prevent')	42 mistress beloved	73 example precedent
attempt assault (but suggesting	58 Salamanca site of a famous Spanish

- 75 Thus merry by myself, might justly think
I were not well in my wits.
- LUIS Diego?
- DIEGO Yes,
'Tis I, and I've had a fine vagary,
The rarest wild-goose chase!
- LUIS 'T'as made thee melancholy.
- DIEGO Don Roderigo here? 'Tis well you met him—
- 80 For though I missed him, yet I met an accident
Has almost made me burst with laughter.
- LUIS How so?
- DIEGO I'll tell you: as we parted, I perceived
A walking thing before me, strangely tickled
With rare conceited raptures. Him I dogged, 85 Supposing 't'ad been Roderigo landed
From his new pinnace, deep in contemplation
Of the sweet voyage he stole tonight.
- RODERIGO You're pleasant.
- LUIS Prithce, who was't?
- RODERIGO Not I.
- DIEGO You're i' the right, not you indeed;
90 For 'twas that noble gentleman Don Juan,
Son to the Count Francisco de Carcámo.
- LUIS In love, it seems?
- DIEGO Yes, peppered, o' my life.
Much good may't do him! I'd not be so limed
For my cap full of double pistols.
- LUIS What should his mistress be?
- 95 DIEGO That's yet a riddle
Beyond my resolution—but o' late
I have observed him often to frequent
The sports the Gypsies newly come to th' city Present.
- LUIS 'Tis said there is a creature with 'em,
Though young of years, yet of such absolute beauty,
Dexterity of wit, and general qualities,
That Spain reports of her, not without admiration.
- DIEGO Have you seen her?
- LUIS Never.
- DIEGO Nor you, my lord?
- RODERIGO I not remember.
- DIEGO Why then, you never saw the prettiest toy
That ever sung or danced.
- LUIS Is she a Gypsy?
- DIEGO In her condition, not in her complexion.
I tell you once more, 'tis a spark of beauty
Able to set a world at gaze: the sweetest, 110 The wittiest rogue! Shall's see 'em? They have fine
gambols,
Are mightily frequented; court and city
Flock to 'em, but the country does 'em worship.
This little ape gets money by the sackful;
115 It trolls upon her.
- LUIS [to Roderigo] Will ye with us, friend?
- RODERIGO You know my other projects; sights to me
Are but vexations.
- LUIS O, you must be merry!—
Diego, we'll to th' Gypsies.
- DIEGO Best take heed
You be not snapped.
- LUIS How snapped?
- DIEGO By that little fairy.
120 'T'as a shrewd tempting face and a notable tongue.
- LUIS I fear not either.
- DIEGO Go, then.
- LUIS [to Roderigo] Will you with us?
- RODERIGO I'll come after. Exeunt Luis and Diego
125 Pleasure and Youth like smiling evils woo us
To taste new follies; tasted, they undo us. Exit

77 vagary wander, meander78 wild-goose chase (proverbial)melancholy hysterical84 conceited far-fetched poetic85 landed disembarked, dismounted86 pinnace small light vessel, often in attendance on a larger one—hence 'bit on the side', 'light woman' that a man 'boards' and rides87 voyage sexual adventure stole secretly and dishonestly acquired, 'snuck'

You're pleasant 'very funny' (sarcastic), or 'you're drunk'

92 peppered (a) pounded, physically punished (b) infected with venereal disease93 limed (a) trapped, as birds are by birdlime (b) mated sexually94 double pistols Spanish gold coins98 sports pastimes, amusements (perhaps also 'sexual dalliance')101 qualities (a) natural talents (b) learned accomplishments102 reports of (a) describes (b) resounds with talk about109 condition (a) circumstances (b) behaviourcomplexion 'skin colour' (Gypsies being considered darker than the English) and 'temperament' (of which skin colour was thought to be symptomatic)111 at gaze gazing, in dazed spectatorship112 Shall's shall wegambols leaping tricks, child-like frolics, toys114 country rural population (stereotypically ignorant and superstitious)does 'em worship pays them homage (as if they were people of high rank, instead of outcasts), reveres them115 ape (comparing Preciosa to a performing animal, mimic)

116 trolls rolls in, flows down (but also suggesting 'sings'—the means by which she gets it, in Cervantes)120 snapped suddenly bitten, snatched fairy diminutive supernatural enchantress (Preciosa)121 'T'as it has ('it' being used of fairies and children)
shrewd dangerously, sharply (perhaps punning on 'shrewish')notable remarkable (but punning on 'note-able', capable of musical notes) tongue (for singing, witty conversation, or sexual pleasure; but also the chief attribute of a nagging 'shrew', which a man might fear)126 Pleasure and Youth (like characters in allegorical plays or masques)
evils crimes, sins, diseases

2.1 Incipit Actus Secundus
Enter the old Father of the Gypsies, Carlo, and Antonio [all properly habited as Gypsies]
 FATHER Come, my brave boys! The tailor's shears has cut us into shapes fitting our trade.
 CARLO A trade free as a mason's.
 ANTONIO A trade brave as a courtier's—for some of them
 5 do but shark, and so do we.
 FATHER Gypsies, but no tanned ones; no red-ochre rascals
 umbered with soot and bacon as the English Gypsies are, that sally out upon pullen, lie in emboscado for a rope of onions, as if they were Welsh freebooters.
 10 No, our style has higher steps to climb over: Spanish Gypsies, noble Gypsies!
 CARLO
 I never knew nobility in baseness.
 FATHER Baseness? The arts of Cocoquismo and Germania, used by our Spanish picaros—I mean filching, foisting, 15 nimming, lifting—we defy. None in our college shall study 'em; such graduates we degrade.
 ANTONIO
 I am glad Spain has an honest company.
 FATHER
 We'll entertain no mountebanking stroll,
 No piper, fiddler, tumbler through small hoops,
 20 No ape-carrier, baboon-bearer;
 We must have nothing stale, trivial, or base.
 Am I your mayordomo, your teniente,

Your captain, your commander?
 ANTONIO Who but you?
 FATHER So then: now being entered Madrid, the enchanted circle of Spain, have a care to your new lessons. 25
 BOTH [CARLO and ANTONIO] We listen.
 FATHER Plough deep furrows, to catch deep root in th'opinion of the best, grandes, dukes, marquesses, condes and other titulados; show your sports to none but them. What can you do with three or four fools in 30 a dish, and a blockhead cut into sippets?
 ANTONIO Scurvy meat!
 FATHER The Lacedemonians threw their beards over their shoulders, to observe what men did behind them as well as before; you must do so. 35 BOTH [CARLO and ANTONIO] We shall never do't. Our muzzles are too short.
 FATHER Be not English Gypsies, in whose company a man's not sure of the ears of his head, they so pilfer! No such angling; what you pull to land, catch fair. There 40 is no iron so foul but may be gilded, and our Gypsy profession (how base soever in show) may acquire commendations.
 CARLO Gypsies, and yet pick no pockets?
 FATHER Infamous and rogyu! So handle your webs, 45 that they never come to be woven in the loom of justice. Take anything that's given you (purses, knives, handkerchiefs, rosaries, tweezers, any toy, any money);
 refuse not a maravedi, a blank. Feather by feather birds build nests; grain pecked up after grain makes pullen 50 fat.

2.1.0.2 Father leader, elder
 0.3 habited dressed
 1 brave fine boys lads (younger than him, with not much hair on their chins; imagined in college, taking lessons)
 3 free...mason's master stone-workers, free to travel wherever there were major building projects
 5 but shark only sponge off others, behave in a predatory way
 6-7 tanned...bacon (allusions to stereotypical reddish-brown Gypsy complexion) 7 umbered (artificially) darkened (like actors pretending to be Gypsies)
 bacon smoked ham
 8 sally out make a military sortie (ironic) pullen poultry
 emboscado ambush (Spanish)
 9 rope string onions (stereotypical Welsh cuisine)
 freebooters pirates, adventurers
 10 style (punning on 'stile')
 11 noble Gypsies oxymoron ('aristocratic homeless vagrants', 'magnanimous crooks'), but also alluding to the English noblemen who played Gypsies in Jonson's masque (see Introduction).
 13 Cocoquismo and Germania jargon of Gypsies and thieves. (Like many phrases

in this scene, taken from James Mabbe's translation of Mateo Aleman's classic picaresque novel, Guzman de Alfarache.) 14 picaros wanderers, rogues foisting picking pockets 15 nimming seizing lifting stealing defy denounce, renounce college (treating the Gypsy band as an elect fraternity with strict rules and hierarchy)
 16 degrade (punning on 'graduates')
 17 company trade association like the London guilds. (Spain's only 'honest company' is a band of Gypsies?) 18-20 We'll...baboon-bearer (satirizing the repertoire of the rival Hope Theatre) 18 entertain host, welcome
 mountebanking stroll itinerant charlatan 20 ape-carrier, baboon-bearer trainers who taught primates to perform tricks to amuse paying spectators 22 mayordomo steward (Spanish)
 teniente lieutenant (Spanish) 24-5 enchanted circle circle drawn by a conjurer, summoning spirits or devils, to keep them out (or in) 28 grandes aristocrats (Spanish)
 29 condes counts (Spanish)

titulados people with grand titles (jocular Spanish)
 30 fools (a) foolish people, professional jesters (b) custards 31 blockhead dummy (but imagined as a kind of meat, like a baked boar's head, or a bird called the blackhead) sippets small pieces, esp. bits of fried or toasted bread served with soup, etc.
 32 Scurvy meat rotten food
 33 Lacedemonians inhabitants of ancient Sparta
 37 muzzles...short chins don't have enough long hair on them 40 angling using a fishing-line to steal sheets and clothes (but punning on 'Angland') 45 webs hands (compared to webbed feet of a duck, or spiderwebs); but punning on 'woven fabric'
 46 woven in the loom i.e. entangled in the machine, which catches loose yarn and fixes it in a tight weave 48 rosaries (specifically Catholic devotional beads, here grouped with various worthless trifles)
 49 maravedi very small Spanish copper coin worth sixpence
 blank small silver coin

- ANTONIO The best is, we Spaniards are no great feeders.
 FATHER If one city cannot maintain us, away to another!
 Our horses must have wings. Does Madrid yield no 55 money? Seville shall. Is Seville close-fisted? Valladolid is open; so Cordova, so Toledo. Do not our Spanish wines please us? Italian can then, French can. Preferment's bow is hard to draw; set all your strengths to it. What you get, keep: all the world is a second Rochelle. Make 60 all sure, for you must not look to have your dinner served in with trumpets.
- CARLO No, no, sack-butts shall serve us.
 FATHER When you have money, hide it. Sell all our horses but one.
- ANTONIO Why one?
 FATHER 'Tis enough to carry our apparel and trinkets, and the less our ambler eats, our cheer is the better. None be sluttish, none thievish, none lazy; all bees, no drones,
 and our hives shall yield us honey.
Enter Eugenia, Preciosa, and Christiana [in new Gypsy clothes], and Cardochia
- PRECIOSA
 70 See, father, how I'm fitted! How do you like
 This our new stock of clothes?
- FATHER My sweet girl, excellent!—
 [To Cardochia] See their old robes be safe.
- CARDOCHIA That, sir, I'll look to.
 Whilst in my house you lie, what thief soever
 Lays hands upon your goods, call but to me,
 I'll make thee satisfaction.
- 75 FATHER Thanks, good hostess!
- CARDOCHIA
 People already throng into the inn
 And call for you into their private rooms.
- FATHER No chamber comedies! Hostess, ply you your tide; flow let 'em to a full sea, but we'll show no pastime till after dinner, and that in a full ring of good people, the 80 best, the noblest. No closet sweetmeats; pray, tell 'em so.
- CARDOCHIA I shall. Exit
- FATHER
 How old is Preciosa?
- EUGENIA Twelve and upwards.
- PRECIOSA I am in my teens, assure you, mother. As little 85 as I am, I have been taken for an elephant, castles and lordships offered to be set upon me, if I would bear 'em;
 why, your smallest clocks are the prettiest things to carry about gentlemen.
- EUGENIA Nay, child, thou wilt be tempted. 90
- PRECIOSA Tempted? Though I am no mark in respect of a huge butt, yet I can tell you, great bibbers have shot at me, and shot golden arrows. But I myself gave aim, thus: 'Wide, four bows!'—'Short, three and a half!'
 They that crack me shall find me as hard as a nut of 95 Galicia. A parrot I am, but my teeth too tender to crack a wanton's almond.
- FATHER
 Thou art my noble girl! A-many dons
 Will not believe but that thou art a boy
 In woman's clothes—and to try that conclusion,
 100 To see if thou be'st alchemy or no,
 They'll throw down gold in musses. But, Preciosa,

52 Spaniards... feeders alluding to the notoriously skimpy Spanish diet (subject of many English complaints in 1623; satirized in Game at Chess 5.3)

58 bow... draw (alluding to the bow of Odysseus, which no one but himself could draw)

59 Rochelle characterized in Guzman as a place for self-seekers who 'keep what they get'

62 sack-butts cask of Spanish wine (126 gallons)—but punning on 'sackbuts' (musical instruments resembling a trumpet, with a slide like a modern trombone)
 serve satisfy

63-4 horses but one (stereotypically, several Gypsies rode on a single horse)

67 cheer (a) food supply (b) frame of mind

68 sluttish (a) slovenly (b) sexually immoral
bees (traditional image of ideal community)

73 house public house, inn

78 chamber comedies bedroom farces

ply... tide (a) 'use the tide' to work a ship upriver, to windward, etc. (b) take advantage of your opportunity (c) assiduously keep offering your wine (to customers)

80 ring circle (as in outdoor amphitheatres and innyards)

81 closet private room, bedroom sweetmeats (a) candy or sugared pastry (b) 'goodies', delicious lascivious bodies, sexual favours

84 Preciosa 'precious' (Spanish)
Twelve and upwards (the age of the Infanta of Spain; Preciosa is fifteen in Cervantes)

86 elephant (often pictured with a 'castle'—roofed wooden structure, enclosing its riders—on its back)

87 bear 'em support their weight (sexually), bare them

88 smallest clocks personal timepieces, watches (new and fashionable)

92 butt (a) archery target (b) wine cask (c) buttock

bibbers heavy drinkers, imbibers

93 golden arrows i.e. offers of money

gave aim measured how far the arrows

fell from their target

94 bows bow-lengths

96 Galicia area of north-west Spain (most famous in 1623 as the home of Gondomar, hated Spanish ambassador to Britain, satirized as the Black Knight in Game at Chess)

parrot i.e. small brightly-decorated creature, who has been taught to repeat words (in her case, songs)

97 wanton's lecher's

almond (proverbially, food for which parrots would perform; here, offered by a 'wanton' seducer to tempt the 'parrot' Preciosa)

98 A-many many, a great number of

99 Will... but insist on believing, refuse to believe anything but thou... boy (literally true, because the part would have been played by a boy actor)

100 try test

101 alchemy (a) metal which imitates gold (b) marvellous or magical transformation

102 musses heaps to scramble for

Let these proud sakers and gyrfalcons fly;
Do not thou move a wing. Be to thyself
Thyself, and not a changeling.

105 PRECIOSA How! Not a changeling?
Yes, father, I will play the changeling:
I'll change myself into a thousand shapes
To court our brave spectators; I'll change my postures
Into a thousand different variations
110 To draw even ladies' eyes to follow mine;
I'll change my voice into a thousand tones
To chain attention. Not a changeling, father?
None but myself shall play the changeling.

FATHER
Do what thou wilt, Preciosa.
A beating within Enter Cardochia
What noise is this?

CARDOCHIA
115 Here's gentlemen swear all the oaths in Spain
They have seen you, must see you, and will see you.

FATHER To drown this noise, let 'em enter.
[Cardochia opens the door.] Enter Sancho and Soto

SANCHO 'Swounds! Is your playhouse an inn? A gentleman cannot see you without crumpling his taffeta cloak.

120 SOTO Nay, more than a gentleman, his man being a diminutive don too.

SANCHO Is this the little ape does the fine tricks?
PRECIOSA 'Come aloft, Jack-little-ape!' SANCHO Would my jack might come aloft! Please you to 125 set the watermill with the ivory cogs in't a-grinding my handful of purging comfits.

[He offers her comfits] SOTO My master desires to have you loose from your company.
PRECIOSA Am I a pigeon, think you, to be caught with cumin seeds? a fly to glue my wings to sweetmeats, 130
and so be ta'en?
SANCHO [to Father] When do your gambols begin?
FATHER Not till we ha' dined.
SANCHO 'Sfoot! Then your bellies will be so full, you'll be able to do nothing.—Soto, prithee, set a good face on't, 135
for I cannot, and give the little monkey that letter.
SOTO Walk off and hum to yourself.
[Sancho stands aloof. Soto delivers a letter to Preciosa, reading from its superscription]
'I dedicate, sweet destiny (into whose hand every Spaniard desires to put a distaff), these lines of love—'
EUGENIA What, 'love'? What's the matter? 140
SOTO Grave Mother Bumby, the mark's out o' your mouth.
FATHER What's the paper? From whom comes it?
SOTO The commodity wrapped up in the paper are verses;
the warming-pan that puts heat into 'em, yon firebrained bastard of Helicon. 145
SANCHO Hum, hum.
FATHER [to Soto] What's your master's name?
SOTO His name is Don Tomazo Portocarrero, nuncle to young Don Hortado de Mendonça, cousin-german to the Conde de Tendilla, and natural brother to Francisco de Bovadilla, one of the comendadors of Alcantara, a gentleman of long standing. 150
FATHER And of as long a style.
PRECIOSA Verses? I love good ones; let me see 'em.
SANCHO [advancing] Good ones? If they were not good ones, 155 they should not come from me; at the name of verses I can stand on no ground.

103 sakers peregrine hawks
gyrfalcons large northern falcons 104 Do... wing (Preciosa is imagined as a small vulnerable bird, whom the predators will spot and pounce upon if she moves; she should remain still, constant, unmoved by attempts to move her.) 105-13 not a changeling... play the changeling (apparently an allusion to Middleton and Rowley's The Changeling, performed by the same company)
105 changeling (a) fickle, inconstant person
(b) child stolen in infancy (c) one person substituted for another 114.1 beating (pounding on a door or playing a drum) 117.1 Sancho (name of a famous comic character in Don Quixote; first appearance of the name in an extant English play)
117.2 Soto (suggesting sot, 'fool, drunkard') 118 'Swounds by God's wounds (a very strong oath, referring to the crucifixion) 120 man servant
122 this (Preciosa)

123 Come... Jack-little-ape (playing on 'come aloft, jackanapes', the ape-trainer's command for an animal to begin performing tricks)
124 Would... aloft i.e. I wish I could get an erection 125 ivory cogs i.e. white teeth, compared to the 'cogs' of the mill-wheel 126 purging laxative
comfits sweets, candied fruit 127 loose (a) free, detached (b) with loose bowels (c) naked (d) sexually lax, promiscuous
130 cumin seeds (a) used to lure pigeons to a dove-cote (b) alluding to Matthew 23:23 ('hypocrites... pay tithes of...
cumin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law')
134 'Sfoot! by God's foot (strong oath)
135 face appearance, explanation
136 I cannot (because he does not have a 'good face') 139 distaff staff used in spinning, emblem of 'destiny' (because the Fates of classical mythology spun the web of a man's destiny) and of female domestic labour;

here, the context also suggests 'erect penis'
lines (punning on 'loins') 140 matter subject (but also suggesting 'female genitals') 141 Mother Bumby (famous fortune-teller; title character of Lyly's Mother Bombie)
the mark's... mouth you are too old (comparing the old woman to a horse, whose age can be determined by examining the gums) 145 Helicon Greek mountain sacred to the muses 148-51 Don... Alcantara (Spaniards were often satirized for their pride in lineage;
this haphazard string of grandiose titles is collected from Guzman.) 148 nuncle uncle (colloquially incongruous here)
150 natural (a) bastard (b) idiot 156 verses (perhaps punning on the legal term versus) 156-7 I... ground (a) I can stand even when there is nothing to stand on (b) my claims are groundless

- PRECIOSA [opening the paper] Here's gold too!—Whose is this?
- 160 SANCHO Whose but yours? If there be any fault in the verses, I can mend it extempore; for a stitch in a man's stocking, not taken up in time, ravel's out all the rest.
- SOTO [aside] Botcherly poetry, botcherly!
- PRECIOSA Verses and gold! These then are golden verses.
- 165 SANCHO Had every verse a pearl in the eye, it should be thine.
- PRECIOSA A pearl in mine eye! I thank you for that; do you wish me blind?
- SANCHO Ay, by this light do I, that you may look upon nobody's rhymes but mine.
- 170 PRECIOSA I should be blind indeed then.
- FATHER [to Sancho] Pray, sir, read your verses.
- SANCHO Shall I sing 'em or say 'em?
- FATHER Which you can best.
- 175 SOTO [aside] Both scurvily.
- SANCHO I'll set out a throat then.
- SOTO Do, master, and I'll run division behind your back.
- SANCHO [sings]
- O that I were a bee to sing
Hum, buzz, buzz, hum! I first would bring 180 Home honey to your hive, and there leave my sting.
- SOTO [sings]
- He maunders.
- SANCHO [sings]
- O that I were a goose, to feed
At your barn-door! Such corn I need;
Nor would I bite, but goslings breed.
- SOTO [sings]
- 185 And ganders.
- SANCHO [sings]
- O that I were your needle's eye!
How through your linen would I fly
And never leave one stitch awry!
- SOTO [sings]
- He'll touse ye.
- SANCHO [sings]
- 190 O would I were one of your hairs,
- That you might comb out all my cares
And kill the nits of my despair!
- SOTO [sings]
- O lousy!
- SANCHO How? 'Lousy'! Can rhymes be lousy?
- OMNES No, no, they're excellent.
- FATHER [to Sancho] But are these all your own?
- SANCHO Mine own? Would I might never see ink drop out of the nose of any goose-quill more, if velvet cloaks have not clapped me for 'em! Do you like 'em?
- 200 PRECIOSA Past all compare!
- They shall be writ out; when you've as good or better,
For these and those, pray, book me down your debtor.
Your paper is long-lived, having two souls,
Verses and gold.
- SANCHO Would both those were in thy pretty little body, 205 sweet Gypsy!
- PRECIOSA A pistolet and this paper? 'Twould choke me.
- SOTO No more than a bribe does a constable. The verses will easily into your head; then buy what you like with the gold, and put it into your belly. I hope I ha' chewed 210 a good reason for you.
- SANCHO Will you chew my jennet ready, sir?
- SOTO And eat him down, if you say the word. Exit
- SANCHO Now the coxcomb my man is gone, because you're but a country company of strolls, I think your stock is 215 threadbare; here, mend it with this cloak . . .
- [He gives them his cloak]
- FATHER What do you mean, sir?
- SANCHO [giving them] . . . this scarf, this feather, and this hat.
- OMNES Dear senor!
- 220 SANCHO If they be never so dear—pox o' this hot ruff!—
Little Gypsy, wear thou that.
- [He gives his ruff to Preciosa]
- FATHER Your meaning, sir?
- SANCHO My meaning is: not to be an ass, to carry a 225 burden when I need not. If you show your gambols forty leagues hence, I'll gallop to 'em. [To Father]

161–2 a stitch . . . rest (proverbial: a stitch in time saves nine)

161 stitch (punning on 'distich', Latin for 'couplet')

163 botcherly botched, badly made (but punning on botcher, 'tailor')

165 pearl (a) jewel (b) cataract

177 division ornamentation of a melodic line, or rhythmic accompaniment

180 sting (comparing intercourse to an insect's sting—which involves penetration, followed by swelling)

181 maunders (a) mutters (b) begs

182 goose (a) proverbially stupid fowl (b) simpleton

183 barn-door (suggesting 'bairn-door', aperture where babies enter the world, i.e. vagina)

184 goslings (a) young geese (b) foals

185 ganders he would breed (a) male geese (b) fools

186 needle's eye (punning on 'needles, I' or 'ay': needle was slang for 'penis')

187 linen underwear

189 touse dishevel, rumple, tumble, indelicately horse-play with

192 nits eggs of lice

193 lousy (a) infested with lice (b) contemptible, obscene

195 OMNES (Latin for 'All')

198 nose (suggested by 'neb', both the nib of a pen and the snout/nose of a human/animal)

goose-quill pen made from the wing-feathers of a goose (which, in the context, suggests 'fool's pen')

velvet cloaks (people wearing) expensive clothing

199 clapped (a) applauded (b) imprisoned

201 writ out copied down

202 book me down write me down in your account books

207 pistolet (a) Spanish coin (b) small pistol

207–8 choke . . . constable obstruct [Preciosa's] windpipe . . . 'perturb' or 'silence' a law officer

210 put . . . belly (proverbial)

chewed 'chewed over', ruminated upon

211 reason (punning on 'raisin')

212 chew (nonsense-verb, perhaps punning on 'shew' and 'shoe')

jennet small Spanish horse

215 strolls vagabonds (comparing Gypsies to provincial touring actors)

stock (a) capital (b) theatrical wardrobe

(c) stocking, sock

221 dear expensive

Farewell, old greybeard; [to Eugenia] adieu, Mother Mumble-crust; [to Preciosa] morrow, my little wart of beauty. Exit

Enter Don Juan, muffled, [behind them]

FATHER
230 So, harvest will come in! Such sunshine days
Will bring in golden sheaves, our markets raise.
Away to your task!

Exeunt [Gypsies]. Don Juan pulls Preciosa back

PRECIOSA Mother! Grandmother!

JUAN Two rows of kindred in one mouth?

235 EUGENIA [returning] Be not uncivil, sir. Thus have you used her thrice.

JUAN Thrice? Three thousand more! May I not use mine own?

PRECIOSA Your own! By what tenure?

240 JUAN Cupid entails this land upon me. I have wooed thee; thou art coy. By this air, I am a bull of Tarifa, wild, mad for thee! You trowed I was some copper coin; I am a knight of Spain, Don Francisco de Cárcamo my father,
I Don Juan his son. This paper [giving her a paper] tells 245 you more.—Grumble not, old granam; [giving Eugenia money] here's gold. For I must, by this white hand, marry this cherry-lipped, sweet-mouthed villain.

PRECIOSA There's a thing called quando.

JUAN Instantly.

250 EUGENIA [to Preciosa] Art thou so willing?

JUAN Peace, threescore and five!

PRECIOSA Marry me? Eat a chicken ere it be out o'th' shell?
I'll wear no shackles. Liberty is sweet; that I have, that I'll hold. Marry me? Can gold and lead mix together? a 255 diamond and a button of crystal fit one ring? You are too high for me, I am too low; you too great, I too little.

EUGENIA [to Juan] I pray, leave her, sir, and take your gold again.

PRECIOSA [to Juan] Or if you dote, as you say, let me try 260 you: do this.

JUAN Anything; kill the great Turk, pluck out the Mogul's eye-teeth! In earnest, Preciosa, anything!

PRECIOSA Your task is soon set down: turn Gypsy for two years. Be one of us. If in that time you mislike not me, 265 nor I you, here's my hand. Farewell. [Exit]

EUGENIA There's enough for your gold. [Aside] Witty child!
Exit

JUAN
Turn Gypsy! for two years! A capering trade,
And I in th'end may keep a dancing school,
Having served for't. Gypsy I must turn.
Exit 270
O beauty, the sun's fires cannot so burn!

Enter Clara 2.2

CLARA
I have offended. Yet, O heaven, thou know'st
How much I have abhorred, even from my birth,
A thought that tended to immodest folly!
Yet I have fallen. Thoughts with disgraces strive,
And thus I live, and thus I die alive. 5

Enter Pedro and Maria

PEDRO
Fie, Clara, thou dost court calamity too much.

MARIA
Yes, girl, thou dost.

PEDRO Why should we fret our eyes out
With our tears' weary complaints? 'Tis fruitless, childish
Impatience—for when mischief hath wound up
The full weight of the ravisher's foul life 10
To an equal height of ripe iniquity,
The poise will, by degrees, sink down his soul
To a much lower, much more lasting ruin
Than our joint wrongs can challenge.

MARIA Darkness itself
Will change night's sable brow into a sunbeam 15
For a discovery; and be thou sure,
Whenever we can learn what monster 'twas
Hath robbed thee of the jewel held so precious,
Our vengeance shall be noble—

PEDRO royal, anything!
Till then let's live securely; to proclaim 20
Our sadness were mere vanity.

CLARA A needs not.
I'll study to be merry.

PEDRO We are punished,
Maria, justly; covetousness to match
Our daughter to that matchless piece of ignorance,

227-8 Mother Mumble-crust toothless old woman (character in Nicholas Udall's Ralph Roister Doister, 1576)

239 tenure legal title, right

240 entails bestows as an inalienable possession (but punning on the sexual sense of 'tail')

241 Tarifa town in southern Spain, just west of Gibraltar, famed for wild bulls used in bull-fights

242 trowed believed copper (less valuable than gold or silver)

246 this (Preciosa's)

248 quando when (Spanish), time when it should be done

250 so willing willing it should be so

256 low...little (conflating her size and social status)

261 great Turk sultan of the Ottoman empire

Mogul's potentate of India's

262 In earnest (a) seriously (b) as a down payment

269 served passed my apprenticeship

turn become (but punning on the gyrations of Gypsy dancing)

270 sun's...burn (a) sun does not generate as much heat [as beauty generates sexual passion] (b) sunburn could not turn his complexion as dark as a Gypsy's [but love of her beauty can]

2.2.3 immodest folly sexual indiscretion

12 poise weight

14 challenge claim

18 jewel i.e. her virginity

21 A it

23 match marry

24 matchless (a) unparalleled (b) unmarried

- 25 Our foolish ward, hath drawn this curse upon us.
 MARIA I fear it has.
 PEDRO Off with this face of grief:
Enter Luis and Diego
 Here comes Don Luis.—Noble sir!
 LUIS My lord,
 I trust I have you and your lady's leave
 T'exchange a word with your fair daughter.
 PEDRO Leave
 30 And welcome.—Hark, Maria.—Your ear too.
 DIEGO Mine, my lord?
 [Pedro, Maria, and Diego talk apart]
 LUIS
 Dear Clara, I have often sued for love,
 And now desire you would at last be pleased
 To style me yours.
 CLARA Mine eyes ne'er saw that gentleman
 35 Whom I more nobly in my heart respected
 Than I have you; yet you must, sir, excuse me,
 If I resolve to use awhile that freedom
 My younger days allow.
 LUIS But shall I hope?
 CLARA
 You will do injury to better fortunes,
 40 To your own merit, greatness, and advancement,
 Which I beseech you not to slack.
 LUIS Then hear me:
 If ever I embrace another choice,
 Until I know you elsewhere matched, may all
 The chief of my desires find scorn and ruin.
 CLARA
 O me!
 LUIS Why sigh you, lady?
 45 CLARA 'Deed, my lord,
 I am not well.
 LUIS Then all discourse is tedious.
 I'll choose some fitter time. Till when, fair Clara—
 CLARA
 You shall not be unwelcome hither, sir.
 That's all that I dare promise. [Exit]
 LUIS Diego!
 DIEGO My lord?
 LUIS
 What says Don Pedro?
 DIEGO He'll go with you.
 50 LUIS Leave us.
 [Exit Diego]
 [To Pedro] Shall I, my lord, entreat your privacy?
- PEDRO Withdraw, Maria; we'll follow presently.
 Exit [Maria]
 LUIS
 The great corregidor (whose politic stream
 Of popularity glides on the shore
 Of every vulgar praise) hath often urged me 55
 To be a suitor to his Catholic Majesty
 For a repeal from banishment for him
 Who slew my father; compliments in vows
 And strange well-studied promises of friendship;
 60 But what is new to me, still as he courts
 Assistance for Alvarez, my grand enemy, Still he protests how ignorant he is Whether Alvarez be alive or dead.
 Tomorrow is the day we have appointed
 For meeting, at the lord Francisco's house, 65 The earl of Cárcamo. Now, my good lord,
 The sum of my request is, you will please
 To lend your presence there, and witness wherein
 Our joint accord consists.
 PEDRO You shall command it.
 LUIS
 But first, as you are noble, I beseech you 70
 Help me with your advice what you conceive
 Of great Fernando's importunity,
 Or whether you imagine that Alvarez Survive or not?
 PEDRO It is a question, sir,
 Beyond my resolution. I remember 75
 The difference betwixt your noble father
 And Conde de Alvarez, how it sprung
 From a mere trifle first, a cast of hawks, Whose made the swifter flight, whose could mount highest,
 Lie longest on the wing; from change of words 80
 Their controversy grew to blows, from blows
 To parties, thence to faction and, in short,
 I well remember how our streets were frighted
 With brawls, whose end was blood—till, when no friends
 Could mediate their discords, by the king 85
 A reconciliation was enforced,
 Death threatened to the first occasioner
 Of breach, besides the confiscation
 Of lands and honours; yet at last they met
 Again, again they drew to sides, renewed 90
 Their ancient quarrel—in which dismal uproar
 Your father hand to hand fell by Alvarez.
 Alvarez fled, and after him the doom
 Of exile was sent out. He (as report

25 ward an orphaned minor, heir to an estate, whose legal guardian had the right to arrange a marriage, which the ward could not refuse without paying financial compensation: a system much abused in early modern England.

(Sancho is Pedro's ward.)
 28 leave permission
 45 'Deed indeed
 47 Till when until which time
 56 his Catholic Majesty the King of Spain

78 cast couple hawks trained hunting birds (kept by aristocrats, who made bets on their performance)
 82 parties rival groups

95 Was bold to voice) retired himself to Rhodes;
His lands and honours by the king bestowed
On you, but then an infant.

LUIS Ha, an infant?

PEDRO
His wife, the sister to the corregidor,
With a young daughter and some few that followed
her,
100 By stealth were shipped for Rhodes, and by a storm Shipwrecked at sea. But for the banished Conde,
'Twas never yet known what became of him.
Here's all I can inform you.

LUIS A repeal?

105 Yes, I will sue for't, beg for't, buy it, anything
That may by possibility of friends Or money, I'll attempt.

PEDRO 'Tis a brave charity.

LUIS
Alas, poor lady, I could mourn for her!
Her loss was usury more than I covet.
But for the man, I'd sell my patrimony
110 For his repeal, and run about the world
To find him out; there is no peace can dwell
About my father's tomb till I have sacrificed
Some portion of revenge to his wronged ashes.
You will along with me?

PEDRO You need not question it.

LUIS
115 I have strange thoughts about me. Two such furies
Revel amidst my joys as well may move Distraction in a saint: vengeance and love.
I'll follow, sir.

PEDRO Pray, lead the way, you know it.—
Exit Luis

120 SANCHO From flaying myself, sir.
SOTO [to Pedro] From playing with fencers, sir—and they have beat him out of his clothes, sir.

PEDRO [to Sancho]
Cloak, band, rapier, all lost at dice?
SANCHO Nor cards neither.
SOTO [to Pedro] This was one of my master's dog-days, and 125 he would not sweat too much.
SANCHO [to Pedro] It was mine own goose, and I laid the giblets upon another coxcomb's trencher. You are my guardian: best beg me for a fool now.
SOTO [aside] He that begs one begs t'other. 130
PEDRO [to Sancho]
Does any gentleman give away his things thus?
SANCHO Yes, and gentlewomen give away their things too.
SOTO [to Pedro] To gulls sometimes, and are cony-catched for their labour.
PEDRO [to Sancho] Wilt thou ever play the coxcomb? 135
SANCHO If no other parts be given me, what would you have me do?
PEDRO
Thy father was as brave a Spaniard
As ever spoke the haught Castilian tongue.
SANCHO
Put me in clothes, I'll be as brave as he. 140
PEDRO
This is the ninth time thou hast played the ass,
Flinging away thy trappings and thy cloth
To cover others, and go nak'd thyself.
SANCHO I'll make 'em up ten, because I'll be even with 145 you.
PEDRO
Once more your broken walls shall have new hangings.
SOTO To be well hung is all our desire.
PEDRO And what course take you next?
SANCHO What course? Why, my man Soto and I will go 150 make some maps.
PEDRO What maps?
SOTO Not such maps as you wash houses with, but maps of countries.
SANCHO I have an uncle in Seville, I'll go see him; an aunt in Siena in Italy, I'll go see her. 155

105 may may be done

108 usury interest (an addition to the principal debt he is owed)

117 Distraction madness

121 playing (a) exercising (b) gambling

122 beat (a) thrashed (b) out-gambled

125 dog-days hottest and unhealthiest days of the year

129 beg . . . fool apply to be my guardian (after I have been certified a lunatic)

130 He . . . t'other whoever asks for Sancho asks for a fool

131 things possessions (punning on 'genitals')

133 gulls dupes (like Sancho and Soto) cony-catched cheated, duped (punning on cony, slang for con, 'cunt': cuntcaught)

134 labour (a) trouble (b) child-birth

135 play (a) behave like (b) act the part of

136 parts (a) faculties (b) roles. (A joke about the type-casting of the actor.)

138 brave courageous

139 haught elevated, arrogant
Castilian tongue i.e. Spanish language

140 brave well-dressed

142 trappings (a) decorative accessories

placed over a saddle (b) fancy clothes

cloth (a) cloth placed under a saddle (b) clothes

144 even square, fair, quits (but punning on 'even number')

146 hangings tapestries (used to cover walls)

147 well hung (a) supplied with large genitals (b) thoroughly hanged on the gallows

152 maps (punning on 'mops')

154 uncle (proverbially, someone to visit when you need food, or to escape sexual trouble)

in Seville in the richest city of Spain, disembarkation point for gold from America, distributed from there to European financial networks (punning on 'incivil?')

aunt (slang for 'prostitute' or 'procuress', especially associated with Italy)

155 in Siena (punning on Italian 'anziana', ancient?)

- SOTO A cousin of mine in Rome, I'll go to him with a mortar.
 SANCHO There's a courtesan in Venice, I'll go tickle her.
 SOTO Another in England, I'll go tackle her.
 160 PEDRO So, so!—and where's the money to do all this?
 SANCHO If my woods, being cut down, cannot fill this pocket, cut 'em into trapsticks.
 SOTO [to Pedro] And if his acres, being sold for a maravedi a turf for larks in cages, cannot fill this pocket, give 'em 165 to gold-finders.
 PEDRO You'll gallop both to the gallows. So fare you well.
 SANCHO [to Pedro] And be hanged you! New clothes, you'd best!
 SOTO [to Pedro] Four cloaks!—[to Sancho] that you may give away three, and keep one.
 170 SANCHO We'll live as merrily as beggars; let's both turn Gypsies.
 SOTO By any means. If they cog, we'll lie; if they toss, we'll tumble.
 175 SANCHO Both in a belly, rather than fail.
 SOTO Come, then, we'll be Gypsified.
 SANCHO And tipsified too.
 SOTO
 And we will show such tricks and such rare gambols
 As shall put down the elephant and camels. Exeunt
- ❁
- 3.1 Incipit Actus Tertius
Enter Roderigo disguised like an Italian
 RODERIGO
 A thousand stings are in me. O what vile prisons
 Make we our bodies to our immortal souls!
- Brave tenants to bad houses: 'tis a dear rent
 They pay for naughty lodging. The soul, the mistress;
 The body, the caroché that carries her;
 5 Sins, the swift wheels that hurry her away;
 Our will, the coachman rashly driving on Till coach and carriage both are quite o'erthrown.
 My body yet 'scapes bruises; that known thief
 Is not yet called to th' bar. There's no true sense 10 Of pain but what the law of conscience Condemns us to; I feel that. Who would lose
 A kingdom for a cottage? an estate
 Of perpetuity for a man's life
 For annuity of that life (pleasure)?—a spark 15 To those celestial fires that burn about us,
 A painted star to that bright firmament
 Of constellations which each night are set Lighting our way. Yet thither how few get!
 How many thousand in Madrid drink off
 20 The cup of lust (and laughing) in one month?—
 Not whining as I do! Should this sad lady
 Now meet me, do I know her? Should this temple,
 By me profaned, lie in her ruins here,
 The pieces would scarce show her me. Would they 25 did!
 She's mistress to Don Luis; by his steps,
 And this disguise, I'll find her. To Salamanca
 Thy father thinks thou'rt gone; no, close here stay.
 Where'er thou travell'st, scorpions stop thy way.
 Faith, what are these?
 30 Enter Sancho and Soto as Gypsies
 SANCHO Soto, how do I show?
 SOTO Like a rusty armour new scoured. But, master, how show I?
 SANCHO Like an ass with a new piebald saddle on his back.

156 cousin (punning on cozen, 'cheat'—like someone who would claim to 'walk... mortar')
 156–7 Rome... mortar (apparently alluding to the proverbially impossible feat of walking—or hopping—all the way to Rome with a mortar-bowl on one's head, without it falling off)
 156 go walk
 158 Venice (famous for its courtesans)
tickle (a) excite, pleasure (b) amuse, make laugh
 159 tackle equip with necessary accessories (like the tackle of the ships for which England was famous); also punning, after tickle, on 'tick-tack'
 161 fill (i.e. 'with money from the sale of the timber', but ludicrously suggesting the literal 'with trees')
 162 trapsticks (used in the game of trap-ball)
 163 maravedi Spanish copper coin worth sixpence
 164 turf sod of grass, small slab of earth and vegetation pared from the surface

cages (Traditionally, the bottom of the birdcage was lined with freshly cut turf.)
 165 gold-finders people who scavenge through dung, looking for anything salvagable 173 cog (a) cheat (b) jest (c) brake lie (a) tell lies (b) lie down (c) lie still, stop toss (a) move about restlessly (b) drink (c) punish by tossing in a blanket 174 tumble (a) perform acrobatic tricks (b) toss, be tossed (c) stumble, fall
 175 belly womb (like twins; but here suggesting that they will take turns falling into, or performing acrobatic tricks in, the same vagina)
 176 Gypsified turned into Gypsies (made-up word)
 177 tipsified intoxicated (made-up word)
 179 put down outclass elephant and camels (a) exotic performing animals (b) gift of an elephant and five camels, given to King James by the King of Spain in 1623

3.1.3 Brave excellent bad houses (suggesting 'whorehouses')
 4 naughty (a) inferior, poor quality (b) immoral mistress woman in authority, female head of household (but suggesting 'kept woman, illicit sexual partner')
 5 caroché luxurious coach (urban status symbol) 7 will desire (but punning on the nickname 'Will')
 8 carriage (a) what is being carried (b) behaviour, bodily deportment
 10 bar place in court where the accused stands
 15 annuity yearly allowance
 19 way path (to heaven)
 23 temple body (1 Corinthians 3:16)
 24 her ruins her (Clara's) despoiled condition, ruined reputation 26 mistress to beloved by 30 Faith (by my) faith (a mild oath)
 31 show look
 34 piebald black streaked with white

35 SOTO If the devil were a tailor, he would scarce know us in these gaberdines.
SANCHO If a tailor were the devil, I'd not give a louse for him, if he should bring up this fashion amongst gentlemen and make it common.
RODERIGO
40 The freshness of the morning be upon you both!
SANCHO
The saltness of the evening be upon you single!
RODERIGO
Be not displeas'd that I abruptly thus Break in upon your favours. Your strange habits Invite me with desire to understand
Both what you are and whence, because no coun-45 try—
And I have measured some—shows me your like.
SOTO Our like? No, we should be sorry we or our clothes should be like fish: new, stale, and stinking in three days.
50 SANCHO [to Roderigo] If you ask whence we are, we are Egyptian Spaniards; if what, we are—[singing] 'ut, re, mi, fa, sol'—jugglers, tumblers, anything, anywhere, everywhere.
RODERIGO
A good fate hither leads me by the hand.
55 Your quality I love. The scenical school
Has been my tutor long in Italy
(For that's my country); there have I put on Sometimes the shape of a comedian,
And now and then some other.
SANCHO
60 A player! A brother of the tiring-house!
SOTO
A bird of the same feather!
SANCHO [to Roderigo] Welcome! Wou't turn Gypsy?

RODERIGO
I can nor dance nor sing; but if my pen
From my invention can strike music tunes,
My head and brains are yours.
SOTO A calf's head and brains were better for my stomach. 65
SANCHO A rib of poetry!
SOTO A modicum of the Muses! A horseshoe of Helicon!
SANCHO [to Roderigo] A magpie of Parnassus! Welcome again! I am a fire-brand of Phoebus myself; we'll invoke together—so you will not steal my plot. 70
RODERIGO 'Tis not my fashion.
SANCHO But nowadays 'tis all the fashion.
SOTO [to Roderigo] What was the last thing you writ—a comedy?
RODERIGO
No, 'twas a sad, too sad a tragedy. 75
[Aside] Under these eaves I'll shelter me.
[Enter the old Father of the Gypsies, Eugenia, Preciosa, and the Gypsies] SANCHO See, here comes our company. [To Gypsies] Do our tops spin as you would have 'em?
SOTO [to Gypsies] If not, whip us round.
SANCHO [to Father] I sent you a letter to tell you we were 80 upon a march.
FATHER And you are welcome.—[Aside to Eugenia] Yet these fools will trouble us!
EUGENIA [aside to Father] Rich fools shall buy our trouble.
SANCHO Hang lands! It's nothing but trees, stones, and 85 dirt.—Old father, I have gold to keep up our stock.— Precious Preciosa (for whose sake I have thus transformed myself out of a gentleman into a Gypsy), thou shalt not want sweet rhymes, my little musk-cat—for besides myself, here's an Italian poet, on whom I pray 90 throw your welcomes.
OMNES He's welcome!

35 devil...tailor (associated because a tailor's discarded cloth box was called 'hell')
36 gaberdines coarse loose frocks with long sleeves 41 saltness lecherousness (but suggested by the contrast between 'fresh' and 'salt' water, or fresh food and food artificially preserved in salt)
single (a) alone (b) unmarried
48-9 fish...three days (proverbial: Tilley F310)
51 Egyptian Gypsy (because of the false belief that they originated in Egypt) 51-2 ut...sol i.e. musicians, identified by the first five notes of the musical scale (perhaps singing William Byrd's song of that title)
55 quality profession
scenical school commedia dell'arte
58 comedian (a) actor (b) playwright
60 player actor
brother fellow-member of a guild

tiring-house backstage area, dressing room 61 bird...feather (proverbial—but here also suggesting the notorious affection of actors for fine clothes, epitomized by fashionable and expensive feathers)
Wou't wouldst thou
62 can nor can neither 65 calf's...brains (a) part of the early modern diet (b) stupid person 66 rib of poetry (as in 'rib of pork' or 'rib of poultry', perhaps punning on Latin porcaria) 67 modicum small quantity of food (punning on Latin modus, musical or grammatical mode, mood, measure) horseshoe (because the fountain of the muses allegedly sprung from the hoofprint of the winged horse Pegasus, but also perhaps alluding to a plant of that name) Helicon stream associated with the muses of Greek mythology, who inspired poets 68 magpie (bird famous for chattering and pilfering)

Parnassus mountain in Greece, sacred to Apollo and the muses; hence, literature, poetry
69 fire-brand piece of wood kindled by the fire, person inspired by the power (but also 'person who is doomed to burn in hell')
Phoebus Apollo, god of poetry and the sun
invoke pray for inspiration, in tone
75 tragedy i.e. his rape of Clara
78 tops (a) spinning tops (b) foretop, forelock (object of a recurrent comic routine of the clown Rowley)
82 Yet still 89 musk-cat i.e. courtesan (an insult, though Sancho uses it as though it were a complement)

- PRECIOSA [to Roderigo]
 Sir, you're most welcome; I love a poet,
 So he writes chastely. If your pen can sell me
 95 Any smooth quaint romances which I may sing,
 You shall have bays and silver.
- RODERIGO Pretty heart, no selling;
 What comes from me is free.
- SANCHE And me too.
- FATHER [to Roderigo]
 We shall be glad to use you, sir. Our sports
 Must be an orchard, bearing several trees
 100 And fruits of several taste; one pleasure dulls.
 A time may come when we, besides these pastimes,
 May from the grandes and the dons of Spain
 Have leave to try our skill even on the stage—
 And then your wits may help us.
- SANCHE And mine too.
- RODERIGO [to Father]
 They are your servants.
- 105 PRECIOSA [to all] Trip softly through the streets
 Till we arrive (you know at whose house, father).
Song
- SANCHE [sings]
 Trip it, Gypsies, trip it fine,
 Show tricks and lofty capers!
 At threading needles we repine,
 110 And leaping over rapiers:
 Pindy-pandy rascal toys!
 We scorn cutting purses.
 Though we live by making noise,
 For cheating none can curse us.
- 115 Over high ways, over low,
 And over stones and gravel
 Though we trip it on the toe
 And thus for silver travel,
 Though our dances waste our backs,
 120 At night fat capons mend 'em;
 Eggs (well brewed in buttered sack),
 Our wenches say, befriend 'em.
- O that all the world were mad!
 Then should we have fine dancing.
 Hobby-horses would be had 125 And brave girls keep a-prancing;
 Beggars would on cock-horse ride
 And boobies fall a-roaring
 And cuckolds (though no horns be spied)
 Be one another goring. 130
- Welcome, poet, to our ging!
 Make rhymes; we'll give thee reason.
 Canary bees thy brains shall sting;
 Mulled sack did ne'er speak treason.
 Peter-see-me shall wash thy noll
 135 And malaga glasses fox 'ee.
 If, poet, thou toss not bowl for bowl,
 Thou shalt not kiss a doxy. Exeunt [dancing]
- Enter Fernando, Francisco de Cárcamo, Don Juan, Pedro, Maria, Luis, and Diego* 3.2
- FERNANDO
 Luis de Castro, since you circled are
 In such a golden ring of worthy friends,
 Pray, let me question you about that business
 You and I last conferred on.
- LUIS My lord, I wish it.
- FERNANDO
 Then, gentlemen, though you all know this man,
 5 Yet now look on him well, and you shall find Such mines of Spanish honour in his bosom
 As but in few are treasured.
- LUIS O, my good lord—
- FERNANDO
 He's son to that De Castro o'er whose tomb
 Fame stands, writing a book, which will take up 10 The age of time to fill it with the stories
 Of his great acts, and that his honoured father
 Fell in the quarrel of those families,
 His own and Don Alvarez de Castilla's.
- FRANCISCO
 The volume of those quarrels is too large 15
- 94 So if 95 romances Spanish verse genre (like English historical ballad)
 96 bays laurel (traditional reward of poets)
 100 several taste distinct flavour
 106.I Song For the music, see Companion,
 p. 172.
 107 Trip dance, move nimbly
 108 capers frolics, leaps 109 threading needles (an old-fashioned child's dance/game, but also conventional domestic work for women) 110 leaping over rapiers (a feature of folk-dances, but also suggesting the conventional male work of warfare) 111 Pindy-pandy refrain of a child's game involving switching hands or places (like 'handy-dandy')
- 118 travel (a) roam (b) work, travail 121 Eggs (considered an aphrodisiac)
 sack Spanish wine
 125 Hobby-horses (a) in the English morris dance, the figure of a horse, worn by a dancer (b) a child's toy horse (c) a promiscuous woman 127 on cock-horse ride (a) achieve an exalted social position, riding a stallion
 (b) ride on a toy horse (instead of a real one) 128 boobies nincompoops 129 horns (popularly associated with cuckolds)
 131 ging gang
 132 rhymes...reason (proverbially contrasted)
- 133 Canary Spanish wine 134 Mulled sack heated wine mixed with sugar, spices, egg-yolk, etc.
 ne'er speak treason (because in vino veritas, 'in wine there is truth') 135 Peter-see-me Spanish wine (named for Pedro Ximene)
 noll head, noddle
 136 fox intoxicate
 'ee thee
 137 bowl large drinking cup 138 doxy harlot (specifically, a Gypsy's mistress)
 3.2.7 mines (associated with Spain because of precious metals mined in the Spanish
 New World)
 12 that (Fame stands writing) that

And too wide printed in our memory.

LUIS
Would it had ne'er come forth!

OMNES
So wish we all.

FERNANDO
But here's a son as matchless as the father,
For he mends bravery. He lets blood his spleen,
Tears out the leaf in which the picture stands
Of slain De Castro, casts a hill of sand
On all revenge, and stifles it.

OMNES
'Tis done nobly!

FERNANDO
For I by him am courted to solicit
The king for the repeal of poor Alvarez,
Who lives a banished man—some say, in Naples.

PEDRO
Some say, in Aragon.

LUIS
No matter where.
That paper folds in it my hand and heart,
Petitioning the royalty of Spain
To free the good old man and call him home.
But what hope hath your lordship that these beams
Of grace shall shine upon me?

FERNANDO
The word royal.

OMNES
And that's enough.

LUIS
Then since this sluice is drawn up to increase
The stream, with pardon of these honoured friends
Let me set ope another, and that's this:
That you, my lord Don Pedro, and this lady
Your noble wife, would in this fair assembly—
If still you hold me tenant to your favour—
Repeat the promise you so oft have made me,
Touching the beauteous Clara for my wife.

PEDRO
What I possess in her, before these lords
I freely once more give you.

MARIA
And what's mine,
To you (as right heir to it) I resign.

OMNES [to Luis]
What would you more?

LUIS
What would I more? The tree bows down his head
Gently to have me touch it, but—when I offer
To pluck the fruit—the top branch grows so high,
To mock my reaching hand, up it does fly.
I have the mother's smile, the daughter's frown.

OMNES
O, you must woo hard!

FERNANDO [to Luis]
Woo her well; she's thine own.

JUAN [aside]
That law holds not 'mongst Gypsies. I shoot hard,
And am wide off from the mark.
Flourish [within]

FERNANDO [to Francisco]
Is this, my lord, your music?

FRANCISCO
None of mine.
Enter Soto [as a Gypsy], with a cornet in his hand

SOTO
A crew of Gypsies with desire
To show their sports are at your gates a-fire.

FRANCISCO
How, how, my gates a-fire, knave?

JUAN [aside]
Art panting?

FERNANDO [to Soto]
I am a-fire, I'm sure!
What are the things they do?

SOTO
They frisk, they caper, dance and sing,
Tell fortunes too (which is a very fine thing).
They tumble—how? not up and down,
As tumblers do, but from town to town.
Antics they have and Gypsy-masquing,
And toys which you may have for asking.
They come to devour nor wine nor good cheer
But to earn money, if any be here.
(But being asked, as I suppose,
Your answer will be, 'in your t'other hose'.)
For there's not a Gypsy amongst 'em that begs,
But gets his living by his tongue and legs.
If therefore you please, dons, they shall come in:
Now I have ended, let them begin.

OMNES
Ay, ay, by any means.

FRANCISCO
But, fellow, bring you music along with you too?

SOTO
Yes, my lord, both loud music and still music: the loud is that which you have heard, and the still is that which no man can hear. Exit

FERNANDO
A fine knave!

FRANCISCO
There is report of a fair Gypsy,
A pretty little toy, whom all our gallants
In Madrid flock to look on: this she, trow?

JUAN
Yes, sure 'tis she. [Aside] I should be sorry else.
Enter the old Father of the Gypsies, Eugenia, Preciosa, Roderigo [disguised as an Italian],

16 wide printed (a) widely reprinted (b) printed in large type or on large pages
17 come forth (a) happened (b) been published 19 mends (a) amends, reforms, improves upon (b) mends, patches bravery (a) bragging, machismo (b) extravagant apparel

lets blood bleeds, drains blood from (in order to reduce a perceived excess) spleen (considered the source of anger and resentment)
20 leaf page (of the imaginary printed book)
62 Antics fantastic dances
Gypsy-masquing (an allusion to Ben Jonson's court masque, The Gypsies)

Metamorphosed. See Introduction.)
67 in your t'other hose proverbial excuse for niggardliness
75 still music quiet music (usually flutes and recorders), but punning on 'silent' 78 fair beautiful, but also (paradoxically) with a pale complexion
80 trow do you think

	Sancho, Soto, and all the Gypsies, [singing this] song	OMNES	Whose gates of love being open thrown, We enter, and then the town's our own, Whose gates of love being open thrown, We enter, and then the town's our own.	110
	[FATHER]
	Come, follow your leader, follow! Our convoy be Mars and Apollo! The van comes brave up here;
85	ANSWER	FERNANDO	A very dainty thing!
	As hotly comes the rear.	FRANCISCO	A handsome creature!
	OMNES	PEDRO
	Our knackers are the fifes and drums. Sa, sa, the Gypsies' army comes!		Look what a pretty pit there's in her chin!	115
	[SECOND GYPSY]	JUAN [aside]	Pit? 'Tis a grave to bury lovers in.
	Horsemen we need not fear; There's none but footmen here.	RODERIGO [aside]	My father?—Disguise guard me!
90	The horse sure charge without— Or, if they wheel about,	SANCHO [aside to Soto]	Soto, there's De Cortes my guardian, but he smells not us.
	OMNES	SOTO [aside to Sancho]	Peace, brother Gypsy. [To nobles] Would anyone here know his fortune?	120
	Our knackers are the shot that fly, Pit-a-pat rattling in the sky.	OMNES	Good fortunes, all of us!
	[THIRD GYPSY]	PEDRO [to Soto]	'Tis I, sir, needs a good one. Come, sir, what's mine? [Soto reads his palm]
95	If once the great ordnance play (That's laughing), yet run not away But stand the push of pike: Scorn can but basely strike.	MARIA	Mine and my husband's fortunes keep together; Who is't tells mine?	125
	OMNES	SANCHO I, I.	Hold up, madam; fear not your pocket, for I ha' but two hands. [He reads her palm]
	Then let our armies join and sing, And pit-a-pat make our knackers ring.		You are sad, or mad, or glad For a couple of cocks that cannot be had; Yet when abroad they have picked store of grain, Doodle-doo they will cry on your dunghills again.	130
	[FOURTH GYPSY]	MARIA	Indeed I miss an idle gentleman And a thing of his, a fool—but neither sad Nor mad for them. Would that were all the lead Lying at my heart!
100	Arm, arm! What bands are those? They cannot be sure our foes. We'll not draw up our force Nor muster any horse—
	OMNES	PEDRO [to Soto]	What look'st thou on so long?	135
105	For since they pleased to view our sight, Let's this way, this way give delight.	SOTO	So long! Do you think good fortunes are fresh herrings, to come in shoals? Bad fortunes are like mackerel at midsummer. You have had a sore loss o' late.
	[FIFTH GYPSY]	PEDRO	I have indeed; what is't?	140
	A council of war let's call! Look either to stand or fall. If our weak army stands, Thank all these noble hands,	SOTO	I wonder it makes you not mad, for—

82 FATHER The stanzas are numbered '1' to '5', and in each case a single voice is answered by a chorus; it seems logical that the Gypsy's leader should sing 'follow your leader', but who sings each of the remaining stanzas is anyone's guess.
83 Mars and Apollo gods of war and poetry
84 van vanguard
86 knackers castanets
89 footmen (a) infantry (b) dancers
96 pike spear-like weapon
100 bands troops

114 thing Preciosa (who has presumably been conspicuous in the singing and/or dancing)
115 pit dimple
121 Would...know does...wish to know
121-94 fortune...eyes (alludes to the fortune-telling in Jonson's Gypsies Metamorphosed)
129 cocks (a) roosters (b) spirited men (c) penises
130 picked (a) pecked (b) stolen store plenty 131 Doodle-doo cry of a rooster (but perhaps punning on doodle as noodle-head: see Pompey Doodle in Weapons)

dunghills proverbially, every rooster is proud of his own dunghill; domesticated 'dunghill cocks' are cowardly (by comparison with fighting cocks)
132 miss do not know the whereabouts of (without any sense of emotional bereavement)
134 lead heaviness
137-8 like...midsummer i.e. plentiful
138 sore loss Soto means his own disappearance; Pedro means Clara's rape

Through a gap in your ground thence late have been stole
 A very fine ass and a very fine foal.
 Take heed, for I speak not by habs and by nabs:
 145 Ere long you'll be horribly troubled with scabs.
 PEDRO
 I am now so; go, silly fool.
 SOTO [aside] I ha' gi'n't him.
 SANCHO [aside] O Soto, that ass and foal fattens me!
 FERNANDO
 The mother of the Gypsies, what can she do?
 150 I'll have a bout with her.
 [He goes to Eugenia, who reads his palm]
 JUAN I, with the Gypsy daughter.
 FRANCISCO To her, boy.
 [Juan goes to Preciosa, who reads his palm]
 EUGENIA [reading Fernando's palm]
 From you went a dove away,
 Which ere this had been more white 155 Than the silver robe of day;
 Her eyes, the moon has none so bright.
 Sat she now upon your hand,
 Not the crown of Spain could buy't;
 But 'tis flown to such a land,
 160 Never more shall you come nigh't.—
 Ha! Yet, if palmistry tell true,
 This dove again may fly to you.
 FERNANDO
 Thou art a lying witch; I'll hear no more.
 SANCHO If you be so hot, sir, we can cool you with a song.
 165 SOTO [to Fernando] And when that song's done, we'll heat you again with a dance.
 LUIS [to Pedro]
 Stay, dear sir; send for Clara, let her know
 Her fortune.
 MARIA 'Tis too well known.
 LUIS 'Twill make her merry
 To be in this brave company.

PEDRO Good Diego, Fetch her. Exit Diego
 FRANCISCO [to Gypsies]
 What's that old man? Has he cunning too? 170
 OMNES
 More than all we!
 LUIS Has he? I'll try his spectacles.
 [He goes to the Father of the Gypsies, who reads his palm]
 FERNANDO [aside]
 Ha! Roderigo there? Forsooth, the scholar
 That went to Salamanca!—takes he degrees
 P'th' school of Gypsies? Let the fish alone,
 Give him line. This is the dove—the dove?—the raven 175
 That beldam mocked me with.
 LUIS [to Father] What worms pick you out there now?
 FATHER
 This: when this line the other crosses,
 Art tells me 'tis a book of losses.—
 Bend your hand thus.—O, here I find 180 You've lost a ship in a great wind.
 LUIS
 Lying rogue, I ne'er had any.
 FATHER Hark: as I gather,
 That great ship was 'De Castro' called (your father).
 LUIS
 And I must hew that rock that split him. Vengeance!
 FATHER Nay, an you threaten—
 [He goes away from Luis]
 FRANCISCO
 And what's, Don Juan, thy fortune?—[To Preciosa]
 Thou'rt long fumbling at it. 185
 JUAN
 She tells me tales of the moon, sir.
 PRECIOSA [to Francisco]
 And now 'tis come to the sun, sir.
 Your son would ride, the youth would run,
 The youth would sail, the youth would fly!

142 late lately stole stolen (but playing on 'stole away', sneaked off)
 143 fine (a) excellent (b) well-dressed ass (a) donkey (b) dumbass, fool
foal colt (but punning on 'fool')
 144 by habs... nabs at random
 145 scabs (a) itching disease (b) scoundrels 147 gi'n't him 'given it to him': (a) delivered the prophecy (b) given him a good beating, lambasted him
 149 mother female elder (Eugenia)
 150 bout (a) turn (b) sexual encounter 153 dove (often used for an innocent woman or child; but also suggesting the dove Noah sent out, which returned with an olive branch, and thus became an emblem of peace: see Genesis 8:8-12)
 154 white white-haired, old 155 silver robe (emblematic attire of the sun-god)

156 moon personified as the goddess
 Cynthia or Diana
 157 upon your hand (like a tame bird)
 159 flown (playing on the sense 'fled')
 160 nigh't near it (the land, or the dove) 161 Yet (a) nevertheless (b) still, at some future time palmistry palm-reading, fortune-telling 164 hot angry
 170 cunning (a) occult knowledge (b) cleverness
 171 all we all of us spectacles magical instruments for seeing the unseen
 174 school... fish (punning)
 175 raven Presumably Roderigo is dressed in black; he is certainly morally black, in contrast to the whiteness of the innocent dove.
 176 beldam (a) old woman (b) hag, witch worms (as though the sustained attention to his palm were for the purpose of picking out parasites)

 178 Art technical knowledge, science book of losses record of suffering, debit account
 182 great ship warship 186 moon (a) something unattainable, insubstantial, fantastic (b) goddess of chastity
 187 sun (punning on 'son'). This initiates an allusion to Phaeton, son of the sun-god, who borrowed his father's chariot to ride/fly across the sky (disastrously).
 188 ride (a) go on a journey on horseback or by coach, as the sun-god was imagined riding across the sky (b) mount sexually 189 fly (a) travel through the air (b) run away

- 190 He's tying a knot will ne'er be done.
He shoots, and yet has ne'er an eye;
You have two, 'twere good you lent him one—
And a heart too, for he has none.
- FRANCISCO Hoyday! Lend one of mine eyes?
- 195 SANCHO [to the Gypsies] They give us nothing; we'd best put on a bold face and ask it.
[He sings a song
Now that from the hive
You gathered have the honey,
Our bees but poorly thrive
200 Unless the banks be sunny;
Then let your sun and moon
(Your gold and silver) shine.
My thanks shall humming fly to you,
- OMNES [sing]
And mine, and mine, and mine.
- FATHER [sings]
205 See, see, you Gypsy-toys,
You mad girls, you merry boys,
A bon voyage we've made.
Loud peals must then be had.
If I a Gypsy be,
210 A crack-rope I'm for thee:
O, here's a golden ring!
Such clappers please a king,
- OMNES [sing]
Such clappers please a king.
- FATHER [sings]
215 You (pleased) may pass away;
Then let your bell-ropes sway:
Now chime, 'tis holiday.
- OMNES [sing]
Now chime, 'tis holiday.
- PRECIOSA
No more of this, pray, father; fall to your dancing.
[Gypsy] dance
- LUIS
Clara will come too late now.
- FERNANDO [to Gypsies] 'Tis great pity,
220 Besides your songs, dances, and other pastimes,
You do not, as our Spanish actors do,
Make trial of a stage.
- FATHER We are, sir, about it—
So please your high authority to sign us
- Some warrant to confirm us.
- FERNANDO My hand shall do't,
And bring the best in Spain to see your sports. 225
- FATHER Which to set off, this gentleman, a scholar—
- RODERIGO [aside]
Pox on you!
- FATHER Will write for us.
- FERNANDO [to Roderigo] A Spaniard, sir?
- RODERIGO No, my lord, an Italian.
- FERNANDO [aside] Denies
His country too? My son sings Gypsy-ballads!—
Keep as you are. We'll see your poet's vein, 230
And yours for playing: time is not ill spent That's thus laid out in harmless merriment.
- Exit Gypsies dancing*
- PEDRO [to Francisco]
My lord of Cárcamo, for this entertainment
You shall command our loves.
- FRANCISCO You're nobly welcome.
- PEDRO The evening grows upon us: lords, to all 235
A happy time of day.
- FERNANDO The like to you,
Don Pedro.
- LUIS [to Maria]
To my heart's sole lady
Pray let my service humbly be remembered;
We only missed her presence.
- MARIA I shall truly Report your worthy love. Exit Pedro, Maria
- FERNANDO You shall no further; 240
Indeed, my lords, you shall not.
- FRANCISCO With your favour,
We will attend you home.
Enter Diego
- DIEGO Where's Don Pedro?—
O sir!
- LUIS Why, what's the matter?
- DIEGO The lady Clara,
Passing near to my lord corregidor's house,
Met with a strange mischance.
- FERNANDO How? What mischance? 245
- DIEGO The jester that so late arrived at court

190 knot wedding knot, wedlock done ended (because marriage is an eternal relationship) or completed (because she does not intend to consummate it, or 'do' it, sexually)

191 shoots (a) fires a gun or shoots an arrow (b) ejaculates eye (a) ability to see well (b) vagina 192 lent . . . one (to 'give' or 'lend an eye' = to keep watch)

193 heart . . . none (a) he's heartless (b) she has not given him her heart

200 banks (a) rural slopes (b) riversides, particularly of the Thames in London

210 crack-rope rogue (likely to hang)

211 golden ring wealthy circle (or a gift given by one of the onstage spectators)

212 clappers bells (but perhaps also 'beggars', who begged with a dish called a clapper)

king (not in the dramatis personae, but alluding to the pleasure King James took in Jonson's masque of Gypsies)

215 sway swing

229 Gypsy-ballads ballads were the most despised of literary forms (as Gypsies were a despised class of people)

246 jester King James's court jester, Archy Armstrong, visited Madrid as part of the entourage of Prince Charles and the Duke of Buckingham: on 16 May 1623 Joseph Mead reported a rumour that 'Archy the King's fool, fell there' [in Madrid] 'from an horse and is killed.' (He survived.)

(And there was welcome for his country's sake),
 By importunity of some friends, it seems,
 Had borrowed from the Gentleman of your Horse
 250 The backing of your mettled Barbary—
 On which being mounted, whilst a number gazed
 To hear what jests he could perform on horseback,
 The headstrong beast (unused to such a rider)
 Bears the press of people back before him;
 255 With which through the lady Clara meeting
 Fainted, and there fell down—not bruised, I hope,
 But frightened and entranced.

LUIS Ill-destined mischief!
 FERNANDO [to Diego]
 Where have you left her?
 DIEGO At your house, my lord.
 A servant coming forth, and knowing who 260 The lady was, conveyed her to a chamber.
 A surgeon, too, is sent for.

FERNANDO Had she been my daughter,
 My care could not be greater than it shall be
 For her recure.

LUIS But if she miscarry,
 I am the most unhappy man that lives. Exit

FERNANDO
 265 Diego, coast at once about the fields,
 And overtake Don Pedro and his wife;
 They newly parted from us.

DIEGO I'll run speedily. Exit

FERNANDO
 A strange mischance!—But what I have, my lord
 Francisco, this day noted, I may tell you:
 270 An accident of merriment and wonder.

FRANCISCO
 Indeed, my lord?

FERNANDO I have not thoughts enough
 About me to imagine what th'event
 Can come to. 'Tis, indeed, about my son;
 Hereafter you may counsel me.

FRANCISCO Most gladly.—
Enter Luis
 How fares the lady?

275 LUIS Callèd back to life,
 But full of sadness.

FERNANDO Talks she nothing?

LUIS Nothing—
 For when the women that attend on her Demanded how she did, she turned about,
 And answered with a sigh. When I came near 280 And by the love I bore her begged a word
 Of hope to comfort me in her well-doing,
 Before she would reply, from her fair eyes

She greets me with a bracelet of her tears—
 Then wished me not to doubt she was 'too well',
 Entreats that she may sleep without disturbance
 285 Or company until her father came.
 And thus I left her.

FRANCISCO Sir, she's past the worst.
 Young maids are oft so troubled.
Enter Pedro and Maria

FERNANDO Here come they
 You talk of.—Sir, your daughter, for your comfort,
 Is now upon amendment.

MARIA O, my lord,
 290 You speak an angel's voice!

FERNANDO Pray, in and visit her;
 I'll follow instantly. Exit Pedro, Maria
 You shall not part
 Without a cup of wine, my lord.

FRANCISCO 'Tis now
 Too troublesome a time.—Which way take you, Don Luis?

LUIS No matter which; for till I hear
 295 My Clara be recovered, I am nothing.—
 My lord corregidor, I am your servant
 For this free entertainment.

FERNANDO You have conquered me
 In noble courtesy.

LUIS O, that no art
 300 But love itself can cure a love-sick heart! Exeunt

Clara [discovered] in a chair, Pedro and Maria [standing] by her 3.3

MARIA Clara, hope of mine age!

PEDRO Soul of my comfort!
 Kill us not both at once. Why dost thou speed
 Thine eye in such a progress 'bout these walls?

CLARA Yon large window
 5 Yields some fair prospect. Good my lord, look out
 And tell me what you see there.

PEDRO Easy suit.
 [He opens the curtain]
 Clara, it overviews a spacious garden,
 Amidst which stands an alabaster fountain,
 A goodly one.

CLARA Indeed, my lord!

MARIA Thy griefs grow wild,
 And will mislead thy judgement through thy weak-10 ness,
 If thou obey thy weakness.

CLARA
 Who owns these glorious buildings?

247 his country's i.e. England's 249 Gentleman...Horse steward of your stable 250 backing saddling and riding
 mettled spirited Barbary famous breed of horse, associated with North Africa

 254 Bears...back forces...backward 263 recure recovery
 miscarry perish
 270 accident incident
 272 th'event the outcome

281 well-doing well-being 283 bracelet little pair (brace + diminutive suffix -let, like 'ringlet') 290 upon amendment improving
 298 free entertainment liberal hospitality
 3.3.3 progress (royal) journey

	PEDRO	Don Fernando	Can draw him thence.
		De Azevedo, the corregidor	CLARA	My lord, d'ye know this crucifix? 40
		Of Madrid, a true noble gentleman.		[She reveals the crucifix]
	CLARA		FERNANDO
		May I not see him?		You drive me to amazement! 'Twas my son's,
15	MARIA	See him, Clara? Why?		A legacy bequeathed him from his mother
	CLARA [to Pedro]			Upon her deathbed, dear to him as life.
		A truly noble gentleman, you said, sir?		On earth there cannot be another treasure
	PEDRO			He values at like rate as he does this. 45
		I did.	CLARA
		Enter Fernando		O, then I am a cast-away!
		Lo, here he comes in person.—	MARIA	How's that?
		We are, my lord, your servants.	PEDRO
	FERNANDO	Good, no compliment.—		Alas, she will grow frantic!
		Young lady, there attends below a surgeon	CLARA [to Fernando]	In my bosom,
20		Of worthy fame and practice; is't your pleasure		Next to my heart, my lord, I have laid up,
		To be his patient?		In bloody characters, a tale of horror.
	CLARA [rising]	With your favour, sir,		[She gives him a paper, written with blood]
		May I impart some few but needful words		Pray, read the paper—and if there you find 50
		Of secrecy to you, to you yourself,		Aught that concerns a maid undone and miserable,
		None but yourself?		Made so by one of yours, call back the piety
	FERNANDO	You may.		Of nature to the goodness of a judge,
	PEDRO	May I not hear 'em?		An upright judge, not of a partial father;
	MARIA			For do not wonder that I live to suffer 55
		Nor I?		Such a full weight of wrongs, but wonder rather
	CLARA			That I have lived to speak them. Thou, great man,
		O yes.—Pray, sit, my lord.		Yet read, read on, and as thou read'st consider
		[Fernando sits]		What I have suffered, what thou ought'st to do,
25	FERNANDO	Say on.		Thine own name, fatherhood, and my dishonour: 60
	CLARA			Be just as heaven and fate are, that by miracle
		You have been married?		Have in my weakness wrought a strange discovery.
	FERNANDO	To a wife, young lady,		Truth copied from my heart is texted there.
		Who (whiles the heavens did lend her me) was fruitful		Let now my shame be thoroughly understood;
		In all those virtues which styles woman good.		Sins are heard farthest when they cry in blood. 65
	CLARA		FERNANDO
		And you had children by her?		True, true, they do not cry but holler here.
	FERNANDO	'Had'—'tis true;		This is the trumpet of a soul drowned deep
30		Now have but one, a son, and he yet lives.		In the unfathomed seas of matchless sorrows.—
		The daughter (as if in her birth the mother		I must lock fast the door. Exit
		Had perfected the errand she was sent for
		Into the world) from that hour took her life	MARIA	I have no words
		In which the other that gave it her lost hers;		To call for vengeance.
35		Yet shortly she—unhappily, but fatally—	PEDRO	I am lost in marvel. 70
		Perished at sea.		Enter Fernando
	CLARA	Sad story!	FERNANDO [to Clara]
	FERNANDO	Roderigo,		Sit, pray, sit as you sat before.
		My son—		[Clara sits]
	CLARA	How is he called, sir?		White paper,
	FERNANDO	Roderigo.		This should be innocence; these letters gules
		He lives at Salamanca—and I fear		Should be the honest oracles of revenge.
		That neither time, persuasions, nor his fortunes		What's beauty but a perfect white and red?
				Both here (well mixed) limn truth so beautiful 75

14 true honest, truly

18 Good (vocative, 'you good person')

32 perfected completed

35 unhappily by bad luck, sadly fatally by destiny

40 d'ye do you

47 frantic insane

49 characters letters

54 not of not (the goodness or piety) of 60 Thine (consider) your (or a line may have been accidentally omitted)

64 thoroughly thoroughly

72 gules red (heraldic term)

74 white and red (conventional Petrarchan ideal of female complexion)

75 limn draw, paint

That to distrust it, as I am a father,
Speaks me as foul as rape hath spoke my son.
'Tis true?

CLARA 'Tis true.

FERNANDO [kneeling]

Then mark me how I kneel
Before the high tribunal of your injuries.
Thou too-too-much-wronged maid, scorn not my 80 tears,
For these are tears of rage, not tears of love.—
Thou father of this too-too-much-wronged maid,
Thou mother of her counsels and her cares,
I do not plead for pity to a villain.
85 O, let him die as he hath lived, dishonourably, Basely and cursedly! I plead for pity
To my till-now-untainted blood and honour.
Teach me how I may now be just and cruel—
For henceforth I am childless.

CLARA Pray, sir, rise.

You wrong your place and age.

90 FERNANDO [rising] Point me my grave
In some obscure by-path, where never memory
Nor mention of my name may be found out.

CLARA

My lord, I can weep with ye, nay, weep for ye,
As you for me; your passions are instructions,
95 And prompt my faltering tongue to beg at least
A noble satisfaction, though not revenge.

FERNANDO

Speak that again.

CLARA Can you procure no balm
To heal a wounded name?

FERNANDO O, thou'rt as fair

In mercy as in beauty! Wilt thou live, 100 An I'll be thy physician?

CLARA I'll be yours.

FERNANDO Don Pedro, we'll to counsel;

This daughter shall be ours.

[Fernando sits Clara in the chair]

Sleep, sleep, young angel!

My care shall wake about thee.

CLARA Heaven is gracious,

And I am eased.

105 FERNANDO We will be yet more private.
Night curtains o'er the world; soft dreams rest with thee!

The best revenge is to reform our crimes:
Then time crowns sorrows, sorrows sweeten times.

Exeunt

Incipit Actus Quartus

A shout within. Enter [at one door] the old Father of the Gypsies, Sancho, Soto, Antonio, Carlo, Eugenia, Preciosa, Christiana, and [at another door] Don Juan

4. I

OMNES [to Juan] Welcome, welcome, welcome!

SOTO More sacks to the mill.

SANCHO More thieves to the sacks.

FATHER Peace!

PRECIOSA [to Juan]

I give you now my welcome without noise.

5

JUAN 'Tis music to me.

He offers to kiss her

OMNES O sir!

SANCHO [to Juan] You must not be in your mutton before
we are out of our veal.

SOTO [to Juan] Stay for vinegar to your oysters; no opening 10 till then.

EUGENIA [to Juan]

No kissing till you're sworn.

JUAN Swear me then quickly.

I have brought gold for my admission.

FATHER [taking the gold]

What you bring, leave—and what you leave, count lost.

SANCHO I brought all my teeth, two are struck out; them
15 I count lost, so must you.

SOTO I brought all my wits; half I count lost, so must you.

JUAN [to Preciosa]

To be as you are, I lose father, friends,

Birth, fortunes, all the world.—What will you do

Wi'th' beast I rode on hither?

20

SANCHO A beast? Is't a mule? Send him to Mullah Crag-awhee in Barbary.

SOTO [to Juan] Is't an ass? Give it to a lawyer, for in Spain they ride upon none else.

JUAN

Kill him by any means—lest, being pursued,

25

The beast betray me.

SOTO He's a beast betrays any man.

SANCHO Except a bailiff to be pumped.

90 place (high) social position

Point appoint

4.1.8 in (a) partaking of (b) sexually penetrating

mutton (a) flesh of an adult sheep

(b) flesh of a sexually active woman

(c) woman's genitals

9 are . . . veal have finished all our veal

(flesh of a calf, tenderer and more desirable than mutton, and therefore eaten first)

10 oysters (slang for 'female genitals')

21 Mullah Islamic spiritual leader (punning on 'mule')

21-2 Crag-a-whee (nonsense-name, suggesting mountainous terrain and stage

Welsh)

23 ass (a) donkey (b) fool

28 bailiff (whom it is legitimate to betray, because they betray others)

pumped (a) roughly punished by being dunked (b) drained of money or information

Act 4 Scene 1

The Spanish Gipsie.

JUAN [to the Gypsies]
 Pray, bury the carcass and the furniture.
 30 SANCHO Do, do; bury the ass's household stuff, and in his skin sew any man that's mad for a woman.
 FATHER
 Do so then; bury it. [To Juan] Now to your oath.
 EUGENIA All things are ready.
 FATHER
 35 Thy best hand lay on this turf of grass.
 There thy heart lies; vow not to pass
 From us two years for sun nor snow,
 For hill nor dale, howe'er winds blow.
 Vow the hard earth to be thy bed
 With her green cushions under thy head, 40 Flow'r banks or moss to be thy board,
 Water thy wine—
 SANCHO And drink like a lord.
 OMNES [sing]
 Kings can have but coronations;
 We are as proud of Gypsy-fashions.
 Dance, sing, and in a well-mixed border
 45 Close this new brother of our order.
 FATHER
 What we get, with us come share;
 You to get must vow to care—
 Nor strike Gypsy, nor stand by
 When strangers strike, but fight or die.
 50 Our Gypsy-wenches are not common;
 You must not kiss a fellow's leman—
 Nor to your own (for one you must)
 In songs send errands of base lust.
 OMNES [sing]
 Dance, sing, and in a well-mixed border
 55 Close this new brother of our order.
 JUAN
 On this turf of grass I vow
 Your laws to keep, your laws allow.
 OMNES A Gypsy! a Gypsy! a Gypsy!
 EUGENIA
 Now choose what maid has yet no mate:
 She's yours.
 60 JUAN Here then fix I my fate.

[He offers to kiss [Preciosa]]
 SANCHO Again fall to before you ha' washed?
 SOTO Your nose in the manger before the oats are measured, jade so hungry?
 FATHER
 Set foot to foot; those garlands hold.
 Teach him how. Now mark what more is told. 65
 By cross arms (the lover's sign),
 Vow—as these flowers themselves entwine,
 Of April's wealth building a throne
 Round—so your love to one or none.
 By those touches of your feet, 70
 You must each night embracing meet,
 Chaste, howe'er disjoined by day;
 You the sun with her must play,
 She to you the marigold,
 To none but you her leaves unfold. 75
 Wake she or sleep, your eyes so charm,
 Want, woe, nor weather do her harm.
 CARLO
 This is your market now of kisses:
 Buy and sell free each other blisses.
 JUAN Most willingly. 80
 [Juan and Preciosa kiss]
 OMNES [sing]
 Holidays, high days, Gypsy fairs,
 When kisses are fairings, and hearts meet in pairs.
 FATHER [to Juan]
 All ceremonies end here. Welcome, brother Gypsy!
 SANCHO And the better to instruct thee, mark what a brave life 'tis all the year long. 85
 Song
 Brave Don, cast your eyes
 On our Gypsy fashions:
 In our antic hay-de-guys
 We go beyond all nations. 90
 Plump Dutch
 At us grutch;
 So do English, so do French.
 He that lopes
 On the ropes,
 Show me such another wrench. 95

- | | | |
|---|--|---|
| 29 furniture trappings (but also 'household stuff') | 52 one you must you must have (only) one wench | rises, and is hence an emblem of fidelity) |
| 30-1 in . . . woman (in contrast to the folktale in which a nagging wife is sown up inside an animal's skin) | 59 what whatever | 77 Want dearth, poverty |
| 36 for despite | maid young woman, virgin | 82 fairings presents bought at a fair |
| 40 board dinner table | 61 fall to (a) start eating (b) lie down for sex | 88 antic grotesque, comic (but also 'ancient') |
| 42 but only | 62 nose (slang for 'penis') | hay-de-guys (a rustic dance) |
| 44 well-mixed gender-mixing, combining men and women | manger (a) trough (b) sumptuous dish | 91 grutch murmur, grudge |
| 45 Close enclose | oats (punning on 'oaths') | 93-4 He . . . ropes the rope-dancer (popular entertainment, often at the rival Hope Theatre) |
| brother fraternal member | 63 jade good-for-nothing (a) horse (b) person | 93 lopes leaps |
| order monastic or aristocratic society | 66 cross crossed, crossing (conventional lover's gesture) | 95 wrench twist of the torso (a dancer's or an acrobat's) |
| 51 leman bedfellow | 73 play act the part of | |
| | 74 marigold (which opens when the sun | |

We no camels have to show,
 Nor elephant with grout head—
 We can dance; he cannot go,
 Because the beast is corn-fed—
 100 No blind bears
 Shedding tears
 For a collier's whipping,
 Apes nor dogs
 Quick as frogs 105 Over cudgels skipping.

Jack-in-boxes, nor decoys,
 Puppets, nor such poor things—
 Nor are we those roaring boys
 That cozen fools with gilt rings;
 110 For an ocean,
 No such motion
 As the city Nineveh.
 Dancing, singing,
 And fine ringing:
 115 You these sports shall hear and see.

Come now, what shall his name be?

