogitations, and yet that but for 255 a season, turning in the end, like the mounting of this engine, to their everlasting brightness, converting itself to a canopy of stars. At the four corners below are placed the four cardinal virtues, Wisdom, Justice, Fortitude, and Temperance, by each of them fixed a little streamer or 260 banner in which are displayed the arms of this honourable city, the Lord Mayor's, the Grocers', and the noble East India Company's. The outparts of the Globe, showing the world's type in countries, seas and shipping, whereon is depicted or drawn ships that have been fortunate to 265 this kingdom by their happy and successful voyages; as also that prosperous plantation in the colony of Virginia and the Bermudas, with all good wishes to the governors, traders, and adventurers unto those Christianly reformed islands.
270

The speech at night presented by Honour, a personage mounted on the top of this unparalleled masterpiece of invention and art, the Globe or Orb of Honour.

HONOUR

*By Virtue you came last, and who brings home
True Honour must by Virtue always come;
275 The right path you have took then, still proceed,
For 'tis continuance crowns each worthy deed.
Behold this Globe of Honour; every part
It is composed of, to a noble heart
Applies instruction. When 'tis closed and round, 280 It represents the world, and all that's found Within the labouring circle of man's days,
Adventures, dangers, cares, and steepy ways;
Which when a wiseman thinks on, straight he mounts
To heavenly cogitations and accounts
285 The vexing spirit of care and labour vain,
Lifting himself to his full height again.
And as this engine does in eight parts rise
Discovering eight bright figures, so the wise,*

200 St Lawrence Lane street in Cheapside providing access to the Guildhall
225 praetorship chief magistrate, mayor
237-8 Soper Lane named for the soap-makers who lived there; street now called Queen Street 268 Bermudas Sir George Somers helped establish the settlement in Bermuda, which he discovered in 1609 on his way to Virginia.

The Triumphs of Honor and Vertue.

290	From this life's slumber roused (which time deludes) Opens his heart to eight beatitudes: And as I, Honour, overtopping all, Here fix my foot on this orbicular ball, Over the world expressing my command;	Which happy thou stand'st free from, the more white Sits Honour on thee, and the cost more bright Thy noble brotherhood this day bestows: Expense is graced when substance follows shows. Now to no higher pitch of praise I'll come; Love brought thee forth, and Honour brings thee home.	300
295	As I in this contemptuous posture stand, So every good and understanding spirit Makes but use only of this life t'inherit An everlasting living; making friends Of Mammon's heaps got by unrighteous ends;	For the body of the whole triumph, with all the proper graces and ornaments of art and workmanship, the repu- tation of those rightly appertain to the deserts of Master Garret Christmas, an exquisite master in his art and a performer above his promises.	305
			310

FINIS

291 eight beatitudes from the New Testament Sermon on the Mount in St
Matthew's gospel, chapter 5
293 orbicular round as a circle

295 contemptuous posture defiant, disdain-ful
299 Mammon's god of wealth, money

309 Garret Christmas artificer who now regularly assists Middleton in the Lord
Mayor's Shows

THE SPANISH GYPSY

Text edited and annotated by Gary Taylor, introduced by Suzanne Gossett

The Spanish Gypsy is a play of rape transcended and revenge averted—and a play complexly intertwined with Anglo-Spanish relations in the fraught year of 1623. Based upon two classics of Spanish Golden Age literature, its immediate theatrical success was envied by contemporaries; it was revived at the Restoration, and became the only Middleton play produced in the nineteenth century (Steen).

Unfortunately, for much of the twentieth century critical discussion of the play was dominated by disputes about authorship. Gypsy was first published in 1653 as the work of Middleton and Rowley, but in 1924 H. Dugdale Sykes argued that the play was ‘substantially, if not wholly, from the pen of John Ford’ (183). This edition accepts the conclusion reached by Taylor, that the play was co-written by four authors. Ford was probably responsible for the rape plot (1.3, 1.5.1–73, 2.2.1–118, 3.2.242–300, 3.3, 5.1.1–126, 5.3.1–95). Thomas Dekker is most evident in 2.1, 2.2.119–75, 3.1, the songs in 3.2 (82–113, 197–217), and 4.1.1–148. Rowley seems to have written 4.3, and may also be responsible for parts of Soto’s role. Middleton’s hand has been most confidently identified in 1.5.73–127, 3.2.114–94, 4.1.149–210, and 4.2, but he may be responsible for other elements of the Don Juan/Preciosa plot (1.4, 2.1.104–13). As this summary makes clear, Dekker and Ford apparently did more of the writing than Middleton or Rowley. But Middleton is the most likely candidate for composing the ‘plot’ or scenario for the play, linking its four narratives into a polyphonic whole, and then assigning scenes and subscenes to the playwright best suited to each. The details of the attribution are discussed in the Companion; this introduction will instead attempt to imagine what Gypsy meant to its authors and audiences in 1623.

Structure and Interpretation

The play is built on four plots, derived from different sources but intricately interconnected. Each centres on a young man who becomes temporarily involved with the newly-arrived Gypsies and is ultimately reunited with a father. Although these plots vary in density and importance—Levin identifies the action of the foolish gentleman Sancho and his man Soto as a typical ‘clown subplot’ (110)—they are united by parallels between four prodigal sons (Burlebach 38) and between three young women whose gendered role in marriage arrangements varies from powerlessness to abuse of power. Reading the play as a moral structure the Kistners find a repeated pattern of sin, repentance, and rebirth; tracing tragicomic form reveals that each young man is brought to a moment of maximum danger or terror before being released to happiness.

Cervantes’s novella La Fuerza de la Sangre inspired the rape plot which dominates the first scenes. The play’s opening is startling and effective. Roderigo and his friends Luis and Diego encounter Clara and her parents on a dark street. Despite protestations that they will only do what is ‘fit for gentlemen’, the friends accept Roderigo’s assurance that ‘for a wench, man, any course is honourable’ and restrain the parents while Roderigo abducts Clara (1.1.10, 32). These hot-blooded aristocrats are a pack of hoodlums. The rape’s only motivation is sexual infatuation, and for the first time in all the rape plots of the Elizabethan stage, neither party knows the other’s identity.

Gypsy is the last of three Jacobean plays—the others are The Queen of Corinth and Women, Beware Women—in which the heroine, in a striking rejection of the Lucrece and Philomel models that had previously determined the course and aftermath of rape on the English stage, survives and marries the rapist (Gossett, ‘Best Men’). It is also the first to put the action into a Christian context. Oddly enough, this play, in which rape actually takes place, is less prurient than Fletcher and Rowley’s Maid in the Mill, where violation is repeatedly threatened, or The Queen of Corinth, where two rapes are elaborately prepared. By the time the moon rises on Clara in the third scene of Gypsy, the unseen act has been accomplished: the remainder of the play concentrates on consequences. The crucifix that Clara steals in this scene, ultimately leading to Roderigo’s identification, is symbolic of the faith that sustains her in her trial. Though she at first asks Roderigo to kill her, and later marvels that she survives (3.3.55–7), she does not contemplate suicide. Her parents’ belief in a providential solution is fulfilled when Clara is accidentally brought back to Roderigo’s house. Belief in heaven-dealt justice is also present in Roderigo’s father, who learns of the rape, arranges for Roderigo to marry Clara without recognizing her, and then tricks him into confessing by telling him that his new wife is wanton, certainly the punishment for some sin of his: ‘Impossible that justice should rain down | In such a frightful horror without cause’ (5.1.20–1).

One reason Clara does not kill herself is that (unlike the heroines of other rape plays) she is genuinely unsure that she is stained. St Augustine had argued that if Lucrece’s will did not consent, she remained chaste and ought not to have killed herself, and Clara, despite moments of doubt (2.2.1–4), seems assured that her tears have

'washed off the leprosy' (1.3.62-3). The authors prepare the audience to accept the final marriage by emphasizing, instead of the pollution and dishonour of the heroine, the moral development of the rapist. Roderigo begins as lustful and heedless, unaware that the girl he proposes to abduct is his friend Luis's beloved. Furthermore, the son of 'the great corregidor' (2.2.53) has no need to ravish—the word comprehends both abduction and sexual violation—a young woman to gain control of her or her property. Indeed, after the rape Roderigo tries to deny the nature of the transaction by offering Clara money. But innovations begin when Roderigo experiences guilt and repentance before discovery. Clara's cry that her blood is infected 'by your soul-staining lust' (1.3.10) suggests that his soul is as stained as hers, and the third act opens with a soliloquy in which Roderigo berates himself in religious terms—'what vile prisons | Make we our bodies to our immortal souls!' (3.1.1-2). When informed of the rape, his father considers his 'till-now-untainted blood and honour' (3.3.87) corrupted not by a woman's dishonour but by a man's sin. Roderigo's weakest moment comes when he ignores his feelings of guilt and marries the unrecognized Clara, but when Fernando extracts his confession and tells him 'young man, thou shouldst have married her', he agrees (5.1.34). The final marriage becomes the desire of both parties.

The tragicomic ending dismays modern audiences because it requires Clara to accept her victimization and become 'the happiest woman, being married' (5.1.39) to the man she begged to be a 'gentle ravisher, | An honourable villain' (1.3.7-8). Like her predecessor Bianca of Women, Beware Women, she displays 'the classic pattern of the victim succumbing to and embracing the inevitability of redefined power relations' (Dawson 312). For an early modern English audience the ending required ignoring English law, according to which the abduction of an heiress was a felony, even if she consented afterwards and married the man. It also required a major change from the Cervantes source. In La Fuerza seven years go by, during which the heedless hero travels and the rape victim raises the child of that encounter. The mother only discovers the identity of her violator when, following an accident, she finds her son in the chamber where he was conceived. Modifying the plot avoids an awkward time gap for the drama, but there was a more profound ideological reason. On the basis of Galenic medical theory—embodied in such gynecological texts as Aristotle's Masterpiece and repeated in convenient legal summaries like Michael Dalton's The Country Justice (1618)—it was widely believed that a woman who was raped could not conceive. Conversely, 'If at the time of rape supposed, the woman conceive child, there is no rape, for none can conceive without consent' (The Lawes Resolutions of Womens Rights, 396). Transposition from the Spanish Catholic setting to the mental world of Jacobean London thus necessitated that Clara demonstrate her full innocence by not becoming pregnant.

The rape plot is complexly connected to the other three. Three young men—Roderigo, Don Juan, and Sancho—flee father figures in a pattern that can be read generically as a prodigal son tale and psychoanalytically as exposing unresolved Oedipal feelings. Determined to resist his father's power, Roderigo assures himself that Fernando is 'not the king of Spain' (4.2.102); Sancho tells his guardian Don Pedro (Clara's father) to be hanged; to join the Gypsies Don Juan loses 'father, friends, | Birth, fortunes' (4.1.18-19). Father-son hostility is foregrounded in the playlet that Fernando requests of the disguised Roderigo. The play-father complains that 'he that should prop me is mine overthrow' and Roderigo, playing the 'rake-hell' prodigal, questions his father's paternity and orders his man to 'carbonado thou the old rogue my father' (4.3.35, 68-9).