PRECIOSA
 His name shall now be Andrew.—Friend Andrew,
 mark me:
 Two years I am to try you. Prove fine gold,
 The uncracked diamond of my faith shall hold.

JUAN
 120 My vows are rocks of adamant.

PRECIOSA
 Two years you are to try me: black when I turn,
 May I meet youth and want, old age and scorn!

JUAN
 Kings' diadems shall not buy thee.

CARLO Do you think
 You can endure the life, and love it?

JUAN
 125 As usurers doat upon their treasure.

SOTO
 But when your face shall be tanned
 Like a sailor's work-a-day hand—

SANCHO
 When your feet shall be galled
 And your noddle be mauled—

SOTO
 When the woods you must forage,
 130 And not meet with poor pease-porridge—

SANCHO
 Be all to-bedabbled, yet lie in no sheet—

SOTO
 With winter's frost, hail, snow, and sleet,
 What life will you say it is then?

JUAN As now, the sweetest.

DIEGO (within) Away! Away! The corregidor has sent for 135 you.

SANCHO (sings)
 Hence merrily fine to get money!
 Dry are the fields, the banks are sunny,
 Silver is sweeter far than honey. 140

Hence bravely, boys! Fly like swallows!
 We for our conies must get mallows.
 Who loves not his dell, let him die at the gallows.

Hence, bonny girls! Foot it trimly!
 Smug up your beetle-brows; none look grimly. 145
 To show a pretty foot, O 'tis seemly!

Smug up your beetle-brows; none look grimly.
 To show a pretty foot, O 'tis seemly!

Exeunt [dancing]

Enter Cardochia, stays Soto

CARDOCHIA
 Do you hear—you, Gypsy, Gypsy?

SOTO Me?

CARDOCHIA
 There's a young Gypsy newly entertained;
 150 Sweet Gypsy, call him back for one two-words,
 And here's a jewel for thee.

96-7 camels... elephant (exotic animals people would pay to see) 97 grout great
 98 go walk
 99 corn-fed i.e. overfed, overweight
 100 blind bears (alluding to the tormenting of captive bears in bear-baiting arenas) 102 For... whipping as a result of being whipped by a coal miner 105 cudgels (the trainer's stick, over which animals were taught to jump)
 106 decoys swindlers 107 Puppets (lower class popular entertainments)
 108 roaring boys noisy bullies
 109 cozen cheat gilt covered with gold paint (which the customer takes for solid gold) 111 motion puppet show

112 Nineveh biblical city, whose destruction was a popular theme for puppet shows (rhymes with 'see') 114 ringing music produced by bells (here, worn on the bodies of dancers) 117 Andrew (the patron saint of Scotland, and hence a popular Scots name; like his father, Prince Charles was born in Scotland)
 118 try test
fine high quality 119 faith sexual fidelity (but perhaps suggesting 'religion', since the Infanta's Catholicism was a major political issue) 121 black corrupt, tarnished (but also suggesting the traditional racial stereotyping of Gypsy and Spanish complexions) 129 noddle head
 131 pease-porridge split yellow peas boiled

into a pudding (poor man's diet)
 132 to-bedabbled wet with dirty liquid
 138 fine finely 142 conies (a) rabbits (b) lovers (pronounced 'cunnies', slang for 'cunts') mallows a common wild herb (poor man's diet)
 143 dell (a) young unmarried vagrant female, sexually available wench (b) natural hollow, wooded vale
 144 bonny pretty, cheerful
 145 Smug spruce, smarten beetle-brows conspicuously dark, large,
 or sullen eyebrows 146 show... foot (usually considered indecorous exhibitionism)
seemly (a) handsome (b) decorous
 150 entertained welcomed
 151 two-words i.e. brief conversation

- [She gives Soto a jewel]
 SOTO I'll send him.
 CARDOCHIA What's his name?
 SOTO Andrew. Exit
 CARDOCHIA
 A very handsome fellow. I've seen courtiers
 Jet up and down in their full bravery,
 Yet here's a Gypsy worth a drove of 'em.
Enter Don Juan
 JUAN
 With me, sweetheart?
 CARDOCHIA Your name is Andrew?
 JUAN Yes.
 CARDOCHIA
 You can tell fortunes, Andrew?
 JUAN I could once,
 But now I've lost that knowledge; I'm in haste,
 And cannot stay to tell you yours.
 160 CARDOCHIA I cannot Tell yours then—and 'cause you're in haste, I'm quick.
 I am a maid—
 JUAN So, so, a maid quick?
 CARDOCHIA Juana Cardochia,
 165 That's mine own name. I am my mother's heir
 Here to this house, and two more.
 JUAN I buy no lands.
 CARDOCHIA
 They shall be given you, with some plate and money,
 And free possession during life of me,
 So the match like you—for so well I love you
 170 That I, in pity of this trade of Gypsying
 (Being base, idle, and slavish), offer you
 A state to settle you, my youth and beauty, (Desired by some brave Spaniards), so I may call you My husband. Shall I, Andrew?
 JUAN 'Las, pretty soul,
 175 Better stars guide you! May that hand of Cupid
 Ache, ever shot this arrow at your heart!
 Sticks there one such indeed?
 CARDOCHIA I would there did not,
 Since you'll not pluck it out.
 JUAN Good sweet, I cannot.
 For marriage, 'tis a law amongst us Gypsies 180 We match in our own tribes. For me to wear you,
 I should but wear you out.
 CARDOCHIA I do not care.
 Wear what you can out, all my life, my wealth:
 Ruin me, so you lend me but your love,
 A little of your love!
 JUAN Would I could give it,
 For you are worth a world of better men
 For your free noble mind! All my best wishes
 Stay with you; I must hence. 185
 CARDOCHIA Wear for my sake
 This jewel.
 [She offers him a necklace]
 JUAN I'll not rob you, I'll take nothing.
 CARDOCHIA
 Wear it about your neck but one poor moon;
 If in that time your eye be as 'tis now,
 190 Send my jewel home again, and (I protest)
 I'll ne'er more think on you. Deny not this.
 Put it about your neck.
 JUAN [putting it on] Well then, 'tis done.
 CARDOCHIA
 And vow to keep it there.
 JUAN By all the goodness
 I wish attend your fortunes, I do vow it. Exit 195
 CARDOCHIA
 Scorned! Thou hast tempered poison to kill me
 Thyself shall drink. Since I cannot enjoy thee,
 My revenge shall.
Enter Diego
 DIEGO Where are the Gypsies?
 CARDOCHIA Gone.
 Diego, do you love me?
 DIEGO Love thee, Juanna?
 Is my life mine? It is but mine so long 200
 As it shall do thee service.
 CARDOCHIA
 There's a young Gypsy newly entertained.
 DIEGO
 A handsome rascal. Marry, what of him?
 CARDOCHIA
 That slave in obscene language courted me,
 Drew reals out, and would have bought my body, 205 Diego, from thee.
 DIEGO
 Is he so itchy? By my troth, I'll cure him.

155 Jet strut
bravery bravado, finery

156 drove herd

163 maid quick 'pregnant virgin'

166 house (a) dwelling (b) inn

167 plate (a) bullion (b) gold or silver utensils

168 free unlimited freehold for life (legal terminology, but here with added sexual referent)

169 So if

172 state estate

174 'Las alas

177 Sticks...such does one of those stick in your heart

179-80 marriage...tribes Those who objected to the proposed Spanish Match felt that Protestants should marry Protestants.

180 wear (a) possess sexually (b) damage, waste, devalue (c) exhaust physically

182 what whatever (suggesting an explicitly physical, sexual friction)

183 Ruin (a) impoverish (b) make disrespectable sexually and socially

but just, only

184 give (in contrast to her request that he merely 'lend')

189 moon month

196 Thou (shifting immediately from 'you', as an expression of her change of attitude)

tempered mixed

197 Thyself (which) you yourself enjoy (a) take pleasure in (b) possess sexually, make use of

204 slave contemptible lower class villain

205 reals Spanish gold coins

[He draws his sword]

CARDOCHIA

Thou shalt not touch the villain; I'll spin his fate.
Woman strikes sure, fall the blow ne'er so late.

DIEGO

210 Strike on since: by'r Lady, thou wilt be a striker.
Exeunt

4.2 Enter Fernando, Francisco, Pedro, and Luis

FERNANDO See, Don Luis; an arm,
The strongest arm in Spain, to the full length
Is stretched to pluck old Count Alvarez home
From his sad banishment.

LUIS With longing eyes,
5 My lord, I expect the man. Your lordship's pardon:
Some business calls me from you.

FERNANDO Prithee, Don Luis,
Unless th'occasion be too violent,
Stay and be merry with us. All the Gypsies
Will be here presently.

LUIS I will attend your lordship
Before their sports be done.

10 FERNANDO Be your own carver.
Exit Luis
[To Francisco] Not yet shake off these fetters? I see a son
Is heavy when a father carries him
On his old heart.

FRANCISCO Could I set up my rest
That he were lost or taken prisoner,
15 I could hold truce with sorrow; but to have him
Vanish I know not how, gone none knows whither,
'Tis that mads me.

PEDRO You said he sent a letter.

FRANCISCO A letter? A mere riddle: he's 'gone to seek His fortune in the wars'. What wars have we?
20 Suppose we had, goes any man to th' field
Naked, unfurnished both of arms and money?

FERNANDO Come, come, he's gone a-wenching. We in our youth Ran the self-same bias.

208 spin (comparing herself to the three sisters of classical mythology, who spun each man's fate)

209 strikes (playing on the sense
'fornicates')

210 since then (= sithence), but perhaps punning on 'sins'
by'r Lady by our lady, the Virgin Mary wilt are determined or destined to 4.2.10 Be... carver suit yourself (proverbial)

11 fetters chains (of grief)

12 carries (like a pregnant mother)

13 set... rest be convinced enough to bet my final reserves (metaphor from card games)

19 What... we (an ironic comment, in the context of the ongoing Thirty Years War; England was officially still at peace)

20 field battlefield

21 Naked without accessories

arms armour, weapons

22 a-wenching chasing women

23 Ran... bias followed the same curving or irregular path (metaphor from bowling)

27 physic medicine

28 great chamber large formal room

30 figure of numeral casts us all up sums us up (but probably

Enter Diego

DIEGO The Gypsies, my lord, are come.

FERNANDO Are they? Let them enter. Exit Diego 25
My lord De Cortes, send for your wife and daughter.

Good company is good physic: take the pains
To seat yourselves in my great chamber.

Exit Pedro [with Francisco]

Enter the old Father of the Gypsies, Don Juan, Roderigo [wearing a visor], Antonio, Carlo,
Eugenia, Preciosa, Christiana, Sancho, and Soto

See, they are here. [To Gypsies] What's your number?
SANCHO The figure of nine casts us all up, my lord. 30

FERNANDO

Nine? Let me see—you are ten, sure.

SOTO [pointing to Roderigo] That's our poet; he stands for a cipher.

FERNANDO

Ciphers make numbers.—What plays have you?

FATHER Five or six, my lord. 35

FERNANDO It's well, so many already.

SOTO We are promised a very merry tragedy, if all hit right, of Cobby Nobby.

FERNANDO

So, so, a 'merry tragedy'! There is a way
Which the Italians and the Frenchmen use: 40
That is, on a word given, or some slight plot,
The actors will extempore fashion out
Scenes neat and witty.

FATHER We can do that, my lord:
Please you bestow the subject.

FERNANDO Can you? [To Roderigo] Come hither,
45 You master poet. To save you a labour,
Look you, against your coming I projected
This comic passage:

[He gives Roderigo a paper]

your drama; that's the scene.

RODERIGO Ay, ay, my lord.

FERNANDO I lay't in our own country, Spain.

RODERIGO 'Tis best so. 50

FERNANDO

Here's a brave part for this old Gypsy; look you,
The father. Read the plot: this young she-Gypsy,
This lady. Now the son—play him yourself.

punning on 'vomits us')

32-3 poet... cipher playwright... nonentity

34 Ciphers... numbers zeros, added to another numeral, greatly increase the number

38 Cobby Nobby (nonsense name, compounded of words with low-class associations:
cob, nob)

40-3 Italians... witty (referring to commedia dell'arte)

41 plot outline, scenario (technical theatrical term for list of entrances and exits)

46 against anticipating

49 lay't set it (the play)

- RODERIGO
My lord, I am no player.
- FERNANDO Pray, at this time
55 (The plot being full), to please my noble friends
(Because your brains must into theirs put language), Act thou the son's part. I'll reward your pains.
- RODERIGO
Protest, my lord—
- FERNANDO Nay, nay, shake off protesting.
When I was young, sir, I have played myself.
- 60 SANCHO Yourself, my lord? You were but a poor company then.
- FERNANDO
Yet full enough, honest fellow.—Will you do it?
- RODERIGO I'll venture.
- FERNANDO
I thank you. [To Father] Let this father be a don 65 Of a brave spirit. Old Gypsy, observe me.
- FATHER Yes, my lord.
- FERNANDO
Play him up high—not like a pantaloon,
But hotly, nobly, checking this his son,
Whom make a very rake-hell, a debauched fellow.—
This point, I think, will show well.
- 70 RODERIGO This of the picture?
It will indeed, my lord.
- SANCHO My lord, what part play I?
- FERNANDO What parts dost use to play?
- SANCHO If your lordship has ever a coxcomb, I think I 75 could fit you.
- FERNANDO I thank your coxcombship.
- SOTO Put a coxcomb upon a lord!
- FERNANDO
There are parts to serve you all. Go, go, make ready,
And call for what you want. Exit
- FATHER [to Roderigo]
80 Give me the plot. Our wits are put to trial.
What's the son's name? 'Lorenzo': that's your part.
- Look only you to that; these I'll dispose.
'Old Don Avero', mine. 'Hialdo, Lollo,
Two servants': [to Sancho and Soto] you for them.
- SANCHO
One of the foolish knaves give me. 85
I'll be Hialdo.
- SOTO And I, Lollo.
- SANCHO Is there a banquet in the play? We may call for what we will.
- RODERIGO Yes, here is a banquet.
- SANCHO I'll go then and bespeak an ocean of sweetmeats, 90
marmalade, and custards.
- FATHER Make haste to know what you must do.
- SANCHO Do? Call for enough—and when my belly is full, fill my pockets.
- SOTO To a banquet there must be wine. Fortune's a scurvy 95
whore, if she makes not my head sound like a rattle and my heels dance the canaries.
- FATHER
So, so, dispatch, whilst we employ our brains
To set things off to th' life.
- RODERIGO I'll be straight with you.
[Exeunt all except Roderigo]
- Why does my father put this trick on me? 100
Spies he me through my visor? If he does,
He's not the king of Spain, and 'tis no treason.
If his invention jet upon a stage,
Why should not I use action? 'A debauched fellow!'
'A very rake-hell!' This reflects on me— 105
And I'll retort it. Grown a poet, father?
No matter in what strain your play must run,
But I shall fit you for a roaring son. Exit
- Enter Francisco, Pedro, Fernando, Diego, Maria, and Clara. Flourish* 4.3
- FERNANDO
Come, ladies, take your places.—This' their music?
'Tis very handsome. O, I wish this room

54 player actor
55 plot roster of roles
59 played myself personally acted (but taken as 'impersonated myself' or 'acted alone,
all by myself')

60 company acting troupe
62 Yet full but wealthy, satisfactory
63 venture try, take the risk
64 don aristocrat
67 pantaloan skinny, bespectacled, foolish old man in commedia dell'arte
68 hotly angrily
checking rebuking
69 rake-hell scoundrel
70 point detail
74 coxcomb fool, clown
75 fit satisfy
77 lord (Sancho)
79 want lack, need 87 banquet feast (consisting mostly of desserts)

88 will like, want 90 bespeak reserve, order in advance sweetmeats goodies
97 canaries Spanish dance, allegedly derived from Canary islanders (but punning on the name of the Spanish wine)
99 straight immediately 101 visor mask, disguise (as an Italian actor)
102 'tis no treason Roderigo's disguise, or his lying to his father, is not illegal (but perhaps also linked to next line, since it would be illegal to represent the king of Spain on stage)
103 jet strut
104 action theatrical gestures
105 reflects on (a) represents (b) insults 106 retort repay, retaliate poet (usually associated with youth, and inappropriate for a 'father' and aristocrat; possibly alluding to James I's verses, in February 1623, replying to anonymous verse criticisms, and his sonnet in March 1623 'of Jack and Tom')

107 strain (a) tone (b) melody (c) sophistry
(d) offspring, lineage (e) kind of person play (a) stage play (b) playing on a musical instrument (c) game (d) sexual performance
108 roaring son playing on 'roaring boy' (urban adolescent behaving outrageously) and on 'roaring' in contrast to music
4.3.0.2 Flourish (trumpet call, signalling that a theatrical performance is about to begin)
1 This' this is

Were fretted but with gold works, noble friends,
 As are to you my welcomes!
Flourish
 Begin there, masters!

5 SANCHO (within) Presently, my lord; we want but a cold capon for a property.
 FERNANDO
 Call, call for one!
[Flourish]
 Now they begin.
Enter Sancho (the Prologue)

SANCHO
 Both short and sweet, some say, is best.
 We will not only be sweet, but short.

10 Take you pepper in the nose, you mar our sport.
 FERNANDO By no means pepper.
 SANCHO
 Of your love measure us forth but one span.
 We do, though not the best, the best we can. Exit

FERNANDO A good honest Gypsy!
*Enter the old Father of the Gypsies [as Don Avero]
 and Soto [as Lollio]*

15 FATHER [as Avero] Slave, where's my son Lorenzo?
 SOTO [as Lollio] I have sought him, my lord, in all four elements: in earth (my shoes are full of gravel), in water
 (I drop at nose with sweating), in air (wheresoever I 20 heard noise of fiddlers, or the wide mouths of gallon pots roaring), and in fire (what chimney soever I saw smoking with good cheer—for my master's dinner, as I was in hope).
 FATHER [as Avero]
 Not yet come home? Before on this old tree
 Shall grow a branch so blasted, I'll hew it off, 25 And bury it at my foot! Didst thou inquire

At my brother's?
 SOTO [as Lollio] At your sister's.
 FATHER [as Avero]
 At my wife's father's?
 SOTO [as Lollio] At your uncle's mother's.
 No such sheep has broke through their hedge; no such calf as your son sucks or bleats in their ground. 30
 FATHER [as Avero]
 I am unblessed to have but one son only,
 One staff to bear my age up, one taper left
 To light me to my grave, and that burns dimly;
 That leaves me darkling hid in clouds of woe.
 He that should prop me is mine overthrow. 35
 FERNANDO
 Well done, old fellow!—Is't not?
 OMNES Yes, yes, my lord.
 SOTO [as Lollio] Here comes his man Hialdo.
Enter Sancho [as Hialdo]
 FATHER [as Avero, to Sancho]
 Where's the prodigal your master, sirrah?
 SANCHO [as Hialdo] Eating acorns amongst swine, draff amongst hogs, and gnawing bones amongst dogs. He's 40 lost all his money at dice, his wits with his money, and his honesty with both—for he bumfiddles me, makes the drawers curvet, pitches the plate over the bar, scores up the vintner's name in the Ram-head, flirts his wife under the nose— 45
 And bids you, with 'a pox', send him more money.
 FATHER [as Avero]
 Art thou one of his curs to bite me too?
 To nail thee to the earth were to do justice.
 SANCHO [as Hialdo]
 Here comes Bucephalus, my prancing master.
 Nail me now who dares. 50

3 fretted decorated (used of musical elaboration and architectural ornament), but playing on the sense 'irritated'
but only
gold works (a) architectural ornamentation with gold leaf (b) golden actions, superb literary or musical compositions,
 'good works'
noble (perhaps punning on the 'gold' coin)
 4 masters skilled workmen, masters of their trade
 5 within (perhaps poking his head out through a curtain or stage window) Presently immediately
want but lack only 6 capon (cooked castrated) chicken property prop
 7.2 Prologue (conventionally dressed in a long black velvet cloak)
 8 short and sweet (proverbial)
 10 Take you if you take pepper... nose offence (proverbial) 12 span hand's length, small amount (but 'hand' perhaps alluding to applause) 16-17 four elements (earth, water, air, fire: regarded as the basic materials from which everything else was formed) 18 drop at nose have a runny nose

 19 noise (a) cacophonous din (b) rumour, talk (c) company of musicians 19-20 gallon pots drinking vessels so large they can hold a gallon of liquid
 21 cheer food 28 uncle's mother's (a ridiculous way of saying) 'grandmother's' 29 sheep (a) domesticated sheep (b) feckless person (c) lost sheep, lost soul 30 calf (a) infant cow (b) fool sucks (a) nourishes itself at its mother's teat (b) smokes tobacco bleats (a) makes a sheep's cry (b) talks or sings with a high-pitched voice 32 staff crutch, support
taper candle
 34 darkling in the dark, getting dark 38-9 prodigal... swine (alluding to the parable of the Prodigal Son at Luke 15:11-32)
 39 swine (a) pigs (b) lecherous degraded
 persons

39-40 draff... hogs (proverbial)
 39 draff refuse 40 hogs (a) castrated pigs intended for early slaughter (b) coarse gluttonous filthy
 persons
dogs (a) canines (b) despicable cowardly
 persons 42 bumfiddles plays on my buttocks (beats, cheats, or sodomizes)
 43 drawers employees who serve wine in a tavern
curvet leap like horses
pitches the plate throws the tableware
 (but probably also 'ejaculates') 43-4 scores up writes, etches (but playing on 'marks the tab, records the bill') 44 Ram-head name of a tavern, or a room in one (but punning on the sense
 'cuckold' or 'list of cuckolds')
flirts jerks, strikes, insults
 46 with 'a pox' (a) swearing an oath
 (b) with venereal disease
 47 curs dogs
 49 Bucephalus (famous horse of Alexander the Great)

- Enter Roderigo [as Lorenzo]
- RODERIGO [as Lorenzo] I sit like an owl in the ivy-bush of a tavern. 'Swounds, Hialdo, I have drawn red wine from the vintner's own hogshead.
- SANCHO [as Hialdo, pointing to the others] Here's two more; pierce them too.
- RODERIGO [as Lorenzo, to Avero] Old Don, whom I call father: am I thy son? If I be, flesh me with gold, fat me with silver! Had I Spain in this hand, and Portugal in this, Puff it should fly.—Where's the money I sent for? [Aside] I'll tickle you for a rake-hell!
- SANCHO [as Hialdo] Not a mar'vedi.
- FATHER [as Avero] Thou shalt have none of me.
- SOTO [as Lollio, to Avero] Hold his nose to the grindstone, my lord.
- RODERIGO [as Lorenzo, to Avero] I shall have none?
- FATHER [as Avero, to Lollio] Charge me a case of pistols. What I have built I'll ruin. Shall I suffer
- 65 A slave to set his foot upon my heart? A son? A barbarous villain! Or if heaven save thee Now from my justice, yet my curse pursues thee.
- RODERIGO [as Lorenzo] Hialdo, carbonado thou the old rogue my father.
- 70 SANCHO [as Hialdo] Whilst you slice into collops the rusty gammon his man there.
- RODERIGO [as Lorenzo, to Avero] No money? Can taverns stand without 'anon, anon'? fiddlers live without scraping? taffeta girls look plump without pampering? If you will not lard me with money,
- 75 Give me a ship, furnish me to sea.
- FATHER [as Avero] To have thee hanged for piracy?
- SANCHO [as Hialdo] Trim, tram, hang master, hang man!
- 80 RODERIGO [as Lorenzo] Then send me to the West Indies, buy me some office there.
- FATHER [as Avero] To have thy throat cut for thy quarrelling?
- RODERIGO [as Lorenzo] Else send me and my ningle Hialdo to the wars.
- SANCHO [as Hialdo] A match! We'll fight dog, fight bear. Enter Antonio [as Hernando]
- FATHER [as Avero] O dear Hernando, welcome!—Clap wings to your heels,
- 85 And pray my worthy friends bestow upon me Their present visitation.— [Exeunt Soto and Sancho]
- ANTONIO [as Hernando] Lorenzo, see the anger of a father: Although it be as loud and quick as thunder, Yet 'tis done instantly. Cast off thy wildness.
- 90 FATHER [as Avero, to Lorenzo] Be mine, be mine—for I to call thee home Have (with my honoured friend here, Don Hernando) Provided thee a wife.
- RODERIGO [as Lorenzo] A wife! Is she handsome? Is she rich? Is she fair? Is she witty? Is she honest?—Hang honesty!—Has she a sweet face, cherry cheek, strawberry lip, white skin, dainty eye, pretty foot, delicate legs?—as there's a girl now.
- 95 ANTONIO [as Hernando] It is a creature both for birth and fortunes, And for most excellent graces of the mind, Few like her are in Spain.
- RODERIGO [as Lorenzo] When shall I see her?
- FATHER [as Avero] I do. The lady Lives from Madrid very near fourteen leagues, But thou shalt see her picture.
- RODERIGO [as Lorenzo] That, that! Most ladies in these days are but very fine pictures.
- 100 Enter Carlo, Don Juan, Eugenia, Preciosa, Christiana [as friends of Avero], Sancho and Soto [as Hialdo and Lollio]
- FATHER [as Avero] Ladies, to you first, welcome.—My lords (Alonzo, And you, worthy marquis), thanks for these honours.—
- 105 Away, you! [Exeunt Sancho and Soto] To th' cause now of this meeting. My son Lorenzo (Whose wildness you all know) comes now to th' lure,
- 110

51 sit . . . ivy-bush resemble a painted owl in a tavern sign (proverbial)
owl emblematic of (a) wisdom (b) staying up all night 52 'Swounds by God's wounds (a particularly profane oath, appropriate to a 'rake-hell') red wine (playing on the sense 'blood')
 53 hogshead (a) large wine cask (b) head of a piggish person 59 tickle (a) amuse (b) beat for as 61 Hold . . . grindstone (proverbial)
 63 Charge load
 case pair
 68 carbonado cut into slices for broiling

70 collops pieces
 70-1 rusty gammon smoked ham
 73 stand remain in business
 'anon, anon' 'just a second' (conventional reply of waiters to impatient customers)
 74 taffeta girls well-dressed prostitutes
 75 lard fatten, enrich
 78 Trim . . . man (playing on the proverb 'Trim, tram, like master like man')
 79 West Indies (Spanish colonies)
 82 Else otherwise
ningle catamite, passive homosexual partner 84 fight . . . bear (cry of spectators at bearbaiting arenas)

 85 Clap . . . heels fly (like Mercury, messenger of the gods)
 90 done finished, extinguished
 95 fair light-skinned, blonde honest chaste
 98 as . . . girl (referring to Clara, in the onstage audience)
 105-6 ladies . . . pictures (because they use so much make-up, which was called 'painting')
 109 Away, you get out (presumably because they are clowning around)
 111 comes . . . lure returns home (like a trained hawk)

Sits gently, has called home his wandering thoughts,
And now will marry.

PRECIOSA A good wife fate send him!
EUGENIA
One staid may settle him.

RODERIGO [as Lorenzo, to Avero]
Fly to the mark, sir.

115 Show me the wench, or her face, or any thing
I may know 'tis a woman fit for me.

FATHER [as Avero]
She is not here herself, but here's her picture.
[He draws the curtain, and shows] a picture

FERNANDO
My lord de Cárcamo, pray, observe this.

FRANCISCO
I do, attentively.—Don Pedro, mark it.
Enter Soto

SOTO [aside to Juan]
120 If you ha' done your part, yonder's a wench
Would ha' a bout with you. Exit

JUAN [aside] Me? Exit
DIEGO [aside] A wench? Exit

FATHER [as Avero, to Lorenzo]
Why stand you staring at it? How do you like her?

RODERIGO [as Lorenzo]
Are you in earnest?

FATHER [as Avero] Marry, sir, in earnest.

RODERIGO [as Lorenzo]
'Snails, I am not so hungry after flesh

125 To make the devil a cuckold.

ANTONIO [as Hernando]
Look not upon the face, but on the goodness
That dwells within her.

RODERIGO [as Lorenzo] Set fire on the tenement!
FATHER [as Avero] She's rich; nobly descended.

130 RODERIGO [as Lorenzo] Did ever nobility look so scurvily?

FATHER [as Avero]
I'm sunk in fortunes; she may raise us both.

RODERIGO [as Lorenzo] Sink, let her, to her grannam! Marry a witch? Have you fetched a wife for me out of Lapland?
An old midwife in a velvet hat were a goddess to this.

135 That, a red lip?

PRECIOSA There's a red nose.
RODERIGO [as Lorenzo] That, a yellow hair?

EUGENIA Why, her teeth may be yellow.

RODERIGO [as Lorenzo] Where's the full eye?

140 CHRISTIANA She has full blubber cheeks.

FATHER [as Avero, to Lorenzo]
Set up thy rest: her marriest thou, or none.

RODERIGO [as Lorenzo] None then: were all the water in the world one sea, all kingdoms one mountain, I would climb on all four up to the top of that hill, and headlong
hurl myself into that abyss of waves, ere I would touch 145 her picture stinks hither.

A noise within. Enter Don Juan, Diego [bleeding], Cardochia, Sancho, and Soto, [all] in a hurry

FERNANDO What tumult's this?
SANCHO and SOTO Murder, murder, murder! One of our Gypsies is in danger of hanging, hanging! 150

PEDRO
Who is hurt?

DIEGO 'Tis I, my lord, stabbed by this Gypsy.

JUAN
He struck me first, and I'll not take a blow
From any Spaniard breathing.

PEDRO Are you so brave?

FERNANDO [to Gypsies]
Break up your play.—Lock all the doors.

DIEGO I faint, my lord.

FRANCISCO
Have him to a surgeon.— [Exeunt some with Diego]
How fell they out? 155

CARDOCHIA
Faith, my good lord, these Gypsies when they lodged
At my house, I'd a jewel from my pocket
Stolen by this villain.

JUAN 'Tis most false, my lords.
Her own hands gave it me.

PRECIOSA She that calls him villain,
Or says he stole—

FERNANDO Hoyday! We hear your scolding. 160

CARDOCHIA
And the hurt gentleman, finding it in his bosom,
For that he stabbed him.

FERNANDO Hence with all the Gypsies!

PEDRO Ruffians and thieves—to prison with 'em all!

FATHER
My lord, we'll leave engagements, in plate and money,
For all our safe forthcomings. Punish not all 165
For one's offence. We'll prove ourselves no thieves.

SANCHO [aside] O Soto, I make buttons!

114 Fly... mark get to the point (like an arrow shot at a target)

115 any thing (sexually suggestive)

116 I (so that) I

120 done your part finished your role

121 bout sexual wrestle

123 in earnest serious

124 'Snails' by God's nails (a strong oath, also relevant to the devil, often represented with cloven feet)

125 devil a cuckold (implying that the woman in the picture is a fit wife only for the devil—who, already having horns, is a natural cuckold)

128 Set... tenement burn the house down (playing on 'dwells')

132 Sink i.e. down to hell

133 witch (traditionally hideously ugly)

Lapland (traditionally associated with witches)

140 blubber fat, swollen

141 Set... rest make your final bid

146 haberdine dried salted fish foh (exclamation of nausea or disgust)

153 brave defiant, insolent

161 bosom breast pocket

162 he Juan

164 engagements security, bail

165 forthcomings appearance (at trial)

167 make buttons am so afraid my 'buttocks go a twitter-twitter'

- SOTO [aside] Would I could make some, and leave this trade! 200
- FERNANDO
Iron him then, let the rest go free.—But stir not one foot
- 170 Out of Madrid. Bring you in your witness.
[Exeunt at one door Don Juan to prison, and at another door the old Father of the Gypsies, Antonio, Carlo, Eugenia, Preciosa, Christiana]
- SOTO [aside to Sancho] Prick him with a pin, or pinch him by the elbow—anything.
- 175 SANCHO My lord Don Pedro, I am your ward. We have spent a little money to get a horrible deal of wit, and now I am weary on't.
- PEDRO
My runaways turned jugglers, fortune-tellers?
- SOTO No great fortunes.
- FERNANDO
To prison with 'em both! A gentleman, play the ass?
- 180 SANCHO If all gentlemen that play the ass should to prison, you must widen your jails.—Come, Soto, I scorn to beg. Set thy foot to mine, and kick at shackles.
- FERNANDO So, so—away with 'em!
- SOTO Send all our company after, and we'll play there, and be as merry as you here. 185
- Exeunt [Sancho and Soto to prison]*
- FERNANDO
Our comedy turned tragical!—Please you, lords, walk. This actor here and I must change a word, And I come to you.
- OMNES Well, my lord, your pleasure.
Exeunt. [Manent Fernando and Roderigo]
- FERNANDO
Why? Couldst thou think in any base disguise To blind my sight? Fathers have eagles' eyes. But pray, sir, why was this done? Why, when I thought you 190 Fast locked in Salamanca at your study, Leaped you into a Gypsy?
- RODERIGO Sir, with your pardon, I shall (at fit time) to you show cause for all.
- FERNANDO
195 Meantime, sir, you have got a trade to live by. Best to turn player. An excellent ruffian, ha! But know, sir, when I'd found you out, I gave you This project of set purpose. 'Tis all myself; What the old Gypsy spoke must be my language.
- Nothing are left me but my offices
And thin-faced honours—and this very creature,
By you so scorned, must raise me by your marrying her.
- RODERIGO
You would not build your glory on my ruins?
- FERNANDO
Marry, the rascal has belied the lady;
She is not half so bad. All's one: she's rich. 205
- RODERIGO
O, will you sell the joys of my full youth
To dunghill muck? Seek out some wretch's daughter, Whose soul is lost for gold then. You're more noble
Than t'have your son, the top-branch of your house,
Grow in a heap of rubbish. I must marry a thing 210
I shall be ashamed to own, ashamed to bring her Before a sunbeam.
- FERNANDO I cannot help it, sir.
Resolve upon't, and do't.
- RODERIGO And do't? And die!
Is there no face in Spain for you to pick out
But one to fright me? When you sat the play here, 215
There was a beauty, to be lord of which I would against an army throw defiance.
- FERNANDO
She? Alas!
- RODERIGO How? She!—at every hair of hers
There hangs a very angel. This!—I'm ready To drop down looking at it. Sir, I beseech you: 220
[He kneels]
Bury me in this earth (on which I'm humbled
To beg your blessing on me) for a Gypsy,
Rather than—O, I know not what to term it!
Pray, what is that young pensive piece of beauty?
Your voice for her: I eyed her all the scene. 225
- FERNANDO
I saw you did.
- RODERIGO Methought 'twas a sweet creature.
- FERNANDO
Well, though my present state stands now on ice,
I'll let it crack and fall, rather than bar thee
Of thy content. This lady shall go by then.
- RODERIGO
Hang let her there, or anywhere!
- FERNANDO That young lannard 230
Whom you have such a mind to, if you can whistle
her

168 make some become a button-maker (as an alternative profession)

170 Iron him place him in irons, chains

171 witness testimony, evidence

172-3 Prick . . . anything do anything to get Don Pedro's attention

182 Set . . . mine (shoulder to shoulder)

kick at defy

184 company (a) companions (b) theatrical troupe

play (a) perform (b) enjoy ourselves

188 I then I will

190 eagles (remarkably sharp-sighted, overseeing their prey; believed to be able to look directly at the sun)

193 Leaped . . . into eagerly changed positions, identities (as though 'Gypsy' were a saddle into which he jumped)

198 of set with premeditated

201 thin-faced worn out, thin-veneered

204 rascal i.e. painter

belied slandered

211 own acknowledge mine

215 sat attended

216 a beauty i.e. Clara

229 This lady (in the picture)

230 Hang (like a picture on the wall, or a criminal on the gallows)

lannard hawk

231 whistle call

To come to fist, make trial; play the young falconer.
 I will nor mar your marriage, nor yet make.
 Beauty, no wealth; wealth, ugliness—which you will,
 take.

RODERIGO
 I thank you, sir. [Exit Fernando]

235 Put on your mask, good madam:
 The sun will spoil your face else.
 [He closes the curtain on the picture.] Exit

⊗

5.1 Incipit Actus Quintus
Enter Fernando, Pedro, Roderigo, Clara [in a bridal gown] and Maria, as from church, [passing] over the stage: [as the others exeunt] Fernando stays Roderigo

FERNANDO
 Thou hast now the wife of thy desires.

RODERIGO Sir, I have—
 And in her every blessing that makes life
 Loath to be parted with.

FERNANDO Noble she is,
 And fair; has (to enrich her blood and beauty)
 5 Plenty of wit, discourse, behaviour, carriage.

RODERIGO
 I owe you duty for a double birth,
 Being in this happiness begot again—
 Without which I had been a man of wretchedness.

FERNANDO
 Then henceforth, boy, learn to obey thy fate.
 10 'Tis fall'n upon thee; know it, and embrace it.
 Thy wife's a wanton.

RODERIGO A wanton?

FERNANDO
 Examine through the progress of thy youth
 What capital sin, what great one 'tis—for 'tis
 A great one—thou'st committed.

15 RODERIGO I, a great one!

FERNANDO
 Else heaven is not so wrathful to pour on thee
 A misery so full of bitterness.
 I am thy father; think on't, and be just.
 Come, do not dally.

RODERIGO Pray, my lord—

FERNANDO Fool, 'twere
 20 Impossible that justice should rain down
 In such a frightful horror without cause.
 Sir, I will know it. Rather blush thou didst
 An act thou dar'st not name, than that it has

A name to be known by.

RODERIGO Turn from me then,
 And as my guilt sighs out this monster—rape—
 25 O, do not lend an ear!

FERNANDO Rape? Fearful!

RODERIGO Hence,
 Hence springs my due reward.

FERNANDO Thou'rt none of mine—
 Or if thou be'st, thou dost belie the stamp
 Of thy nativity.

RODERIGO Forgive me!

FERNANDO Had she (Poor wrongèd soul, whoe'er she was) no friend, 30 Nor father, to revenge? Had she no tongue
 To roar her injuries?

RODERIGO Alas, I know her not.

FERNANDO
 Peace! Thou wilt blaze a sin beyond all precedent.
 Young man, thou shouldst have married her; the devil
 Of lust that riots in thy eye should there 35 Have let fall love and pity, not on this stranger Whom thou hast doted on.

RODERIGO O, had I married her,
 I had been then the happiest man alive!
Enter Clara, Maria, and Pedro, from behind the arras

CLARA
 As I the happiest woman, being married.
 Look on me, sir.

PEDRO [to Roderigo]
 You shall not find a change
 40 So full of fears as your most noble father,
 In his wise trial, urged.

MARIA [to Roderigo] Indeed you shall not,
 The forfeit of her shame shall be her pawn.

RODERIGO
 Why, pray, d'ye mock my sorrows? Now, O now,
 My horrors flow about me!

FERNANDO No, thy comforts,
 45 Thy blessings, Roderigo.

CLARA [showing the crucifix to Roderigo]
 By this crucifix
 You may remember me.

RODERIGO Ha! Art thou
 That lady wronged?

CLARA I was, but now am I Righted in noble satisfaction.

RODERIGO
 How can I turn mine eyes, and not behold
 50

232 fist the gloved hand of the falconer
 trial attempt, effort

234 which you will whichever you prefer

235 Put...mask cover your face

236 sun...face (Suntans were considered ugly.)

5.1.0.3-4 passing...stage entering at one door and exiting out another

0.5 stays stops

5 carriage deportment

11 wanton slut

15 I (or 'Ay')

28 stamp legitimizing seal (conception being imagined as the impressing of male form

upon waxen female substance)

33 blaze (a) proclaim, publish (b) blazon, describe heraldically

38.2 arras curtain

40 change transformation (into a 'wanton')

43 pawn pledge, guarantee

- On every side my shame?
 FERNANDO No more. Hereafter
 We shall have time to talk at large of all.
 Love her that's now thine own; do, Roderigo.
 She's far from what I charactered.
- CLARA [to Roderigo] My care
 55 Shall live about me to deserve your love.
 RODERIGO
 Excellent Clara!
 [They embrace]
 Fathers both, and mother,
 I will redeem my fault.
- FERNANDO, PEDRO, and MARIA
 Our blessings dwell on ye!
 Enter Luis and Francisco
- LUIS
 Married to Roderigo?
 FRANCISCO Judge yourself:
 See where they are. Exit
- LUIS [to Clara] Is this your husband, lady?
 CLARA
 60 He is, sir. Heaven's great hand, that on record
 Fore-points the equal union of all hearts,
 Long since decreed what this day hath been perfected.
- LUIS
 'Tis well then. I am free, it seems.
- CLARA Make smooth,
 My lord, those clouds, which on your brow deliver 65 Emblems of storm. I will (as far as honour May privilege) deserve a noble friendship,
 As you from me deserve a worthy memory.
- LUIS
 Your husband, faith, has proved himself a friend
 Trusty and tried; he's welcome, I may say,
 From th'university.
- 70 RODERIGO To a new school
 Of happy knowledge, Luis.
- LUIS Sir, I am
 Not so poor-spirited to put this injury up.
 The best blood flows within you is the price.
- RODERIGO
 Luis, for this time calm your anger,
 75 And if I do not give you noble satisfaction,
 Call me to what account you please.
- LUIS So, so.—
 [To Fernando] I come for justice t'ye, and you shall grant it.
- FERNANDO
 Shall and will.
- LUIS With speed, too:
 My poor friend bleeds the whites.
- FERNANDO You shall yourself,
 Before we part, receive the satisfaction
 80 You come for.—Who attends?
 SERVANTS (within) My lord?
 FERNANDO The prisoner!
 SERVANTS (within)
 He attends your lordship's pleasure.
 Enter Preciosa, Eugenia, and the old Father of the Gypsies
- LUIS What would this girl?—
 Foh, no tricks! Get you to your cabin, hussy;
 We have no ear for ballads.
- FERNANDO Take her away.
- CLARA
 A wondrous lovely creature!
 PRECIOSA Noble gentlemen,
 85 If a poor maid's (a Gypsy-virgin's) tears
 May soften the hard edge of angry justice,
 Then grant me gracious hearing. As you're merciful,
 I beg my husband's life!
- FERNANDO Thy husband's, little one?
 PRECIOSA
 Gentle sir, our plighted troths are chronicled
 90 In that white book above, which notes the secrets
 Of every thought and heart. He is my husband;
 I am his wife.
- LUIS Rather his whore.
- PRECIOSA Now, trust me,
 You're no good man to say so. I am honest;
 'Deed, la, I am—a poor soul, that deserves not 95 Such a bad word. Were you a better man Than you are, you do me wrong.
- LUIS The toy grows angry!
- CLARA [to Roderigo]
 And it becomes her sweetly. Troth, my lord,
 I pity her.
- RODERIGO I thank you, sweet.
- LUIS [to Preciosa] Your husband,
 You'll say, is no thief—
- PRECIOSA Upon my conscience, 100 He is not.
- LUIS Dares not strike a man—
- PRECIOSA Unworthily,
 He dares not; but if trod upon, a worm
 Will turn again.
- LUIS That turning turns your worm
 Off from the ladder, minion.

54 charactered described61 Fore-points appoints in advance63 free released of his commitment to her (ironic)69 tried tested72 put . . . up accept this insult82 would this girl does this girl want83 cabin tent, hut, cave84 ballads (popular songs, despised by educated contemporaries, and often sad)86 Gypsy-virgin's (paradoxical, according to early modern prejudice)90 plighted troths pledged betrothals chronicled recorded and dated (like other historical facts)91 white book divine register94 honest chaste95 'Deed, la indeed (very mild ladylike oath)97 toy plaything102-3 if . . . turn (proverbial justification for revenge)103-4 turns . . . ladder i.e. hangs him

PRECIOSA Sir, I hope
 105 You're not his judge; you are too young, too choleric, Too passionate. The poise of life or death
 Requires a much more grave consideration
 Than your years warrant. Here sit they, like gods,
 Upon whose heads the reverend badge of time
 110 Hath sealed the proof of wisdom; to these oracles
 Of riper judgement, lower in my heart
 [She kneels]
 Than on my knees, I offer up my suit,
 My lawful suit, which begs they would be gentle
 To their own fames, their own immortal stories.
 115 O, do not think, my lords, compassion thrown
 On a base low estate, on humble people,
 Less meritorious than if you had favoured
 The faults of great men (and indeed great men Have oftentimes great faults). He whom I plead for 120 Is free; the soul of innocence itself
 Is not more white. Will you pity him?
 I see it in your eyes. 'Tis a sweet sunbeam;
 Let it shine out—and to adorn your praise,
 The prayers of the poor shall crown your days
 (And theirs are sometimes heard).
 125 FERNANDO Beshrew the girl,
 She has almost melted me to tears!
 LUIS Hence, trifler!—Call in my friend!
 Enter Don Juan [in irons], Diego, and Cardochia
 [To Diego] What hope of ease?
 DIEGO Good hope, but still I smart;
 The worst is in my pain.
 130 LUIS The price is high
 Shall buy thy vengeance. To receive a wound
 By a base villain's hand, it mads me.
 JUAN
 Men subject to th'extremity of law
 Should carry peace about 'em to their graves;
 135 Else, were you nobler than the blood you boast of
 Could any way (my lord) derive you, know
 I would return sharp answer to your slanders.
 But it suffices, I am none of aught
 Your rage miterms me.
 LUIS None of 'em? No rascal?
 JUAN
 No rascal.
 140 LUIS Nor no thief?
 JUAN
 Ask her that's my accuser. Could your eyes
 Pierce through the secrets of her foul desires,
 You might (without a partial judgement) look into
 A woman's lust and malice.
 CARDOCHIA My good lords,
 145 What I have articed against this fellow,
 I justify for truth.
 JUAN On then, no more.
 This being true she says, I have deserved
 To die.
 FERNANDO
 We sit not here to bandy words,
 But minister the law, and that condemns thee
 For theft unto the gallows.
 PRECIOSA O my misery!
 150 Are you all marble-breasted? Are your bosoms Hooped round with steel? To cast away a man
 More worthy life and honours than a thousand
 Of such as only pray unto the shadow
 Of abused greatness!
 JUAN 'Tis in vain to storm.
 155 My fate is here determinèd.
 PRECIOSA Lost creature,
 Art thou grown dull too? Is my love so cheap
 That thou court'st thy destruction 'cause I love
 thee?—
 My lords, my lords!—Speak, Andrew, prithee, now,
 Be not so cruel to thyself and me.
 160 One word of thine will do't.
 FERNANDO Away with him!
 Tomorrow is his day of execution.
 JUAN
 Even when you will.
 PRECIOSA Stay, man, thou shalt not go;
 Here are more women yet.—Sweet madam, speak.
 You, lady, you methinks should have some feeling 165 Of tenderness; you may be touched as I am.
 Troth, were't your cause, I'd weep with you, and join
 In earnest suit for one you held so dear.
 CLARA [to Roderigo]
 My lord, pray speak in his behalf.
 RODERIGO I would,
 170 But dare not; 'tis a fault so clear and manifest.
 LUIS
 Back with him to his dungeon!
 JUAN Heaven can tell
 I sorrow not to die, but to leave her
 Who whiles I live is my life's comforter.
 CARDOCHIA [aside] Now shall I be revenged!
 [Exeunt Don Juan, Diego, and Cardochia]

105 choleric full of cholera, angry

106 poise balance

108 they (Fernando and Pedro)

109 badge insignia (= white hair)

114 stories histories, biographies

120 free fault-free, faultless

123 shine out (eyes were believed to see by projecting eye-beams, like sunbeams)

125 Beshrew damn

129 smart hurt, wince

135 Else otherwise

145 articed particularized in the indictment

147 This being (a) since this is (b) if this is

148 bandy toss back and forth

149 minister administer

151 marble-breasted hard-hearted

154 pray...shadow (a) kneel down at the feet of, in the shadow of (b) worship the appearance rather than reality

155 abused deceived

157 dull senseless

161 One word i.e. his real name (which he has sworn to conceal, in becoming a Gypsy for two years)

166 touched affected, moved

Act 5 Scene 1

The Spanish Gipsie.

PRECIOSA
 O me unhappy!
 [She swoons]
 175 FERNANDO See, the girl falls!
 Some one look to her.
 CLARA 'Las, poor maid!
 EUGENIA Preciosa!—
 She does recover. Mine honourable lord—
 FERNANDO In vain, what is't?
 EUGENIA
 Be pleased to give me private audience;
 180 I will discover something shall advantage
 The noblest of this land.
 FERNANDO Well, I will hear thee.
 Bring in the girl. Exeunt. [Father stays Luis]
 LUIS Aught with me? What is't?
 I care not for thy company, old ruffian.
 Rascal, art impudent?
 FATHER To beg your service.
 LUIS
 Hang yourself!
 185 FATHER By your father's soul, sir, hear me!
 LUIS Dispatch.
 FATHER First promise me you'll get reprieve
 For the condemnèd man, and by my art
 I'll make you master of what your heart on earth
 Can wish for or desire.
 LUIS Thou li'st; thou canst not.
 FATHER
 Try me.
 190 LUIS Do that, and then (as I am noble)
 I will not only give thy friend his life
 But royally reward thee, love thee ever.
 FATHER
 I take your word. What would you?
 LUIS If thou mock'st me,
 'Twere better thou wert damned.
 FATHER Sir, I am resolute.
 195 LUIS Resolve me, then, whether the Count Alvarez,
 Who slew my father, be alive or dead?
 FATHER
 Is this the mighty matter? The count lives.
 LUIS
 How?
 FATHER
 The count lives.
 LUIS O fate! Now tell me where,
 And be my better genius.
 FATHER I can do't.
 In Spain a lives; more, not far from Madrid— 200
 But in disguise, much altered.
 LUIS Wonderful scholar!
 Miracle of artists! Alvarez living?
 And near Madrid too? Now, for heaven's sake, where?
 That's all, and I am thine.
 FATHER Walk off, my lord,
 To the next field; you shall know all.
 LUIS Apace, then! 205
 I listen to thee with a greedy ear.
 The miserable and the fortunate
 Are alike in this, they cannot change their fate.
Exeunt at one door.
Enter [the old Father and Luis] presently at the other [door] 5.2
 FATHER
 Good, good: you would fain kill him, and revenge
 Your father's death?
 LUIS I would.
 FATHER Bravely, or scurvily?
 LUIS
 Not basely, for the world!
 FATHER We are secure.
 [He discovers] two swords
 Young Luis, two more trusty blades than these Spain has not in her armory. With this, 5
 Alvarez slew thy father; and this other
 Was that the king of France wore when great Charles
 In a set battle took him prisoner.
 Both I resign to thee.
 LUIS This is a new mystery.
 FATHER
 Now see this naked bosom. Turn the points
 Of either on this bulwark, if thou covet'st (Out of a sprightly youth and manly thirst
 Of vengeance) blood; if blood be thy ambition,
 Then call to mind the fatal blow that struck
 De Castro, thy brave father, to his grave. 15
 Remember who it was that gave that blow,
 His enemy Alvarez: hear, and be sudden.
 Behold Alvarez.
 LUIS Death, I am deluded!
 FATHER
 Thou art incredulous. As fate is certain,
 I am the man.
 LUIS Thou, that butcher? 20

175, 182 girl (two syllables)

180 discover reveal advantage profit

186 Dispatch be quick about it

187 art black magic (associated with Gypsies)

199 better genius guardian angel

200 a he

202 artists magicians

205 Apace quickly

5.2.0.1 presently immediately

1 fain like to

3.1 discovers reveals, produces (probably from the trapdoor, as though they had been buried in this 'field')

4 trusty reliable

7-8 king... prisoner worn by Francis I at the battle of Pavia (1525), where he was defeated by the Holy Roman Emperor and King of Spain, Charles V (1500-1558), the most powerful monarch in sixteenth-century Europe

11 bulwark defensive barrier (i.e. his chest)

19 As... certain (proverbial)

FATHER
Tremble not, young man. Trust me, I have wept
Religiously to wash off from my conscience
The stain of my offence. Twelve years and more,
Like to a restless pilgrim I have run
25 From foreign lands to lands to find out death.
I'm weary of my life. Give me a sword.
That thou mayst know with what a perfect zeal
I honour old De Castro's memory,
I'll fight with thee; I would not have thy hand
30 Dipped in a wilful murder. I could wish
For one hour's space I could pluck back from time
But thirty of my years, that in my fall
Thou might'st deserve report. Now if thou conquer'st, Thou canst not triumph; I'm half dead already.
Yet I'll not start a foot.

35 LUIS Breathes there a spirit
In such a heap of age?

FATHER O, that I had
A son of equal growth with thee, to tug
For reputation! By thy father's ashes,
I would not kill thee for another Spain.
40 Yet now I'll do my best. Thou art amazed;
Come on.

LUIS Twelve tedious winters' banishment—
'Twas a long time.

FATHER Could they redeem thy father?
Would every age had been twelve ages, Luis,
And I for penance every age a-dying!
But 'tis too late to wish.

45 LUIS I am o'ercome.
Your nobleness hath conquered me. Here ends
All strife between our families, and henceforth Acknowledge me for yours.

FATHER O, thou reviv'st
Fresh horrors to my fact—for in thy gentleness
I see my sin anew.

50 LUIS Our peace is made.
Your life shall be my care. 'Twill be glad news
To all our noble friends.

FATHER Since heaven will have it so,
I thank thee, glorious majesty! My son—
For I will call thee son—ere the next morrow
55 Salute the world, thou shalt know stranger mysteries.

LUIS
I have enough to feed on. Sir, I'll follow ye. Exeunt

5.3 Enter Eugenia, Fernando, and Preciosa

FERNANDO
Don Juan, son to the count of Cárcamo?
Woman, take heed thou trifle not.

EUGENIA Is this,
My lord, so strange?
FERNANDO Beauty in youth, and wit
To set it forth, I see, transforms the best
Into what shape love fancies.
PRECIOSA Will you yet
Give me my husband's life? 5
FERNANDO Why, little one,
He is not married to thee.
PRECIOSA In his faith
He is—and faith and troth I hope bind faster
Than any other ceremonies can.
Do they not, pray, my lord?
FERNANDO Yes, where the parties 10
Pledged are not too unequal in degree,
As he and thou art.
PRECIOSA This is new divinity.
EUGENIA
My lord, behold this child well. In her face
You may observe, by curious insight, something
More than belongs to every common birth. 15
FERNANDO True, 'tis a pretty child.
EUGENIA The glass of misery
Is (after many a change of desperate fortune)
At length run out. You had a daughter, Called Constanza.
FERNANDO Ha!
EUGENIA A sister, Guiomare,
Wife to the Count Alvarez. 20
FERNANDO Peace, O, peace!
EUGENIA
And to that sister's charge you did commit
Your infant daughter—in whose birth your wife,
Her mother, died.
FERNANDO Woman, thou art too cruel!
PRECIOSA
What d'ye mean, grannam? 'Las, the nobleman Grows angry!
FERNANDO Not I, indeed I do not.— 25
But why d'ye use me thus?
EUGENIA Your child and sister,
As you supposed, were drowned.
FERNANDO Drowned, talking creature!
'Supposed'?
EUGENIA They live. Fernando, from my hand,
Thy sister's hand, receive thine own Constanza,
The sweetest, best child living.
PRECIOSA Do you mock me? 30
FERNANDO
Torment me on—yet more, more yet, and spare not.

33 report reputation

35 start budge

39 another Spain (Spanish conquests in the Americas were called 'New Spain')

49 fact crime

5.3.3-4 Beauty...forth i.e. Preciosa

5 what whatever

7 faith fidelity, commitment

8 troth betrothal, promise, truth

11 degree class, status

12 divinity theology

16 glass hourglass

21 charge care

27 creature (as though she were not human, but something else that was nevertheless—as only humans should be—capable of speech)

- My heart is now a-breaking, now!
- EUGENIA O brother,
Am I so far removed off from your memory
As that you will not know me? I expected 35 An other welcome home. Look on this casket,
[She shows] a casket
The legacy your lady left her daughter
When to her son she gave her crucifix.
- FERNANDO
Right, right, I know ye now.
- EUGENIA In all my sorrows,
My comfort has been here; she should be yours,
40 Because born yours.—Constanza, kneel, sweet child,
To thy old father.
- PRECIOSA [kneeling]
How? my father?
- FERNANDO Let not
Extremity of joys ravish life from me Too soon, heaven, I beseech thee!—Thou art my sister,
My sister Guiomare. How have mine eyes Been darkened all this while! 'Tis she!
- 45 EUGENIA 'Tis, brother—
And this Constanza, now no more a stranger,
No 'Preciosa' henceforth.
- FERNANDO My soul's treasure,
Live to an age of goodness, and so thrive
In all thy ways that thou mayst die to live!
- PRECIOSA
But must I call you father?
- 50 FERNANDO Thou wilt rob me else
Of that felicity, for whose sake only
I am ambitious of being young again.
Rise, rise, mine own Constanza!
- PRECIOSA [rising] 'Tis a new name,
But 'tis a pretty one. I may be bold
To make a suit t'ye?
- FERNANDO Anything.
- 55 PRECIOSA O father,
An if you be my father, think upon
Don Juan, my husband. Without him, alas,
I can be nothing!
- FERNANDO As I without thee;
Let me alone, Constanza.—Tell me, tell me,
Lives yet Alvarez?
- EUGENIA In your house.
- 60 FERNANDO Enough.
Cloy me not; let me by degrees digest
My joys.—Within! My lords! Francisco, Pedro!
Enter Francisco, Pedro, Maria, Roderigo, Clara
Come all at once! I have a world within me.
I am not mortal sure, I am not mortal.—
- My honourable lords, partake my blessings. 65
Count Alvarez lives, here in my house;
Your son, my lord Francisco, Don Juan, is
The condemned man, falsely accused of theft;
This, my lord Pedro, is my sister Guiomare;
Madam, this is Constanza, mine own child, 70
And I'm a wondrous merry man.—Without!
The prisoner!
Enter the old Father (Alvarez), Luis, Don Juan, Diego, Sancho, Soto, and Cardochia
- LUIS Here, free, and acquitted
By her whose folly drew her to this error—
And she for satisfaction is assured
To my wronged friend.
- CARDOCHIA I crave your pardons. 75
He whose I am speaks for me.
- DIEGO We both beg it.
- FERNANDO
Excellent, admirable!—My dear brother!
[Fernando and the old Father Alvarez embrace]
- FATHER
Never a happy man till now. Young Luis
And I are reconciled.
- LUIS For ever, faithfully, Religiously.
- OMNES [to Alvarez]
My noble lord, most welcome! 80
- FATHER
To all my heart pays what it owes, due thanks.—
[To Luis] Most, most, brave youth, to thee!
- JUAN I all this while Stand but a looker-on, and though my father
May justly tax the violence of my passions,
Yet if this lady (lady of my life) 85
Must be denied, let me be as I was,
And die betimes.
- PRECIOSA [to Fernando]
You promised me—
- FERNANDO I did.—
My lord of Cárcamo, you see their hearts
Are joined already; so let our consents
To this wished marriage.
- FRANCISCO [to Juan] I forgive thine errors. 90
Give me thy hand.
- FERNANDO [to Preciosa]
Me, thine.—But wilt thou love
My daughter, my Constanza?
JUAN As my bliss.
- PRECIOSA [to Juan]
I thee as life, youth, beauty, anything
That makes life comfortable.

35 other different

39–40 yours...yours your comfort...your child

41 How what

42 ravish abduct

47 treasure (playing on the name 'Preciosa')

49 live survive eternally in heaven

71 Without outside, out there

74 assured affianced, engaged

77 admirable amazing

87 betimes soon, early

89 so likewise (be joined)

THE TRIUMPHS OF INTEGRITY

with THE TRIUMPHS OF THE GOLDEN FLEECE

Edited by David M. Bergeron

ADDRESSING Parliament on 31 March 1607, James I warmed to a compelling metaphor: 'I would heartily wish my breast were a transparent glass for you all to see through, that you might look into my heart, and then would you be satisfied of my meaning.' He opened his March 1610 parliamentary address with the same metaphor. We know, of course, that James often went to great lengths to remain obscure and unknowable. In the 1623 mayoral pageant Middleton seizes the metaphor of transparency and links it to the concept of integrity, needed in both royal and city government. The idea and allegorical figure of Integrity provide a bridge in the pageant by which the memorable past crosses into present politics and by which mayoral celebration gives rise to royal politics. And The Triumphs of Integrity constructs a bridge by which Anthony Munday enters explicitly into authorial collaboration with Middleton.

Garret Christmas and Middleton received £150 for 'making and setting out of the pageants and Shows' in 1623. But one also finds in the records of the Drapers' Company, the sponsoring guild, a payment to Munday of £35 'for an Argoe', confirming his nearly ubiquitous participation in Jacobean Lord Mayor's shows, especially in the pageant writing of Middleton. At moments indeed it may be difficult to separate the two writers. But in 1623 their collaboration takes a rather different turn, resulting—uniquely—in two different texts for the mayoral pageant: Middleton's The Triumphs of Integrity and Munday's The Triumphs of the Golden Fleece.

Early in his text Middleton writes about the show that occurred on the river as the new mayor made his way to Westminster, describing it as 'a proper and significant masterpiece of triumph called the Imperial Canopy, being the ancient arms of the company, an invention neither old nor enforced' (36–9). This 'same glorious and apt property' (39) joined the four land devices. Since Munday wrote the river entertainment, Middleton presumably refers to that contribution, in fact in rather glowing terms. Munday in his text provides a brief device on the river that does not include any speeches. The 'argoe' depicts Jason and his Argonauts, all appropriate to the Drapers' arms and all taken from Munday's 1615 pageant, Metropolis Coronata. Middleton's characterization of the device as 'neither old nor enforced' seems at best inaccurate.

From at least the fifteenth century London mayors had made the obligatory trip to Westminster by river. This journey regularly included several boats, appropriately decorated with banners that reflected the guilds and the city. Eyewitness accounts focus on the spectacle of the river procession. In 1591 George Peele's Descensus As-traeae became the first pageant text to record the river entertainment. Only in The Triumphs of Love and Antiquity (1619) does Middleton record the river festivities, principally Love's speech. John Squire's 1620 mayoral pageant, The Triumphs of Peace, offers one of the most elaborate river entertainments. Munday, more often than not, includes in his texts some account of the river pageant. Metropolis Coronata, for example, portrays, in addition to Jason, a person representing Henry fitz Ailwin, London's first mayor. In a hundred-line speech he explicates the relevance of the Golden Fleece to the Drapers and finally insists to the new mayor: 'You are our Jason.'

For ten years Munday and Middleton have encountered each other in the process of writing mayoral pageants. Munday (1560–1633), poet, dramatist, historian, and translator, had been recognized by Francis Meres in Palladis Tamia as 'our best plotter'. Between 1602 and 1623 he had at least a hand in fifteen Lord Mayor's shows. In 1602 Middleton and Munday had collaborated, along with Dekker, Drayton, and Webster, on a play, Caesar's Fall, for Henslowe's company (see the further discussion in 'Lost Plays', p. 328). Since William Gifford's edition of Ben Jonson (1816) editors and commentators have referred to their 'rivalry', noting how Middleton in his pageant texts speaks 'slightingly' or 'disparagingly' of his rival Munday, who apparently regularly nips at Middleton's artistic heels. Little reliable evidence exists to confirm that Middleton thought Munday his inferior: we need only recall his praise of Munday at the end of The Triumphs of Truth. Instead, their unpleasant rivalry emerges as a nineteenth-century invention, which has become by now both 'old' and 'enforced'. Their separate texts in 1623, an aberration, confirm cooperation, not some personal rivalry. 'Collaboration' seems a far better, more nearly accurate, term to characterize much of the relationship between Middleton and Munday. In 1623 we do not have to scour guild records or glean some hint from Middleton's text to know of Munday's involvement. Here Munday's independently printed text, his last pageant, stands alongside Middleton's, evidence of his participation in the mayoral pageant and a necessary text if we would gain the complete picture of the mayoral festivities.

In Integrity Middleton moves from ancient shepherds to more recent former Lord Mayors in order to represent the past. The speaker Memory, reviewing the contribution of past mayors, comments that ‘shows, pomp, nor a house of state | Curiously decked’ (178–9) do not make a magistrate; rather, wisdom, justice, and care define him. At the same time, however, the indulgence in shows, pomp, and pageants calls attention to the virtues required of a magistrate; and this awareness leads to the Temple of Integrity where the realistic examples of the past give way to a mystification of virtue and an allegorizing of politics.

Of all playwrights from the mid-sixteenth to the mid-seventeenth century only Middleton represents Integrity. In Sun in Aries (1621) he cites Integrity as the one who keeps the keys to the Tower of Virtue; in Triumphs of Honour and Virtue (1622) he represents the allegorical figure Integrity as one of the eight parts that constitute the inward man, symbolized in the Globe of Honour. By 1623 Integrity has evolved into the titular character for the pageant. Middleton’s concept of Integrity corresponds to the opening lines of Horace’s Ode 22 of Book 1: ‘The man of upright life and free from sin, | requires no Moorish spears nor bow | and quiver laded with poisoned | arrows.’ Middleton plays off the idea that integrity means both whole and morally upright.

Middleton refers to the Temple of Integrity as ‘an unparalleled masterpiece of art’ (190); and he may be right, based on the tantalizing description. Through some kind of crystal one could see Integrity with ‘all her glorious and sanctimonious concomitants’ (192–3). In order to provide ‘content’ for the spectators and to express ‘the invention and the art of the engineer’ (194–5), this crystal temple ‘is made to open in many parts, at fit and convenient times’ (196–7). It has gold columns and silver battlements, ‘the whole fabric for the night triumph adorned and beautified with many lights, dispersing their glorious radiances on all sides through the crystal’ (199–202). We have to imagine what Integrity looked like, for Middleton only refers to her ‘immaculate self’ (192) without providing more specific information.

Integrity in her speech urges, ‘Look and look through me’ (207), possibly suggesting that she wears a garment of glass. Nothing hides her actions, no disguise or veil, ‘only a crystal, which approves me clear’, she says (214). Integrity instructs the new mayor: ‘so must thy acts | Be all translucent’ (231–2), and he must leave behind ‘worthy tracts | For future times to find’ (232–3). Such accomplishment would make him worthy of Memory’s recollection, joining the impressive list of Drapers. When Integrity says to the mayor that his ‘very breast’ should be ‘Transparent, like this place wherein I rest’ (233–4), she recalls James I’s metaphor in the parliamentary speeches. Paradoxically, one not only sees through Integrity, but also one gains a reflection, ‘the crystal glass | By which wise magistracy sets his face’, according to Orpheus in The Triumphs of Love and Antiquity (113–4).

Through a transparent glass we also gaze into current royal politics, refracted with a topical twist in the pa-

geant’s last device, the Canopy of State. The tableau has ‘three imperial crowns cast into the form and bigness of a triumphal pageant, with cloud and sunbeams’ (256–8), all derived from the Drapers’ arms, as also in the 1621 pageant. These sunbeams ‘mount and spread like a golden and glorious canopy over the deified persons’ under them (259–60). The persons, eight in number, represent the scriptural Beatitudes, as in the 1622 pageant, taken from the Sermon on the Mount. To enhance the device, Middleton has added James’s ‘word or motto’, ‘Beati pacifici’, ‘set in fair great letters near the uppermost of the three crowns’ (263–4). The Drapers’ crowns intersect with the King’s word even as his word joins the Word of God of the Beatitudes. Middleton justifies the reference to the King by drawing an architectural analogy: just as great buildings may have the king’s arms affixed to them, so this triumph that celebrates the mayor should contain ‘some remembrance of honour’ that reflects ‘upon his majesty, by whose peaceful government, under heaven, we enjoy the solemnity’ (269–71). The king’s arms attached to a building make a ‘frontispiece’ (266), just as such pageant devices often resemble title-pages of a book, and vice versa. Fair great letters produce the King’s word; Middleton’s words produce a book.

The speech, which has a three-part structure, begins by justifying the reference to ‘that royal peacemaker our king’ (274) and noting the contribution of the guild which has thrice ‘crowned their goodness this one day, | With love, with care, with cost’ (280–1). The second part leads to an extended interpretation of the symbolism of the tableau: the crowns, the cloud, the sunbeams. The crowns, for example, may also imply the three kingdoms of England, Scotland, and Ireland, ‘swayed by the meek hand | Of blest James’ (291–2). The three crowns may refer to the ‘threefold honour [that] makes the royal suit, | In the king, prince, and the king’s substitute’ (303–4). Middleton links the mayor with the King and Prince in a triumvirate of power. In his last pageants Middleton gives voice to the concept of the mayor as the king’s substitute, an idea absent from earlier Jacobean Lord Mayor’s shows. Certainly in terms of civic shows and pageants the Lord Mayor of London has virtually usurped the king’s place, suggesting the rising power of the city and the diminished economic and cultural power of the sovereign. Therefore, even in the midst of celebrating the peacemaker king, Middleton returns to the bracing idea that London’s mayor rivals the king, takes his place. He had in fact at the beginning of Integrity referred to the city’s preparations to receive ‘his Majesty’s great substitute into his honourable charge’ (26–7).

The immediate, topical nature of royal politics arises in the third part of the speech, which begins with this assertion: ‘We have the crown of Britain’s hope again, | Illustrious Charles our prince’ (298–9). If we have the prince again, where has he been? Charles had been to Spain, this same prince whose investiture as Prince of Wales Middleton had celebrated. Twenty-three years old, Charles had reached the time to marry. But negotiations with Spain, the leading contender, had somewhat bogged down; therefore, Charles determined to go to Spain himself, complete the negotiations, and bring the Infanta with him to England to marry. In a somewhat hare-brained scheme he and the Duke of Buckingham, complete with disguises, set out on 28 February 1623 for Spain. Finally, at the end of August, King Philip IV and the English delegation signed an agreement; and Charles left Spain shortly thereafter. But he did not take the Infanta with him; the Spanish would not consent to such.

The Triumphs of Integrity.

On 5 October 1623, Charles, Buckingham, and the others safely landed at Plymouth; they arrived in London the next day to universal rejoicing. Sir Simonds D'Ewes reports in his diary that he had never before seen so many bonfires, 335 just between Whitehall and Temple Bar. A few days later the Prince and the Duke had a tearful but joyful reunion with James at Royston. Such celebration continues into the Lord Mayor's show. Charles's return may itself be a triumph of integrity. Clearly Middleton prepares the pageant and this final commemoration of Charles in light of his recent return: 'We have the crown of Britain's hope again.'

SEE ALSO

The Triumphs of the Golden Fleece: 1772

Textual introduction and apparatus: Companion, 679

Authorship and date: Companion, 438

General introduction to the civic entertainments: this volume, 963

Other Middleton-Christmas works: Antiquity, 1397; Aries, 1586;

Virtue, 1714; Prosperity, 1901; lost pageant for Charles I, 1898

Other Middleton-Munday works: Caesar's Fall, 328

The Triumphs of Integrity

A noble solemnity, performed through the city, at the sole cost and charges of the Honourable Fraternity of Drapers, at the confirmation and establishment of their most worthy brother, the 5 Right Honourable Martin Lumley, in the high office of his Majesty's Lieutenant, Lord Mayor and Chancellor of the famous City of London.

Taking beginning at his lordship's going, and perfecting itself after his return from receiving the oath of 10 mayoralty at Westminster, on the morrow after Simon and Jude's Day, being the 29 of October 1623.

To the honour of him, to whom the noble Fraternity of Drapers, his worthy brothers have consecrated their loves, in costly triumphs; the Right Honourable Martin Lumley, 15 Lord Mayor of this renowned city.

Thy descent worthy, fortune's early grace
Sprung of an ancient and most generous race
Matched with a virtuous lady, justly may 20 Challenge the honour of so great a day.

Faithfully devoted to the worthiness of you both,
Tho. Middleton

*The Triumphs of Integrity,
or, a noble solemnity through the City.*

25 Of all solemnities by which the happy inauguration of a subject is celebrated, I find none that transcends the state and magnificence of that pomp prepared to receive his Majesty's great substitute into his honourable charge, the City of London, dignified by the title of the King's Chamber Royal; which that it may now appear no less heightened with brotherly affection, cost, art, or invention, than some 30 other preceding triumphs—by which of late times the city's honour hath been more faithfully illustrated—the takes its fit occasion to present itself.

And first to specify the love of his noble fraternity, after his lordship's return from Westminster, having received 35 some service upon the water by a proper and significant masterpiece of triumph called the Imperial Canopy, being the ancient arms of the company, an invention neither old nor enforced; the same glorious and apt property, 40 accompanied with four other triumphal pegmes, are in their convenient stages planted to honour his lordship's progress through the city: the first, for the land, attending his most wished arrival in Paul's Churchyard, which bears the inscription of a Mount Royal, on which mount are 45 placed certain kings and great commanders, which ancient history produces, that were originally sprung from shepherds and humble beginnings: only the number of six presented; some with crowns, some with gilt laurels, holding in their hands silver sheephooks; viz. Viriat, a 50 prime commander of the Portugals, renowned amongst the historians, especially the Romans, who, in battles of fourteen years' continuance, purchased many great and

5 Martin Lumley (c.1560–1634); serving as Alderman by 1614

17 race a possible reference to Lumley's
Italian ancestry

18 virtuous lady reference to Lumley's wife

36 service . . . water refers to Munday's Triumphs of the Golden Fleece, performed on the Thames (see p. 1772)

40 pegmes pageant structures

43 Paul's Churchyard eastern end of St

Paul's Cathedral

49 Viriat or Viriathus; between c.145 and 139 bc gained control of the Iberian peninsula

The Triumphs of Integrity.

honourable victories; Arsaces, king of the Parthians, who 55 ordained the first kingdom that ever was amongst them, and in the reverence of this king's name and memory
 all others his successors were called Arsacides after his name, as the Roman emperors took the name of Caesar for the love of great Caesar Augustus; also Marcus Julius 60 Lucinus; Bohemia's Primislaus; the emperor Pertinax; the great victor Tamburlaine, conqueror of Syria, Armenia, Babylon, Mesopotamia, Scythia, Albania, etc. Many honourable worthies more I could produce, by their deserts ennobling their mean originals. But for the better expression of the purpose in hand, a speaker lends a voice to 65 these following words.

THE SPEECH IN THE MOUNT ROYAL

*They that with glory-inflamed hearts desire
 To see great worth deservingly aspire,
 Let 'em draw near and fix a serious eye
 On this triumphant Mount of Royalty;
 70 Here they shall find fair virtue and her name
 From low, obscure beginnings raised to fame,
 Like light struck out of darkness. The mean wombs
 No more eclipse brave merit than rich tombs
 Make the soul happy; 'tis the life, and dying
 75 Crowns both with honour's sacred satisfying;
 And 'tis the noblest splendour upon earth
 For man to add a glory to his birth,
 All his life's race with honoured acts commixed,
 Than to be nobly born, and there stand fixed,
 80 As if 'twere competent virtue for whole life
 To be begot a lord: 'tis virtuous strife
 That makes the complete Christian, not high place,
 As true submission is the state of grace.
 'The path to bliss lies in the humblest field;
 85 Who ever risse to heaven that never kneeed?'
 Although the roof hath supernatural height,
 Yet there's no flesh can thither go upright.
 All this is instanced only to commend
 The low condition whence these kings descend.
 David. I spare the prince of prophets in this file,
 And preserve him for a far holier style,
 Who, being king anointed, did not scorn
 To be a shepherd after. These were born
 95 Shepherds and risse to kings; took their ascending
 From the strong hand of virtue, never ending
 Where she begins to raise, until she place
 Her love-sick servants equal with her grace:
 And by this day's great honour it appears
 She's much prevailed amongst the reverend years*

*Of these grave senators; chief of the rest,
 Her favour hath reflected most and best
 Upon that son whom we of honour call;
 And may't successively reflect on all.* 100

From this Mount Royal, beautified with the glory of deserving aspirers, descend we to the modern use of this 105 ancient and honourable mystery, and there we shall find the whole livery of this most renowned and famous city, as upon this day, and at all solemn meetings furnished by it; it clothes the honourable senators in their highest and richest wearings, all courts of justice, magistrates, and 110 judges of the land.

By this time his lordship and the worthy company being gracefully conducted toward the Little Conduit in Cheap, there another part of the triumph waits his honour's happy approach, being a chariot artfully framed 115 and properly garnished. And on the conspicuous part thereof is placed the register of all heroic acts and worthy men, bearing the title of Sacred Memory, who, for the greater fame of this honourable fraternity, presents the never-dying names of many memorable and remarkable 120 worthies of this ancient Society, such as were then famous for state and government: Sir Henry fitz Ailwin, knight, who held the seat of magistracy in this city twenty-four years together; he sits figured under the person of Government; Sir John Norman, the first lord mayor rowed 125 in barge to Westminster with silver oars at his own cost and charges, under the person of Honour; the valiant Sir Francis Drake, that rich ornament to memory, who in two years and ten months' space did cast a girdle about the world, under the person of Victory; Sir Simon Eyre, 130 who at his own cost built Leadenhall, a granary for the poor, under the figure of Charity; Sir Richard Champion and Sir John Milborne, under the person of Munificence or Bounty: Sir Richard Hardell and Sir John Poultney, the one in the seat of magistracy six years, the other 135 four years together, under the figures of Justice and Piety, that Sir John being a college-founder in the parish of St
 Lawrence Poultney, by Candlewick Street; et sic de ceteris.
 This Chariot drawn by two pelleted lions, being the proper supporters of the company's arms; those two upon the 140 lions presenting Power and Honour, the one in a little streamer or banneret bearing the Lord Mayor's arms, the other the company's.

THE SPEECH IN THE CHARIOT BY MEMORY

*I am all Memory, and methinks I see
 Into the farthest time, act, quality,* 145

53 Arsaces obscure first king of Parthia, c.250 BC; reigned two years before being assassinated
 58-9 Marcus Julius Lucinus possibly Valerius Licinianus Licinius, a Dacian peasant who became Augustus, AD 308-24
 59 Primislaus Premysl, legendary founder of the Premyslid dynasty; originally a

ploughman and later a noted lawgiver Pertinax supposedly son of a weaver, became distinguished general under Marcus Aurelius (Burrige)
 60 Tamburlaine immortalized in Marlowe's two plays about him
 90 file catalogue or list 90.n David Old Testament king, former shepherd

 106 mystery guild
 107 livery all the guilds
 122-34 Henry... Poultney identified in the 1621 pageant, Aries
 138 et sic de ceteris and so forth
 139 pelleted lions marked with heraldic pellets

The Triumphs of Integrity.

As clear as if 'twere now begun again,
 The natures, dispositions, and the men.
 I find to goodness they bent all their powers,
 Which very name makes blushing times of ours;
 150 They heaped up virtues long before they were old;
 This age sits laughing upon heaps of gold.
 We by great buildings strive to raise our names,
 But they more truly wise built up their fames,
 Erected fair examples, large and high,
 155 Patterns for us to build our honours by:
 For instance only, Memory relates
 The noblest of all city magistrates,
 Famous fitz Ailwin; naming him alone,
 I sum up twenty-four lord mayors in one,
 160 For he, by free election and consent,
 Filled all those years with virtuous government;
 Custom and time requiring now but one,
 How ought that year to be well dwelt upon;
 It should appear an abstract of that worth 165 Which former times in many years brought forth.
 Through all the life of man this is the year
 Which many wish and never can come near;
 Think, and give thanks; to whom this year does come,
 The greatest subject's made in Christendom.
 170 This is the year for whom some long prepared,
 And others have their glorious fortune shared,
 But serious in thanksgiving; 'tis a year
 To which all virtues, like the people here,
 Should throng and cleave together, for the place 175 Is a fit match for the whole stock of grace.
 And as men gather wealth 'gainst the year comes,
 So should they gather goodness with their sums;
 For 'tis not shows, pomp, nor a house of state
 Curiously decked, that makes a magistrate,
 180 'Tis his fair, noble soul, his wisdom, care,
 His upright justness to the oath he sware
 Gives him complete; when such a man to me Spreads his arms open, there my palace be.
 He's both an honour to the day so graced, 185 And to his brotherhood's love, that sees him placed;
 And in his fair deportment there revives
 The ancient fame of all his brothers' lives.

After this, for the full close of the forenoon's triumph, near St Lawrence Lane his lordship receives an entertain-190 ment from an unparalleled masterpiece of art, called the Crystal Sanctuary, styled by the name of the Temple of Integrity, where her immaculate self with all her glorious and sanctimonious concomitants sit, transparently seen 195 through the crystal; and more to express the invention and the art of the engineer, as also for motion, variety, and the content of the spectators, this Crystal Temple is made to open in many parts, at fit and convenient times, and upon occasion of the speech. The columns or pillars of this Crystal Sanctuary are gold, the battlements silver, the whole fabric for the night triumph adorned and beautified 200 with many lights, dispersing their glorious radiances on all sides through the crystal.

THE SPEECH FROM THE SANCTUARY BY INTEGRITY

Have you a mind, thick multitude, to see
 A virtue near concerns magistracy?
 Here on my temple throw your greedy eyes,
 205 See me, and learn to know me, then you're wise;
 Look and look through me, I no favour crave,
 Nor keep I hid the goodness you should have;
 'Tis all transparent what I think or do,
 And with one look your eye may pierce me through;
 210 There's no disguise or hypocritic veil,
 Used by adulterous beauty set to sale,
 Spread o'er my actions for respect or fear,
 Only a crystal, which approves me clear.
 Would you desire my name? Integrity, 215 One that is ever what she seems to be;
 So manifest, perspicuous, plain, and clear,
 You may e'en see my thoughts as they sit here;
 I think upon fair equity and truth,
 And there they sit crowned with eternal youth;
 220 I fix my cogitations upon love,
 Peace, meekness, and those thoughts come from above.
 The temple of an upright magistrate
 Is my fair sanctuary, throne, and state;
 And as I dare detraction's evil'st eye,
 225 Sore at the sight of goodness, to espy
 Into my ways and actions, which lie ope
 To every censure, armed with a strong hope.
 So of your part ought nothing to be done,
 But what the envious eye might look upon:
 230 As thou art eminent, so must thy acts
 Be all translucent, and leave worthy tracts
 For future times to find, thy very breast Transparent, like this place wherein I rest.
 235 Vain doubtings; all thy days have been so clear,
 Never came nobler hope to fill a year.

At the close of this speech this crystal Temple of Integrity with all her celestial concomitants and the other parts of triumph take leave of his lordship for that time and rest from service till the great feast be ended; after which 240 the whole body of the triumph attends upon his honour, both towards Saint Paul's and homeward, his lordship accompanied with the grave and honourable senators of the city, amongst whom the two worthy consuls, his lordship's grave assistants for the year, the worshipful 245 and generous Master Ralph Freeman and Master Thomas

181 sware past tense of swore

185 brotherhood's members of the Drapers

193 sanctimonious concomitants holy companions

203 thick multitude crowd

212 adulterous false

214 approves proves

217 perspicuous translucent, transparent

221 cogitations thoughts, meditations

232 tracts pamphlets; deeds form books

246 Ralph Freeman became mayor, 1633-34; honoured in Thomas Heywood's

Lord Mayor's Show; died in office

246-7 Thomas Moulson became mayor in 1634 upon Freeman's death

The Triumphs of Integrity.

Moulson, sheriffs and aldermen, ought not to pass of my respect unremembered, whose bounty and nobleness will prove best their own expressers.

250 Near the entrance of Wood Street, that part of triumph being planted to which the concluding speech hath chiefly reference, and the rest about the Cross, I thought fit in this place to give this its full illustration, it being an invention both glorious and proper to the company, bearing the name of the thrice-royal Canopy of State, being the honoured arms of this fraternity, the three imperial crowns cast into the form and bigness of a triumphal pageant, with cloud and sunbeams, those beams, by ingenious art, made often to mount and spread like a golden and glorious canopy over the deified persons that are placed under it, which are eight in number, figuring the eight Beatitudes. To improve which conceit, Beati pacifici, being the King's word or motto, is set in fair great letters near the uppermost of the three crowns; and as in all great edifices or buildings the king's arms is especially remembered, as an honour to the building and builder, in the frontispiece, so is it comely and requisite in these matters of triumph, framed for the inauguration of his great substitute, the Lord Mayor of London, that some remembrance of honour should reflect upon his majesty, by whose peaceful government, under heaven, we enjoy the solemnity.