Unlike many comedies Gypsy sides with the fathers. None of the plots can resolve until the sons have returned to their proper positions. Indeed, several of the most effective dramatic moments occur in confrontations between Roderigo and the Corregidor, who asserts that 'Fathers have eagles' eyes' (4.3.190) and manoeuvres Roderigo into marriage and confession. Outwitted and overwhelmed, Roderigo finally assures his 'Fathers both' (5.1.56) that he will redeem himself. Similarly, Don Juan and Preciosa depend on identification with and of their fathers for their union. Don Juan escapes punishment for his attack on Diego because of his caste (in Cervantes the equivalent figure is pardoned for murder). In a parody of such logic, when the Gypsies are threatened with imprisonment the terrified Sancho and Soto creep back to Don Pedro for protection.

The scenes involving the play's fourth young man—Luis de Castro (Roderigo's friend and Clara's suitor)—are also constructed around conflicting filial emotions. Luis burns with desire to revenge the death of his father; by the end of the play, Luis instead attains peace by accepting a substitute. Thus the central figures in the two potentially tragic plots both extract what Clara required: 'A noble satisfaction, though not revenge' (3.3.96).

Sources and Contexts

The intertwined histories of Luis and Don Juan indicate how Gypsy was constructed from a combination of sources and familiar romantic and dramatic tropes. The names Luis de Castro and Roderigo the authors found in Mateo Aleman's popular picaresque novel Guzman de Alfarache, translated in 1622 by James Mabbe (Part II, Book I, Chapter 4). But the play borrows only the names, and Luis's disappointment in love. Shanti Padhi demonstrates that Aleman is also the source for many of the Gypsy Father's proverbs (cxcix-cxxx). The heart of the Juan/Preciosa/Cardochia plot comes from another of Cervantes's Novellas Exemplars, La Gitanilla.

The play's Gypsies have a complicated ancestry. Middleton had put Gypsies on the stage in More Dissemblers Besides Women. But the vogue for Gypsies exploded after Ben Jonson's wildly successful masque The Gypsies Metamorphosed, produced three times in three separate venues for the King in August and September of 1621. This masque stimulated not only The Spanish Gypsy in 1623, but the relicensing of More Dissemblers in 1623 and its production at court in January 1624, as well as the 1622 court production of Fletcher and Massinger's Beggars' Bush, where the scenes of the beggars' tricks parallel Jonson's masque. The Spanish Gypsy takes from Gypsies Metamorphosed the premise that all the Gypsies—rather than, as in Cervantes, merely a few noble runaways—are aristocrats in disguise. An explicit structural imitation occurs in 3.2, when the Gypsies come to the home of the noble Francisco, sing, dance, and tell the company's fortunes. Similarly pointed fortune telling at Burley and Windsor had especially pleased King James and could give the private theatre audience a sense of inclusion.

Gypsy is densely imbricated in the drama of its period. These interconnections, emerging from the collective memory of four experienced playwrights, tie the play not only to others on rape but to such dramatic topoi as feuding, honour, and duels; stolen children; and hidden nobility (see Gossett, 'Resistant'). For example, the quarrel between Luis's father and Alvarez, which sprung 'From a mere trifle first, a cast of hawks, | Whose made the swifter flight, whose could mount highest' (2.2.78–9), is modelled on the sub-plot of Thomas Heywood's A Woman Killed With Kindness, while Luis's obsession with honour and his confrontation with Alvarez are related to Middleton and Rowley's scenes between Captain Ager and the Colonel in A Fair Quarrel.

Gypsy was presumably composed in the spring and early summer of 1623, immediately before it was licensed on 9 July. It was probably performed later that summer by the Lady Elizabeth's Men at the Phoenix, and was certainly performed at Whitehall on 5 November, 'the prince being there only'—that is, for Prince Charles and his guests, without the King (Bentley, IV, 893). But the play's significance changed as the year progressed, because in this period attitudes towards Spain divided the country and evolved rapidly.

King James dearly desired to marry his remaining son, Charles, to the Spanish Infanta, thereby balancing the Protestant alliance of his daughter Elizabeth (wife of Frederick the Elector Palatine, deposed King of Bohemia). However, negotiations progressed slowly. Frustrated by the delay, on 17 February 1623 Charles and Buckingham left, in disguise, for Spain. The king was frightened for their safety, and large sections of the anti-Spanish, anti-Catholic English populace were displeased by the absence of the heir and by the open toleration of Catholics (Cogswell, 41). Once in Madrid the twenty-two-year-old Charles, having persuaded himself he was in love, was annoyed by the protocol that kept him from the Infanta; in June he leapt the wall of the Casa del Campo, where the Infanta was taking the air, and 'advanced towards his lady-love, who responded by running in the opposite direction, shrieking for her virtue' (Carlton, 43). By July

Charles and Buckingham had doubts about the Spanish demands; when Charles departed on 30 August he left a proxy for the marriage, but gave the ambassador orders not to deliver it. In early November, with James very ill, Charles and Buckingham met with the Spanish ambassadors and demanded a commitment to restore the Palatinate. Though James tried to reconcile the men with a masque on 16 November, his purpose was thwarted, as the Spanish were 'represented by actions worthy of laughter' (Cogswell, 86, citing Tillières, 16 November 1623.) In general, November 1623 'was one of the most uncomfortable periods in Charles's life' (Cogswell, 109), climaxed only a week after the performance of Gypsy by the dispatch of four different messengers to Spain to ensure that no proxy wedding take place. By the end of 1623 Buckingham and Charles were opening marriage negotiations with France and preparing for war with Spain. The masque intended for Twelfth Night 1624, Neptune's Triumph for the Return of Albion (in which Jonson reversed the position he had taken in The Gypsies Metamorphosed and celebrated Charles's escape from the 'sirens'), was cancelled, ostensibly because of a dispute over precedence between the French and Spanish ambassadors but no doubt because of dissension in the court about the marriage.

The Spanish Gypsy, while not a systematic allegory, seems calculated to keep Anglo-Spanish politics present in the minds of audiences while the outcome of the match remained uncertain and largely feared. Details of Cervantes are rewritten to create flashes of specific reference: the play's action is now confined to Madrid (mentioned ten times), and the horseman whose accident frightens Clara becomes 'the jester that so late arrived in court' (3.2.246), that is, King James's fool Archy, who had a similar accident in the Prince's entourage (see Taylor, 2008). The Catholicism of the setting is emphasized: Clara steals the crucifix, Diego and Louis agree to meet at the Inquisition chapel (1.4). Three young men flee secretly from their fathers to the Gypsies, like Prince Charles and Buckingham galloping off to Spain, but only one, John, is ultimately successful, and even he suffers a frightening imprisonment that recalls Spain's enforced retention of Charles. In what may be wishful thinking, John's prize, Pretiosa, proves to be not 'really' a Gypsy and consequently John does not really 'convert'. But Sancho and his sidekick Soto are satirized as wasteful fools, while the son of the Corregidor, a marriageable young aristocrat like Prince Charles, carries out an impetuous and brutal rape. With appropriate stage action the impressive Corregidor chiding his hot-headed son could suggest James objecting to Charles's voyage. Furthermore, repeated criticism of English Gypsies resonates oddly with The Gypsies Metamorphosed where, as everyone knew, these had turned out to be the country's chief courtiers.

All four authors shadow contemporary events. Ford probably writes the passage referring to Archy, Rowley and Dekker satirize Sancho and Soto, Middleton controls the Don John plot. Julia Gasper argues that Dekker's Match Me in London, another play with an attempted rape, relicensed in August 1623 for the Lady Elizabeth's Men, was an attack on the Spanish match by the militantly protestant Dekker (166–189). By the summer of 1624, Middleton was openly inviting anti-Spanish allegorical readings in A Game at Chess; apparently Dekker was doing so before the Prince and Buckingham returned from Spain. Several of the plays with which the Prince distracted himself once he did return—The Maid in the Mill, which he saw on November 1 and again with the King on December 26, The Spanish Gypsy, on November 5, and The Changeling, on January 4—had Spanish sources and settings. The Changeling depicts Spain as corrupt politically and sexually, and Bromham and Bruzzi suggest that the Prince requested the January 1624 performance to make an anti-Spanish foreign policy statement (5). The Spanish Gypsy is protected by its romantic form from such close political reading, but its hostility towards a culture that tolerates rape, duels, blackmail, and discussion of trust in 'the word royal' (3.2.26–32) could easily be inferred, by Prince and public alike.

Theatre, Music, and Appropriations

According to the title-page Gypsy was acted 'with great applause' at 'the Privat House in Drury-Lane, and at Salisbury Court'. The private (play)house was the Phoenix (also called the Cockpit). The Lady Elizabeth's Men had been brought there by Christopher Beeston in 1622. Their predilection for plays with a 'gentlemanly concern for questions of honour and love' soon made the theatre a rival of the Blackfriars (Gurr, 407). The theatre itself, designed by Inigo Jones after a visit to Italy, was appealingly modern, a compromise between 'designs based on Vitruvius and Palladio and the usual style of a Jacobean theatre', with an elegant stage façade (Foakes, 66). The play's popularity at the Phoenix is attested to in the backhanded compliment of W. B. (William Bagnall?). His commendatory verses to Massinger's The Bondman (produced in the same theatre by the same company in the same season) sneer at 'Gypsy jigs... drumming stuff... dances [and] other trumpery to delight' (Steen). At court the play may have been produced in the Cockpit-at-court or the Great Hall, perhaps metatheatrically suggested by the 'great chamber' (4.2.28) in which the play-within-the-play is given (Padhi, clxxvii).

Performances at Salisbury Court must have occurred after November 1630, when that theatre opened (Bentley, VI, 87). Gypsy was one of the plays protected for Christopher Beeston and his new boys' company in 1639. Apparently Beeston owned the play, and 'none of the companies who performed at the Cockpit ever took their plays away with them when they left his playhouse' (Gurr, 425). Bentley concludes that performance at the Salisbury Court must have been by Queen Henrietta's men, for no other company occupied both houses (I, 255), but the Queen Henrietta's at Salisbury Court was the remnants of the earlier company, forced out of the Cockpit by Beeston in the plague closing of 1636–7.

Shortly after the Restoration the play was again revived. Reading it, Pepys thought it 'not very good, though commended much' (16 June 1661). On 7 March 1668, 'the second time of acting, and the first that I saw it', he liked it no better than he had A Midsummer Night's Dream, finding Gypsy 'a very silly play' somewhat redeemed by its performance elements: 'only, great variety of dances, and those most excellently done' (Steen). Yet he had judged Brome's 1641 The Jovial Crew—a reworking of many elements of Gypsy—also revived in 1661, 'full of mirth' (Bentley, III, 71). Later, Francis Manning's All for the Better or, the Infallible Cure was based on Gypsy, along with a reconsultation of Cervantes (Hogg).

One of the most remarkable aspects of the play is its music. The quarto marks five songs but there may have been seven. Although it was unusual for gentry to sing on stage (Austern, 153), Sancho sings four songs and also 'set[s] out a throat' for 'O that I were a bee to sing' (2.1.176–93). The other identified singer is the Gypsy leader, who sings a verse of Sancho's 'Now that from the hive' (3.2.205–16) and would be appropriate for at least the first stanza of the unassigned 'Come, follow your leader, follow' (3.2.82–4). Sections of Don Juan's initiation into the Gypsies and his betrothal to Preciosa (4.1) may also have been sung.