THE SPEECH, HAVING REFERENCE TO THIS IMPERIAL CANOPY, BEING THE DRAPERS' ARMS

275 *The blessedness, peace, honour, and renown,
This kingdom does enjoy, under the crown
Worn by that royal peacemaker our king,
So oft preserved from dangers menacing,
Makes this arms, glorious in itself, outgo
All that antiquity could ever show;
And thy fraternity hath strived t'appear
In all their course worthy the arms they bear;*

*Thrice have they crowned their goodness this one day, 280
With love, with care, with cost; by which they may,
By their deserts, most justly these arms claim,
Got once by worth, now trebly held by fame.
Shall I bring honour to a larger field
And show what royal business these arms yield? 285
First, the three crowns affords a divine scope,
Set for the graces, charity, faith, and hope,
Which three the only safe combiners be
Of kingdoms, crowns, and every company;
Likewise, with just propriety they may stand 290
For those three kingdoms swayed by the meek hand
Of blest James: England, Scotland, Ireland.
The cloud that swells beneath 'em may imply
Some envious mist cast forth by heresy,
Which, through his happy reign and heaven's blest will, 295
The sunbeams of the Gospel strikes through still;
More to assure it to succeeding men,
We have the crown of Britain's hope again,
Illustrious Charles our prince, which all will say
Adds the chief joy and honour to this day; 300
And as three crowns, three fruits of brotherhood,
By which all love's worth may be understood,
To threefold honour makes the royal suit,
In the king, prince, and the king's substitute;
By th' eight Beatitudes ye understand 305
The fullness of all blessings to this land,
More chiefly to this city, whose safe peace
Good angels guard, and good men's prayers increase.
May all succeeding honoured brothers be 310
With as much love brought home as thine brings thee.*

For all the proper adornments of art and workmanship in so short a time, so gracefully setting forth the body of so magnificent a triumph, the praise comes, as a just due, to the exquisite deservings of Master Garret Christmas, whose faithful performances still take the upper hand of his promises. 315

FINIS.

250 Wood Street runs north off of Cheapside between Cutter Lane and Milk Street
252 Cross The Cheapside Cross stood opposite the end of Wood Street.
258 ingenious clever, ingenious; or having the nature of an engine 261 eight Beatitudes used by Middleton in the previous year's pageant, Virtue 262 Beati pacifici 'Blessed are the peace-makers', the motto of King James 266 frontispiece entrance of a building

274 king King James I 275 preserved...menacing refers probably to King James's escapes from death in the Gowrie Conspiracy of 1600 and the Gunpowder Plot of 1605

287 graces the Theological Graces found in the New Testament, 1 Corinthians 13
292 Ireland trisyllabic

ANTHONY MUNDAY

The Triumphs of the Golden Fleece

Edited by David M. Bergeron

Performed at the cost and charges of the ancient and honourable Society of the Drapers, for the instalment of their worthy brother Master
Martin Lumley in the mayoralty of London.

On Wednesday, being the nine and twentieth day of October, 1623.

To the worshipful and worthy gentlemen, Master John Gualter, Master John Foster, Master Robert Aubrey, Master Walter Coventrey, the masters, wardens, bachelors, and their assistant brethren, of the ancient and honourable company of the Drapers

To you worthy gentlemen, whose provident care and liberal cost hath run through the troublesome travail of so serious an employment, do I justly (and as no more than is your due) dedicate this poor pains of mine, which might have been more, had time so favoured; but such as it is, take you the honour of my best endeavour, in this day's Triumphs of the Golden Fleece, and what service else you shall please to command me.

Your poor loving brother,
A. Munday

Gracing the triumph day, for the inauguration of the Drapers' worthy brother, Master Martin Lumley, in the mayoralty of London, for the year ensuing.

First, for the water service in the morning, when his lordship taketh barge for his convoy to Westminster, accompanied with the knights and aldermen, his worthy brethren of several societies and all the other companies in their triumphal barges with drums, fifes, trumpets, and other jovial instruments. There is readily mounted on a barge of apt conveyance a beautiful and curious argo, shaped after the old Grecian antique manner, not with masts and sails, as prepared for rough and boisterous seas,
but like to the Grecian argos, for carriage of passengers, in time of calm and gentle weather, having banks for men to sit and row with oars, for more quick and agile passage on the seas.

This argo, figureth that of so great fame and renown, wherein Prince Jason and his valiant Argonauts of Greece passed to Colchis, to fetch from thence the Golden Fleece, which is the crest of the Drapers' armory, and therefore the main motive of our employing the invention, alluding to that famous moral and ancient history.

We suppose this argo to be returned from Colchis, purposely to honour this triumphal day by the rare art of Medea the enchantress that kept the fleece there so long a time, and wherewith she was now the more willing to part, in regard of her affection to the Drapers company, to whom she gave it freely for an honour and ornament to their arms.

And to make the triumph the more full of majesty,
she vouchsafed to come herself in person, attended with the fair Queen Irene her daughter, and accompanied with the famous princes Jason, Hercules, Telamon, Orpheus, Castor, and Pollux, all armed with fair gilt armours, and bearing triumphal lances, wreathed about with gilded laurel and curious shields, all carrying the impress of the Golden Fleece.

Six tributary Indian kings, holding their several dominions of Medea and living in vassalage to her, are commanded by her to row the argo, all of them wearing their tributary crowns, and antequely attired in rich habiliments.

The service being performed upon the water, the like is done on the land, all the rest of the day following, always attending his honour's service, and for adding the more splendour to the triumph's solemnity.

Whatsoever credit or commendation (if any at all) may attend on the artful performance of this poor device, it belongeth to the arts-masters Richard Simpson and Nicholas Sotherne; and freely I give it to them.

A. M.

FINIS.

26 convoy escorted journey

30 jovial merry

39 Jason See Munday's treatment of the Jason story in his 1615 Lord Mayor's Show, Metropolis Coronata. Jason succeeded in getting the Golden Fleece with the help of Medea and his fellow Argonauts.

46 Medea noted for her witchcraft, she helped Jason secure the Golden Fleece and fled with him, becoming his wife

54-5 Hercules . . . Pollux Mythological figures who accompanied Jason on his quest.
Hercules possessed great strength, and accomplished the twelve great labours imposed on him. Telamon helped Hercules in the battle against Troy, and was first to scale the walls of Troy. Orpheus was a superb musician; compare Middleton's treatment of him in Antiquity.

Castor and Pollux were brothers, and later the patron deities of mariners.

57 impress emblem or device

70-1 Richard Simpson . . . Nicholas Sotherne
The names of these artificers do not appear in other records or texts of pageant entertainments.

A GAME AT CHESSE: AN EARLY FORM

Edited by Gary Taylor

A Game at Chess is an English history play—a play about history, which also made history. It stimulated more immediate commentary than any play, masque, or pageant of its age. Accounts of it were dispatched to Brussels, Dublin, Florence, Madrid, Paris, and Venice. In England, it was rumoured to have received a secret performance at court; certainly, it provoked action by the King, the Earl of Pembroke, and the Privy Council, which not only closed down the play but (for a while) closed down all the London theatres, fined the King's Men, ordered a manhunt for Middleton, interrogated his son, and eventually jailed the author in the Fleet prison. (See "Occasional Poems".) Its text survives in many more manuscripts than any other play of the period; it was published in more illicit editions than any other play; it was the first individual play published with an engraved title-page—and was then published again in another edition with yet another engraved title-page. Almost forty years later, in 1663, William Davenant still expected audiences to remember it as the exorbitant high-water mark of theatrical popularity (Steen, 63).

The play that made literary history dramatizes a pivotal period of English, and indeed European, history: the major political and foreign policy crises of 1620–24. It might be entitled The Troublesome Reign of King James. It brought onto the stage representations of King James I, Prince Charles, the Duke of Buckingham, King Felipe IV of Spain, the Archbishop of Spalato, the Conde de Gondomar, and various other participants in the conflict between Protestant England and Catholic Spain at the beginning of the Thirty Years' War.

Like every other history play, A Game at Chess sometimes sacrifices documentary detail to the foreshortening demands of dramatic form. Shakespeare, for instance, conflates separate historical individuals into a single fictional character, routinely manufactures persons, invents or distorts motives and events. Likewise, Middleton's White King's Pawn combines elements of several unpopular courtiers, and satirizes not an individual, but a pattern of court corruption increasingly visible in Jacobean England (Peck); many characters cannot be confidently identified with historical individuals, but instead personify tendencies or institutions.

From Aristotle to Sir Philip Sidney, poetry had been celebrated as 'more philosophical and more studiously serious than history', precisely because it was not bound to the 'bare was' of chronicle particulars. Political critics then and since have sometimes complained about 'inaccuracy' in A Game at Chess; such objections are themselves a tribute to the play's uniquely persuasive historicity-effect. But all histories are stories. Even the most rigorously academic monographs on English politics in the 1620s cannot help but deploy (like Middleton's play) the rhetorics of fiction—emphasis, selection, connection, speculation.

If, in such respects, A Game at Chess resembles all other histories and plays, it does differ from the more familiar history plays of the 1590s, praised and epitomized by Thomas Nashe:

How would it have joyed brave Talbot (the terror of the French) to think that, after he had lain two hundred years in his tomb, he should triumph again on the stage, and have his bones new embalmed with the tears of ten thousand spectators at least, at several times, who, in the tragedian that represents his person, imagine they behold him fresh bleeding.

That is not how anyone has ever reacted to A Game at Chess. Its radical originality can be seen in the two features of Nashe's prescription which it conspicuously rejects: the focus on individual prowess, and the representation of a distant past.

There is, in A Game at Chess, no personal political protagonist. Like other Middleton plays, his last play emphasizes ensemble; it is not built around a single dominant 'star'. Middleton does not represent politics in terms of charismatic individuality, and he never created supermen like Marlowe's Tamburlaine, Shakespeare's Henry V, or Chapman's Duke of Byron. The insistence upon magnetic individuals (good or bad), which pervades earlier history plays, reflects and helps to perpetuate a political system defined by factions. The politics of faction is organized around loyalty to individuals. There are no stable political parties, no fundamentally ideological motives or groupings, only a complex network of interlocking personal relationships, shifting alliances and rivalries, within a relatively small ruling group.

Faction (as Conrad Russell, Kevin Sharpe, and other revisionist historians have demonstrated) still dominated English governance in the 1620s. Indeed, the Spanish Match—which is in one sense the subject of A Game at Chess—epitomizes the politics of faction. James I sought to cement an alliance between Catholic Spain and Protestant England by marrying the Prince of Wales to the sister of Felipe IV; as a result of this alliance, James expected Spanish help in restoring his son-in-law Frederick to his hereditary domain (the Palatinate), from which he had been ousted by Felipe IV's uncle (the Holy Roman Emperor Frederick II). This sort of dynastic diplomacy translated faction onto an international scale: personal alliances between ruling families determined the fate of nations.

The Spanish Match was never consummated. It was aborted by a combination of the old politics of faction and a new politics of ideology and race. Returning from Madrid in October 1623 after months of frustrating negotiations, Prince Charles and the Duke of Buckingham—in what contemporaries called a 'blessed revolution'—quickly created a new factional alliance against the King's pro-Spanish foreign policy. The heir to the throne and the royal favourite, working in concert, formed a formidable nexus of political patronage. But that localized personal power was, in 1624, allied to a more widespread and impersonal nexus of opposition, in a brief moment of national unity which A Game at Chess celebrates (Cogswell). Most of the King's subjects wanted anti-Catholic foreign and domestic policies; they did not want a Catholic Spanish Queen of England. A majority of public and Parliament believed that foreign policy should be dictated, not by personal family alliances (which might unite the Habsburg and the Stuart dynasties), but by ideological convictions (which bitterly divided their subjects).

The protagonist of A Game at Chess is not a person but a party: 'the White cause'. In his four plays on the reigns of Henry VI and Richard III (printed for the first time together in November 1623), Shakespeare had dramatized 'the contention' between 'the House of York' and 'the House of Lancaster', two rival factions with no discernible ideological differences, eventually reconciled by a marriage which unites the two dynasties. Middleton instead represents the contention between the House of Stuart and the House of Habsburg as a struggle between the White House and the Black House. Familial relationships, so central to the politics of faction and the history plays of Shakespeare, are ignored: though Prince Charles was James I's son, the White King is not characterized as the White Knight's father. Shakespeare used white and red roses as props, to clarify shifting factional alliances; Middleton uses white and black for the same purpose, but he also saturates clothing and skin-colour with meaning. And Middleton's audience celebrates the fact that a contracted marriage is never consummated.

In A Game at Chess, political conflict is ideologically (and racially) organized. That is one reason why the play's historical figures are translated into chess pieces. This conceit is usually explained as a ruse that helped Middleton slip an incendiary play past the censor. But the chess game is not just a disguise; it is also, in itself, a powerful signifier. Chess, which formalizes conflict into a binary opposition between polarized teams, articulates an emergent political system.

The organizational politics of party opposition did not crystallize until the crises of the 1640s, and did not develop into the familiar two-party Parliamentary system until the 1670s; historians are right to criticize anachronistic readings of the political turmoil of the 1620s in terms of simple divisions between a 'court party' and a 'country party', or 'government' and 'opposition'. But Middleton has here envisaged party politics. In 1624 Thomas Scott called the divisions between Englishmen over continental politics 'the seminary of a civil war' (Vox Regis, 22; his italics). Echoes of Middleton's 1624 play can be heard in the civil war of the early 1640s and then again in the party-political street-theatre of the Exclusion Crisis which preceded the Glorious Revolution. In March 1641 a 'Game at Chess' (possibly Middleton's play) was performed at Oxford before Prince Charles (the future Charles II); the prologue, specially written for the occasion, warned that 'The King had best look to't, ere't be too late. | He has had sufficient checks; now, 'ware the mate.' In a polemical pamphlet entitled The Game at Chess: a metaphorical discourse showing the present state of this kingdom (1643), King Charles I—the White Knight of Middleton's play—has become, instead, the Black King, and the White side 'betokens the Parliament's army'. In 1680 'The Devil in the habit of a Jesuit' seduced a nun before audiences at Bartholomew and Southwark Fairs; later, 'The Scene

This 1624 title-page illustrates Gondomar's special chair, litter, and cane. The cane is not mentioned in Middleton's text, but may have been used in performance, as were the chair and litter.

suddenly draws off, and discovers Hell full of Devils, Popes and Cardinals'. A Game at Chess was the first, and is still the most evocative and complex, characterization of a recognizably modern political world.

Its modernity was its most scandalous feature. Unlike Talbot, Middleton's White King had not 'lain two hundred years in his tomb' before the players showed him 'on the stage'. The events dramatized in A Game at Chess were very recent history. The major players were all still alive. Gondomar's actual litter and special chair were brought on stage; the comedian who played him wore a discarded suit of Gondomar's clothes, and mimicked his personal mannerisms.

Other history plays worked to familiarize the far-away, to make the past present; Middleton's play sets out, instead, to re-present the present to itself. A Game at Chess applies to national and international politics an artistic agenda Middleton had perfected in the insistent present tensing of city comedies and Yorkshire tragedies, annals and almanacs. As in his Lord Mayor's shows, this 'Angle of the world' (Induction.1) at the same time represents and is London—a place where the fictive and the actual coalesce, where 'anie in the Assemblie' deceived by Jesuit misrepresentations (5.78–9) may be fictive persons in a fictive theatre, and/or real persons in Parliament, Privy Council, the Convocation of the Church of England, and/or ourselves now.

But re-presenting the present is not as easy as it may sound. Long before Bertold Brecht, Middleton realized the need to defamiliarize familiar material, as a way of forcing audiences to perceive freshly what they had always seen and therefore never noticed. That is one function of metaphor, and one function of chess in Middleton's 'epic theatre'. Chess is an alienation device: the most important political events of recent months and years were translated into a series of moves in a game. Every disguise signifies. Formalizing politics re-focused it.

Annabel Patterson has argued that the indirection, irony, and polyphony which epitomize what we call 'literature' originated in early modern England as a way of communicating past or through a censor; censorship created in authors and readers a hermeneutical habit, which located encoded meanings beneath the surface or between the lines. Deciphering this code (using techniques first advocated by the right-wing philosopher Leo Strauss), left-wing critics have discerned fragments of subversion in almost every early modern play and poem. But by finding resistance everywhere, this critical programme has tended to homogenize the very real political differences between texts and authors, and thus to obscure the demonstrable uniqueness—political and literary—of Middleton's play.

No doubt, censorship contributed to Middleton's doubling-focus. But such displacement is not just a response to censorship, and did not originate in early modern England. Comparable techniques can be found in the uncensored democratic comedies of Aristophanes (which Middleton could have read, and to which A Game at Chess has often been compared). Artistic displacement exists independently of censorship. Moreover, censorship does not necessarily produce dense or intense displacements. It takes little wit for an author to make a fictive character complain about a fictive ruler's failure to appreciate and reward his fictive soldiers (as Massinger did in 1623 in the superfluous subplot of The Bondman), and little wit in an interpreter to realize that such complaints apply to the English government's treatment of its own veterans. The doubled meanings of A Game at Chess are altogether more complicated, politically and artistically.

With or without censors, the doubling created by metaphor, metonymy, and irony multiply the intellectual and emotional content which can be packed into a single unit of text: they increase information density, thereby intensifying the pleasures of interpretation. One of its earliest interpreters, John Holles, ended his eyewitness description of A Game at Chess with the teasing assurance that 'Every particular will bear a large paraphrase.' This density, intensity, and variety multiply the markets to which a text may appeal. John Chamberlain reported that Middleton's play was 'frequented by all sorts of people: old and young, rich and poor, masters and servants, papists and puritans'. Perceived by contemporaries as simultaneously the most subversive and the most commercially successful play of its era, for both historians and literary critics A Game at Chess sets the standard by which the political force of early modern literature must be measured.

A Game at Chess made news—appropriately enough, because Middleton's play was made from news. Formally, it drew upon a long native tradition of anti-Catholic polemic, which ranged in substance from Donne's erudite Ignatius his Conclave to popular ballads and broadsides ridiculing the pope or celebrating the constancy of Protestant women (Watt). Factually, though, the sources for the play's political details were not magnificent old folios of official history, but rough pamphlets about recent events (extensively cited in the commentary).

More generally, Middleton transformed ephemera into art. In the early 1620s there was (as Joseph Frank, Richard Cust, Thomas Cogswell, and other historians have shown) an explosive proliferation of mechanisms—oral and textual, informal and institutionalized—for collecting and communicating political information. They included the gossip shop around St Paul's cathedral, the manuscript newsletters and Parliamentary reports regularly sent by London agents to their country patrons, the country inns and alehouses where merchants and pedlars retailed texts and re-told stories to local communities, the cheap news-sheets ('corantos'), printed in hundreds or thousands of copies. News had become, for the first time, a routine commodity, part of the long-distance traffic organized by merchants like Richard Fishbourne (to whom Middleton had dedicated the 1620 issue of The Two Gates of Salvation). By such means, the details of royal policy at home and abroad—what Tacitus had called arcana imperii, what James I labelled 'my prerogative, or mystery of state'—were exposed to the uncontrolled scrutiny of a wider public.

The 'genesis of the bourgeois public sphere', theorized by Jürgen Habermas, was actually consolidated in the early 1620s—the years in which, and about which, A Game at Chess and its sources were written. Not accidentally, the beginning of news coincides with the beginning of parties. Most of the products of the English printing industry, for a century, had been religious texts, ranging from expensive polemical theology to cheap popular piety. The press helped to create an ideological reading public, which in turn created a growing demand for ideological news.

Royal officials and apologists were quick to execrate this democratizing of information. Sir Francis Bacon, dismissing poetry as 'nothing else but feigned history', argued that 'ministers and great officers... and those who have handled the helm of government, and been acquainted with the difficulties and mysteries of state business' were the only people qualified to interpret political chronicles, and in 1622 his History of the Reign of King Henry the Seventh offered itself as a new model of historicity. In his 1620 court masque, News from the New World Discovered in the Moon, Ben Jonson ridiculed the 'printers of news' and 'factors of news' who manufactured 'news, news, news', selling lies to 'the common people'; in 1626, Jonson's play The Staple of News expanded this satire of the age's 'hunger and thirst after published pamphlets of news'. One explicit object of Jonson's scorn was A Game at Chess.

Not content to complain, the government did its best to restrain the growing 'inordinate liberty of unreverent speech'. Royal proclamations of 1620 and 1621 forebade 'excess of lavish and licentious speech in matter of state'. The English Reformation had laboured to create a learned clergy, but the success of that effort had now produced a cadre of ideological intellectuals, many of them openly critical of government policy; in response, the King's 1622 'Directions concerning Preaching' specifically constrained the freedom of ministers. This crackdown on the press and the pulpit, putting 'a silenest Muzzle, on all the Barking Tongmen of the Time', Middleton attributes, not inaccurately, to the 'policie' of Gondomar (3.21–2). Before the play begins, the White Bishop's Pawn—a faithful servant of the Calvinist White Bishop—has been gelded by a member of the Black House; castration was a popular Protestant metaphor for censorship of spiritual texts by an absolutist, despotic regime (Taylor, Castration, 75–91).

But Middleton's play does more than condemn censorship: it also anticipates that it will be censored. For nine days the actors played 'nothing else, knowing their time cannot be long' (Sir Francis Nethersole, 14 August). Spectators waited for hours and paid higher prices to see A Game at Chess precisely because 'it is thought it will be called in' (George Lowe, 7 August) and 'it is feared it will be [suppressed] ere long' (John Woolley, 11 August) and 'it is believed... that it will be prohibited' (Amerigo Salvetti, 13 August)—a crackdown which, when it came, simply confirmed the play's accusations. The nascent news media did not just supply Middleton with sources; they also supplied him with a vehicle. The expected and then actual suppression of performances made A Game at Chess news, creating a demand for performances and reports, for manuscripts, for printed editions. Middleton turned the censorship of news against itself, creating a text designed to make news of censorship.

James I died on 27 March 1625, and by May readers could buy an illicit edition of A Game at Chess, which claimed to have been printed in the Netherlands. The timing was not coincidental, and like the play's other disguises the false imprint is, in itself, a signifier: it aligned the play with the pamphlets of Thomas Scott and other radical Protestant critics of the Stuart regime. James had sought a rapprochement with the Spanish because, as an hereditary monarch, he detested the republican alternative offered by the Dutch. In 1621, James was outraged by a Parliamentary speech which compared his ministers to those of Edward II: ‘To reckon me with such a prince is to esteem me a weak man’ (and—though neither he nor his critics dared openly say so—a sodomite). In A Game at Chess, James is again ‘paralleled and scandalized’, and weakness—the accusation he found most intolerable—suffuses the portrait. In chess, kings are inevitably weak, and the White House is saved, not by its King, but by its Knight, Duke, Bishop, and Pawns. Although everyone in the audience knows the truth, the White King, duped by the Black Knight, cannot see it (2.388–416). As recent historians (Elliott, Lockyer, Pursell, Redworth) have shown, James I’s diplomatic strategy was based upon a fundamental misperception: Spain could not deliver the Palatinate, and would not deliver the Infanta on terms which England could accept. When his own minister, the White King’s Pawn, turns out to be an enemy agent (3.203–27), the White King treats it as a personal (not an ideological) betrayal, still playing the game in terms of faction rather than party.

Contemporary English statesmen in council on 21 April 1624: notice the chessboard pattern on the floor of this 1624 broadside.

A Game at Chess, in portraying the weakness of James I, also demonstrated it. When he finally learned of the play, the King was outraged that none of his own officers or courtiers had informed him earlier. From the beginning, some critics have assumed that Middleton must have had a patron or protector at court: the Earl of Pembroke (Margot Heinemann), the Duke of Buckingham and Prince Charles (Louis B. Wright), the ‘war party’ (Thomas Cogswell, Jerzy Limon). There is no evidence for any of these connections, and given the King’s diminishing authority no reason to search for one (Yachnin 1987). By positing a patron, critics have tried to explain away Middleton’s application of private reason to public affairs: they have tried to fold the play back into the old politics of faction, when in fact it heralds the new politics of ideology. One of Middleton’s probable sources, Thomas Scott’s 1624 pamphlet Vox Regis, begins with a prolonged defence of his criticisms of the Jacobean regime, arguing that it was an individual’s duty to write in defence of his faith and his nation. Scott’s pamphlets were authorized by his own conscience, nothing else. The same is almost certainly true of Middleton’s play.

Like Scott’s pamphlets, A Game at Chess champions an ideology of resistance. As in the Elizabethan history play, communal self-identity is here defined by opposition to a demonized Other. Nashe had celebrated Talbot as 'the terror of the French'; the White Knight proves himself equally terrible to the Spanish. The Habsburg empire was the world's first global power, and Middleton's White Kingdom resembles Cold War Cuba more than postwar America: a small island uncomfortably close to an aggressive proselytizing imperial superpower, whose victims include not only Protestants but Catholics and non-Christians (5.262–88). Against such an opponent, the author of The Peacemaker does not, even here, advocate war; he urges, instead, vigilant independence, exposure, 'discovery'. The besieged nationalism of A Game at Chess is not the expansionist ethic of conqueror or colonist. It is characterized, above all, by resistance to efforts to impose upon the world a single 'universal monarchy'.

The reunion of King James and Prince Charles, with public celebrations in the background (1623). Compare the reunion of White King and White Knight in the play's final scene.

But that repeated association of 'monarchy' and 'hierarchy' with the enemy had implications for domestic politics: 'a foul injury to Spain', eyewitness John Holles reported, Middleton's satire also did 'no great honour to England'. In an inversion of dramatic and political hierarchy, the play's most important White character is not a male king, but a female pawn. The story of the White Queen's Pawn is, among other things, an attack on the principle of obedience—the very principle of absolutism which the King, and royal apologists like Donne and Jonson, had loudly reiterated during the crackdown on dissent (Taylor, 'Forms of Opposition'). Such obedience was as important to the church as to the monarchy. The ritual of 5.23–42 satirizes both Spanish Catholicism and the Arminian party in England (Taylor, 'Divine'). As early as 1615, King James had decisively sided with the Arminians—led by the future Archbishop of Canterbury, William Laud—against his own Calvinist Archbishop George Abbot (Cranfield and Fincham); by the early 1620s, as Nicholas Tyacke and Peter Lake have demonstrated, Arminians were increasingly visible within the English episcopate.

'No bishop, no king', James had insisted in the first year of his reign. A satire against empire, episcopacy, and obedience is not likely to strengthen royal absolutism; the imperial pretensions of Stuart court culture (Smuts) are not enhanced by a text which cites Pliny, Scaliger, Athenaeus, and the Scriptores Historiae Augustae to document the carnal excesses of an imperial élite (5.185–232)—and then goes on to suggest that the heir to the English throne is a greedy liar, and the King's own favourite a sodomite. Life at court is characterized as a game—and games are, by definition, not natural but artificial. What makes this denaturalizing of hierarchy even worse is the presence of kings, dukes, and bishops on both sides; one hierarchy mirrors the other. But one side represents an evil which the audience rejects. Thus, there can be no intrinsic dignity or authority in bishops or dukes or kings, who may, as individuals, be either good or bad, worthy of obedience or deserving of disrespect. The repetition of the figure destroys its exemplarity.

This unravelling by repetition is only part of the play's sustained destruction of the cultural distance which legitimates inequality. Power is dependent on the perception of power: in the formula of Clifford Geertz, 'the real is as imagined as the imaginary'. That is why Queen Elizabeth banned cheap reproductions of her portrait, and why King James prohibited actors from portraying living kings: both monarchs tried to limit and control the external circulation of representations of sovereignty. At the same time, both encouraged an increasingly elaborate and costly internal circulation of representations of sovereignty—epitomized by the masque, in which the court offered itself an image of its own power. In masques, allegorical roles disguised real courtiers; the characteristic climax is a 'discovery', in which a change of perception precipitates a change of state. A Game at Chess, by transferring these conventions into a public space, radically transforms their significance. When Buckingham and other courtiers performed as Gypsies in Jonson's most popular masque, The Gypsies Metamorphosed (1621), their audacious will to play demonstrated and enhanced their privileged status; when Buckingham and other courtiers are portrayed as chessmen in A Game at Chess, they are robbed of the privilege of self-portrayal, and suffer rather than command the will to play.

A Game at Chess demystifies, by its undignified representing of the present, the very authority of authority. If William Hazlitt had been reading it, instead of Coriolanus, he might not have concluded so quickly that 'The language of poetry naturally falls in with the language of power'; if Stephen Greenblatt had been reading it, instead of Henry V, he might not have despaired that all 'subversive doubts... serve paradoxically to intensify the power of the king'. Instead of the absolutist glamour of theatricality found in earlier history plays, this last great chronologer's drama reduces majesty to a mannerism and foreign policy to a farcical plot. Even as it defends a besieged form of Christianity, it simultaneously de-sacralizes the state (Moretti). Politics here is explicitly a mere game, which some people play better than others. In this ‘Machiavellian moment’, Middleton celebrates discovery: that is, news, journalism, the abolition of distance, the public stripping away of authoritative disguises—by characters, but also by spectators and readers. In the uncontrollable laughter of those audiences, in the uncontrollable circulation among readers of the news and texts of A Game at Chess, the authority of an ancien régime began to dissolve. As Napoleon said of The Marriage of Figaro, so we might say of A Game at Chess: ‘C’est déjà la revolution’.

SEE ALSO

A Game at Chess: A Later Form, 1825*Occasional Poems*, 1886

‘Lives and Afterlives’, 25

General textual introduction: Companion, 712List of works cited: Companion, 848Textual introduction and apparatus: Companion, 874Authorship and date: Companion, 439

A GAME at CHESSE

Compoſde by Tho: Middleton

Induction The Induction!

(:.)

Ignatius discoverd, Error asleepe.

Ign—Hah? where? what Angle of the world is this?
that I can neyther see the politick face

This text represents the earliest extant version of the play, in the spelling, punctuation, capitalization, and other manuscript conventions of Middleton, so far as these can be represented in print. (See illustrations, pp. 1780 and 1791.) No attempt is made here to preserve variant letter-forms (such as the distinction between italic and secretary letters within words); word-spacing has been standardized. This commentary is primarily historical; it concentrates upon political allusions, conventions of early modern English usage, Middleton’s sources, his process of composition and revision, and evidence of censorship. For a modern-spelling text with a literary and theatrical commentary, see A Later Form.

Title A GAME at CHESSE The play was licensed by the Master of the Revels, Sir Henry Herbert, on 12 June 1624, for the usual fee of one pound; the King’s Men claimed that he had licensed the text they played, and produced the manuscript to prove it. The first complete draft, represented here, draws upon pamphlets not published until mid-May. The first performance—of the revised text—occurred on August 5 (the anniversary of James I’s escape from the Gowrie Conspiracy against his life). Between June and October, the actors normally played to primarily city audiences, while the provincial gentry and aristocracy returned to their estates in the country. King James and his court had begun a state progress through the Midlands on July 18. The earliest surviving manuscript is dated August 13. Compoſde Middleton’s apostrophes were often placed over rather than between letters. He often used the verb ‘composed’ to describe his activity as a writer. Middleton The author’s identity—though known to the actors, the censor, and those who read the play in manuscript—was not known by any of the extant early witnesses to the play’s performances, and was not indicated in the printed texts.

Induction.o.1 The Induction John Gee’s New Shreds of the Old Snare (1624), one of Middleton’s probable sources, begins with ‘The Induction’, which refers to ‘the great seducing Masters, especially the Iesuites’ and their ‘Loiolan’ tricks, which are described—in the trope Gee uses in both his books of 1624—in terms of the ‘tyring house’ and the ‘stage’: ‘Come and heare a Iesuits play’. This is immediately followed by an account of the efforts of two ‘Iesuites’ and a female recusant to convert a ‘yong woman’ in London ‘some three years since.’ For the prologue Middleton later added, see Later.
o.3 Ignatius St Ignatius Loyola (1491–1556), Catholic and Spaniard; author of Spiritual Exercises, a guide to self-examination, deeply influential in the

nor wth my refine Nostrills taste the Footsteps of anie my disciples, Sonnes and heyres
as well of my designes as Institution,
I thought theyde spread ouer the world by this time
couerd the Earths face and made darke the Land

5

Counter-Reformation, and related to the Jesuit emphasis on confession (see 1.77, etc.). Subject of a ‘Comedie’ projected for Ash Wednesday at Trinity College, Cambridge (Joseph Mead, 22 February 1623, f. 289).

Error often associated with Catholicism by Protestants, as in Spenser’s Faerie Queene I.i.13–26

1 Ign Middleton normally abbreviated speech prefixes (but did not indent or italicize them, as this edition consistently does).

Angle ‘that angle of the world England’ (Thomas Scott, The Second Part of Vox Populi (1624), 26)

3 wth with (a common abbreviation)

refinde Middleton often spelled the monosyllabic past participle ‘de’.

6 theyde Middleton often omitted the apostrophe in contractions. Here, his preferred ‘de’ ending occurs, even though the elided word is ‘had’.

ouer over. Early modern English normally used ‘u’ as a medial letter (for either consonant or vowel) and ‘v’ for an initial letter (even when it represented a vowel, as at l. 12, ‘vnprefect’).

7–8 couerd . . . Grassehoppers Rumour greatly exaggerated the magnitude of Jesuit infiltration: Walter Yonge in 1622 estimated the number in England and Ireland at 12,000, while Thomas Scott claimed to know of 255 in London alone (2 Vox Populi, 30).

The Induction!

Jonathas Loyola appearing, Enuor
at his foot as a placq.

Jon - That's myne! what Angle of thy words is this?
That I can receive for thy politick fav
nor why my selfe ~~rejoice~~ taste for Foodstuffs of mine of my disciples, Somers and ~~my~~
as well of my designs at Institution,
I thought thyne spirit over thy words by this time could yet Earths face and made Dark for Land like thy Egyptian Grassoppurb;
But too many light appears not from thy Eye of truth, and godnes never yet deflowide,
I see thee now now you, thy is thy Monarchie reproft yet, a just toward I see for thy Ingratitude so long to mee thyne favor and thyne founder,
tho not 5 years since I was sayd by em,
myne kept me honor all thy time before could yet be so forgetfull to canonize thyne prosperous Institution, myne thy god sayd mee thy found no room in all thyne Kalender to place my name that prints your w-moode prints

A Game at Chesse in Middleton's own handwriting (actual size), showing the opening stage direction and the first twenty lines of the first speech. The edited text of 'An Early Form', printed here, represents an earlier version of the play, which differs from this authorial manuscript in many details: notice the differences in the wording of the opening stage direction. No attempt is made here to preserve variant letter forms: notice, in the photograph of the fourth line of the speech, the two different forms of the letter 's' in the word that our edition prints as 'disciples'. The manuscript does not distinguish stage directions or speech prefixes by using italic handwriting; our printed edition consistently uses italic for those features, and also consistently makes speech prefixes jut out into the left margin (which the manuscript does not). We also normalize the indenting of stage directions: notice the differences in indentation in the three initial lines of stage direction in the manuscript. The four long lines that form a ruled box around the central text-area of the page are hand-drawn in red ink.

like the Ægyptian Grassehoppers;
 10 heres too much Light appears shot from the Eyes
 of truth and goodnes neuer yet deflowrde, sure they were neuer here, then is their Monarchie Vnperfect yet, a iust reward I see for their Ingratitude so long to mee
 their father and their Founder,
 15 tis not 5 Yeares since I was Saynted by em, where slept my honor all the time before could they bee so forgetfull to canonize their prosperous Institutur, when theyde Saynted mee
 they found no roome in all their Kalendar 20 to place my name that should haue remooude princes pulde the most eminent prelates by the rootes up for my deere coming to make way for mee,

 lett euerie pettie Martir, and St Homilie,
 Roch, Main, and petronell, Itch and ague-Curers
 25 youre Abbesse Aldegund, and Cunigund
 the widdowe Marcell, vicar Policarpe Sislie and Vrsilie, all take place of mee, and but for the Bissextil, or leape-Yeare
 and thats but one in three, I fall by chance into the nine and twentieth daye of Februarie 30 there were no Roome else for mee, see their Loue their Conscience too, to thrust mee a lame souldier into leape Yeare, my Wraths up, and mee thinkes
 I could wth the first Sillable of my name
 35 blowe up their Colledges, up, Error, wake,

8 Ægyptian The Jesuits ‘(like the Caterpillers of Egypt) doe eate vp the fat and best fruits of the Land’ (Thomas Robinson, The anatomy of the English nunnery at Lisbon (1622), 13).

12 iust just. Early modern English made little use of ‘j’; ‘i’ served as vowel or consonant.

15 not 5 Yeares Loyola was beatified in 1609, canonized on 12 March 1622. Protestants believed in direct address to God, without the intercession of saints. em Middleton always centres the apostrophe over the ‘m’ in this contraction, and often places apostrophes at what seems to modern readers the ‘wrong’ place.

19 Kalendar the subject of much theological dispute. The Church of England calendar still preserved some saints’ days; Puritans believed only the Sabbath should be celebrated. James I regularly vetoed Sabbatarian bills passed by Parliament. Finding a place for Loyola in the Catholic calendar had caused controversy, as recorded in Joseph Mead’s letter of 1 February 1623: ‘In France the Iesuites hauing putt S^t Germane out of the Almanack (in the end of October) to putt in Ignatius Loyola, (who was this yeare sollemly canonized for a saint) were complained of to the Lieutenants Ciuill (Iudge in such causes at Paris) by the Chanons of S^t Germane (in whose parish the Kinges Pallace is. & sentence was giuen, that the Fathers should prouide another place for Loyola, & their copies thus printed should be confiscate & burnt’ (Harleian 389).

24 Roch . . . petronell In a passage discussing Loyola, a fictional Catholic claimed that ‘God hath assigned to euery other Saint the cure of some one disease or other, as to St. Roch the plague, to S^t. Petronel the feuer, to St. Main the itch’ (State Mysteries of the Iesuites, tr. Peter Gosselin, (1623), 11).

25 Aldegund St Aldegundis (c.635–84). Although I have found a few contemporary references to her, none identifies her as an ‘Abbesse’, or treats her satirically. Cunigund St Cunegund (c.978–1033) (perhaps punning on ‘cunny’, cunt). ‘The like story we read of one Cune-gunda . . . in whose chamber the diuell (in the likenesse of a youngman, with whom she was suspected to be too familiar in court) was often seen coming in and out’ (Reginald Scot, Discouerie of Witchcraft, Book 16, chap. 5; a source Middleton used for Witch).

26 Marcell St Marcella (c.410). I have not discovered Middleton’s source for identifying her as a ‘widdowe’, or treating her satirically. vicar (later altered to ‘Parson’). ‘Vicar’ might suggest criticism of the hierarchy of the English church, much resented by Puritans; ‘Parson’, by contrast, would imply non-established clergy.

Policarpe St Polycarp, martyred bishop of Smyrna (c.69–155), one of the ‘primitive’ fathers of the Church, recognized in the Geneva Bible notes, John Foxe’s ‘Book of Martyrs’, and many other Protestant sources: in Middleton’s lifetime, the most immediately recognizable and admirable name in this satirical list of saints.

27 Sislie St Cecilia, martyr and patron saint of musicians (third century), mentioned in English accounts of visits to Rome

(Anthony Munday’s English Roman Life, Morrison’s Itinerary, etc.) The colloquial ‘Sislie’ is the name of a maid in two plays: Thomas Heywood’s A Woman Killed with Kindness (1602) and Gervase Markham’s The Dumb Knight (1608). Vrsilie St Ursula (fourth century), daughter of a British king: the English nunnery at Lisbon claimed to possess ‘the head of S. Vrsula’ (Gee, New Shreds, Q3).

28 Bissextil so called because in the Julian Calendar the sixth day before the Kalends of March was counted twice: hence, ‘double sixth’. The title-pages of all London almanacs for 1624 noted that it was the ‘bissextil, or leape-year’ (John Rudston, New Almanack).

29 one in three In a Latin epigram by Raphael Thorius (written c.1623), prompted by the French dispute over the calendar of saints, God offered Ignatius the leap-year feast-day—meaning he would be ignored ‘three’ years for every ‘one’ year he was celebrated. (Loyola’s actual feast day is 31 July.)

32 a lame souldier ‘Ignatius Loiola, a lame souldier’ (Robinson, English nunnery, 10). Although the exact phrase seems unique to Robinson and Middleton, Loyola’s lameness is mentioned in many Protestant books on the Jesuits, always unsympathetically (and thus unlike Middleton’s use of it).

34 first Sillable ‘Ign’ (as in the abbreviated speech prefixes) suggesting ignis (Latin for ‘fire’): ‘his name taketh its signification from fire’ (Gosselin, 6).

35 Colledges seminaries. The Society of Jesus was the first Catholic order founded specifically for the purpose of teaching.

father of Supererogation, rize,
 it is Ignatius calls thee, Loyola!
 Er—what haue you donne, oh I could sleepe in ignorance
 immortallie, the slumber is so pleasing, 40 I sawe the brauest setting for a game now that euer my Eye fixt on;
 Ign: what Game prethee?
 Er—the noblest Game of all, a Game at Chesse
 twixt our side and the Whitehouse, the men sett 45 in their iust order readie to goe to't;
 Ign: were anie of my Sonnes placst for the Game,?
 Er—yes, and a daughter too, a secular daughter that plays the Black Queenes pawne, hee the Bl.
 Bishops,
 50 Ign—if euer power could showe a Mastrie in thee
 lett it appeare in this,

Er—tis but a dreame a uision you must thinke Ign—I care not what
 so I behold the children of my cunning
 and see what rancke they keepe Er—you haue youre Wish,
 behold theres the full Number of the Game,
 Kings, and their pawnes, Queenes, Bishops, Knights & dukes,
 Ig: Dukes? their cald Rookes by some,
 Er—Corruptiueleye?
 Le Roc the Word, Custode de La Roche
 60 the Keeper of the Forts, in whome both Kings repose much Confidence, and for their trust sake
 Courage and Worth, do Well deserue those Titles,
 Ign—the Answeres high, I see my Sonne and daughter,
 Enter the Bl. Qu^s pawne and Bl. Bps.

36 Supererogation overpayment, specifically in Catholic doctrine works performed over and above God's commands, a surplus—usually accumulated by saints—which the Church might use (through indulgences) for the salvation of souls who fell short of God's standard. Luther's attack on supererogation—directly related to his attack on the mediation of the saints (see 1.15–31), and the sale of indulgences (see 4.255)—was central to the Reformation: 'No saint had adequately fulfilled God's commandments in this life. Consequently the saints have done absolutely nothing which is superabundant. Therefore they have left nothing to be allocated through indulgences' (Explanation of 'The Ninety-Five Theses', 1518). Tom Tell-Troath (1622) attacked King James I's persistence in pursuing peace, when all his enemies had resorted to war against his 'children', as 'such a strange peace of Supererogation / as will serve to astonish the present Age / and that to come' (7).

41–2 that . . . prethee a single verse line. Early texts do not indicate verse structure by indenting the second half-line, as do most modern editions. Compare ll. 54–5, 58–9, etc.

42 Game Geopolitical and ideological rivalries were often visualized as games: see 'Lives', Ill. 1, p. 26.

44 Whitehouse See G.B.'s translation of Vida's sixteenth-century Latin poem on chess, Ludus Scacchiae: Chesse-play (1597): 'One side much like the white-fac'd Galles,⁷ [i.e. ancient Gauls, northern European Germanic tribes] 'thus standing in aray, To fight against the Black-amoores'. The classical contrast between white northern Europeans and black sub-saharan Africans was originally, in Greek and Roman medical theory, a criticism of both extremes, from the perspective of the 'temperate', balanced reddish-brown complexions of Mediterranean peoples; white northerners were thought to be phlegmatic barbarians, less quick-witted than Mediterraneans (as the White King is initially outwitted by the Black Knight). Although Middleton characterized the English as white, that term was at the time still used for many inhabitants of Asia (China, Korea, Japan) and for the native peoples of North America; it distinguished between northern and southern Europeans, not between Europeans and all other peoples. For the emergence of modern racial meanings of the word white, see Taylor, Buying Whiteness.

men 'as for the fashion of the peeces, that is according to the fantasie of the workman . . . Some make them like men' (G. B., Ludus Scacchiae).

47 secular living in the world (i.e. not in the seclusion of a nunnery)

48 Black 'Sin of itself is black' (Solomon 17.29); see also The Black Book. For the racial contrast with 'white', see Induction.44. Black was systematically associated, in Christian mythology, with night, hell, and death.

Bl. Black. Designations of pieces are regularly abbreviated in dialogue, stage directions, and speech prefixes.

51 tis . . . thinke This single manuscript line combines two verse part-lines: 'tis but a dreame' completes the iambic pentameter begun by 'let it appeare in this', and 'a uision you must thinke' begins a new iambic pentameter line, which will be completed by 'I care not what'. Middleton often writes two half-lines together in this way, to save paper (which was very expensive).

tis but a dreame King James, in his opening speech to Parliament on 19

February 1624, describing his change of policy in relation to negotiations with Spain, said 'I awaked as a man out of a dreame' (Folger MS V.b.303, p. 335). uision vision. (Middleton, idiosyncratically, began words with minuscule 'u' even when a consonant was intended; he used initial 'V' only when the word was capitalized.)

58 Dukes? 'Duke' enables identification of the white rook as the Duke of Buckingham. The argument justifying the term 'Duke' for 'rook' is taken from J. Barbier's revision of the first book on chess by an Englishman, Arthur Saul's The Famous Game of Chesse-Play (1618): 'the Rooke is called of some the Duke . . . wee may allow them that Name, in the sense that the French seemes to inferre, by their denomination of this Piece, which they call, Le Roc, or Le custode de la Roche, (that is to say) the Rocke or keeper of the Rocke: intending thereby, the Gouvernor of a Prouince, which commonly is resident in the strongest castle in the Countrey . . . and they are commonly Dukes. So that although these Dukes seeme remote from the King and Courte, yet in their substitution and trust on them reposed, they may be accounted in worth and power next to the King. In this sense (I say) may the Rookes bee called Dukes' (C3^v–C5). there they're

59 ? (often used where modern English calls for an exclamation mark)

62 trust trust's. (Genitive apostrophes and redundant sibilants are often omitted.)

64.1 Bl. Qu^s . . . Bl. Bps. Black Queen's . . . Black Bishop's. This minimal original stage direction was later revised to bring on 'both houses' in their entirety (requiring more theatrical resources than are presumed by the first draft).

65 Er—those are 2 pawnes the bl.Q^s and the Bishops
Ign—pawnes argue but poore Spirits, & slight præfermnts, not Worthie of the name of my Disciples,
 if I had stood so nigh, I would haue cut 70 that Bishops Throate but Ide haue had his place and told the Queene a Loue-tale in her Eare would make her best pulse dance, theres no Elixir
 of brayne or Spirit amongst em;
Er—why would you haue em playe agaynst themselues,
 that quite agaynst the Rule of Game, Ignatius;
 75 Ign—push, I would rule my selfe, not obserue rule,
Er—why then youde playe a Game all by youre selfe,
Ign—I would doo anye thing to rule alone,
 Tis rare to haue the world reignd in by one;
Er; See em anon, and marke em in their playe,
 80 Obserue, as in a dance, they glide away,
Ign—Oh wth what longings will this brest bee tost,
 Vntill I see this Great Game wun and lost. exeunt

Actus Primi, Scæna prima.

Enter from the Black-house, a Weoman-pawne in Black, and from the whitehouse, a Weoman-pawne in white;

Bl.p. I ne're see that face but my pittie rizes, when I behold so cleere a Mr-peice
 of heauens Art, wrought out of dust and Ashes,
 and at next thought to giue her lost æternallie,
 (in being not ours but the daughter of Ignorance)
 5 my soule bleedes at mine Eyes;

wh.p. where should Truth speake

if not in such a sorrowe? their teares playnelie, beshrewe mee if shee weepe not heartilie,
 what is my peace to her to take such paynes in't, 10 if I wander to losse and wth broad Eyes yet misse the path shee can run blindefold in, (through often exercize) why should my ouersight though in the best Game that er'e Christian Lost
 rayse the least Spring of pittie in her Eye, 15 tis doubtlesse a great charitie, and no Vertue
 could win mee surer;

66 præfermnts preferments

73 agaynst themselues 'So vices do ruffle among themselves, and vsurp one another' (William Camden, Remains concerning Britain, 1614).

78 reignd reined (but punning on 'reigned')

1.0.2 Enter from the Black-house At Induction.64.1, Black Queen's Pawn was the first chess piece to enter; here, her movement toward the White Queen's Pawn initiates the game. This independent mobility, especially in travelling back and forth between the Black and White house, is the most striking feature of the role. In Acts 2 and 5, her offstage movements interrupt the action between White Queen's Pawn and Black Bishop's Pawn; in the first scene of Act 2, the action requires her to enter and exit at least three times, and she reveals the secret passage that allows unobserved entrances and exits; in the first scene of Act 3, her entrance is the turning point in the action; in Act 3, and twice in Act 4, she leads the Black Bishop's Pawn and White Queen's Pawn on and off stage. This mobility was the most controversial feature of the religious order of 'Jesuitesses' founded by Mary Ward (1585–1645). George Abbot, Archbishop of Canterbury, considered Ward more dangerous than six Jesuits (Wallace, 'Mary Ward', 407).

pawne in Black... pawne in white 'a Pawne in white... another Pawne in blacke' (G. B., Ludus Scacchiae, D1).

0.2–3 Weoman-pawne in Black identified more precisely in later texts as the Black Queen's Pawn (confirming she is the same character/piece specified in the Induction). Some scholars have speculated that she represents Donna Luisa de Carvajal, 'a Spanish woman from Valladolid', resident in London, but the source of her speech at 5.160–2 specifically identifies her as an Englishwoman, and a member of the order of wandering female Jesuits established by Mary Ward. There is nothing in the text, the sources, or early responses, to suggest that the character impersonated an identifiable historical person, or was understood allegorically as anything other than a female Jesuit.

in Black 'Their Apparell is commonly a blacke... cloake, coule, and vaile' (Gee, New Shreds, concluding his discourse of 'English Nunnes', including a list of 'inlarged, vnclostred, vbiquitary' nuns, ending with 'Black Besse').

0.3–4 Weoman-pawne in white identified more precisely in later texts as the White Queen's Pawn (although not so specified in dialogue until l. 310, after she has left the stage). There is nothing in the text, the sources, or early responses, to suggest that the character impersonated an identifiable historical figure, or was understood allegorically as anything other than a young Protestant Englishwoman, vulnerable to temptation by Catholics. Like any fictional character, she can be understood as 'representative', in this case perhaps—within the morality play tradition—as 'Everyman'. Here 'Everyman' is 'Everywoman': in the frontispiece of the 1611 edition of Richard Hooker's Of the Laws of Ecclesi- astical Polity, the divine light falls on the King, the Church, and a female figure apparently representing the individual soul. However, the chess framework gives Every(wo)man here a specific social status (as pawn, commoner) and a political identity (as Protestant and English).

0.4 in white The account of the Jesuit attempt to seduce/convert a young woman in London at the beginning of Gee's New Shreds includes the appearance of 'a woman all in white'. A second story, of an attempt by Jesuits to convert 'a young Gentlewoman' in Surrey, also involves the appearance of 'a beautifull Virgin like your selfe, all in white'. Summing up such incidents, Gee complains of the 'Actors having little or no vaietie of disguise. In all these three or foure Playes, none comes in Acting but A Woman, A Woman, A Woman, arrayed in white, white, white' (D2^v).

1 ne're ne'er, never2 Mr-peice masterpiece

8 ? (Middleton's unusual combination of query and comma)

12 path... blindefold Thomas Scott criticizes 'such as seeme to haue warrant for their wayes' but in fact are guided entirely by tradition or the opinion of friends and neighbours: 'by imitation and example of others whome wee reverence for knowledge or deuotion, by the custome and consent of times and places, wee are led as it were blindfold' (The High-wayes of God and the King (1623), 59).

13 exercize practice (but also suggesting Loyola's Spiritual Exercises)

- 20 Bl.p. blessed things præuayle wth't,
if euer Goodnes made a gracious promise
it is in yonder looke, what Litle paynes would build a Fort for Vertue to all memorie in that sweete Creature were the Ground-Worke firmer,
wh.p. it ha's beene all my glorie to bee firme
in what I haue profest,
- 25 Bl.p. that is the Enimie that steales youre strenght awaye, and fights agaynst
you,
disarmes youre Soule een' in the heate of battayle, Youre Firmnes that waye makes you more infirme
for the right Christian Conflict, there I spied 30 a Zealous Primatiue Sparckle, but now flew from youre deuoted Eye, able to blowe up all the Errors
that euer sate in Councell wth youre Spirit, Enter Bl B.s p.
and here comes hee whose Sanctimonious breath
will make that Sparke a Flame, list to him, Virgin, 35 at whose first Entrance, princes will fall prostrate,
weomen are weaker Vessells,
wh.p. by my pœnitence
a comlye præsentation, and the habit
to admiration reuerend,
- 40 Bl.p. but the heart, the heart, Ladie, so meeke, that as you see good charitie picturde still wth yong Ones in her Armes, so will hee cherish
- all his yong Tractable sweete obedient daughters
een' in his bosome, in his owne deare bosome;
I am my selfe a Secular Iesuite 45 as many Ladies are of wealth and Greatnes, a second sort are Iesuites in Voto, giuing their Vowe in to the Father Generall that the black Bishop of our house, whose pawne
this Gentleman now stands for, to receiue 50 the Colledge habit at his holie pleasure
wh.p. but how are those in Voto employde, Ladie, till they receiue the habit,
Bl.p. they're not idle,
hee findes em' all true Labourers in the Worke 55 of th' Vniuersall Monarchie, wch hee and his Disciples principallie ayme at,
those are mayntaynde in manie Courts and palaces,
and are induc't by noble personages into great princes Seruices, and prouue
60 some Counsellors of State, some Secretaries
all seruing in Notes of Intelligence, (as parish clearkes their mortuarie Bills)
to the Father Generall, so are designes oft times præuented, and Important Secretts 65 of State discouerd, yet no Author found
but those suspected oft that are most sound,
this Mysterie is too deepe yet for youre Entrance and I offend to sett youre Zeale so back, checkt by obedience wth desire to hasten 70 youre progresse to perfection, I commit you to the great workers hands, to whose graue worth

- 23 ha's has. (Middleton often places a superfluous apostrophe in this word.)
- 30 Primatiue primitive, original. Catholics claimed to preserve 'the old religion', condemning the Reformation as a novel departure from well-established doctrines; Protestants claimed to be returning to authentic early doctrines, corrupted by the intervening mediæval papacy.
- 31-2 blowe... Councell (reminiscent of the Gunpowder Plot: four Jesuits were implicated in the 1605 Catholic conspiracy to blow up King James and Parliament—regarded by them as heretics)
- 32 Councell (a) private deliberation (b) gathering of church leaders, like the 1619 Synod of Dort, which brought together Protestants from much of Europe (c) gathering of political leaders, like the 1605 meeting of King James with his Parliament
- 32.1 Bl B.s p. Black Bishop's Pawn, a Jesuit, and therefore naturally dressed in the black vestments of his order.
- 33 breath 'there is admirable power in a Priests breath' (Gee, Foot out of the Snare, 1624)
- 42-4 cherish... bosome Describing 'our Recusants daughters in England', Robinson explains how the Jesuits 'will cherish and nourish them, euen in their owne bosomes' (English nunnerie, 9).
- 45 Secular Iesuite member of a female religious order founded in England by Mary Ward. These 'wandering Nuns... observe the Ignatian habit, and go clad very like the Jesuits; in this onely differing from other Nuns, that they walk abroad the world, and preach the Gospel (as they call it) to their Sex in England and else-where' (James Wadsworth, Memoirs, published 1679, describing events in the 1620s).
- 46 many Ladies The order founded by Ward was often called the 'English Ladies'. Prominent Catholic English-women of the 1620s, besides Ward, included Lady Falkland (Elizabeth Carey, author of The Tragedy of Mariam) and the mother of the Duke of Buckingham (the royal favourite).
- 47-58 second sort... palaces 'The second sort is, of men alone... these make a vowe to receiue a habite of the society, at the pleasure of the Father Generall; and therefore they are called Iesuits in Voto: and by the labors of these men, the Iesuites wondrously auaille themselves in the fabricke of their Monarchie. For they maintaine in all kingdoms and Prouinces, in all courts of Princes, and Pallaces of great men, such of these as shall serue them' (An exact and sound Discovery of the cheife mysteries of Iesuiticall iniquity, trans. Isaac Bargrave (1619), B8^v-B9).
- 56 Vniuersall Monarchie See The Spaniard's Perpetual Designs to an Universal Monarchy (1624); similar claims about Spanish and/or papal intentions are made in Vox Populi and many other polemical tracts.
- 65-6 Secretts of State Gondomar credits English 'Priests and Iesuits' for the Spanish knowledge of 'the secrets of their State' (Scott, 2 Vox Populi, 30).
- 66-7 no... sound For ten years King James tried, through his ambassador in the Netherlands, to identify and punish the author of Isaaci Casauboni Corona Regia (1615), a slanderous depiction of the king which pretended to praise as virtues what were in fact vices; James wrongly believed it was written by Erycius Puteanus.

- I fitt my Reuerence, as to you my wishes
Bl.B^s.p. doo you finde her supple?
 75 Bl.p. ther'es a litle passage;
 weomens poore Arguments make but Wimble holes, the Augur is the mans.— exit
- Bl.B^s.p.* lett mee contemplate with holie wonder season my Accesce, 80 and by degrees approach the Sanctuarie
 of unmacht bewtie sett in grace and Goodnes, amongst the Daughters of men I haue not found a more cathollicall Aspect, that Eye
 do's promise single life and meeke Obedience 85 uppon those lips the sweete fresh Buds of youth the holie Dewe of prayer lyes like pearle dropt from the opening Eyelids of the Morne uppon the bashfull Rose; how bewteouslie
 a gentle Fast not rigorously imposde 90 would looke uppon that cheeke, and how delightfullie
 the curteous phisick of a tender pennance whose Vtmost Crueltie should not excede the first feare of a Bride to beate downe frayltie would worke to sound health youre Long festerd Iudgm̄t,
 95 and make youre Merit, wch through erring Ignorance
 appeares but spotted Righteousnes to mee far cleerer then the Innocence of Infants:
wh.p. to that good worke I bowe, and will become Obedience humblest daughter, since I finde 100 th' assistance of a sacred Strenght to ayde mee
 the labour is as easie to serue Vertue
 the right waye, since tis shee I euer serude
 in my desire, though I transgrest in Iudgment:
- Bl.Bs.p.* thats easilie absolud amongst the rest
 You shall not finde the Vertue that you serue now 105
 a sharpe and cruell Mistris, her Eaſes open to all youre Supplications, you maye boldlie and safelie let in the most secret Sin into her knowledge, wch Like uanisht man
 neuer returns into the world agen,
 110 Fate locks not up more trulier
wh.p. to the Guiltie
 that maye appeare some benefit,
Bl.B^s.p. who is so Innocent that neuer stands in neede on't, in some Kinde, 115 if euerie thought were blabd thats so confest
 the uerie Ayre wee breathe would bee unblest:
 now to the worke indeed wch is to catch her Inclination, thats the spetiall use wee make of all our practise in all Kingdomes, 120 for by disclosing their most secret Fraylties things, wch once ours, they must not hide from us thats the first article in the Creede wee teach em'
 finding to what poynt their blood most enclines
 Knowe best to apt them then to our Designes:
 125 Daughter! the sooner you disperse youre Errors
 the sooner you make haste to youre Recouerie
 You must part wth em, to bee nice or modest toward this good Action, is to imitate
 the Bashfullnes of one conceales an Vlcer 130 for the uncomlie parts the Tumor uexes
 til't bee past Cure, Resolue you thus far, Ladie,
 the priuat'st thought that runs to hide it selfe
 in the most secret Corner of youre heart nõw must bee of my Acquayntance, so familiarlye 135
 neuer shee friend of youre Night-Councell neerer,

74 doo...supple (spoken aside to Black Queen's Pawn; asides are seldom marked in early modern scripts)

76-7 weomens...mans These lines appear only in Early.

77 exit (leaving the White Queen's Pawn and Black Bishop's Pawn alone together, creating the privacy normative for the Catholic sacrament of confession.) Confessionals, as a special structure within churches, were introduced after the Council of Trent (1564), but were not yet universal, even in Catholic countries.

89 Fast generally rejected by Protestants, but favoured by Catholics and Arminians: Bishop Launcelot Andrewes encouraged 'works of chastisement of the body, as fasting' (26 February 1623).

91 curteous courteous

pennance expression of penitence, imposed by a priest, after he has heard a sinner's confession

94 Iudgm̄t judgement

97 then than

98 good worke emphasized by Catholics as the basis for salvation, but rejected by Calvinists: 'man hath no workes whereof he may glorie before God... he is iustified by only faith' (Jean Calvin, The Institute of Christian Religion, tr. (1561), fol. 201). England was the largest market for vernacular translations of Calvin's works.

102 serude served

104 absolud absolved, purged. Catholic priests had the power to absolve sinners, as part of the sacrament of confession; Protestants generally denied such sacer-dotal authority, but some Arminians believed that 'Purging was ever the priest's office' (Bishop Andrewes, 25 December 1612; also 30 March 1600); confession and priestly absolution was also defended (pp. 83-5) in Richard Montagu's controversial Arminian A Gagg for the new Gospell (1624), which provoked a Parliamentary protest.

111 more trulier (double comparative, often used for emphasis)

118-25 now...Designes (an aside, confirming Protestant suspicions of auricular confession: 'by way of confession my master is able to unlock the secrets of every Prince, and to withdraw the subjects allegiance' (Scott, Vox Populi, A4))

- 140 wh.p. I stand not much in feare of anie Action
guiltie of that black time (most noble Holines)
I must confesse, as in a sacred Temple throughd with an Auditorie, some come rather to feede on humayne obiect, then to taste of Angells Foode; so in the congregation of quick thoughts
wch are more infinite then such assemblies
I cannot wth truths safetie speake for all, 145 some haue beene wanderers, some fond, some sinfull, but those found euer but poore Entertainment theyde small encouragement to come agen,
the single life wch stronglie I professe now,
heauen pardon mee, I was about to part from;
- 150 Bl.Bs.p. then you haue past through Loue?
wh.p. but left no Stayne
in all my passage (S^{ir}) no print of Wrong for the most chaste Mayde that maye trace my footsteps;
Bl.Bs.p. how came you off so cleere?
- 155 wh.p. I was dischargd
by an inhumayne Accident, wch modestie forbids mee to putt anie Language to:
Bl.Bs.p. how you forgett youre selfe, all actions
clad in their proper language, though most sordid 160 my Eare is bound by dutie to lett in and lock up euerlastingly, shall I helpe you hee was not found to answere his Creation, a uestall Virgin in a Slip of prayer
could not deliuer mans losse modestlier, 165 twas the white Bishops pawne;
- wh.p.* the same blest S^{ir},
Bl.B^s.p. a Puritane well pickled, wh.p. by base trecherie
and Violence præparde by his Competitor 170 the black Knights pawne, whome I shall euer hate fort
- Bl.Bs.p.* twas of Reuenges the unmanliest waye that euer Riuall tooke, a Villanie that for youre sake Ile ner'e absolue him off, wh.p. I wish it not so heauie,
Bl.Bs.p. hee must feele it 175
I neuer yet gaue absolution to anie Crime of that unmanning Nature;
it seemes then you refusde him for defect,
therein you stand not pure from the desire that other weomen haue in ends of marriage 180 pardon my boldnes, if I sift youre goodnes
to the last grayne;
- wh.p.* I reuerence youre paynes (S^{ir}) and must acknowledge custome to enioye
what other weomen challenge and possesse 185 more rudle mee then desire, for my desires dwell all in ignorance, and Ile ne're wish to knowe that fond waye maye redeeme erñ thence, Bl.B^s.p. I neuer was so taken, besett double 190
now wth her Iudgment, what a strenght it putts forth
I bring worke neerer to you, when you'e seene
a Mr-peice of man, composes by heauen for a Great princesse fauour, Kingdomes Loue so exact Enuie could not finde a place 195
to stick a Blot on person or on fame;
haue you not found Ambition swell youre Wish then?
and desire steere youre Bloud?
- wh.p.* by Vertue neuer,
Iue onelie in the dignitie of the Creature
admird the Makers Glorie; 200
Bl.B^s.p. shees impregnable;
a Second Seige must not fall off so tamelie,
shees one of those must bee informde to knowe
a daughters dutie, wch some take untaught;
her modestie brings her behinde hand much 205
my ould meanes I must flye to, yes, tis it;
please you peruse this small Tract of obedience

138 black time night; but also suggesting 'black lust' (Women Beware 4.2.66). Conversion from the White to the Black House also suggests sexual corruption: 'Thou first mad'st me black', a prostitute complains to a customer (Honest Whore 15.477).
141 humayne human. ('Humane' and 'human' were not distinct words.)
142 Angells Foode literally, manna (as at Solomon 16.184); figuratively, the eucharist, 'food of angels' (Bishop Andrews, 25 December 1618)
163 uestall vestal
167 Puritane a presbyterian, or more generally anyone who believed that the Church of England retained too many Roman Catholic features. (Later altered by censorship to the less specific 'heretic'.) This variant suggests that the White Bishop's Pawn might have been represented, on stage, in a manner which recognizably mimicked 'the godly'.

169 Violence 'The Papists here everywhere assault and insult upon our poor brethren in the ministry' (Joseph Mead, 5 September 1623).
170 fort for't, for it
171 Reuenges The play does not explain why the gelding is characterized as revenge (here and at 4.30). Middleton may have been thinking of the vengeful castration of the theologian Peter Abelard by his lover's uncle. The first editions of the letters of the fourteenth-century lovers Abelard and Heloise, and of Abelard's autobiography, were published in France in 1616.
173 off of

193 princesse princess's, alluding to (a) the Spanish princess, Donna Maria, to whom Prince Charles was almost married (b) the English princess, Elizabeth Stuart, married to the Elector Palatine, and afterward Queen of Bohemia
199 Iue I've
207 Tract of obedience 'their ghostly father hath composed sundry Treatises for [these silly women] of Obedience, wherein hee pronounceth no lesse then damnation for the least scruple or hesitation in the performance of their Superiours commands... And this is a principall furtherance to his sacrilegious lusts: for I am verily perswaded that not one amongst them will (for feare of being disobedient) refuse to come to his bed whensoever he commands them: and will helpe you forward well,	Ile undertake more wagers will bee layde	230

	wh.p. S ^{rs} . thats a Vertue	uppon a Vsurers returne from hell
210	Iue euer thought on wth espetial Reuerence	then uppon hers from him now; hae I bin guiltie
	Bl.Bs.p. you will conceiue by that, my power, youre dutie,	of such base malice that my uerie Conscience
	wh.p. the knowledge will bee prætious of both S ^{rs} ,	shakes at the memorie of, and when I looke	235
	Enter wh: Bps. pawne	to gather fruite finde nothing but the Sauin Tree
	wh: B^sp. What makes yo'nd troubler of all christian Waters	too frequent in Nuns Orchards, and there planted
215	so neere that blessed Spring, but that I knowe	by all Coniecture to destroy fruite rather,
	her Goodnes is the Rock from whence it issues	I will bee resolude now, most noble Virgin
	unmoueable as Fate, twould more afflict mee	wh.p. Ignoble Villayne! dare that unhallowed tong	240
	then all my suffrings for her, wch, so long	laye hold uppon a Sound so gracious?
	as shee holds constant to the house shee comes of	whats Noblenes to thee? or Virgin Chastitie
220	the whitenes of the cause, the side, the Qualitie,	they're out of thy Acquayntance, talke of Violence
	are Sacrifices to her worth, and Vertue,	that shames creation, deeds would make night blush
	and though confinde, in my relligious Ioyes	thats companie for thee, hast thou the Impudence	245
	I marrie her and possesse her,	to court mee wth a leprosie uppon thee
	Enter Bl Kts pawne	able t' infect the walls of a great Building
	Bl.B^sp. behold Ladie,	Bl Bs.p. Sonne of offence, forbear, goe, sett youre euill
225	the 2 inhumayne Enimies, the black Knights pawne	before youre Eyes, a pœnitential Vesture
	and the white Bishops,	would better become you, some shirt of hayre,
	wh.p. there's my greefe, my hate,	Bl.Kts.p. and you a 3 pound Smock, stead of an Albe	250
	Bl.K^{ts}p. what in the Iesuites fingers, by this hand	an Epicene Cassible, this holie Fellon
	I'le giue my part now for a parrots feather	robs safe and closse, I feele a sting thats worse too,
	shee neuer returnes Vertuous, tis impossible,	white pawne! hast so much charitie to accept	255
		a Reconcilement make thy owne Conditions for I begin to bee extremelie burnd

- that they doe so, I haue manifestly seene and knowne' (Robinson, English nunnery, 18–19). In 1622, in order to silence criticism of his foreign policy, James I ordered the reprinting (for the first time in thirty years) of the homily 'Against Disobedience'; John Donne's sermon defending 'religious obedience' was 'by commandement of his Majesty Published' the same year (Sermons, IV: 178, 209).
- 212.1 wh: Bps. pawne White Bishop's Pawn; as a servant of the White Bishop, presumably represented as an English clergyman. Coloma reported that 'the first act... was played by their ministers [in Spanish, "ministros"], impersonated by the white pieces, and the Jesuits, by the black ones' (suggesting one set of clerics against another). See notes to 1.166–7, 169.
- 219 the cause (used specifically for 'the Puritan cause' in the Martin Marprelate pamphlets as early as 1588)
- 221 confinde (perhaps alluding to the imprisonment, in the early 1620s, of ministers who criticized the Spanish Match)
- 222.1 Bl Kts pawne Black Knight's Pawn, not identified with any particular person or group: apparently a Catholic

- commoner and layman. The play thus contains two examples of 'Everyman': one female, Protestant, and English; the other male, Catholic, and Spanish.
- 225 Bishops (Middleton later added 'the gelder and the gelded', to clarify the nature of the White Bishop's Pawn's injury. Pope John XIII was accused of having 'gelded John an Archdeacon' (Patrick Simson, The historie of the Church (1624), 655); Pope Honorius III was said to have hanged 400 Scots, 'and gelded their children, to extinguish their race for euer' (Goad, Friers chronicle, H4^v). Eunuchs had been singing in papal choirs since the mid-sixteenth century. Less literally, Catholic censorship and suppression of religious texts was often characterized as castration: Catholics 'gelt... their Writers, when they meete with any thing that makes not for their turne' (Gee, Foot, I4^v–15). See particularly (for the combination of two elements of the context here): 'beeing gelded [by a Jesuit] as the other bookes of Obedience were' (Robinson, English nunnery, 18) and 'how the Auncient Fathers haue beene shauen, clipt... gelt, and mutilated' (Scott, High-wayes of God, 36–7). Taylor cites further examples

- from William Fulke, William Crashaw, John Donne, and others (Castration 82, 265), and the trope also appears in Robert Sanderson's Two Sermons (1622), 77, and Montagu's Gagg (1624), 135. Scott compared the storming of the Palatinate, and the persecution of Protestants in France and Switzerland, to 'the cauterizing and cutting off our owne members' (The Belgick Pismire (1622), 89). All these metaphors involve Catholic violence against Protestants who see themselves as legitimately reproducing the 'seed' of the Gospels.)
- 228 parrots feather A European market for ornamental feathers developed in the sixteenth century, supplied in large part by exotic birds from Spanish and Portuguese tropical possessions; by the early seventeenth century oversupply had diminished the initial wonder.
- 235 Sauin Tree See A Gage for the Pope and the Iesuits (1624): 'in the Orchards of their Frieries and Nunneries... they haue whole trees of Sauine, and to what vse that serues, Physicians and Mid-wiues know too well' (14), i.e. 'the property of Sauine is to destroy any thing condensed in the wombe' (Goad, Friers Chroicle, E2).

	wh.B^s.p. no truth, or peace of that black house protested is to bee trusted, but for hope of quittance and warnd by diffidence I maye entrap him soonest, I admit Conference;		I, and their father Generall in to boote, and what Iue donne, I ha' donne facetiously, wth pleasant subtletie and bewitching Courtship abusde all my Beleiuers wth delight
260	Bl.K^{ts}.p. it is a Noblenes that makes confusion cleaue to all my meritts	exit	they tooke a Comfort to bee coosned by mee, to manie a Soule, Iue let in mortall poyson whose cheekes haue crackt wth laughter to receiue it, I could so rowle my pills in sugred sillables and strewe such kindlie Mirth ore all my mischeifs, they tooke their Bane in waye of Recreation	280
	Bl.Bs.p. that treatise will instruct You fullie: Enter Bl: K^t		as pleasure steales Corruption into Youth hee spyes mee now, I must uphold his reuerence espECIALIE in publick, though I knowe Priapus, Guardian of the Cherrie Gardens Bacchus and Venus Chit, is not more Vitious	285
	Bl.K^t so, so, the Busines of the Vniuersall Monarchie goes forward well now, the great Colledge pott that should bee alwayes boyling, wth the fuell of all Intelligences possible thorough the Christian Kingdomes, is this fellowe our prime Incendiarie? and one of those that promist the white Kingdome 7 yeare since to our black house? putt a new daughter to him the great worke stands, hee mindes nor Monarchie nor Hierarchie diuiner principalitye; I haue bragd lesse, but Iue donne more then all the Conclau on em, take their Assistant fathers in all parts		Bl.Bs.p. Blessings Accumulation keepe wth you, S ^{ir} , Bl.K^t Honors dissimulation bee youre due, S ^{ir} , wh.p. how deepe in dutie his Obseruance plundges his charge must needs bee reuerend, Bl.B^s.p. I am confessor to this black K ^t too, you see Deuotion's fruitfull sh'as manye Sonnes and daughters,	290
270				295
275

- 256–7 no... trusted (the view of those who opposed James I's efforts to secure the return of the Palatinate through a peace treaty with Spain)
- 262.1 Bl: K^t Black Knight, an impersonation of Don Diego Sarmiento de Acuña, Conde de Gondomar (1567–1626), Spain's resident ambassador in England from 1613 to 1622. The identification is confirmed by many contemporary witnesses, and by the title-page engravings. The actors 'counterfeited his person to the life, with all his graces and faces, and had gotten (they say) a cast sute of his apparell for the purpose' (John Chamberlain, 21 August 1624).
- 265–9 great... Incendiarie 'besides the care we proudly take, that the great pot may be alwayes boyling... we exercise the trade of incendiaries' (Gosselin, State Mysteries, 8).
- 269 Incendiarie 'those incendiaries of Rome, and professed engines of Spain, the priests and Jesuits' (House of Commons petition to King James, April 24 (Journals III, 289)).
- 270 7 yeare Sir John Digby had been sent to Madrid to negotiate a marriage treaty in 1617: 'The Duke [of Buckingham] replied... that the Match had need be firm and strong; it had been seven years in soldering' (House of Commons

- Journal... 1624*, III, 226).
- 271 our black house here first defined, by Gondomar's presence, as not only religious (Jesuit Catholicism), but specifically political ('the House of Austria', as it is defined in Buckingham's 1624 'Relation' to Parliament, and many other Protestant sources). Emphasis on the 'House of Austria' elided differences between the Habsburg King of Spain and the Habsburg Holy Roman Emperor; it presupposed that Spain could order the Emperor to return the Palatinate and Bohemia to Protestant control. The play 'describes Gondomar and all the Spanish proceedings very boldly and broadly' (George Lowe, 7 August). As contemporary portraits reveal, Spaniards often dressed in black.
- 272 Hierarchie episcopacy, the rule of bishops, cardinals, and ultimately the Pope; the English church retained many elements of ecclesiastical hierarchy, to the dismay of more radical Protestants.
- 274 donne more Gondomar had 'effected more by his wit and policy, then could have been wrought by the strength of many Armies' (Scott, 2 Vox Populi, 58)
- 275 Assistant fathers a Jesuit appointed 'to informe the Father Generall of all accidents of State, which occur in that Prouince or Kingdome, of which he is

- Assistant' (Bargrave, Iesuiticall iniquity, B2).
- 276 I ay, yes
- 289 Priapus Roman god of sexuality, usually represented by an erect penis: St Augustine objects to the worship of 'his monstrous and unmentionable member' (City of God, 1610). Thomas Cooper's Thesaurus Linguae Romanae et Britannicae (1578) defines 'Priapus' as 'An Idole, vnto whome the Paynims committed their gardeyns to keepe.' Middleton could have found the garden association in Ovid's Fasti, I, 415, or Catullus 18, or several English poets; none specifies cherries. Pausanias identifies him as the son of Dionysus and Aphrodite (9.31.2); 'Of Venus and Bacchus, Priapus was borne' (Abraham Fraunce, The third part of the Countesse of Pembrokes Iuychurch (1592), 01).
- 290 Vituous vicious
- 295–6 confessor... K^t Gondomar did have a Spanish confessor, Fray An de la Fuente (Padre Maestro), despatched to England in 1618, and involved in negotiations for the marriage treaty. But no contemporary observer identified the Black Bishop's Pawn as de la Fuente (who was a Dominican, not a Jesuit). The character compounds elements from various sources. See 5.0.4.

- 300 Bl.Kt. I doo this the more t 'amaze our Aduersaries to behold
 the reuerence wee giue these Guitenens,
 and to beget a sound opinion
 of Holines in them and Zeale in us, as also to enuite the like Obedience
 in other Pusills, by our meeke Example, 305 so, is youre Trifle uanisht?
Bl.B^s.p. Trifle call you her? tis a good pawne Sir sure shees the second pawne in the whitehouse,
 and to the opening of the Game I hold her,
Bl.K^t. I you hold well for that I Knowe youre playe of ould 310 if there were more Q^s: pawnes youde plye the Game
 a great deale harder, (now S^{ir} weere in priuate, but what for the mayne worke, the great Existence
 the Hope monarchall, Bl. B^s.p. it goes on in this,
 315 Bl.K^t. in this? I cannot see'te, Bl.B^s.p. you maye denye so a dyalls motion, cause you cannot see the hand moue, or a winde that rends the Cedar,
Bl.K^t. where stops the Current of Intelligence, 320 youre father Generall Bishop a'th black-house
 complaynes for want of worke;
- Bl.B^s.p.* heres from all parts sufficient to employe him, I receiude
 a packet from th' Assistant Fathers latelie, Looke you, theres Anglica, this Gallica, 325
Bl.K^t. I marrie S^{ir}, theres some quick flesh in this Bl.B^s.p. Germanica!
Bl.K^t. thinke theyue seald this wth Butter,
Bl.B^s.p. this Italica!
Bl.K^t. theyue putt their pens the Hebrew waye mee
 thinkes 330
Bl.B^s.p. Hispanica here!
Bl.K^t. Hispanica, blinde worke tis,
 the Iesuite ha's writt this wth Iuice of Lemmans sure it must bee held close to the fire of Purgatorie
 er't can bee read. 335
Bl. B^s.p. you will not Loose youre Iest Knight though't wounded youre owne name,
Enter wh. K^s pawne
Bl.K^t. Curanda Pecuniâ;
Bl.B^s.p. take heede Sr, weere entrapt the wh. Kings pawne!
Bl.K^t. hees made our owne (man) halfe in Voto yours, 340 his hearts in the black house, leaue him to mee,
 most of all frends endeerde, prætiouslie spetiall;

298–302 I doo... us Thomas Scott has Gondomar describe his attendance on Father Baldwin, released from the Tower in 1613: 'I behaved my self after so lowly & hūble a maner, that our aduersaries stood amazed to behold the reverence we giue to our ghostly fathers. And this I did... to beget an extraordinary opinion of holinesse in the person, & pietie in us, and also to provoke the English Catholiques to like devout obedience' (Vox Populi, C4^v).
 303 enuite invite
 305 uanisht The exit of the White Queen's Pawn is not indicated (the first of several unmarked departures in Early). Even promptbooks often omitted exits.
 311 weere we're in priuate 'Publique persons should do publike actions in publike, in the Gates of the City, in the Kings high-way, in the eye of all. For chamber-worke are suspicious, and carry a shew of priuacy and parciality' (Scott, High-wayes of God, 69–70).
 312 great Existence See Massinger's Renegado (licensed for performance 17 April 1624): 'thou great Existence' (a prayer addressed to God by a Jesuit).

318 Cedar emblem of James I
 325–31 Anglica... Hispanica provinces into which Jesuits divided their missions 328 theyue they've
 Butter alluding not only to the northern European fondness for butter, but to news-sheets reporting on the Catholic-Protestant wars in Germany and the Palatinate, published by Nathaniel Butter 333 Iuice of Lemmans (a) juice of lemons (b) juice of lemons, lovers. For juice = female sexual juices, see Michaelmas 1.3.5 and Williams, Dictionary, 2:750. For the pun lemons/lemans see Owl's Almanac 323 and Williams, 2:799.
 Lemmans Father Henry Garnett (1555–1606), superior of the Jesuits in England until his execution for participation in the Gunpowder Plot, often wrote secret letters with ink made from lemon (or orange) juice, which is illegible unless heated.
 335 er't ere't, before it
 336 Loose lose
 337.1 wh. K^s pawne White King's Pawn, combining features of several Jacobean courtiers. By 1622 several of the King's ministers—including Secretary of State Sir George Calvert, Sir Richard Weston, and Francis Cottington (secretary of the Prince of Wales)—were crypto-Catholics. Sir Toby Matthew (1577–1655), who converted to Catholicism in 1606 and was ordained a priest in 1614, was sent to Madrid in 1623 to advise Prince Charles and the Duke of Buckingham in negotiations for the Spanish marriage. Subsequent revisions—see Later 1.1.319–24—incorporated allusions relevant to the Earl of Middlesex. Nevertheless, an eyewitness identified the character as Sir John Digby, 1st Earl of Bristol (1580–1653), ambassador to Madrid 1610–17, 1618, 1622–4 (Holles, 11 August); in 1624 Digby was widely (wrongly) perceived as a treasonous Catholic and Spanish sympathizer. Middleton's pawn compounds elements of several historical figures.

 338 Curanda Pecuniâ Like most university-educated writers, Middleton wrote an elegant italic script, and mixed italic letter forms with secretary forms; but very few words are written entirely in italic. Here it distinguishes Latin.
 340 (man) vocative, addressed to the Black Bishop's Pawn wh.K^s.p. you see my outside, but you knowe my heart, K^t,

345 great difference in the Colour, theres some Intelligence and as more ripens, so youre knowledge still shall prooue the richer, and my selfe youre Frend:
I dare not longer of this Theame discusse,
the Eare of State is quick and Iealious:

Bl.K^t. Excellent Estimation, thou art Valued 350 about the Fleete of Gold, that came short home, poore Iesuite ridden Soule, how art thou foolde out of thy Fayth, from thy Alleagance drawn wch path so ere thou tak'st thou't a lost pawne.

Finit Actus primus.

Incipit Secundi.

Enter White-weoman pawne with a booke in her hand;

Wh.p. and here agen it is the daughters dutie
to obaye her Confessors command in all things without exception, or expostulation,

tis the most generall Rule that I erè read of,
Yet when I thinke how boundlesse Vertue is Goodnes and Grace, tis gentlie reconcilde and then it appeares well to haue the power of the dispenser as uncircumscribd

Enter Bl.B^s.p.

Bl.B^s.p. shee's hard uppònt, twas the most modest Key that I could use to open my Intents, 10 what litle or no paynes goes to some people,
hah? a Seald Note, whence this?
to the black Bishops pawne these, how? to mee?
strange, who subscribes it? the Black King? what would hee?

exit

(∴)

pawne! sufficientlie holie, but unmeasureable politick;
15 wee had late intelligence from our most industrious Seruant famous in all parts of Europe (our Knight of the black house, that you haue at this instant in chace, the white Queenes pawne, and uerie liklie by the carriage of youre Game to entrap and take her, these 20 are therefore to require you by the burning affection I beare to the Rape of Deuotion, that speedilie upon the 343 outside...heart Elizabeth, Queen of Bohemia, wrote that 'I think I can easily guess who it is that doth chieflie hinder the King in resolving, but I am sure that though they have English bodies they have Spanish hartes' (Pursell, Winter King, 109).

344-6 theres...richer A number of court officials, including members of the Privy Council, had been on Spanish pensions since the peace treaty of 1604;
when this became public knowledge in 1620, many observers concluded that Gondomar 'knowes your [James I's] secrets before the greatest part / and most faithfull of your council. And which is worse / they saye your Majestie knowes it; and therefore suspect that your selfe is bribed against your selfe' (Tom Tell-Troath, 4).

346 and...Frend 'To doe this I had many Agents, first divers Courtiers who were hungrie and gaped wide for Spanish gould' (Scott, Vox Populi); '(replied Gondomar)... our best intelligencers...
we haue had in times past many friends,
euen in the Parliament House' (Scott,
2 Vox Populi, 37). As late as January
1624, five members of the King's council were known to be still supporting the Spanish marriage (despite the aggressive opposition of Charles and Buckingham): John Williams (Lord Keeper of the Privy Seal), the Earl of Middlesex (Lord
Treasurer), the Earl of Arundel, Sir
Richard Weston, and Sir George Calvert.
The added lines at Later 1.1.323-4—
'keepe all Supplies back both in meanes

and men | that may rayse strenght against you'—clearly refer to the military effort to defend the Palatine territories of Elizabeth and Frederick against the Spanish army.