Apparently the music was partly borrowed, partly original. Some of the wordless dances may have copied music and choreography from Jonson's Gypsies Metamorphosed, and 'Trip it, Gypsies, trip it fine' was probably composed to fit the 'The Gypsies' Round' by William Byrd. Playford's The Dancing Master (1651) contains music and choreography for a dance called 'The Spanish Gypsy'; Chappell thought it derived from 'Come, follow your leader, follow' (3.2.82–113), but its directions, for four couples who 'turn back-to-back' but eventually unite, seem more appropriate to the final dance. In the Roxburghe Collection is a black letter ballad, called 'The brave English Jipsie. To the tune of The Spanish Jipsie', published by John Trundle (died 1626). This ballad patriotically reverses Alvarez's praise of Spanish Gypsies: 'Who ere hath been in Spaine, | And seene there Jipsies vaine, | Shall soone the difference find, | Else judgement makes him blind. | So, Spanish Jipsies all, adue! | For English equal are to you' (Chappell, Roxburghe, 333).

The songs and dances, concentrated in the middle acts, are a significant factor in creating the play's tragicomic form. The dark first act closes with Roderigo's comment that 'Pleasure and Youth like smiling evils woo us | To taste new follies' (1.5.126–7); the second opens on pleasure and youth without evil. Sancho's first song reduces rape to melodious double entendre: 'O that I were a bee to sing | Hum buz, buz, hum! I first would bring | Some honey to your hive, and there leave my sting' (2.1.178–80). The songs in 3.1 reiterate the Gypsies' scorn for cutting purses, celebrating a mad world that anticipates the final reversal where ‘Beggars would on cock-horse ride’ (3.1.127). The Gypsy ‘army’ sings and dances between Luis’s treacherous determination to take revenge, and the accident which returns Clara to the fatal bedroom.

The Spanish Gipsie.

Also controlling the tone is the play’s metatheatricality, which weakens the intense audience engagement of the opening scenes. Theatrical distancing occurs most obviously in the play-within-the-play, which Fernando asks the Gypsies to perform on ‘some slight plot’, like the Italian or French commedia (4.2.41). Preciosa has a nine-line aria beginning ‘How? not a changeling? | Yes, father, I will play the changeling. . . . None but myself shall play the changeling’ (2.1.105–13), clearly intended to alert the audience to another of the youthful actor’s roles, and the Gypsy Father foregrounds her cross-dressing: ‘A-many dons | Will not believe but that thou art a boy | In woman’s clothes’ (98–100). Roderigo ruefully acknowledges he has ‘writ . . . a tragedy’ (3.1.73–5). Nineteenth-century objections to the play (Steen) were based on a sense that the happy ending is both immoral and unprepared; such readings ignore the power of the music and distancing to mitigate the effect. Indeed, twice we hear that the Gypsies will bring a ‘merry tragedy’ (4.2.37, 39).

In the end the very character of The Spanish Gypsy, with its disturbing mixture of rape and Gypsies, duels and disguising, is a product of the mysterious alchemy of collaboration. The balance between Clara’s seriousness and Preciosa’s charm, between the sinfulness of Roderigo and Cardochia and the merely high-spirited waywardness of Don Juan and Sancho, between the romance of the lost child and the potential tragedy of violation and revenge, is a theatrical tour de force based on the various strengths of four professional playwrights—including, it seems clear, those to whom the play was first attributed, Middleton and Rowley.

SEE ALSO

Music and dance: Companion, 172 (‘The Gypsies’ Round’), 174 (‘The Spanish Gypsy’)
Textual introduction and apparatus: Companion, 1105
Authorship and date: Companion, 433
Other Middleton–Dekker works: Caesar’s Fall, 328; Gravesend, 128; Meeting, 183; Magnificent, 219; Patient Man, 280; Banquet, 637; Roaring Girl, 721
Other Middleton–Rowley works: Weapons, 980; Quarrel, 1209; Old Law, 1331; Tennis, 1405; Changeling, 1632

JOHN FORD, THOMAS DEKKER, THOMAS MIDDLETON, and WILLIAM ROWLEY

The Spanish Gypsy

[for Lady Elizabeth’s Men at The Phoenix]

DRAMATIS PERSONAE

DON FERNANDO de Azevedo, Corregidor of Madrid
RODERIGO, his young son
DON LUIS de Castro, Roderigo’s friend, suitor to Clara DIEGO, a friend of Luis PEDRO de Cortes, an old don
MARIA, his wife
CLARA, his daughter
SANCHO, his ward, a foolish gentleman
SOTO, Sancho’s man, a merry fellow
Count FRANCISCO de Carcamo, an old don

DON JUAN, his son, suitor to Preciosa
The old FATHER of the Gypsies
EUGENIA, the old Mother of the Gypsies
PRECIOSA, a young Spanish Gypsy girl CARLO
ANTONIO
CHRISTIANA } Gypsies
Juana CARDOCHIA, young hostess to the Gypsies
Servants