350 Fleete of Gold Spanish treasure fleet, bringing gold from their New World colonies (about 5 million pesos per year in the 1620s); responsible for making Spain the richest power in Europe, with military resources that threatened all other European powers.

came short home Between 1618 and 1624 Spanish ships were increasingly harassed by privateers. On 14 February 1623 Joseph Mead reported 'There is no siluer come yet from the West Indies into Spaine, nor to be expected before May;
the Admirall & 2 others are sunk, & the rest returned to the Hauana' (f. 286).

351-3 poore...lost pawne Act 1 dramatizes the link between personal and political salvation: it begins with an apolitical white lay woman, tempted by a female Jesuit who passes her to a male Jesuit, who reveals himself to be the agent of a Spanish diplomat, who ends Act 1 gloating over the treason of a converted white layman. The ending of Act 1 raises the question: will the White Queen's Pawn become, like the White King's Pawn, a 'poore...lost pawne' who betrays her religion and her country?

2.0.1 Incipit This Latin formula for beginning an act is rare in English plays: in printed drama before Middleton it occurs only in the sixteenth-century Protestant morality plays of John Bale (eleven examples in two plays).

0.2 White-weoman This compound idiom does not appear in later texts, and has therefore not been recorded. The first use of white in its modern racial sense in English drama occurs at Truth 407-
8, 'I see amazement set upon the faces Of these white people' (spoken to the London crowd by the Black King). The racial sense of 'white' is not spoken or explicit in this stage direction, but the play's colour coding was interpreted racially by the Spanish ambassador Coloma, who reported indignantly that Felipe IV was represented as 'the king of the blacks' (negros) and James I as 'the king of the whites' (blancos), words with unambiguous racial meanings in Spain.
See Induction.44 and 3.213-16.

booke 'Printing presses and booksellers
almost in every corner' had flooded England with 'swarms of [Catholic] books' in the early 1620s (Gee, Foot);
'wee saw every pocket stuff with popish pamphlets' (Scott, Vox Dei (1624). 69).

4 erè e'er, ever

8 uncircumscribd (a word first recorded in Healey's 1610 translation of Augustine's
City of God; there, it describes God)

15 politick 'The fourth sort is of Politicke Iesuites, through whose handes passeth the whole gouernement of religion; and these are they, who...labour to reduce their society to an absolute Monarchy,
and to place the head thereof at Rome' (Bargrave, Iesuiticall iniquity, B9^v-B10).

6

Actus Secundi Scena prima.

Enter Wg. 95. Pawn on the a back in the game.

Wg. 95. p. and your eyes it is your daughter's Duke to obey your Comf. Nob's command in all things without exception, or expostulation,
his is my most general Rule that ever I read of,
yet when I think you boundless Virtue is Godwin and Grace, his gentle words and you it appears more to your power of his displeasure as uncircumvented

Bl. B. p. Pies part uppoint, was for more modest Key that I route up to open my Jubilee,
what little or no part's good to some people,
see: a Scotch Noble, require to it?
to the black Bishop's pawn left, you: to me: (see:
Pawne, who subscribes it: the Black King: what would to better

Pawne: sufficient to police, but unmissable poli-tigue; we had late intelligence from our most industrious servant famous in all parts of Europe of our Knight of the Black Cross, that you saw at his instant in tears, the noble queen's pawn, and was like by the ravings of your Game to entrap and take you, these are your own to require you by the burning

A Game at Chess in Middleton's handwriting (actual size), showing the beginning of Act 2. Notice the spatial contrast between the opening stage direction of the scene (top) and the mid-scene entrance of the Black Bishop's Pawn (midpage, right), which is boxed with horizontal lines to call attention to it. Our printed edition does not preserve this visual distinction between different kinds of stage directions. Below line 2.8, our printed edition preserves the horizontal line, called a 'speech rule', that separates one speech from another, but it gives all those speech rules the same length, rather than reproducing the exact length of each one. Notice also (at line 2.14) the way that the manuscript deals with a verse line that is too long to fit within the margins: it puts the extra word 'hee?' above the line, to the right, with an opening parenthesis before it (whereas our edition puts the extra words 'would hee?' on the line below, indented). In the prose at the bottom, our printed text does not break the lines in exactly the same places that the manuscript does.

- surprizall of her, by all watchfull aduantage you make some attempt upon the white Queenes person whose 25 fall or prostitution our Lust most uiolentie rages for,
 S^{ir} after my desire ha's tooke a Iulepp
 for it's owne Inflammation, that yet scorches mee,
 I shall haue cooler time to thinke of yours:
 shà's past the generall Rule, the large Extent 30 of our præscriptions for obedience and yet wth what Alacritie of Soule her Eye moues on the Letters;
- wh.p.* Holie S^{ir},
 too long Iue mist you, oh youre absence starues mee, 35 hasten for times redemption worthie S^{ir} laye youre commands as thick and fast upon mee
 as you can speake em̄, how I thirst to heare em̄, sett mee to worke upon this spatious Vertue wch the poore Span of lifes too narrowe for Boundlesse Obedience, the humblest yet the mightiest 40 of all dutie
 well here set downe a Vniuersall Goodnes;
- Bl. B^s.p.* by holines of Garment her safe Innocence
 ha's frighted the full meaning from it selfe, Shees farder off from understanding now 45 the language of m'Intent then at first meeting;
- wh.p.* for Vertues sake, good sir, command mee somthīg,
 make tryall of my dutie in some small seruice
 and as you finde the fayth of my obedience there, then trust it wth a greater;
- 50 Bl.B^s.p. you speake sweetelie,
 I do command you first then—
- wh.p.* wth what ioye
 I do præpare my dutie,
Bl.B^s.p. to meete mee
 55 and seale a Kisse of Loue upon my Lip, wh.p. hah?
- Bl.B^s.p.* at first disobedient, in so litle too!,
 how shall I trust you wth a greater then,
 wch was youre owne request;
- wh.p.* praye send not back
 my Innocence to wound mee, bee more curteous,
 I must confesse much like an ignorant plantiffe who præsuming on the fayre path of his meaning goes rashlie on, till on a suddayne brought 65 into the wildernes of Lawe, by words dropt unaduisedlie, hurts his good cause and giues his aduersarie aduantage by't applie it you can best (S^{ir}) if m'obedience and youre command can finde no better waye FOND men command, and wantons best obaye;
- Bl.Bs.p.* If I can at that distance send you a blessing,
 is it not neerer to you in mine Armes?
 it flies from these Lips dealt abroad in parcells,
 and I to honor thee about all daughters
 enuite thee home to th' house, where thou mayst 75 surlet
 on that, wch others miserable pine for,
 a fauour wch the daughters of great Potentates
 would looke of Enuies colour but to heare,
- wh.p.* Goodmen maye err somtimes, you are mistooke sure,
 if this bee Vertues path, tis a most strange one, 80 I neuer came this waye before,
- Bl.B^s.p.* thats youre ignorance,
 and therefore shall that Ideot still conduct you that knowes no waye but one, nor euer seekes it,
 if there bee twentie wayes to some poore Village 85 tis strange that Vertue should bee putt to one,
 youre feare is wondrous faultie, cast it from you
 twill gather else in Time a Disobedience
 too stubborne for my pardon,
- wh.p.* haue I lockt my selfe at unawares into Sins seruitude 90 wth more desire of Goodnes; is this the Top of all strickt Order,? and the holiest of all societies, the 3 uowde people for pouertie, obedience, chastitie,
 the last the most forgot, when a Virgins ruinde 95 I see the great worke of obedience is better then halfe finisht;

30 obedience James I's later court was characterized, to its critics, by 'a blind Jesuitical obedience' (John Holles, 18 July 1617); 'Let a Protestant king... be never so notoriously wicked in his person nor so enormous in his government,' nevertheless 'the Reformed Religion... tyes the subject to such wonderfull patience and obedience' that it 'makes men obey Kings as the Angels of God' (Tom Tell-Truth, 26).

40 Boundlesse... duties Middleton often writes a line and a half of verse as a single manuscript line, to save paper.

Compare Induction.51.

44 farder farther

45 m'Intent my Intent (an unusual elision)

46 somthīg something

55-71 Kisse... blessing 'When any of the Priests knauery was discouered, there were excuses enough ready to defend them; yea, when they were found kissing of a woman; the answer was, You must suppose he did it to print a blessing on her lips' (Thomas Goad, The Friers Chronicle (1623), C1^v).

64 suddayne sudden

79 Goodmen (often treated as a compound, like 'handyman' or 'doorman')

85-6 if... one This relativism is contradicted by many contemporary assertions of the singularity of truth; for instance, 'I never showed thee yet more paths than one' (Truth 330), or 'such a deade luke-warme indifferencie, a dow-baked zeale, as if... all wayes were alike to vs' (Scott, High-wayes of God, 81).

94 pouertie, obedience, chastitie vows taken by members of the Society of Jesus (all three, according to Protestant polemicists, systematically violated)

100 Bl.B^s.p. what a Stranger are you to dutie growen, what distance keepe you?
 must I bid you come forward to a happines
 youre selfe should sue for,? twas neuer so wth mee,
 I dare not let this Stubbornes bee knowen twould bring such feirce hate on you, yet presume not 105 to make that courteous care a priuiledge for willfull disobedience, it turnes then into the blacknes of a Curse uppon you, come, come, bee neerer,
wh.p. neerer?
Bl.B^s.p. was that Scorne?
 110 I would not haue it prooue so, for the hopes of the grand Monarchie, if it were like it let it not dare to stir abroad agen
 a stronger Ill Will coape wth't, wh.p. blesse mee, threatnens mee and quite dismayes the good strenght that should 115 helpe mee,
 I neuer was so doubtfull of my safetie,
Bl.B^s.p. twas but my Iealousie, forgie me Sweetnes
 Yon'd is the house of Meeknes and no Venom liues
 under that Roofe, bee neerer, why so fearefull?
 120 neerer the Altar the more safe and sacred wh.p. but neerer to the Offrer oft more wicked
Bl.B^s.p. a playne and most insufferable Contempt, my glorie I haue lost uppon this weoman
 in freelie offring that shee should haue kneelde 125 a Yeare in Vayne for, my respect is darkned giue mee my Reuerence thou hast robd mee of in thy repulse, thou shalt not carrie't hence wh.p. S^{ir},
Bl.B^s.p. thou'rt too great a winner to depart
 130 and I too great a Looser to giue waye to't wh.p. oh heauen!
Bl.B^s.p. laye mee downe Reputation before thou stirst, thy nice Virginitie is recompence too litle for my Loue 135 tis well if I accept of that for both thy losse is but thine owne, theres Art to helpe thee and fooles to passe thee to, in my discouerie
 the whole Societie suffers, and in that the hope of Absolute Monarchie eclipts, assurance thou can'st make none for thy Secrecie 140 but by thy honors losse, that Act must awe thee, wh.p. oh my distrest Condition!

Bl.B^s.p. do'st thou weepe?
 if thou hadst anie pittie this necessitie would wring it from thee, I must else destroye thee 145 wee must not trust the policie of Europe
 uppon a weomans tong;
wh.p. then take my life sir,
 and leaue my honor for my guide to heauen,
Bl.B^s.p. take heede I take not both, wch Iue uowde since;
 150 if Longer thou resist mee, wh.p. helpe, oh helpe—
a noyse wthin
Bl.B^s.p. art thou so cruell for an honors Bubble
 t'undo a whole Fraternitie, and disperse 155 the secretts of most princes lockt in us;
wh.p. for heauen and Vertues sake;
Bl.B^s.p. must force confound noyse?
 hah? whats that? silence if fayre worth bee in thee
wh.p. Ile uenture my Escape uppon all dangers now;
Bl.B^s.p. who comes to take mee let mee see that pawns 160 face
 or his proud tympanous M^r sweld wth state winde
 wch being once prickt ith Conuocation house
 the corrupt Ayre puffs out and hee falls shriueld, wh.p. I will discouer thee Arch hypocrite 165 to all the Kinreds of the earth Bl.B^s.p. Confusion! in that Voyce rings the Alarum of my undoing
 how? wch waye scapte shee from mee?
Enter Black weoman-pawne
Bl.p. are you mad?
 can Lust infatuate a man so hopefull,
 no patience in youre bloud the Dogstar reignes sure 170 time and fayre Temper would haue wrought her pleasant,
 I spied a pawne ath whitehouse walke neere us and made that Noyse a purpose to giue warning for mine owne turne, wch end in all I worke for,

111 grand Monarchie 'the Iesuites are wont to call their Religion, A Grand-Monarchy; as if they gouerned all Princes and their ministers at their pleasure' (Bargrave, Iesuiticall iniquity, C5^v).

114 threatnens threatens

161 M^r master

164 I will discouer thee In the play, this anticipates the political 'Checkmate by discouerye' (5.356); but it also reflects the exposure of Catholic malpractice by former Catholics like Thomas Robinson (1622) and John Gee (1624). Several of Gee's anecdotes involve women who turn against the Jesuits.

170 Dogstar Sirius, in the constellation of the Great Dog, the brightest of the fixed stars; its astrological influence was thought to be most debilitating during the 'dog days', said by 1624 almanacs to begin on July 19. The first performances of Game took place during the Dogstar's reign, traditionally associated with rage, madness, and other dangerous or evil behaviour.

172 ath o'th', of the 173 a o', on

- 175 Bl.B^s.p. mee thinkes I stand ouer a powder-Vault
and the Match now a kindling, whats to bee donne?
Bl.p. Aske the black Bishops councell youre his pawne
tis his owne case, hee will defend you maynelic Enter Bl. Bp, and Bl.K^t.
and happilie here hee comes wth the Bl. Knight too, 180 Bl.B. oh yau'e made noble worke for the whitehouse yonder,
this Act will fill the Aduersaries mouth
and blowe the Hugonites cheeke tillt crack agen, Bl.K^t. this will aduance the great Monarchall busines
in all parts well, and helpe the Agents forward, 185 what I in 7 yeare labourd to accomplish one Minute setts back by some Codpeice Colledge still Bl.B^s.p. I dwell not, S^{ir}, alone in this default the blackhouse yeilds mee partners;
Bl.B: all more cautelous;
190 Bl. K^t. Qui cautè, castè, thats my Motto euer
I haue trauguayd wth that word ouer most kingdomes and layne safe wth most Nations, of a leaking bottome
I haue benee as often tost on Venus seas
as trimmer fresher Barkes, when sounder Vessells 195 haue layne at Anchor, that is, kept the doore;
Bl.B. shee ha's no wittnesse then?
Bl.B^s.p. None, none,
Bl.Kt. grosse! wittnesse! when went a man of his Societe to mischeife wth a wittnesse,
- Bl.B. I haue don't then, 200
awaye, uppon the Wings of Speede, take posthorse cast 30 leagues of earth behind thee suddenlie leauē letters Antedated wth our house
ten dayes at least from this,
Bl.K^t. Bishop I tast thee, 205 good strong Episcopall Councell, take a bottle on't twill serue thee all the Journey, Bl.B^s.p. but good S^{ir}
how for my getting forth, unspied?
Bl.K^t. theres check agen, 210
Bl.p. no, Ile helpe that!
Bl.Kt. well sayde my litle Iesuitesse,
Bl.p. there lyes a secret Vault,
Bl.Kt. awaye, make haste then,
Bl.B^s.p. run for my Cabinet of Intelligences 215 for feare they search the house, good Bishop burne em rather
I cannot stand to pick em, now,
Bl.B. bee gon,
the dangers all in you,
Bl.K^t. let mee see Queenes pawne, 220
how formallie ha's packt up his Intelligences, ha's layde em all in Truckle beds mee thinkes,
and like Court-Harbingers ha's writt their names
in Chalke uppon their Chambers, Anglica!
oh this is the English house, what newes there tro?
225 hah? by this light, most of these are bawdie Epistles

175 powder-Vault almost inevitably suggesting, to English Protestants, the Gunpowder Plot. 'Blush, blush, (O Iesuites) England knows too well, | Your Counsell furthered most this worke of Hell' (Francis Herring, Mischeefes Myserie . . . The Powder-plot, tr. John Vicars (1617), 109). See also Induction.34, l.269.

177 youre you're

178.1 Bl. Bp Black Bishop: the Father General, or head, of the Society of Jesus: see 1.48–9, 320.

182 Hugonites Huguenots. In May 1624 English ambassadors arrived in Paris to negotiate a marriage between Prince Charles and a French (Catholic) princess, so any reference to persecuted French protestants would be politically dangerous; all subsequent texts read 'Lutherans' (Later 2.1.166). In 1624, 'Lutherans' might easily suggest Germany (the home of Lutheranism), and specifically Bohemia.
tillt till't, until it

190 Qui cautè, castè Lecherous Jesuits, caught in bed with their nuns, forgot 'the old caueat, Cautè si non castè' (Robinson, English numery, 19). Middleton transforms 'Careful, if not chaste' into 'Whoever is cautious, is'—that is, has the reputation for being—'chaste'.

191 trauguayd travelled (not distinguished from 'travailed', laboured)

192 leaking bottome (Gondomar suffered from a fistula; his rectal leak is here conflated with a not-watertight ship's hull.)

193 tost tossed

200 don't done't

206 Episcopall (gratuitously negatively used here, at 2.334, and at Later 3.1.29)

212 Iesuitesse A rare word, used since 1616 to describe the followers of Mary Ward (Sir Dudley Carlton, Letters, 68); in 1611 Ward decided that her order of 'English Ladies' should follow the same constitution as the (male) Society of Jesus. The word is used often of them in the next two decades: see 'English Iesuitesses' (Lewis Owen, The Running Register, 8), and 'English Iesuitesses, (a new inuented Order)' (William Prynne, A Briefe Suruay and Censure (1628), 39).

215–51 Cabinet . . . Expulse After the 'expulsion' of the Jesuits from Venice, in part because of their 'dangerous abuse of that great instrument of State, Auricular confession', a 'search' by state officials discovered 'a Scrinio (as they call it here) with partitions of their addresses to and from all parts, As England, France, Spaine, Flaunders, Germany, Poland, Russia, etc. . . . And in this Scrinio they had left rather through vanity then hast, a great and incredible heape of the very ashes and tynder of their dispatches' (A Declaration of the Variance between the Pope and the Signiory of Venice (1606), 33–4).

225 what newes there 'Letters of News' had become an increasingly common and important form of correspondence, either commercial (Thomas Gainsford, John Pory, Ralph Starkey) or personal (John Chamberlain, Joseph Mead, and many others).

tro trow

time they were burnt indeed, whole Bundles on em
heres from his daughter Blanch, and daughter bridget 230 these from 2 tender Sisters of Compassion in the bowells of Bloomsburie;
3 from the Nunnerie without Temple Bar, a fire, a fire, good Iesuitesse, a fire, what haue you there
Bl.B. a note Sir of State=policie 235 and one exceeding safe one,
Bl.K^L praye letts see't sir,— to sell away all the powder in a Kingdome to præuent blowing up, thats safe Ile able it,
heres a facetious Obseruation now 240 and suites my humour better, hee writes here
some wiues in England will committ Adulterie, and then send to Rome for a Bull for their hous-
bands,
Bl.B. haue they those Shifts?
Bl.K^L oh theres no Female breathing 245 sweeter and subteller, here wench take these papers scortch em mee soundlie, burne em to French Russet
and putt em in agen,
Bl.B. why whats youre Mysterie?
Bl.K^L oh Sir⁵ twill mock the Aduersarie strangelye
250 if e're the house bee searchd twas donne in Venice

upon the Iesuiticall Expulse there when the Inquisitors came all spectacted to pick out Sillables ont ath Dung of Treason as children pick out Cherriestones, yet found none but what they made themselues wth ends of Letters, 255 doo as I bid you, pawne, exeunt
Bl.p. feare not, in all,
I loue Roguerie too well to lett it fall,
Enter Bl.K^{ts}. pawn,
how now? what newes wth you?
Bl.K^{ts}.p. the Sting of Conscience 260 afflicts mee so, for that inhumayne Violence on the White Bishops pawne, it takes awaye
my Ioye, my rest;
Bl.p. this tis to make an Eunuch
you made a Sport on't then, 265
Bl.K^{ts}.p. ceasse Aggrauation,
I come to bee absolute fort, where's my Confessor?
why do'st thou poynt toth' Ground?
Bl.p. cause hee went that waye, Bl.K^{ts}.p. what's that?
Bl.p. come, helpe in wth this Cabinet 270
and after I haue singd these papers throughlie
Ile tell thee a strange storie;
Bl.K^{ts}.p. if't bee sad
tis welcome,
Bl.p. tis not troubled wth much mirth, S^{ir} 275 exeunt

228 bridget The English nunnery in Lisbon (the subject of Robinson's spectacular exposé) belonged to an order founded by 'Saint Briquet and her daughter' (6, 12), Briquet having been 'miserably seduced' by her confessor (6).
229 Whitefriars a district associated with both prostitutes and Catholics, encouraging the slang description of whores as nuns: a prodigal keeps 'his most delicate drab' in 'Whitefriars nunnery' (Father Hubbard's Tales 600–1); a customer visits 'his nun in Whitefriars' (Thomas Dekker, Westward Ho, 1604).
231 Bloomsburie 'about Bloomsbury... take heed of a Iesuite' (Gee, Foot, H1^v–H2)
232 without Temple Bar just outside the western limits of the jurisdiction of the City of London. 'Temple Bar' directs suspicion at the legal profession. The phrase was later altered, probably by censorship, to 'in Drury Lane'. Gee describes Father Townsend as 'a Iesuite, a little black fellow, very compt and gallant, lodging about the midst of Drury-Lane acquainted with collapsed Ladies' (Foot, P1^v). 'In Drury Lane there are three family of Papists residing there for one of Protestants; insomuch that it may well be called little Rome' (House of Commons, 5 June 1628).

237–8 to sell... up Chamberlain reported rumours that Gondomar had transported gunpowder out of the kingdom (13 February 1619). A 1621 Parliamentary committee investigated the export of English ordnance, most probably to Spain.
253 ont ath of it, from the: 'of [treason], from the'
235–4 Dung... Cherriestones 'coquins de village qui fougent et escharbottent la merde des petitz enfans, en la saison des cerises et guignes, pour trouver les noyaulx et iceulx vendre es drogeurs' (Rabelais, Gargantua et Pantagruel, bk. 2, ch. 34); 'the poor rogues of a village, that are busy in stirring up and scraping in the ordure and filth of little children, in the season of cherries and guinds, and that only to find the kernels, that they may sell them to the druggists' (first English translation, 1653).

264 to make an Eunuch 'For there are some Eunuches... which were made Eunuches of [= by] men' (Matthew 19:12, 1611 translation). Eunuch-making was practised in Islamic societies, and among the 'heathen' peoples of the Americas, Africa, and Asia; as such, it typified alien despotism and tyranny. After the Reformation, Protestants (including Luther and Calvin) used the eunuch metaphor to characterize Roman Catholicism, with its 'tyrannical law of celibacy' (Taylor, Castration, 76–9).
269 cause... that (two part lines, one linking backward and the other linking forward, spoken by two different speakers, on the same manuscript line: compare Induction.51)
271 singd (past tense of 'sing')
throughlie thoroughly
275 exeunt The clearing of the stage here ends the first scene of Act 2, but scene breaks and scene numbers are not indicated in the authorial manuscript. For a text with the conventional scene-breaks, see Later.

Enter wh. King: Q. Bp. Duke. Knight: pawnes:
and Qs.pawne: and Bl. King Q.Bp. &c.

Wh.Q. Is this my pawne? shee that should guard our person?

or some pale Fyfigure of Deiection
her shape usurping? sorrowe and affrightment ha's præuaylde stranglie with her;

wh.p. King of Integrity!

280

275.1 Enter For Middleton's addition, introducing a major new character, see Later 2.2.0.1–95. The Fat Bishop impersonated Antonio De Dominis, Archbishop of Spalato (1566–1624), as the title-page likenesses and contemporary reports confirm. But the vices Middleton gave his 'Fat Bishop' were not limited to De Dominis (who had left England two years earlier). His theology was closely connected to the Arminianism of some English clerics (including the Bishops of Chichester, Durham, London, Rochester, St David's, and Winchester), who—like King James—were also sympathetic to his contention that the religion of Catholics and Protestants 'is in the maine essentials and fundamentals the very same' (A Sermon Preached in Italian (1617), 31). The legitimacy of the Jacobean episcopate, which De Dominis defended, had been polemically contested in at least a dozen pamphlets since 1606. Ben Jonson satirized young men who were obsessed with foreign news and domestic politics, and would "gainst the Bishops... rail" ('The New Cry', 1616). A 'Fat Bishop' could have reminded audiences of John Jegon, who was called 'our short, fat Lord Bishop' of Norwich. The practice of clerical pluralism—in which a single person holds two benefices—was attacked in Parliament in 1621 and 1625; it was particularly prevalent among the episcopate and court clergy. Theophilus Field, made Bishop of Llandaff through Buckingham's patronage in 1619, was impeached in 1621 by Parliament for bribery and brocage; Richard Corbet was satirized in 1623 for his overt courting of Buckingham in pursuit of additional benefices. In a widely circulated anonymous manuscript poem, the pro-Spanish Bishop John Williams, Lord Keeper, was accused of having a sexual affair with the Countess of Buckingham (converted to Catholicism in 1623): 'She loves the fucking game | He's her cunt-keeper' ('All the News', with the refrain 'These are they, bear the sway'). Lewes Bayly—'Bishop of Bang-whore' [Bangor]—was repeatedly accused (1619, 1621, 1626) of promiscuity, and of fathering several bastards. And Spalato was not the only 'turncoat Bishop': John King, Bishop of London, was alleged, in pamphlets of 1621 and 1623, to have made a deathbed conversion to Catholicism (an incident discussed in Middleton's lost Farrago).

275.1–2 wh. King... Qs.pawne This scene brings on stage, for the first time, the entire White House (King, clergy, lords, and commons), and its action resembles the Parliament of 1621, where King James rejected complaints by the Commons against Catholic infiltration in England and against Spanish aggression in northern Europe. This does not mean that the White Queen's Pawn personifies Bohemia or the Palatinate (an allegory that cannot be consistently applied). But the structure and emotion of the scene, and various verbal details, would have reminded many spectators of the crisis three years earlier.

275.1 wh. King Explicitly or implicitly identified, by contemporaries, as King James I; given the universal recognition of the Black Knight as Gondomar, the identity of the two kings was indisputable. It is not clear whether performances made any specific attempt at impersonation. 'His Ma^{tie}' remembers well there was a commaundment and restraint giuen against the representinge of anie moderne Christian kings in those Stage-playes, and wonders much... at the boldnes nowe taken by that Companie' (Sir Edward Conway, Secretary of State, to the Privy Council, 12 August 1624).

275.2–2.276 Bl... &c. Although the Black House enters here, the first 47 lines are spoken by White characters: the Black House are characterized as observers of English domestic politics.

275.2 Bl. King Identified—by Don Carlos Coloma (Spanish ambassador to England), and by Woolley, Conway, Pembroke, and Holles—as Felipe IV of Spain, 'because of his youth, dress, and other details' (Coloma). Notably, he does not speak until l. 440, after the White House has left the stage.

275.2–2.276 &c. including Black Knight and Black Duke (who both speak) and some black pawns (but not the Black Bishop's Pawn, who is absent)

276 Wh.Q. White Queen, who presumably wears some sort of crown or tiara, and stands adjacent to the White King. She is not specifically identified in any surviving contemporary response, but probably represents Elizabeth Stuart, Queen of Bohemia. Queen Anne had died early in 1619, before any of the other events dramatized in the play take place; the only living Stuart Queen, and Europe's most conspicuous Protestant Queen, was Elizabeth, who is a 'White Queen' not only because of her association with the White (English, Protestant, Stuart) cause, but because she was called 'the Winter Queen', whose army had been defeated at the Battle of White Mountain in November 1620. The first report of the play's performance compared it to 'Vox popoly' (John Wooley, 6 August 1624); Scott's 2 Vox Populi (May 1624) was dedicated to Elizabeth, 'Queene of Bohemia', and her husband Frederick, and she is at the centre of the frontispiece of Scott's Vox Regis (1624), kneeling in front of King James, pleading her 'just cause'. The Venetian ambassador said that Game contained 'several representaitons under different names of many of the circumstances about the marriage with the Infanta' (30 August); all English accounts of the Spanish Match linked it directly to the fate of the Queen of Bohemia. John Holles called the play 'a representation of all our spannishe traffike' (11 August), and Sir Francis Nethersole said that in the play 'the whole Spanish business is ripped vp to the quicke' (14 August); it could not have been as comprehensive as they claim ('all', 'whole') without representing the Queen of Bohemia. Even to identify Elizabeth as 'Queen' was dangerous, because King James consistently refused to recognize Frederick and Elizabeth's claim to Bohemia.

Is... person In chess and life, a Queen is more powerful than a pawn/servant/gentlewoman. The Queen's Pawn stands before the Queen at the opening of the game, blocking any immediate direct attack upon her. In the 1620s many Protestants argued that the English people, and particularly the House of Commons—which appropriated funds, and was therefore essential to military action—had a natural obligation ('should') to defend the Queen of Bohemia, as a Protestant and a member of the English royal family.

our person (royal plural, in this first speech by the White Queen, confirming for the audience that she belongs to the royal family)

277–8 Deiection... sorrowe Although White Queen's Pawn was certainly frightened in the preceding scene, and is righteously angry in this scene, 'sorrow' and 'dejection' seem more relevant to the emotions of Protestant supporters of the Queen of Bohemia in the early 1620s.

280 wh.p. i.e. White Queen's Pawn

- Queene of the same, and all the house professors of noble Candor, uncorrupted Iustice and truth of heart, through my alone discouerie
my life and honor wondrously præserude
285 I bring into youre Knowledge wth my sufferings (fearefull affrightments, and heart-killing Terrors)
the great Incendiarie of Christendome,
the absolutst Abuser of true Sanctitie 290 fayre peace and holie Order, can bee found in anie part ath Vniuersall Globe who making meeke Deuotion keepe the doore his lips being full of holie Zeale at first,
would haue committed a fowle Rape uppon mee,
wh.Q. hah?
295 wh. King—a Rape? thats fowle indeed, the uerie sound to our Eare fowler then the offence it selfe
to some Kings of the Earth;
wh.p. S^{ir}, to proceede, gladlie I offerd life to præserue honor 300 wch would not bee accepted wthout both the cheife of his ill Ayme being at mine honor, till heauen was pleasede by some unlookte for accident to giue mee courage to redeeme my selfe
Wh. K. when wee finde desperate Sins in Ill mens companies,
305 wee place a charitable Sorrowe there but custome and there leprous Inclination quitts us of wonder, for our expectation is answerd in their liues, but to finde Sin
- I, and a Mrpeice of darknes, shelterd under a Robe of Sanctitie, is able 310 to drawe all wonder to that Monster onelie and leaue created Monsters wthout any;
the pride of him that tooke first fall for pride is to bee Angell shapte, and imitate
the forme from whence hee fell, but this offender 315 far baser then Sins Master, fixt by Vowe to holie Order, wch is Angells method takes pride to use that Shape to bee a Deuill
it greiues mee that my knowledge must bee taynted wth his infested Name; oh rather wth thy finger poynt 320 him out,
wh.p. the place wch hee should fill is uoyde, my L., his Guilt ha's ceazde him; the Bl. Bishops pawne, Sir, Bl.B. hah? mine? my pawne? the Glorie of his Order;
the prime and præident Zelot of the Earth, 325 Impudent pawne! for thy sake at this minute
modestie suffers, all thats Vertuous blushes and Truths selfe like the Sun uext wth a mist
lookes red wth Anger,
wh.B. bee not you drunck wth rage too,
Bl.B. sober Synceritye! nor you a Cup 330 Spic'st wth Hypocrisie;
wh.K^t. you name there Bishop but youre owne Christmas Bowle, youre mornings draught
next youre Episcopall heart all the 12 dayes
wch Smack you cannot leaue all the Yeare following 335

281 Queene of the same i.e., Queen of Integrity (not necessarily 'Queen of the same kingdom'). The White Queen is identified as a queen, in dialogue, within seconds of her first appearance on stage. For the very different treatment of the Black Queen, see 2.441.

all the house the House of Commons, and/or the kingdom of England, and/or the Stuart dynasty of England's king. Holles observed that "The whole play is a chess board, England y^e whyt hows' (11 August). When Prince Charles returned safely from Spain, a service of thanksgiving was observed at St Paul's Cathedral, based upon Psalm 114, 'When Israel came out of Egypt, and the house of Jacob from among the barbarous people'.

295-7 Rape...Earth As an example of recent outrages committed by Spanish soldiers in northern Protestant Europe, Scott claims that they were permitted 'to rauish yong girles not aboue eight or ten yeares of age' (2 Vox Populi, 48).

311 onelie only

322 ceazde seized

323 Order Middleton often uses the word ironically, playing on the double sense exploited (unironically) in Donne's sermon on obedience: 'I am glad that our Ministry is called Orders; that when we take this calling, we are said to take Orders... for giving example of obedience to Orders... Men of Orders... ought to be most ready of all others to obey' (Sermons IV: 198).

329 wh.B. White Bishop, representing the Church of England. No surviving contemporary report identifies him more specifically, but the likeliest candidate is George Abbot (1562-1633), Archbishop of Canterbury, who vigorously opposed Catholicism, Arminianism, and the Spanish marriage (and who had overlapped with Middleton at Oxford). Abbot strongly supported the Queen of Bohemia and tighter restrictions on Jesuits in England.

330-1 sober Synceritye...Hypocrisie (words frequently associated with 'Puritans', which with the rise of Arminianism came increasingly to include Calvinists like Abbot)

331 Hypocrisie Abbot was especially vulnerable to this charge after July 1621, when in a hunting accident with a crossbow he killed a game-keeper (Fincham, DNB). This incident exposed him to 'the rejoicing of the papist, the insulting of the puritan'; it was difficult for a 'man of blood' (i.e. with blood on his hands), taunted by some as a 'murderer', to criticize the sins of others—particularly 'rage'. The accusation temporarily silences the White Bishop, and he does not again directly confront the Black Bishop until the end of Act 4.

332 wh.K^t White Knight, representing Charles, Prince of Wales (1600-49), as numerous contemporary references to the play make clear. His trip to Madrid was characterized by contemporaries as gallant knight-errantry: 'the voyage of the Knights of Adventure' (Secretary of State Conway, 3 March 1623), with Charles and Buckingham as 'venturous knights, worthy to be put into a new romance' (King James, 27 February 1623); Charles 'there did... imitate one of Prince Arthurs Knights, in seeking adventures through forraigne Princes territories' (Sir Antony Weldon, The Court and Character of King James (1651), 133). Middleton had celebrated the investiture of Charles as a Knight of the Order of the Garter in Civitate Amor, and Tennis was written for him.

- Bl.K^l* a shrewde Retort! ha's made our Bishop smell of burning to,
would I stood farder off, wer't no Impeachment
to my honor or the Game, would the'yde playe faster;
White Knight! there is acknowledged from our house
340 a Reuerence to you, and a Respect to that lo'ude Duke stands next you, wth the fauour of the white king, and th'aforenamide Respected
I combate wth this cause, if wth all speede 345 waste not one Sillable (unfortunate pawne)
of what I speake, thou do'st not pleade distraction
a plea wch will but fayntlie take thee off neyther from this Leuiathan Scandall, that lyes rowling
uppon the Crystall Waters of Deution, or what maye quitt thee more, though ynough, 350 nothing, fall downe and foame, and by that Pang discover the uexing Spirit of Falshood strong wthin thee, make thy selfe readie for Perdition,
there's no Remoue in all the Game to scape it,
this pawne, or this, the Bishop or my selfe 355 will take thee in the end playe how thou can'st;
wh.p. Spite of Sins glorious ostentation and all lowde threats those Thundercraks of pride
ushring a Storme of malice, house of Impudence Craft and Æquiucation, my true cause 360 shall keepe the path it treads in Bl-Kt. I playe thus then;
now in the hearing of this high assemblie
bring forth the Time of this Attempts conception
wh.p. Conception? Lord how tenderlie you handle it, 365 Wh.B. it seemes black Knight you are afrayde to touch it, Bl.K^l well, its Eruption, will shee haue it so then,
or you white Bishop for her, the uncleaner Vile and more Impious, that you urge the strayne to the greater will her Shames heape showe ith end 370 and the wrongd meekemans glorie, the time, pawne?
- wh.p.* yesterdayes cursed Euening,— Bl.K^l oh the treasure of my Reuenge I can't spend all on
thee,
Ruine ynough to spare for all thy Kinred,
for honors sake calle in more Slanderers
I haue such plentifull confusion 375
I knowe not how to waste it, Ile bee nobler yet and putt her to her owne house, king of meekenes take the cause to thee, for our hands too heaue
our proofes will fall uppon her like a Tower and grinde her Bones to powder; 380
wh.p. what new Engine
ha's the Deuill raysde in him now?
Bl.K^l is it hee?
and that the Time, stand firme now to youre Scandall
praye do not shift youre Slander, 385
Wh.p. Shift youre Trecheries they'ue worne one Suite too long Bl.K^l that holie Man
so wrongfullie accuse by this lost pawne, ha's not bene seene these io dayes in these parts, 390
wh: K^l how?
Bl.K^l naye at this instant 30 leagues from hence, Wh.p. Fadomelesse Falshood will it scape unblasted!
wh.K^l can you make this appeare?
Bl.K^l light is not cleerer, 395
by his owne Letters, most Impartiall Monarch!
wh.K^{s.p.} how wrongfullie maye sacred Vertue suffer? S^{ir}, Bl.K^l Bishop! wee haue a Jewell of that false heart,
wh.K. step forth and reach those proofes;
wh.p. amazement couers mee, 400
Can I bee so forsaken of a cause
so strong in truth and æquitie? will uertue
send mee no Ayde in this hard time of Frenship?

336 Bl.K^l The perceived influence of Gondomar, a foreign ambassador, on the outcome of the 1621 Parliament was particularly resented. He dominates the remainder of the scene, and reverses its direction.
347 rowling rolling
349 ynough enough
350–1 fall...thee suggesting symptoms of demonic possession (which had been discredited as frauds by Bishop John Harsnet and other Anglican authorities, and repudiated by King James)
357 lowde loud
359 Æquiucation practice of making a 'mental reservation' which, when added to a false statement, makes it true: for instance, mentally adding the word 'not' to a sentence spoken aloud. Made famous by Father Henry Garnett's defence in 1606, when on trial for complicity in the Gunpowder Plot.

373 all thy Kinred The family of the White Queen's Pawn is not elsewhere identified, but the most sensitive political issue in the 1620s was the familial relationship between the King of England and the Queen of Bohemia.
393 Fadomelesse fathomless
396 most Impartiall Monarch King James prided himself on being the 'British Solomon'; Solomon was famous for his impartiality (1 Kings 3). In 1619, arbitrating a dispute between Lady Roos and Lady Frances Howard, James 'compared himself to Salomon that was to judge between two women... for which purpose he came furnished with all fit instructions wherby he might informe himself, but specially with equitie and unpartiall affection' (Chamberlain, 2:211). Buckingham was heard to 'say merrely, that the King had need be another Salomon to judge between the harlots'. As the White King condemns the White Queen's Pawn, James condemned Lady Roos 'for putting in a grosse slanderous bill into the court' (214).

397 wh.K^{s.p.} Reflecting on the events of the abortive Parliament of 1621, Thomas Scott observed 'how much more easie it was for a few who had the Kings eare, to hinder, then for many, though they had the Kings heart, to helpe' (Vox Regis, 48).
398 Jewell jewel, later revised to 'treasure', suggesting the Earl of Middlesex (Lord Treasurer, 1621–4)

- 405 Bl.K^t theres an Infallible Staff, and a Red Hat
wh.Ks.p. oh Sir endeerde, Bl.K^t theres a State figg for you now,
wh.K. behold all,
how they cohære in one, I alwayes held a charitie so good to holines profest, I euer beleiude rather 410 the accuser false then the profession uitious, Bl.K^t a charitie like all youre Vertues else
most gracious and glorious,
Wh. K. where settles th' offence let the faults punishment bee deriude from thence 415 wee leaue her to youre censure,
Bl.Kt. most iust maiestie;
wh.p. Calamitie of Vertue! my Queene leaue mee too;
I am cast off as th' Oliue casts her Flower
poore Frendlesse Innocence art thou left a Prey 420 to the Deuouer?
- wh.K^t no, thou art not lost
let em' putt on their blouidiest Resolutions
If the fayre policie I ayme at prospers, thy Councell Noble Duke?
wh.D. for that most cheerefullie,
425 wh.K^t a man for speede now?
Wh.B^s.p. let it bee my honor, Sir,
make mee that Flight that owes her my lifes Seruice,
exeunt
Bl.K^t was not this brought about well for our honors,
Bl.B. push, that Galician Skonce can worke out wonders, 430
Bl.K^t lets use her, as upon the like discourie a mayde was usde in Venice, euerie one bee readie with a pennance, begin Maiestie, Vessell of foolish Scandall! Take thy freight 435 had there beene in that Cabinet of Nicenes halfe the Virginities of th' earth lockt up and all swept at one cast by the Dexteritie of a Iesuittall Gamster, tåd not Valued the least part of that generall worth thou'st tayntd,

404–5 theres...endeerde For an expansion of this passage, see Later 2.2.211–14.

404 Staff...Hat Sir Toby Matthew had advocated restoration of Catholic bishoprics in England. An 'Oxford man', chaplain to Archbishop Abbot, at a Visitation Sermon complained 'The hope of a crosier-staffe or a Cardinalls hatt would make many a scholler in England beat his braine to reconcile the Church of Rome & England &c &c' (Joseph Mead, 25 April 1623). There may also be an implicit contrast with a 'fallible staff' the White King's Pawn already holds (perhaps the white staff of office of the Lord Treasurer).

407–15 behold...censure Eyewitness John Holles reported how Gondomar (the Black Knight) 'sett y^e Kings affayrs as a clock, backward & forward, made him belieue, & vn=belieue as stood best with [Gondomar's] busines, be y^e caws neuer so cleere' (11 August). 'They cannot tear Count Gondomar so much by revealing his fashion of dealing, without... consequently reflecting weakness on those that gave him credence, and that daily dealt with him' (Florentine ambassador, 13 August). 'The worst is in playng [Gondomar], they played somebody els...' (Chamberlain, 21 August). 'The Spaniards are touched from their tricks being discovered, but the king's reputation is affected much more deeply by representing the ease with which he was deceived' (Venetian ambassador, 30 August).

410 uitious vicious

411 youre In transcribing this passage Middleton first wrote 'his' here, suggesting he was thinking of someone outside the dramatic fiction (King James).

415 wee...censure In 1620, when Spanish troops invaded the Palatinate, Sir John Digby reported that 'many people were saying that the King must want his daughter and grandchildren taken prisoner to Spain, since he was doing nothing to help them' (Pursell, Gondomar, 9).

417 my Queene leaue The Queen of Bohemia first left Bohemia, then the Palatinate, settling in exile in the Hague, while her supporters in those countries suffered invasion and persecution.

419 frendlesse (a) without friends, supporters (b) without family, orphaned. Protestant critics of James I argued that he had abandoned his own child.

421–3 no...prospers Charles had long advocated more active English intervention to support his sister, the Queen of Bohemia.

422 blouidiest The Spanish were claimed to believe that 'except our victories be drowned in blood, we cannot tast them' (Scott, 2 Vox Populi, 48). The adjective is more appropriate to the European wars than to the onstage context.

425 wh.D. White Duke, identified by Thomas Salisbury (1 December 1624) as George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham, favourite of King James, political ally of Prince Charles in the 1621 Parliament, his companion on the trip to Madrid to forward the Spanish marriage, then on their return his partner in repudiating it.

428 Flight arrow shot from a bow. The Bishop in chess was sometimes called the Archer (for example, in Ludus Scacchiae, A2^v, A3^v), so it makes sense for his Pawn to be imagined as an arrow. For the particular relevance of these associations to the White Bishop, see 2.331.

430 Galician Skonce 'King James loues [Gondomar] so well, as he esteemes his speeches Oracles and Scriptures', and Gondomar's 'Castillian, or rather Galitian braine, hath now brought matters to this passe, that no cinsere advise, honest Letter... can point at the King of Spaine, but they are called in; and their Authors imprisoned (instead of rewarded) though never so honest and loyall Subjects' (Reynolds, Vox Coeli (1624), 60). In Middleton and Reynolds the reference to Gondomar's 'Galician Skonce' is associated with the imprisonment of an honest subject who is willing to 'point' at Catholic treachery.

438 Iesuittall Gamster 'the Master-Gamsters the Iesuites' (Gee, New Shreds, 23)
tåd it had

440 Bl K. first I enioyne thee to a 3 dayes fast fort
Bl.Q. youre too penurious^{s^r}, Ile make it 4,
Bl.B. I, to a i2 howers Kneeling at one time,
Bl Kt. and in a Roome fild all wth Aretines pictures
 more then the twice i2 labours of Luxurie 445 thou shalt not see so much as the chast Pummell of Lucrece Dagger peeping, naye, Ile punnish thee
 for a Discouerer, Ile torment thy modestie, Bl.D. after that 4 dayes Fast to th' Inquisition house
 Strenghtned wth bread and Water for worse pennance, 450 Bl.K^t. why well sayde Duke of our house Noblie aggrauated;
wh.p. Vertue! to showe her Influence more strong, Fitts mee wth patience mightier then my Wrong.

exeunt

Finit Actus Secundi

- 440 enioyne enjoin
fort for't, for it
- 441 Bl.Q. Black Queen. She is not called 'Queen' anywhere in the dialogue of the Early text, though her dress and position next to the Black King immediately indicate her royal status. (Contrast the White Queen at 2.281.) Woolley identified her as the Infanta Donna Maria (6 August), and Holles also referred to the Infanta in his account of the play (11 August). English writers paid almost no attention to the actual Queen of Spain, but were obsessed with the possibility that the Infanta Maria might become Queen of England. Her first action in the play is to punish another woman (an innocent English Protestant) by enforced kneeling.
- 443 Roome . . . pictures Art-collecting had become increasingly popular among influential Jacobean courtiers, particularly the Earl of Arundel and the Duke of Buckingham.
Aretines pictures I Modi, a set of pornographic images of sexual positions, painted by Giulio Romano, engraved by Marcantonio Raimondi, and published in 1524; later editions, with woodcuts replacing the engravings, included caption-sonnets by Pietro Aretino. Suppressed by Pope Clement VII, they continued to be surreptitiously printed, associated with Aretino rather than their unnamed artists.
- 444 i2 labours (alluding to the twelve labours, or tasks, of Hercules). Aretino calls attention to the extreme strenuousness of some of the depicted sexual positions; the figures are classical rather than modern, and thus encouraged mythological comparisons.
- 446 Lucrece For the representation and significance of this figure, see Ghost of Lucrece.
- 448 Bl.D. Black Duke. Not particularized in Early; at Later 5.3.213 he is specifically identified as Don Gaspar de Guzman, Conde-Duque de Olivares (1587–1645), Philip IV's favourite, and Buckingham's antagonist in Madrid.

Inquisition Catholic judicial system, particularly used for persecuting 'heretics'; 'the dangerous practices and most horrible executions of the Spanish Inquisition'—including 'the villainous and shameless tormenting of naked women beyond all humanity'—had been a recurrent focus of Protestant fear and propaganda for more than half a century (A Discovery and playne Declaration of sundry subtil practises of the Holy Inquisition of Spayne, trans. Thomas Skinner, 1568).

452 my Wrong the wrong done to me. The end of Act 1 hints at the political consequences of conversion of a single 'lost pawn' (White King's Pawn); at the end of Act 2, that traitor and the larger political struggle between leaders of the two houses leads directly to the imprisonment of a faithful pawn (perhaps echoing the end of the 1621 Parliament, when King James imprisoned five Members and sent five others out of England). For the conspicuous failure of justice here, see Scott's High-wayes of God and the King: 'how haps it then, that there are . . . crying sinnes . . . as if there were no King, no Lawe, no Priest, no Iudge in England?' (73). Scott cites, from Judges:21, 'the rape of certaine virgins by fraude and force, who came out, without feare of trechery, securely trusting to their owne innocence, and the peace of the State. The reason of these disorders is giuen as before, Then ther was no King in Israel . . . There was a Lawe, but there was none designed to execute it.' (73) Scott's sermon was addressed to judges: 'Iudges, who know you haue a King about you too . . . though all scarlet sinnes, & crying

Incipit tercijs

Enter Blk^t

lett mee a litle solace my designes wth the remembrance of some braue ones past to cherish the futuritie of Proiect whose motion must bee restlesse, till that great worke cald the possession of the world bee ours., was it not I procurde a prætious safeguard from the White Kingdome to secure our Coasts gaynst th' Infidell Pyrates, under prætext of more necessitous Expedition;
 who made the Iayles flie open (without miracle)
 and let the Locusts out, those dangerous Flies whose propertie is to burne Corne wth touching,
 the Heretique Granaries feele it to this minute,
 and now theyue got amongst the Countrie-Crops

(·)

Act 3

- crimes be kept from his eyes and eares artificially' (84).
- 3.0.3 Enter Middleton later expanded this scene to include the Fat Bishop: see Later 3.1.0.1–81, 283–305.
- 1 lett The solitary entrance direction doubles as a speech prefix.
- 2 remembrance . . . past The projects Gondomar describes here all occurred in the years 1618–21 (before conclusion of the second session of the 1621 Parliament).
- 6–9 procurde . . . Expedition Gondomar 'procured a gallant Fleete to secure the coast of Spaine, against the Turkish Pyrates' (Reynolds, Vox Coeli, 57). The fleet sailed in October 1620 and returned in September 1621. In place of 'prætious safeguard', Later 3.1.87 has 'gallant fleet', reverting to the wording of Reynolds.
- 6 prætious 'valuable' (to the Spanish, in protecting their coasts) but also 'expensive' (to the English, who paid for the fleet) and ultimately 'good-for-nothing' (because it did not stop piracy against English merchant ships)
safeguard defence, armed naval escort (compared to an expensive outer garment worn by women to protect their skirts when riding)
- 10–11 made . . . out 'the King has consented to deliver [74 imprisoned priests] to the . . . Conde de Gondomar, to go abroad' (Calendar of State Papers, 5 June 1618)
- 10 Iayles jails, gaols
- 11 Locusts (a common metaphor for Jesuits: see Gee, Snare, sig. E2)
- 13 Granaries . . . minute This may allude to the bad English harvest of 1622, as though Gondomar's success in releasing imprisoned Jesuits before 1621 were responsible for the subsequent dearth. But the outbreak of war in 1620 also produced famines in Germany and France.

- 15 they stick so fast to the conuerted Eares
the lowest Tempest that Authoritie rayses will hardlie shake em off, they haue their Dens
in Ladies Couches, there's safe Groues and Fens, naye were they followed and found out byth' Scent 20 Palme-Oyle will make a Purseuant relent;
whose policie wa'st to putt a silenest Muzzle,
on all the Barking Tongmen of the Time,
made pictures, that were dumbe ynough before poore Suffrers in that politick Restraynt
my light Spleene skips and shakes my Ribs to thinke 25 on't
whilst our drifts walkte uncensurde but in thought a whistle or a whisper would bee questiond, in the most fortunate Angle of the world, Venice
the Court ha's held the Cittie by the Hornes 30 whilst I haue milkt her, I haue got good soapes too from Countrie Ladies for their Liberties, from some for their most uaynelie hopde preferments
high offices ith Ayre, I should not liue
but for this Mell Aerium, this Mirth-Manna:
Enter Bl. pawne:
35 my pawne! how now? the Newes!
- Bl.p.* expect none uerie pleasing that comes S^r of my bringing, Ime for sad things, Bl.K^t. thy Conscience is so tender-hooft alate euerie nayle pricks it,
Bl.p. this maye prick yours too 40
if there bee anye quick Flesh in a Yard on't, Bl.K^t. mine? mischeife must finde a deepe Nayle, and a Driuer
beyond the strenght of anye Machiauell
the politick Kingdomes fatten, to reach mine;
prethee Compunction! needle prickt a Litle 45
unbinde this sore wound;
Bl.p. Sir, youre plotts discoverd;
Bl.K. wch of the twentie thousand and nine hundred threescore and fiue, can't tell?
Bl.p. blesse us, so manie? 50
how do's poore Countrimen haue but one plott
to keepe a Cowe on, yet in Lawe for that;
you cannot Knowe em' all sure by their Names, S^r, Bl.K^t. yes, were the Number trebled, thou hast seene
a Globe stands on the Table in my Closet? 55

- 20 Purseuant pursuivant. 'And yet when these Purseuants had greatest authoritie, a small bribe in the Countrey would blinde their eyes' (Scott, Vox Populi (1620), C4^v). Chamberlain recorded 'the censuring of a purseuant in the Star-chamber for making a trafficke of taking priests and letting them go for monie' (8 July 1620).
- 21-4 policie . . . Restraynt 'I saw . . . Scots loyall Vox Populi, D. Whiting, D. Everard, & Claytons zealous Sermons, and others, suppress'd and silenced, as also Wards faithfull picture, which yet was so innocent, as it onely breathed forth his fidelity to England in silent Rethorique, and dumbe eloquence' (Reynolds, Vox Coeli, A4^v).
- 21-2 Muzzle . . . Barking Gondomar explains that the English clergy 'are muzled for barking, when ours may both barke and bite too' (Scott, Vox Populi, C3^v).
- 23 pictures Samuel Ward, 'a special preacher of Ipswich', was imprisoned in 1621 for the engraving 1588 Deo Trin-vni Britanniae . . . 1605; it combined images of the Spanish Armada and the Gunpowder Plot.
- 28 Venice This extrametrical word, present only in the earliest manuscript, distracts attention from the obvious interpretation of 'most fortunate Angle' as England: see Induction.1.
- 29 Court . . . Cittie James I had repeatedly given monopolies to courtiers, at the expense of various commercial interests of the City of London. Collection of customs was farmed out to various syndicates throughout the reign ('a great discouragement to [merchants] in their trades', according to a 1612 report to the Privy Council). The Cokayne monopoly (1614-17) was disastrous for the Merchant Adventurers; the gold and silver thread monopoly was adamantly opposed by the Goldsmiths' Company, Lord Mayor, and aldermen, and led to Sir Giles Mompesson's impeachment by the 1621 Parliament; there were also successful attacks on monopolies in the 1624 Parliament.
- 30 milkt 'these other tyme-servers . . . milke the estate and keep it poore' (Scott, Vox Populi); 'him that is the cause of all this, and that's the Courtly Thiefe . . . the milking of the state by priuate Monopolies . . . Looke vpon the highest, if they make any other account of the poore then of their tame cattell' (Scott, High-ways of God, 79-81).
- her (London, frequently personified as female)
- soapes sops, pieces of bread dipped in liquid before being eaten
- 32 uaynelie hopde vainly hoped
- 34 Mell Aerium (alluding to the beginning of Virgil's Fourth Georgic: 'Protinus aerii mellis caelestia dona . . .'). Gondomar thus equates the gifts/bribes he receives with the honey produced by hard-working bees, which Virgil describes as 'heaven's gift'; that image leads in turn to the image of Biblical 'manna' (Exodus 16:15, etc.) which 'came down from heaven' (Job 6:58)
- 35 the Newes John Taylor complained that he 'cannot pass the streets but I am continually stayed by one or other, to know what news' (Taylor's Travels to Prague, 1620). The subtitle of Scott's Vox Populi is 'Newes from Spayne'.
- 36 Bl.p. Black Pawn, just identified as 'my pawne', i.e. Black Knight's Pawn. With no other pawn on stage, the abbreviation is unambiguous.
- 38-9 tender-hooft . . . nayle Compare Horace Odes 3.6.24: de tenero ungui, 'from the tender nail' [= from early youth].
- 43 Machiauell The subtitle of Scott's 2 Vox Populi was 'Gondomar appearing in the likenes of Matchiauell'. The works of Niccolò Machiavelli (1469-1627) were banned in much of Europe; The Prince was not published in English until 1640. Privately, his works circulated widely, and his name became a label for atheism, amoral cunning, and political ambition. He appears as the Prologue to Marlowe's Jew of Malta, and influenced characters like Shakespeare's Richard III, who promises 'to set the murderous Machiavel to school' (Duke of York 3.2.193).
- 48 Bl.K. Black Knight. (With no King on stage, the abbreviation is unambiguous.)
- 55 Globe a rare and expensive object at the time, and a reminder of Spain's global ambitions

- Bl.p.* a thing Sir full of Cuntryes, and hard words,
Bl.K. true, wth lines drawn some tropicall, some Oblique,
Bl.p. I scarce can reade I was brought up in Blindnes;
Bl.K. iust such a thing (if e're my Skull bee opend)
 60 will my braynes looke like,
Bl.p. like a Globe of Cuntryes,
Bl.Kt. I, and some Mr-Polititian that ha's sharpe State Eyes will goe neere to pick out the plotts, and euerie Clymate where they fastned 65 twill puzzle em too;
Bl.p. Ime of youre minde for that S^r,
Bl.K^t theyle finde em to fall thicke upon some Coütryes theyde neede use Spectacles, but I turne to you now,
 what plott is that discourd?
 70 Bl.p. youre last Brat, S^r begot twixt the Black Bishop and youre selfe youre Antedated letters 'bout the Iesuite, Bl.K^t discourd? how?
Bl.p. the White Knights policie 75 ha's out stript yours it seemes, ioynd wth th' Assistant Councell of his Duke
- the Bishops white pawne undertooke the Iourney who as they saye dischargd it like a Flight
 I made him for the Businesse fitt and light
Bl.Kt. tis but a bawdie pawne out a'th wayt a little 80
 Enter Bl.Bishop and the Wh. house and Bl. house.
 enow of them in all parts
Bl.B. you haue heard all?
Bl.Kt. the Wonders past wth mee, but some shall downe
 fort,
wh.K. Set free the Vertuous pawne from all her wrongs let her bee brought wth honor to the face 85
 of her malitious Aduersaries, Bl.K^t good!
wh.K. Noble chast Knight, a Title of that Candor
 the greatest prince on earth without impeachment
 maye haue the dignitie of his worth comprizd in, 90
 this fayre deliuering Act uertue will register in that white Booke of the defence of Virgins where the cleere Fames of all præseruing Knights are to æternall memorie consecrated, and wee embrace as partner of that honor 95
 this worthie peice the Councell of the Act
 whome wee shall euer place in our respect,

56 Cuntryes countries

58 scarce can reade 'many priests could scarce read Latine' (Goad, Friers Chronicle, F3^v). Literacy rates were higher in northern than southern Europe. The Reformation emphasized the need for direct individual access to the Word of God; Protestants (especially Calvinists) owned many more books than Catholics.

59 if... opend (suggesting images of human dissection popularized by sixteenth-century anatomy textbooks)

67 Coütryes countries

72 Antedated letters (a device elsewhere attributed to the Jesuits Robert Parsons and Henry Garnett, and to the Earl of Middlesex)

76 ioynd joined

78 Flight For the archery metaphor, see 2.428. But 'flight' also can refer to a flock: eunuchs were compared to angels by several early Church Fathers, including Basil of Ancyra, Jerome, and Augustine (Taylor, Castration, 44, 257).

79 I... fitt 'By gelding him, I increased his ability to thwart our plans.' Castration, routinely performed on domesticated animals and widely performed on human males since antiquity, produced a being custom-made for certain purposes: royal service, singing, or dedication to God. In Matthew 19:12, Jesus referred to men who 'made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake', and it was widely known that Origen and some other early Christians were castrated; the first convert to Christianity was a eunuch (Acts 8:26-40), who was praised as exemplary in Charles Sonibancke's The Eunuche's Conuersion. A Sermon preached at Pauls Crosse (1617) and in a sermon by John Donne (Sermons 5:35-36, undated, probably before 1623).

light This claim in part depends on an implicit pun: 'I made him... light' by gelding him, i.e. by removing his testicles, normally called 'stones'; stones are heavy, and in particular 'stone' is a measure of weight (fourteen pounds). The same pun-complex ('light' because gelded and deprived of 'stones') is explicit in Edward Sharpham's Cupid's Whirligig, Philip Massinger's The Renegado, and Richard Brome's The Court Beggar.

80.1 the Wh. house The second entry of the entire house. (See 2.275.1-2.) But the fictional action of this scene cannot be so easily related to a Parliamentary session, because the Black House is already present, and is immediately addressed; many Black characters speak while the White House is on stage. Black and White Houses now interact across the whole board, as it were, like the two dynasties/religions/nations manœuvring in mid-game on the larger chessboard of Europe.

81 enow enough

86 malitious malicious

88-105 Noble... fidelitie The King's praise of White Knight and Duke echoes popular enthusiasm for Prince Charles and Buckingham after their return from Spain; they persuaded King James to call another Parliament, beginning in February 1624, which reversed many of the royal policies of 1621-3, accepted earlier accusations against Spain, and supported a crackdown on Jesuits in England. In other respects it resembles the popular welcome of the Earls of Oxford and Essex in November 1620, who 'arrived safe at London, being newly returned from their dangerous and unsuccessful expedition into the Palatinate. Their return was the more joyed at, because their families were great and noble, and they had yet no issue, nor were married' (D'Ewes, Autobiography, I:156).

88 chast chaste. Prince Charles was, by all accounts, still a virgin; it was particularly important to Protestants that he returned from Spain unmarried.

88-90 Title... in (probably alluding to Prince Charles's status as a Knight of the Order of the Garter—a ceremonial title celebrated in Middleton's Civitas Amor—and justifying representation of the heir to the throne as a mere knight)

89 impeachment disparagement (but also suggesting Parliamentary impeachment of government officials, a practice spectacularly revived in 1621 and 1624)

92 that white Booke (in contrast to Middleton's Black Book, or perhaps more recently what Tom Tell-Troath called 'the black booke of the Court')

96 peice (later revised to 'Duke', for clarity)

wh.D. most blest of Kings! throand in all royall Graces
 euerie good Deed sends back its owne reward 100 into the bosome of the Enterprizer, but you t'expresse youre selfe as well to bee
 King of Munificence as Integritie adds glorie to the Gift, Enter wh.Q^c pawne
wh.K. thy desert claymes it 105 Zeale, and fidelitie, appeare thou bewtie
 of truth and Innocence, best ornament
 of patience, thou that makes thy suffrings glorious,
Bl.K^t. Ile take no knowledge on't, what makes shee here?
 how dares yon'd pawne unpennanc'st, with a cheek 110 fresh as her Falshood yet, where Castigation ha's left no pale print of her uisiting Anguish
 appeare in this assemblie, lett mee alone Sin must bee bold, thats all the Grace tis borne to, wh.K^t. whats this!
 115 wh.K. Ime wonderstruck;
wh.p. assist mee Goodnes
 I shall to prison agen,
Bl.Kt. at least Iue mazde em,
 scatterd there Admirations of her Innocence, 120 as the firde Ship putt in, seuerd the Fleete in 88, Ile on wth't, Impudence is mischeifes patrimonie, is this Iustice?
 is iniurde Reuerence no sharplier righted,
 I euer held that Maiestie Impartiall 125 that like most æquall heauen lookes on the manners not on the shapes they shroud in;
wh.K. this black Knight will neuer take an answere, tis a Victorie to make him understand hee do's amisse 130 when hee knowes in his owne cleere understanding that hee do's nothing else, showe him the testimonie confirmd by goodmen, how that fowle Attempter got but this morning to the place, from whence hee dated his forgd Lines for io dayes past:
 135 Bl.K^t. why maye not that Corruption sleepe in this by some Connuience, as you haue wakte in ours
 by too rash Confidence, wh.D. Ile undertake that Knight shall teach the deuill how to lye

wh.K^t. if Sin were halfe as wise as impudent, She'ede ner'e seeke farder for an Aduocate:
Enter Bl.Q^c p.
Bl.p. now to act Trechrie Wth an Angells tong since alls come out, Ile bring him in agen;
 where is this iniurde Chastitie, this Goodnes whose worth no Transitorie peice can Value 145 this Rock of constant and inuincible Vertue that made Sins Tempest wearie of his Furie;
Bl.Q. what is my pawne distracted Bl.K^t. I thinke rather there is some notable Mr-prize of Roguerie
 this Drum strikes up for,
Bl.p. lett mee fall wth reuerence
 before this blessed Altar,
Bl.Q. this is madnes,
Bl.Kt. well, marke the end I stand for Roguerie still
 I will not change my Side
 155 Bl.p. I shall bee taxt I knowe
 I care not what the Blackhouse thinkes on mee,
Bl.Q. what saye you now?
Bl.Kt. I will not bee unlayde yet;
 160 Bl.p. how anie censure flies, I honor Sanctitie that is my obiect I entend no other;
 I sawe this glorious and most Valiant Vertue fight the most noblest Combate wth the Deuill
Bl.Kt. if both the Bishops had bene there for seconds 165 tad bene a compleate Duell;
wh.K. then thou heardst
 the Violence entended,
Bl.p. tis a truth I ioye to iustifie, I was an agent
 on Vertues part; and raysde that confusde noyse, 170 that startled his Attempt, and gaued her libertie, wh.p. oh tis a righteous Storie shee ha's told, S^r,
 my life and Fame stand mutuallie engagde,
 both to the truth and Goodnes of this pawne
wh.K. do's it appeare to you yet: cleere as the Sun?
 175 Bl.K^t. lasse I beleiuide it long before twas donne Bl.K. Degenerate!
Bl.Q. Base
Bl.B. perfidious
Bl.D. traytrous pawne;
 180

118 mazde 'mazed, amazed
 120-1 as... 88 as the English fireships, on 28 July 1588, scattered the Spanish
 Armada in the English Channel off Calais. The singular 'Ship' is probably Middleton's error; it is corrected in Later.
 127-31 this... else (perhaps alluding specifically to Gondomar's remarkable evasive calm when King James angrily accused him of deception regarding Spanish plans to invade the Palatinate)

 136 Connuience connivance
 141 ner'e ne'er, never 145 Value equal in value (changed at Later
 3.1.211 to 'equal')
 150 Mr-prize master-prize, masterpiece
 (Middleton coinage)

151-68 Drum... Combate... Violence (military language, suggesting the warfare in Germany as much as the attempted rape of the White Queen's Pawn)
 161 how however, no matter how 166 tad it had 176 lasse 'las, alas

- Bl.p.* what are you all beside youre selues?
Bl.Kt. but I,
 remember that pawne?
 185 Bl.p. maye a feareful Barrennes blast both my hopes and pleasures, if I brought not her Ruine in my pittie, a new Trap
 for her more sure Confusion,
Bl.K^t haue I wun now?
 did not I saye twas Craft and Machination 190 I smelt Conspiracie all the waye it went although the Messe were couerd, Ime so usde too'te, Bl.K. that Queene would I fayne finger,
Bl.K^t youre too hott S^{ir}
 if shee were tooke, the Game would bee ours quicklie 195 my Aymes at that White Knight, entrap him first that peice will followe too, Bl.B. I would that Bishop were in my Diocesse, Ide soone change his Whitenes,
- Bl.K^t* S^{ir}, I could whip you up a pawne immediatlie
 I knowe where my Game stands, 200
Bl.K. doo'te suddenlye
 aduantage least must not bee lost in this playe Bl.Kt. pawne, thou art ours, wh.K^t hees taken by default
 by willfull negligence, guard the sacred persons 205
 looke well to the white Bishop, for that pawne gauē Guard to th' Queene and him in the 3^d place;
Bl.K^t see what sure peice you lock youre confidence in
 I made this pawne here by Corruption ours as soone as honor by Creation yours, 210
 this whitenes upon him, is but the Leprousie
 of pure dissimulation, View him now
his upper garment taken of, he appeeres Black underneath
 hir heart, and his Intents are of our Colour, wh.K^t most dangerous Hypocrite

186 a new Trap In the second session of the 1621 Parliament, Sir John Digby, after his diplomatic mission to Vienna as 'an Agent' of King James, publicly confirmed the duplicity of the Emperor Ferdinand (21 November 1621). Although this convinced many Englishmen in and out of Parliament that only war could restore the Palatinate and Bohemia to Queen Elizabeth, it had a different effect on King James: the failure of diplomacy in Vienna persuaded him that the Spanish Match was the only possible solution, and in February 1622 Digby was dispatched to Spain to reconvene the marriage negotiations (in abeyance since 1618). Likewise, the Black Queen's Pawn's confirmation of the attempted rape leads directly to her central role in the marriage plot: see 3.232, 248–52.

192 *Bl.K...*finger Elizabeth Stuart (b. 1596), called the 'queen of hearts', was still young and attractive; her décolletage provoked gossip in Prague; she attracted the chivalric romantic devotion of Christian of Halberstadt, whose battle standards carried the motto 'All for God and for her'. She was therefore a plausible object of the lust of a young Spanish King with a reputation for sexual exploits. Politically, Spanish troops were instrumental in evicting Queen Elizabeth of Bohemia from the Palatinate; she was chased across Europe from Prague to the Hague.

193 youre too hott 'You must not be too hastie to play' ('Certaine generall rules', G.B., Ludus Scacchia). In chess, an early ill-prepared frontal assault on the Queen is seldom successful; Black Knight instead proposes a more indirect strategy.

194 if...quicklie Protestant supporters of the Queen of Bohemia argued that, if the Habsburgs were allowed to conquer Bohemia, the Palatinate, and all of Germany, England would be fatally isolated, politically, economically, and militarily.

195 my...Knight This is the first indication that Gondomar (and the Spanish more generally) have targeted Prince Charles as the key to the game; it follows directly from discussion of the White Queen, implying that the entrapment of Charles 'first' will make it easier to take the Queen.

196 that peice ambiguous: the context suggests 'the White Queen', but the phrase was subsequently changed to 'The Duke' (Later 3.1.249).

206–7 pawne...place 'the Kings Pawn giueth guard to the third House before the Queene, and to the third house before the kings Byshop' (Saul, Chesse-Play, C2^v).

207 3^d third

212.1 of off

213 hir All other texts change 'hir' to 'his' (Later 3.1.263), but 'her' could refer to the White Queen's Pawn (whom he has repeatedly slandered) or the White Queen, or the Black Queen's Pawn, who has apparently crossed over to the White side: in taking the White King's Pawn, the Black Knight wants to confound the White House, by making them doubt the loyalty of their own members.

213–16 our Colour...their Complexion The language here suggests that the 'blackness' of the Spanish characters refers not just to their costumes but to their skin colour. A Spanish speaker in Scott's 2 Vox Populi admits that 'many of vs are discended of the Moorish race'

(13), and another refers to the 'insolent and african pride' of the Spanish (23). The history of invasion from North Africa, and the importing of slaves from sub-Saharan Africa to the Iberian peninsula since the 1440s, had made Spaniards and Portuguese particularly vulnerable to such claims. A manuscript invective against Gondomar alleged 'a Spanish Moore's thy mother' (Rosenbach 1083/16, p. 297). Pawns from the Black House are compared to 'the Deuill' (3.289), 'a Black-bird' (291), 'a Monckey' (312), 'Russet woodcocks' (318), and associated with 'Slauerie' (298); the Black House is twice associated with Egyptians (Induction.8, 3.264); the Black Duke is said to be 'sunburnt' and 'Oliue-Colour'd' (Later 5.3.213–14). For the racial contrast with 'White' see Induction.44 and 2.0.2.

214 Hypocrite This image of hypocrisy (white on the outside, black on the inside) derives from the paradox of the 'white devil', which originated in Luther's commentary on Galatians (the most popular of his works in England), and was repeated and elaborated in Pierre Vivet's The Worlde possessed with Devils (1583) and in a Paul's Cross sermon by Thomas Adams, The White Deuil, or The Hypocrite Vncased (1613). The earliest example in English drama is Revenger 3.5.146, 'white devil'; see also the 'hypocrite' called 'white-fac't Diuell' (Tennis 719, 724) and the 'white-fac't hypocrite, Lady Sanctity' (Tennis 391). For the merging of this religious image of white hypocrisy with tropes of racial whiteness, see Taylor, Castration, 243–49, 310.

215 wh.D. one made agaynst us, wh.Q. his Truth of their Complexion!
wh.K. ha's my Goodnes Clemencie, loue, and fauour gracious rousd thee and grafted thee into a Branch of honor and do'st thou fall from the Top-bough by th' 220 rottennes
 of thy alone Corruption, like a Fruite
 thats ouer ripend by the beames of Fauour,
 lett thy owne weight reward thee, I haue forgot thee,
 Integritie of life is so deere to mee
 225 where I finde falshood or a crieng Trespasse bee it in anye whome our Grace shines most on Ide teare en from my heart,
Wh.B. spoke like heauens Substitute;
wh.K. you haue him, wee can spare him, & his shame 230 will make the rest looke better to their Game;
exeunt
Bl.K. the more cunning wee must use then;
Bl.K^t. wee shall match you
 playe how you can, perhaps and mate you too;
wh.p. I rest uppon you, Knight, for my Aduancement now, 235 Bl.Kt. oh for the Staff S^r, the strong Crosier-Staff and the red Hat fit for the Guiltie Mazard into the emptie Bagg, knowe thy first waye pawnes that are lost, are euer out of playe:
wh.p. howes this?

Bl.K^t. no Replications, you knowe mee, 240
 no doubt ere long youle haue more companie
 the Bagg is big ynough twill hold us all exeunt wh.Qs.p. I sue to thee, prethee bee one of us, let my loue win thee, thou'st donne truth this daye,
 and yesterdaye my honor noble Seruice 245
 the best pawne of our house could not transcend it Bl.p. my pittie flamde wth Zeale, espetiallie when I forsawe youre Marriage, then it mounted wh.Qs.p. how? marriage?
Bl.p. that contaminating Act 250 would haue spoyld all youre Fortunes, a Rape! blesse us
wh.Qs.p. thou talkst of marriage,
Bl.p. yes, yes, you doo marrie,
 I sawe the man;
wh.Qs.p. the Man? 255
Bl.p. an Absolute handsome Gentleman, a Compleate one, you'le saye so when you see him, heyre to 3 Red hatts
 besides his generall hopes in the black house
wh.Q^s.p. why sure thouft much mistaken for this Man;
 Iue promist single life to all my Affections 260
Bl.p. promise you what you will or I or all on's
 there's a Fate rules and ouerrules us all mee thinkes, wh.Qs.p. why how came you to see, or knowe this Mysterie!

219 grafted... honor united him with an honourable family (a standard reward for successful courtiers)
thee Three lines added here (Later 3.1.267-69) seem to refer to the Earl of Middlesex, who had left school at fifteen to become apprenticed to a grocer, and thus had been lifted by the King from 'labour' and the 'hazards' of life as a merchant.
 224-7 Integritie... heart Recalling the disgrace of several high officials to whom King James had shown extraordinary favour: the Earl of Somerset (royal favourite, 1615, for murder), the Earl of Suffolk (Lord Treasurer, 1619, for corruption), Sir Francis Bacon (Lord Chancellor, 1621, for bribery), the Earl of Middlesex (Lord Treasurer, 1624, for corruption), and the Earl of Bristol (long-time ambassador to Spain, 1624, for treason).
 225 crieng crying
 228 heauens Substitute James I believed that kings were God's lieutenants (Speech to the Lords and Commons, 1610); 'Kings are properly judges, and judgement properly belongs to them from God, for kings sit in the Throne of God' (speech to Star Chamber, 1616). His view was endorsed by many clerical authorities.

 231 more cunning This suggests that the next Black move will be even more clever and dangerous than any in the first half of the play. See next note.
 232-3 match... mate the first use in the play of either verb. Both clearly suggest the 'Spanish Match', which would 'mate'—marry—Prince Charles to a Spanish princess. See 3.176, 248-53.
 235 oh... Crosier-Staff 'Oh blessed... his sacred Crosier-staff' (Gee, New Shreds, 33)
 242 the Bagg... all 'And after death like Chesmen hauing stood | In play for Bishops, some for Knights, and Pawnes, | We all together shall be tumbled vp, into one bagge' (John Marston, Jack Drum's Entertainment, 1600?).
 248-53 Marriage... marriage... marriage... marrie The reiteration emphasizes the structural significance of this moment: the second half of the play will dramatize the Spanish Match. (See 3.186, 231-2.) The Venetian ambassador described the play as 'several representations under different names of many of the circumstances about the marriage with the Infanta' (30 August 1624). In the action initiated here, a naive English Protestant virgin is deceived, and led to the brink of marriage with a dishonest foreign Catholic, as a result of a cynical plot by supporters of the Spanish and Catholic cause; the play's colour contrast suggests not only inter-faith marriage but miscegenation.

 257-8 heyre... house Like the Spanish Infanta, the proposed spouse promises exceptional wealth and power (which is delusory: no one could inherit three cardinalships). The three hats might suggest the crowns of the kingdoms of Spain and Portugal and the Holy Roman Empire (all held by Habsburgs).
 261 on's of us

- 265 Bl.p. a magicall Glasse I bought of an Ægyptian whose Stone retaynes that Speculatiue Vertue presented the Man to mee, youre name brings him
as often as I use it, and mee thinkes
I neuer haue ynough, person and postures are all so pleasing,
- 270 wh.Qs.p. this is wondrous strange
the faculties of soule are still the same,
I can feele no one Motion tend that waye, Bl.p. wee do not alwayes feele our fayth wee liue by,
nor euer see our Growth, yet both worke upward,
- 275 wh.Qs.p. twas well resolut, but maye I see him too,
Bl.p. surelie you maye without all doubt or feare
Observing the right use as I was taught it,
not looking back, nor questioning the Specter,
wh.Qs.p. thats no hard Obseruation, trust it wth mee, 280 ist possible? I long to see this man,
Bl.p. praye followe mee then and Ile ease you instantlie;
exeunt
- Enter Bl. Iesting pawne*
Bl. Iestp. I would so fayne take one of these white pawnes
now,
Ide make him doo all under Drudgerie,
Feede him wth Asses Milke crumbd wth Goates cheese
285 and all the Whitmeates could bee deuisse for him, Ide make him my White Iennet when I praun'cst
after the black Knights Litter;
Enter a Wh: pawne,
wh.p. and youde looke then iust like the Deuill striding o're a Night-Mare
290 made of a Millers daughter.
Bl.p. pox on you were you so neere, Ime taken like a Black-bird
in the great Snowe, this white pawne grinning ouer
mee,
- wh.p.* and now because I will not fowle my Cloaths
euer hereafter, for white quicklie soyles, you knowe, Bl.p. I prethee gett thee gon then I shall smut thee 295 wh.p. no Ile putt that to the Venture now I haue snapt thee thou shalt doo all the Drudgerie, and durtie Busines that Slauerie was er'e putt to, Bl.p. I shall coozen you you maye chance come and finde youre worke 300 undonne then for Ime too proud to labour, Ile starue first I tell you that before hand wh.p. I will fitt you then wth a black whip that shall not bee behinde hand
Bl.p. puh, I haue beene usde to whipping I haue 305 whipt my selfe 3 mile out of Townte in a morning and I can fast a fortnight and make all youre meate stinck and lye a youre hands?
wh.p. to præuent that youre foode shall bee Blackberries and uppon Gawdie dayes a pickled Spyder 310 cut out like an Anchouis, Ime not to learne
a Monckeyes Ordnarie, come sir, will you friske?
Enter 2 Black pawne.
2 Bl.p. soft, soft you, you haue no such bergayne ont
if you looke well about you,
wh.p. by this hand— 315
I am snapt too, a Black pawne in the Breech of mee, wee 3 looke like a Birdspit, a white Chick between 2 Russet woodcocks;—
i.Bl.p. Ime so glad of this wh.p. but you shall haue small cause, for Ile firke you 320
2 Bl.p. then Ile firke you agen,
wh. p. and Ile firke him agen,
Bl.p. masse, here will bee ould firking; I shall haue
the worst ont I can firke no bodie, wee drawe together now for all the world, like 3 Flyes 325
wth one Strawe in their Buttocks. exeunt

264 Ægyptian Egyptian, or gypsy. The Egyptian Hermes Trismegistus was believed to be the author of a number of early mystical, neoplatonic, and alchemical texts. 'Common opinion' derived gypsies (also called 'counterfeit moors') 'from Egypt' (Sir Thomas Browne, Pseudodoxia Epidemica); for their reputation for dishonesty, see Dissemblers.

281–327 prayer . . . this The jesting pawn scene was later cut, and the text slightly modified to ease the transition: see Later 3.1.345–46.

287 black Knights Litter See 5.0.2.

291 Ime taken A midgame pawn-exchange: after Black takes a White Pawn (at 3.203–42), White here takes a Black Pawn (possibly the Black King's Pawn).

294 white quicklie soyles 'Black was commonly worn, and soiled garments could be dyed . . . white, however, was not much used either in the theatre or in practical life . . . all-white costumes do not occur in Revels inventories. When the King's Men needed white costumes for Middleton's play, they probably had to have most or all of them made.' Costumes for the White King, Queen, Knight, Duke, and Bishop 'seem likely to have translated clothes worn by the real persons into white satin, velvet, and cloth of tissue, fabrics of decorum for those of high rank' (MacIntyre, 317).

305–6 whipping . . . morning 'on the papists Goode Friday there were great dooings at the Spanish ambassadors, and many Ladies and others invited to see the ceremonie or tragedie of their whipping, among whom an English baron or vicount was saide to be of the number' (Chamberlain, 30 March 1622). 'This last Good-Fryday, this present yeere 1624, they made some of you in the morning, before day, goe in Procession to Tiburne, in penitentiall manner; the form of which . . . is for a man to walke naked from the girdle vpward, and scourge himselfe with a whip . . . you made one whip himselfe so long, till he swounded' (Gee, Foot, N4^v–O1).

308 a on

Enter Bl.Qs.p. and wh.Qs.p.

Bl.p. this is the Roome hee did appeare to mee in and looke you this the Magicall glasse that showde
him,

330 wh.p. I finde no Motion yet, what should I thinke on't, a Suddayne feare inuades mee, a faynt trembling under this omen, as is oft felt the panting of a Turtle under a Stroaking hand

Bl.p. that boades good luck still, signe you shall change state speedilie, for that trembling

335 is alwayes the first Symptome of a Bride for anie Vayner feares that maye accompanie his Apparition, by my truth to Frenship
I quit you of the least, neuer was obiect more gracefullie presented, the uerie Ayre 340 conspires to doo him honor, and creates sweete Vocall Sounds as if a Bridegroomer enterd
wch argues the blest Harmonie of youre Loues:

wh.p. and will the using of my name produce him,?

345 Bl.p. naye of yours onelie else the Wonder halted, to cleere you of that doubt Ile putt the diffrence in practise the first thing I doo, and make his Inuocation in the names of others wh.p. twill satisfye mee much that

Bl.p. it shall bee donne

(∴)

350 Thou whose gentle Forme and face fild latelie this Ægiptick glasse by th'Imperious-powerfull name and the uniuersall Fame
of the mightie black-house Queene
I coniuere thee to bee seene: what? you see nothing 355 yet?

wh.p. not anie part;
praye try another,

Bl.p. you shall haue youre will

360 I double my command and power and at the Instant of this hower inuoque thee in the white Queenes Name with staye for Time, and Shape the same: what see you yet?

wh.p. there's nothing shoues at all

Bl.p. my Truth reflects the clearer, then now fixe, and blesse youre fayre Eye wth youre owne for euer, 365
Thou well composde, by Fates hand drawen to enioye the white Queenes pawne, of whome thou shalt by Vertue met

manye gracefull Issues gett,
by the bewtie of her Fame 370
by the whitenes of her Name,
by her fayre and fruitfull Loue
by her Truth that mates the Doue

by the Meeknes of her Minde 375
by the softnes of her kinde
by the Lustrë of her Grace Musique,
by all these thou art summond to this place,

enters Bl. B^s. pawne in rich attire like an Apparition Harke, how the Ayre enchanted wth youre prayses
and his approach those words to sweete Notes rayses:

wh.p. oh lett him staye awhile, alittle longer, 380

Bl.p. thats a good hearing;

wh.p. if hee bee mine why should hee part so soone?

Bl.p. why this is but the shadowe of yours; how do you?

wh.p. oh I did ill to giue consent to see it;
what certayntie is in our bloud or State 385
what wee still write is blotted out by Fate,
Our Wills are like a cause that is Lawe-tost,
what one Court orders is by another crost

Bl.p. I finde no fitt place for this passion here, tis meereleie an Intruder, hees a Gentleman 390
most wishfullie composde honor growes on him and wealth pilde up for him, ha's youth ynough too and yet in the Sobrietie of his Countenance grauas a Tetrarch, wch is gracious ith eye of modest pleasure, where's the emptines? 395
what can you more desire?

wh.p. I do not Knowe what answere yet to make? it do's require a Meeting twixt my feare and my desire,

328 Magicall glasse 'The great Magitian Merlin allegedly devised a 'looking glasse' that showed everything that "to the looker appertaynd" (Spenser, Faerie Queene, III.ii.18-19). In William Rowley's
A Shoemaker a Gentleman (1608?), a woman persuades a man to look in a 'magic' glass to see the woman 'who must be [his] wife'; she stands so that he sees her own reflection.

351 fild filled

354 black-house Queene The first invocation, in relation to the proposed marriage, is of a member of the Spanish royal family: the terms of praise fit the Infanta Maria (whose 'Fame' in England was universal, and whose 'name' powerful) better than the actual Queen of Spain (who was relatively unknown in England, and politically unimportant).

359 double repeat (but perhaps also because Elizabeth Stuart had two titles: Princess Palatine and Queen of Bohemia)

361 white Queenes Name The play's first verbal pairing/doubling of the two Queens, who never address or refer to one another: they are here linked in relation to the marriage plot (as their political destinies were linked by negotiations for the Spanish Match).

377.1 in rich attire If 'thou meet a good smug Fellow in a gold-laced suit, a cloke lined thorow with veluet, one that hath... Rings on his fingers, a Watch in his pocket... a very broad-laced Band, a Stiletto by his side, ... then take heed of a lesuite' (Gee, Foot, sig. H2).

392 pilde piled

400	Bl.p. shees caught, and wch is strange, by her most wronger Finit Actus Tercij	by the black Bishops clemencie, you haue wrought out a singular peice of faouour wth youre monie, thats all youre refuge now;	35
Act 4	Incipit Quarti. Enter Bl.K^{ts} pawne meeting the Black B^s pawne.	Bl.K^{ts}.p. the sting shootes deeper Enter wh.Qs p. and Bl.Qs.p.	exit
	Bl.K^{ts}.p. Tis hee, my Confessor! hee might ha' past mee 7 yeare together, had I not by chance aduandc mine Eye uppon that litterate hattband the Iesuiticall Symbole to bee Known by 5 worne by the braue Colledgians by Consent; this a strange habit for a holie Father a præsidēt of pouertie espetiallie, but wee the Sonnes and daughters of Obedience dare not once thinke awrie, but must confesse ourselues	Bl.B^s.p. yonders my Game, wch like a politick Chesse M ^r : I must not seeme to see; wh.Q^s.p. oh my heart! Bl.Q^s.p. that tis! wh.Qs.p. the uerie selfe same, that the magicall Mirror præsented latelie to mee,	40
10	as humblie to the Father of that Fether Long Spur and poniard, as to the Albe and Altar, and happie weere so highlye gracle t'attayne to't, holie and Reuerend!	Bl.Qs.p. and how like a most regardlesse Stranger hee walkes by meereleie ignorant of his Fate, you are not minded the principallst part of him, what strange Mysteries inscrutable Loue workes by!	45
	Bl.B^s.p. how hast found mee out?	wh.Q^s.p. the time you see Is not yet come!	50
15	Bl.K^{ts}.p. oh S ^{ir} , putt on the Sparklingst Trim of glorie perfection will shine formost, and I knewe you by the Vniuersall Marke you weare about you, the Marke aboute youre forehead;	Bl.Qs.p. but tis in our power now to bring time neerer, Knowledge is a Mastrie, and make it obserue us, and not wee it:
	Bl.B^s.p. are you growen so ambitious in youre obseruance? well, youre busines?	wh.Qs.p. I would force nothing from its proper Vertue, let time haue his full course, Ide rather die the modest death of undiscouerd Loue then haue heauens least and lowest Seruant suffer or in his motion receiue Check for mee;	55
20	I haue my Game to followe,	how is my Soules Growth alterd, that single Life the fittest garment that peace euer made fort is growen too streight, too stubborne on the suddayne;	60
	Bl.K^{ts}.p. I haue a worme followes mee so that I can followe no Game, the most faynt-hearted pawne if hee could see his playe	Bl.Qs.p. hee comes this waye agen wh.Qs.p. oh theres a Traytor Leapt from my heart into my cheeke alreadie that will betraye all to his powerfull eye if it but glance uppon him,	65
25	might snap mee up at pleasure, I desire S ^{ir} , to bee absolute, my Conscience being at ease I could then wth more courage plie my Game	Bl.Qs.p. by my Veritie looke, hees past by agen, drownd in neglect without the prosperous hin't of so much happines	70
	Bl.B^s.p. twas a base Fact Bl.K^{ts}.p. twas to a Schismatick pawne	to looke uppon his fortune, how close Fate seales up the Eye of humayne Vnderstanding till like the Suns Flower Time and Loue uncloses it, twere pittie hee should dwell in ignorance Longer.
30	Bl.B^s.p. whats that to the Nobilitie of Reuenge suffizes, I haue neyther will nor power to giue you absolution for that Violence make youre Petition to the Pennance-Chamber, if the Taxe-Register releiue you in't

400 wronger (echoing the reference to her 'wrongs' at the end of Act 2)

4.3 literate hattband 'the Iesuite hath a superlatiue cognizance whereby they know one another... a gold Hatband studded with letters or Characters' (Gee, Foot, sig. H2).

6 this this', this is strange habit See note to 3.377.1.

7 pouertie 'This man hath vowed pouerty' (Gee, Foot, sig. H2, sarcastically summing up his description of the richly dressed Jesuit).

10 Fether See 1.228.

11 Albe and Altar (associated with the ceremonialism of English Arminians, as well as Catholics)

39 Chesse M^r In 1622-3 the Calabrian

chess-master Gioacchino Greco visited England, defeating London's best players in exhibition games. For more than a century chess had been dominated by players from the Iberian peninsula (Damiano, López, Ceron) or Spanish-ruled parts of Italy (Boi, Carrera, Greco, Leonardo di Boni, Salvio), and some were priests (Carrera, López).

75 wh.Qs.p. what will you doo?
Bl.Qs.p. yes, dye a bashfull Death, doo,
 and let the remedie passe by unusde still youre changd ynough alreadie, and youd'e looke intoote,
 Absolute S^{ir}, with youre most noble pardon
 80 for this my rude Intrusion, I am bold
 to bring the Knowledge of a Secret neerer
 by manie dayes (S^{ir}) then it would arriue in its owne proper reuelation wth you, praye turne, and fixe, do you Knowe yon'd Noble goodnes
 85 Bl.Bs.p. tis the first minute my Eye blest mee wth her,
 and cleerelie shows how much my Knowledge wanted
 not Knowing her till now;
Bl.Qs.p. shees to bee likte then,
 praye uiew aduisedlie, there is strong reason 90 that Ime so bold to urge it, you must ghesse the worke concernes you neerer then you thinke for Bl.Bs.p. her glorie, and the Wonder of this Secret
 putts a Reciprocall amazement on mee,
Bl.Qs.p. and tis not without worth, you 2 must bee
 95 better acquaynted;
Bl.Bs.p. is there cause? Affinitie?
 or anie Curteous helpe Creation ioyes in
 to bring that forward,
Bl.Qs.p. yes, yes, I can showe you 100 the neerest waye to that perfection of a most uertuous one, that Loye erè found, praye marke her once agen, then followe mee
 and I will showe you her must bee youre Wife, Sr, Bl.Bs.p. the Mysterie extends, or else Creation 105 ha's sett that admirable peice before us to chuse our chast delights by Bl.Qs.p. please you followe, S^{ir},
Bl.Bs.p. what Art haue you to putt mee on an Obiect and cannot gett mee off, tis payne to part fromt;
exit
 110 wh.Qs.p. if there prooue no Check in that Magicall glasse
 now
 but my proportion come as fayre and full into his Eye, as his into mine latelie, then Ime confirmde hee is mine owne for euer,

Enter agayn.
Bl.Bs.p. the uery selfe same that the Mirror blest mee wth from head to foote, the bewtie and the Habit; 115
 Kept you this place still? did you not remoue, Ladie?
wh.Qs.p. not a foote farder, S^{ir}
Bl.Bs.p. ist possible,
 I would haue sworne Id'e seene the substance yonder,
 twas to that Lustrè, to that life præsentad 120
wh.Qs.p. ee'n so was yours to mee, S^{ir}, Bl.Bs.p. sawe you mine?
wh.Qs.p. perfectlie cleere, no sooner my Name usde
 but yours appearde
Bl.Bs.p. iust so did yours at mine now; 125
Bl.Qs.p. why stand you idle, will you lett time coosen you protracting Time, of those delitious benefitts that Fate hath markt to you, you modest payre
 of blushing Gamsters and you S^{ir} the bashfulst,
 I can not flatter a fowle fault in anie, 130
 can you bee more then man and wife assignde,
 and by a power the most irreuoicable?
 Others that bee aduenturers in delight
 maye meete wth Crosses, Shame, or Seperation their Fortunes hid, and the Euent lockt from e'm, 135 you Knowe the minde of Fate you must bee coupled:
Bl.Bs.p. shee speakes but truth in this, I see no reason then that wee should misse the relish of this night
 but that wee are both shamefast wh.Qs.p. how? this night, S^{ir}, 140 did not I Knowe you must bee mine, and therein
 youre priuiledge runs strong, for that loose Motion
 you neuer should bee; is it not my fortune to match wth a pure minde, then am I miserable, the Doues and all chast louing winged Creatures 145
 haue their payres fitt, their desires iustlie mated;
 is weoman more Vnfortunate? a Virgin
 the Maye of weoman! Fate that ha's ordayne Sir wee should bee man and wife, hâs not giuen warrant for anie Act of Knowledge till wee are so, 150
Bl.Bs.p. tender-eyde Modestie, how it giues at this Ime as far off for all this strange Imposture
 as at first Enteruiew, where lyes our Game now?
 you Knowe I cannot marrie by my Order;

78 and an, if 88 likte liked 90 ghesse guess (with a strong pause at the end of the line: Middleton often regarded the line break itself as a form of punctuation)

 151 giues yields, gives way, collapses (subsequently changed to 'grieves' at Later 4.1.131)

 154 I... Order members of the Society of Jesus were sworn to celibacy (unlike Anglican ministers)

- 155 Bl.Qs.p. I knowe you cannot, S^{ir}, yet you maye Venture
 uppon a Contract,
Bl.B^s.p. hah?
Bl.Qs.p. surelie you maye S^{ir},
 without all question so Far, without danger 160 or anie Stayne to youre Vowe, and that maye take her, naye doo'te wth speede sheele thinke you meane the better too;
Bl.B^s.p. Bee not so lauish of that blessed Spring you'ue wasted that uppon a cold occasion now would wash a sinfull soule white, by our Loue-Ioyes 165 that motion shall ne'fe light uppon my Tong more till weere contracted then I hope youre mine
wh.Qs.p. in all iust dutie euer, Bl.Qs.p. then, do you question it?
 push, then youre man and wife all but Church Ceremony,
 praye letts see that donne first, shee shall doo reason 170 then,
 Enter Bl. K^t with his pawne
 (:·:)
 Pawne I haue spoke to the black Bishop for thee,
 I'le gett thee Absolution from his owne mouth;
- Reach mee my Golden Stoole, my Stoole of coosnage
 7 thousand pound in weoman reach mee that I loue a life to sitt uppon a Banck 175 of heretique Gold, oh soft and gentlie, sirrah, theres a fowle Flawe ith Bottome of my Drum; P.
 I ner'e shall make sound Souldier, but sound Trecher
 wth anie hee in Europe, how now, Qualme!
 thou hast the pukingst Soule that e're I met wth 180 it cannot beare one Suckling Villanie, mine can digest a Monster without cruditie
 a Sin as Weightie as an Elephant and neuer wamble fort;
Paw. I, you haue beene usde toote, S^{ir}, 185 that's a great helpe, the swallowe of my Conscience
 ha's but a narrowe passage you must thinke yet it lyes ith penitent pipe and will not downe
 if I had got 7 thousand pound by offices and guld downe that, the Boare would haue bin 190 bigger;
Bl.K^t. naye, if thou prooust facetious I shall hugg thee can a soft Reare, poore-pocht Iniquitie
 so ride uppon thy Conscience Ime ashambe of thee, hadst thou betrayde the Whitehouse to the black 195 beggard a Kingdome by dissimulation
 Vnioynted the fayre frame of peace and Traffique, poysond Alleagance, sett fayth back, and wrought

- 156 Contract promise of marriage, legally binding. Although moralists disapproved, between the contract and the church ceremony perhaps as many as half of all couples had sexual relations: 20–30% of brides gave birth less than nine months after the wedding, and many court records describe women abandoned by their promised bridegrooms, after sexual consummation but before marriage. Henry Mason, in The New Arte of Lying, Couered By Iesuites vnder the Vaile of Equiuocation, Discouered and Disproued (1624), listing 'in what cases it is allowed' (41) by the Jesuits, includes cases where a man is forced 'to promise marriage to a woman' (50) and where a man has 'contracted himselfe to a woman... by words de praesenti' (51).
- 161 doo'te...sheele do it...she'll
- 166 weere...youre we're...you're
- 169 man and wife In July 1623, James I and his council approved the terms of the Spanish treaty, thereby formalizing the contract of marriage: at that point, one letter-writer concluded, 'we account [Charles] as good as married,' and after this espousal 'he may lie if he please with his mistress' (James Beaulieu, 18 and 25 July 1623). In Scott's 2 Vox Populi Gondomar says that Prince Charles thought 'nothing had beene wanting to the absolute consummation of the marriage, but the Rites of the Church...'
- 170.1 exeunt For the expanded ending of this scene, see Later 4.1.148–9.
- 171 Pawne (The vocative makes it clear that the speaker is the only other character on stage, the Black Knight who has just entered. Compare 3.1.)
- 173 Golden Stoole later revised to 'chair of ease', a chair specially designed for the comfort of Gondomar's tender posterior: 'his chayre, wherein he sat vpon two downe pillowes' (Scott, 2 Vox Populi, 7).
- coosnage cozenage
- 175 a life o' life
- Banck bench
- 177 P. pawn
- 185 I ay, yes
- 190 guld gulled
- Boare bore
- bin been
- 192 Reare rare, barely cooked at all
- poore-pocht poor-poached
- 195 beggard a Kingdome Between 1619 and 1624 England suffered one of the worst economic depressions in its history.
- 196 Vnioynted unjoined
- peace England had been at peace with Spain since 1604. But Spanish troops had helped drive James I's daughter and son-in-law out of the Palatine and Bohemia; the Spanish truce with the Dutch Republic expired in 1621.
- Traffique trade, particularly overseas trade, badly disrupted by the Cokayne monopoly (1614–17), then by the war in central Europe (1619–24); James I had also intervened, under pressure from Gondomar, to stop English ventures into the Caribbean and Brazil.
- 197 poysond Alleagance In 1613—the year of Gondomar's arrival in England—the loyal (and vehemently anti-Catholic) Sir Thomas Overbury was poisoned, allegedly by Frances Howard (of the powerful Catholic family headed by the Earl of Northampton); in 1616 she was convicted of the murder, and disgraced, along with her husband the Earl of Somerset, in one of the most notorious court scandals of the seventeenth century. Poisoning was described as 'an Italian comfit for the court of Rome' (Sir Francis Bacon, prosecuting Somerset), and Overbury's murder was described as part of a larger treasonous plot: 'the wickedness of poisoning, had it not been prevented in time, although it began in Overbury, would have not ceased with his destruction; but that his Majesty's person, the Queen, and the whole state should have felt thereof' (Sir Lawrence Hyde, prosecuting an alleged accomplice).
- 197–8 wrought...Malice 'I left behinde mee such an instrument composed artificially of a secular understanding and a religious profession, as hee is every way adapted to serue himself into the closet of the heart, and to worke upon feminine leuity, who in that country haue masculine spirits to command and pursue their plots unto death' (Scott, Vox Populi, C1). One of Frances Howard's convicted accomplices was female (and allegedly Catholic).

weomens soft soules een up to masculine Malice 200 to pursue truth to death if the cause rowzd em, that Stares and Parrotts are first taught to curse thee,
Paw. I marrie S^{ir} heres swapping Sins indeed
Bl.Kt. all these and io times trebled, ha's this Brayne beene parent to, they are my offsprings all,
Paw. a goodlie broode!
 205 Bl.Kt. yet I can iest as titiele, laugh and tell stirring Stories to Court Maddames daughters of my Seducement wth alacritie as high and heartie, as youths time of Innocence that neuer knewe a Sin to shape a sorrowe by 210 I feele no tempest not a Leafe winde stirring to shake a fault my Conscience is becalmd rather Paw. Ime sure there is a Whirlwinde huffs in mine S^{ir}, Bl.Kt. Sirrah, I ha' sold the Groome ath Stoole 6 times, and receiude monye of 6 seuerall Ladies 215 ambitious to take place of Barronets Wiues, to 3 ould Mummie-Matrons I haue promist
 the Mothership ath Maydes, Iue taught of frends too

to conuey Whitehouse Gold to our black Kingdome in cold bakte Pasties and so coozen Searchers, for Venting hallowed Oyle, Beads, Meddalls, Pardons, 220 pictures, Veronicaes heads in priuate presses, thats donne by one ith habit of a Pedler
 Letters conuayd in roules, Tobacco-balls
 when a Restraynt comes by my politick Councell some of our Iesuites turne gentlemen Vshers, 225
 some Faulkners, some Park Keepers, & some huntsmen, one tooke the Shape of an ould Ladies Cooke once and dispacht 2 Chares in a Sundaye morning
 the Altar and the Dresser,[?] praye what use putt I my Summer Recreation to?
 230 but more t'informe my knowledge in the State and strenght of the White Kingdome! no Fortificatiō, Hauen, Creeke, Landing place 'bout the White Coast
 but I got draught and platforme, leard the depth of all theire Channells, knowledge of all Sands 235
 Shelues, rocks, and riuers for inuasion propefst
 a Catalogue of all the Nauie Royall
 the burden of each ship, the Brassie Murderers,
 the number of the men, to what Cape bound;

201 swapping 'snatcheth vp a whole Elephant at a stoope, and swappes him vp at a bit' (John Healey, tr., Discovery of a New World, 1609). For the elephant see l. 183.
 213-17 Maydes 'I borrowed of the good old Lady W. of the parish in St. Martins in the Feilds 300 pounds, or thereabouts, promising to make her repayment...
 so soone as Donna Maria, the Infanta should arriue in England, and for the vse hereof, I promised to make her mother of her maydes... I sold moreouer, the place of Groomesse, of her highnesse Stoole, to six seuerall English Ladyes, who were eager of it, only cause be [= because] they might take place before their fellowes' (Scott, 2 Vox Populi, B3).
 213 sold 'oh root of all euil to Church and Commonwealth, when authorities and offices of Iustice shall bee bought and solde' (Samuel Ward, Iethro's Justice of Peace, (1618), 11).
Groome ath Stoole an officer in the royal Bed Chamber
 217 Mothership ath Maydes post of supervisor of the royal maids, in the Queen's household. Since Queen Anne had died in 1619, this post would only be filled with the arrival of a new queen, the Spanish Infanta, as an eyewitness understood: 'how many Ladies brybed him to be groome of y^e stool to y^e Infanta, how many to be mother of y^e mayds' (John Holles, 11 August 1624).
 217-23 taught... Tobacco-balls 'If you would at any time conuey over any

Silver or Gold, the Searcher commonly may be couzoned, if you send it over in Pasties baked, provided that you haue
 some of flesh only to eate or giue away, as a cullor for the rest. For the venting of hallowed Oyle, Beades, *Agnus Dei*s, Meddalls, Pardons, Crucifixes, &c. You may doe it, by some one poore yet trustie Catholique or two, to goe vp and downe
 the Countrie in the habit and nature of Pedlers; this also is a good way to hold intelligence with friends in many places.
 I haue knowne some vnder the cullour of selling Tobacco, have carried Letters
 handsomly, prively in the balls or roules'
 (Scott, 2 Vox Populi, 56-57).
 217 of our
 218 Whitehouse Gold In 1621 and 1624 members of Parliament blamed the economic depression on the export of English gold. 'Bullion is the very body and blood of kings' (Gerard Malynes, The Centre of the Circle of Commerce, 1623).
 221 Veronicaes... presses 'a small rouling presse for little Pictures of Saints, Veronica's heads' (Scott, 2 Vox Populi, 57)
 224 Restraynt Jesuits and priests were officially banished from England in 1604, 1606, 1610, and again on 6 May 1624;
 from Ireland in 1614 and 1623.
 225-9 some... Dresser 'for the better avoyding suspition, and concealing themselues, some [Catholiques] will turne Schoole-maisters in priuate mens houses... some Gentleman Vshers unto Collapsed Ladies are... Some Falconers... one I was acquainted withall, who was the Keeper of a Parke, and a good Huntsman... I know another Priest who... the better to colour his absence from the Church, learned the arte of Cookery, and is growne so expert therein... that hee is able to dresse a Dinner with such arte... and his manner is, when hee hath layed his meate to the fire, to goe and say Masse, which finished by that time, or soone after his meate is boyled or roasted, which... he searueth vp to his old Mistressse' (Scott, 2 Vox Populi, 29-30).

 228 Chares chores
 229-39 praye... bound Scott gives Gondomar a speech explaining how 'in sommer, time vnder the colour of taking the ayre, I would take view of the countrey) I had perfect knowledge of the state of the whole Land; for there was no Fortification, Hauen, Creeke, or Landing-place about the Coast of England, but I got a platforme and draught thereof, I learned the depth of all their Channels, I was acquainted with all Sands, Shelues, Rockes, Riuers that might impeach or make for inuasion, I had perpetually in a Role the names of all the Ships of King Iames his Nauy Royall, I knewe to a haire of what burthen euery ship was,
 what Ordinance she carried, what number of Saylor, who were the Captaines, for what places they were bound' (2 Vox Populi, 15).

- 240 then, for the discouerie of the Inlands,
 neuer a Sheire but the state better known to mee then to her brest Inhabitants
 what power of men and horse, Gentries reuennues, who well affected to our Side, who ill
 245 who neyther well nor ill, all the Neutrallitie, thirtie eight thousand Soules haue bene seduced, P.
 since the Iayles Vomited wth the pill I gaue em̄.
Paw. sure you putt Oyle of toade into that phisick, S^r,
Bl.K^t. Ime now about a Mr:peice of playe 250 t'entrap the white Knight and wth false allurements entice him to the black house, more will followe
 whil'st our Black Bishop settis uppon the Queene then will our Game lye sweetely;
Enter Bl. Bishop,
Paw. hees come now S^r,
 255 Bl.B. heres Taxa pœnitentaria, Knight;
 the Booke of generall pardons of all prices
 I haue bene searching for his Sin this halfe hower,
 and cannot light uppont,
Bl.K^t. thats strange, let mee see't, 260 Paw. pawne wretched that I am, ha's my rage donne that there is no præsidet of pardon for,
- Bl.K^t.*—for wilfull murder, 13 pound 4 shillings and sixpence—thats reasonable cheape, for Killing, Killing, Killing, Killing, heres nothing but Killing Bishop of this side, 265
Bl.B. turne the Sheete ouer, you shall finde Adulterie
 and other triuiall Sins,
Bl.K^t. Adultrie? oh Ime at it now, for Adulterie
 2 Shillings, and for fornication fuepence, masse, these are 2 good penniworths, I cannot 270
 see how a man can mend him selfe,—for Lieng
 wth mother, Sister, and daughter—I marrie S^r, 33 pound, 3 shilling, 3 pence,—
 the Sins gradation right payde all in threes, Bl.B. y'auē read the Storie of that Monster S^r,
 that got his daughter, Sister and his wife 275
 of his owne Mother
Bl.K^t. Simonie, 9 pound
 Sodomie sixpence, you should putt that Summe
 euer on the Backside of youre Booke; 280
Bl.B. theres fewe oñs uerie forward S^r
Bl.K^t. whats here S^r; 2 ould præsidets of Encouragement,
Bl.B. I, those are Antient Notes
Bl.K^t. Giuen as a gratuitie for Killing of an hæreticall prince wth a poysond Knife 5 thousand ducketts 285

240–5 then... Neutrallitie Scott's Gondomar continues: 'I was no less diligent for the discouery of the Inland, then for the Shores and Sea-coasts; for there was neuer a Sheire in England, but I better knew the estate, power and quality thereof then the Inhabitants, euen the best of them themselues did. I could in particular relate the nature of the soyle, what power of men and horse they were able to raise, who were the chiefe and of most ability and credit in the Countrey, who the most antient Gentlemen, what they were worth in their reuenues and estates, how they stood affected in Religion, who were Puritanes, and who Catholiques, and among Catholiques who stood for us, and who (for such there were) were indifferent or against vs' (2 Vox Populi, 16–17).
 246–7 thirtie... em̄ 'the number of soules which they haue gained into the bosome of the Church since the remission of the penall Lawes against them, and their freedom by my meanes obtained, amounteth to the number of eight and thirtie thousand and odde' (2 Vox Populi, 18).
 246 Soules... seduced Many Protestants complained of 'the seducements of priests and papists' (Acts of the Privy Council, 19 February 1615); Catholic persuasions were pervasively characterized as seduction.

 250 allurements (suggesting the sexual allure of the White Knight's proposed bride, a subject never explicitly mentioned in the play but known to all spectators as the reason for his trip to Madrid)
 252 Black later revised to 'Fat', giving the Fat Bishop the role originally assigned to the Black Bishop in this act: see Later 4.2.80.
 255 Taxa pœnitentaria Taxa Sacra Pœnitentaria Apostolica, a catalogue of ecclesiastical pardons for sins, published in Rome in 1510; the first English translation, by William Crashaw, was not published until 1625, and its sums bear no relation to Middleton's.
 261 præsidet precedent 264 of on 271 Lieng lying
 272 I ay
 275 Storie (told in Marguerite of Navarre's Heptameron (1559, trans. 1597) and Matteo Bandello's 1554 Novelle). This reference makes explicit the association of Catholicism with incest, implicit in the sexual pursuit of 'tractable daughters'

by their Jesuit 'Father', and a common theme in Protestant polemics, which often cited Pope Alexander VI's incestuous relationship with his own daughter.
 278 Simonie 'They serue not Iesus Christ, but their belly. And this is done not in one place, nor in one Citie, but throughout England' (Henry Burton, A Censure of Simonie (1624), 'Epistle Dedicatorie'). Similar complaints were made by Thomas Scott and many other zealous Protestants. During his impeachment in 1626, Buckingham was accused of selling bishoprics.
 279 Sodomie a sexual practice associated with Catholics—'the catamites of Babel's scarlet whore' ('On the Powder Treason')—but also with the Buckingham faction and family: Sir Anthony Ashley, 'who never liked any but boys', when forced to marry is said to have sodomized Lady Philippa Sheldon's 'blackarse hole' ('All the News'; both poems in Yale manuscript Osborne b.197).
 284–5 Giuen... Knife Henri IV was assassinated with a dagger by François Ravillac in 1610, allegedly prompted by Jesuits.

- Bl.B. true S^r, that was payde
- Bl.K^t promised also to Doctor Lopez for poysoning the Mayden Queene of the white Kingdome 20 thousand, wch sayde Summe was afterwards giuen as a meritorious Almes to the Nunnerie at Lisbon, hauing at this present io thousand pound more at Vse in the Townehouse of Antwerpe!
- Paw—whats all this to my Conscience, worthie Holines, I sue for pardon, I haue brought monye wth mee,
- 295 Bl.B. you must depart, you see there is no præsidet of anie price or pardon for youre fact,
- Paw. most miserable, are fowler sins permitted? Killing, naye willfull murder;
- 300 Bl.B. true, theres instance, were you to Kill him I would pardon you theres præsidet for that and price sett downe,
- Paw. I haue pickt out Vnderstanding now for euer out of that Cabalistique bloudie Riddle Ile make awaye all my estate and Kill him exit
Enter Bl. King
- 305 why Bishop,! Knight! wheres youre Remoues? youre Traps? stand you now idle in the heate of Game?
- Bl.K^t my life for yours, black Soueraigne, the Games ours I haue wrought under hand for the white Knight, and his braue Duke and finde em coming both
- Bl.B. then for their sanctimonious Queenes surprizall, S^r, 310 in that State puzzle and distracted hurrie trust my Arch subteltie wth,
- Bl K. oh Eagle pride
neuer was Game more hopefull of our Side: exeunt Musique.
Enter Bl. Queenes pawne wth Lights, Conducting the White to a Chamber, and then the Bl. Bishops pawne to another and exit.
Enter white Knight, and wh. Duke. } Dumb showe
- Wh.K^t True Noble Duke, fayre Vertues most endeerd one 315
lett us præuent their ranck Insinuation wth truth of cause and courage, meete their Plotts
wth confident goodnes that shall strike em grouling
- wh.D. S^r all the Iins, Traps and alluring snares
the Deuill ha's beene at worke since 88 on 320 are layde for the Great Hope of this Game onlie,
- wh.K^t S^r the more Noble will truths Triumph bee,
when they haue woond about our constant Courages
the glistringst Serpent that e're falshood fashiond and glorieng most in his resplendent poysons 325
iust heauen can finde a bolt to bruize his head;
Enter Bl. Knight
- wh.D. looke, will you see destruction lye a sunning in yonder smile sitts bloud and Trecherie basking in that perfidious Modell of Face-Falshood
Hell is drawn grinning, 330

287–92 promised . . . Antwerpe 'they haue ten thousand pound at vse in the Townehouse of Antwerp . . . Likewise when they remained in France, they had the custodie of no small summe of money, which was sent to them to keepe for Doctor Lopez the Portugese, as his reward for poysoning our late Queene Elizabeth of famous memorie, which after that Traitor (hauing missed of his intent) was executed, was remitted vnto them as an almes' (Robinson, English numery, 9–10).

287 Lopez Roderigo Lopez, member of the Royal College of Physicians, chief physician to Elizabeth I, executed in 1594 for alleged complicity in a plot to assassinate her by poison

288 Mayden Queene Elizabeth I, the focus of considerable nostalgia among critics of James I: 'some there are that find such fault with your Majesties gouernemēt as they wish Q. Elizabeth were aliue againe' (Tom Tell-Troath, 2).

292 Townehouse of Antwerpe seminary in Catholic Netherlands, where Jesuit missionaries to England were trained

301 downe Middleton later added 'but none for gelding', again clarifying the nature of the crime (as at 1.2.25)

304 him For a line subsequently added see Later 4.2.134.

305 why The entrance direction doubles as a speech prefix: compare 3.1.

310 sanctimonious holy. (More appropriate to the conspicuously Protestant Elizabeth of Bohemia than to Queen Anne, who was better known for masques than piety.)
surprizall seizure (most often used in a military sense, of a sudden attack on a fort, city, or army—like the Catholic assaults on strongholds in the Palatinate, and their efforts to capture Elizabeth and her husband) 311 distracted 'divided' (as King James was divided from his heir and favourite, during their residence in Madrid) and 'crazy' (implying criticism of the trip to Madrid)
hurrie haste, rush (another possible criticism of the trip)
314.2.n Dumb showe mimed action without dialogue. The Black Queen's Pawn deceives the Black Bishop's Pawn, putting herself in his bed, instead of the White Queen's Pawn. This kind of 'bed-trick' occurred 26 times in extant plays from 1598 to 1624, but also allegedly occurred outside the theatre. In Madrid in 1623, Buckingham 'made court to Conde Olivares wife, a very handsome Lady. But it was so plotted betwixt the Lady, her Husband, and [the Earl of] Bristol that, instead of that beauty, [Buckingham] had a notorious Stewsbird [prostitute] sent him' (Weldon, King James, 135).

314.5 Enter white Knight His first appearance since his exit at 3.230.1, and the Black Knight's threat of 'match' and 'mate' (3.232–3). The play separates the White Knight's trip to the Black House (dramatized here, and in the first and last scenes of Act 5) from the deceptive marriage plot (initiated at 3.248–53).

315 Wh.K^t Here as elsewhere in the play, White Knight initiates action, which White Duke merely supports. The idea of visiting Madrid originated with Prince Charles, as King James told Parliament: 'being of fit age and ripeness for marriage . . . [Prince Charles] urged me to know the certainty in a matter of so great weight' (Journals of the House of Lords III, 209). James also mentioned this in a letter to Charles—it was upon your earnest entreaty' (June 1623)—and it is reiterated in the court diaries of Godfrey Goodman and John Hackett.

319 lins jins, gins (en)gines, traps

320 88 1588, the annus mirabilis of the defeat of the Spanish Armada, 'wherein the black night of our threatened destruction was beaten backe by the puissance of our Prince praying' (William Leigh, Queene Elizabeth, paraleld (1612), 96)

323 woond wound (past participle of wind)

325 glorieng glorying

wh.Kt. what a payne it is for Truth to fayne a litle,

Bl.Kt. oh fayre Knight!

335 the rising Glorie of that house of Candor, haue I so manie Protestations lost,
lost, lost, quite lost, am I not worth youre confidence?
I that haue uowde the Faculties of soule life, spirit, and Brayne to youre sweete Game of youth 340 your noble fruitfull Game, can you mistrust anie fowle playe in mee, that haue beene euer
the most submissee Obseruer of youre Vertues and no waye taynted wth Ambition
saue onelie to bee thought youre first Admirer, 345 how often haue I changd for youre delight
the reall præsentation of my place into a Mimick Iester, and become (for youre sake and th'expulsion of sad thoughts of a graue State-Sire a light Sonne of pastime made 3 score yeares a Tomboye, a meere wanton 350 Ile tell you what I told a Sauoye Dame once, new wed, high, plumpe and lusting for an Issue,
wthyn the yeare I promist her a childe
if shee could stride ouer S^t Rombauts breeches
a Rellique kept at Mechlin, the next morning 355 one of my followers ould hose was conuayde into the chamber where shee tryde the Feate, by that and a Court Frend after grewe great

332 fayne feign, dissemble

338-9 sweete . . . youth . . . fruitfull (suggesting the game of courtship and marriage, designed to produce royal offspring)

346 Iester jester, gesture

350 Sauoye Dame woman married in the Hospital of St John the Baptist in the former Savoy Palace on the north bank of the Thames. The chapel was often used for irregular marriages (and hence raises, again, the subject of marriage).

351-4 new wed . . . Mechlin Among 'miracles done in England' which 'are meere impostures', Thomas Scott includes claims 'that a young married wife shall haue a child the same yeare if she can stride ouer at once Saint Rombauts breeches at Mechlin' (2 Vox Populi, 38-39).

357 Court Frend lover at court. The Jacobean court was often accused of sexual licentiousness. In a sermon preached to King James and the court in 1621, Francis Mason identified 'carnal concupiscence and politic practices' as the two sins most 'likely to be found in princes' courts'. Courtiers 'invited the citizens' wives to those [masques and plays at Whitehall], on purpose to defile them' (Sir Edward Peyton).

362-5 wee . . . White In February 1623 Prince Charles (accompanied by Buckingham) left England and travelled to Madrid, to supervise personally negotiations for his marriage to Donna Maria, Infanta of Spain.

366-77 my loue . . . miserablye Queen Elizabeth of Bohemia was especially distressed about Prince Charles's trip to Madrid, with the prospect of a Spanish marriage that would leave her territories occupied by Catholic troops: 'I hope his majesty will one day see the falsood of our ennemies, but I pray God send my dear brother safe in England againe and then I shall be more quiet in my minde' (Pursell, 'Spanish Match', 720).

366 my hope Given the resistance of King James, the Queen of Bohemia was almost entirely dependent on the support of her brother (and heir to the throne), Prince Charles. From the perspective of anyone else, Elizabeth and Frederick were an alternative 'hope', since she would become heir to the throne in the event of her brother's death.

deerest 'our hearts were filled with astonishment, doubt, despayre; wee gavu them for lost, and our selues with them, and with them and vs, our lawes, libertyes, land, and (what was dearest) our religion' (Scott, Vox Dei, 59).

372 Eclips A partial eclipse of the moon—visible throughout England, Germany, Spain, and most of Europe—occurred on 15 April 1623, while Charles and wh.K^t why who could bee without thee

Bl.K^t I will change

to anye shape to please you, and my Ayme ha's beene to win youre loue in all this Game

360

wh.K^t thou hast it Noblie, and wee Long to see the Black house Pleasure State and dignitie

Bl.K^t of honor you'le so surfett and delight
youle ner'e desire agen to see the White:

exeunt 365

Enter wh: Q.

wh.Q. my loue, my hope, my deerest, oh hees gon,
ensnarde, entrapt, surprizd amongst the Black-ones
I neuer felt Extreamitie like this thick Darknes dwells upon this hower Integritie like one of heauens bright Luminaries now 370 by Errors dullest Element interpose, suffers a black Eclips—I neuer was more sick of loue then now I am of horror
I shall bee taken, the Games lost, Ime sett upon the Bishop of the blackhouse, hauing watcht 375 th' aduantage of his playe, comes now to ceaze on mee

Enter Bl. Bp.

oh Ime hard besett distrest most miserablye

Bl.B. tis uaine to stir, remoue wch waye you can
I take you now, this is the time weeue hopde for,
Queene you must downe:

380

Buckingham were in Madrid.

373 sick of loue lovesick, sick as a result of love. But the rest of the line suggests that sick has the stronger sense 'nauseated, dangerously weak, close to fainting or losing consciousness'. Elizabeth of Bohemia was famously fertile and often pregnant, so the image might refer to morning sickness (caused by 'loue'), or to her being sickened by Prince Charles's apparent 'loue' for the Infanta.

then than

374 sett upon attacked. Protestants feared that, once they had conquered Germany, Catholic armies would be free to attack the Dutch Republic (where the Queen of Bohemia was living in exile).

375 Bishop . . . blackhouse Jesuit influence was widely blamed for the military aggression of the (Habsburg) Holy Roman Emperor Ferdinand, and for the brutal repression of Protestantism in conquered territories like Bohemia and the Palatinate. (In Later the Black Bishop's role in this scene is transferred to the Fat Bishop.)

376 ceaze seize

378 remoue . . . can Elizabeth, Queen of Bohemia, was forced to move repeatedly as a result of the series of military defeats that began with the battle of White Mountain in 1620.

	wh.Q. no rescue no deliuerer		and worthie the fayre Reuerence of thy place
	Bl.B. the Black Kings bloud burnes for thy Prostitution		For thee (black holines) that workst out thy Death	405
	and nothing but the Spring of thy Chast Vertue		as the blinde Mole, the properst Sonne of earth
385	can coole his Inflammation, instantlie		who in the casting his Ambitious hills up
	hee dyes uppon a plurisie of Luxurie		is often taken, and destroyde ith midst
	Enter Wh: Bishop.		of his aduanced worke, twere well wth thee
	if hee deflower thee not—		if like that Verminous Labourer, wch thou imitatst	410
	wh Q. oh streight of miserie;		in hills of pride and malice, when death puttis thee up
	wh.B. and is youre holines his diuine procurer		the silent Graue might prooue thy Bagg for euer
390	Bl.B. the Deuills int, Ime taken by a Ring-doue,		no deeper pitt then that, for thy uaine hope
	where stood this Bishop that I sawe him not		of the white Knight, and his most firme assistant
	Wh B. you were so ambitious you lookte ouer mee		2 princelye Peices wch I knowe thy thoughts	415
	you aynde at no lesse person then the Queene		giue lost for euer now, my strong assurance
	the glorie of the Game if shee were wun		of theire fixt Vertues, could you lett in Seas
	Enter wh. King		of populous untruths agaynst that fort
	the waye were open to the Mr:check		twould burst the proudest Billowes,
395	wch, looke you, hee or his Liues to giue you;		wh.Q. my feares past then,	420
	honor and Vertue guide him in his Station		wh K. Feare? you were neuer guiltie of an Iniurie
	wh Q. oh my safe Sanctuarie		to goodnes, but in that
	wh K. lett heauens blessings		wh Q. it stayde not wth mee, S ^{ir} ,
	bee mine no longer then I am thy sure one,		wh K. it was too much if it usurpd a thought
400	the Doues house is not safer in the Rock		place a good Guard there	425
	then thou in my firme bosome;		wh Q. confidence is sett, sir;
	wh:Q. I am blest int		wh K. Take that prize hence Goe Reuerend of men
	wh K. Bishop; thou hast donne our white house gracious		putt couetousnes, into the Bagg agen	exeunt
	Seruice		Finit Actus Quarti.

- 382 Prostitution sexual commodification (reducing a 'pure' Protestant to the same status as the Roman Catholic 'Whore of Babylon'), degradation, prostration
- 383 Chast sexually virtuous (applied to faithful wives, like the Queen of Bohemia; it need not mean 'celibate')
- 386 deflower violate, ravage, desecrate, spoil (in addition to its literal meaning, 'sexually penetrate')
- 388 wh.B. Archbishop Abbot was one of the strongest English supporters and allies of the Queen of Bohemia.
- 393-4 if shee . . . Mr:check Opposition Protestants argued that the defeat of the Queen of Bohemia and the Protestant cause in Germany would lead to the conquest of the Netherlands and Britain, and Catholic victory throughout Europe.
- 395 hee or his King James or his family (or his supporters)—which leaves open the possibility that King James might have nothing to do with the prophesied Protestant triumph. At Later 4.4.76 'or' is changed, significantly, to 'and'.
- 396 honor . . . guide him Discussing the national disgrace caused by the King's failure to defend his daughter and son-in-law in Bohemia and the Palatinate, Tom Tell-Troath flatly told King James that 'there is no way to recouer your

- losses and vindicate your honour, but with fighting with him that hath cozened you'. In what the title-page called 'a patheticall discourse, presented to the King . . . to perswade his Majestie to drawe his royall sword, for the restoring of the Pallatynat', John Reynolds—'speaking in the behalf of the forsaken . . . sorrowfull Princesse your onlie Daughter'—argued that permitting his daughter and son-in-law to be ruined would 'eclipse' the King's honor: 'Doe I speake of Dishonour, O then I beseech your Majestie to consider, how long Honor is purchasing, how soon lost?' (Votivæ Angliæ (1624), A1-A1^v). Reynolds reiterates the same theme, in the same language of 'honour', in Vox Coeli (also 1624).
- 397 Sanctuarie King James refused 'to receyue and harbour them' [his daughter Elizabeth and her husband] 'into the Sanctuarie of [his] Kingdom'—a refusal for which Reynolds, among many other Englishmen, rebuked him (Votivæ Angliæ, A4^v). The White Queen's exclamation is therefore unavoidably ironic, whether she speaks it to the White King or—even more subversively—to the White Bishop.
- 398-9 lett . . . one This statement makes

- the legitimacy of King James dependent upon his support of the White Queen. Middleton here, like Thomas Scott in Vox Regis, quotes King James, apparently in praise, but with an implicit threat.
- 401 bosome i.e. he keeps her in his 'heart' (not in his 'kingdom')
- 406 Mole (a creature who works underground, like the Jesuits hiding in their priest-holes, or placing gunpowder in the vaults under Parliament)
- 420 my feares Elizabeth of Bohemia, and many English and European Protestants, were afraid that Prince Charles would convert to Catholicism while in Madrid, or that he would be kept prisoner in Spain, or that as part of the marriage treaty he would agree to legalize Catholicism in England, and/or allow his heirs to be raised as Catholics.
- 421-4 you . . . thought The King here echoes the official version of events, articulated in Buckingham's widely-distributed relation to Parliament in February 1624: that there was never any danger of Charles succumbing to Spanish pressure, and that the entire trip was a cunning trap to force Spain to reveal its treachery.
- 421 neuer guiltie (typically extravagant praise for the Queen of Bohemia)

Act 5

Incipit Quintus et Vltimus.
Lowde Musique, Enter Bl.K. Q. D. wth pawnes and Black Knight meeting the wh. Knight and Duke: (the Bl.Bps.pawne aboute Entertaynes them wth this Lattin Oration)
 (:)

Si quid mortalibus unquam oculis hilarem et gratum aperuit diem, si quid peramantibus amicorum animis gaudium attulit, peperitū lētitiām (Eques Candidissime prælucētissime) fœlicem profectō tuum a domo Candoris ad domum Nigritudinis accessum, promississe, peperisse, attulisse fatemur. Omnes aduentus tui conflagentissimi, Omni qua possumus, lētitiā, gaudio, congratulatione, acclamatione, animis obseruantissimis, affectibus diūtissimis, obsequiis uenerabundis, te sospitem congratulamur.

Bl.K. S^r in this short Congratulatorie Speech
 you maye conceiue how the whole house affects you,

5.0.2 Enter Middleton revised the beginning of this scene to provide an individual entrance and dialogue for the Black Knight and his litter: see Later 5.1.1–10. Gondomar was often ‘carried in his litter or bottomless chair, the easiest seat for his fistula’ (Wilson, Life and Reign of James I). The Spanish ambassador objected that the actors had brought Gondomar ‘on to the stage in his little litter almost to the life’ (10 August 1624); John Chamberlain reported that the actors ‘had gotten . . . his Lytter’ (21 August).

0.4 Bl.Bps.pawne Gondomar’s confessor, Fray Diego de la Fuente (who had lived in London several years), was present in Madrid, and conspicuously interacted with the English there, in 1623 (Redworth, 130). See 1.295–6.

1–6 Si . . . fatemur This speech undeniably establishes that the play’s last act represents the Charles–Buckingham visit to Spain. Taken from ‘A gratulatory Oration made by a Iesuite vnto the Prince at Madrid’ (29), it is included in The Popes Letter To the Prince (1623), in the original Latin, followed by an English translation: ‘Si quid mortalibus unquam oculis hilarem & gratum aperuit diem, si quid peramantibus subditorum tuorum animis gaudium attulit, peperitū lētitiām, si quid salutem Patriæ, fœlicitatem Civium, securitatem Imperij, Christianæ Republicæ pacem & incolūitatem promisit nobis unquā, nobis unquā spondidit (clarissime & serenissime Princeps) fœlicem profectō tuum ad Hesperias oras accessum, fœlicem in Hispaniam adventum novum utrumq; & inauditum, promississe, peperisse, attulisse, fatemur’ (29). (For a translation of the whole speech, see Later 5.1.10–19.)

6–10 Omnes . . . congratulamur ‘Accipe singulorum obsequium, singulorum amorem, pium & constantem singulorum affectum. Omni quā possumus, lētitiā, gaudio, congratulatione, acclamatione, sospitem tuum & fœlicem congratulamur tibi adventum; maxime quo licet, obsequio, amore, affectu, omnia tibi nostra & nosmet ipsos tradimus . . . hæc omnia & singula (auspicatissime Princeps) obseruantissimis animis, diūtissimis affectibus, venerabundis obsequiis, ad lætas & augustas tuas fortunas, . . . dirigitur’ (Popes Letter, 32–3).

17 Eye fix on ‘I have seen the Prince [Charles] have his eyes immovably fixed upon the Infanta half an hour together . . . I have seen him watch a long hour together in a close Coach in the open street to see her as she went abroad’ (James Howell, Familiar Letters (1673), 119–20, printing a letter from Madrid dated 10 July 1623). Significantly, this remark is spoken by the Black Queen.

21 æquallye equally

24.1 Musique played by hidden musicians, but clearly meant to suggest a celestial harmony: unseem music was used, from the late sixteenth century, to mystify not only papal but also royal power, as for instance in Jacobean court masques. John Buckeridge (Bishop of Rochester)

Bl.K^t the Colledges and sanctimonious Seedeplotts, wh.K^t tis cleere, and so acknowledgd, Royall S^r Bl.K. What honors, pleasures, rarities, delights youre noble thought can thinke

15

Bl.Q. youre fayre Eye fix on;
 thats comprehended in the spacious circuit
 of our black Kingdome, theyre youre seruants all wh.K^t how amplie you endeere us

20

wh.D. they are fauours that æquallye enrich the royall
 giuer
 as the receiuer in the free Donation

Bl.K^t Harke, to enlarge youre welcome, from all parts is heard sweete sounding Ayres, abstruse things open, Musique

of Voluntarie Freenes, and yon’d Altar
an Altar discoverd richlie adornd and diuers Statues standing on each Side
 the Seate of Adoration, seemes t’adore claimed that, during the consecration of the eucharist, ‘the heavenly powers do raise up cries and the place near the altar is filled with the choirs of angels’ (A Sermon Preached before His Maiesty . . . Touching Prostration, and Kneeling, 1618).

25

25.1 Altar characteristic of Catholics, but also perhaps suggesting the formalist/Arminian wing of the English church. Buckeridge argued that the sacrifice of the eucharist required an altar, not a table. (See preceding note.) About thirty polemical pamphlets, debating the legitimacy of Church ceremonies, were published between 1618 and 1624, including David Calderwood’s Altar of Damascus (1621), critical of the Anglican hierarchy. In 1639 at the Fortune Theatre an altar and candlesticks were set up on stage, and the gesture of genuflection mocked in a clownish manner (Calendar of State Papers Domestic)—a parody clearly aimed at the emphasis on church ceremony, under the Arminian faction which began to dominate the Anglican episcopate in the 1620s.

25.1–5.36 richlie adornd . . . Tapors King James sent to Madrid in March 1623 ‘all stuff and ornaments fit for the service of God’, including candlesticks, and ordered that a room be set aside ‘chappellwise with an altar . . . palls, linnen coverings, [and] demy carpett’ (Loomis, 2:186). Calderwood objected to the practice of covering English communion tables ‘in imitation of the popish rich altar clothes’ (Altar of Damascus, 211).

the Vertues you bring wth you,
wh.K^t, theres a taste of the ould Vessell still,
30 wh.D. th' erroneous rellish.
Song.
Wonder worke some strange delight this place was neuer yet without to welcome the fayre Whitehouse Knight, and to bring our hopes about 35 maye from the Altar flames aspire those Tapors set themselues afire
maye sencelesse things our Ioyes approuoe and those Brazen Statuës moue
The Statues moue, and dance.
40 Quickned by some power aboue
or what more strange to shoue our Loue;
Bl.K^t. a happie omen waites uppon this hower
all moue portentouslie, the right hand waye; Bl:K. Come lets set free all the most choyse delights that euer adornd dayes or quickned Nights exeunt Enter wh.Qs.p. and Bl.Bps.pawne (in his reuerend habit) meeting her 45 Wh. Qs:p. I see twas but a tryall of my Dutie now, ha's a more modest minde, and in that Vertue
most worthilie h'as Fate prouided for mee!
hah? tis the bad man in the reuerend habit
dares hee bee seene agen, Traytor to Holines, 50 oh marble Fronted Impudence! and Knowes
how ill ha's usde mee, Ime ashambe hee blushes not,
Bl.B^sp. are you yet storde wth anie Weomans pittie are You the Mrs of so much deuotion
Kindnes and charitie as to bestowe
55 an Almes of Loue on youre poore Sufferer yet for youre sake onelie;

wh.Qs.p. Sir, for the reuerend respect you ought to giue to Sanctitie though none to mee in being her Seruant uowde and weare her Liuerie
if I might counsell you You should nere speake 60 the Language of Vnchastnes in that habit
you would not thinke how ill it do's wth you!
the worlds a Stage on wch all parts are playde
youde thinke it most absurd to see a deuill presented there not in a deuills shape 65 or wanting one to send him out in yours
youde rayle at that for an Absurditie no Colledge erè committed, for decorums sake then for pitties cause, for Sacred Vertues honor, if youle persist still in youre Deuills part 70 present him as you should doo, and lett one that carries up the Goodnes of the playe come in that habit and Ile speake wth him,
then will the parts bee fitted and the Spectators
Knowe wch is wch, they must haue cunning
Iudgments
75 to finde it else for such a one as you is able to deceaua a mightie Audience, naye those you haue seduct if there bee anie
in the Assemblie, if they see what manner
you playe youre Game wth mee they cannot loue you;
80 is there so litle hope of you to smile S^r?
Bl.B^sp. yes, at youre feares, at th' Ignorance of youre power,
the litle use you make of Time, youth, Fortune,
Knowing you haue a housband for Lusts Shelter,
You dare not yet make bold wth a Friends comfort 85 this is the plauge of Weaknes, wh.Qs.p. so hott-burning the Sillables of Sin flie from his Lips,
as if the Letter came new cast from hell;

28-9 taste...still Catholicism was still called, by many Englishmen, 'the old religion'; but Spain, the dominant defender of Catholicism, preserved more than a 'taste' of that religion, and 'still' (yet, even after all this time) suggests the lingering of Catholic sentiment in England itself. Since 1617, Arminians had been appointed to a succession of deaneries and bishoprics; on 6 July 1622 Joseph Mead heard a sermon preached 'totally for Arminianisme, wonderfully boldly & peremptorily' (f. 213); in 1623, Charles was accompanied to Madrid by two Arminian chaplains; early in 1624, royal chaplain Richard Montagu's Arminian pamphlet A Gagg for the New Gospel provoked a Parliamentary protest.
30.1 Song Play scripts often did not specify who sang a song. Songs were usually sung by boy actors, and the only boy actor present in this scene was the one playing the Black Queen.

33 the (may mean 'thee')
38.1 Statues moue 'Concerning coozening devices: Are not yet men liuing, that can remember the knauerie of Priests to make the Roodes and Images of the Churches in England... to goggle with their eyes, and shake their hands: yea, with Wiers to bend the whole body' (Goad, Friers Chronicle, B3').
dance In Francis Beaumont's Masque of the Inner Temple and Gray's Inn, 'four statues of gold and silver' were made to 'dance for joy of these great nuptials' (1613)—i.e., the wedding of Princess Elizabeth to the Elector Palatine. The combination of music, dance, and special effects strongly suggests the Jacobean court masque.
53 Mrs (abbreviation of 'Mistris', mistress)
59 uowde vowed
60 nere ne'er, never
63 the worlds a Stage 'Totus mundus agit

histrionem' (motto displayed on the sign of the Globe theatre)
67-8 Absurditie...Colledge Jesuit seminaries at St Omer and Douay, the Jesuit schools founded by Mary Ward, and Oxford and Cambridge colleges, regularly performed academic dramas (which unlike plays in London's commercial theatres usually observed 'decorums' based on Greek and Roman dramatic practice).
68 decorums sake 'What Decorum is it', Gee asks, criticizing Jesuit con-games, 'the spectator being a Woman' and 'the Iesuites being or having Actors of such dexterity, I see no reason but that they should set vp a company for themselves, which surely will put down The Fortune, Red-Bull, Cock-pit, & Globe' (New Shreds, 17-19).
84 housband husband
86 plauge plague

- 90 Bl.B^s.p. well, setting aside the dish you loathe so much
Wch ha's bene heartilie tasted by youre Better
I come to marrie you to the Gentleman that last enioyde you, 'hope that pleases you;
theres no immodest rellish in that office;
- 95 wh.Q^s.p. strange! of all men hee should first light on him to tye that holie Knott that sought t'undo me, were you requested to performe that busines S^{ir}?
- Bl.B^s.p. I name you a sure Token;
wh.Qs.p. as for that S^{ir};—
- 100 now youre most welcome, and my fayre hopes of you You'le neuer breake the Sacred Knott you tye once by anye lewde solliciting hereafter,
- Bl.Bs.p. but all the Crafts in getting of it Knitt,
youre all a fire to make youre coosning market
- 105 I am the marrier and the man do you Knowe mee?
do you Knowe mee Nice Iniquitie, strickt Luxurie and holie Whoredome that would clap on Marriage Wth all hott Speede to soader up youre Game,
see what a Scourge Fate ha's prouided for thee,
- 110 you were a Mayde, sweare still, youre no worse now,
I left you as I found you, haue I startled you,
Ime quit wth you now for my discouryerie
youre Outcryes and youre cunnings, farewell Brokage²
- wh.Qs.p. naye staye, and heare mee but giue thanks a Litle
- 115 if youre Eare can endure a worke so gracious,
then You maye take Youre pleasure,
- Bl.Bs.p. I haue donne that;
wh.Qs.p. that power that hath preserud mee from this Deuill
- Bl.B^s.p. how?
- 120 wh.Qs.p. this, that maye challenge the cheif chayre in hell and sitt about his Master;
- Bl.B^s.p. bring in merit?
Wh.Qs.p. that suffredst him through blinde Lust to bee lead
last night to th' Action of some Common bed;
- Bl.Qs.p. wthin
- Intus. not ouercommon neyther!
- Bl.B^s.p. hah. what Voyce is that;
wh.Qs.p. of Virgins bee thou euer honored:
now you maye goe you heare Iue giuen thanks S^{ir}
- Bl.B^s.p. this a strange Game, did not I lye wth you?
Intus. Noh!
- Bl.Bps.p. what a deuill art thou wh.Qs.p. Ile not answere you S^{ir} after thanksgiuing;
- Bl.Bs.p. you made promise to mee
after the Contract;
- Intus yes—
- Bl.B^s.p. mischeife confound thee
I speake not to thee,—and thou didst præpare thy selfe
and sett thy Ioyes more high—
- Intus—then you could reach S^{ir};
- 140 Bl.B^s.p. tis a bawdie Voyce Ile slit the throate ont, Enter Bl.Qs.p.
- Bl.Qs.p. what? offer Violence to youre bedfellowe?
to one that workes so Kindlie without Rape?
- Bl.B^s.p. my bedfellowe?
- Bl.Qs.p. do you plant youre Scorne agaynst mee?
why when I was probationer at Bruxells
there Was no such Engine Knowen, then Adoration fild up the place and Wonder was in fashion ist turnd to th' Wilde Seede of Contempt so soone?
Can 5 Yeares stampe a Bawde? praye Looke uppon mee S^{ir}
- 150 Iue Youth ynough to take it, tis no longer
Since you were cheife Agent for the Transportation of Ladies daughters, if you bee remembered some of their portions I can name, Who purst em, too
- 155 they Were soone dispossesst of Worldlie cares
that came into youre fingers?

104 coosning cozening108 soader solder125 Intus inside, within (Latin). Very rare as a stage direction or speech prefix in English.146 Bruxells Brussels (a Spanish Catholic stronghold, and site of an English nunnery)152–3 cheife . . . daughters 'there lurketh in England an arch-Traytor, one Henry Flood a Iesuit, who is the cheife Agentfor the transporting of Nunnes, both to Bruxels, Greueling, Lisbon, or any other place' (Robinson, English nunnery, 8).154–6 some . . . fingers 'Father Floud Iesuit, their prime Procurator, and others) haue boasted . . . [of] the rich portions which many of our English women carry ouer with them . . . those that haue a good round summe for their dowry (as 1000 or 2000 pounds, which some good customers cary hence), such arestamped for Bruxels, where the hungry Iesuits (who sometimes meet with as good booties as the Merchants of Argier) dispossess them of all worldly cares and vanities' (Gee, New Shreds Q2^v–3). Gee paraphrases a similar paragraph in Robinson's English nunnery (p. 9); only Gee has the plural 'portions', but both have the phrase 'dispossess . . . cares', and Robinson alone has 'quickly dispossesse'.

- Bl.Bs.p.* Shall I heare her?
Bl.Qs.p. Holie Derision! yes! till thy Eare swell with thy owne Venom, thy prophane Lifes Vomit!
 160 whose Neice was shee you poysond wth childe, twice?
 and gaue her out possedet wth a fowle Spirit
 when twas indeed youre Bastard;
Enter white B^s.p. wth white Queene.
Bl.B^s.p. I am taken in myne owne Toyles;
 165 wh.Bs.p. yes, and tis iust you should bee;
wh.Q. and thou lewde pawne the Shame of weomanhood;
Bl.Bsp. Ime lost of all hands;
Bl.Qs.p. and I cannot feele
 the weight of my perdition now hees taken 170 tâs not the burden of a Grashopper,
Bl.B^s.p. thou whore of Order, Cockatrice in Voto;
Enter Bl.K^{ts}.p.
 Yond's the white Bishops pawne, Ile playe at's heart
 now!
- wh.Qs.p.* how now, Black Villayne, wouldst thou heape a murder
 on thy first fowle offence, oh merciles Bloudhound
 tis time that thou wer't taken;
 175 Bl.K^{ts}.p. Death! præuented!
wh.Qs.p. for thy sake, and that partner in thy shame,
 Ile neuer knowe man farder, then by name. exeunt
Scæna Vltima.
Enter Bl.K.Q. Kt. Duke and pawnes wth white K^t and Duke wh.K^t. You haue enricht my Knowledge, Royall S^{ir})
 and my Content together;
 180 Bl.Kt. stead of Riot wee sett you onelie welcome, Surfet is a thing wee seldome heare off in these parts:
wh.Kt. I heare of the more Vertue when I misse oñt, Bl.Kt. wee doo not use to burie in our Bellies 185 2 hundred thowsand ducketts and then boast oñt or exercize th' ould Romane paynfull-Idlenes wth care of fetching Fishes far from home,
 the Golden-headed Coracine out of Ægipt

160–2 whose...Bastard 'A certaine Catholic collapsed Lady... about some two or three yeeres since, departed from her Husband (yet liuing) and went ouer to Bruxels, and was admitted into the order of Nunnery, I meane a Nunne at large, one of the uncloystred sisters of the order of Saint Clare'—that is, the order of mobile female Jesuits founded by Mary Ward—and there shee remained a while, till there appeared in her some passion incompatible with Nunship. Shee came ouer into England, a companion with a religious lesuite, since of great note, F.D.'—[Father Drury]—'and remaining afterwards an enlarged Nun in London, was (as it seemeth) more visibly taken with a disease befalling that sexe, called flatus uterinus: and thereupon, that this matter might bee carried the more cleanly, it was giuen out, that shee was possessed with an euill spirit, which did make her belly swell like a woman with child' (Gee, Suare). This is immediately followed by description of 'a certaine lesuite (whom I could also name)' as 'a smug, spruce, liquorish' [= lecherous] 'young fellow, a fit man to be called Father (forsooth)'—thus making explicit the double meaning of 'father' (religious and biological).

160 Neice Heloise was the niece of Fulbert, who ordered the castration of Abelard; she had a bastard child by Abelard. (See note to 1.171).

170 tâs it has

178 lle...name Heloise, after the castration of Abelard, became a nun. Protestants generally doubted the human capacity for celibacy, and regarded vows of celibacy as a remnant of pagan religious practices (like the castration of priests of Cybele); but they did recognize voluntary abstinence as 'a rare and special gift given only to some' (William Perkins, Works, 1612). Throughout the seventeenth century there were various proposals—from Margaret Cavendish and Mary Astell, among others—to establish what amounted to English Protestant nunneries, where women could have independence and an education sequestered from men.

181–239 stead...hereafter There were many English complaints about 'the scarcity of victuall' (2 Vox Populi, 22) during the visit to Spain: 'As if the Prince had ventured there his life | To make a famine, not to fetch a wife' (Richard Corbet, 'A Letter to the Duke of Buckingham, being with the Prince in Spain', 1623).

186 2 hundred thowsand ducketts a colossal sum, perhaps suggested by 'tribus milibus sestertium', the cost of banquets thrown by the Roman emperor Heliogabalus: see 5.201. 'That supper which was of least price did commonly cost thirty pound weight of gold, which (after our computation) might amount to the value of above a thousand pounds sterling; and there were some which did cost threescore thousand crowns' ('Heliogabalus', in Edward Grimstone, The Imperial History, from the first foundation of the Roman monarchy to this present tyme, 1623).

187 ould Romane characteristic of (a) the old Roman empire (b) the Roman Catholic church (c) the Holy Roman Empire, ruled by the Habsburgs. Sir John Digby, on a diplomatic mission to Emperor Ferdinand in Vienna, remarked that the 'imperio Romano... is so often here in their mouthes, as if the imperatore romano were in better estate then Augustus Caesar' (5 August 1621). The final scene's pervasive classical allusions have an early modern political and religious significance.

189–92 the Golden-headed...Aquitayne See Pliny's Naturall Historie, tr. Philemon Holland (1601): 'the Coracinus in Ægypt carrieth the name for the best fish. At Gades in Spaine, the Doree or Goldfish... About the isle Ebusus, the Stock fish is much called for;... In the cuntry of Aquitaine or Guienne in Fraunce, the river Salmon passeth all other sea Salmons whatsoever' (1:246–7, IX:17). The following lines draw upon ten widely separated chapters of Pliny, which Middleton could have read in Latin.

189 Coracine (four syllables, as in the Latin of the source)

- 190 the Salpa from Ebusis, or the pelamis
wch some call Summer-whiting from Calcedon, Salmons from Aquitayne, Helops from Rhodes, Cockles from Chios, franckt and Fatted up
wth Far and Sapa flower and cockted wine, 195 Wee cramb no Birds, nor Epicurean-Like Enclose some Creekes a'th Sea, as Sergius Crata did hee that inuented the first Stewes for Oysters and other Sea-Fish, who beside the pleasure of his owne Throate got large Reuennewes by
th 'Inuention;
200 whose Fat Example the Nobilitie followed;
nor do wee imitate that arch-Gurmundizer wth 2 and twentye Courses at one dinner and betwixt euerie course hee and his Guesse washt and usde women then sate downe and strenghtnd;
205 Lust swimming in their Dishes; wch no sooner
Was tasted but was readie to bee Vented:

Wh:K^t. most Impious Epicures?

Bl.K^t. wee commend rather

- of 2 Extreames the parsimonie of pertinax
who had Halfe Lettices sett up to serue agen, 210 or his Successor Iulian that would make 3 Meales of a Leane hare, and often supp
wth a greene Figg and Wipe his Beard as wee can;
the ould bewaylers of Excesse in those dayes, 215 complaynde there Was more coyne bid for a Cooke
then for a Warhorse, but now Cookes are purchasde
after the Rate of Triumphs, and some dishes
after the Rate of Cookes, wch must needs make some of youre Whitehouse Gurmundizers, spetiallie
youre Wealthie plumpe-plebeians, like the Hoggs 220 wch Scalliger cites that could not moue for Fat, so insensible of eyther Prick or Goade
that Mice made Holes to Needle in their Buttocks
and they not felt em; there was once a Ruler Cyrenès Gouvernor, choackte wth his owne Paunch 225

- 190 Salpa from Ebusis 'Circa Ebusum salpa' (Pliny)
190-1 pelamis... Calcedon 'These fishes, together with the old Tunies and the young, called Pelamides... neare to Chalcedon' (Pliny 1:243, IX:15).
191 Summer-whiting Italian palamite, 'a fish called a tunny; before it be a year old, a summer-whiting' (John Florio, New World of Words, 1611)
192 Helops from Rhodes 'elops Rhodi' (Pliny IX:54), 'the Elops at Rhodes' (1:267).
193 Cockles from Chios (The source for this detail has not been identified; it is not in volume one of Holland's translation of Pliny.)
193-4 franckt... wine 'to feed them fat, namely, with a certaine past made of cuite and wheate meale... that the gluttons table might be served plentifully with home-fed and franked great Winkles also' (Pliny 1:267, IX:56). Pliny elsewhere identifies 'the bearded wheat Far' (2:138, XXII:25) and explains that 'the Cuit named in Latine Sapa... is, but Must or new wine boiled' (2:157, XXIII:2).
195 cramb no Birds 'Who first devised to cram Hens' (Pliny 1:297, X:50).
196-200 Enclose... followed 'The first that inuented stewes and pits to keepe oysters in, was Sergius Orata... And this the man did not for his belly and to maintain gourmandise, but of a covetous mind for verie gaine. And by this and such wittie devises, hee gathered great revenues... somewhat before Orata, Licinius Murena devised pooles and stewes for to keepe and feed other fishes: whose example noble men followed... [Lucullus] let in an arme of the sea into his fish-pools' (Pliny, 1:246-7, IX:54).
201 arch-Gurmundizer the Roman emperor Heliogabalus (d. 222) who 'exhibuit aliquando et tale convivium ut haberet viginti et duo fercula ingentium epularum, sed per singula lavarent et mulieribus uterentur et ipse et amici' (Aelius Lampridius, xxx, in Scriptores Historiae Augustae, not translated into English in Middleton's time, but often edited and reprinted between 1518 and 1620 by humanist scholars, including Erasmus and Isaac Casaubon). 'Occasionally he gave a banquet in which he would serve twenty-two courses of extraordinary viands, and between each course he and his guests would wash, and use women.' (This detail is not in Grimestone.)
209 pertinax Roman emperor (d. 193): 'dimidiatas lactucas et cardus... conviviis adponerat... etiam in alium diem differebat' (Julius Capitolinus, xii, in Scriptores): 'at his banquets he served lettuce and edible thistle in half portions... he would defer using it until another day'.
211 Iulian Didius Julianus, Roman emperor (d. 193): 'Iulianus tantae parsimoniae fuisse... ut per triduum porcellum, per triduum leporem divideret... saepe autem... holeribus leguminibusque contentus sine carne cenaverit' (Aelius Spartianus, iii, Scriptores): 'Julianus was so parsimonious... that he divided a sucking pig for three days, a hare for three days... often, moreover... he was content to dine on cabbages and beans without meat'.
214-18 the ould... of Cookes 'those, who in their reprooves of gluttonie and gourmandise, complained, that a cooke carried a greater price in the market than a good horse of service. For now adaies a cooke will cost as much as the charge of a triumph: and one fish as deere as a cooke' (Pliny 1:246, IX:17).
219 Whitehouse Gurmundizers Buckingham's banquet at York House on his return from Madrid in 1623 served 3000 dishes of meat (Joseph Mead, f. 385, 21 November 1623). Sir James Hay, one of James I's Scottish favourites, regularly spent £2-3000 on individual banquets, on one occasion employing a hundred cooks for eight days to cook larks, Muscovy salmon, swans, and pheasants (Chamberlain, 2:57-8, 333-4).
220 plumpe-plebeians (suggesting rich merchants of the City of London, rather than the 'patricians' of the court)
220-4 like... em 'Pinguescit autem longe magis sus: adeoque pinguescit, ut pene totus immobile reddatur. Neque enim fabulosum est: in eorum clunibus excavare sibi mures foveas; non quidem ut nidificet, sed ut saginentur' (Julius Caesar Scaliger, Exotericarum Exercitationum liber quintus decimus de Subtilitate, ad Hieronymum Cardanum, often reprinted between 1557 and 1612). Middleton and/or his audience may have confused this 'Scaliger' with his more famous son, the great Protestant scholar J. J. Scaliger (1540-1609).
224-5 there... Paunch Athenaeus, Deipnosophistae (available in Latin translations since 1553), XII.550: 'Magam... Cyrenes Regem per annos quinquaginta... obesum esse factum, ac ita praeter aequum iuxta extremum aetatis, ut ob corporis ignavia ipsa crassitudine sit suffocatus, tum propter nutrimenti copiam' (1556 Latin tr.): 'Magas, who reigned over Cyrene for fifty years... was weighted down with monstrous masses of flesh in his last days; in fact he choked himself to death because he was so fat'.

- Wch death Fat Sanctius K. of Castile fearing through his Infinite Masse of Bellie, rather chose to bee Kild suddenlie, by a pernicious Herbe taken to make him Leane, wch ould Corduba 230 K. of Morocco counceild his feare to then hee would hazard to bee stunck to death as that huge Cormorant that was choackte before
him;
wh.Kt. well, youre as sound a Spokesman, S^r, for parsimony
cleane Abstinence, and scarce one meale a daye 235 as euer spake wth Tong;
Bl.King—censure him meekelie, S^r,
twas but to finde discourse
Bl.Q. heele rayst of anie thing
wh.K^t I shall bee halfe afrayde to feede hereafter 240 wh.D. or I, beshrewe my heart for I feare Fatnes
the Fogg of Fatnes as I feare a Dragon
the Comlines I wish for thats as glorious;
wh.Kt. youre course is wondrous strickt, I should transgresse sure,
were I to change my side as y'au'e much wrought mee
to^t:
245 Bl.Kt. how you misprize; this is not meant to youward
You that are woond up to the height of Feeding
by Clime and Custome are dispencst wthall;
- You maye eate Kid, Cabrito, Calfe and Ton's
naye the Franckt Hen, fattend wth milke and Corne
250 a Riot, wch th' Inhabitants of Delos
Were first Inuenter of, or the Crambd Cockle Wh.Kt. Well, for the Foode Ime happilie resolude in, but for the Diett of my Disposition
there comes a trouble, you will hardlie finde foode to please that;
255 Bl.K^t it must bee a strange nature
wee cannot finde a dish for, hauing policie
the Mr-Cooke of Christendome to dresse it, praye name Youre Natures diett,
wh.K^t the first Messe 260 is hott Ambition!
Bl.Kt. thats but serude in puff paste
alasse the meaneest of our Cardinalles Cookes can dresse that dinner; youre Ambition S^r can fetch no farder compasse then the world;?
265 wh.K^t thats certayne Sir;
Bl.Kt. weere about that alreadie;
and in the Large Feast of our Vast Ambition wee count but the white Kingdome whence you came from 270 the garden of our Cooke to pick his Salletts;
the Foode's leane France larded wth Germanie,
- 226–30 Fat . . . to No source of this anecdote has been found. In all hitherto-identified versions of the story, Sancho was cured by his trip to Corduba. The confusion over Corduba—a kingdom, rather than a king—might be related to a line in Gee's
New Shreds which refers to 'Corduba King of the Moores' (p. 68).
- 229 Corduba (perhaps reminding English audiences of Don Gonzalo Fernández de Cordoba, the Spanish general in command of the occupying forces in the Palatinate)
- 238 Bl.Q. These five words—complaining about a man's verbosity—are the Black Queen's only speech until after checkmate (when she speaks another three). Her silence in this scene may suggest the Spanish refusal to give Prince Charles opportunities to speak with the Infanta: 'restrayning him from that lib-erall accesse and converse, (not denied elsewhere to a meane person) with the Lady Maria Infanta his Mistress . . . with whom in all the time of his being here, he had not about twice talked' (Scott, 2 Vox Populi, 23).
- rayst of raise't of, raise't off, utter 'discourse' on [any subject] or from [any stimulus]
- 240 I feare Fatnes Sir James Hay, like Buckingham one of James I's intimates, remembered that 'the mode was to appear very small in the waist; I remember I was drawn up from the ground by both hands whilst the tailor with all his strength buttoned on my doublet'
(The Autobiography of Thomas Raymond).
- In 1621 Sir Simonds D'Ewes described Buckingham as 'full of delicacy and handsome features; yea, his hands and face seemed to me, especially, effeminate and curious' (Autobiography, 1:166–7).
- 246–8 You . . . Ton's In Spain, the English for their supper could get only 'perhaps a piece of leane Kid, or Cabrito, a Tripe, Tone's or such like . . . we were faine to send seaventeene miles off for a Calfe . . .
how should our [Spanish] dyet agree with their [English] stomackes, who are accounted the greatest feeders of the World' (Scott, 2 Vox Populi, 22).
- 253–354 Diett . . . euer This catalogue of confessed vices resembles the vices of 'a Protestant King I meane one that rules ouer a people of that profession'
(i.e. King James) in Tom Tell-Troath, who 'may solace himselfe as securely in his bed-chamber as the Grand Signor in his Seraglio, have Lords Spiritual for his Mates / Lords Temporall for his Eunuchs
& / and whom hee will for his Incubus.
There may hee kisse his minions without shame' (25).
- 258 Mr-Cooke 'The King's Master-Cook' was an actual court official (Civitates 391); he appears as a major character in Ben Jonson's masque for Christmas 1623, Neptune's Triumph for the Return of Albion (an allegory of the trip to Madrid).
- 264–5 Ambition . . . world Spain 'is the same Nation, whose ambitions to satisfie, the East and West Indies are not sufficient, nor all Europe: but all the earth must become slaues to their pride . . . as if all
- other men and places had beene made for them' (Scott, Vox Regis, 13).
- 268 Large Feast Gondomar's list in Scott's Vox Populi includes Naples, France, Navarre, Portugal, Savoy, Venice, the Low-countries, and Bohemia (B1).
- 271 Foode's main dish is. France was Catholic; the religion of Germany (the birthplace of the Reformation) was being contested militarily. Germany and France were central to control of Europe;
England was geographically marginal, and militarily insignificant (hence its status as 'salad').
- lean (Bad harvests and interrupted grain imports from Danzig produced scattered food shortages in the early 1620s in France and other Mediterranean countries.)
- France France, although Catholic, had been the chief obstacle to Habsburg domination of Europe, and much more tolerant of religious difference than Spain; but in 1615 Louis XIII had been united by marriage to Spain, and in 1620 he began a series of military campaigns against French Protestants.
- larded garnished with strips of bacon, or greased with melted fat (appropriate to the German taste for boar, and to the Spanish piecemeal conquest of various German Protestant towns and territories in the 1620s)
- Germanie not a nation but a series of duchies and principalities, within the boundaries of the Holy Roman Empire;
site of extensive Catholic-Protestant before wch comes the Graue-Chast Seignorie of Venice serude in Capon-Like in whitebroath from our Cheife Ouen Italie the Bakemeates, 275 Sauoye the Salt, Geneua the Chipt Manchet, belowe the Salt the Netherlands are placst

a Common Dish at Lower end ath Table for meaner pride to fall to, for our second Course a Spit of portugalls serude in for plouers 280 Indians and Moores for Blackbirds, all this while Holland stands readie melted to make Sawce
On all Occasions; when the Voyder comes and wth such cheere our full Hopes wee suffice Zealand sayes Grace, for fashion, then wee rize:

wh.Kt. heres meate ynough a conscience for Ambition! 285
Bl.Kt. if there bee anie want there's Switzerland
Polonia, and such pickled things will serue to furnish out a Table;
wh.Kt. You saye well Sir:
but heres the mistrie I tell you in priuate: 290
Bl.Kt. oh weere youre Cabinets.

warfare, 1619–24. It included Bohemia (mentioned by Gondomar in Vox Populi) and the Palatinate (the key point of contention in negotiations between Spain and England in 1621–24, and the reason given by Charles and Buckingham for the final breakdown of negotiations). The Palatinate is conspicuously not named here: 'I dare not speake of the Palatinate' (Michael Drayton, Works, 3:206).

272–3 Graue-Chast... Venice Venice was a 'mayden city... never conquered' (Thomas Coryat, Coryat's Crudities, 1611); for theorists of republicanism, its city-state government was an epitome of 'moderation' and 'temperance' (Gasparo Contarini, The Commonwealth and Government of Venice, tr. Lewes Lewkenor, 1599). Although Catholic, Venice resisted the Counter-Reformation papacy (to the extent of being excommunicated in 1606–7) and the Habsburg empire (at war with them in 1613–17, and violently crushing an attempted Spanish coup in 1618).

273 Capon-Like like a castrated chicken. Venetian sea-power, once dominant in the Mediterranean, became insignificant after 1590, even in the Adriatic; its economy and trade were in rapid decline.

274 our... Italie Spain had ruled southern Italy and Sicily for more than a century; Milan was also in its possession, and Genoa an ally.

Cheife Ouen (because Rome is the centre of Catholicism, and the Italian climate much hotter than the English)

275 Sauoye The independent Duchy of Savoy, in what is currently south-eastern France and north-western Italy; in 1623 it formed an alliance with France and Venice against the Habsburgs. Gondomar's catalogue of European states includes 'Sauoy (that hardly slipt from us)' (Scott, Vox Populi, B1).

Salt salt-cellar, a large and often ornate utensil at the centre of the table, as salt was at the centre of European diet (probably double modern consumption), food-preservation (esp. meat and fish), and trade (Catholic countries exported salt, Protestants imported). The customs tax on exported salt was a major source of income for the Dukes of Savoy (The Estates, Empires, and Principalities of the World, trans. Edward Grimestone, 1615). The salt-cellar was passed around the table, as Savoy changed its allies.

Geneua formerly part of Savoy, but since the mid-sixteenth century an independent republican city; besieged in 1602–3 by a Catholic military alliance. Geneva was the birthplace and international centre of Calvinism; the 'Geneva Bible' was still the favourite personal Bible of English Protestants.

Manchet the finest white bread, used figuratively for religious purity: 'In so much that I am the wheate of God, I am to be grinded by the teeth of beastes, that I may be founde pure breade, or fine manchet' (Meredith Hanmer, trans., The Ancient Ecclesiastical Histories written by Eusebius (1577), III:32; echoed by subsequent writers).

276 Netherlands The Spanish Netherlands (modern Belgium), after the death of Archduke Albert in 1621, was increasingly subservient to Spain; a twelve-year truce between Spain and the Dutch (the United Provinces of the northern Netherlands) had expired in 1621. Whereas Elizabeth I had formed a Protestant military alliance with the Dutch against Spain, James I and Prince Charles were suspicious of the Dutch Republic (because of its hostility to monarchy), and hence favoured an alliance with Catholic Spain or France.

277 Common (because, unlike England, Spain, and most other European states, the United Provinces had a republican government)

279 portugalls Portuguese. (Portugal had been ruled by the king of Spain since 1578.)

280 Indians... Blackbirds Spain effectively enslaved the dark-skinned peoples of its colonies in the Americas; in 1609–10 it had driven the dark-skinned Moriscos (Moors converted to Christianity) from the Iberian peninsula, but continued to be deeply engaged with the Ottoman empire, as Mediterranean neighbours and rivals.

281 Holland a province of the northern Netherlands, 'readie melted' because so much of it is under water; famous for its dairy products, and hence its sauces

284 Zealand another province of the northern Netherlands, particularly associated with puritans, including English dissenters in exile

286 Switzerland most famous for its mercenary soldiers, who could be used to supply any 'want' in a nation's own military forces, and were employed by French and Spanish armies in the 1620s. In the early 1620s Spanish forces invaded the south-eastern Swiss cantons of the Valtellina (modern Italian Valtellina).

287 Polonia Poland, a major European power, recently at war with Russia and the Ottoman empire

290–1 mistrie... Cabinets 'They that fly higher and fixe theyr speculations upon the Mysteries of the Court doe apparently perceive that... Gondomar... hath at his command / and is maister of your Cabinett without a key' (Tom Tell-Troath, 4). (This passage, unique to the earliest text, was probably censored elsewhere, because the exchange establishes Gondomar as the confidant of the Prince of Wales, and the entire Black House as intimate advisors of the British royal family.)

290 mistrie mystery, arcana imperii (Tacitus, Annales), often invoked by James I in defence of what he called 'my prerogative, or mystery of state', to justify the secrecy of his foreign policy. Tom Tell-Troath berates what 'the Polititians call / Arcana imperij' (14).

291 Cabinets chests in which personal treasures could be locked up and hidden away (but also suggesting 'private apartments', especially those used for 'cabinet counsels', advice given to the monarch by courtiers who were admitted into his bedchamber)

- wh.Kt.* when I haue stopt my mouth of one Vice theres another gapes for Foode,
I am as Couetous as a Barren wombe
295 the Graue, or whats more rauennous,
Bl.Kt. wee are for you Sir;
Call you that haynous thats good housbandrie,
why wee make monye of our fayths our prayers
wee make the uerie deathbed buy her Comforts 300 most deerelie paye for all her pious Counsell leauie rich Reuennewes for a fewe weake Orisons or else they passe unreconcilde without em;
did you but uiew the Vaults wthin our Monasterys
Youde sweare then, Plutus wch the Fiction calls 305 the Lord of Riches were entombd wthin em, you cannot walke for Tuns?
wh.K^t ist possible;
Wh.D. but how shall I bestowe the Vice I bring Sir,
you neuer mind mee, I shall bee shut out 310 by youre strickt Key of Life;
Bl.K^t is Yours so fowle Sir;
wh.D. fayth, some thats please to make a Wanton ont
call it infirmittie of bloud, Flesh-Frayltie, but certayne theres a worse Name in youre bookes
fort;
- Bl.Kt.* the Trifle of all Vices, the meere Innocent 315
the uerie Nouice of this house of Claye;
if I but hugg thee hard I showe the worst ont,
tis all the Fruite wee haue here after Supper;
naye at the Ruines of a Nunnerie once 6 thousand Infants heads found in a Fishpond: 320 wh.D. how?
Bl.Kt. I how? how came they thether thinke you?
Huldrick Bishop of Ausburge ins Epistle to Nicholas the first can tell you how maye bee hee Was at clensing of the Pond;
325 I can but laugh to thinke how it would puzzle
all Mother-Maydes that euer liude in that place to Knowe theire owne childes head, but is this all?
Bl.D. are you ours yet?
Wh.Kt. one more, and I am silencst, 330
but this that comes now will diuide us questionlesse, tis io times io times worse then the Forerunners;
Bl.K^t is it so uilde there is no name ordaynde fort Toades haue theire Titles, and Creation gaue
Serpents and Adders those names to bee known by 335
Wh.Kt. this of all Vices beares the hiddenst Venom
the smoothest poyson,—Ime an Archdissembler S^t, Bl.Kt. how?