- I. I Incipit Actus Primus
Enter Roderigo, Luis, and Diego, [as at night]
- LUIS Roderigo!
 DIEGO [to Roderigo] Art mad?
 RODERIGO Yes!—not so much with wine: it's as rare to see a Spaniard a drunkard as a German sober, an Italian no 5 whoremonger, an Englishman to pay his debts. I am no boraccio: sack, malaga, nor canary breeds the calentura in my brains. Mine eye mads me, not my cups.
 LUIS What wouldst have us do?
 RODERIGO Do?
 10 DIEGO So far as 'tis fit for gentlemen we'll venture.
 RODERIGO I ask no more. I ha' seen a thing has bewitched me: a delicate body, but this [showing the size by a sign] in the waist, foot and leg tempting; the face I had scarce a glimpse of, but the fruit must needs be delicious, the 15 tree being so beautiful.
 LUIS Prithee, to the point.
 RODERIGO Here 'tis: an old gentleman (no matter who he is), an old gentlewoman (I ha' nothing to do with her)— but a young creature that follows them, daughter or 20 servant or whatsoever she be, her I must have. They are coming this way. Shall I have her? I must have her.
 DIEGO How, how?
 LUIS Thou speak'st impossibilities.
 RODERIGO Easy, easy, easy! I'll seize the young girl; stop 25 you the old man; stay you the old woman.
 LUIS How then?
 RODERIGO I'll fly off with the young bird, that's all. Many of our Spanish gallants act these merry parts every night.
 They are weak and old, we young and sprightly. Will 30 you assist me?
 LUIS Troth, Roderigo, anything in the way of honour.
 RODERIGO For a wench, man, any course is honourable.
 LUIS Nay, not any. Her father, if he be her father, may be noble.
 35 RODERIGO I am as noble.
 LUIS Would the adventure were so!
 RODERIGO Stand close, they come.
 [They stand aloof, cover their faces, and draw their swords.] Enter Pedro, Maria, and Clara [veiled]
 PEDRO 'Tis late. Would we were in Madrid!
 MARIA Go faster, my lord.
- PEDRO Clara, keep close. 40
 [Luis, Diego, and Roderigo] seize them
 CLARA Help, help, help!
 RODERIGO Are you crying out? I'll be your midwife.
Exit with Clara
- PEDRO What mean you, gentlemen?
 MARIA Villains! thieves! murderers!
 PEDRO Do you know me? I am De Cortes, Pedro de Cortes. 45
 LUIS De Cortes?—Diego, come away.
Exeunt [Luis and Diego]
- PEDRO
 Clara!—Where is my daughter?
 MARIA Clara!—These villains
 Have robbed us of our comfort and will, I fear,
 Her of her honour.
 PEDRO This had not wont
 To be our Spanish fashion; but now our gallants, 50
 Our gentry, our young dons, heated with wine
 (A fire our countrymen do seldom sit at),
 Commit these outrages.—Clara!—Maria,
 Let's homeward. I will raise Madrid to find
 These traitors to all goodness.—Clara!
 MARIA Clara! Exeunt 55
- Enter Luis and Diego [as at night]* I. 2
- LUIS
 O Diego, I am lost, I am mad!
 DIEGO So we are all.
 LUIS
 'Tis not with wine. I'm drunk with too much horror,
 Inflamed with rage, to see us two made bawds
 To Roderigo's lust. Did not the old man 5
 Name De Cortes, Pedro de Cortes?
 DIEGO Sure he did.
 LUIS
 O Diego! As thou lov'st me, nay, on the forfeit
 Of thine own life or mine, seal up thy lips:
 Let 'em not name De Cortes.—Stay, stay, stay:
 Roderigo has into his father's house 10
 A passage through a garden—
 DIEGO Yes, my lord.
 LUIS
 Thither I must find Roderigo out

I. I. 6 boraccio drunkard (literally, bag in which Spaniards keep wine) sack... canary sweet wines from Spain and its islands calentura sunstroke, delirium
 7 cups (as in 'beercan' or 'shot glass')
 9 Do (perhaps suggesting the sexual sense 'fuck') 11 thing lascivious plaything (suggesting the slang sense 'genitals')
 12 but this i.e. 'only this big', small 13-14 face... glimpse (because, like other respectable Spanish women, she was veiled. His not seeing or recognizing her face is crucial to the plot.)

 13 scarce scarcely, barely 14-15 fruit... tree proverbially, a tree is known by its fruit (Matthew 12:33)
 25 stay you you stop 27 bird (a) girl (b) prey. (Wild birds were trapped and eaten as a regular part of the early modern diet.)
 37 close (a) together (b) hidden, secretly 38 Madrid (Not the setting in Cervantes, but where Prince Charles stayed in 1623.)

 39 Go walk
 42 crying out calling for help (but also used of the cries of a woman in labour) be your midwife (a) minister to your distress (b) help you bring a child to birth, i.e. by impregnating you 43 mean you are your intentions
 49 had not wont did not use
 51 dons aristocrats
 54 raise alert, call out
 I. 2. 9 Stay wait

And check him, check him home; if be but dare—
 No more!—Diego, along! My soul does fight
 15 A thousand battles blacker than this night. Exeunt

I.3 [A bed.] Enter Roderigo and Clara [as at night]

CLARA
 Though the black veil of night hath overclouded
 The world in darkness, yet ere many hours
 The sun will rise again, and then this act
 Of my dishonour will appear before you
 5 More black than is the canopy that shrouds it.
 What are you? Pray, what are you?

RODERIGO Husht!—a friend, a friend.

CLARA
 A friend? Be then a gentle ravisher,
 An honourable villain: as you have 10 Disrobed my youth of nature's goodliest portion,
 My virgin purity, so with your sword
 Let out that blood which is infected now
 By your soul-staining lust.

RODERIGO Pish!

CLARA Are you noble?
 I know you then will marry me. Say!

RODERIGO Umh.

CLARA
 Not speak to me? Are wanton devils dumb?
 15 How are so many harmless virgins wrought
 By falsehood of prevailing words to yield
 Too easy forfeits of their shames and liberty,
 If every orator of folly plead
 In silence, like this untongued piece of violence?
 You shall not from me.
 [She holds him]

RODERIGO Phew!—no more.