- 294 Couetous King James and his son Charles repeatedly clashed with Parliament over the ever-expanding royal demand for money. In 1621 Parliament raised taxes to support a war to recover the Palatinate, only to have the money spent for such items as £15,356 in new jewels for King James (Cogswell, '1621', 40). In 1623 the King sent Prince Charles in Madrid (for display and generosity) jewels valued between £80,000 and £200,000 (Redworth, 96).
298–305 why...em (The Catholic sale of absolution had been the immediate impetus for the Reformation.)
298 fayths individual professions of faith
304 Plutus 'Plutus, the god of gold' (Timon 1.1.280); in medieval and Renaissance Europe, the most widely known and performed play ('fiction') of Aristophanes was his Plutus.
312 fayth (an oath which Sir Henry Herbert, Master of the Revels, routinely censored; present only in the earliest manuscript)
313 infirmittie of bloud sexual indulgence, thought to reflect an imbalance in the blood. Buckingham had a reputation for profligacy: in Madrid 'he did a little offend in his wantonness' (Godfrey

- Goodman, The Court of King James the First). 'These are they spend the day in drink and swiving?' ('All the News').
314 a worse Name perhaps 'sodomy', a crime punishable by execution. 'The love the king [James I] showed [his male favourites] was as amorously conveyed, as if he had mistaken their sex, and thought them ladies. . . . the king's kissing them after so lascivious a mode in public, and upon the theatre (as it were) of the world, prompted many to imagine some things done in the tiring house that exceed my expressions no less than they do my experience' (Francis Osborne, Historical Memoires, 1658). In 1619 Sir Francis Bacon imprisoned Isaac Shingleton, an Oxford scholar, 'who preaching in Paules on May day . . . declaimed bitterly against his court, and glaucned (they say) somewhat scandalously at him and his Catamites as he called them' (Chamberlain, 2:243). On 24 April 1623 Joseph Mead heard a chaplain to Archbishop Abbot 'speak wondrous plainly & vehemently against the fearful or flattering silence of our Clergie viz. . . . Who dare call the Great ones Princes of Sodom &c?' (f. 318^v).

- 319–24 at . . . how John Foxe reproduces 'A learned epistle of Hulderike bishop of Augsburg, sent to Pope Nicholas the first', describing how the Pope 'sent unto his fishpond to haue fish, and did see more than six thousand infants' heads brought unto him'; the infanticide is attributed to 'the wicked decree of the single life of priests' (Acts and Monuments, 'The Book of Martyrs'); often subsequently cited by polemicists such as Sampson Price (A Heavenly Proclamation, 1612) and Samuel Hieron, who calls it 'The fruits of monkish lechery' (Sermons, 1624).
323 Ausburge free imperial city in Bavaria (modern Augsburg), famous for waterworks, artificial ponds, and mining. (The armies of the Catholic Maximilian of Bavaria had recently evicted Elizabeth Stuart from the Palatinate.)
337 Ime . . . Archdissembler 'Some paralleled [James I] to Tiberius for dissimulation' (Arthur Wilson, Life and Reign of James I, 1653); his motto was allegedly 'Qui nescit dissimulare, nescit regnare', 'Who does not know how to dissemble, does not know how to rule' (Weldon, King James, 95).

- 340 wh.Kt. tis my Natures Brand, turne from mee, S^r,
the time is yet to come that I er'e spake
what my heart meant!
- Bl.Kt.* and call you that a Vice!
auoyde all prophanation I beseech you
the onelie prime-State-Vertue uppon earth 345 the policie of Empires! oh take heede S^r;
for feare it take displeasure and forsake you,
tis like a Jewell of that prætiuous Value
whose worths unknownen but to the skillfull Lapidarie,
the Instrument that picks ope princes hearts,
350 and locks up ours from them wth the same Motion;
you neuer Yet came neere our Soules till now
- Bl.D.* now youre a Brother to us,
Bl.Kt. what wee haue donne
ha's beene dissemblance euer,
- 355 Wh.K^t. there you Lye then and the Games ours—wee giue thee Checkmate by discouerye;
the Noblest Mate of all;
- Bl.Kt.* Ime lost, Ime taken;
- 360 Wh.Kt. Ambitious, Couetous, luxurious Falshood—Dissembler includes all, Flourish.
- Bl.Q.* all hopes confounded Bl.K. miserable Condition!
Enter White King Q. Bishop white pawnes.
Wh.King: oh let mee blesse mine Armes wth this deere treasure
Truths glorious Masterpeice! see, Queene of Meekenes, 365 hees in my bosome safe, and this fayre Structure of Comlie honor, his true-blest Assistant,
- Wh.Q.* maye theire Integrities euer possesse that peacefull Sanctuarie;
- Wh.K^t.* twas a Game (S^r)
Wun wth much hazard, so wth much more Triumph, 370
I gaue him Check-Mate by discouerie Sir;
- Wh.K.* Obscuritie is now the fittest fauour Falshood can sue for, it well suites perdition
tis theire best course that so haue Lost theire fame to putt theire Heads into the Bagge of Shame; exeunt 375
- T.m.
- Finit Actus Quinti* (··)

347 prætiuous precious

356–7 Checkmate . . . all 'Many other ways may a discoverie bee brought to passe, and oftentimes a Mate giuen by it, which is the noblest Mate of all' (Saul, Chess-Play, E5).

356 Checkmate (English Protestants celebrated the checking of mate: the 'prevention, stopping' of a Spanish 'marriage'.)

358 taken (The revised text adds a stage direction here for 'A great shout and flourish' (Later 5.3.162.1). When Prince Charles returned from Spain, 'all London . . . resounded all over with such shouts, as is not well possible to express' (Francis Ryves, 1623); the air 'was filled with the shouts and acclamations of people' (Taylor, Prince Charles his Welcome.)

361 hopes hope's, hope is. See Zechariah 9:5 ('her hope is confounded, and the king shall perish.') The Black Queen—the Spanish Infanta Donna Maria—appropriately responds to the loss specifically of her 'hope' (implying, from the English perspective, her sexual desire for the English prince).

363–71 oh . . . Sir 'the Conclusion expresseth his H: [Prince Charles's] returne [from Spain]' (John Woolley, 6 August).

366 true-blest Assistant the White Duke.
Of the Duke of Buckingham, Thomas Scott wrote 'How many curses did fill his sayles going towards Spain? . . . But now how many blessings and prayers attend his prosperity, from the same hearts, & mouthes, since his returning, when they finde, he hath showne himself more faithfull to God, to the King, Prince, and his Countrey, then the first Scene of that Act . . . could either assure vs, or suffer vs to imagine' (Vox Dei, 59).

371 I . . . discouerie 'the Prince of Wales
by comming in Person discovered our plot, and found how faire so euer wee pretended, wee meant nothing lesse'
(Scott, 2 Vox Populi, 22).

375 Shame For Middleton's expanded new ending, see Later 5.3.179–Epilogue.10.

A GAME AT CHESS: A LATER FORM

Edited by Gary Taylor

A Game at Chess is a famously complicated literary work which is also famously easy to comprehend immediately. ‘Middleton’s most comprehensive play’ (Howard-Hill) had the longest consecutive run of any English play before the Restoration, and that run would certainly have continued if the play had not been suppressed. In nine days in August 1624, A Game at Chess was seen by perhaps one-seventh of the total population of London, and many more who did not see it heard about it, or heard the ‘extraordinary applause’ and ‘extraordinary concourse’ of its audiences. One contemporary says that, in order to meet the unprecedented demand, it was played twice a day; certainly, for every performance the large Globe theatre was packed to capacity: ‘There was such merriment, hubbub and applause that’ even if someone ‘had been many leagues away it would not have been possible’ not to have noticed it. The play made the King’s Men an unparalleled, scandalous amount of money: ‘£100 a day’ or ‘£200 a day’, or ‘near a thousand pound’ in five days, or ‘£1500’ in all, according to rumours circulating at the time.

But this play, so deliciously transparent to early audiences, has often baffled later readers. In 1877 Anthony Trollope (an industrious man who seldom started a job he did not finish) simply gave up, and confessed ‘I have found that it was impossible to read this piece’. In 1927 T. S. Eliot (a more difficult writer than Trollope, with a tooth for more difficult texts) called the play ‘that perfect piece of literary-political art’, but elsewhere he lamented that no critic had yet appreciated or described its ‘literary and dramatic merit’. Even now, A Game at Chess remains, for most critics, an enigma, as unclassifiable as it was two centuries ago to the theatre historian Charles Dibdin, who described it as ‘anything you please but a play’.

But what makes A Game at Chess hard to read? Stylistically, it is neither difficult nor dull. In the localities of image and phrase A Game at Chess is as varied, strong, and immediate, as surprising-convincing, as any poem or play in English. Its satirical virtuosity ranges from the low physical (‘the fistula of Europe’) to the high metaphysical (‘Thou whore of order!’). It can draw deep and complicated laughter from the simplest question (‘Did I not lie with you?’). It relishes both the starkest of contrasts (‘I’m taken like a blackbird In the great snow’) and the smallest of conjunctions (‘Like three flies with one straw thorough their buttocks’). It plays games with every sexual nuance of ordinary language, including particularly and systematically ‘game’ and ‘play’, whose chords are sounded in its first sentence; ‘work’ works in complicated counterpoint to both. The Black House is characterized by leitmotifs of fire and soot, but those flames do not, as we might expect, foreshadow the conventional ecology of hell; here, hell is—simply, unforgettably—a shapeless overcrowded bag. What Sartre laboured a whole play to say, Middleton compressed into a single theatrical image: hell is other people. The bag image, effortlessly dense and lucid at the same time, epitomizes the play’s metaphorical compounding of ideas in things (‘the swallow of my conscience Has but a narrow passage’). The resulting sentences can be brusque and brutal (‘Fat cathedral bodies Have very often but lean little souls’). But they can also be lingeringly beautiful:

Upon those lips (the sweet fresh buds of youth)
The holy dew of prayer lies like pearl
Dropped from the op’ning eyelids of the morn
Upon the bashful rose.

Milton stole from this when writing Lycidas (1637):

Together both, ere the high lawns appeared
Under the opening eyelids of the morn,
We drove afield . . .

But what is in Milton merely an inert poeticism belongs in Middleton to a sustained intertwining of sanctity, eroticism, and pain. The romantic resonances of Elizabethan love poetry (virgin lips are rosebuds, not yet opened, red because blushing) and classical allusion (the goddess Aurora rising from her lover’s bed) are replayed with an assurance as haunting as ever—but something’s wrong. The description, conventional enough in a sonneteer, is here spoken by a priest, and the dew of prayer becomes a precious tear running from the eyes to the lips of a devout young daughter observed by her father awakening in bed. The ‘eyelids of the morn’ open to realize what they have done the night before, and that moment of embarrassed, pained awakening is precisely what the observer relishes. He goes on to imagine ‘How beauteously A gentle fast, not rigorously imposed, Would look upon that cheek’, and to recommend (‘to beat down frailty’) a penance ‘Whose utmost cruelty should not exceed The first fear of a bride’ (l. l. 77–85). What excites him, what he turns into exquisite poetry, is a vision of purity shamed and beauty in just a little pain.

No doubt, reading A Game at Chess is more difficult than reading Lycidas, not because Middleton’s language is more complex but simply because all plays are harder to read than poems. But that forever-everywhere difference between script and performance will not account for this particular play’s unique, often-remarked resistance to legibility. That resistance is most often attributed to the passage of time: modern readers, it is said, do not understand the complicated historical context of the play. But the play also proved illegible to its two earliest known readers. If the censor, Sir Henry Herbert, had fully understood the manuscript of A Game at Chess, the play would almost certainly never have been licensed for performance. The first known reader of the play in a printed edition—a Cambridge intellectual named Joseph Mead—was equally confused. In a letter dated 25 May 1625, Mead wrote that ‘The play called the game at chess is in print, but because I have no skill in the game I understand it not.’ Mead’s correspondence demonstrates that he assiduously followed domestic and foreign politics and gossip; indeed, I sometimes cite his letters in my historical commentary on the Early text. His difficulty, like the censor’s, cannot have been due to ignorance of the play’s political background.

Mead attributed his incomprehension to the fact that he had ‘no skill in the game,’ that is, he did not know how to play chess. But it is impossible to believe that all those tens of thousands of spectators in August 1624 were chessmasters. The difference between early readers and early spectators results, instead, from the difference in what was visible to each. A spectator at the play simply saw a series of recognizable historical figures (the Spanish Ambassador Gondomar, the Archbishop of Spalato, King James, Prince Henry, the Duke of Buckingham, King Felipe) and saw individuals who belonged to recognizable social categories (a Jesuit priest, a lay Jesuitess, an English Protestant minister). Twelve different contemporary witnesses identify Gondomar as the main character; indeed, the play was sometimes called ‘Gondomar’, as though that were its title. In performances of A Game at Chess (and in the Later text, which follows this introduction), the literal visible sense was political and social; the chess game was a secondary trope. By contrast, in early texts of the play (and in the Early text, which precedes this introduction), in order to evade the censor the political sense had to be deliberately veiled, and the chess game was instead the only visible sense.

A reader of the early texts (or the Early text) encounters a series of actions and speeches attributed to characters identified as WQP, BQP, BBP, WBP, etc. This system of abbreviated signs creates an almost insuperable problem of reference; in order to understand the action, a series of cryptic shifting initials first has to be translated into the sign system of chess (White Queen’s Pawn, Black Queen’s Bishop’s Pawn, etc.). Modern editions usually expand the initials, but that does not in itself solve the problem.

The play’s characters are at least as fully realized as those in Middleton’s other late masterpieces; in fact, some of them—like Black Knight or Fat Bishop—might be described as hyperindividualized. But it is easier for readers to keep track of a character labelled ‘Beatrice’ or ‘Isabella’ than of one labelled ‘White Queen’s Pawn’. In a game of chess, there can only be a single White Queen’s Pawn; the designator specifies a unique individual, precisely located in relation to others. But, as a textual label, ‘White

Queen’s Pawn’ (unlike ‘Isabella’) achieves its individuality by the combination of a series of markers which are not themselves individualized: there are two queens, many pawns, and even more whites. Most readers must consciously work to keep differentiating ‘White Queen’s Pawn’ from ‘White King’s Pawn’, ‘Black Queen’s Pawn’, etc. And even when we can keep track, the labels do not sound human.

In part, this confusion is anachronistic. Renaissance chess pieces had not yet been reduced to their standardized modern abstract shapes; the figures were often individualized. All the pieces, moreover, represented recognizable social classes—just like the unnamed pages, ladies, knights, bishops, and dukes in other Middleton plays. On the stage of the Globe, White Bishop would have looked like a real bishop, not like a Staunton chess piece. The signs for ‘real bishop’ and ‘chess bishop’ were not distinct.

Moreover, in performance—in London (1624), at Oxford (1971), and Cambridge (1973)—the body and voice of the player make each character immediately recognizable and obviously human. But these facts remove only a part of the difficulty. The more fundamental problem is that the play forces us to imagine characters who are both persons and pieces. At any given moment, we can interpret their actions either in terms of chess, or in terms of life. Moreover, because some (or all?) characters impersonate identifiable individuals, we must decide whether to interpret their actions in terms of local facts or universal fictions. At any given moment, is Fat Bishop a chess piece, the historical Archbishop of Spalato, a caricature of the Jacobean episcopate, the familiar actor (and playwright) William Rowley, a conventional fat fool, or an epitome of hypocritical careerism in any age?

The word ‘chess’ referred, not only to the familiar board game, but more generally to ‘layers’ or ‘tiers’ or ‘rows’ (*OED sb*²). Which layer is in play? Chess? History? Theatre? Literary convention? Human nature? In chess, everything signifies. There are no meaningless positions. Moreover, meaning is positional; it belongs—like language, or politics, or character, or the label ‘White Queen’s Pawn’—to a system, and has meaning only within that system. The problem for players is to remain aware of all the multiplying combinations of systematic significance created by successive moves.

A Game at Chess creates similar problems. There is too much meaning. Readers can begin to feel overwhelmed by possibilities, frustrated by the sense that we cannot hold suspended all the meanings in play. This frustration is intensified by the impression that the play is—as various critics have called it—a ‘simple’ morality play, or a ‘transparent’ political allegory, which ought to be easy enough to understand. (As the modern grandmaster Capablanca observed, ‘apparently simple moves are in reality of a very complicated nature’.)

This is more than the usual hermeneutic problem created by what an Elizabethan critic called ‘the courtly figure allegoria’. Allegories—like Spenser’s Faerie Queene,

which also begins with a character named 'Error'—always force readers to sort various orders of meaning, and to be intelligible at all an allegory must supply a set of translation-codes, or make use of a set already widely known. In the case of Middleton's divine comedy, the protocols of reading were provided by what Arthur Saul called The Famous Game of Chess Play (1614, 1618). By contrast with the play's historical subject matter, that game is transhistorical, and still familiar to millions of readers; Lewis Carroll, Stefan Zweig, and Vladimir Nabokov have taken chess as metaphor or matter for major modern novels. As in A Game at Chess, the daughter-heroine of Through the Looking Glass is a White Queen's Pawn; the contest of ideologies played out by Middleton and Zweig can be seen in representations of chess since a Spanish illuminated manuscript of 1283, which pits Christian against Moslem (Schafroth, 36–7); the sexual politics of the game, as important to Middleton as to Nabokov, appear as early as fourteenth-century images of Tristan and Isolde (Schafroth, 52, 58–9). Middleton may have been influenced by the 'living chess game' in Rabelais's Gargantua et Pantagruel and by the related 'game in which the vices fight a pitched battle with the virtues' in Thomas More's Utopia. More generally, as Paul Yachnin has demonstrated, he drew upon—and significantly altered—a long tradition of chess allegory. In plays and paintings, chess had already been used as an emblem of contest, sexual (as in Fletcher and Massinger's The Spanish Curate) or political (as in Chapman's Bussy D'Ambois); A Game at Chess combines both, exploring the intertwined relationship between seduction and conversion. But Middleton also, for the first time, turns the colour-coded game into an emblem of modern racial politics: the Spanish ambassador indignantly objected that the King of Spain was represented in the play as 'the king of the blacks', while the Anglo leader of the 'White House' was 'the king of the whites' (Taylor 2005).

But the allegorical key provided by chess, though it contributes to the play's proliferation of meanings, does not solve all our difficulties; in fact, it creates new difficulties. Chess applies strict rules to a strictly ruled space. But the play repeatedly breaks the rules. In fact, its first two lines lead us to expect discrepancies between game and play: 'What of the game called chess-play can be made To make a stage-play shall this day be played'. Playing on the verb make—to compel, and to create—Middleton announces that the creation of his play depends upon doing violence to chess. The conventions of Renaissance theatre cannot accommodate all the conventions of chess. More fundamentally, the conventions of chess cannot accommodate the realities of either sex or politics. Rape is not a possible move in chess. Neither is betrayal.

A Game at Chess is not only an allegory, but also a critique, of chess. Chess depends upon absolute distinctions, upon the maintenance of fixed visible categories created by precise rules. Like Nabokov's The Defence, Middleton's A Game at Chess combines this totally ordered universe with the disordered world of 'a dream' (Induction.49). Dreams have no rules and no fixed categories. The very clarity and regularity of chess provides a background against which irregularities are conspicuously foregrounded. In chess, for instance, the distinction between Black House and White House is always absolutely clear. In Middleton's dream-play, it is not. White King's Pawn and Fat Bishop appear to be white, but are in fact black. It is possible, in bed, simply to substitute Black Queen's Pawn for White Queen's Pawn; Black Bishop's Pawn cannot tell the difference. And in the final scene, both White Knight and White Duke are guilty of 'dissemblance'; they deliberately pretend to belong to a category to which they do not belong. This is the sin which they expose in the Black House. The 'discovery' which makes possible a final and systematic distinction between White House (which wins and is saved) and Black House (which loses and is damned) is the result of an action which blurs that very distinction.

In chess, players ought to obey the rules. But what if it were impossible to obey them? This is exactly what the Protestant Reformation supposes: that sin is damnable and inevitable. Luther and Calvin objected to the Roman Catholic view that people could earn salvation by obedience to moral laws. No one, Luther insisted, can avoid mixing the categories of good and evil—not even a White Knight in shining armour. Christ had come to save us from the law, to offer a new covenant in which salvation was determined not by human merit (obeying the rules) but by divine grace (forgiveness for breaking the rules). A Game at Chess dramatizes the central philosophical problem of the Reformation: how are the categories 'saved' and 'damned' constructed? Which is to say: how is any category constructed?

Categories are constructed by laws, by rules, by what Jacques Derrida calls 'the law of genre'. Black House is distinguished from White House by the Black belief that the category salvation is constructed by obedience to certain rules. But if people can merit the right to be sorted into the 'saved' category, what determines whether they have done enough to deserve admission? Not surprisingly, the dominant emotion of the Black pieces—especially evident in Loyola, Fat Bishop, and Black Queen's Pawn—is resentment: their good works, they believe, have not been properly rewarded. As belief in 'merit' (a word only used by Black pieces) leads to resentment, so belief in obedience leads to rebellion. 'Boundless obedience' (2.1.39)—an unbounded imposition of boundaries, an unrestrained restraining—is an impossible and self-defeating paradox. The insistence upon obedience to a human superior leads, in practice, to rebellion against a divine law, in this case the law against fornication.

The Black House in fact desires the kind of fornication which most fundamentally mixes categories: incest. In 2.1, White Queen's Pawn—whom Black Bishop's Pawn repeatedly calls his 'daughter'—is asked to give herself, sexually, to her spiritual 'father'. Black Bishop's Pawn demands sexual satisfaction as proof of 'a daughter's duty', an obedience owed to him simply as a function of his paternal status; indeed, he characterizes his invitation to intercourse not as an abuse of power, but as a special favour, demonstrating his intention 'to honour [her] above all daughters'. When White Queen's Pawn refuses—when she objects to his mixing of the genres of fatherly divinity and Petrarchan love poetry—he abuses her verbally for her disobedience, which must be punished. The punishment consists of the forced satisfaction of the very desire she has refused to satisfy voluntarily. The request for sex in the name of obedience, when denied, justifies rape. Continued paternal authority can only be guaranteed if 'all his young tractable sweet obedient daughters' remain silent about the father's illicit desire; her silence can only be guaranteed if she herself is made guilty of fornication, the very crime of which she would accuse the father. After a daughter is raped, she can only accuse the father by admitting that she is no longer a virgin, and has committed incest: to accuse him is to accuse herself. In Middleton the priest's sexual abuse of his parishioner is heterosexual, but it springs from the same confusion of sexual and sacred authority found in our contemporary Church scandals.

This daughter is fortuitously saved, when the father is momentarily distracted by his own fear of 'discovery'. (The rape of a daughter depends on the privacy of a 'Black House', a privileged circumscribed space in which the father can act with impunity, undetected by others.) The father's fear of discovery allows the daughter to escape, and later she publicly accuses the would-be rapist. But, as often happens, the daughter's accusation is not believed, is categorized as slander of an innocent man with a spotless reputation; consequently, the would-be rapist escapes, and the abused daughter is punished. The White King concludes—as would Sigmund Freud, in rejecting testimony of incestuous abuse—'I ever believed rather the accuser false Than the professor vicious' (2.2.218–19). By the orders of the ultimate male authority in the White House, the almost-raped daughter is punished, characteristically, by being returned to the very House in which she was earlier threatened with rape, and where she will now be tormented by being locked in a room full of pornographic pictures (Taylor 2000).

Middleton clearly expects us to reject the category 'Boundless obedience'. But the Black House is defeated, not because of its programmatic regime of obedience, but because individual black pieces seek their own advantage; they are not obedient enough.

ERROR

Why, would you have 'em play against themselves?

That's quite against the rule of game, Ignatius.

IGNATIUS

Push! I would rule myself, not observe rule.

The Black House is the category, simultaneously, of unruly individuality and unbounded obedience. The insistence upon rules ends in the dissolution of all boundaries, sexual and political—a world epitomized by the jumbled chaos of the 'bag'.

If obedience ends in the bag, it begins in the act of confession, staged in the play's first scene. The Black House demands that initiates confess their sins:

The privat'st thought that runs to hide itself
In the most secret corner of your heart now
Must be of my acquaintance (1.1.124–6).

Everyone must obey this command, which records the breaking of commandments. The rule of confession demands that people categorize themselves by means of the categories of rule they have broken. Confession earns people salvation, by revealing that they have not earned salvation.

Middleton demonstrated, long before Michel Foucault, that confession is an instrument of power, by which the boundaries between one person and another—between private self and public authority—are broken down. In A Game at Chess confessions are cynically exploited, for political and sexual advantage, by the confessors of the Black House. We know this because the confessor tells us so, in an aside (1.1.109–16). But what is an aside? A theatrical confession. A Game at Chess is full of asides and soliloquies; pieces repeatedly unabashedly reveal their own 'most secret frailties' to the audience; in the final scene, the Black House voluntarily confesses all its vices to the White Knight, White Duke, and (presumably) White Audience. A Game at Chess opposes confession, and depends upon it. Confession makes possible the play's extraordinary transparency. As in chess, everything is visible, and victory depends, not upon force, but upon a change of perception: 'discovery'.

Most remarkably, the play even manages to stage invisibility. Who is moving the pieces in A Game at Chess? They believe they are free agents, making their own moves, but the very conceit of a chess game implies the existence of at least one, usually two, players. We cannot see any, but does that mean they do not exist? 'You may deny so A dial's motion, cause you cannot see The hand move, or a wind that rends the cedar' (1.1.292–4).

Theologically, the onstage pieces are being moved by God and the devil, or by the one invisible God of Calvinism, who alone wills both salvation and damnation. But theatrically, the onstage pieces are being moved by an off-stage author. This similarity between plotting playwright and plotting God was and is familiar enough to readers and audiences acquainted with Measure for Measure and The Tempest, but Middleton, in contrast to Shakespeare, never brings his creator on stage. He refuses to visualize the invisible. By refusing, of course, he leaves open the possibility that God is not there at all.

Instead of an onstage impersonation of God, we get a Fat Bishop (author of satirical books) and a Black Knight (a director as 'facetious' as Middleton himself was said to be). John Russell Brown has denied that directors existed in the Elizabethan theatre, which emphasized instead the improvisational freedom of actors. But the complex logistics of a Lord Mayor's show clearly demanded a director, and in 1617 Middleton began directing (as well as writing) those shows. Pageant speeches were normally delivered by child actors; Middleton had written for companies of child actors at the Blackfriars and Paul's; for the adult companies, he wrote plays particularly remarkable for female roles played by boy actors. Adult actors may have insisted upon their interpretive freedom, but children—like the puppets of The Revenger's Tragedy and Wit at Several Weapons—took direction. Shakespeare and Rowley were actors; Middleton was a director.

In A Game at Chess, the most spectacular play of its period, Middleton successfully transferred onto the public stage the 'total theatre' of Lord Mayors' shows. This impulse can be seen, earlier, in the songs and machines of The Witch and Macbeth, in Hengist's spectacular fiery conclusion, in the stage-masque of World Tossed at Tennis, in the extraordinarily complicated final scene of Women, Beware Women. The individual components of this stagecraft are not new; what is new is the concentration and concatenation of effects which require an extraordinarily precise control of every element of the whole theatrical space, both within and outside of the spectator's view. More than any other play of its time, A Game at Chess—with its transformation of stage into chessboard, uniformed oppositions of costuming and colour, formalization of space and movement, exploitation of particulars of impersonation, specially designed and unrepeatable properties—is a director's play.

It is also a play which, more than any other of its time, demystifies and opposes obedience. But this critique of obedience could only be performed through repeated acts of obedience. White Queen's Pawn is given a text which instructs her in obedience to her spiritual director; the child actor playing White Queen's Pawn was given a script containing instructions for speech and action. If the actor had not obeyed Middleton's written and spoken directions—if, like the character, he had rejected the book's demands—the play could not have been performed.

Likewise, the play rejects dissemblance, but depends upon it. Actors are, by definition, people who deliberately pretend to belong to categories to which they do not really belong. When the Black Knight says, 'What we have done Has been dissemblance ever' (5.3.157–8), he speaks for both the character and the actor. In this sense, all the actors, on both sides of the chessboard, belong to the Black House. Dissemblance and obedience—the generic marks of the Black House—are also the generic marks of the Play House.

So is the unnatural mixing of sexual categories. White Queen's Pawn was played by a boy actor. Boy actors were instructed, by an older male, to dress up in women's clothes and enact scenes of seduction, involving sexual innuendo, touching, fondling, kissing. The male actor playing White Queen's Pawn pretends not to have a penis; the male actor playing White Bishop's Pawn pretends to have been castrated.

A Game at Chess depends upon what it rejects: chess, obedience, confession, dissembling, totalizing power, sexual mismatching. Its most irresistible roles, for both actors and audiences, are the Fat Bishop and Black Knight. We enjoy what we repudiate. We enjoy them in part because we know they will lose. They are confined, contained, within the boundaries of a 'game'. A Game at Chess belongs, not simply to the genre of chess literature, but to the much larger genre of game literature. But the category 'game' is itself, as Wittgenstein insisted, fundamentally unstable. It is also surprisingly close to the category 'philosophy'—as James I complained, when he called chess a 'philosophic . . . folly'. A Game at Chess belongs to a genre of philosophical game also played by Aristophanes, Calderon, Goethe, and Beckett.

In the end, the world is divided into two simple categories, as all the Black pieces are swept from the board. But this finality and simplicity, like all the play's other categories, self-deconstructs. Ezra Pound's poem 'The Game of Chess' ends with the phrase 'Renewal of contest'. Middleton's apocalyptic play—which begins, in its title, with the word 'a'—ends with the word 'again'. This is only one game; there will be others. But, despite the play's characteristic modesty about its own merit, there will never be another play quite like this. It belongs to a category of one.

SEE ALSO

A Game at Chess: An Early Form, 1773

General textual introduction: Companion, 712

List of works cited: Companion, 848

Textual introduction and apparatus: Companion, 912

Authorship and date: Companion, 439

Related poems: 'To the worthily accomplished Master William Hammond', 1896; 'To the King', 1895; 'The Picture plainly explained, after the manner of the chess play', 1897

A Game at Chess

as it was acted nine days together
by the King's Men at the Globe on the bankside

[PERSONS AND PIECES OF THE PLAY

The whole play is a chessboard.

THE BLACK HOUSE, Spain

THE WHITE HOUSE, England

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR (Black Queen's Knight), Don Diego Sarmiento de Acuña, Conde de Gondomar, ambassador from Black King Felipe to the White House; suffers from an anal fistula, which is public knowledge, and which requires him to sit in a special chair and be carried in a special litter

JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN (Black Queen's Bishop's Pawn), a lecherous Jesuit priest in England; confessor to the Black Knight, Black Knight's Pawn, Black Queen's Pawn, and White Queen's Pawn (whom he wishes to seduce)

VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN, a devout unmarried English lady; literate, young, and fair; formerly betrothed to the White Bishop's Pawn before he was castrated

JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN, a member of the society of female Jesuits; formerly seduced by the Black Bishop's Pawn

FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO (White King's Bishop), gluttonous, lecherous, greedy, polemical author; former Catholic, recently converted to the Protestant cause, now resident in the White House; played by the acting company's leading clown

WHITE KING JAMES, King James I of England, aging political leader of the White House, father of White Knight Charles, patron of the Fat Bishop of Spalato and the White King's Counsellor Pawn

BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER (Black Queen's Knight's Pawn), a Catholic servant of the Black Knight and unsuccessful suitor to the White Queen's Pawn; responsible for castrating his sexual rival, the White Bishop's Pawn

WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES (White Queen's Knight), Charles Stuart, Knight of the Order of the Garter, English Protestant champion, young son and heir of White King James, companion and ally of White Duke of Buckingham

Ghost of Saint IGNATIUS LOYOLA, Spanish Catholic, former soldier, lame; founder of the Jesuit Order, a missionary society dedicated to resisting the Protestant Reformation

JESUIT BLACK BISHOP (Black Queen's Bishop), Father General of the Society of Jesus, ecclesiastical superior of all Jesuits

WHITE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM (White Queen's Duke), companion and ally of White Knight Charles; court favourite of White King James

WHITE QUEEN [OF BOHEMIA], daughter of White King James, sister of White Knight Charles, patron of the White Queen's Pawn; object of Black King Felipe's desire

ERROR, a personification of deviance

BLACK QUEEN MARIA, Spanish princess, sister of the Black King, proposed bride of White Knight Charles, and thus intended as a future Queen of the White House

BLACK KING FELIPE, King Felipe IV of Habsburg Spain, young lecherous Spanish Catholic; political leader of the Black House

WHITE BISHOP'S GELDED PAWN (White Queen's Bishop's Pawn), a Protestant minister; formerly betrothed to the White Queen's Pawn, before he was castrated by his rival (the Black Knight's Pawn Gelder)

This commentary focuses on literary and theatrical matters, including Biblical allusions (which many spectators and readers would recognize). For historical commentary see Early.

Title together in a row

bankside area on the south bank of the Thames

Persons Probably for reasons of censorship, no early text contains a list of characters. This list is editorial, but all information not in square brackets comes from the text itself or an early witness. The order of characters is based on the number of words in each role, from most to least.

2-3 BLACK . . . WHITE (words with racial as well as moral meanings, then as now:

Spaniards were typically darker-skinned than Englishmen, ruled over an empire with many black and brown peoples, and had imported many slaves from tropical regions.)

28 SPALATO Italian name for Split, in modern Croatia; in 1624, part of the Venetian empire

WHITE KING'S COUNSELLOR PAWN, a trusted political adviser of White King James, secretly working for the Black House

WHITE BISHOP [OF CANTERBURY] (White Queen's Bishop), religious leader of the White House; an ardent Protestant, patron of the White Bishop's Pawn

PROLOGUE

BLACK DUKE OLIVARES (Black Queen's Duke), dark-skinned Spanish Catholic, court favourite (and lover) of Black King Felipe

BLACK PAWN, a servant in the Black House

FAT BISHOP'S PAWN (White King's Bishop's Pawn), a servant in the White House

Dancing Statues]

Prologue [Enter] the Prologue [in a black cloak]

PROLOGUE

What of the game called chess-play can be made
 To make a stage-play shall this day be played.
 First you shall see the men in order set,
 States and their pawns, when both the sides are met;
 5 The houses well distinguished; in the game
 Some men entrapped and taken, to their shame,
 Rewarded in their play; and in the close
 You shall see checkmate given to virtue's foes.
 But the fair'st jewel that our hopes can deck
 10 Is so to play our game t'avoid your check. [Exit]

Of any my disciples, sons and heirs
 As well of my designs as institution. 5
 I thought they'd spread over the world by this time,
 Covered the earth's face and made dark the land
 Like the Egyptian grasshoppers.
 Here's too much light appears shot from the eyes
 Of truth and goodness never yet deflow' red; 10
 Sure they were never here. Then is their monarchy Unperfect yet—a just reward, I see,
 For their ingratitude so long to me,
 Their father and their founder.
 It's not five years since I was sainted by 'em. 15
 Where slept my honour all the time before?
 Could they be so forgetful to canōnise
 Their prosperous institutor? When they'd sainted me,
 They found no room in all their calendar
 To place my name (that should have removed princes, 20 Pulled the most eminent prelates by the roots up

Induction The Induction. Ignatius Loyola [in his black Jesuit habit] appearing, Error at his foot as asleep

IGNATIUS LOYOLA

Ha? Where? What angle of the world is this?
 That I can neither see the politic face
 Nor with my refined nostrils taste the footsteps

69 PROLOGUE (could be doubled with any roles except Loyola and Error)
 76 DANCING STATUES (the only other roles in the play that might have been doubled, perhaps by the actors who played Loyola and Error, perhaps by the White King, Queen, Bishop, or Bishop's Pawn)
Prologue.1-2 made To make compelled to fashion
 2 this day today (but especially pointed here, when actors and audiences were aware that the play might be banned by tomorrow)
played (mixing the senses 'playing a game' and 'performing a play') 3 men (a) persons (b) chess pieces order (a) positions required at the outset of a chess game (b) hierarchical relationship of real persons 4 States offices of importance and power (i.e. bishop, duke, etc.)
are met (a) have encountered one another (b) are encountered by the audience

5 houses (a) families, lineages, races (b) place of abode of a religious fraternity (c) opposing sides in chess. Perhaps also (d) 'mansions' (since each side was associated with a separate stage entrance: see 1.1.0.2-4).
well distinguished (a) recognizably distinguishable from one another (b) socially and politically eminent 7 Rewarded (a) recompensed (b) punished
 9 our...deck can decorate, crown, our hopes
 10 check rebuke (punning on technical meaning, in chess)
Induction.0.1 Ignatius Loyola (not named on stage until l. 37, but presumably dressed as a Jesuit)
 0.2 appearing (perhaps rising through the trapdoor, as if coming from hell) Error (may be female, as in Spenser's Faerie Queene, or male, as in Truth, where Error wears a 'garment of ash-colour silk, his head rolled in a cloud, over which stands an owl, a mole on one shoulder, a bat on the other, all symbols of blind ignorance and darkness, mists hanging at his eyes')

 1 angle corner (punning on England, 'Angle-Land')
 2 politic manipulating, deliberate, not spontaneous but consciously deployed for political advantage
 5 institution i.e., the Society of Jesus, founded by Loyola
 8 Egyptian grasshoppers (Exodus 10:14)
 9-10 light...goodness (Exodus 24:17, Daniel 10:6, Psalms 19:8, Revelation 1:14)
 9 eyes (thought to actively radiate light, not just passively receive it)
 10 deflow' red (a) deprived of its originary state of intactness (b) raped 11 they 'my disciplines'
 15 sainted canonized, officially enrolled in the calendar of saints
 17 to canōnise about canonizing
 18 prosperous institutor successful founder, founder of a rich institution

For my dear coming, to make way for me),
 Let every petty martyr, and saint homily,
 Roch, Maine, and Petronill (itch- and ague-curers),
 25 Your Abbess Aldegund, and Cunigund,
 The widow Marcell, parson Polycarp,
 Cic'ly and Urs'ly, all take place of me,
 And but for the bissextile, or leap year—
 And that's but one in three—I fall by chance
 30 Into the nine-and-twenti'th day of February.
 There were no room else for me. See their love,
 Their conscience too, to thrust me, a lame soldier,
 Into leap year. My wrath's up, and methinks
 I could with the first syllable of my name
 35 Blow up their colleges.—Up, Error, wake!
 Father of supererogation, rise!
 It is Ignatius calls thee: Loyola.

ERROR
 What have you done? O I could sleep in ignorance
 Immortally, the slumber is so pleasing.

40 I saw the bravest setting for a game now
 That ever my eye fixed on.

IGNATIUS LOYOLA 'Game'? What game?

ERROR
 The noblest game of all, a game at chess
 'Twixt our side and the White House, the men set
 In their just order ready to go to't.

IGNATIUS LOYOLA
 45 Were any of my sons placed for the game?

ERROR
 Yes, and a daughter too, a secular daughter
 That plays the Black Queen's Pawn, he the Black Bishop's.

IGNATIUS LOYOLA
 If ever pow'r could show a mast'ry in thee,

23 Let them allow (continuing grammar of l. 19)

saint homily 'Saint Sermon', holy preacher

24 ague (a) fever (b) fit itch (a) skin disease (b) restless propensity, appetite

25 Your colloquial collective pronoun (= 'one's')

27 Cic'ly...Urs'ly nicknames for Cecilia and Ursula (usually lower-class)

take place demonstrate their higher social status, by claiming a more desirable location of from

28 bissextile leap-year or leap-day (Latin)

29 one in three one leap-year, for every three normal years

32 lame crippled (therefore ill-equipped to 'leap')

34 first syllable ignis (Latin), 'fire'

35 colleges seminaries, monasteries

36 supererogation (a) overpayment (b) a Catholic doctrine, regarded by Protestants as a fundamental theological error (c) suggesting 'super-error'

39 Immortally literally, 'without ever dying', but here it is only 'sleep' which is eternally uninterrupted (by contrast with saved Christians, who do not sleep forever, but wake and rise from their graves at the Second Coming)

40 bravest most splendid

42 noblest game Chess represents in game form the pursuits of the most powerful and admired families (courtiership, diplomacy, war).

47 plays impersonates, takes the role of

48 mast'ry expert proficiency

52.1 Music 'invisible' music—played by offstage musicians—was often used to suggest magical or supernatural effects; it probably continues until the pieces exit, at l. 76.1.

52.1-2 Enter...House 'Living chess'—chess played with human beings as pieces, moving on a giant board—has been recorded since the fifteenth century. A full board would require 32 pieces (in addition to the two observers), but only five of the eight main pieces of each house speak (King, Queen, Queen's

Let it appear in this.

ERROR
 It's but a dream,
 A vision, you must think.

IGNATIUS LOYOLA I care not what,
 50 So I behold the children of my cunning
 And see what rank they keep.

Music. Enter severally the White House and Black House, as in order of the game

ERROR
 You have your wish.
 Behold, there's the full number of the game,
 Kings and their pawns, queens, bishops, knights and dukes.

IGNATIUS LOYOLA
 'Dukes'? They're called 'rooks' by some.

ERROR
 Corruptively. 55

Le Roc the word, Custode de la Roche,
 The Keeper of the Forts, in whom both kings
 Repose much confidence, and for their trust' sake,
 Courage and worth, do well deserve those titles.

IGNATIUS LOYOLA
 Thy answer's high. I see my son and daughter. 60

ERROR
 Those are two pawns, the Black Queen's and Black Bishop's.

IGNATIUS LOYOLA
 Pawns argue but poor spirits and slight preferments,
 Not worthy of the name of my disciples.

If I had stood so nigh, I would have cut
 That Bishop's throat but I'd have had his place 65
 And told the Queen a love tale in her ear
 Would make her best pulse dance. There's no elixir
 Of brain or spirit amongst 'em.

ERROR
 Why, would you have 'em play against themselves?

Bishop, Queen's Knight, Queen's Rook); if each has a pawn, this moment would require only 22 performers (a more manageable total). The choice of the Queen's side emphasizes the political and symbolic importance of the two contrasting Queens.

52.1 severally separately. In chess the Queen's side is on the left for Black, on the right for White, so the White House probably enters on the right, the Black House on the left, the 'sinister side' associated with the damned (Ecclesiastes 10:2).

56 Le Roc...Roche 'the rock...the keeper of the rock' (French), with 'rock' imagined as the site of a fortress; a conjectural etymology of 'rook'—the commoner title for the chess piece here called 'duke'.

60 high dignified, high in value, appropriate for someone of high rank

my...daughter (recognizably dressed as Jesuits)

64 nigh close

67 elixir quintessence, precious juice

At I.I.O.2-4 Black Queen's Pawn enters (a); at I.I.O.3-5 White Queen's Pawn enters (b); then at I.I.30.1-2 Black Bishop's Pawn enters, threatening White Queen's Pawn (c). In these diagrams of the opening, the pieces above the upper dotted line or below the lower dotted line are not visible to the audience.

70 That's quite against the rule of game, Ignatius.

IGNATIUS LOYOLA

Push! I would rule myself, not observe rule.

ERROR

Why then you'd play a game all by yourself.

IGNATIUS LOYOLA

I would do anything to rule alone.

It's rare to have the world reined in by one.

ERROR

75 See 'em anon, and mark 'em in their play.

Observe: as in a dance they glide away.

[Exeunt both houses]

IGNATIUS LOYOLA

O with what longings will this breast be tossed

Until I see this great game won and lost! Exeunt

[Incipit] Actus Primus

Enter from the Black House the Jesuitess Black Queen's Pawn (a woman-pawn in black), [then] from the White House the Virgin White Queen's Pawn (a woman-pawn in white)

JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN [as to herself]

I ne'er see that face but my pity rises.

When I behold so clear a masterpiece
Of heaven's art, wrought out of dust and ashes,
And at next thought to give her lost eternally
(In that not ours, but the daughter of heresy),
My soul bleeds at mine eyes.

VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN [aside]

Where should truth speak
If not in such a sorrow? They're tears plainly.
Beshrew me if she weep not heartily.

I.I

5

71 Push pish (meaningless expletive; but also slang for 'fuck')

74 reined in controlled (but also suggesting 'reigned')

reined...one Judges 9:12, Romans 5:17

75 mark pay attention to

76 dance Chess had been associated with dance since Francesco Colonna's chess allegory (1467) and the fifth book of Rabelais's Gargantua (1564).

78 won and lost won [by one side] and [consequently] lost [by the other], as in chess; but the phrase paradoxically conflates winning and losing
Exeunt (perhaps spectacularly: according to an eyewitness account, Loyola here 'vanisheth')

I.I.O.2-4 from...from This formula suggests that each 'house' was identified with a separate door for its exits and entrances, a staging device associated with classical drama and English morality plays.

0.2-3 Black Queen's Pawn initiating a well-known chess opening (Queen's Gambit Declined): see Illustrations. Black Queen's Pawn (named first in the stage direction, and speaking first) moves forward first, followed by White Queen's Pawn, then Black Bishop's Pawn (l. 30.1); she could take the Black Bishop's Pawn, but does not, and instead the next forward move is the entrance of the White Bishop's Pawn (l. 195.1), followed by the Black Knight's Pawn (l. 205.1-1.1.205.2). Chess games usually begin with pawn play, and in Act I only a single non-pawn appears (the Black Knight).

0.3 in dressed in

1 as to herself (she pretends to be speaking to herself, but intends to be overheard—thus deliberately manipulating the theatrical conventions of aside and soliloquy)

that (the White Queen's Pawn's)

2 clear (a) evident (b) fair, light-coloured (in contrast to 'dust and ashes')

3 heaven's art divine workmanship. (All creatures were made by the Creator; but here implying a contrast with 'merely human craft' and 'devilish artfulness'.)
dust and ashes Genesis 3:19, 18:27, Job 30:19, 42:5: 'ashes to ashes, dust to dust' ('Order for the Burial of the Dead', Book of Common Prayer)

4 give concede, acknowledge

lost (a) damned (b) forfeited in a game

5 daughter of woman who embodies an abstract quality (Biblical idiom)

6 My...eyes (tears being to the soul as blood is to the body)

8 Beshrew curse, damn

VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN

But how are those in voto employed, lady,
Till they receive the habit?

JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN

They're not idle.

50 He finds 'em all true labourers in the vineyard
Of th'universal monarchy, which he
And his disciples principally aim at.
Those are maintained in many courts and palaces
And are induced by noble personages 55 Into great princes' services, and prove
Some counsellors of state, some secretaries,
All serving in notes of intelligence
(As parish clerks their mortuary bills)
To th' Father General. So are designs
60 Oft times prevented and important secrets
Of state discovered, yet no author found,
But those suspected oft that are most sound.

[*Jesuit Black Bishop's Pawn gestures to Jesuitess
Black Queen's Pawn*]

—This mystery is too deep yet for your entrance

And I offend to set your zeal so back.
Checked by obedience, with desire to hasten
Your progress to perfection, I commit you
To the great worker's hands, to whose grave worth
I fit my reverence, as to you my wishes.

[*Jesuitess Black Queen's Pawn does obeisance to
Jesuit Black Bishop's Pawn*]

JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN [aside to Black Queen's Pawn]
Dost find her supple?

JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN [aside to Black Bishop's Pawn]
There's a little passage made. Exit 70

JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN Let me contemplate,
With holy wonder season my access,
And by degrees approach the sanctuary
Of unmatched beauty set in grace and goodness.
Amongst the daughters of men I have not found 75 A more catholic aspect. That eye
Does promise single life and meek obedience,
Upon whose lips (the sweet fresh buds of youth)
The holy dew of prayer lies like pearl
80 Dropped from the op'ning eyelids of the morn

50 He the Black Bishop (but also perhaps Loyola) labourers...vineyard (Matthew 20:8)
51 th'universal monarchy global imperium, in which the whole world is ruled by a single person, who combines absolute political and religious power
51-2 monarchy...at (in contrast to Jesus, who when tempted in the desert rejected worldly power: Luke 4:4-8)
53 courts (a) royal entourages (b) judicial institutions
54 induced inducted, introduced personages Very Important Persons (but also 'dramatic characters, theatrical impersonations', like those of Game itself)
55 prove turn out to be
56 secretaries (a) trusted personal assistants to powerful individuals (b) bureaucrats, government officials (as in 'Secretary of State')
57 servicing sending in as an act of service intelligence information, fruits of espionage 58 parish clerks (person in each parish responsible for recording births, marriages, and deaths) mortuary bills weekly lists of deaths caused by plague (which if they reached a dangerous level triggered government action—just as espionage reports might do) 60 prevented anticipated; forestalled 61 discovered exposed author (a) cause, person responsible (b) writer [of the text which reveals state secrets]
62 sound reliable, uninfected
62.1 Jesuit...Pawn (some such stage action would explain her sudden abandonment of this topic, and the claim that she has been 'Checked by obedience')

63 mystery occupational or religious secret too...entrance unfathomable to the newly initiated, like yourself (like water too deep for an inexperienced swimmer to wade into) 65 Checked (a) rebuked (b) stopped (c) placed in check, in chess, necessitating a defensive move to save oneself
66 progress to perfection Hebrews 6:1 ('let us go on unto perfection')
66-7 I...hands 'Into thine hand I commit my spirit' (Psalm 31:5), 'into thy hands I commend my spirit' (Luke 23:46). The 'hands' here are more literal and less holy.
67 great worker i.e. Black Bishop's Pawn (but Exodus 14:31 attributes 'the great work' to God)
69 supple pliable
70 passage movement, transition; opportunity to enter (but also suggesting 'physical entrance', in a sexual sense more explicit in Early 1.1.75-7)
Exit (Here and throughout, theatrical conventions conflict with chess conventions: once pawns advance, they cannot retreat. Her withdrawal gives the Black Bishop's Pawn privacy—a freedom from human observation crucial to the fallen human world, as opposed to the transparent chess world.)
71-3 Let...sanctuary (mimicking the language of Catholic meditation)
72 season render fit for use; acclimatize; discipline access approach
73 degrees gradations (but also suggesting the literal 'steps' by which a Catholic priest approaches a raised altar)
73-4 sanctuary...beauty Psalms 96:6 74 unmatched unparalleled (but also 'unmarried', and inexperienced at sex and chess) set in (a) placed in the middle of (b) fixed firmly in grace (a) the favour of God (b) physical gracefulness

75 daughters of men Genesis 6:2
76 catholic (a) universal—in so far as the White Queen's Pawn represents the individual soul ('Everyman'), she is the play's most universal character (b) Roman Catholic (c) universally effective, a panacea that heals all patients or satisfies all desires
77 single life unmarried celibacy
78-86 Upon...frailty See Introduction. The classic Petrarchan imagery here is appropriate, since Petrarch was himself a member of the Catholic clergy, who broke his vows of chastity and fathered several illegitimate children.
78 whose (a) White Queen's Pawn's (b) Obedience's buds rose-buds (suggesting the Petrarchan image of woman as flower, who when still a virgin is in bud, before she 'opens') 79 holy (because dew was imagined to descend from heaven)
dew literally, something wet and pearly on the 'lips', suggesting tears ('dropped from the' eyes) or semen prayer In The Book of Common Prayer, a recommended 'Morning Prayer' asks God for 'the continual dew of thy blessing'.
lies (a) rests (b) falsifies
pearl (thought to result from a hardening of 'dew' in shellfish)
80 morn (personified as a female opening her eyelids, like the classical deity Aurora, famous for rising unwillingly from the bed of her lover)

Upon the bashful rose. How beautifully
 A gentle fast (not rigorously imposed)
 Would look upon that cheek, and how delightfully
 The courteous physic of a tender penance 85 (Whose utmost cruelty should not exceed
 The first fear of a bride) to beat down frailty
 Would work to sound health your long festered judgement
 And make your merit (which, through erring ignorance,
 Appears but spotted righteousness to me)
 90 Far clearer than the innocence of infants.
 VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
 To that good work I bow, and will become Obedience' humblest daughter, since I find Th'assistance of a sacred strength to aid me,
 The labour is as easy to serve virtue
 95 The right way, since it's she I ever served
 In my desire, though I transgressed in judgement.
 JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
 It's easily absolved amongst the rest.
 You shall not find the virtue that you serve now
 A sharp and cruel mistress. Her ear's open 100 To all your supplications. You may boldly
 And safely let in the most secret sin
 Into her knowledge, which like vanished man
 Never returns into the world again.
 Fate locks not up more trulier.
 VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN To the guilty
 That may appear some benefit.
 JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN Who is so innocent 105
 That never stands in need on't, in some kind?
 If every thought were blabbed that's so confessed,
 The very air we breathe would be unblessed.
 [Aside] Now to the work indeed, which is to catch
 Her inclination. That's the special use 110
 We make of all our practice in all kingdoms,
 For by disclosing their most secret frailties (Things which, once ours, they must not hide from us;
 That's the first article in the creed we teach 'em),
 Finding to what point their blood most inclines,
 115 Know best to apt them then to our designs.—
 Daughter, the sooner you disperse your errors,
 The sooner you make haste to your recovery.
 You must part with 'em. To be nice or modest
 Toward this good action is to imitate 120
 The bashfulness of one conceals an ulcer
 For the uncomely parts the tumor vexes
 Till't be past cure. Resolve you thus far, lady:
 The privat'st thought that runs to hide itself
 In the most secret corner of your heart now 125

81 bashful shy, embarrassed (because the rose's colour was associated with blushing)

rose literally, the 'lips' of l. 78

82 fast religious abstinence from food, particularly associated with Roman Catholicism; theologically justified as elevating the soul over the bodily appetites, here its purpose is to improve a woman's looks

84 courteous 'gracious' (characterizing the actions of a superior to an inferior) but also 'typical of courtiers'

physic (a) prescribed physical regimen—which might include regular sexual intercourse, considered healthy, and especially necessary for virgin females (b) enema (widely practised medical treatment to purge the body of physical or emotional ailments). As the 'fast' prevents new food from entering the body, the 'physic' removes everything already in the alimentary tract.

penance cathartic act of self-mortification imposed by a priest upon a penitent after confession, as part of the Roman Catholic sacrament of penance (not recognized by Protestants)

86 The first...bride what a virgin bride primarily fears, the pain of being penetrated for the first time, and having her hymen broken (implicitly compared to penetration of rectum by enema pipe) to...frailty Compare 'to beat down Satan' (litany, Book of Common Prayer); rather than Satan, he wishes to overthrow the White Queen's Pawn.

beat down (a) overthrow (b) batter down (like a penis ramming the hymen)

frailty weakness of the human soul, susceptible to temptations of the body (which fast and physic will weaken); but here suggesting the physical and moral frailty of a woman resisting a man's sexual advances

87 festered corrupted, wounded, poisoned

88 merit worthiness. (Protestants believed that no mortal could merit salvation, which was earned not by correct 'judgement' but by faith in God's mercy.) through...ignorance ambiguous: he means her ignorance, but it can be understood as his.

89 spotted blemished (Genesis 30:33)

91 good work (suggesting the Catholic belief that good works—rather than faith—can earn salvation)

bow kneel, submit, express obeisance or reverence (first sign of her idolatrous move toward Catholicism)

92 Obedience (Jesuits were distinguished from other religious orders by their vow of obedience.)

92-3 since I...aid me (a hinge phrase, which can apply to either the preceding or following sentence)

97 absolved forgiven by a priest, in the Catholic sacrament of absolution

99 mistress (Christianity had always gendered the Church female; for Protestants, the Roman Church was 'the whore of Babylon'.)

101 let in admit to (but suggesting 'welcome in')

102 vanished disappeared, dead

107 thought (not only acts but thoughts had to be confessed; thus, confession resulted in the articulation and expression of otherwise unvoiced evil)

blabbed indiscreetly blurted out

109 Aside (a confession to the audience, exposing the Catholic confessional)

111 practice (a) habitual action, profession, exercise (b) machinations

113 ours they belong to us

114 creed summary of essential Christian beliefs (here contrasting with the Apostle's Creed and other venerated early statements of Christian belief, which did not require auricular confession)

115 blood carnal appetite

116 Know (we) know (how)

apt adapt, make fit

117 Daughter term of affectionate address from a male religious superior (usually older) to a lay woman, originating in its use by Jesus at Matthew 9:22
disperse (a) dispel, rid yourself of (b) publish, disseminate (through confession)

119 nice overly scrupulous

121 ulcer suppurating open sore

122 uncomely parts 1 Corinthians 12:23 (where it seems to refer to both genital and excretory organs)

tumor any abnormal morbid swelling

125 secret...heart Kings 10:2, 2 Chronicles 9:1

- Must be of my acquaintance, so familiarly Never she-friend of your night-counsel nearer.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
I stand not much in fear of any action
Guilty of that black time, most noble holiness.
- 130 I must confess, as in a sacred temple
Thronged with an auditory, some come rather
To feed on human object than to taste
Of angels' food;
So in the congregation of quick thoughts
135 Which are more infinite than such assemblies
I cannot with truth's safety speak for all.
Some have been wanderers, some fond, some sinful—
But those found ever but poor entertainment;
They'd small encouragement to come again.
- 140 The single life, which strongly I profess now, Heaven pardon me, I was about to part from.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
Then you have passed through love?
VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN But left no stain
In all my passage, sir, no print of wrong
For the most chaste maid that may trace my footsteps.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
How came you off so clear?
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
145 I was discharged
By an inhuman accident, which modesty Forbids me to put any language to.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
How you forget yourself! All actions
Clad in their proper language, though most sordid, 150 My ear is bound by duty to let in
- And lock up everlastingly. Shall I help you?
'He was not found to answer his creation.'
A vestal virgin in a slip of prayer
Could not deliver man's loss modestlier.
'Twas the White Bishop's Pawn.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN The same, blest sir. 155
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN [aside]
A Puritan well pickled.
VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
By base treachery
And violence prepared by his competitor,
The Black Knight's Pawn, whom I shall ever hate
for't.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
'Twas of revenges the unmanliest way
That ever rival took—a villainy 160 That, for your sake, I'll ne'er absolve him of.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
I wish it not so heavy.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
He must feel it.
I never yet gave absolution
To any crime of that unmanning nature.
It seems then you refused him for defect. 165
Therein you stand not pure from the desire
That other women have in ends of marriage.
Pardon my boldness, if I sift your goodness
To the last grain.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
I reverence your pains, sir,
And must acknowledge custom to enjoy 170
What other women challenge and possess

126 familiarly (a) intimately (b) habitually 127 she-friend (with whom a woman might frankly discuss sexual desires, etc.) night-counsel conversation, advice (a) at night (b) about things done at night 129 Guilty worthy, deserving black (a) dark (b) damnable 130 sacred temple i.e. a cathedral like St Paul's, where people often met for secular purposes: see Meeting of Gallants.
131 auditory assembly of listeners. (Protestantism stressed listening to sermons, rather than contemplating visual images,
in church.)
132 feed on feast their eyes upon, gratify themselves with (but for the literal sense compare Bloody Banquet 5.1) 133 angels' food manna, which fell from heaven to feed the Israelites in the wilderness (Psalm 78:25); hence, the Lord's Supper (eucharist) 134 congregation gathering (a word often preferred by Protestants for its lack of hierarchical associations, where Catholics used 'Church')
quick living, lively, brisk, rapid, pregnant 137 Some . . . wanderers some [of her thoughts] have strayed
fond foolish, infatuated

138 entertainment welcome
141 I . . . from i.e. she was about to marry
the White Bishop's Pawn 142 stain (Sex produces literal stains on clothes and sheets, and symbolic stains on the soul.)
143 print impression or discoloured in-dentation left on something by physical contact with something else (finger, foot, stamp, etc); printing punches black ink into white paper
146 inhuman (a) done by someone brutal
(b) producing someone who is not fully human accident unexpected unusual incident (but also, in grammar, a change to a word due to gender, tense, etc.); the gelding of the White Bishop's Pawn changed his gender, and affects her 'language'
152 answer (a) justify (b) repay (c) repeat, return in kind (d) match exactly his creation (a) God's creation of mankind generally, and of the White Bishop's Pawn in particular, which imposes a reciprocal obligation to 'go forth and multiply' (b) his state when new-born 153 vestal virgin (a) priestess of the Roman goddess Vesta, vowed to chastity (b) nun slip inadvertent mistake in speaking (as in 'Freudian slip'); but also 'instance of moral weakness, evasion, counterfeit' 154 deliver report (but suggesting 'give birth to') man's loss (a) loss of manhood (b) damnation of mankind

155 blest sir (can refer to White Bishop's Pawn or Black Bishop's Pawn) 156 Puritan (contemptuous way of referring to zealous Protestants)
pickled (a) 'in a pickle,' in a bad situation (b) drunk, mischievous (c) steeped in salt or other solution to preserve it;
thus, saturated with indelible heresy (but also suggesting the marinating of his amputated body parts, as something edible, like the testicles of various domesticated animals)
165 for defect because of his genital deficiency 170-2 custom . . . desire i.e. her interest in marriage was not driven by heterosexual desire or biological instinct, but by a wish to be like other women, with the customary social rights and possessions accorded a wife and mother 171 challenge claim

- More ruled me than desire, for my desires Dwell all in ignorance, and I'll ne'er wish To know that fond way may redeem them thence.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN [aside]
175 I never was so taken, beset doubly Now with her judgement. What a strength it puts forth!—
I bring work nearer to you. When you've seen
A masterpiece of man (composed by heaven
For a great princess' favour, kingdom's love,
180 So exact envy could not find a place
To stick a blot on person or on fame)
Have you not found ambition swell your wish then
And desire stir your blood?
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
By virtue, never.
I've only in the dignity of the creature
Admired the Maker's glory.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN [aside]
185 She's impregnable.
A second siege must not fall off so tamely.
She's one of those must be informed to know
A daughter's duty, which some take untaught;
Her modesty brings her behindhand much.
190 My old means I must fly to; yes, 'tis it.—
- [He takes a book from his pocket]
Please you peruse this small tract of obedience;
[He gives the book to her]
'Twill help you forward well.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN Sir, that's a virtue
I've ever thought on with especial reverence.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
You will conceive by that my pow'r, your duty.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
The knowledge will be precious of both, sir.
[She reads.] Enter [from the White House] White Bishop's Gelded Pawn
WHITE BISHOP'S GELDED PAWN [aside]
What makes yon troubler of all Christian waters
So near that blessed spring? But that I know
Her goodness is the rock from whence it issues
Unmovable as fast, 'twould more afflict me
Than all my suff'rings for her—which (so long 200 As she holds constant to the House she comes of,
The whiteness of the cause, the side, the quality)
Are sacrifices to her worth and virtue,
And (though confined) in my religious joys
I marry her and possess her.
Enter [from the Black House] Black Knight's Pawn Gelder [*opposite White Bishop's Gelded
Pawn*]

172–3 my ... ignorance her appetites are limited by ignorance of male bodies and sexual acts
174 fond foolish, infatuated
redeem ransom, bring back and release from captivity 175 taken smitten with desire (but suggesting the capture of a chess piece)
176 judgement intelligence (in addition to her beauty)
179 princess' (or 'prince's') 180 exact perfect, accomplished, astute in observation and conduct
181 fame reputation
185 impregnable untakable (like a besieged fortress which holds out against all attacks), impossible to impregnate
188 daughter's duty 'duty of woman in the Church to be guided by her religious superiors,' but strongly suggesting filial duty, here defined as obedience to the sexual demands of her 'father'.
which (transforming the abstract 'duty' into its physical correlative, which some daughters 'take' without needing instructions) 189 behindhand lagging behind spiritually (but also 'not forward' sexually)
194 conceive understand (but suggesting 'become pregnant')
195.1–2 White ... Pawn Probably dressed as a minister (natural subordinate to a Bishop), whose clerical gown is an ambiguous sexual sign; perhaps played by a boy actor (because eunuchs resembled boys or women). Middleton described him as 'a Puritan', and he might look like one. Adjacent to the White Queen's Pawn at the start of the game, and as her close companion plausibly betrothed to her initially; but also a natural piece to move forward to back up and thereby protect an endangered Queen's Pawn (because he could take any piece which took her).

196 makes business has 197 near (In order to give her the book, the Black Bishop's Pawn must have come within reaching distance of the White Queen's Pawn; he is now perhaps going over the book with her.)
197–8 blessèd ... issues suggesting the spring which issued from the rock struck by Moses (Exodus 17:6)
197 spring source, natural fountain of pure water (but also suggesting 'youth', 'dawn', season of the year)
198 it the 'blessed spring', here equated with her purity (of soul and body), still 'clear' as the divine source of her soul
199 fast fixed, constant, loyal (the rock, her goodness); rapid (the flow of the spring)
'twould the Black Bishop's Pawn's closeness to her would 202 whiteness (a) purity, here equated with (b) white colour of one half the chess pieces, and (c) pale complexion the cause (a) their purpose, goal (b) position upheld by the White House (c) specifically, 'the Puritan cause' quality (a) party, faction (b) nature, attribute (c) social rank (d) profession,

esp. acting profession, role played by an actor
203 sacrifices (a) offerings to a deity, sometimes literally a living body or parts of a body (b) something willingly lost for the sake of something considered more important 204 confined restricted, limited (i.e., to a relationship short of a consummated marriage)
joys blessings, happiness (in contrast to the slang sense 'sexual pleasures, orgasms') 205 marry am united to (in contrast to actual matrimony, legally forbidden because of his castrated state)
possess her (a) strongly influence her, permeate her thoughts; in implicit contrast to (b) 'own' her, as a patriarchal husband's property, or (c) 'have sex with her'.
205.1–2 Black Knight's Pawn He has come to 'court' (l. 227) the White Queen's Pawn, and may be dressed up or accessorised accordingly (ll. 230–1). He and the White Bishop's Pawn are in adjoining files, and thus each is naturally vulnerable to diagonal attack by the other; only by attacking a White Queen's Pawn could a Black Queen's Knight's Pawn adjoin or take a White Queen's Pawn.
205.2 opposite (presumably entering from the left side, upstage)

At I.I.195.1-2 White Bishop's Pawn enters, protecting White Queen's Pawn (a); at I.I.205.1-2 Black Knight's Pawn enters, protecting Black Bishop's Pawn (b). Notice that the Black Queen's Pawn is no longer on the visible part of the board. Then at I.I.243.1 Black Knight enters, protecting Black Bishop's Pawn (c); notice that the Bishop's Pawns are no longer visible.

205 JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN Behold, lady,
 The two inhuman enemies: the Black Knight's Pawn
 And the White Bishop's, the gelder and the gelded.
 VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN There's my grief, my hate.
 BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER [aside]
 What, in the Jesuit's fingers? By this hand, 210 I'll give my part now for a parrot's feather,
 She never returns virtuous. 'Tis impossible.
 I'll undertake more wagers will be laid Upon a usurer's return from hell
 Than upon hers from him now. Have I been guilty
 215 Of such base malice that my very conscience Shakes at the memory of it, and when I look
 To gather fruit find nothing but the savin tree?—
 Too frequent in nuns' orchards, and there planted
 By all conjecture to destroy fruit rather.
 220 I will be resolved now. [To her] Most noble virgin—

VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
 Ignoble villain! Dare that unhallowed tongue
 Lay hold upon a sound so gracious?
 What's nobleness to thee? or virgin chastity?
 They're not of thy acquaintance. Talk of violence
 That shames creation, deeds would make night blush—
 225 That's company for thee. Hast thou the impudence
 To court me with a leprosy upon thee
 Able t'infest the walls of a great building?
 JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN [to Black Knight's Pawn Gelder]
 Son of offence, forbear, go, set your evil
 Before your eyes. A penitential vesture 230 Would better become ye, some shirt of hair.
 BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
 And you a three-pound smock 'stead of an alb,
 An epicene chasuble. [Aside] This holy felon

207 gelder castrator. Protestants compared the doctrine of clerical celibacy to castration, equating Roman Catholicism with the pagan cult of Cybele, a goddess who (like the 'Whore of Babylon') was worshipped by castrated priests gelded castrated; literally, having had his testicles cut off, and therefore incapable of fathering children; hence, gelding was often used as a metaphor for censorship (which prevents dissemination of the 'seed' of the Gospel)
 208 my grief, my hate i.e. she grieves for the White Bishop's Pawn, and hates the Black Knight's Pawn
 210 part (a) role, station (b) genitals
 215 that which (modifying 'malice') 217 fruit (a) reward, consequence of my actions (b) offspring, fruit of a woman's womb

savin tree a bush that does not produce edible fruit, but was used to induce miscarriages of unwanted pregnancies 218 nuns (widely regarded as promiscuous: see Aretine's Dialogues, among many literary sources)
 220 resolved (a) resolute, in approaching her (b) freed from doubt, by determining the real state of affairs
 227 leprosy polluted and polluting sinfulness—religious metaphor from the disease which covers the body with white scales (appropriate for a member of the Black House who is attempting a veneer of piety) and which rots the body, eventually causing appendages to fall off (an appropriate punishment for a castrator)

228 t'infest...building (Leviticus 14:33-53 describes the spread of leprosy to human dwellings)
 229 Son of man who embodies an abstract quality (like 'daughter of', l. 5); after his crime, he is 'the deed's creature' (Changeling 3.4.140).
 232 three-pound smock expensive woman's undergarment, slip
alb white tunic worn by priests, falling to the feet 233 epicene characteristic of both sexes, hermaphroditic, bisexual, effeminate (alluding to the similarity between male clerical vestments and women's dresses)
chasuble sleeveless mantle worn over the alb by a priest celebrating mass holy felon sacred criminal (paradox)

- 235 Robs safe and close. I feel a sting that's worse too.
 [He turns to the White Bishop's Gelded Pawn]
 White Pawn! Hast so much charity to accept
 A reconciliation? Make thy own conditions,
 For I begin to be extremely burdened.
- WHITE BISHOP'S GELDED PAWN [aside]
 No truth or peace of that Black House protested
 Is to be trusted; but, for hope of quittance 240 And warned by diffidence, I may entrap him soonest.
 —I admit conference.
- BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
 It is a nobleness
 That makes confusion cleave to all my merits.
Exeunt White Bishop's Gelded Pawn and Black Knight's Pawn Gelder
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN [to Virgin White Queen's Pawn]
 That treatise will instruct you fully.
 [She reads.] Enter Black Knight Gondomar [from the Black House, behind]
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [aside] So, so,
 The business of the universal monarchy
 245 Goes forward well now, the great college pot
 That should be always boiling with the fuel
 Of all intelligences possible
 Thorough the Christian kingdoms. Is this fellow Our prime incendiary? one of those
- That promised the White Kingdom sev'n years since 250
 To our Black House? Put a new daughter to him,
 The great work stands;
 He minds nor monarchy nor hierarchy
 (Diviner principality). I brag less,
 But have done more than all the conclave of 'em, 255
 Take their assistant fathers in all parts,
 Yea, and their Father General in, to boot—
 And what I've done I've done facetiously
 With pleasant subtlety and bewitching courtship
 Abused all my believers with delight; 260
 They took a comfort to be cozened by me.
 To many a soul I've let in mortal poison Whose cheeks have cracked with laughter to receive it.
 I could so roll my pills in sugared syllables
 And strew such kindly mirth o'er all my mischief, 265
 They took their bane in way of recreation
 As pleasure steals corruption into youth.—
 He spies me now. I must uphold his reverence, Especially in public, though I know
 Priapus, guardian of the cherry gardens, 270
 Bacchus' and Venus' chit, is not more vicious.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
 Blessing's accumulation keep with you, sir.

- 234 close covertly, secretly
sting inward pain caused by sin or shame (compared to the sting of a serpent, or Satan), in this case 'worse' than the sting of lust
- 239 quittance requital
- 240 diffidence distrust (of others), suspicion
- 242 confusion (a) destruction, ruin, damnation (b) embarrassment (c) perplexity (d) chaos, disorder
- cleave stick
- 243.1 Enter Black (Another recurring clash between theatrical conventions and the rules of chess: a Black piece enters, though there has been no intervening White move since the entrance of the Black Knight's Pawn. As the play progresses, it becomes harder for an audience to follow the exact sequence of chess moves, in part because the actors are probably moving on stage, between entrances; and the exits of three pawns have already disrupted the game's symmetries. For both exits and entrances it is black pieces who first break the rules.)
- Black Knight Like the chess piece, capable of rapid, unexpected and 'devious' action (jumping over obstacles, and not moving in a straight line or symmetrical jump). Because Knights can skip over pawns, they are often active early in the game. Of the three possible initial moves
- of the chess piece, two would protect the Black Bishop's Pawn, one would threaten the White Queen's Pawn; all three would place him in a rank behind the Black Bishop's Pawn.
- 243.2 behind (in the chess sense, not advanced so far forward)
- 245 great college pot Jesuit receptacle, compared to a pot in a college kitchen, big enough for cooking communal meals (perhaps also punning on 'chamber pot')
- 247 intelligences espionage
- 248 Thorough throughout
- 249 prime (a) principle (b) sexually aroused (c) priming, laying gunpowder in preparation for firing
- incendiary (a) inflammatory agitator (b) arsonist
- 250 since ago
- 252 stands (a) stands still (b) stands up, sexually erects
- 253 hierarchy ecclesiastical authority: rule of the state by the church, and rule of the church by prelates (rather than congregations), allegedly modelled upon the hierarchy of angels
- 254 principality (a) supreme authority (b) one of the ranks of angels
- I brag less (He then proceeds to brag for another twelve lines, confirming the stereotype of Spanish arrogance.)
- 255 conclave assembly of prelates (especially cardinals)
- 256 assistant fathers (a) subordinate priests (b) local Jesuits, reporting to the Father General of the Order (c) men who assist in fathering children, i.e. who have sex with other men's wives
- 257 to boot in addition
- 258 facetiously wittily
- 259 With...courtship (another hinge phrase, working grammatically with both the preceding and following clauses)
- 260 Abused (a) deceived (b) misused, badly treated (c) sexually violated
- my believers (a) people who trusted me (b) believers in my religion
- delight pleasure (to them and to me)
- 261 cozened swindled, double-crossed
- 262 mortal fatal
- 266 bane poison, ruin
- 267 steals secretly insinuates
- 270 Priapus Roman god of fertility and guardian of gardens, usually represented by a huge erect penis
- cherry cherry-tree (slang for the male genitals) or fruit (metaphor for female lips or nipples)
- 271 Bacchus...chit i.e. the offspring of an adulterous union between the god of wine and goddess of lust is a male erection
- chit animal offspring (whelp, cub)
- vicious addicted to vice, impure

- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
Honour's dissimulation be your due, sir.
[He kneels to the Jesuit Black Bishop's Pawn]
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN [aside]
How deep in duty his observance plunges.
His charge must needs be reverend.
- 275 JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN I am confessor
To this Black Knight too. You see devotion's fruitful;
Sh'as many sons and daughters.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [aside] I do this the more T'amaze our adversaries to behold
The reverence we do these guitonens
280 And to beget a sound opinion
Of holiness in them and zeal in us,
As also to invite the like obedience
In other pucelles by our meek example.
[Exit Virgin White Queen's Pawn]
- So, is your trifle vanished?
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
285 'Trifle' call you her? It's a good pawn, sir.
Sure she's the second pawn of the White House,
And to the op'ning of the game I hold her.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
Ay, you hold well for that. I know your play of old:
If there were more Queen's Pawns you'd ply the game
290 A great deal harder. Now, sir, we're in private.
But what for the main work, the great existence,
The hope monarchal?
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
It goes on in this.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
In this? I cannot see't.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
You may deny so
A dial's motion 'cause you cannot see
The hand move, or a wind that rends the cedar. 295
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
Where stops the current of intelligence?
Your Father General, Bishop o'th' Black House, Complains for want of work.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN Here's from all parts Sufficient to employ him. I received
A packet from th'assistant fathers lately;
300 Look you, there's Anglica, this Gallica—
[He gives papers to Black Knight Gondomar]
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
Ay, marry, sir, there's some quick flesh in this.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN [giving paper] Germanica—
BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
'Think they've sealed this with butter.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN [giving paper] Italica, this— 305
BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
They put their pens the Hebrew way, methinks.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN [giving paper]
Hispanica here.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR Hispanica? Blind work, this.
The Jesuit has writ this with juice of lemons sure.
It must be held close to the fire of purgatory
Ere't can be read.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
You will not lose your jest, knight, 310
Though't wounded your own fame.

274 his observance the Black Knight's act of ritual deference

275 His charge Black Bishop Pawn's pastoral duties

279 guitonens vagrants, vagabonds (Middleton coinage: Spanish guiton): Jesuits were missionaries

283 pucelles (a) girls, young women, virgins (b) sluts

284 trifle (a) thing of little value or importance (b) worthless person (c) toy (d) dessert made from cake, wine, and cream

285 pawn (a) chess piece (b) security for a debt, investment

286 second pawn pawn second in importance only to the White King's Pawn

287 op'ning ... game opening up the chess board (an important objective of initial pawn play); but suggesting 'opening for sexual entrance'

288 I...old (One of many indications that this game has been played many times before—and that the characters are all imagined as players, not just pieces.)

play (a) way of playing a game, using a weapon (b) tricks (c) playing around, idleness (d) sexual sport

289 ply (a) work at (b) assiduously assail (c) solicit persistently game (a) contest (b) sexual sport (c) prey

290 harder (a) more vigorously (b) with a stiffer penis

291 existence state of affairs, source and focus of life (usually applied to God, as absolute and eternal being)

292 hope monarchal (a) sovereign ambition (b) desire for absolute power

294 dial's time-piece's

295 rends the cedar Zechariah 11:23

298 want lack

301 Anglica England (first of a series of Latin—hence Catholic—geographical terms)

Gallica France (associated with promiscuity)

302 quick (a) vital (b) highly sensitive (c) pregnant flesh 'meat', i.e. (a) substance (b) sexual bodies

303 Germanica countries speaking High or Low German (modern Germany, Netherlands, Austria, etc.)

304 butter alluding to (a) Germanic fondness for dairy products (b) English newspapers on events in northern Europe published by Nathaniel Butter

305 Italica various Italian-speaking states (but also alluding to 'italic' handwriting)

306 pens (a) writing implements (b) penises Hebrew (written right to left; hence 'backwards'; hence alluding to alleged Italian fondness for anal intercourse)

307 Hispanica Spanish-speaking world Blind (a) unseeing (b) unseen

308 juice of lemons used for writing secret messages (because invisible, unless heated)

309 purgatory intermediate state of the afterlife, where souls were punished for venial sins, before becoming eligible for heaven (Catholic belief, not shared by Protestants)

311 fame reputation (Gondomar is Spanish himself)

Enter [from the White House] White King's Counsellor Pawn

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR

Curanda pecunia.

JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN

Take heed, sir, we're entrapped. The White King's Pawn!

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR

He's made our own, man, half in voto yours.
His heart's in the Black House. Leave him to me.

[Exit Jesuit Black Bishop's Pawn]

315 Most of all friends endeared, precious special!

WHITE KING'S COUNSELLOR PAWN

You see my outside, but you know my heart, knight; Great difference in the colour. There's some intelligence,

[Gives papers to Black Knight Gondomar]

And as more ripens, so your knowledge still Shall prove the richer. There shall nothing happen,

320 Believe it, to extenuate your cause

Or to oppress her friends, but I will strive
To cross it with my counsel, purse and power,

Keep all supplies back both in means and men
That may raise strength against you. We must part.

325 I dare not longer of this theme discuss;

The ear of state is quick and jealous.

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR

Excellent estimation, thou art valued
Above the fleet of gold that came short home.

Exit White King's Counsellor Pawn

Poor Jesuit-ridden soul, how art thou fooled

330 Out of thy faith, from thy allegiance drawn,

Which way soe'er thou tak'st, thou'rt a lost pawn.

Exit

Finit Actus Primus

Incipit Actus Secundus

Enter Virgin White Queen's Pawn [from the White House] with a book in her hand

VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN

And here again: (reading) 'it is the daughter's duty
To obey her confessor's command in all things
Without exception or expostulation.'

It's the most general rule that e'er I read of.

Yet when I think how boundless virtue is,

Goodness and grace, it's gently reconciled,

And then it appears well to have the power
Of the dispenser as uncircumscribed.

[She reads silently.] Enter [from the Black House]
Jesuit Black Bishop's Pawn [apart]

JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN [aside]

She's hard upon't. 'Twas the most modest key

That I could use to open my intents.

What little or no pains goes to some people!

[He finds a paper]

Ha? What have we here? A sealed note. Whence this?

'To the Black Bishop's Pawn, these.' How? to me?

Strange. Who subscribes it? 'The Black King'? What would he?

[He reads] the letter

'Pawn! sufficiently holy, but unmeasurably politic. We had late intelligence from our most industrious servant

famous in all parts of Europe (our Knight of the Black House) that you have at this instant in chase the White

Queen's Pawn, and very likely by the carriage of your game to entrap and take her. These are therefore to require you, by the burning affection I bear to the rape of devotion, that speedily upon the surprisal of her by all watchful advantage you make some attempt upon the White Queen's person, whose fall or prostitution

our lust most violently rages for.'

Sir, after my desire has took a julep

311.1-2 White...Pawn (combining features of various pro-Spanish historical persons in the King's government)

311 Curanda pecunia 'watch the money' (Latin). White King's Pawn may be the White King's Treasurer; he is certainly being bankrolled by the Black House.

312 entrapped endangered unawares. (A Black Knight could not be trapped at this point, if he has stood still since his first entrance move; he could, however, in three moves have occupied a square threatened by the first move of the White King's Pawn, and the actor could have been moving restlessly.)

313-14 He's...House (Betrayal, though common in politics, is of course not possible in chess: see Introduction.)

320 extenuate emaciate, weaken

322 cross thwart
purse financial resources. (See 'pecunia', l. 311.)

324 raise...you Isaiah 29:3, 49:6; Amos 6:14

325 theme subject

326 quick swift, sensitive jealous suspicious

327 estimation assessment, judgement

328 fleet of gold treasure fleet short not as full as expected

330 from...drawn (a hinge-phrase, which makes sense with either the preceding or following sentence)

331.1 Exit (thereby clearing the stage/board, something that does not happen in chess)

331.2 Finit...Primus (Music was usually played during the interval between acts.)

2.1.4 general comprehensive

6 reconciled harmonized (with reason)

8 dispenser bestower (of virtue, goodness, and grace); steward (of God) as so uncircumscribed unboundaried (normally used of God)

9 modest (a) unobtrusive (b) not offensive to decency

11.1 a paper (left on stage during the act-break)

15 politic (a) politically astute (b) cunningly manipulative (c) politique, indifferent to religion, secular

19 carriage conduct

20 take (a) capture (a chess piece) (b) captivate, charm (c) seize, sexually possess
These these letters, instructions

22 surprisal unexpected attack, ambush

23 attempt (a) violent sexual assault (b) temptation

24 fall (a) destruction (b) moral ruin (c) defeat by being thrown to the floor in wrestling (d) lying down for sexual purposes

prostitution (a) transformation into a whore (b) defilement (c) prostration

26 julep cool sweet drink

- For its own inflammation that yet scorches me,
I shall have cooler time to think of yours.
She's passed the general rule, the large extent
30 Of our prescriptions for obedience,
And yet with what alacrity of soul
Her eye moves on the letters.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN Holy sir,
Too long I've missed you. O your absence starves me.
Hasten for time's redemption, worthy sir,
35 Lay your commands as thick and fast upon me
As you can speak 'em. How I thirst to hear 'em!
Set me to work upon this spacious virtue
Which the poor span of life's too narrow for,
Boundless obedience,
40 The humblest yet the mightiest of all duties,
Well here set down a universal goodness.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN [aside]
By holiness of garment her safe innocence
Has frightened the full meaning from itself.
She's farther off from understanding now 45 The language of my intent than at first meeting.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
For virtue's sake, good sir, command me something.
Make trial of my duty in some small service,
And as you find the faith of my obedience there,
Then trust it with a greater.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN You speak sweetly.
I do command you first then—
- 50 VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN With what joy
I do prepare my duty.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
To meet me
And seal a kiss of love upon my lip.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN Ha?
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
At first disobedient, in so little too?
55 How shall I trust you with a greater then?—
Which was your own request.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN Pray send not back
- My innocence to wound me. Be more courteous.
I must confess, much like an ignorant plaintiff
Who, presuming on the fair path of his meaning, Goes rashly on, till on a sudden brought 60 Into the wilderness of law by words
Dropped unadvisedly, hurts his own cause
And gives the adversary advantage by't—
Apply it you can best, sir. If my obedience
And your command can find no better way, 65 Fond men command, and wantons best obey.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
If I can at that distance send you a blessing,
Is it not nearer to you in my arms?
It flies from these lips dealt abroad in parcels,
And I to honour thee above all daughters 70 Invite thee home to th' house, where thou mayst
surfeit
On that which others miserably pine for,
A favour which the daughters of great potentates
Would look of Envy's colour but to hear.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
Good men may err sometimes. You are mistaken,
75 sure,
If this be virtue's path, 'tis a most strange one.
I never came this way before.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN That's your ignorance—
And therefore shall that idiot still conduct you
That knows no way but one? nor ever seeks it?
80 If there be twenty ways to some poor village,
'Tis strange that virtue should be put to one.
Your fear is wondrous faulty. Cast it from you.
'Twill gather else in time a disobedience
Too stubborn for my pardon.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN Have I locked myself
At unawares into sin's servitude
85 With more desire of goodness? Is this the top Of all strict order? and the holiest
Of all Societies, the three-vowed people
For poverty, obedience, chastity

27 For as a cure for

29 passed i.e. already read

34 Hasten . . . redemption hurry to make up for lost time

39 Boundless obedience unbounded binding, an unlimited imposing of limits (paradox)

41 set down termed, defined

42 holiness of garment 'garment of holiness' (Ecclesiasticus 50:11)

safe (a) secure from harm (b) morally sound

52 innocence (a) sinlessness (b) ignorance seal (associated with kissing because the seal's pressure on hot wax, usually at a juncture of two edges, resembles the pressing of joined lips together; also, because seals ratified contracts, as kisses confirmed intimate relationships)

53 Ha? This might indicate a nervous laugh, or an expression of disbelief (as in modern 'huh?').

57 innocence (imagined as a projectile, rebounding to harm its user)

58 confess acknowledge as a mistake or sin, that

59 meaning intention

62 hurts (he) hurts

63 the adversary (a) his opponent (b) Satan

64 Apply . . . best i.e. you can figure out how to complete my incomplete sentence, by comparing her to the 'ignorant plaintiff'

65 no better way no alternative better than the command you have just given, [then it is evident that]

66 Fond unwise, infatuated, crazy

wantons (a) spoiled brats (b) undisciplined unmanageable animals or persons (c) sluts

best obey i.e. epitomize obedience

67 distance (indicative of the stage blocking of this scene: see also ll. 93-4, 101, 110. It is White's move, so he must ask her to voluntarily 'Be nearer', because he cannot move toward her himself: unless she comes closer, he cannot take her.)

69 parcels (a) small portions (b) passages of Scripture

74 of . . . colour i.e. pale with envy hear (a) hear about (b) overhear

75 Good men 'virtuous persons', but also suggesting goodmen ('heads of household' and 'persons of substance, below the rank of gentlemen')

sure surely

85 sin's servitude (a) enslavement to sin (b) sin's essence or correlative, slavery

89 poverty . . . chastity the three vows taken by Jesuits

- 90 (The last the most forgot)? When a virgin's ruined
I see the great work of obedience
Is better than half finished.
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
What a stranger
Are you to duty grown! What distance keep you!
Must I bid you come forward to a happiness
95 Yourself should sue for? 'Twas never so with me.
I dare not let this stubbornness be known;
'Twould bring such fierce hate on you. Yet presume not
To make that courteous care a privilege
For wilful disobedience. It turns then 100 Into the blackness of a curse upon you.
Come, come, be nearer.
VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
Nearer?
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN Was that scorn?
I would not have it prove so, for the hopes
Of the great monarchy. If it were like it,
Let it not dare to stir abroad again;
A stronger ill will cope with't.
105 VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN Bless me! Threatens me
And quite dismays the good strength that should help me.
I never was so doubtful of my safety.
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
'Twas but my jealousy. Forgive me, sweetness.
Yon is the house of meekness, and no venom lives
110 Under that roof. Be nearer. Why so fearful?
Nearer the altar, the more safe and sacred.
VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
But nearer to the off'rer, oft more wicked.
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
A plain and most insufferable contempt!
My glory I have lost upon this woman
- In freely off'ring that she should have kneeled 115 A year in vain for. My respect is darkened.
Give me my reverence again thou'st robbed me of
In thy repulse; thou shalt not carry't hence.
VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
Sir—
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
Thou'rt too great a winner to depart so
And I too deep a loser to give way to't.
120 VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
O heaven!
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
Lay me down reputation
Before thou stir'st. Thy nice virginity
Is recompense too little for my love.
'Tis well if I accept of that for both.
Thy loss is but thy own; there's art to help thee
125 And fools to pass thee to. In my discovery
The whole Society suffers, and in that
The hope of absolute monarchy eclipsed.
Assurance thou canst make none for thy secrecy
But by thy honour's loss; that act must awe thee.
130 VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
O my distressed condition!
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
Dost thou weep?
If thou hadst any pity this necessity
Would wring it from thee. I must else destroy thee.
We must not trust the policy of Europe
Upon a woman's tongue.
VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
Then take my life, sir,
135 And leave my honour for my guide to heaven.
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
Take heed I take not both, which I've vowed since
If longer thou resist me.

94 come forward (a) approach me (b) advance to more prominence
96 I... known I must conceal this to protect (a) you, but also (b) myself 103 great monarchy ultimate sovereignty (single rule over the whole world)
105 cope with't battle your scorn
107 doubtful apprehensive
108 jealousy (a) righteous indignation, characteristic of God (b) eagerness to protect something valuable from harm (c) anxiety over sexual rivalry
109 Yon (gesturing toward the Black House, which pretends to be meek)
no venom (suggesting a serpent, commonly associated with Satan and therefore with the Black House)
111 altar (associated with Roman Catholic religious practice; Protestants preferred 'the Lord's table')
112 off'rer (a) person who officiates at a religious sacrament, especially communion (b) person who offers something, propositions someone

114 glory (a) renown (b) bliss in heaven
116 respect (a) deference due to me (b) social status (c) appearance
117 reverence (a) respect (b) holiness
119–20 Thou'rt... to't (as when a big winner wants to leave before the other gamblers have a chance to recoup some of their losses)
119 great big (but also often suggesting 'eminent' or 'high' rank or status; in contrast to the downward 'deep')
120 deep (a) big (b) hell-bound (c) financially embarrassed, having to dig deep in my purse (d) cunning (e) deep-voiced 121 Lay me down (a) deliver to me, by (b) lying down reputation respectability (based, in a woman's case, upon chastity) 122 stir'st (a) make the slightest move (b) leave the building (c) cause trouble nice shy, fastidious, delicate, minute, thin, unimportant 125 art (a) cunning (b) medical skill (to conceal her lack of virginity, or to end

a pregnancy)
126 fools i.e. men too stupid to realize she's not a virgin, or foolishly willing to overlook her indiscretion discovery exposure
127 Society (a) Society of Jesus, Jesuit organization (b) commonwealth, political alliance, confederation 130 act sexual act (which will give him the power of sexual blackmail) awe (a) intimidate (b) inspire with appropriate reverence 132 necessity compelling need (sexual and political) 134 policy (a) government (b) statecraft, diplomacy
135 a woman's tongue proverbially, 'always in motion' (and unable to keep secrets)
137 Take... both (either by violating and then killing her, or killing and then violating; compare the necrophilia of Lady) vowed since already vowed

- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
Help, O help!
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
Art thou so cruel for an honour's bubble
140 T'undo a whole fraternity, and disperse
The secrets of most nations locked in us?
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
For heaven and virtue's sake—
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN Must force confound noise?
A noise within
Ha! What's that? Silence, if fair worth be in thee.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN [aside]
I'll venture my escape upon all dangers now.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
145 Who comes to take me? Let me see that pawn's face Or his proud tympanous master swelled with state wind
Which being once pricked i'th' convocation house
The corrupt air puffs out and he falls shriveled.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
I will discover thee, arch-hypocrite,
To all the kindreds of the earth. Exit
- 150 JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN Confusion!
In that voice rings th'alarum of my undoing.
How? Which way scaped she from me?
- Enter Black Queen's Pawn [from the Black House]*
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN Are you mad?
Can Iust infatuate a man so hopeful?
No patience in your blood? The dog-star reigns sure.
Time and fair temper would have wrought her pliant. 155
I spied a pawn of the White House walk near us,
And made that noise on purpose to give warning
(Aside) For mine own turn, which end in all I work for.
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
Methinks I stand over a powder-vault
And the match now a-kindling. What's to be done? 160
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
Ask the Black Bishop's counsel. You're his pawn.
It's his own case. He will defend you mainly,
Enter Jesuit Black Bishop and Black Knight Gondomar [from the Black House]
And haply here he comes with the Black Knight too.
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP [to his Pawn]
O you've made noble work for the White House.
This act will fill the adversary's mouth 165
And blow the Luth'ran's cheek till't crack again.
BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
This will advance the great monarchal business
In all parts well and help the agents forward.
What I have sev'n years laboured to accomplish

139 bubble something insubstantial and fragile: compared to honour because reputation is air, blown from the mouth like bubbles, and because the hymen is a thin membrane which when broken releases liquid

142 confound (a) confute (b) dumbfound noise (a) shouting (b) slander. (But he may also mean 'a woman', whom he has reduced and objectified to the misogynist stereotype of 'noise-maker'; in which case confound could also mean 'ruin, overthrow, sully'.)

144 venture... dangers risk any danger for the sake of escape

145 Who comes to take me? Black Bishop's Pawn in this position could be attacked directly by White Knight's Pawn, a character who does not appear in the play; he more probably suspects White Bishop's Pawn (her former fiancé), which could move into position to take him if he dared take White Queen's Pawn—as he was just about to do.

146–8 Or... shriveled The implied image is of (white) sheep swollen from eating tansy weed, who will die if their abdomens are not punctured to release the 'corrupt air'.

146 tympanous resembling (a) abdominal swelling due to gas (b) false pregnancy, tumorous swelling in the womb (c) a hollow drum, which makes noise but has no substance (Middleton coinage) master (probably the White Bishop) state (a) exalted, dignified, ceremonial (b) a critically extreme case of wind (a) speech (b) flatulence (c) vain notions

147 convocation house place where clergymen in the Church of England assemble; ecclesiastical Parliament

149 discover expose arch-hypocrite (in contrast to 'archbishop'; he has probably just been talking about the White Bishop/ Archbishop of Canterbury)

150 kindreds families, clans, peoples (emphasizing the 'incestuous' quality of his attempted rape)

Exit (In chess, she would become invulnerable to him by moving forward, past him. In any case, his fear of being taken by another piece prevents him from taking her when he has the chance.)

153 hopeful ambitious, promising

154 dog-star Sirius, most prominent in the heat of summer; astrologically associated with excess 'heat' (lust, rage, madness)

155 temper (a) temperament (b) moderation (c) tempering

pliant compliant, pliable, easily bent into the position desired

156 I... us (implying that some chess movements on the board are not visible on the stage, thus 'explaining' certain apparent irregularities in the alternation of moves: a white piece allegedly moved between the entrances of Black Bishop's Pawn and of Black Queen's Pawn.)

158 turn advantage

end... for purpose I work for in all my actions

159 powder-vault gunpowder-vault (recalling the 1605 Jesuit conspiracy to blow up the English Parliament)

162 his... case (a) a matter that concerns him (b) a lawsuit in which he will be a party or lawyer

mainly vigorously, loudly

162.1 Black Bishop and Black Knight (adjacent pieces, associated here and in 2.2, 3.1, and the Early version of 4.2)

163 haply (a) by chance (b) happily

164 noble (sarcastic)

165 fill... mouth be in the mouths of, talked about by, all our adversaries

166 blow inflate

Luth'ran's (dismissive Catholic term for all Protestants)

crack make an explosive noise as it splits in two, i.e. laugh

again once more (because Protestants have had little to smile about lately, after a series of defeats by Catholics)

167–8 advance... forward (sarcastic)

- 170 One minute sets back by some codpiece college still.
 JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
 I dwell not, sir, alone in this default.
 The Black House yields me partners.
 JESUIT BLACK BISHOP All more cautelous.
 BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
Qui cauté, casté. That's my motto ever.
 I've travelled with that word over most kingdoms
 175 And lain safe with all nations. Of a leaking bottom,
 I have been as often tossed on Venus' seas
 As trimmer fresher barques, when sounder vessels
 Have lain at anchor (that is, kept the door).
 JESUIT BLACK BISHOP [to his Pawn]
 She has no witness then?
 JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
 None, none.
 BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR Gross! witness?
 180 When went a man of his Society
 To mischief with a witness?
 JESUIT BLACK BISHOP [to his pawn]
 Be it thus then.
 Away! Upon the wings of speed, take post-horse,
 Cast thirty leagues of earth behind thee suddenly,
 Leave letters antedated with our House
 Ten days at least from this.
 185 BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR Bishop, I taste thee.
 Good strong episcopal counsel.—Take a bottle on't;
 'Twill serve thee all the journey.
 JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN But, good sir,
- How for my getting forth unspied?
 JESUIT BLACK BISHOP There's check again.
 JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
 No, I'll help that!
 BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
 Well said, my bouncing Jesuitess!
 JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
 There lies a secret vault.
 [She reveals a trapdoor]
 BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [to Jesuit Black Bishop's Pawn]
 Away, make haste then! 190
 JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN [to Black Queen's Pawn]
 Run for my cabinet of intelligences
 For fear they search the house.
 JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
 Good Bishop, burn 'em rather.
 I cannot stand to pick 'em now.
 JESUIT BLACK BISHOP Be gone!
 The danger's all in you.
 Exit Jesuit Black Bishop's Pawn [by the trapdoor.
 Enter Jesuitess Black Queen's Pawn from the Black House with a cabinet]
 BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
 Let me see, Queen's Pawn.
 [She gives him the cabinet]
 How formally he's packed up his intelligences! 195
 He's laid 'em all in trundle-beds methinks,
 And like court-harbingers he's writ their names
 In chalk upon their chambers. Anglica!

170 codpiece baggy appendage to male trousers, in front of the genitals, often conspicuous and ornamented; hence, male genitalia, male lust. (The White Bishop's Pawn's 'cods', or testicles, were removed when he was castrated.)
college institutionalized association of clergymen (like the Society of Jesus) or scholars (also all male) 171 default culpable neglect of duty
 172 cautelous crafty and cautious (and therefore less likely to get caught)
 173 Qui . . . casté 'Whoever [is] discreet, [is] chaste' (i.e., if you're careful people will think you're virtuous)
 174 word maxim
 175 lain (a) resided (b) had sex all (alluding to the Spanish global empire, and their reputation for indiscriminate miscegenation)
nations (a) races (b) classes Of Despite being of, having bottom hull, keel of a ship; but here a metaphor for his anal fistula 176 tossed (suggesting both the movement of a ship in rough water and a man moving up and down on top of a woman)
Venus' seas seas of lust. (In classical mythology, the goddess of love was born from the sea.)
 177 trimmer better-made, better-equipped, better looking fresher (a) not as old (b) not as over-used, more vigorous barques small ships (more manoeuvrable than big ones) sounder (a) more seaworthy (b) healthier, less diseased (c) more orthodox theologically (d) more ethical vessels ships (but also in the Biblical senses 'persons' and 'bodies', both being seen as receptacles of the soul or of God's purposes) 178 at anchor (a) going nowhere (b) with a hanging prosthesis, like a detumescent penis kept guarded (like a pimp)

 182 post-horse fast horse, available for hire
 184 antedated given an earlier, counterfeited date
 185 taste (a) have a fore-taste or hint of what is to come (b) relish 186 counsel advice (but alluding to Catholic belief in the twelve 'Counsels' of Christ, not commandments but recommendations, as at Matthew 19:21) bottle (comparing the Bishop's advice to a bottle of wine for the Pawn, or a bundle of hay for his horse)
on't of it
 188 forth 'away' or specifically 'out' (of a residence), thus suggesting that the stage is here imagined as an indoor locale: the subsequent 'vault', 'cabinet', etc.,

reinforce this impression.
unspied (difficult, if he were outdoors now)
check (a) an obstacle, sudden interruption of movement (b) a threat to our king. (Black King would not be literally checked by taking of the Black Bishop's Pawn at this point, but politically the scandal would check his power, and require a response, either defensive evasion or counterattack.)
 189 bouncing dancing, thumping, interjecting loudly (incongruous for a nun)
 190 vault (a) underground room (b) burial chamber (c) deep pit; all these meanings, and theatrical terminology for the space under the stage, suggest (d) hell
 191 cabinet case for safe storage of jewels, documents
intelligences news reports, secret documents
 192 they i.e. the White House
 193 stand remain
pick carefully select, cull
 195 formally neatly
 196 trundle-beds low beds stored below a higher bed (suggesting a cabinet with multiple drawers, one below another)
 197 court-harbingers officers sent ahead of a royal progress to arrange lodgings
 198 Anglica England (famous for its 'chalk' cliffs)

200 O, this is the English House. What news there, trow?
 Ha? By this hand, most of these are bawdy epistles.
 Time they were burnt indeed, whole bundles of 'em.
 Here's from his daughter Blanch and daughter Bridget
 From their safe sanctuary in the Whitefriars;
 These from two tender Sisters of Compassion
 205 In the bowels of Bloomsbury;
 These from the nunnery without Temple Bar.
 A fire, a fire—go, Jesuitess, a fire!
 [Exit Jesuitess Black Queen's Pawn]
 What have you there?
 JESUIT BLACK BISHOP A note, sir, of state policy,
 And an exceeding safe one.
 BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR Pray, let's see't, sir.
 210 'To sell away all the powder in the kingdom
 To prevent blowing up.' That's safe; I'll able it.—
 Here's a facetious observation now
 That suits my humour better. He writes here
 Some wives in England will commit adult'ry 215 And then send to Rome for a bull for their husbands.
 JESUIT BLACK BISHOP
 Have they those shifts?
 [Enter Jesuitess Black Queen's Pawn from the Black House with fire]
 BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
 O, no familiar breathing
 Sweeter and subtler!—Here, wench, take these papers.
 Scorch me 'em soundly, burn 'em to French russet,
 And put 'em in again.
 JESUIT BLACK BISHOP Why, what's your mystery?
 BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
 220 O, sir, 'twill mock the adversary strangely
 If e'er the house be searched. 'Twas done in Venice

Upon the Jesuitical expulse there,
 When the inquisitors came all spectacl'd
 To pick out syllables out of the dung of treason
 As children pick their cherrystones, yet found none
 225 But what they made themselves with ends of letters.—
 Do as I bid you, pawn.
Exeunt [Black Knight Gondomar and Jesuit Black Bishop]
 JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
 Faith, not in all.
 I love roguery too well to let it fall.
Enter Black Knight's Pawn Gelder [from the Black House]
 How now, what news with you?
 BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER The sting of conscience
 Afflicts me so for that inhuman violence
 230 On the White Bishop's Pawn, it takes away
 My joy, my rest.
 JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
 This 'tis to make an eunuch.
 You made a sport on't then.
 BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
 Cease, Aggravation.
 I come to be absolved for't. Where's my confessor?
 Why dost thou point to th' ground?
 JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
 'Cause he went that way.
 235 Come, come help me in with this cabinet,
 And after I have sing'd these papers throughly
 I'll tell thee a strange story.
 BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
 If't be sad,
 It's welcome.

199 trow hey (meaningless expletive)
 200 epistles letters (but suggesting by contrast the New Testament epistles)
 202 Blanch white (especially, white face paint; here suggesting a woman whose purity is artificial, a 'painted woman'); to whitewash; to cheat
Bridget (St Bridget founded a community of nuns named after her.)
 203 Whitefriars district in London (and the 'White House') associated with (a) Catholics, and (b) prostitutes
 204 Sisters of Compassion (a) nuns (b) women who take pity on men, and relieve their sexual frustrations ('nuns of the pity-fuck')
 205 bowels centre, interior (but also the body organ associated with compassion)
 206 nunnery (a) convent (b) brothel (a 'nunnery without temple', without a chapel or church)
without beyond Temple Bar a gate marking the limit of the jurisdiction of the City of London, at the west end of Fleet Street; beyond it was the increasingly fashionable then-suburban 'West End' (associated with lawyers and courtiers) and Westminster (associated with Parliament) 208 state policy (a) government action (b) political cunning

 209 exceeding exceptionally 210 powder gunpowder
 211 able (a) enable, make possible (b) vouch for 213 humour mood, inclination
 215 bull papal decree (in this case, to dissolve a marriage); but also suggesting that the 'horns' of the bull will belong to the husband/cuckold
 216 shifts tricks, evasions, jokes
 216.2 fire (emblematic of lust and damnation)
 216 familiar (a) member of family or household (b) intimate acquaintance (c) officer of the Inquisition (d) familiar spirit, attendant devil
 218 me for me
French russet the colour of imported coarse reddish-brown garments
 219 mystery (a) secret purpose (b) state secret (c) theological doctrine, sacrament
 222 Jesuitical expulse expulsion of the Jesuits

223 inquisitors (a) legal investigators (b) officials of the Catholic Inquisition (c) inquisitive persons spectacl'd be-spectacl'd, wearing glasses, carrying magnifying glasses 224 dung of treason (a) brown mass deposited by traitors (b) shittiness of treason
 225 cherrystones (which are not digested, and hence pass through the body into the excrement)
 226 ends of letters alphabetical fragments
 227 all everything
 229 sting of conscience John 8:9
 232 make an eunuch 'some are made eunuchs' (Matthew 19:12)
 233 sport on't joke of it
Aggravation (using the abstract noun as though it were her name)
 234 absolved forgiven by a priest (Catholic sacrament)
 235 point...ground (a gesture which would usually indicate that someone was dead or in hell)
 236 in go in 237 sing'd toasted
throughly thoroughly

JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN

'Tis not troubled with much mirth, sir.

Exeunt [with cabinet and fire]

2.2

Enter Fat Bishop of Spalato [from the White House, dressed in white, followed by his servant,] a [white] Pawn

FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO PAWN!

FAT BISHOP'S PAWN

I attend at your great holiness's service.

FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO

For 'great' I grant you, but for 'greatly holy',

There the soil alters. Fat cathedral bodies

5

Have very often but lean little souls,

Much like the lady in the lobster's head,

A great deal of shell and garbage of all colours,

But the pure part that should take wings and mount—

That's at last gasp, as if a man should gape

10

And from this huge bulk let forth a butterfly,

Like those big-bellied mountains which the poet

Delivers, that are brought to bed with mouse-flesh.

Are my books printed, Pawn? My last invectives

'Gainst the Black House.

FAT BISHOP'S PAWN

Ready for publication,

15

For I saw perfect books this morning, sir.

FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO

Fetch me a few, which I will instantly

Distribute 'mongst the White House.

FAT BISHOP'S PAWN

With all speed, sir.
Exit Fat Bishop's Pawn

FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO

It's a most lordly life to rail at ease,

Sit, eat, and feed upon the fat of one kingdom

And rail upon another with the juice on't.

20

I have writ this book out of the strength and marrow

Of six-and-thirty dishes at a meal.

Of all things I commend the White House best

For plenty and variety of victuals.

When I was one of the Black House professed,

25

My flesh fell half a cubit; time to turn

When my own ribs revolted. But to say truth,

I've no preferment yet that's suitable

To th' greatness of my person and my parts.

I grant I live at ease, for I am made 30

The Master of the Beds, the long-acre of beds,

But there's no marigolds that shuts and opens,

Flower-gentles, Venus-baths, apples of love,

Pinks, hyacinths, honeysuckles, daffadownillies.

There was a time I'd more such drabs than beds;

35

Now I've more beds than drabs.

Yet there's no eminent trader deals in hole-sale

But she and I have clapped a bargain up,

Let in at watergate, for which I've racked

My tenants' purse-strings that they've twanged again.

40

Enter [from the Black House] Black KnightGondomar with Jesuit Black Bishop [aloof off]

Yonder's Black Knight, the fistula of Europe,

Whose disease once I undertook to cure

2.2.0.1 Fat Bishop (from the outset he violates the rules of chess, by having changed sides from Black to White)

3 'great' very large4 cathedral bodies (a) bodies as big as a cathedral, relative to a small parish church (b) bodies of bishops6 lady . . . head calcareous structure in lobster, thought to resemble a seated woman7 garbage entrails8 pure part soul9 gape (a) open the mouth wide to eat

(b) gasp in pain (c) yawn

11 the poet Horace, criticizing a pompous author: 'mountains will labour; to birth will come a laughter-rousing mouse' (Art of Poetry)12 Delivers reports (but punning on 'give birth', 'act as midwife')bed child-bed13 last latest (but they will also prove to be 'final')15 perfect complete, finished18–20 It's . . . on't (true both of the character and the actor)19 fat . . . kingdom Genesis 41:420 rail upon (a) verbally abuse or attack

(b) make jokes about

21 marrow vitality (but suggesting 'bone marrow', a delicacy)22 Of given by, resulting frommeal See Additional Passage A.26 fell shrankcubit ancient measure of length (18–22 inches)turn (a) reverse direction (b) repent, convert to a different religion (c) desert, change sides29 greatness magnitudeperson (a) identity, personality (b) body (c) character I am playing as an actorparts (a) body parts (b) talents (c) roles played by an actor31 Master . . . Beds governor of a hospital (a sinecure)long-acre (a) long narrow field (b) disreputable street in Londonbeds (a) furniture associated with illness or sex (b) flower-beds32–4 marigolds . . . daffadownillies (flowers used as metaphors for women)32 marigolds 'Mary's flowers' (which 'open' or 'spread' when the sun shines on them)opens (a) florally (b) sexually33 Flower-gentles florumour, 'flower of love' (amaranthus)Venus-baths wild teasel (noted for their pricking)apples of love tomatoes (but 'apples' is also slang for 'women' or 'breasts')34 Pinks (a) dianthus (b) beautiful women (c) whoreshoneysuckles (a) flowers from which honey can be sucked (b) woodbine, which entwines itself like ivy (c) persons to whom one addresses endearments

(d) those who suck 'honey' = semen

daffadownillies daffodils (in context, punning on 'down' as a female sexual position)35 drabs strumpets37 trader (a) pimp (b) dealerhole-sale (a) sale of vaginas or other orifices (b) wholesale38 clapped (a) copulated (b) shaken hands39 watergate (a) vulva, entrance for water = semen (b) gate giving access to the Thamesracked (a) pulled tight (b) tortured41 fistula suppurating pipe-like ulcer

- 45 With a High Holborn halter. When he did Vouchsafe to peep into my privileged lodgings,
He found good store of plate there, and rich hangings.
He knew I brought none to the White House with me.
I have not lost the use of my profession
Since I turned White House Bishop.
Enter [Fat Bishop's] Pawn [from the White House] with books
BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [apart to Jesuit Black Bishop]
Look, more books yet!
Yonder greasy gormandizing prelate
Has wrought our House more mischief by his scripts,
His fat and fulsome volumes,
Than the whole body of the adverse party.
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP
O 'twere a masterpiece of serpent subtlety
To fetch him on this side again.
BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR And then damn him
55 Into the bag for ever, or expose him
Against the adverse part (which now he feeds upon),
And that would double-damn him. My revenge
Has prompted me already. I'll confound him
On both sides for the physic he prescribed 60 And the base surgeon he provided for me.
I'll tell you what a most uncatholic jest
He put upon me once, when my pain tortured me:
He told me he had found a present cure for me,
Which I grew proud of and observed him seriously.
- What think you 'twas? Being execution day,
He showed the hangman to me out at window,
The common hangman.
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP O insufferable!
BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
I'll make him the balloon-ball of the churches,
And both the sides shall toss him. He looks like one,
A thing swelled up with mingled drink and urine,
70 And will bound well from one side to another.
Come, you shall write: our second Bishop absent (Which has yet no employment in the game,
Perhaps nor ever shall—it may be won
Without his motion; it rests most in ours),
75 He shall be flattered with sede vacante.
Make him believe he comes into his place,
And that will fetch him with a vengeance to us,
For I know powder is not more ambitious
When the match meets it than his mind for mounting;
80 As covetous and lecherous—
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP No more now, sir.
Enter [from] the White House [White King James, White Queen of Bohemia, White Bishop of Canterbury, White Knight Charles, White Duke of Buckingham, and white pawns,] and [from] the Black House [Black King Felipe, Black Queen Maria, Black Duke Olivares, and black pawns]
Both the sides fill.

- 43 High...halter elevated hangman's rope (as in 'hang 'em high')
High Holborn London street which runs from Newgate prison to the Tyburn gallows
44 privileged lodgings (a) exceptionally luxurious home (b) ecclesiastical sanctuary, where he cannot be seized or arrested
45 good store abundant supplies plate silver or gold kitchen utensils (useful for a glutton), but also 'bullion' and 'body armour' hangings draperies for a room or bed (useful for a lecher, but also in contrast to 'halter') 47 use (a) utilization for its intended purpose (b) sexual exploitation (c) revenue, especially passive income which does not require any work by the recipient profession (a) religious vows (b) religious beliefs (c) vocation, career 49 greasy (a) smeared with grease, from sloppy eating (b) anointed with chrism, as a former Roman Catholic priest (c) obscene gormandizing gluttonous
50 wrought...mischief caused...damage scripts writings
51 fat (a) obese (b) substantial (c) yielding a good return on investment (d) slow-witted, 'thick', lazy
fulsome (a) full, plump, abundant (b) coarse (c) cloying (d) stinking (e) disgusting (f) morally filthy, obscene 52 body aggregate, corporation (but suggesting 'body politic', with the Fat Bishop as a single 'member' of the whole) adverse party opposed side (in a dispute, contest, game), faction (but also playing on the sense 'part, fraction' in opposition to earlier 'whole') 53 serpent subtlety Genesis 3:1
55 bag sack in which chess pieces were placed as they were captured; allegorically, often used as an image of the universality of death, which does not distinguish between social classes; Middleton makes it instead an image of hell.
expose imperil, expose to danger
56 Against in opposition to 57 double-damn doubly condemn 58 prompted (a) incited (b) given a cue to confound (a) ruin (b) shame
60 surgeon (of lower prestige than other physicians, at the time, because of the messy manual nature of their work)
61 uncatholic (a) not universally applicable; specific to one person or patient (b) unusual (c) unsympathetic (d) unChristian (e) Protestant
63 present instant
64 grew proud of became elated about observed respectfully paid attention to 67 common ordinary (used for common criminals, not aristocrats or state officials)
68 balloon-ball large heavy inflated ball of strong double leather, used in a competitive game (very different from chess, whose rules Fat Bishop consistently violates)
71 bound bounce, rebound
72 second Bishop i.e. Black King's Bishop, probably representing the Bishop of Rome (= the Pope)
73 Which which position (of Black King's Bishop, or Pope), rather than 'which person', because the papacy was filled by a succession of different persons (and the same is imagined of the chess piece)
75 motion (a) activity (b) movement (of a chess piece)
76 He i.e. Fat Bishop sede vacante vacant seat (Latin), i.e. bishop's see, or papacy 78 with a vengeance (a) violently, emphatically (b) with a curse (c) in revenge
79 ambitious eager to rise to a higher position (literal, in the case of gunpowder)
80 mounting (a) rising socially and politically (b) riding, sexually (redefining 'match' as sexual)
82 Both...fill All the chess pieces cannot move at once; rather, this stage movement brings into view of the audience the full array, which has not been visible since the Induction.

[Fat Bishop of Spalato presents his book to White King James]

WHITE KING JAMES

This has been looked for long.

FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO

85 The stronger sting it shoots into the blood
Of the Black adversary. I'm ashamed now
I was theirs ever. What a lump was I
When I was led in ignorance and blindness!
I must confess, I've all my lifetime played
The fool till now.

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [to Jesuit Black Bishop]

And now he plays two parts: the fool and knave.

FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO [to White King James]

90 There's my recantation in the last leaf,
Writ like a Ciceronian in pure Latin.

WHITE BISHOP [OF CANTERBURY]

Pure honesty, the plainer Latin serves then.

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [to Jesuit Black Bishop]

Plague of those pestilent pamphlets! Those are they
That wound our cause to th' heart.

Enter Virgin White Queen's Pawn [from the White House]

JESUIT BLACK BISHOP

Here comes more anger.

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR

95 But we come well provided for this storm.

WHITE QUEEN [OF BOHEMIA]

Is this my pawn? she that should guard our person?
Or some pale figure of dejection,
Her shape usurping? Sorrow and affrightment
Has prevailed strangely with her.

VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN King of integrity,

100 Queen of the same, and all the House professors
Of noble candor, uncorrupted justice
And truth of heart, through my alone discovery—
My truth and honour wondrously preserved—
I bring into your knowledge with my suff'rings
105 (Fearful affrightments and heart-killing terrors)
The great incendiary of all Christendom,

The absolut'st abuser of true sanctity,
Fair peace and holy order, can be found
In any part o'th' universal globe,
Who—making meek devotion keep the door,
110 His lips being full of holy zeal at first—
Would have committed a foul rape upon me.

WHITE QUEEN [OF BOHEMIA] Ha?

WHITE KING JAMES

A rape? That's foul indeed, the very sound
To our ear fouler than the offence itself
115 To some kings of the earth.

VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN

Sir, to proceed:

Gladly I offered life to preserve honour,
Which would not be accepted without both,
The chief of his ill aim being at my honour,
Till heaven was pleased by some unlooked-for accident
120 To give me courage to redeem myself.

WHITE KING JAMES

When we find desp'rate sins in ill men's company,
We place a charitable sorrow there,
But custom and their leprous inclination
Quits us of wonder, for our expectation
125 Is answered in their lives; but to find sin—

Yea, and a masterpiece of darkness—sheltered Under a robe of sanctity is able To draw all wonder to that monster only
And leave created monsters unadmired.

130 The pride of him that took first fall for pride
Is to be angel-shaped and imitate
The form from which he fell, but this offender—
Far baser than sin's master, fixed by vow
To holy order (which is angels' method)—

135 Takes pride to use that shape to be a devil.
It grieves me that my knowledge must be tainted
With his infested name.
O rather with thy finger point him out.

VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN [pointing]
The place which he should fill is void, my lord;

110

115

120

125

130

135

140

82.1-2 Fat Bishop...King (a natural juxtaposition, since this second Bishop occupies the space adjacent to the King)

82 looked for expected

83 stronger (i.e., because anticipation increases desire, and therefore the public impact of his statement)

85 I...ever that there was ever a time when I was theirs (but also, ironically, 'that I have always been theirs') lump (a) slow, dull person (b) mass of clay without shape or soul: God has the power 'of the same lump to make one vessel unto honour, and another unto dishonour' (Romans 9:21)

86 (punning on 'lead', heavy, non-precious metal)

87-8 played | The fool (a) acted like an idiot (b) acted the role of the clown in plays

88 fool (at the time, an alternative name for the Bishop in chess)

90 leaf sheet

91 Ciceronian imitator of the florid prose style of the Roman orator Cicero

pure classical (as opposed to medieval Latin, stigmatized as decadent by humanist scholars)

92 plainer i.e. more like Seneca or Tacitus, whose leaner prose style influenced writers like Francis Bacon and Middleton

98 shape (a) physical form (b) theatrical role, part

affrightment fear

100 professors adherents, advocates (but also, ironically, 'people who pay lip-service to')

101 candor (a) brilliant whiteness (b) purity, innocence

102 alone i.e. unassisted

103 honour (a) good reputation (b) virginity

108 can (that) can

110 keep the door i.e. serve the function of a pimp

121 redeem save, regain, free (physically and spiritually)

124 custom (a) their habitual sinfulness (b) our experience of them leprous diseased (see I.I.2.27)

125 Quits rids
wonder astonishment (negative or positive)

130 created monsters bizarre animals created by God (as opposed to artificial human monstrous behaviour)

unadmired not wondered at

131 him...pride Lucifer

- His guilt has seized him—the Black Bishop's Pawn.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP
Ha? Mine? My Pawn? The glory of his Order,
The prime and president zealot of the earth?
Impudent Pawn! For thy sake at this minute
145 Modesty suffers, all that's virtuous blushes,
And truth's self (like the sun vexed with a mist)
Looks red with anger.
- WHITE BISHOP [OF CANTERBURY]
Be not thou drunk with rage too.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP
Sober sincerity!—nor you a cup Spiced with hypocrisy.
- WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES
You name there, Bishop,
But your own Christmas bowl, your morning's 150 draught
Next your episcopal heart all the twelve days,
Which smack you cannot leave all the year after.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
White Knight, there is acknowledged from our House
A reverence to you, and a respect
155 To that loved Duke stands next you. With the favour Of the White King and th'afornamed respected,
I combat with this cause. [To her] If with all speed—
Waste not one syllable, unfortunate Pawn,
Of what I speak—thou dost not plead distraction 160 (A plea which will but faintly take thee off neither
From this leviathan scandal that lies rolling Upon the crystal waters of devotion)
Or, what may quit thee more—though enough,
nothing—
- 143 prime first, foremost president presiding, taking precedence over others 147 drunk with rage (because either drunkenness or anger could make a person red-faced) 148–9 Sober sincerity . . . hypocrisy (qualities for which Puritans were often mocked) 148 Sober (a) not intoxicated (b) grave, serious (c) not showily dressed cup (a) cupful of wine (b) chalice, eucharistic wine
150 Christmas bowl large drinking vessel (festive, rather than particularly Christian, and in contrast to the eucharist) draught drink
151 twelve days (of Christmas)
152 smack flavour, relish
153 White Knight See Additional Passage B.
155 favour permission
157 combat with take arms against, oppose cause (a) agent (b) accusation, legal charge (c) side of a controversy
159 distraction insanity
160 faintly (a) imperceptibly, scarcely
(b) deceitfully (c) timidly, like a coward take thee off remove you 161 leviathan (a) sea monster of enormous size, hence 'huge' (b) enemy of the Lord
- (Isaiah 27:1), hence Satan scandal slanderous imputation (but also 'behaviour of a member of a religious order which discredits religion') rolling (a) turning over on its axis,
like a whale (b) coiling, like a snake
(c) meditating, plotting. See also Psalms
37:5 'Roll thy way upon the Lord'.
162 crystal i.e. as transparent as ice or crystal 163 quit acquit
enough, nothing nowhere near enough 164 foam foam at the mouth pang spasm
discover reveal 165 spirit . . . thee demon who has strongly possessed you, and filled you with falsehood (since the devil was 'father of lies') 166 Make . . . ready (then) prepare yourself perdition (a) destruction (b) damnation
167 remove move
168 This . . . this (probably indicating Jesuitess Black Queen's Pawn and Black Knight's Pawn Gelder)
169 how however 170 Spite of despite glorious (a) illustrious, impressive
- (b) boastful
ostentation (a) showing off (b) false show
(c) presaging 172 House of impudence Ezekiel 3:7 ('all the house of Israel are impudent') 176 Bring forth reveal (but also suggesting 'give birth to') attempt (a) violent assault upon a person, sexual assault (b) temptation conception origin, initiation (but suggesting her literal 'impregnation'). In English law, sexual intercourse which resulted in pregnancy was regarded as consensual,
and hence not rape.
178 touch handle directly (rather than point at, euphemistically allude to) 179 eruption bursting out (suggesting 'ejaculation')
181 strain (a) style (b) Biblical passage
(c) injury (d) compulsion (e) strained interpretation
182 shames' heap mass of shame, collection of causes of shame (but also suggesting the grotesque image of a 'pile of human genitals', as in Rabelais's Gargantua) 188 confusion (a) destruction of an adversary (b) confounding, refutation of an argument
- Fall down and foam, and by that pang discover
The vexing spirit of falsehood strong within thee, 165 Make thyself ready for perdition.
There's no remove in all the game to 'scape it.
This Pawn, or this, the Bishop or myself,
Will take thee in the end, play how thou canst.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
Spite of sin's glorious ostentation
170 And all blood-threats (that thunder cracks of pride, Ush'ring a storm of malice), House of impudence,
Craft and equivocation, my true cause Shall keep the path it treads in.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR I play thus then:
Now in the hearing of this high assembly,
175 Bring forth the time of this attempt's conception.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
'Conception'? Lord! How tenderly you handle it!
- WHITE BISHOP [OF CANTERBURY]
It seems, Black Knight, you are afraid to touch it.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
Well, its 'eruption'—will you have it so then?
Or you, White Bishop, for her? The more unclean, 180 Vile and impious, that you urge the strain to,
The greater will her shames' heap show i'th' end
And the wronged meek man's glory. The time, Pawn?
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
Yesterday's cursed evening—
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR O the treasure
Of my revenge I can't spend all on thee;
185 Ruin enough to spare for all thy kindred too.
For honour's sake, call in more slanderers.
I have such plentiful confusion,

- 190 I know not how to waste it. I'll be nobler yet
And put her to her own House.—King of meekness,
Take the cause to thee, for our hand's too heavy.
Our proofs will fall upon her like a tower
And grind her bones to powder.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN What new engine
Has the devil raised in him now?
- 195 BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR Is it he?
And that the time? Stand firm now to your scandal;
Pray, do not shift your slander.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN Shift your treacheries.
They've worn one suit too long.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR That holy man,
So wrongfully accused by this lost Pawn,
Has not been seen these ten days in these parts.
- 200 WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES HOW!
BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
Nay, at this instant thirty leagues from hence.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
Fathomless falsehood! Will it 'scape unblasted?
- WHITE KING JAMES [to Black Knight Gondomar]
Can you make this appear?
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR Light is not clearer.
By his own letters, most impartial monarch.
- 205 WHITE KING'S COUNSELLOR PAWN [to White King James]
How wrongfully may sacred virtue suffer, sir.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [aside to Jesuit Black Bishop]
Bishop, we have a treasure of that false heart.
- WHITE KING JAMES [to White King's Counsellor Pawn]
Step forth and reach those proofs.
[*White King's Counsellor Pawn advances toward
Black Knight Gondomar*]
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN [aside]
Amazement covers me.
Can I be so forsaken of a cause
So strong in truth and equity? Will virtue 210 Send me no aid in this hard time of friendship?
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [aside to White King's Pawn]
There's an infallible staff and a red hat
Reserved for you.
[Black Knight Gondomar gives letters to White King's Counsellor Pawn]
- WHITE KING'S COUNSELLOR PAWN [aside to Black Knight]
O, sir endeared!
BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [aside to White King's Pawn]
A staff
That will not eas'ly break, you may trust to't—[White King's Counsellor Pawn delivers letters to White King James]
[Aside] And such a one had your corruption need of.
There's a state fig for you now. 215
- WHITE KING JAMES Behold all,
How they cohere in one.
I always held a charity so good
To holiness professed, I ever believed rather
The accuser false than the profession vicious. 220
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
A charity like all your virtues else,
Gracious and glorious.
- WHITE KING JAMES Where settles the offence,
Let the fault's punishment be derived from thence.
We leave her to your censure.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR Most just majesty!
[Exeunt all the White House but White Knight Charles, White Duke of Buckingham, and White Bishop's Gelded Pawn, who stand aloof with the Virgin White Queen's Pawn]
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
Calamity of virtue! My Queen leave me too? 225
Am I cast off as th'olive casts her flower?
Poor friendless innocence, art thou left a prey
To the devourer?
- WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES
No, thou art not lost.

189 waste spend, use
190 put her to leave her to be judged by 191 for our hand's because our hand is 193 engine (a) device (b) ingenuity (c) large offensive weapon (d) trap 195 to your scandal (a) to the scandalous charge you've made (b) with the result that you will be engulfed by scandal 196 shift . . . slander change your story, transfer your slander to another object Shift change, rid yourself of (but also suggesting 'change clothes')
202 unblasted (a) not struck with lightning
(b) not blighted by astrological influences
(c) not discredited
203 appear evident, demonstrably so
207 Amazement consternation
208 of a cause (a) in a case (b) by a cause 209 equity (a) fairness, impartiality (b) jurisprudence based on general 'natural' principles, which overrule the letter of specific statute laws when those would produce an unjust result (a distinctive feature of English law, institutionalized in the Court of Chancery)

210 of for
211 infallible (a) certain, guaranteed
(b) credited with the doctrinal infallibility which the Catholic church claimed for itself
staff . . . hat insignia of office of Catholic cardinal
212 staff (playing on the sense 'means of support')
214 corruption (a) moral depravity (b) corrupt administration of public office
215 state political, pompous, high-class (sarcastic, as in modern 'royal') fig (a) contemptuous gesture, thrusting the thumb between closed fingers
(b) poisoned fig (method of assassination, associated with Italy and Spain) 217 they i.e. the letters, as internally consistent evidence against White Queen's

Pawn
218 charity willingness to interpret actions
charitably, sympathetically 219 professed vowed (but suggesting 'claimed, pretended') 220 profession (a) declaration, vow (b) religious order, religious community
(c) occupation, vocation
222 Where wherever 224 We leave her (thus stranded, surrounded by Black pieces, she is an exposed pawn which can be taken at any point, and whose capture most of the White pieces will clearly do nothing to prevent or revenge) 226 cast . . . flower Job 15:33 ('cast off his flower as the olive') 228–31 WHITE KNIGHT . . . WHITE DUKE (adjoining chess pieces, who collaborate here and for the remainder of the play)

230 Let 'em put on their bloodiest resolutions,
If the fair policy I aim at prospers.—
Thy counsel, noble Duke?
WHITE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM
For that work, cheerfully.

WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES
A man for speed now!

WHITE BISHOP'S GELDED PAWN
Let it be my honour, sir.
Make me that flight, that owes her my life's service.
[Exeunt White Knight Charles, White Duke of Buckingham, and White Bishop's Gelled Pawn]

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [to Black House]
Was not this brought about well for our honours?

JESUIT BLACK BISHOP
235 Push! That Galician brain can work out wonders.

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
Let's use her, as upon the like discovery
A maid was used at Venice: everyone
Be ready with a penance. Begin, majesty.—
[To her] Vessel of foolish scandal! Take thy freight.
240 Had there been in that cabinet of niceness
Half the virginities of th'earth locked up,
And all swept at one cast by the dexterity
Of a Jesuitical gamester, 't'ad not valued
The least part of that general worth thou'st tainted.

BLACK KING FELIPE [to Virgin White Queen's Pawn]
245 First, I enjoin thee to a three days' fast for't.

BLACK QUEEN MARIA
You're too penurious, sir. I'll make it four.

JESUIT BLACK BISHOP
I, to a twelve hours' kneeling at one time.

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
And in a room filled all with Aretine's pictures,
More than the twice twelve labours of luxury.
250 Thou shalt not see so much as the chaste pommel
Of Lucrece' dagger peeping. Nay, I'll punish thee
For a discoverer: I'll torment thy modesty.

BLACK DUKE OLIVARES
After that four days' fast, to th' Inquisition house, Strengthened with bread and water, for worse penance.

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
Why, well said, Duke of our House, nobly aggravated!

VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
Virtue, to show her influence more strong,
Fits me with patience mightier than my wrong.
Exeunt [into the Black House]
Finit Actus Secundus

●

Incipit Actus Tertius
Enter Fat Bishop of Spalato [from the White House, dressed in white]

FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO
I know my pen draws blood of the Black House.
There's ne'er a book I write but their cause bleeds.
It has lost many an ounce of reputation
Since I came of this side. I strike deep in
And leave the orifex gushing where I come.

229 bloodiest (probably alluding to Spanish and Catholic military attacks on Bohemia, the Palatinate and other Protestant strongholds in Germany)

231 Thy counsel (can I count on) your (a) advice (b) confidentiality, secrecy

233 that who flight long, well-feathered arrow for long-distance shooting. (In chess, the Bishop was also called 'the Archer'; hence his pawn or instrument might be imagined as an arrow the archer shoots.)

235 Push (exclamation: 'fuck')

Galician belonging to Galicia, a north-western region of Spain

236 use treat (but suggesting 'sexually exploit') discovery revelation

237 maid virgin

Venice (resisted Jesuits and the Inquisition; also associated with sexual license, and for thirty years the home of Pietro Aretino: see l. 248)

238 penance (a) act of self-mortification imposed by religious authority as consequence of sin (b) legal punishment

239 Vessel See I. I. 34.

foolish scandal (a) her naïve accusation (b) Black Bishop's Pawn's unwise scandalous behaviour

freight burden (of punishment), but also suggesting 'cargo' (of her sea-going 'vessel')

240 niceness fastidiousness, delicacy

242 swept (a) violently removed (b) taken up wholesale (of winnings from a gambling table)

cast (a) throw of an opponent in wrestling (b) glance (c) throw of the dice

dexterity (a) adroitness (b) base cunning (c) manual skill, use of the right hand

243 gamester (a) game-player (b) gambler (c) wrestler (d) happy-go-lucky person (e) playboy

245 three days i.e. the Black House does not 'take' the exposed pawn immediately (as they could do), because they assume it can be taken whenever they want

245-7 fast ... kneeling (Catholic religious practices)

248 Aretine's pictures sixteen Italian images with caption-poems by Pietro Aretino, showing classical figures in various sexual positions

249 twelve labours (suggesting the labours of Hercules, imposed on him as a punishment)

luxury lust

250 pommel knob at end of hilt

251 Lucrece Roman wife who killed herself after having been raped (see Ghost of Lucrece)

252 discoverer (a) whistle-blower (b) person who exposes something that others want hidden (and who is therefore properly punished by being exposed to something she doesn't want to see)

253 Inquisition Catholic ecclesiastical tribunal for investigation of heretics; notorious for brutality of its interrogations and punishments

257 my wrong the wrong done to me

3.1.1 of (a) from (b) belonging to pen (a) writing (b) quill for writing, its tip sharpened with a knife (c) stylus, tool for cutting designs in metal (d) penis

draws (a) extracts, as from an inkwell or artery (b) delineates blood (a) life-blood (b) rage, passion (c) murder (d) sexual passion

3 ounce measure of fluids (like ink, blood) or solids (like the Fat Bishop)

4 of onto

strike penetrate

5 orifex orifice

gushing spouting (blood or sexual fluids)

come (punning on 'have an orgasm')

But where is my advancement all this while
 I ha' gaped for't?
 I'd have some round preferment, corpulent dignity
 That bears some breadth and compass in the gift on't.
 10 I am persuaded that this flesh would fill
 The biggest chair ecclesiastical
 If it were put to trial.
 To be made master of a hospital
 Is but a kind of diseased bedrid honour,
 15 Or dean of the poor alms-knights that wear badges.
 There's but two lazy beggarly preferments
 In the White Kingdom, and I've got 'em both.
 My merit does begin to be crop-sick
 For want of other titles.

Enter [from the Black House] Black Knight Gondomar [aloof off]

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [aside]

O, here walks

20 His fulsome holiness. Now for the master-trick
 T'undo him everlastingly (that's put home)
 And make him hang in hell most seriously
 That jested with a halter upon me.

FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO [aside]

The Black Knight! I must look to my play then.

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [coming forward with a letter]

25 I bring fair greetings to your reverend virtues
 From Cardinal Paulus, your most princely kinsman.

FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO

Our princely kinsman, sayst thou? We accept them.

[Fat Bishop of Spalato takes the letter]

Pray, keep your side and distance; I am chary

Of my episcopal person.

30 I know the Knight's walk in this game too well;
 He may skip over me, and where am I then?

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [aside]

There where thou shalt be shortly, if art fail not.

FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO (reads the letter) 'Right reverend and noble'—meaning ourself—'our true kinsman in blood, but alienated in affection, your unkind disobedience to the mother cause proves at this time the only cause of your ill fortune. My present remove by general election to the papal dignity had now auspiciously settled you in my sede vacante'—ha? had it so?—'which at my next remove by death might have proved your step to supremacy.'

How? All my body's blood mounts to my face
 To look upon this letter.

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [aside]

The pill works with him.

FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO (reads the letter) 'Think on't seriously, it is not yet too late then, through the submissive acknowledgement of your disobedience to be lovingly received into the brotherly bosom of the conclave.'

This was the chair of ease I ever aimed at.
 I'll make a bonfire of my books immediately.

All that are left against that side I'll sacrifice,
 50 Pack up my plate and goods and steal away
 By night at watergate. It is but penning
 Another recantation and inventing

Two or three bitter books against the White House
 And then I'm in o' t'other side again

55 As firm as e'er I was, as fat and flourishing.—
 Black Knight, expect a wonder ere't be long.
 You shall see me one of the Black House shortly.

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR

Your holiness is merry with the messenger.

Too happy to be true; you speak what should be,
 60 If natural compunction touched you truly.

8 round (a) financially generous (b) vigorously physical (c) honest, straightforward (d) plump corpulent (a) big bulky (b) corporeal, in contrast to spiritual dignity (a) high office (b) gravity

9 compass (a) scope (b) girth

10 persuaded convinced

11 biggest chair (a) most important office (b) largest seat

12 put to trial tried, given the chance

13 master governor

hospital any institution dedicated to unselfish physical and spiritual charity: place for (a) treatment of the ill or insane (b) lodging pilgrims (c) housing the destitute (d) educating the young

14, 16 but only

15 dean of ecclesiastical officer entrusted with pastoral care of alms-knights military pensioners (derogatory Middleton coinage) badges (a) identifying emblems of a knight (b) licences to beg

16 lazy beggarly (expressing the Fat Bishop's opinion of the people he is supposed to care for, but also describing his soliciting of undemanding but rewarding preferments)

18 crop-sick having something wrong with your craw or throat, or something stuck in your throat which causes you to gag (Middleton coinage)

19 want lack

20 master-trick (Middleton coinage, as in 'masterpiece')

21 that's (a) (modifying 'him') who is (b) (modifying 'undo') that is, meaning put home (a) restored to his home, the Black House (b) brought back to his natural condition (c) put to death

23 upon (a) (modifying 'jested') about

(b) (modifying 'halter') placed on

28 side half of the chessboard
chary careful about the preservation

30 Knight's walk unique movement of a knight in chess: two spaces in one direction and one space in a second direction, at a right angle to the first. Perhaps also suggesting that the actor playing Gondomar mimicked his way of walking (affected by his fistula? with his cane?).

31 skip over jump over (knights being the only chess pieces which can skip over others), jump up and onto

36 mother cause cause of Mother Church

45 submit submissive

48 chair of ease comfortable ecclesiastical position offered by the sede vacante (but punning on the sense 'toilet')

59 merry joking

60 happy fortunate (as in 'too good to be true')

61 compunction compassion, remorse for sin (literally, the 'pricking' of conscience: hence 'touched')

	O you've drawn blood, life blood—yea, blood of honour—	To cherish the futurity of project Whose motion must be restless till that great work	85
	From your most dear, your primitive mother's heart.	Called the possession of the world be ours.
65	Your sharp invectives have been points of spears In her sweet tender sides. The unkind wounds Which a son gives, a son of reverence 'specially, They rankle ten times more than th'adversary's.	Was it not I procured a gallant fleet From the White Kingdom to secure our coasts 'Gainst th'infidel pirāte, under pretext Of more necessitous expedition?	90
	I tell you, sir, your reverend revolt Did give the fearful'st blow to adoration	Who made the jails fly open, without miracle, And let the locusts out—those dangerous flies Whose property is to burn corn with touching?
70	Our cause e'er felt. It shook the very statues, The urns and ashes of the sainted sleepers.	The heretic granaries feel it to this minute, And now they've got amongst the country crops	95
	FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO	They stick so fast to the converted ears The loudest tempest that authority rouses
	Forbear, or I shall melt i'th' place I stand And let forth a fat bishop in sad syrup.	Will hardly shake 'em off. They have their dens In lady's couches; there's safe groves and fens.
75	Suffices, I am yours when they least dream on't. Ambition's fodder (pow'r and riches) draws me. When I smell honour that's the lock of hay That leads me through the world's field every way.	Nay, were they followed and found out by th' scent, Palm-oil will make a pursuivant relent. Whose policy was't to put a silenced muzzle On all the barking tongue-men of the time?	100
	Exit	Made pictures, that were dumb enough before, Poor sufferers in that politic restraint?	105
	BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR	My light spleen skips and shakes my ribs to think on't. Whilst our drifts walked uncensored but in thought, A whistle or a whisper would be questioned In the most fortunate angle of the world
	Here's a sweet paunch to propagate belief on, Like the foundation of a chapel laid Upon a quagmire. I may number him now 'Mongst my inferior policies and not shame 'em. But let me a little solace my designs With the remembrance of some brave ones past

63 primitive mother true original mother (the Church)
64–5 spears...sides When Christ was on the cross, 'one of the soldiers with a spear pierced his side, and forthwith came there out blood and water' (John 20:34). Black Knight's image substitutes the Church for Christ (as Protestants accused Catholicism of doing).
69 adoration worship (not of God but of the Church, epitomized by its idolatrous statues and saints)
71 sainted sleepers dead saints ('sleeping' until the general resurrection)
72 melt 'dissolve in tears of compassion' (Psalms 119:28, Joshua 2:11, etc.); but also suggesting 'sweat excessively' (sweat was thought to be melted excess body fat)
73 fat bishop bishop entirely composed of lard (like the food sculptures popular in Renaissance banquets) sad (a) massive, heavy (b) sorrowful syrup thick liquid, usually sweet 74 Suffices suffice (to say)
75–7 Ambition's...way i.e. his ambition is an appetite which leads him by the nose, like a horse or donkey hungry for a small parcel of hay
78 propagate breed
81 inferior policies lesser stratagems shame humiliate (by comparing to something unworthy)

82 solace comfort
83 brave ones past former splendid plots
84 cherish foster
project speculative scheming (political or commercial) 89 infidel pirāte Ottoman raiders (based in the Mediterranean)
91 jails...miracle St Peter (Acts 12:4–11) and St Paul (Acts 16:23–6) were miraculously released from prison
92 locusts i.e. parasitic Catholic clergy, especially Jesuits, often compared (because of their alleged numbers, rapid movements, and destructiveness) to the plague of locusts in Exodus 10:1–20 and Revelation 9:3–7 flies (a) winged insects (b) flatterers, spies (c) devils, familiars which take the form of small insects infesting a human body 93 burn ruin, cause to wither as if scorched
94 heretic Protestant, English
95, 112 country i.e. rural areas which remained loyal to Catholicism longer than the cities
96 converted 'changed in religious belief' and 'illegally appropriated' (first occurrence)
ears i.e. listeners, people paying attention to Catholic propaganda (but punning on 'ears of corn') 98 dens (a) lairs (b) hideouts (Matthew 21:13: 'My house shall be called the house of prayer; but ye have made it a den of thieves'.)

99 couches (a) beds (b) lairs (c) floor or frame on which grain is laid for processing there's (a) there exist (b) in lady's couches are 100 scent smell of a man or animal, tracked by hunting dogs
101 Palm-oil 'oil of angels' applied to an outstretched hand: a bribe (first occurrence)
pursuivant official with an arrest warrant 102 muzzle (a) face (b) contrivance which prevents an animal from biting 103 barking making noises like an angry dog: warning, rebuking tongue-men public speakers, preachers (first occurrence)
104 pictures allegorical engravings, political cartoons
105 politic restraint clever crack-down on political dissidents
106 light spleen supposed anatomical source of laughter (as opposed to 'dark spleen', causing melancholy)
107 drifts intentions, plots (compared to a migratory herd) uncensored but uncriticized, unprosecuted, uncensored except 109 In the...world in England (punning on Angle-land). The phrase goes with both the preceding and following sentence.

- 110 The court has held the city by the horns
 Whilst I have milked her. I have got good sops too
 From country ladies for their liberties—
 From some, for their most vainly hoped preferments,
 High offices i'th' air. I should not live 115 But for this mel aerium, this mirth-manna.
Enter Black Knight's Pawn Gelder [from the Black House]
 My Pawn! How now? the news?
 BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
 Expect none very pleasing
 That comes, sir, of my bringing. I'm for sad things.
 BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
 Thy conscience is so tender-hoofed of late
 Every nail pricks it.
 BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
 This may prick yours too,
 120 If there be any quick flesh in a yard on't.
 BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR Mine?
 Mischief must find a deep nail and a driver
 Beyond the strength of any machiavel
 The politic kingdoms fatten to reach mine.
 125 Prithee, Compunction, needle-pricked a little,
 Unbind this sore wound.
 BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
 Sir, your plot's discovered.
 BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
 Which of the twenty thousand and nine hundred Fourscore and five? canst tell?
 BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER Bless us! so many?
 How do poor countrymen have but one plot
 130 To keep a cow on, yet in law for that?
 You cannot know 'em all sure by their names, sir.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
 Yes, were their number trebled. Thou hast seen
 A globe stands on the table in my closet?
 BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
 A thing, sir, full of countries and hard words?
 BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
 True, with lines drawn some tropical, some oblique. 135
 BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
 I can scarce read; I was brought up in blindness.
 BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
 Just such a thing, if e'er my skull be opened,
 Will my brains look like.
 BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
 Like a globe of countries?
 BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
 Yes, and some master politician
 That has sharp state-eyes will go near to pick out 140
 The plots and every climate where they fastened;
 'Twill puzzl'em too.
 BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
 I'm of your mind for that, sir.
 BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
 They'll find 'em to fall thick upon some countries;
 They'd need use spectacles. But I turn to you now:
 What plot is that discovered?
 BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
 Your last brat, sir, 145
 Begot 'twixt the Black Bishop and yourself:
 Your antedated letters 'bout the Jesuit.
 BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR Discovered? How?
 BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
 The White Knight's policy has outstripped yours, it seems,
 150 Joined with th'assistant counsel of his Duke.

110 court...city government has restrained the free enterprise and political action of urban capitalists horns (suggesting the horns of citizen cuckolds, whose wives have been seduced by courtiers)

111 milked exploited, drained dry financially sops literally, 'pieces of bread soaked in milk or wine'; figuratively, 'bribes'—alluding to the sops Aeneas threw to Cerberus, the dog who guarded hell, in order to pacify and distract him (first occurrence)

112 country rural (but punning on 'cunt': see next note)

liberties immunities (from prosecution for their Catholicism), but ironically suggesting 'licentiousness' and 'spiritual freedom from sin'

113 vainly futilely, arrogantly

113–14 preferments...air pie-in-the-sky promotions to important positions

115 manna divine bread which God sent to feed the children of Israel (Exodus 16)
mel aerium airy honey (an allusion to Virgil's Georgics, perhaps prompted by 'country' three lines earlier)

119, 122 nail (alluding to the Crucifixion)

120 quick sensitive yard three feet—but punning, like 'prick', on the normal English word for 'penis' (which is thus equated with 'conscience')

122 driver hammer

125 Compunction 'Mr Remorse' (sarcastic; also suggesting the allegorical personal names used by Puritans)

needle-pricked (a) having suffered a very tiny puncture (b) with a small penis

128 tell (a) report (b) count

129 plot piece of land

130 in law for legally embroiled over

133 closet private room

135 tropical latitudinal (like the Tropics of Cancer and Capricorn); but also suggesting the Spanish global empire, and characterizing Black Knight's 'troped, figurative, not plain or literal' brain oblique slanting downwards at something other than a right angle (like longitudinal lines on a globe); but also characterizing Black Knight's 'indirect, deviant' brain

136 I...read (Catholics did not encourage literacy, or personal Bible-reading, as Protestants did.)

blindness (standard Protestant characterization of Catholicism)

140 state-eyes (first occurrence)

141 every climate all the world's five climatic zones (again suggesting the global nature of Spain's empire and ambition)

146 Begot...yourself (suggesting male-male fornication)

- The Bishop's White Pawn undertook the journey
Who, as they say, discharged it like a flight.
(I made him, for the business, fit and light.)
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
It's but a bawdy pawn out of the way a little.
Enough of them in all parts.
Enter Jesuit Black Bishop, [followed by Black King Felipe, Black Queen Maria, Black Duke Olivares, and pawns from] the Black House and [White King James, White Queen of Bohemia, White Bishop of Canterbury, White Knight Charles, White Duke of Buckingham, and pawns from] the White House
- 155 JESUIT BLACK BISHOP You have heard all then?
BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
The wonder's past with me, but some shall down
for't.
WHITE KING JAMES [to Black House]
Set free that virtuous Pawn from all her wrongs.
Let her be brought with honour to the face
Of her malicious adversary.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR Good! [Exit a pawn]
WHITE KING JAMES [to White Knight Charles] 160 Noble chaste knight (a title of that candor
The greatest prince on earth without impeachment
May have the dignity of his worth comprised in),
This fair delivering act virtue will register
In that white book of the defence of virgins,
165 Where the clear fame of all preserving knights
Are to eternal memory consecrated—
And we embrace, as partner of that honour,
This worthy Duke, the counsel of the act,
Whom we shall ever place in our respect.
- WHITE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM
170 Most blest of kings, throned in all royal graces,
Every good deed sends back its own reward
Into the bosom of the enterpriser,
But you t'express yourself as well to be King of munificency as integrity
Adds glory to the gift.
- 159 adversary (the meaning of 'Satan', in Hebrew)
161 impeachment disparagement
163-6 This... consecrated i.e. his exoneration of Virgin White Queen's Pawn will be commemorated like the deeds of chivalric heroes
172 enterpriser person who attempts it
173 you i.e. for you
174 munificency splendid generosity
178 mak'st... glorious (like martyrs) 179 take... on't i.e. not admit to knowing about it makes she is she doing 180 unpenanced who has not performed penance for her sin (only occurrence) 182 visiting punishing
- Enter Virgin White Queen's Pawn [from the Black House]*
WHITE KING JAMES Thy deserts claim it, 175
Zeal and fidelity.—Appear, thou beauty
Of truth and innocence, best ornament
Of patience, thou that mak'st thy suff'rings glorious.
BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [aside]
I'll take no knowledge on't.—What makes she here?
How dares yon Pawn unpenanced (with a cheek 180
Fresh as her falsehood yet, where castigation
Has left no pale print of her visiting anguish)
Appear in this assembly? [Aside] Let me alone.
Sin must be bold; that's all the grace 'tis born to.
WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES
What's this?
WHITE KING JAMES
I'm wonderstruck.
VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN Assist me, goodness! 185
I shall to prison again.
BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [aside]
At least I've 'mazed 'em,
Scattered their admiration of her innocence,
As the fired ships put in severed the fleet
In '88. I'll on with't. Impudence
Is mischief's patrimony.—Is this justice? 190
Is injured reverence no sharper righted?
I ever held that majesty impartial
That like most equal heaven looks on the manners,
Not on the shapes they shroud in.
WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES That Black Knight
Will never take an answer. 'Tis a victory 195
To make him understand he does amiss
When he knows, in his own clear conscience,
That he does nothing else. Show him the testimony,
Confirmed by good men, how that foul attempter
Got but this morning to the place from whence 200
He dated his forged lines for ten days past.
BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
Why may not that corruption sleep in this
By some connivance, as you have waked in ours
By too rash confidence?
- 186 'mazed astonished, confused
188-9 fired... '88 English fireships scattered the Spanish Armada at Calais in 1588.
191 sharper more keenly 193 equal equitable manners behaviour
194 shroud in shelter under, are dressed or buried in. (Housing, clothing, and burial rituals all reflect class, status, and social allegiance, which are irrelevant to God.)
195 take an answer acknowledge a rebuttal
199 attempter would-be rapist
200 but only 202-3 that... as the same... which 202 sleep in this lie undetected in this (account of events)
204 confidence trust
- 152 flight company of angels, dive of a trained hawk, volley of arrows 153 I... light i.e., by castrating him I relieved him of the weight of his testicles (called 'stones'), and thereby transformed him into a faster and more obedient animal (like geldings among horses), with the powers of angels (God's eunuch messengers, capable of flight) business mission (but ironically suggesting, by contrast, the 'sexual business' which castration had made him not 'fit'
to do)
fit (a) well adapted, qualified (b) inclined, disposed light (a) quick (b) not heavy (but ironically suggesting 'lascivious')

- WHITE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM [to White House]
I'll undertake
205 That Knight shall teach the devil how to lie.
- WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES
If sin were half as wise as impudent,
She'd ne'er seek farther for an advocate.
Enter Jesuitess Black Queen's Pawn [from the Black House]
- JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN (aside)
Now to act treach'ry with an angel's tongue.
Since all's come out, I'll bring him strangely in again.—
210 Where is this injured chastity? this goodness,
Whose worth no transitory prize can equal?
This rock of constant and invincible virtue
That made sin's tempest weary of his fury?
- BLACK QUEEN MARIA
What, is my Pawn distracted?
BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [aside]
I think rather 215 There's some notable masterpiece of roguery
This drum strikes up for.
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
Let me fall with reverence
Before this blessed altar.
[She falls before Virgin White Queen's Pawn]
- BLACK QUEEN MARIA This is madness.
BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [aside]
Well, mark the end. I stand for roguery still.
I will not change my side.
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN [to White House]
I shall be taxed, I know.
220 I care not what the Black House thinks of me.
BLACK QUEEN MARIA [to Black Knight Gondomar]
What say you now?
BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
I will not be unlaid yet.
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
However censure flies, I honour sanctity.
That is my object; I intend no other.
I saw this glorious and most valiant virtue 225 Fight the most noblest combat with the devil.
- BLACK QUEEN MARIA
If both the Bishops had been there for seconds,
'T'ad been a complete duel.
- WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES [to Jesuitess Black Queen's Pawn]
Then thou heard'st
The violence intended?
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
'Tis a truth
I joy to justify. I was an agent, sir,
On virtue's part, and raised that confused noise
230 That startled him and gave her liberty.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN [to White Knight Charles]
O 'tis a righteous story she has told, sir.
My life and fame stand mutually engaged
Both to the truth and goodness of this Pawn.
- WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES [to Black Knight Gondomar]
Does it appear to you yet clear as the sun?
235 BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
'Las, I believed it long before 'twas done.
[The Black House speaks apart]
- BLACK KING FELIPE [to Jesuitess Black Queen's Pawn] Degenerate!
BLACK QUEEN MARIA [to Jesuitess Black Queen's Pawn]
Base!
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP [to Jesuitess Black Queen's Pawn] Perfidious!
BLACK DUKE OLIVARES [to Jesuitess Black Queen's Pawn]
Trait'rous Pawn!
- JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
What, are you all beside yourselves?
BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR But I: Remember that, Pawn.
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
May a fearful barrenness
240 Blast both my hopes and pleasures, if I brought not
Her ruin in my pity, a new trap
For her more sure confusion.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [to Black House]
Have I won now?
Did not I say 'twas craft and machination?
I smelt conspiracy all the way it went,
245 Although the mess was covered, I'm so used to't.

undertake bet

- 209 him Jesuit Black Bishop's Pawn
212 rock (in contrast to the 'rock', Peter, who founded the Roman church)
214 distracted deranged
216–17 fall... altar (Protestants characterized such actions as an excessive, insane Catholic worship of merely human virtue.) 218 mark the end pay attention to the outcome

- 219 taxed criticized
221 unlaid moved from the position I've taken 222 However... flies no matter how people rush to criticize
226–7 If... duel (seconds sometimes fought in duels, as well as the principals; but duelling would be outrageously inappropriate for bishops)

233 mutually reciprocally, equally

- 236 'Las... done (ambiguous)
238 But I except me
242 Have I won (The preceding exchanges resemble the gambling between spectators at exhibition chess matches: Black Knight, having seen the pawn ploy, wins the bet.)
245 mess dish of food

- BLACK DUKE OLIVARES
That Queen would I fain finger.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR You're too hasty, sir.
If she were took, the game would be ours quickly.
My aim's at that White Knight, t'entrap him first:
The Duke will follow too.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP I would that Bishop 250 Were in my diocese; I'd soon change his whiteness.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
Sir, I could whip you up a pawn immediately.
I know where my game stands.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP Do't, suddenly!
Advantage least must not be lost in this play.
[Black Knight Gondomar takes White King's Counsellor Pawn]
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
Pawn, thou art ours.
- WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES [to White House]
He's taken by default,
255 By wilful negligence. Guard the sacred persons.
Look well to the White Bishop, for that Pawn Gave guard to th' Queen and him in the third place.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
See what sure piece you lock your confidence in.
I made this Pawn here by corruption ours,
260 As soon as honour by creation yours.
This whiteness upon him is but the leprosy
Of pure dissimulation. View him now:
His upper garment being taken off [the White King's Counsellor Pawn], he appears black underneath
His heart and his intents are of our colour.
- WHITE KING JAMES
Most dangerous hypocrite!
- WHITE QUEEN [OF BOHEMIA]
One made against us!
- WHITE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM
His truth of their complexion!
- WHITE KING JAMES [to White King's Counsellor Pawn]
Has my goodness, 265
Clemency, love and favour gracious, raised thee
From a condition next to popular labour?
Took thee from all the dubitable hazards
Of fortune, her most unsecure adventures,
And grafted thee into a branch of honour? 270
And dost thou fall from the top bough by th' rotten-
ness
Of thy alone corruption?—like a fruit
That's over-ripened by the beams of favour?
Let thy own weight reward thee. I ha' forgot thee.
Integrity of life is so dear to me, 275
Where I find falsehood or a crying trespass,
Be it in any whom our grace shines most on,
I'd tear 'em from my heart.
- WHITE BISHOP [OF CANTERBURY]
Spoke like heaven's substitute.
- WHITE QUEEN [OF BOHEMIA] [to Black House]
You have him, we can spare him, and his shame
Will make the rest look better to their game. 280
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
The more cunning we must use then.
- WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES We shall match you, Play how you can—perhaps and mate you too.
- FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO
Is there so much amazement spent on him That's but half black? There might be hope of that man, 285
But how will this House wonder if I stand forth
And show a whole one? instantly discover
One that's all black, where there's no hope at all?
- WHITE KING JAMES
I'll say thy heart then justifies thy books.
I long for that discovery.
- 246 DUKE (The speech is spoken by Black King in Early. The Duke of Bavaria specifically, and the Habsburg dynasty more generally, wanted possession of the Palatinate, the territory ruled by the Queen of Bohemia and her husband.)
- 246–53 That...play (Kibitzing—a public debate about the next move—was permitted in early chess matches.)
- 246 fain gladly
- finger (a) steal (b) sexually handle (but also literally picking up with the fingers a captured chess piece)
- 246–9 You're...follow too (Black Knight rebukes Black Duke for imagining that a chess game against a skilful opponent can be won by immediately attacking the opponent's Queen, before a single piece has been captured. He instead proposes a long-term, indirect strategy.)
- 246 hasty (Good chess players think before they move, rather than leaping at the first opportunity, which may be a trap.)
- 249–50 Bishop...diocese (Black Queen's Bishop and White Queen's Bishop are on different coloured squares; one can never take the other.)
- 250 diocese (punning on 'dye')
- 253 play (a) game (b) theatrical performance
- 255 sacred persons i.e. White King and Queen
- 257 Gave...place (because a pawn can attack diagonally to the left or right, a stationary White King's Pawn defends the third rank in front of both the White Queen and White King's Bishop)
- 258 sure reliable
- 260 honour...yours investiture with a title (made him) yours
- 265 complexion (a) nature (b) skin colour. Anti-Spanish propaganda emphasized their dark skin, as a sign of their mixture with Arabs, Jews, and Africans.
- 268 dubitable doubtful
- 269 fortune chance
- adventures risks (of business, in particular)
- 270 grafted...honour united you with an honourable family (using the metaphor of a 'family tree')
- 272 alone unique
- 274 weight (which will cause him to fall: from power, and more generally downwards toward hell, at the centre of the earth)
- 276 crying crying out for punishment
- 278 'em 'them' or 'him'
- heaven's substitute God's deputy on earth
- 280 better more carefully (crucial in chess, where everything is visible, and failure results from inattention)
- 281 match equal (but also alluding to the proposed 'match' linking White House England to Black House Spain)
- 282 mate checkmate (but also suggesting 'marry')

- 290 FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO Look no farther then.
Bear witness all the House, I am the man,
And turn myself into the Black House freely.
[Fat Bishop of Spalato crosses to the Black House]
I am of this side now.
- WHITE KING JAMES Monster ne'er matched him!
FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO [to Black Knight Gondomar]
This is your noble work, Knight.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [aside] Now I'll halter him.
FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO [to White House]
Next news you hear, expect my books against you 295 Printed at Douai, Brussels, or Spalato.
- WHITE KING JAMES [to White House]
See his goods seized on.
- FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO 'Las, they were all conveyed
Last night by water to a tailor's house,
A friend of the Black cause.
- WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES A prepared hypocrite!
WHITE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM
Premeditated turncoat!
Exeunt [all of White House but Virgin White Queen's Pawn and White King's Counsellor Pawn]
- FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO [to the departing White House]
Yes, rail on!
300 I'll reach you in my writings when I'm gone.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [aside to Black House]
Flatter him awhile with honours, till we put him
Upon some dangerous service and then burn him.
- BLACK KING FELIPE [to Fat Bishop of Spalato]
This came unlooked for.
- BLACK DUKE OLIVARES [to Fat Bishop of Spalato]
How we joy to see you!
- FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO
Now I'll discover all the White House to you.
- 305 BLACK DUKE OLIVARES
Indeed, that will both reconcile and raise you.
[Exeunt Fat Bishop of Spalato with all of Black House but Black Knight Gondomar and Jesuitess Black Queen's Pawn]
- WHITE KING'S COUNSELLOR PAWN [to Black Knight Gondomar]
I rest upon you, Knight, for my advancement.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
O for the staff, the strong staff, that will hold
And the red hat fit for the guilty mazard?
Into the empty bag! Know thy first way.
310 Pawns that are lost are ever out of play.
- WHITE KING'S COUNSELLOR PAWN
How's this?
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
No replications. You know me.
No doubt ere long you'll have more company.
The bag is big enough; 'twill hold us all.
Exeunt [Black Knight Gondomar, taking off White King's Counsellor Pawn]
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN [to Black Queen's Pawn]
I sue to thee: pritheee, be one of us.
Let my love win thee. Thou'st done truth this day, 315 And yesterday my honour, noble service.
The best Pawn of our house could not transcend it.
- JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
My pity flamed with zeal, especially When I foresaw your marriage—then it mounted.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
How, marriage, sayst thou?
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
I saw the man.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN The man? 320
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
An absolute honest gentleman, a complete one—You'll say so when you see him—heir to three red hats,
Besides his general hopes in the Black House.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
Sure thou art much mistaken for this man.
Why, I have promised single life to all my affections.
325 JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
Promise you what you will, or I, or all on's,
There's a fate rules, and overrules, us all, methinks.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
How came you to see or know this mystery?
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
A magical glass I bought of an Egyptian (Whose stone retains that speculative virtue)
330 Presented the man to me. Your name brings him
As often as I use it, and methinks
I never have enough—person and postures
Are all so pleasing.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
This is wondrous strange.
The faculties of soul are still the same.
335 I cannot feel one motion tend that way.
- JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
We do not always feel the faith we live by,
Nor ever see our growth, yet both work upward.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
'Twas well applied. But may I see him too?

293 halter him hang him, instead of me (in contrast to the Fat Bishop's joke about hanging the Black Knight, at 2.2.63-7)
305 raise promote 306 rest depend
307 staff...hold Jeremiah 48:17 ('How is the strong staff broken!')
308 mazard head (literally, 'drinking cup')
311 replications rejoinders (legal term)

313 'twill 'it is big enough to' (but also an unintentionally ironic prediction: 'it will') us all all of the Black House (who will be damned), or all of humanity (who will die) 320 marriage See Additional Passage C.
322 heir...hats (as though cardinalships were inherited, like earldoms)
326 on's of us (humans)

329 glass mirror
Egyptian gypsy (famous for fortune-telling) 330 stone polished surface speculative virtue image-making power 335 faculties dispositions
336 motion (a) stirring, inclination, desire (b) working of God within the soul

JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
 340 Surely you may, without all doubt or fear—
 Observing the right use, as I was taught it,
 Not looking back or questioning the spectre.

VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
 That's no hard observation. Trust it with me.
 Is't possible? I long to see this man.

JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
 345 Why then, observe: I'll ease you instantly.
 This is the room he did appear to me in,
 [She reveals a large mirror]
 And—look you—this, the magical glass that showed him.

VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
 I find no motion yet. What should I think on't?
 A sudden fear invades me, a faint trembling
 350 Under this omen,
 As is oft felt the panting of a turtle
 Under a stroking hand.

JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
 That bodes good luck still—Sign you shall change state speedily, for that trembling
 Is always the first symptom of a bride.
 355 For any vainer fears that may accompany
 His apparition, by my truth to friendship
 I quit you of the least. Never was object
 More gracefully presented. The very air Conspires to do him honour and creates 360 Sweet vocal sounds, as if a bridegroom entered
 (Which argues the blest harmony of your loves).

VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
 And will the using of my name produce him?

JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
 Nay, of yours only, else the wonder halted.
 To clear you of that doubt, I'll put the diff'rence 365 In practice, the first thing I do, and make His invocation in the name of others.

VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
 That will satisfy me much.

JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
 It shall be done.
 [She speaks] the invocation
 Thou whose gentle form and face
 Filled lately this Egyptian glass,
 By th'imperious pow'rful name 370
 And the universal fame
 Of the mighty Black House Queen,
 I conjure thee to be seen.
 What, see you nothing yet?

VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
 Not any part.
 Pray, try another.

JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
 You shall have your will. 375
 [She speaks the invocation]
 I double my command and power
 And at the instant of this hour
 Invoke thee, in the White Queen's name,
 With stay for time, and shape the same.
 What see you yet?

VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
 There's nothing shows at all. 380

JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
 My truth reflects the clearer. Then now fix
 And bless your fair eyes with your own forever.
 [She speaks the invocation]
 Thou well-composed, by fate's hand drawn
 To enjoy the White Queen's Pawn,
 Of whom thou shalt (by virtue met) 385
 Many graceful issues get:
 By the whiteness of her name,
 By her fair and fruitful love,
 By her truth that mates the dove,
 390 By the meekness of her mind,
 By the softness of her kind,
 By the lustre of her grace,
 Music
 By all these thou art summoned to this place.