CLARA You shall not.
 20 Whoe'er you are—disease of nature's sloth,
 Birth of some monstrous sin, or scourge of virtue, Heaven's wrath and mankind's burden—I will hold
 you.
 I will. Be rough, and therein merciful;
 I will not loose my hold else.

RODERIGO [offering money] There. 'Tis gold.

CLARA
 Gold? Why, alas, for what? The hire of pleasure
 Perhaps is payment; mine is misery.
 I need no wages for a ruined name
 More than a bleeding heart.

RODERIGO Nay, then, you're troublesome.
 [He shakes her off]
 I'll lock you safe enough.
Exit [locking the door behind him]

CLARA
 They cannot fear
 30 Whom grief hath armed with hate and scorn of life.
 Revenge, I kneel to thee!—Alas, 'gainst whom?
 By what name shall I pull confusion down
 From justice on his head that hath betrayed me?
 I know not where I am. Up, I beseech thee,
 35 Thou lady regent of the air, the moon,
 And lead me by thy light to some brave vengeance!
 It is a chamber, sure. The guilty bed
 (Sad evidence against my loss of honour)
 Assures so much. What's here, a window-curtain?
 40 [She opens the curtain]
 O heaven, the stars appear too! Ha, a chamber?
 A goodly one. Dwells rape in such a paradise?—
 Help me, my quickened senses! 'Tis a garden
 To which this window guides the covetous prospect,
 A large one and a fair one; in the midst
 45 A curious alabaster fountain stands,
 Framed like—like what? No matter. Swift, remembrance!
 Rich furniture within too—and what's this?
 A precious crucifix!
 [She takes the crucifix, and conceals it in her sleeve]
 I have enough.
 [She closes the curtain]
 Assist me, O you powers that guard the innocent!
 50 Enter Roderigo

RODERIGO Now—

CLARA Welcome, if you come armed in destruction:
 I am prepared to die.

RODERIGO Tell me your name
 And what you are.

CLARA You urge me to a sin
 As cruel as your lust; I dare not grant it.
 Think on the violence of my defame
 55 And, if you mean to write upon my grave
 An epitaph of peace, forbear to question
 Or whence or who I am. I know the heat
 Of your desires are (after the performance
 Of such a hellish act) by this time drowned
 60 In cooler streams of penance, and for my part

13 check obstruct, rebuke

home thoroughly

I.3.2 ere before

5 canopy (a) sky (b) covering over a bed shrouds covers (like the wrappings around a corpse)

6 friend (slang for 'illicit lover')

11 infected stained (according to a belief that rape polluted even an innocent victim)

14 dumb mute

15 wrought made

24 Be rough i.e. kill me

25 loose let go of 26 hire salary, recompense

28 name reputation

33 confusion destruction

36 regent ruler during absence of the monarch (the sun)

38 chamber bedroom, private room

43 quickened roused, sharpened (but also suggesting 'pregnant')

44 covetous prospect greedy eye

46 curious exquisitely wrought

49 precious 'made of solid silver' (Cervantes)

53 what what class or kind of person

55 defame defamation, ruined reputation

58 Or whence either from where

- I have washed off the leprosy that cleaves
To my just shame in true and honest tears.
I must not leave a mention of my wrongs,
65 The stain of my unspotted birth, to memory.
Let it lie buried with me in the dust,
That never time hereafter may report
How such a one as you have made me live.
Be resolute, and do not stagger; do not,
For I am nothing.
- 70 RODERIGO Sweet, let me enjoy thee
Now with a free allowance.
- CLARA Ha, enjoy me?
Insufferable villain!
- RODERIGO Peace! Speak low.
I mean no second force. And since I find
Such goodness in an unknown frame of virtue,
75 Forgive my foul attempt, which I shall grieve for
So heartily that, could you be yourself
Eyewitness to my constant vowed repentance,
Trust me, you'd pity me.
- CLARA Sir, you can speak now.
- RODERIGO So much I am the executioner
80 Of mine own trespass that I have no heart
Nor reason to disclose my name or quality;
You must excuse me that. But, trust me, fair one,
Were this ill deed undone, this deed of wickedness,
I would be proud to court your love like him
85 Whom my first birth presented to the world.
This for your satisfaction: what remains,
That you can challenge as a service from me,
I both expect and beg it.
- CLARA First, that you swear,
Neither in riot of your mirth, in passion
90 Of friendship, or in folly of discourse,
To speak of wrongs done to a ravished maid.
- RODERIGO As I love truth, I swear!
- CLARA Next, that you lead me
Near to the place you met me, and there leave me
To my last fortunes, ere the morning rise.
- RODERIGO Say more.
- 95 CLARA Live a new man. If e'er you marry—
O me, my heart's a-breaking!—but if e'er
You marry, in a constant love to her
That shall be then your wife, redeem the fault
- Of my undoing. I am lost for ever.
Pray, use no more words.
- RODERIGO You must give me leave 100
To veil you close.
- CLARA Do what you will. No time
Can ransom me from sorrows or dishonours.
[Roderigo veils her]
Shall we now go?
- RODERIGO My shame may live without me,
But in my soul I bear my guilt about me.
Lend me your hand; now follow. Exeunt
- Enter Luis, Diego, and a servant [as at night]* 1.4
LUIS [to servant] Not yet come in, not yet?
- SERVANT No, I'll assure your lordship; I've seldom known him
Keep out so long; my lord usually observes
More seasonable hours.
- LUIS What time of night is't? 5
- SERVANT On the stroke of three.
- LUIS The stroke of three? 'Tis wondrous strange! Dost hear?
- SERVANT My lord?
- LUIS Ere six I will be here again.
Tell thy lord so: ere six. A must not sleep;
Or if a do, I shall be bold to wake him. 10
Be sure thou tell'st him, do.
- SERVANT My lord, I shall. Exit
LUIS Diego,
- Walk thou the street that leads about the Prado;
I'll round the west part of the city; meet me
At the Inquisition chapel. If we miss him,
We'll both back to his lodgings.
- DIEGO At the chapel? 15
- LUIS Ay, there we'll meet.
- DIEGO Agreed.—I this way.
Exit Luis [at one door]
- Enter Don Juan [at another door]*
- JUAN (reading)
'She is not noble, true; wise nature meant
Affection should ennoble her descent,
For love and beauty keeps as rich a seat
Of sweetness in the mean-born as the great.' 20
—I am resolved. Exit

62 leprosy (conventionally attributed to promiscuous women) cleaves adheres

70 enjoy sexually possess

72 low quietly

75 attempt assault

78 speak i.e. reveal your identity (as she had asked at l. 6)

81 quality rank, status

86 what whatever

87 challenge demand, claim

94 last fortunes final fate (suggesting imminent death, or at least that he will never see her again)

99 my undoing your ruin of me

101 close closely, securely

103 My... without me 'I may be able to live without the presence of shame' (which is social, and—in contrast to guilt—depends on whether others know what he has done)

1.4.1 in home

2 him Roderigo

9 A he

12 Prado then a place of recreation in eastern Madrid, frequented by the nobility

14 Inquisition chapel (in the centre of Madrid; for Protestants, emblematic of Catholic tyranny)

18 Affection love, i.e. marriage descent lineage, pedigree

DIEGO 'Tis Roderigo certainly.
 Yet his voice makes me doubt; but I'll o'erhear him.
Exit [following Juan]

1.5 Enter Luis [as at night]

LUIS
 That I, ay, only I should be the man
 Made accessory and a party both
 To mine own torment, at a time so near
 The birth of all those comforts I have travailed with 5 So many, many hours of hopes and fears,
 Now at the instant—
Enter Roderigo

Ha! Stand! Thy name,
 Truly and speedily.

RODERIGO Don Luis?
 LUIS The same.
 But who art thou? Speak!

RODERIGO Roderigo.
 LUIS Tell me,
 As you're a noble gentleman, as ever
 10 You hope to be enrolled amongst the virtuous,
 As you love goodness, as you wish t'inherit
 The blessedness and fellowship of angels,
 As you are my friend, as you are Roderigo,
 As you are anything that would deserve
 15 A worthy name: where have you been tonight?
 O, how have you disposed of that fair creature
 Whom you led captive from me? Speak, O speak!
 Where, how, when, in what usage have you left her?
 Truth, I require all truth.

RODERIGO Though I might question
 20 The strangeness of your importunity,
 Yet, 'cause I note distraction in the height
 Of curiosity, I will be plain
 And brief.

LUIS I thank you, sir.
 RODERIGO Instead of feeding
 Too wantonly upon so rich a banquet,
 25 I found, even in that beauty that invited me,
 Such a commanding majesty of chaste
 And humbly glorious virtue, that it did not
 More check my rash attempt than draw to ebb
 The float of those desires, which in an instant
 30 Were cooled in their own streams of shame and folly.

LUIS Now all increase of honours
 Fall in full showers on thee, Roderigo,
 The best man living!

RODERIGO You are much transported
 With this discourse, methinks.

LUIS Marry, I am.
 She told ye her name too?

RODERIGO I could not urge it
 35 By any importunity.
 LUIS Better still!
 Where did you leave her?
 RODERIGO Where I found her; farther
 She would by no means grant me to wait on her.
 O Luis, I am lost!

LUIS This selfsame lady
 Was she to whom I have been long a suitor,
 40 And shortly hope to marry.

RODERIGO
 She your mistress then? Luis, since friendship
 And noble honesty conjures our loves
 To a continued league, here I unclasp
 The secrets of my heart. O, I have had 45 A glimpse of such a creature that deserves
 A temple! If thou lov'st her—and I blame thee not,
 For who can look on her and not give up
 His life unto her service?—if thou lov'st her,
 For pity's sake conceal her. Let me not 50 As much as know her name; there's a temptation in't.
 Let me not know her dwelling, birth, or quality,
 Or anything that she calls hers, but thee;
 In thee, my friend, I'll see her. And t'avoid
 The surfeits and those rarities that tempt me,
 55 So much I prize the happiness of friendship
 That I will leave the city—

LUIS Leave it?
 RODERIGO Speed me
 For Salamanca, court my studies now
 For physic 'gainst infection of the mind.

LUIS
 You do amaze me.

RODERIGO Here to live, and live
 60 Without her, is impossible and wretched.
 For heaven's sake, never tell her what I was,
 Or that you know me! And when I find that absence
 Hath lost her to my memory, I'll dare
 To see ye again. Meantime, the cause that draws me 65 From hence shall be to all the world untold;
 No friend but thou alone, for whose sake only
 I undertake this voluntary exile,
 Shall be partaker of my griefs. Thy hand.
[They shake hands]

Farewell. And all the pleasures, joys, contents
 70 That bless a constant lover, henceforth crown thee
 A happy bridegroom!

LUIS You have conquered friendship
 Beyond example.
Enter Diego

DIEGO Ha, ha, ha! Some one
 That hath slept well tonight, should a but see me

1.5.4 travailed with had labour pains for	'unsuccessful intention')	university founded in 1200 (172 miles
21 distraction madness	29 float flood-tide	from Madrid)
28 check rebuke (but suggesting 'obstruct,	33 transported rapt	59 physic medical treatment