- | | | |
|--|---|--|
| 341 right use proper ceremony | 368 gentle well-born, noble | name reputation (but also, here, literal cognomen) |
| 342 spectre apparition | 369 Egyptic Egyptian, gypsy | |
| 343 observation observance, rule | 370 imperious (a) imperial, majestic (b) tyrannical, domineering | 389 truth fidelity |
| 345-6 Why . . . This For a scene apparently omitted in performance, see Additional Passages. | 371 fame (a) reputation (b) infamy | mates (a) matches, equals (b) marries |
| 351 turtle dove | 379 stay pause | dove (proverbially monogamous) |
| 353 state social condition, marital status | 381 Then therefore | 391 kind i.e. sex, gender (women being traditionally physically softer and emotionally more 'tender' than men) |
| 357 quit relieve | fix focus, fasten | 392 lustre luminous beauty, glory |
| object spectacle | 383 well-composed well-balanced, harmoniously combining the essential physiological elements ('humours') | grace attractiveness (but also God-given virtue) |
| 363 else otherwise | drawn (a) sketched, created (b) pulled, moved | 392.1 Music Offstage instrumental music, because it came from an invisible source, often suggested or accompanied supernatural effects. |
| wonder (a) miracle (b) admiration, amazement | 385-6 Of . . . get on whom you will beget many beautiful children | 393 By (a) in the name of (b) by means of |
| halted (a) limped (b) faltered, failed, proved false | 387 whiteness unspottedness | |
| 366 His invocation invocation of him | | |

- 395 Hark how the air, enchanted with your praises
And his approach, those words to sweet notes raises.
The Jesuit Black Bishop's Pawn comes like an apparition, in rich attire, and presents himself before the glass; then exit
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
O let him stay awhile! a little longer!
- JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN That's a good hearing.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
If he be mine, why should he part so soon?
- JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
Why, this is but the shadow of yours. How do you?
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
400 O I did ill to give consent to see it.
What certainty is in our bloods, our states?
What we still write is blotted out by fates.
Our wills are like a cause that is law-tossed:
What one court orders, is by another crossed.
- JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
405 I find no fit place for this passion here.
It's merely an intruder. He's a gentleman,
Most wishfully composed. Honour grows on him
And wealth piled up for him; has youth enough too, 410 And yet in the sobriety of his countenance,
Grave as a tetrarch—which is gracious
I'th' eye of modest pleasure. Where's the emptiness?
What can you more request?
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN I do not know
What answer yet to make. It does require A meeting 'twixt my fear and my desire. Exit
- JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
She's caught—and (which is strange) by her most wronger.
Exit
- Finit Actus Tertius*
- Incipit Actus Quartus*
Enter [from the Black House] Black Knight's Pawn Gelder meeting the Jesuit Black Bishop's Pawn (in his gallant habit, richly accoutred)
- BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER [aside]
It's he, my confessor. He might ha' passed me
Sev'n years together, had I not by chance
Advanced mine eye upon that lettered hatband,
The Jesuitical symbol to be known by,
Worn by the brave collegians with consent. 5
It's a strange habit for a holy Father,
A president of poverty, especially;
But we the sons and daughters of obedience
Dare not once think awry, but must confess ourselves
As humbly to the Father of that feather, 10
Long spur and poniard, as to the alb and altar
(And happy we're so highly graced t'attain to't).—
Holy and reverend!
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
How hast found me out?
- BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
O sir, put on the sparkling'st trim of glory,

394 enchanted (a) charmed, delighted
(b) literally bewitched, deluded your praises words praising you 395 sweet harmonious (and therefore associated with both love and God)
raises (a) rouses (b) utters with force and animation (c) elevates [implying the superiority of music to words] 395.1–2 comes...apparition (not 'dressed like' a ghost or spirit, but apparently 'moving like' one)
395.2 in rich attire i.e. disguised (a move not permissible in chess: one piece cannot pretend to be another)
395.2–3 presents...glass i.e., stands in such a way that White Queen's Pawn sees his reflection in the mirror (without realizing that it is only a reflection)
398 part leave
399 but only shadow foreshadowing, image (but also literally 'reflection' and 'delusion', and a darkness cast by interception of light) 401 bloods (a) emotions (b) physical desires, lusts (c) pedigrees states (a) physical, mental, spiritual conditions (b) social status (c) governments, courts (d) nations 402 still continually fates (a) three mythological goddesses of destiny (b) predestined events 403 wills intentions, desires (but suggesting the literal 'last will and testament') cause legal dispute, case

404 crossed obstructed, cancelled
405 passion (a) emotion (b) outburst
407 grows on is increasingly bestowed upon 410 Grave sober, serious
tetrarch subordinate governor (Roman history) 411 I'th'...pleasure i.e. when observed by someone whose pleasures are bashful and restrained—in implicit contrast to 'inside the eye of immodest pleasure' (in the vagina) eye (a) organ of vision (b) slang for 'vagina' modest (a) virtue prized in women, whose desires would be considered more decent if they were attracted to 'sober-looking' men)
4.1.0.4 in...habit disguised like a rich man-about-town or lady's man
1–3 He...hatband (He recognizes him only because of a secret sign, which the White Queen's Pawn does not know.)
2 together in a row
3 that...hatband a gold hatband, studded with coded letters
5 brave well-dressed, dolled-up collegians students or graduates of a Jesuit seminary with consent by mutual agreement

6 holy Father priest (but continuing the play on 'father' and 'daughter' which makes Black Bishop Pawn's sexual pursuit of White Queen's Pawn seem incestuous)
7 president leading example, model or precedent to inspire others
poverty (one of the Jesuit vows)
9 think awry 'have even an erring thought' (since sinful thoughts as well as actions had to be confessed) or 'think differently' (than the Catholic Church demands)
10 feather (frivolous expensive fashionable ornament)
11 Long (i.e. decorative) poniard dagger (duelling weapon, inappropriate for a priest)
alb and altar ecclesiastical accessories associated with Catholics (suggesting a worship of things, rather than a direct relationship to God)
12 happy delighted, lucky
14 trim fancy dress: 'And when thou shalt be destroyed, what wilt thou do?... thou shalt trim thyself in vain' (Jeremiah 4:30)

15 Perfection will shine foremost—and I knew you
By the Catholic mark you wear about you,
The mark above your forehead.
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
Are you grown so ambitious
In your observance? Well, your business?
I have my game to follow.
BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
And I have a worm
20 Follows me so that I can follow no game.
The most faint-hearted Pawn (if he could see his play)
Might snap me up at pleasure. I desire, sir,
To be absolved. My conscience being at ease,
I could then with more courage ply my game.
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
'Twas a base fact.
BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
25 'Twas to a schismatic Pawn, sir.
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
What's that to the nobility of revenge?
Suffices I have neither will nor power
To give you absolution for that violence.
Make your petition to the Penance Chamber.
30 If the tax register relieve you in't,
By the Black Bishop's clemency, you have wrought out
A singular piece of favour with your money.
It's all your refuge now.
BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
This sting shoots deeper.
Exit

Enter [aloof off] Virgin White Queen's Pawn and
Jesuitess Black Queen's Pawn
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN [aside]
Yonder's my game, which (like a politic chessmaster)
I must not seem to see.
VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
O my heart! 'Tis he.
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN That 'tis.
VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
The very self-same that the magical mirror
Presented lately to me.
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
And how like
A most regardless stranger he walks by,
Merely ignorant of his fate! You are not minded, 40 The principal'st part of him. What strange mysteries Inscrutable love works by!
VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
The time, you see,
Is not yet come.
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
But 'tis in our pow'r now
To bring time nearer—knowledge is a mast'ry—
And make it observe us, and not we it.
45 VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
I would force nothing from its proper virtue.
Let time have his full course. I'd rather die
The modest death of undiscovered love
Than have heaven's least and lowest servant suffer,
50 Or in his motion receive check for me.
How is my soul's growth altered, that single life

- | | | |
|---|--|---|
| 16–17 mark . . . mark (perhaps suggesting 'a mark . . . in their foreheads . . . the mark of the beast' (Revelation 13:16–17)) 18 observance (a) observation (b) attendance on a superior (which should therefore not be 'ambitious') 19 game to follow (a) strategic work to do (b) prey to pursue worm gnawing grief, remorse (compared to a parasite in the body, or the serpent/dragon that continually preys on the damned in hell: Mark 9:48, Isaiah 66:24) 21 play move (in the game), tactical opportunity 25 base fact despicable crime
schismatic heretic, sectarian 26 nobility of revenge (Contrast the classic Christian condemnation of revenge, as at Romans 12:19: 'Vengeance is mine, . . . saith the Lord'.) 27 will desire (to forgive a man who seems genuinely penitent) 27–8 power . . . absolution (ironic: Protestants denied the power of Catholic priests to absolve sins) 29 Penance Chamber ecclesiastical office that dealt with penitents (sometimes, | in Protestant propaganda, a prison or torture chamber) 30 tax register Taxa Sacra Poenitentiaría (brought on stage in 4.2) 32 singular extraordinary, unique 33 all your your only sting (comparing his guilt to the pain caused by the poison of an insect or snake, like the serpent Satan) 34 game (a) prize awarded to the winner (b) prey (c) amusement 34–5 which . . . see (a clever chess player will give no sign of noticing that his opponent is making a bad move, because any reaction might alert his opponent to the mistake) 34 politic (a) prudent (b) political (c) scheming 38 Presented (a) ceremoniously introduced (b) showed (c) represented (d) offered, gave 39 regardless careless, inattentive; literally, 'not looking' (but ironically suggesting 'not worth anyone's attention') stranger (a) unknown person (b) foreigner (c) newcomer 40 Merely wholly fate i.e. his allegedly fated marriage | (but also, ironically, his predestined damnation) minded (a) noticed (b) remembered 41 part duty, allotment (but also suggesting woman's creation from Adam's rib) mysteries (a) enigmas (b) revealed religious truths (c) sacraments (d) state secrets 42 love (a) emotional and/or sexual attraction (b) 'God is love' (1 John 4:16) time right moment 44 mast'ry (a) control, power (b) victory in competition (c) achievement 45 observe (a) watch (b) attend (c) obey (d) defer to 46 proper (a) appropriate (b) private, particular virtue (a) ethical conduct (b) chastity (c) particular inherent quality 48 modest death (by contrast to the 'immodest death', sexual orgasm) undiscovered not revealed, not detected 50 motion actions or feelings (but also suggesting the movement of a clock or watch, as a measurement of time) check (a) stop, delay (b) rebuke. The chess sense is also ironically present. 51 single unmarried, celibate |
|---|--|---|

- (The fittest garment that peace ever made for't)
Is grown too strait, too stubborn on the sudden?
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
He comes this way again.
VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
O there's a traitor
55 Leaped from my heart into my cheek already
That will betray all to his powerful eye
If it but glance upon me.
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
By my verity,
Look, he's passed by again, drowned in neglect,
Without the prosperous hint of so much happiness
60 To look upon his fortunes. How close fate Seals up the eye of human understanding Till (like the sun's flow'r) time and love uncloses it!
'Twere pity he should dwell in ignorance longer.
VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
What will you do?
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
Yes, die a bashful death, do, 65 And let the remedy pass by unused still.
You're changed enough already, if you'd look into't.
[Jesuitess Black Queen's Pawn goes to the Jesuit Black Bishop's Pawn]
Absolute sir, with your most noble pardon
For this my rude intrusion, I am bold
To bring the knowledge of a secret nearer 70 By many days, sir, than it would arrive
- In its own proper revelation with you.
Pray, turn and fix. Do you know yon noble goodness?
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
'Tis the first minute my eye blessed me with her,
And clearly shows how much my knowledge wanted,
Not knowing her till now.
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
She's to be liked then? 75
Pray, view advisedly. There is strong reason
That I'm so bold to urge it, you must guess:
The work concerns you nearer than you think for.
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
Her glory and the wonder of this secret
Puts a reciprocal amazement on me. 80
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
And 'tis not without worth. You two must be Better acquainted.
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
Is there cause? Affinity?
Or any courteous help creation joys in
To bring that forward?
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
Yes, yes, I can show you
85 The nearest way to that perfection
(Of a most virtuous one) that joy e'er found.
Pray, mark her once again, then follow me,
And I will show you her must be your wife, sir.
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
The mystery extends, or else creation

- 52 fittest (a) most appropriate (b) best-fitting peace tranquility (but playing on 'piece' of cloth)
- 53 strait (a) honest, virtuous (b) tight stubborn (a) unyielding (b) stiff, rigid on the all of a
- 54 a traitor i.e. her blush, which reveals all her secret feelings when blood rushes from her heart to her cheeks (but also, ironically, literally, the Black Bishop's
Pawn)
- 56 his (a) Black Bishop's Pawn's (b) God's powerful eye (a) attention of a powerful viewer (b) piercing vision: eyes were thought to actively emit beams, so an eye capable of emitting stronger beams would see more
- 57 but only, just verity (a) truthfulness, honesty (b) true faith, religious belief (c) God, Christ
- 58 neglect negligence
- 59 prosperous auspicious, prospering happiness (a) felicity (b) good luck
- 60 fortunes (a) fate (b) wealth, goods close (a) closely, tightly (b) secretive, niggardly
- 61 Seals stitches (like the eyes of hawks, sewn shut to tame them)
- 62 sun's flow'r sunflower (a) implicitly compared to the open human eye (b) often a symbol for the soul, turning toward God
- time and love (implicitly compared to the sun, characterized by both the warmth/heat of love and the regularity of time)
- 63 dwell remain
- 65 remedy i.e. the man who, by making love to her, would cure her of the anemia (or greensickness) which was thought to afflict female virgins
- 67 Absolute (a) perfect (b) independent, unattached (but also ironically suggesting 'despotic')
- 71 proper intrinsic, self-actuated (but also ironically suggesting 'appropriate, respectable, ethical')
- 72 fix rivet (your eyes, your attention)
- 74 wanted lacked
- 78 think for expect
- 79 glory unearthly beauty (often used of saints, angels, etc.)
- 80 reciprocal corresponding (to the 'wonder'
and 'glory')
- 82 Affinity kinship (by blood or marriage):
'should I become better acquainted with her because she is a member of my family?'
- 83-4 any...forward? 'anything that would make her a member of my family?'
(Since he knows the White Queen's Pawn knows the answer to his question, he uses religious circumlocution; for the audience, who also knows the
- answer, his complex evasive language is characteristically Jesuitical.)
- 83 courteous gracious, polite, courtly (a product of human artifice—like the magic mirror—rather than divine 'creation'). A sexual favour could be described as a courtesy.
help (God created Eve, and marriage, to be a 'help' for Adam: Genesis 2:18.) creation joys in (a) that the world created by God celebrates (b) that enjoys procreation. See Mark 10:6 ('from the beginning of the creation God made them male and female').
- 84 that 'affinity' (by marriage)
- 85 perfection consummation (i.e. marriage, understood as the perfect mature union of the immature incompleteness of two complementary individuals)
- 86 most virtuous (modifying and correcting
'nearest way', which otherwise might be understood as 'the quickest route to intercourse')
joy (a) happiness (b) sexual pleasure
- 87 mark observe
- 89 extends widens, deepens or else unless [the explanation for your mysterious non sequitur is that] creation (a) God's act of creation (b) the entire created natural world; fallen nature

- 90 Has set that admirable piece before us
To choose out chaste delight by.
- JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN Please you follow, sir.
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
What art have you to put me on an object
And cannot get me off? 'Tis pain to part from't.
*Exeunt [Jesuit Black Bishop's Pawn,
following Jesuitess Black Queen's Pawn]*
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
If there prove no check in that magical glass,
95 But my proportion come as fair and full
Into his eye as his into mine lately,
Then I'm confirmed he is mine own for ever.
Enter again Jesuit Black Bishop's Pawn [with Jesuitess Black Queen's Pawn]
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
The very self-same that the mirror blessed me with,
From head to foot, the beauty and the habit.
100 Kept you this place still? Did you not remove, lady?
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
Not a foot farther, sir.
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
Is't possible?
I would have sworn I'd seen the substance yonder.
'Twas to that lustre, to that life presented.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
E'en so was yours to me, sir.
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN Saw you mine?
VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
105 Perfectly clear: no sooner my name used
But yours appeared.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
Just so did yours at mine now.
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
Why stand you idle? Will you let time cozen you,
Protracting time, of those delicious benefits
That fate has marked to you? You modest pair
- Of blushing gamesters—and you, sir, the bashfull'st: 110
I cannot flatter a foul fault in any—
Can you be more than man and wife assigned,
And by a power the most irrevocable?
Others that be adventurers in delight
May meet with crosses, shame, or separation; 115
Their fortune's hid, and the event's locked from 'em.
You know the mind of fate. You must be coupled.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN [to Virgin White Queen's Pawn]
She speaks but truth in this. I see no reason then
That we should miss the relish of this night,
But that we are both shamefaced.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN How, this night, sir? 120
Did not I know you must be mine, and therein
Your privilege runs strong, for that loose motion
You never should be. Is it not my fortune
To match with a pure mind? Then am I miserable.
The doves and all chaste loving wingèd creatures 125
Have their pairs fit, their desires justly mated;
Is woman more unfortunate? A virgin,
The May of woman? Fate—that has ordained, sir,
We should be man and wife—has not given warrant
For any act of knowledge till we are so. 130
[She weeps]
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
Tender-eyed modesty! How it grieves at this!
[Jesuit Black Bishop's Pawn and Jesuitess Black Queen's Pawn speak apart]
I'm as far off, for all this strange imposture,
As at first interview. Where lies our game now?
You know I cannot marry, by my Order.
- JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
I know you cannot, sir; yet you may venture 135
Upon a contract.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
Ha?

90 piece masterpiece—but also suggesting the derogatory slang sense 'sexual object' (used of the genitals, or of a woman defined as a 'piece of ass')

before us (literally true of the genitals)

91 choose out select, pick out

chaste delight i.e. procreative sexual pleasure within marriage (but also suggesting 'chased pleasure')

92 put me on incite me to, set me to study (but suggesting 'put me on top of', a literal sense sustained in 'off' and 'part' and 'it')

object (a) goal (b) admirable spectacle (c) thing

93 from't i.e. from the White Queen's Pawn, defined as his 'object' (but also suggesting the sexual sense of 'it')

94 check obstruction, detour, false target (but suggesting the chess sense)

95 proportion shape, image which reproduces the harmonious proportions of the original

fair beautiful, pale, unblemished, unfraudulent

full complete, replete, perfect

99 habit outfit

100 remove move

102 substance real thing (instead of the mere 'shadow' reflected in the mirror)

107 cozen cheat

108 Protracting prolonging

109 marked assigned, indicated

110 gamesters sexual players, gamblers

111 flatter praise falsely, like a flatterer (ironically, since bashful modesty is not usually considered a 'foul fault')

112 more... assigned anything more legitimately married than you already are assigned appointed

113 power i.e. God

114 adventurers gamblers, players, investors

115 crosses trials, afflictions, obstacles

116 fortune's hid destiny is hidden event's outcome is (meaning 'the outcome of their desire' but suggesting 'death', the outcome of all human life, as in Ecclesiastes 9:2-3)

locked from 'em i.e. unknown to them, like something kept in a locked room

117 coupled (a) joined in marriage (b) sexually united

118 but only

119 relish enticing taste

122 privilege prerogative

loose motion lascivious proposal

128 May springtime, prime

130 knowledge carnal knowledge, sexual intercourse

134 by my Order because of the vow of chastity he made as a Jesuit

136 contract a betrothal or verbal 'pre-contract' (producing a marriage of uncertain legal validity; often the justification for premarital intercourse)

JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN

Surely you may, sir,
Without all question so far, without danger
Or any stain to your vow, and that may take her.
Nay, do't with speed. She'll think you mean the better
too.

JESUIT BISHOP'S PAWN [to Virgin White Queen's Pawn]

140 Be not so lavish of that blessed spring.
You've wasted that, upon a cold occasion now,
Would wash a sinful soul white. By our love-joys,
That motion shall ne'er light upon my tongue more Till we're contracted. Then, I hope, you're mine?

VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN

In all just duty ever.

JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN [to Black Bishop's Pawn]

145 "Then"? Do you question it?
Push! then you're man and wife—all but church
ceremonies.
Pray, let's see that done first. [Aside to him] She shall do reason then.—
[Aside] Now I'll enjoy the sport, and cozen 'em both.
My blood's game is the wages I have worked for.

Exeunt

4.2

Enter Black Knight Gondomar with his Pawn
[from the Black House]

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR

Pawn, I have spoke to the Fat Bishop for thee.
I'll get thy absolution from his own mouth.
Reach me my chair of ease, my chair of coz'nage, Sev'n thousand pounds in women, reach me that.

[Black Knight's Pawn Gelder fetches] Gondomar's golden chair with a hole in it

I love, o' life, to sit upon a bank
Of heretic gold—O soft and gently, sirrah!

[Black Knight Gondomar sits]

There's a foul flaw i'th' bottom of my drum, Pawn;
I ne'er shall make sound soldier, but sound treacher
With any he in Europe. How now, qualm?
Thou hast the puking'st soul that e'er I met with.
It cannot bear one suckling villainy.
Mine can digest a monster without crudity,
A sin as weighty as an elephant,
And never wamble for't.

BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER

You have been used to't, sir;

15 That's a great help. The swallow of my conscience
Has but a narrow passage. You must think yet
It lies i'th' penitent pipe, and will not down.
If I had got sev'n thousand pounds by offices,
And gulled down that, the bore would have been bigger.

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR

20 Nay, if thou prov'st facetious, I shall hug thee.
Can a soft, rare, poor-poached iniquity
So ride upon thy conscience? I'm ashamed of thee.
Hadst thou betrayed the White House to the Black,
Beggared a kingdom by dissimulation,
Unjointed the fair frame of peace and traffic,
25 Poisoned allegiance, set faith back, and wrought
Women's soft souls e'en up to masculine malice
To pursue truth to death if the cause roused 'em,

140 lavish of excessively generous in dispensing from that blessed spring i.e. her eyes, from which spring tears, blessed because they are a sign of her modesty and virtue, too precious to be wasted

141 that i.e. the warm water of her tears cold dead, stale, weak, incapable of stimulating occasion fleeting circumstance

142 wash...white (Tears, as a sign of repentance, would be more effective than Catholic 'holy water' in cleansing the soul.)

love-joys future sexual pleasure (not a very religious oath)

143 light alight (like a moving bird)

146 Push (exclamation: euphemism for 'fuck')

147 Pray please (but the religious sense haunts the line, right after 'church ceremonies')

that i.e. the pre-contract

do reason behave reasonably, i.e.
surrender

149 blood's lust's, anger's game fun, sex, prey, diversion (opposite of 'work', and alluding to chess)

is the wages 'The wages of sin is death' (Romans 6:23)

4.2.1 spoke spoken

3 me for me

chair of ease Gondomar used a specially designed chair, which allowed him to sit comfortably despite his painful fistula.
See illustration, p. 1775.

coz'nage trickery

4 Sev'n...women i.e. (a) paid for with £7000 I received from women (b) worth as many women as I could buy with £7000. The hole in the chair probably suggested the comparison of women to holes he uses to 'ease' himself.

5 o' life as much as life (swearing 'on my life')

bank (a) bench (b) pile

6 heretic gold (implying that he acquired the gold from English suitors: see l. 18)

7 foul...bottom disgusting crack in the ass
(his anal fistula)

drum (comparing buttocks to something tight beaten with a stick, suggesting sodomy)

8 sound reliable (but punning on the sound of a drum)

soldier (suggested by the military
'drum', and contrasting the courageous loyalty of soldiers with the cowardly self-aggrandizement of politicians)

8-9 sound treacher With 'I shall make as reliable a cheat and traitor as' (oxymoron) and/or 'I sound out and announce myself as a cheater and traitor
to'

9 he man

qualm bellyache, scruple (i.e., Black Bishop's Pawn)

10 puking'st most easily nauseated

11 suckling baby (but suggesting tender meat, like veal, which should be easy to digest)

12 crudity indigestion

14 wamble (a) feel nausea (b) totter, reel

15 swallow gorge

17 It his sin (castrating the White Bishop's Pawn)

lies...pipe sticks in the throat of penitence

18 by offices by means of holding or selling official positions

19 gulled (a) guzzled (b) tricked

20 facetious witty

21 rare barely cooked (but castration is also 'unusual')

poor-poached underboiled (comparing his sin to an almost-raw egg, easy to swallow)

25 traffic trade, business

That stares and parrots are first taught to curse
thee—
BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
30 Ay, marry, sir, here's swapping sins indeed!
BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
All these, and ten times trebled, has this brain
Been parent to; they are my offsprings all.
BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
A goodly brood.
BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
Yet I can jest as lightly,
Laugh and tell stirring stories to court madams
35 (Daughters of my seducement) with alacrity
As high and hearty as youth's time of innocence,
That never knew a sin to shape a sorrow by.
I feel no tempest, not a leaf-wind stirring
To shake a fault; my conscience is becalmed, rather.
BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
40 I'm sure there's a whirlwind huffs in mine, sir.
BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
Sirrah, I ha' sold the Groom o'th' Stool six times,
And received money of six several ladies
Ambitious to take place of baronets' wives;
To three old mummy-matrons I have promised 45 The Mothership o'th' Maids. I've taught our friends
too
To convey White House gold to our Black Kingdom
In cold baked pasties, and so cozen searchers;
For venting hallowed oil, beads, medals, pardons,
Pictures, Veronica's heads in private presses,
50 That's done by one i'th' habit of a pedlar;
Letters conveyed in rolls, tobacco balls.
When a restraint comes, by my politic counsel
Some of our Jesuits turn gentlemen-ushers,

Some falc'ners, some park-keepers, and some huntsmen.
One took the shape of an old lady's cook once 55
And dispatched two chores in a Sunday morning:
The altar and the dresser. Pray, what use Put I my summer recreation to?
But more t'inform my knowledge in the state
And strength of the White Kingdom. No fortification, 60
Haven, creek, or landing place 'bout the White coast
But I got draught and platform, learned the depth
Of all their channels, knowledge of all sands,
Shelves, rocks, and rivers for invasion prop'rest, 65
A catalogue of all the navy royal,
The burden of the ships, the brassy murderers,
The number of the men, to what cape bound.
Again, for the discovery of the inlands,
Never a shire but the state better known 70 To me than to her best inhabitants:
What pow'r of men and horse, gentry's revènués,
Who well affected to our side, who ill,
Who neither well nor ill, all the neutrality.
Thirty-eight thousand souls have been seduced, Pawn,
75 Since the jails vomited with the pill I gave 'em.
BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
Sure you put oil of toad into that physic, sir.
BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
I'm now about a masterpiece of play
T'entrap the White Knight and with false allurements
Entice him to the Black House—more will follow—
80 Whilst our Fat Bishop sets upon the Queen.
Then will our game lie sweetly.
Enter Fat Bishop of Spalato [from the Black House, in his black habit, with a book]
BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER He's come now, sir.

- | | | | |
|----|--|---|--|
| 29 | stares starlings (which, like parrots, can be 'taught to' mimic speech) | shrivelled and ancient as a mummy | |
| 30 | swapping (a) whopping huge (b) devouring (c) exchanging | 45 Mothership o'th' Maids Chief Gentlewoman of the Queen's Privy Chamber, supervising her Maids of Honour | 53 gentlemen-ushers gentlemen working as ushers/servants to people of even higher rank |
| 33 | lightly merrily, easily, carelessly, often, lewdly | 48 venting selling | 57 dresser sideboard where food is prepared for serving (a secular version of the altar, where communion bread and wine were prepared) |
| 34 | stirring exciting, sexually arousing | 48-9 hallowed... heads (Catholic religious paraphernalia) | 59 But only |
| 35 | madams (a) ladies (b) whores, bawds | 48 beads rosary/prayer beads | 62 draught (a) drawing (b) water current |
| 35 | Daughters... seducement young women he has seduced, sexually and/or ideologically (a Biblical idiom, as in 'daughters of Zion', 'daughters of music') | medals metal disk stamped with image or inscription, believed to be blessed | 62 platform (a) chart, map (b) surface area |
| 37 | shape... by cause remorse | pardons indulgences, bought for remission of sins | 66 burden capacity |
| 38 | tempest storm (sign of divine wrath), physical or psychological | 49 Pictures i.e. of saints or Bible scenes (as opposed to the Protestant emphasis on Biblical texts rather than images) | brassy (a) brass (b) pitiless, impudent |
| 41 | sold i.e., taken a bribe to secure someone's appointment to | Veronica's heads i.e. images of Christ, like that allegedly produced when St Veronica wiped his face on his way to crucifixion | murderers small cannon |
| 42 | Groom o'th' Stool 'Minister of the Royal Toilet' (prized court appointment to the royal Privy Chamber, with direct access and personal influence) | private presses secret cupboards | 69 shire county |
| 43 | several separate | 50 habit clothes | 75 vomited suddenly involuntarily ejected their disgusting contents (i.e. Catholic prisoners) |
| 43 | take place of secure precedence over | 51 rolls first suggesting rolls of paper, scrolls, but in fact 'cylinder of tobacco' | 76 oil of toad an imaginary medical ingredient: essence of a creature considered loathsome, hence nauseating (particularly if crushed to produce oil) |
| 44 | mummy-matrons i.e. madams as | 52 restraint crackdown [on Catholic | physic purgative medical treatment |
| | | | 81 lie be set (but playing on 'tell untruths') |

- FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO
Here's Taxa Pœnitentiaria, Knight,
The book of general pardons of all prices.
I have been searching for his sin this half hour
And cannot light upon't.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
That's strange. Let me see't.
- BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
Pawn wretched that I am, has my rage done that There is no precedent of pardon for?
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [reads] 'For wilful murder, thirteen pound four shillings and sixpence.' That's reason-90 able cheap. 'For killing—killing—killing—killing—killing—killing'—
Why, here's nothing but 'killing', Bishop, on this side.
- FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO
Turn the sheet over, you shall find adultery
And other trivial sins.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR Adultery?
- 95 O I'm in't now. [Reading] 'For adultery, a couple of shillings, and for fornication fivepence'.—Mass, those are two good pennyworths. I cannot see how a man can mend himself.—'For lying with mother, sister, and daughter'—ay, marry, sir—'thirty-three pounds, three 100 shillings, threepence.'
The sins' gradation right, paid all in threes, too.
- FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO
You've read the story of that monster, sir,
That got his daughter, sister, and his wife
Of his own mother.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [reads]
'Simony, nine pounds.'
- FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO
105 They may thank me for that: 'twas nineteen
- Before I came. I've mitigated many of the sums.
BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [reads]
'Sodomy, sixpence.'—You should put that sum Ever on the backside of your book, Bishop.
- FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO
There's few on's very forward, sir.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
What's here, sir?
[Reads] 'Two old precedents of encouragement.' 110
- FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO
Ay, those are ancient notes.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [reads] 'Given as a gratuity for the killing of an heretical prince with a poisoned knife, ducats five thousand.'
- FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO
True, sir, that was paid.
115
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [reads] 'Promised also to Doctor
Lopez for poisoning the Maiden Queen of the White Kingdom, ducats twenty thousand; which said sum was afterwards given, as a meritorious alms, to the nunnery at Lisbon, having at this present ten thousand pounds 120 more at use in the townhouse of Antwerp.'
- BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
What's all this to my conscience?—Worthy holiness,
I sue for pardon. I have brought money with me.
- FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO
You must depart; you see there is no precedent
Of any price of pardon for your fact.
125
- BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
Most miserable! Are fouler sins remitted?
Killing? Nay, wilful murder?
- FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO
True, there's instance.
Were you to kill him, I'd pardon you.
There's precedent for that, and price set down;
But none for gelding.
130
- BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
I have picked out understanding now forever
Out of that cabalistic bloody riddle.

84 his sin i.e. the Black Knight's Pawn's castration of the White Bishop's Pawn
89 pound (equivalent to 20 shillings) shillings (equivalent to 12 pence)
90-2 killing... killing (multiple listings for different kinds of murder)
95 I'm in't now (a) I've found it in the book (b) I'm an adulterer myself
96 Mass by the Mass (Catholic oath)
97 pennyworths bargains
98 can mend himself can reform (when it's so cheap to continue sinning) lying having sex with 98-9 mother... daughter (either three separate sinners, or one sinner who committed all three forms of incest)
99 ay, marry (affirmative interjections, suggesting enthusiastic interest)
101 sins' (or 'sin's': aurally ambiguous) gradation rhetorical sequence and financial scale (as though a man proceeded from incest with mother to incest with sister and then incest with daughter; also suggesting that one pays thirty pounds for the mother, three shillings for the sister, and only threepence for the daughter) threes (mirroring the three kinds of incest, and the fact that two incestuous people act the roles that would normally require three: the mother's son also acting as her husband, etc.)

103-4 got... mother i.e. got his mother pregnant with a daughter (therefore his half-sister), whom he later married
108 backside reverse side of a sheet of paper, left-hand page of an open book (but punning on 'buttocks')
109 on's of us (i.e. Catholics, or Italians, or priests—all accused of routinely practising sodomy) forward (a) zealous (b) inclined to sex with the forward-facing vagina rather than the 'backside'/anus

113 prince i.e. Henri IV of France (assassinated in 1610)
117 Lopez Roderigo Lopez, royal physician
117-18 Maiden... Kingdom i.e. the unmarried 'Virgin Queen' Elizabeth I of England, target of an alleged assassination attempt in 1594
119 afterwards i.e.. after Lopez was executed
120 Lisbon (because Lopez was Portuguese)
121 townhouse of Antwerp seminary in the Spanish Netherlands
122 What's all this how is any of this relevant 125 fact deed, crime
127 instance precedent
131 picked out (a) found, selected (b) disentangled
132 cabalistic secretive, obscure, mystical (but also suggesting 'Jewish, magical') riddle i.e. the paradox of forgiveness for murder but none for castration

I'll make away all my estate and kill him,
 And by that act obtain full absolution. Exit
Enter Black King Felipe [from the Black House]

135 Why, Bishop, Knight, where's your removes? your traps?
 Stand you now idle in the heat of game?

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
 My life for yours, Black Sovereign, the game's ours.
 I have wrought underhand for the White Knight
 And his brave Duke, and find 'em coming both.

140 FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO
 And for their sanctimonious Queen's surprisal,
 In that state-puzzle and distracted hurry,
 Trust my arch-subtlety with't.

BLACK KING FELIPE O eagle pride!
 Never was game more hopeful of our side.
Exeunt [Black King Felipe and Fat Bishop of Spalato]

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
 If Bishop Bull-beef be not snapped next bout
 145 As the game stands, I'll never trust art more. Exit

4.3 Recorders [within, playing soft music]. Enter the Jesuitess Black Queen's Pawn with a taper in her hand, as conducting the Virgin White Queen's Pawn in her night attire to one chamber, then—fetching in the Black Bishop's Pawn (the Jesuit), in his night habit—conveys him into another chamber; [then shuts the door, pauses,] puts out the candle, and follows him [into the second chamber].

Enter White Knight Charles and White Duke of Buckingham [from the White House]

WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES
 True, noble Duke, fair virtue's most endeared one,
 Let us prevent their rank insinuation
 With truth of cause and cunning, meet their plots
 With confident goodness that shall strike 'em grov'ling.

WHITE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM
 Sir, all the gins, traps, and alluring snares
 5 The devil has been at work since '88 on
 Are laid for the great hope of this game only.

WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES
 Why, the more noble will truth's triumphs be!
 When they have wound about our constant courages
 The glitt'ring'st serpent that e'er falsehood fashioned 10 And glorying most in his resplendent poisons,
 Just heaven can find a bolt to bruise his head.
Enter [from the Black House] Black Knight Gondomar [aloof off]

WHITE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM
 Look, would you see destruction lie a-sunning?
 In yonder smile sits blood and treachery basking;
 In that perfidious model of face-falsehood
 15 Hell is drawn grinning.

WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES What a pain it is
 For truth to feign a little.

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [coming forward]
O fair Knight!
 The rising glory of the House of candor!
 Have I so many protestations lost,

- | | | |
|---|---|--|
| 133 make away dispose of estate (which would be confiscated if he were convicted of murder; by giving it away in advance, he outwits the authorities—but also proves that the murder was premeditated) 134 by...absolution by committing murder buy forgiveness for all my sins
 135 removes (a) chess moves (b) murders (c) changes of residence 139 coming (a) amenable, persuadable (b) literally, moving toward us 140 sanctimonious holy surprisal seizure, ambush
 141 state-puzzle confusing political and diplomatic problem (caused by the 'coming' of Charles and Buckingham to the Black House/Spain) distracted (a) crazed, insane (b) divided hurry (a) political tumult (b) mental and emotional agitation 142 eagle considered the king of birds, associated with 'pride' because high-soaring; also the emblem of the Holy Roman Empire (ruled by the Habsburgs, including King Felipe)
 144 Bull-beef bull-meat (term of abuse: 'meathead', 'big ox')
 snapped suddenly seized, taken, bitten (suggesting the snapping of dogs at a bull | in bull-baiting)
 145 art (a) political cunning (b) gamesmanship (c) literature, aesthetic form
 4.3.0.1-9 Enter...chamber sexual bait-and-switch: the Black Queen's Pawn deceives both other pawns, putting herself—instead of the White Queen's Pawn—in the Black Bishop's Pawn's bed. (The absolute indoor darkness of moonless nights in the pre-electric world made such substitutions plausible; they were very common in folklore, drama, etc.)
 0.1 Enter (probably from the central door)
 0.2 taper candle
 0.4 one chamber (probably through the 'White House' door)
 0.6 habit clothes
 0.6-7 another chamber (probably through the 'Black House' door)
 4.4.1 True, noble (aurally ambiguous: 'Yes, noble' and 'Truly-noble' and 'Honest, reliable, noble') fair beautiful (allegorically of 'virtue', literally of Buckingham) 2 prevent anticipate, preempt, forestall their the Black House's rank swift, abundant, gross, corrupt, lewd, transparent
 insinuation (a) ingratiating behaviour | (b) subtle penetration (c) covert allegation
 3 cunning (paradoxically paired with 'truth')
 5 gins engines, machinations, schemes
 6 '88 1588, the year the English defeated the Spanish Armada
 7 laid lying in wait, set in place
 9 they the Black House
 our constant (contrasting their paired male fidelity with the paired inconstancy of Adam and Eve)
 10-11 glitt'ring'st...resplendent (a) like the serpent in Eden, before God cursed him for tempting Eve (b) like the Spanish court, fabulously enriched by its global empire
 10-12 serpent...head Genesis 3:1-15 (the serpent's temptation of Eve) and Revelations 20:2 ('that old serpent, which is the devil and Satan')
 11 glorying rejoicing proudly. (1 Corinthians 5:6: 'Your glorying is not good.') his the serpent's, i.e. Gondomar's 12 bolt lightning bolt
 13 a-sunning sunning itself (like a snake)
 14 blood bloodshed, lust
 17 feign lie, pretend (paradoxical)
 18 candor (a) brilliant whiteness (b) purity
 19 lost wasted |
|---|---|--|

- 20 Lost, lost, quite lost? Am I not worth your confidence?
I that have vowed my faculties of soul,
Life, spirit, and brain, to your sweet game of youth,
Your noble fruitful game—can you mistrust
Any foul play in me, that have been ever
- 25 The most submissive observer of your virtues,
And no way tainted with ambition
Save only to be thought your first admirer?
How often have I changed for your delight
The royal presentation of my place
- 30 Into a mimic jester?—and become (For your sake, and th'expulsion of sad thoughts),
Of a grave state-sire, a light son of pastime?
Made threescore years a tomboy, a mere wanton?
I'll tell you what I told a Savoy dame once,
- 35 New-wed, high, plump, and lusting for an issue:
Within the year I promised her a child
If she could stride over Saint Rombaut's breeches
(A relic kept at Mechlin). The next morning
One of my follower's old hose was conveyed
- 40 Into her chamber, where she tried the feat;
By that (and a court friend), after grew great.
- WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES
Why, who could be without thee?
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR I will change
To any shape to please you, and my aim
Has been to win your love in all this game.
- WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES
45 Thou hast it nobly, and I long to see
The Black House' pleasure, state, and dignity.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
Of honour you'll so surfeit and delight
You'll ne'er desire again to see the White. Exeunt
Enter White Queen [of Bohemia from the White House, as they go into the Black House]
- WHITE QUEEN [OF BOHEMIA]
My love, my hope, my dearest—O he's gone,
Ensnared, entrapped, surprised amongst the Black ones. 50
I never felt extremity like this.
Thick darkness dwells upon this hour. Integrity—
Like one of heaven's bright luminaries now
By error's dullest element interposed—
Suffers a black eclipse. I never was 55
Enter [from the Black House] Fat Bishop of Spalato [in black]
More sick of love than now I am of horror.
I shall be taken. The game's lost, I'm set upon.
O 'tis the turncoat Bishop, having watched Th'advantage of his play, comes now to seize on me.
O I'm hard beset, distressed most miserably! 60
- FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO
'Tis vain to stir: remove which way you can,
I take you now. This is the time we've hoped for.
Queen, you must down.
- WHITE QUEEN [OF BOHEMIA] No rescue, no deliverer?
- FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO
65 The Black King's blood burns for thy prostitution,
And nothing but the spring of thy chaste virtue 65
- 22 game of youth i.e. interest in sex-play 23 fruitful rewarding (but also suggesting 'producing offspring', particularly important for a 'noble' family) mistrust suspect
25 submit submissive
observer (a) spectator (b) deferential follower 27 first chief
29 place official position, status
30 mimic jester mimed gesture, comic mime, clown specializing in impersonation (like the comic actor mimicking Gondomar's gestures)
31 sad serious 32 Of instead of state-sire senior statesman light frivolous, lascivious pastime entertainment 33 tomboy boisterous kid (but also suggesting 'immodest girl', transgressive sex-switching) mere wanton (a) totally spoiled child (b) total slut 34 Savoy former London palace turned chapel, sanctuary, and hospital; famous for irregular marriages 35 high high-class, upper class, highfalutin, high-pitched, intoxicated issue offspring
37 Saint Rombaut (martyred c.775)
breeches pants (making fun of the Catholic fondness for attributing miraculous qualities to objects associated with saints)
- 38 Mechlin city in Spanish Catholic Belgium, home of St Rombaut's cathedral ('Malines' in French)
39 hose (worn by men and women)
41 friend (a) patron (b) lover great 'big with child', pregnant (but playing on 'politically important') 47 surfeit excessively indulge, eat till you're sick delight (a) of delight (b) you'll so delight 49 gone 'lost forever', because departed into enemy territory (the Black House, Spain)
50 surprised ambushed 52 Thick darkness Job 38:9
darkness dwells upon Job 3:5, 38:19 53 luminaries (a) astronomical lights: sun, moon, planets (b) leaders
54 error See Induction, and Triumphs of Truth. (Literally, error comes from Latin for 'wandering', errant; 'planet' comes from the Greek word with the same meaning.)
dullest element i.e. earth (the heaviest of the traditional four elements: fire, air, water, earth)
dullest (a) heaviest, most dense (b) stupidest interposed blocked 55 black i.e. total (but also suggesting 'evil', and referring to the 'Black House', in the astrological sense of the 'night house' of the signs of the seven planets)
eclipse (widely interpreted as a bad omen, particularly for nations and their leaders) 56 of with
57 set upon attacked
58 watched watched out for 59 advantage opportunity 60 hard beset violently hemmed in 61 remove which move whichever
63 down fall (in political, sexual, and chess senses)
64 Black King (a) King Felipe (b) Satan blood (one of the four fundamental 'humours' of the body, associated with rage and lust; semen was considered a distillation of blood)
burns (associated with lust and pain)
prostitution (not mere rape, but complete transformation into a debased commodity—as in Protestant descriptions of the Catholic church as the 'whore of Babylon', based on 'the great whore' of Revelations 17:1-16) 65 spring (associated with 'chastity' because the water rises from underground, apparently uncontaminated) chaste sexually virtuous (including marital fidelity as well as premarital virginity)

- Can cool his inflammation. Instantly
He dies upon a pleurisy of luxury
If he deflower thee not.
Enter [from the White House] White Bishop [of Canterbury]
- WHITE QUEEN [OF BOHEMIA]
O strait of misery!
[White Bishop of Canterbury takes Fat Bishop of Spalato]
- WHITE BISHOP [OF CANTERBURY]
And is your holiness his divine procurer?
FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO
70 The devil's in't. I'm taken by a ring-dove.
Where stood this Bishop all this while that I saw him
not?
- WHITE BISHOP [OF CANTERBURY]
O you were so ambitious you looked over me.
You aimed at no less person than the Queen,
The glory of the game. If she were won,
Enter White King James [from the White House]
- 75 The way were open to the master-check,
Which, look you, he and his live to give you.
Honour and virtue guide him in his station.
- WHITE QUEEN [OF BOHEMIA] [to White King James]
O my safe sanctuary!
- WHITE KING JAMES Let heaven's blessings
Be mine no longer than I am thy sure one.
80 The dove's house is not safer in the rock
Than thou in my firm bosom.
- WHITE QUEEN [OF BOHEMIA] I am blessed in't.
WHITE KING JAMES
Is it that lump of rank ingratitude
- Swelled with the poison of hypocrisy?
Could he be so forgetful has partaken
Of the sweet fertile blessings of our kingdom? 85
—Bishop, thou hast done our White House gracious service,
And worthy the fair reverence of thy place.—
For thee, Black holiness, that work'st out thy death
As the blind mole, the proper'st son of earth,
Who in the casting his ambitious hills up 90
Is often taken, and destroyed i'th' midst
Of his advanced work, 'twere well with thee
If (like that verminous labourer, which thou imitat'st
In hills of pride and malice) when death puts thee up,
The silent grave might prove thy bag forever— 95
No deeper pit than that. For thy vain hope
Of the White Knight and his most firm assistant (Two princely pieces, which I know thy thoughts Give lost forever now), my strong assurance
Of their fixed virtues, could you let in seas 100
Of populous untruths against that fort,
'Twould burst the proudest billows.
- WHITE QUEEN [OF BOHEMIA] My fear's past then.
WHITE KING JAMES
Fear? You were never guilty of an injury
To goodness but in that.
WHITE QUEEN [OF BOHEMIA]
It stayed not with me, sir.
- WHITE KING JAMES
It was too much if it usurped a thought. 105
Place a strong guard there.
WHITE QUEEN [OF BOHEMIA] Confidence is set, sir.

- 66 inflammation (a) physical morbid hot red swelling—here, of the penis (b) passion 67 pleurisy (a) excess, in this case of overheated blood (b) inflammation of the side or chest, often fatal
luxury lust
68 deflower violate, ravage. (The victim need not be a virgin.)
strait tight difficult place (but also 'tubular passage in the body', like the vagina) 68.3-4 White...Spalato Protestant episcopacy defeats Catholic episcopacy, and protects princely Anglo-German Protestantism (the first White capture of a Black piece in this version).
69 procurer pimp (first recorded use in this sense)
70 The devil's in't 'What the hell!'
ring-dove common wood-pigeon. (A ring is a bishop's mark of office, doves are proverbially peaceful; for doves as messengers of God, see Noah's dove at Genesis 8:8-12, and the Holy Spirit at Matthew 3:16, etc.) 72 looked over overlooked (the chief source

- of mistakes in chess, especially when a player focuses on his own attack on a major piece)
73 Queen (the most powerful chess piece)
75 master-check supreme check, i.e. check-mate (but also suggesting a progression from female Queen to male master/King)
76 you you all (the Black House)
he and his the White King and his people. (The King alone cannot check an opponent.)
77 Honour...station (either a declarative statement or a wishful imperative: 'they do guide him' or 'may they guide him!') station (a) official capacity (b) game position
79 thy sure one (a) dependably yours (b) your reliable sanctuary
80 dove's...rock 'O my dove that art in the clefts of the rock' (Song of Solomon 2:14).
rock 'Upon this rock I will build my church' (Matthew 16:18). The King was Defender of the Faith and leader of the English Church.
82 rank (a) corrupt (b) gross, puffed up

- 84 has (a) he who has (b) that he has 88 Black holiness (paradox)
work'st...death 'the motions of sins... did work... to bring forth fruit unto death' (Romans 7:5).
89 blind (literally or spiritually)
mole (symbolic of the devil, since hell was located in underground darkness) proper'st...earth i.e. epitome of a soulless material being 90-2 casting...work i.e. his molehills make it easy to find and kill him
94 puts...up removes you (from life, or the chess board)
95 silent grave total oblivion (instead of howling torment)
bag (a) shroud, winding sheet (b) small sack in which chess pieces are stored
99 Give lost consider (a) captured, taken (b) damned 101 populous numerous fort (a) my conviction of their integrity (b) their integrity 102 burst pop, resist proudest billows highest-swelling waves

WHITE KING JAMES [to White Bishop of Canterbury]
Take that prize hence, you reverend of men:
Put covetousness into the bag again.

FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO

The bag had need be sound, or it goes to wrack.
Sin and my weight will make a strong one crack.

Finit Actus Quartus

5.1

Incipit Actus Quintus et Ultimus Loud music. Enter Black Knight Gondomar in his litter [carried by Black Pawns], as passing in haste over the stage, and the Jesuit Black Bishop's Pawn above [in his reverend habit]

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR (calls) Hold, hold!
[The litter stops]

Is the Black Bishop's Pawn, the Jesuit,
Planted above for his concise oration?

JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN

Ecce triumphanti me fixum Caesaris arce.

5 BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR Art there, my holy boy? Sirrah, Bishop Tumbrel is snapped i'th' bag by this time.

JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN

Haeretici pereant sic.

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR

All Latin?

Sure the oration has infected him.—

Away, make haste, they're coming!

[Exeunt Black Pawns carrying his litter]

Oboes again!

Oboes. Enter [from] the Black House Black King
Felipe, Black Queen Maria, Black Duke Olivares,

[Jesuit Black Bishop], with Pawns, meeting White Knight Charles and White Duke of Buckingham [who enter from the White House]. The Jesuit Black Bishop's Pawn (above) entertains them with this Latin oration

JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN Si quid mortalibus unquam
oculis hilarem et gratum aperuit diem, si quid peraman-tibus amicorum animis gaudium attulit peperitvè lætitiam (Eques candidissime præluentissime), felicem profecto tuum a Domo Candoris ad Domum Nigritudinis accessum promisisse, peperisse, attulisse fatemur. Omnes adventus tui conflagentissimi, omni qua possumus lætitia, gaudio, congratulatione, acclamatione, animis observantissimis, af-fectibus devotissimis, obsequiis venerabundis, te sospitem congratulamur.

BLACK KING FELIPE [to White Knight Charles]

Sir, in this short congratulatory speech
You may conceive how the whole House affects you.

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [to White Knight Charles]

The colleges and sanctimonious seed-plots.

WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES [to Black King Felipe]

'Tis clear, and so acknowledged, royal sir.

BLACK KING FELIPE

What honours, pleasures, rarities, delights,

Your noble thought can think—

BLACK QUEEN MARIA [to White Knight Charles]

Your fair eye fix on,

That's comprehended in the spacious circuit

Of the Black Kingdom, they're your servants all.

WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES

How amply you endear us!

WHITE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM [to Black House]

They are favours

That equally enrich the royal giver

107 reverend... men most reverend man 108 covetousness excessive desire, possessive greed (i.e., the Fat Bishop, as if he were a personified vice) again (Like the last word of the play, this emphasizes the recurring nature of the game.)

109 sound secure

wrack ruin

5.1.0.1 Actus...Ultimus fifth and last act (Latin)

0.2-5 Enter...above (This scene represents the arrival of Charles and Buckingham in Madrid; the staging may indicate the Black House, or Spain.)

4 Ecce...arce Behold me, fixed on the triumphing citadel of the emperor. (A Latin hexameter: 'Caesar' because the Habsburgs were Holy Roman emperors,
'citadel' because the White Knight and Duke are about to enter the most heavily fortified centre of the enemy empire.)

6 Tumbrel dung-cart, drunk

7 Haeretici...sic May all heretics perish
so!

9 Oboes (Early modern oboes were larger and louder than the modern instrument;

in the theatre they were often used for royal entries or supernatural effects.)

9.2-8 Enter...oration (White Knight and Duke are surrounded by a Black crowd;
the theatre has become the inside of a citadel. In chess, an attacking knight and rook can enter deep into enemy territory, but in doing so they make themselves highly vulnerable to capture.)

9.8 Latin (associated with Catholicism, and with important official occasions generally)

10-19 Si...congratulamur 'If anything hath unto mortal eyes ever opened a glad and welcome day, if anything hath unto the loving souls of friends brought any joy, or given birth to gladness (most white, most shining Knight), your happy coming from the House of Whites to the House of Blacks, we confess, has promised it, given birth to it, brought it.
We all, most inflamed by your coming,
with all possible rejoicing, joy, gladness,
acclamation, with most respectful souls,

with most devout affections, with most obsequious veneration, congratulate you on your safety.'

21 affects loves

22 colleges religious orders, monasteries sanctimonious seed-plots holy seed-beds, i.e. seminaries (Latin for 'seed-bed'), but suggesting 'hypocritical breeding ground for political plots'

25 think...Your (It is shockingly indecorous for a woman to interrupt a man, or for anyone to interrupt a king.)

eye fix on (suggesting that the White Knight has his eyes fixed on the Black Queen, as Prince Charles stared at the Infanta Maria)

26 spacious circuit huge circle (referring to Spain's global empire)

27 servants (a word often used of sexual relationships)

28 endear us (a) make us feel important
(b) make yourself dear to us

favours (perhaps gifts that the Black Queen gives the White Knight, as women gave tokens to their suitors)

30 As the receiver in the free donation.
Music
 BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
 Hark! To enlarge your welcome, from all parts
 Is heard sweet-sounding airs; abstruse things open
 Of voluntary freeness, and yon altar
An altar discovered, richly adorned, with tapers on it, and divers statues standing on each side
 (The seat of adoration) seems t'adore
 The virtues you bring with you.
 WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES [aside to White Duke]
 35 There's a taste
 Of the old vessel still.
 WHITE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM [aside to White Knight]
 Th'erroneous relish.
 [BLACK QUEEN MARIA] [sings a song]
 Wonder, work some strange delight—
 This place was never yet without—
 To welcome thee, fair White House Knight,
 40 And to bring our hopes about.
 May from the altar flames aspire,
 Those tapers set themselves on fire.
 May senseless things our joys approve
 And those brazen statues move,
The statues move
 Quickened by some power above,
 Or what more strange, to show our love.
The statues dance
 BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
 A happy omen waits upon this hour:
 All move portentously the right-hand way.
 BLACK KING FELIPE
 Come, let's set free all the most choice delights
 That ever adorned days or quickened nights.
Exeunt [into the Black House]
 50
Enter Virgin White Queen's Pawn [from the White House]
 5.2
 VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
 I see 'twas but a trial of my love now.
 H'as a more modest mind, and in that virtue
 Most worthily has fate provided for me.

30.1-5.1.46.1 Music...dance (The combination of offstage musicians, dance, and spectacle suggests a court masque, rather than religious observance.)

31 from all parts (indicating that the music is performed offstage, and therefore produced by invisible and dispersed instruments—an effect associated with royal absolutism, magic, and the supernatural)

32-3 abstruse...freeness secret things reveal themselves freely and voluntarily (perhaps playing on the sexual meanings of 'things' and 'open': the Infanta Maria was being used as sexual bait)

33.1 discovered revealed (probably by pulling back a curtain, displaying a central alcove, which would look like a small side chapel) richly...tapers (characteristic of Catholic altars, by contrast with plainer Protestant communion tables)

33.2 divers statues several separate religious statues, probably of saints

34 seat residence, home adoration worship (but in context suggesting idolatry)

35 taste hint, taint

36 erroneous relish (a) wrong flavour (b) relishing of error, appetite for heresy old (as in 'the old religion', Catholicism) vessel receptacle (suggesting the ornate Catholic communion cup)

37 [BLACK QUEEN] (not specified in early texts, but songs were usually sung by onstage boy actors, and the only onstage boy is the one playing the Black Queen. She indecorously woos him with this climactic song, ending with the word 'love'.)

Wonder (The song invokes 'amazement' rather than God.)

work (A 'wonder-work' was a miracle, a 'wonder-worker' a miracle-worker or magician. Protestants argued that miracles had ceased.)

strange extraordinary, exotic, perverse delight (more often associated with sex than God)

39 thee (shifting from the formal 'you' to the more intimate 'thee')

40, 46 our (a) the Black House's (b) my (a royal plural)

40 our hopes i.e. Spanish hopes to 'take' Prince Charles by converting him to Catholicism

41 aspire rise (but suggesting incendiary ambition)

42 tapers...fire (a theatrical 'magic' trick: the candles light themselves)

43 senseless inanimate approve confirm, demonstrate

44 brazen (a) brass (b) shameless

44.1 statues move (Working water-driven automatons had been spectacularly demonstrated in Catholic, and more technologically advanced, Italy; in the English theatre statues were performed by actors.)

45 Quickened (a) given life (b) speeded up some power above (The indefinite 'some' is blasphemous: Christians recognized only a single heavenly power. It may suggest that the statues are really puppets.)

46 what...strange (a) quickened by something even stranger than some power above (b) may the statues do something even stranger than moving

(a cue for their dance)

46.1 dance (Dancing around an altar is outrageously profane, especially if the statues represent Biblical figures and saints.)

47 happy lucky

waits upon accompanies

48 portentously in a way that foretells something momentous right-hand propitious, virtuous (as opposed to 'left-hand', sinister). If the statues are all moving to the right, they are presumably dancing in a circle, clock-wise.

49-50 free...delights...quickened nights (Words with sexual meanings: the 'delights' are not culinary, as 5.3 makes clear.)

50.1 Exeunt...House (A complex symbolic exit. The alcove must close, concealing the altar. The statues might return to the alcove, or they could, as in the court masque, take aristocratic partners and exeunt with them, dancing. Since it is a large group, they could all exit through the centre doors, past the altar. Black Queen Maria might exit alongside White Knight Charles.)

5.2.0.1-2 Enter...House (alone, and in contrast to the exiting Black Queen)

1 I...now I now realize that the pre-contract was simply a test (i.e., that is why the Black Bishop's Pawn did not come to her bedroom in 4.3)

2 H'as he (the Black Bishop's Pawn) has more modest more chaste (than to engage in pre-marital sex, even after their betrothal)

- Enter [from the Black House] the Jesuit Black Bishop's Pawn in his reverend habit, meeting her*
- Yonder's the bad man in the reverend habit.
 5 Dares he be seen again?—traitor to holiness,
 O marble-fronted impudence!—and knows
 How much he's wronged me? I'm ashamed he blushes
 not.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
 Are you yet stored with any woman's pity?
 Are you the mistress of so much devotion,
 10 Kindness, or charity, as to bestow
 An alms of love on your poor sufferer yet
 For your sake only?
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
 Sir, for the reverence and respect you ought
 To give to sanctity—though none to me—
 15 In being her servant vowed and wear her livery,
 If I might counsel you, you should ne'er speak
 The language of unchasteness in that habit.
 You would not think how ill it does with you.
 The world's a stage, on which all parts are played.
 20 You'd count it strange to have a devil
 Presented there not in a devil's shape,
 Or—wanting one—to send him out in yours;
 You'd rail at that for an absurdity
 No college e'er committed. For decorum's sake, then, 25 For pity's cause, for sacred virtue's honour,
 If you'll persist still in your devilish part,
 Present him as you should do, and let one
 That carries up the goodness of the play
 Come in that habit, and I'll speak with him.
 30 Then will the parts be fitted, and the spectators
- Know which is which; they must have cunning judgements
 To find it else, for such a one as you
 Is able to deceive a mighty auditory.
 Nay, those you have seduced—if there be any
 In the assembly—when they see what manner
 You play the game with me, they cannot love you.
 Is there so little hope of you to smile, sir?
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
 Yes, at your fears, at th'ignorance of your power,
 The little use you make of time, youth, fortune.
 Knowing you have a husband for lust's shelter,
 40 You dare not yet make bold with a friend's comfort—
 Which is the plague of weakness.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN So hot-burning
 The syllables of sin fly from his lips
 As if the letter came new-cast from hell.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
 Well, setting by the dish you loathe so much 45 (Which has been heartily tasted by your betters),
 I come to marry you to th' gentleman
 That last enjoyed you. Hope that pleases you.
 There's no immodest relish in that office.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN [aside]
 Strange, of all others he should light on him
 50 To tie that holy knot that sought t'undo me.—
 Were you requested to perform that office?
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
 I named you a sure token.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
 As for that, sir,
 Now you're most welcome, and my fair hope's of you
 You'll never break the sacred knot you tie once 55

4 reverend habit (She immediately recognizes him because he has reverted to his priestly vestments; the last time she saw him—in 4.1—he wore his secular 'gallant' disguise.)
 6 marble-fronted stone-faced, cold and hard
 8 pity compassion (thought to be particularly characteristic of women); often invoked as a reason to accept a man's sexual advances
 9 devotion religious (or romantic) dedication
 10 Kindness... charity (both with the slang sense 'willingness to do sexual favours')
 11 alms small charitable donation
 11-12 your poor... only the poor man (me) who suffers only for you 15 her sanctity's livery uniform
 17 habit outfit
 18 does with suits
 21 shape costume
 22 wanting lacking
out from backstage out onto the stage 24 college (like those at Oxford and Cambridge, or the Jesuit seminaries in Europe, which performed academic plays which obeyed critical rules in ways that commercial plays did not) 28 carries holds

 29 that habit i.e. your priestly vestments
 30 fitted outfitted, supplied with necessary (theatrical) equipment
 32 it else which is which, otherwise 33 mighty (a) large (b) powerful, important auditory audience
 35 assembly i.e., the current audience of A Game at Chess
 37 you i.e., your salvation to smile i.e., that you respond to my earnest advice by grinning ironically 38 th'ignorance... power (a) your ignorance of your own power (b) your ignorant power
 40 for... shelter 'to cover your ass' (i.e., if you get pregnant as a result of your lecherous behaviour, everyone will think your husband is the father)
 41 friend's comfort lover's attention
 44 letter typeface, movable types used by printing presses new-cast newly thrown, new-made (by pouring hot liquid metal into molds) 45 the dish sexually attractive person, 'good enough to eat', or sexual organ (i.e., him, or his penis) 47-8 th'... you i.e. himself (because he thinks he has had sex with her—though he knows that she does not realize he is the man she betrothed herself to)

 48 last most recently (implying she's had other lovers)
Hope I hope
 49 no... office nothing that smacks of immodesty in that sacrament (of marriage)
 50 he... him her fiancé... the Jesuit (but the confusing pronouns ironically remind the audience that the two men are the same) light on happen to pick, randomly choose 51 tie... knot perform the marriage ceremony (but also, ironically, 'marry')
t'undo to sexually ruin (by raping her)
 53 named... token specified clear evidence (in his previous speech): he refers to the phrase 'last enjoyed you', but she interprets it as a reference to the fact that she is to be married to a gentleman
 55 break... tie violate the union that you as priest sanctify (but also, ironically, 'violate your marriage vows')

- With any lewd solicitings hereafter.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
But all the craft's in getting of it knit.
You're all on fire to make your coz'ning market.
I am the marrier—and the man. Do you know me?
60 Do you know me, nice iniquity, strict luxury,
And holy whoredom? Ay, would clap on marriage
With all hot speed to solder up the game?
See what a scourge fate has provided for thee.
You were a 'maid,' swear still, you're no worse now.
65 I left you as I found you. Have I startled you?
I'm quit with you now for my discovery,
Your outcries and your cunning's. Farewell, brokage.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
Nay, stay and hear me but give thanks a little,
If your ear can endure a work so gracious;
Then you may take your pleasure.
- 70 JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN I have done that!
VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN [kneels, praying]
That pow'r that has preserved me from this devil—JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN How?
VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN [praying]
This, that may challenge the chief chair in hell
And sit above his master—
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN Bring in merit!
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN [praying]
75 That suffered'st him, through blind lust, to be led
Last night to th'action of some common bed—
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN (within)
Not over-common neither.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
Ha! What voice is that?
VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN [praying]
Of virgins be thou ever honourèd.—
[She rises and addresses Black Bishop's Pawn]
Now you may go; you hear I've given thanks, sir.
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
Here's a strange game indeed. Did not I lie with you? 80
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN (within) No.
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
What a devil art thou?
VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
I'll not answer you, sir,
After thanksgiving.
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
Why, you made a promise to me
After the contract.
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN (within)
Yes.
JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
A pox confound thee!
I speak not to thee.—And you were prepared for't, 85
And set your joys more high—JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN (within)
—than you could reach, sir.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
'Slid, 'tis a bawdy voice. I'll slit the throat on't.
Enter Jesuitess Black Queen's Pawn [from the Black House]
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
What, offer violence to me, your bedfellow?
- 57 craft skill, trick
it knit the marriage tied up 58 all on fire desperate, hurrying, oversexed (like someone with their 'pants on fire') coz'ning cheating (because, he believes,
she has falsely pretended to be a virgin) market bargain (with the idea that she is trying to sell herself on 'the marriage market') 59 marrier officiating priest (punning on 'merrier?')
man bridegroom (as in 'man and wife'),
but also 'the man who had you' 59–60 know . . . know (a) recognize (b) have carnal knowledge of 60–1 nice . . . whoredom (he intends these paradoxes to apply to 'you', but they really apply to 'me') 60 nice scrupulous, fastidious, bashful
luxury lechery
61–2 Ay . . . game (a) 'yes, would you get married in a hurry in order to legitimate the sexual game you play?'
(b) 'I would marry you right away in order to legitimate the sexual game I wanted to play?'
61 Ay (a) yes, you know me (b) yes, that's what kind of woman you are (described in the preceding phrases). But 'ay' also puns on 'I'.
62 hot impetuous, oversexed (but literally looking forward to 'solder') solder up repair (specifically suggesting the re-sealing of a broken maidenhead) 63 scourge divine punishment (literally, a whip, like that used to lash convicted prostitutes) 64 a 'maid' (she had implicitly or explically called herself a 'maid' or 'virgin' repeatedly in earlier scenes) swear still keep swearing (a) that you were a virgin (b) that you are still a virgin
you're . . . now (He means this ironically,
but it is truer than he knows.) 65 I . . . found you i.e., you were not a virgin before or after I had sex with you; I 'found' you, at a first encounter, already without an intact hymen. (In fact he had sex with the Black Queen's Pawn, not the White Queen's Pawn: see 4.3.) 66 quit even, quits my discovery exposing me (her publicly accusing him of rape in 2.2.)
67 brokage insulting epithet for the White Queen's Pawn, referring to (a) pimping, dealing with go-between's to gain sexual access to a prostitute (b) a broken hymen 70 take . . . pleasure do what you like (but he interprets it sexually)
- 71 That pow'r i.e. God (to whom all her speeches are addressed, until 'honourèd' at l. 78)
72 How? either a question ('in what way?') or an exclamation ('what!') 73 This this devil challenge lay claim to, compete for 74 his master i.e. Satan Bring in merit 'fetch someone deserving' or 'don't forget qualifications' (i.e., I deserve to fill the chief chair) 76 action i.e. sexual activity common public, like 'common' land, available for anyone to use 77 within offstage
80 lie go to bed, have sex
84 pox venereal disease
85 prepared for't ready for intercourse (i.e., 'wet')
86 set . . . high had orgasms more powerful (suggesting also high-pitched exclamations during sex)
reach equal, satisfy 87 'Slid by God's eyelid (a strong oath)
bawdy lewd, smutty on't of the invisible speaker (but playing on the relationship between 'throat' and 'voice') 88 violence (looking backward to 'slit the throat' and forward to 'rape')

- To one that works so kindly, without rape?
 JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
 My bedfellow?
 JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
 90 Do you plant your scorn against me?
 Why, when I was probationer at Brussels,
 That engine was not seen; then adoration
 Filled up the place, and wonder was in fashion.
 Is't turned to th' wild seed of contempt so soon?
 Can five years stamp a bawd?—Pray, look upon me,
 95 sir;
 I've youth enough to take it.—'Tis no more
 Since you were chief agent for the transportation
 Of ladies' daughters, if you be remembered;
 Some of their portions I could name; you pursed 'em,
 100 too.
 They were soon dispossessed of worldly cares
 That came into your fingers.
 JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN Shall I hear her?
 JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
 Holy derision, yes, till thy ear swells
- With thy own venom, thy profane life's vomit.
 Whose niece was she you poisoned with child, twice?
 —Then gave her out 'possessed with a foul spirit'? 105
 When 'twas indeed your bastard.
Enter White Bishop's Gelded Pawn with White Queen [of Bohemia from the White House]
 JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN I am taken
 In mine own toils.
 WHITE BISHOP'S GELDED PAWN
 Yes, and 'tis just you should be.
 [White Bishop's Pawn takes Black Bishop's Pawn]
 WHITE QUEEN [OF BOHEMIA]
 And thou, lewd Pawn, the shame of womanhood.
 [White Queen takes Black Queen's Pawn]
 JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
 I'm lost of all hands.
 JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
 And I cannot feel
 The weight of my affection, now he's taken; 110
 'T'as not the burden of a grasshopper.

- 89 works so kindly (a) behaves so obligingly (b) performs the 'deed of kind', gives you a sexual workout
 90 My bedfellow? (He still does not realize who was in bed with him in 4.3.)
plant... against (as though 'scorn' were cannon, or projectiles fired from the cannons of the eyes)
 91 probationer a novice in a religious order
Brussels (in the Catholic Spanish Netherlands)
 92 engine (a) trick (b) heavy artillery used in siege warfare
 94 wild seed bastard offspring of (a) called (b) created by 95 five years (presumably the time that has passed since she was a probationer that he seduced)
stamp make by means of stamping (suggesting a coin or medallion, but also with the implied metaphor of intercourse, and of impregnation as the male stamping a form on female matter)
bawd pimp, procuress. (As prostitutes aged and became less attractive to customers, they turned into managers of brothels; he has tried to use her to help him seduce the White Queen's Pawn, thereby turning his former mistress into his pimp.)
look upon me (indicating that the shamed Black Bishop's Pawn is trying to avoid eye contact; she might physically force him to look at her, here)
sir (a deliberately formal, cold way to address a lover; like modern 'mister', used to address strangers, appropriately for a bawd accosting a potential customer) 96 I've... it 'I'm young enough that I can still endure close scrutiny' take it (perhaps punning on sexual sense)
- 97-8 chief... daughters i.e. responsible for helping aristocratic young women secretly leave England to go to nunneries in Catholic countries
 98 be remembered remind yourself (sarcastic: she then proceeds to remind him herself)
 99 portions inheritances, share of their family's wealth
pursed 'em pocketed them (the women's money, the women themselves) 100 dispossessed relieved (sarcastic) worldly cares (a) secular burdens (b) financial assets 101 came into (punning on 'had an orgasm upon') fingers (suggesting pick-pocketing and sexual groping)
Shall... her i.e. should I continue to endure listening to this woman? should I, like a court, admit her plea?
 102 Holy derision saintly scorn (ironic), mockery of holiness ear swells (compare the idea that your ears burn, when someone is talking about you: here, in contrast with her swelling womb)
 103 venom poison (sometimes administered through the ear)
 104-6 Whose niece... bastard (A rhetorical question: he knows she is referring euphemistically to herself: she is too ashamed to use the first person singular.)
 104 niece (a) female relative (b) euphemism for 'mistress, whore' (especially a priest's) poisoned with child impregnated (comparing his semen to 'venom' and 'vomit') 105 gave her out reported she (I) was possessed... spirit 'a victim of demonic possession' (thus providing a bogus supernatural explanation for her abdominal swelling, later presumably exorcised when she secretly gave birth); but playing on 'sexually possessed' and 'spirit' (= semen)
 106 'twas indeed the 'foul spirit' was in fact 106.1-2 White Queen (Having been saved by the White Bishop, the most powerful White piece now gives the White pawns a decisive advantage over the Black pawns: the capture of three adjacent black pawns exposes the Black Queen flank and prepares for the endgame of 5.3.)
 107 toils traps
 107.1 White Bishop's... Pawn Protestant clergy defeats Catholic clergy (a plausible late move, if one or the other piece has already taken another pawn earlier in the game, and thereby moved into an adjacent file). Alternatively, he might be taken by White Queen's Pawn, his intended target, or by White Queen.
 108.1 White Queen... Pawn Protestant womanhood defeats Catholic womanhood (a plausible late move, and safer after Black Queen's Bishop's Pawn has been taken, since that piece might otherwise retaliate). Alternatively, she might be taken by White Queen's Pawn.
Black Queen's Pawn (who may have deliberately conspicuously forfeited her move, signalling her approval of his capture)
 109 of all hands on all sides (but also suggesting the hands that move chess pieces)
 110 affection love (for him)
 111 burden... grasshopper Ecclesiastes 12:5 ('the grasshopper shall be a burden').
burden weight

JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN
 Thou whore of order! Cockatrice in voto!
Enter Black Knight's Pawn Gelder [from the Black House, with a weapon]

BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER [aside]
 Yonder's the White Bishop's Pawn. Have at his heart now!

VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
 Hold, monster-impudence! Wouldst heap a murder 115 On thy first foul attempt? O merciless bloodhound!
 'Tis time that thou art taken.
 [White Queen's Pawn takes Black Knight's Pawn]

BLACK KNIGHT'S PAWN GELDER
 Death! prevented?

VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
 For thy sake, and yon partner in thy shame,
 I'll never know man farther than by name. Exeunt

5-3 Enter [from] the Black House Black King Felipe, Black Queen Maria, Black Duke Olivares, Jesuit Black Bishop, Black Knight Gondomar, with White Knight Charles and his White Duke of Buckingham

WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES [to Black King Felipe]
 You've both enriched my knowledge, royal sir,
 And my content together.

BLACK KING FELIPE Stead of riot,
 We set you only welcome. Surfeit is A thing that's seldom heard of in these parts.

WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES
 I hear of the more virtue when I miss on't. 5

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
 We do not use to bury in our bellies
 Three hundred thousand ducats, and then boast on't,
 Or exercise th'old Roman painful idleness
 With care of fetching fishes far from home:
 The golden-headed coracinè out of Egypt, 10
 The salpa from Ebusus, or the pelamis
 (Which some call 'summer whiting') from Chalcedon, Salmons from Aquitaine, ellops from Rhodes,
 Cockles from Chios, franked and fattened up
 With far and sapa, flour and cocted wine. 15
 We cram no birds, nor (Epicurean-like)
 Enclose some creeks o'th' sea, as Sergius Orata did—
 He that invented the first stews for oysters
 And other sea-fish, who (besides the pleasure
 Of his own throat) got large revènués by th'invention, 20
 Whose fat example the nobility followed.
 Nor do we imitate that arch-gormandizer

112 whore of order prostitute (a) of a religious order (b) on demand (c) of ordure, excrement, filth (but also a complex paradox, since 'whore' epitomizes sexual and moral disorder)
Cockatrice mythical monster, a serpent with a rooster's head, whose look was poisonous (like the 'evil eye' of a menstruating woman); slang for 'low-class prostitute'
in voto See 1.1.43; here, having sworn eternal fornication instead of eternal celibacy (playing on the slang equation of 'nun' and 'whore').

112.1-2 Enter...House (Black responds to White's successful pawn attack.)

112.2 weapon (probably a sword or knife: a phallic weapon that must be theatrically taken from him when he is 'prevented': perhaps suggesting symbolic—or even literal—genital amputation)

113 Have aim his heart now (in contrast to 'his testicles, earlier' when Black Knight's Pawn gelded him, in his 'first foul attempt')

115 attempt assault

116.1 White Queen's...Pawn Protestant female innocence defeats Catholic male malice (a plausible mid-game move in chess, if either piece has already taken another pawn earlier, and thereby moved into an adjacent file). Alternatively, he might be taken by White Bishop's Pawn or White Queen.

117 yon...shame i.e. Black Bishop's Pawn (his confessor)

118 I'll...name I'll never have carnal knowledge of any man (i.e., like Heloise after the castration of Abelard, she vows to remain celibate for life). The White Queen was sometimes called 'the Amazon' (invoking a female community without men).

5.3.0.1-4 Enter...Buckingham (endgame: a less crowded and spectacular scene than 5.1, with fewer black pieces surrounding White Knight and Duke)

0.2 Black Queen (speaks only six words in this scene: male political negotiations take over, and the promised bride is kept firmly away from Charles)

0.3 Black Bishop (says nothing in this scene—perhaps simply blocking access to Black Queen Maria)

2 riot extravagance (particularly 'noisy feasting' and 'sexual abandon'). The spectacular public promises of 5.1 are replaced, behind the scenes, by tight-fisted reserve.

3 Surfeit excess (particularly of food or sex)

6 We...use it is not our custom bellies (a) stomachs (b) wombs

7 Three...ducats i.e., things worth millions of dollars

8 old classical, patrician painful idleness (oxymoron: 'idleness made possible by the painful labour of slaves'—or 'it takes a lot of work to be this lazy'—or 'laziness is unhealthy and uncomfortable')

9 care expense, worry fetching...home importing exotic food. (Proverbially, 'far-fetched and dear bought is good for ladies', and 'fish' has various sexual meanings: Prince Charles went far to fetch home an exotic dish.)

10 coracinè black Nile fish, resembling perch

11 salpa salt-water fish
Ebusus Roman name for the Spanish island now called Ibiza (at the opposite end of the Mediterranean from Egypt)

pelamis young or small tuna

12 Chalcedon city in north-west Turkey, on the Black Sea and the Bosphorus (also the title of the provisional leader of Catholics in Protestant England—an association which would also place it very far from Rome)

13 Aquitaine (south-west coast of France)
ellops (unknown fish, mentioned by ancient writers)
Rhodes famous island off the south-west coast of Turkey

14 Cockles common shellfish
Chios Greek island in the north Aegean franked stuffed

15 far and sapa flour and boiled wine

16 cram stuff
Epicurean-like like a follower of the Greek hedonist philosopher Epicurus (d. 270 BCE)

17 Sergius Orata (c.98 BCE)

18 stews fish-farms, ponds for breeding specially prized varieties (but suggesting 'brothels')

22 arch-gormandizer super-glutton (Middleton coinage); This seemingly refers to Orata, but is based historically on the Emperor Heliogabalus (d. 222), famous for sexual and financial extravagance

- With two-and-twenty courses at one dinner,
And betwixt every course he and his guests Washed, and used women, then sat down and strengthened,
Lust swimming in their dishes—which no sooner
Was tasted, but was ready to be vented.
- WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES
Most impious epicures!
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
We commend rather,
Of two extremes, the parsimony of Pertinax,
(Who had half lettuces set up to serve again)
Or his successor Julian (that would make Three meals of a lean hare, and often sup
With a green fig and wipe his beard, as I can).
The old bewailers of excess in those days
Complained there was more coin bid for a cook
Than for a warhorse, but now cooks are purchased
After the rate of triumphs, and some dishes
After the rate of cooks—which must needs make Some of your White House gormandizers (’specially Your wealthy plump plebeians) like the hogs
Which Scaliger cites, that could not move for fat,
So insensible of either prick or goad
That mice made holes to needle in their buttocks
And they ne’er felt ’em. There was once a ruler, Cyrene’s governor, choked with his own paunch—
Which death fat Sanctius (King of Castile) fearing Through his infinite mass of belly, rather chose
To be killed suddenly—by a pernicious herb Taken to make him lean, which old Cordoba (King of Morocco) counselled his fear to—
Than he would hazard to be stunk to death
- As that huge cormorant that was choked before him.
- WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES
Well, you’re as sound a spokesman, sir, for parsimony,
Clean abstinence, and scarce one meal a day,
As ever spoke with tongue.
- BLACK KING FELIPE
Censure him mildly, sir.
- ’Twas but to find discourse.
- BLACK QUEEN MARIA
He’ll talk of anything.
- WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES
I shall be half afraid to feed hereafter.
- WHITE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM
Or I, beshrew my heart, for I fear fatness,
The fog of fatness, as I fear a dragon.
The comeliness I wish for, that’s as glorious.
- WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES [to Black House]
Your course is wondrous strict. I shall transgress sure,
If I should change my side (as you’ve much wrought me to’t).
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
How you misprize! This is not meant to you-ward.
You, that are wound up to the height of feeding
By clime and custom, are dispensed withal.
You may eat kid, cabrito, calf, and tunas—
Eat, and eat every day, twice, if you please—
Nay, the franked hen fattened with milk and corn
(A riot which th’inhabitants of Delos Were first inventors of), or the crammed cockle.
- WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES
Well, for the food I’m happily resolved on.
But for the diet of my disposition
There comes a trouble; you will hardly find Food to please that.

- 25 used (sexually) strengthened got stronger, intensified
- 27 vented ‘expressed’ and ‘expelled from the body’ (as in urinating, vomiting, ejaculating, farting)
- 28 epicures gluttons, drunkards, lechers, atheists
- 29 parsimony (a) thriftiness (b) stinginess
Pertinax Roman emperor (d. 193)
- 30 set . . . again elevated to a second term of public office (i.e. served as left-overs)
- 31 Julian Roman emperor (d. 193)
- 32–3 sup . . . fig (It was rare for aristocrats to eat a meal without meat.)
- 33 wipe his beard (to signify the meal was over) can know how to do
- 34 bewailers critics
- 37 triumphs (a) public spectacles after military victories (b) London Lord Mayor’s pageants
- 40 plebeians commoners (not born gentlemen or aristocrats)
- 41 Scaliger Julius Caesar Scaliger (1484–1558), famous Italian humanist scholar
- 42 prick puncture
goad spike for driving cattle
- 43 needle bore, tunnel
- 45 Cyrene’s governor Magas, king of Greek colony of Cyrene in North Africa (d. 258 BCE)
- choked with suffocated by, unable to breathe because of
- paunch gut, fat
- 46 fat Sanctius ‘gluttonous holiness’: Sancho I, king of Leon (956–65)
- 47 Through because of
- 49–50 Cordoba . . . Morocco (Cordoba—the name of a southern Spanish kingdom rather than its king—belonged, like Morocco, to the Islamic world, and Sancho I went there for advanced medical treatment.)
- 51 Than . . . death rather than risk dying squalidly (i.e. so overweight that he was bedridden and incontinent)
- 52 As . . . him i.e. like Cyrene’s governor cormorant large, voracious sea-bird that swallows more than it can immediately digest, and regurgitates it for later feeding; hence, bulimic glutton
- 53 sound (a) reliable (b) healthy
- 54 Clean total
- 56 discourse conversation, subject matter
- 59 fog flab (but suggesting ‘dangerous mist’)
fear (a) am afraid of (b) frighten
- 60 comeliness handsomeness
as glorious i.e. as glorious as fearing or frightening a dragon
- 62 change my side (a) personally convert (b) convert the whole White House wrought me to’t worked on me to do
- 63 misprize misunderstand to you-ward to apply to you all
- 64 wound up (like a watch, or a musical instrument being set to a high pitch)
- 65 clime climate (based on the medical theory that national characteristics were determined by distance from the equator)
dispensed withal excused from this. (Characteristic of the Catholic tradition of granting exceptions to ethical rules.)
- 66 kid baby goat
cabrito (Spanish for ‘baby goat’)
calf i.e. veal
- 67 twice (a joke, since the English ate three or four times a day)
- 69 Delos (Greek island famous in antiquity)
- 71 happily . . . on happy to accept
- 72 diet (a) food (b) regulation disposition personality

	BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR		The garden for our cook to pick his salads.	85
	It must be a strange nature		The food's lean France, larded with Germany,
75	We cannot find a dish for, having policy		Before which comes the grave chaste signory
	(The master cook of Christendom) to dress it.		Of Venice, served in (capon-like) in whitebroth;
	Pray, name your nature's diet.		From our chief oven Italy, the bake-meats;
	WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES	The first mess	Savoy, the salt; Geneva, the chipped manchet.	90
	Is hot ambition.		Below the salt the Netherlands are placed,
	BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR		A common dish at lower end o'th' table
	That's but served in puff-paste.		For meaner pride to fall to. For our second course,
	Alas, the meanest of our cardinals' cooks		A spit of Portugals served in for plovers,
80	Can dress that dinner. Your ambition, sir,		Indians and Moors for blackbirds. All this while	95
	Can fetch no farther compass than the world?		Holland stands ready melted to make sauce
	WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES		On all occasions; when the voider comes
	That's certain, sir.		And with such cheer our crammed hopes we suffice,
	BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR		Zealand says grace, for fashion, then we rise.
	We're about that already,		WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES
	And in the large feast of our vast ambition		Here's meat enough, in conscience, for ambition.	100
	We count but the White Kingdom (whence you came		BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
	from)		If there be any want, there's Switzerland,
76	dress prepare for eating, cook
77	mess course, dish (as in military 'mess-hall')
78	hot (a) eager, passionate, sexually aroused (b) according to the medical theory of humours, containing an excess of the element of fire (c) heated, spicy but only	88	capon-like like a castrated chicken	93
	puff-paste fine, rich, flaky flour (i.e. light, frivolous, unsubstantial dishes or persons)		whitebroth thin soup, whitened with flour or milk (like a sea, in which the capon sits like the island city of Venice)	meaner pride humbler self-importance (oxymoron), self-respect of social inferiors
79	meanest worst, lowest-class	89	our . . . Italy (Spain had ruled southern Italy and Sicily for more than a century; Milan was also in its possession, and Genoa an ally.)	fall to (a) chow down on (b) descend socially to (c) submerge in
81	compass (a) measurement, sphere (b) instrument for making maps (c) navigational instrument (d) policy, stratagem (all relevant to the Spanish global empire)		chief oven (because Rome is the centre of Catholicism, and the Italian climate much hotter than the English)	94
82	about that (a) have begun compassing the world (b) around the globe		bake-meats meat pies (as in Genesis 50:17, 'bake-meats for Pharaoh')	spit skewer-full
83-103	large feast . . . table (The allegorical menu parodies elaborate court feasts—where dishes were sometimes sculpted to represent persons or places—and expensive allegorical court masques.)	90	Savoy independent duchy in what is currently south-eastern France and north-western Italy (major source of salt exports)	Portugals Portuguese (ruled by Spain)
84-5	but . . . salads i.e. 'England just a small piece of ground used for growing the least substantial part of the feast'		salt salt-cellar, a large and often ornate utensil at the centre of the table. (The salt-cellar was passed around the table, as Savoy changed its allies.)	94, 95 for in place of
85	to . . . salads to do something trivial (proverbial)		Geneva (birthplace and international centre of Calvinism)	94
86	food's real meal, main course, sustenance is		chipped having had the hard dry outer crust removed, leaving only the highly-valued interior of the loaf	plovers lapwings (a bird commonly eaten at the time)
	lean (a) muscular, not fatty—as in 'lean meat' (b) famished (referring to recent French famines)	91	manchet the finest white bread (often used figuratively to suggest 'religious purity', but perhaps here pronounced 'man-cheat')	95
	larded garnished with strips of bacon, or greased with melted fat (appropriate to the German taste for pork)		Below the salt (a) at the inferior end of the table, below the salt-cellar (b) below sea-level	Indians natives of the New World or southern Asia (both belonging to the Spanish empire)
	Germany (site of extensive Catholic-Protestant warfare, 1619-24)		Netherlands (Spanish territory, but its northern Protestant provinces had been in revolt for decades)	Moors (a) Africans (b) Moslems (c) Moriscos (Spanish Moors who had publicly converted to Christianity, but were nevertheless collectively expelled in 1609)
87	Before which i.e. as an appetizer, soup	92	common (because the Dutch had a non-monarchical government)	blackbirds (another bird commonly eaten at the time, suggesting the dark skin of Amerindians, Africans, Arabs, and southern Asians)
	grave dignified, respected (also suggesting the age of Venetian senators)		lower (a) socially inferior (b) below sea-level	96
	chaste (Venice was a 'maiden' city, never conquered; but given its reputation			Holland a province of the northern Netherlands, 'ready melted' because so much of it is under water; famous for its dairy products, and hence its sauces

- Polonia, and such pickled things will serve
To furnish out the table.
- WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES You say well, sir.
But here's the myst'ry—I tell you in private.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
O, we're your cabinets.
- 105 WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES When I ha' stopped the mouth
Of one vice, there's another gapes for food.
I'm as covetous as a barren womb,
The grave, or what's more ravenous.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR We're for you, sir.
Call you that heinous that's good husbandry?
110 Why, we make money of our faith, our prayers.
We make the very deathbed buy her comforts,
Most dearly pay for all her pious counsels,
Leave rich revènués for a few sale-orisons—
Or else they pass unreconciled without 'em.
- 115 Did you but view the vaults within our monasteries You'd swear then Plutus (whom the fiction calls
The lord of riches) is entombed within 'em.
- WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES
Is't possible?
- BLACK DUKE OLIVARES
You cannot pass for tuns.
- WHITE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM
But how shall I bestow the vice I bring, sirs?
120 You quite forget me. I shall be locked out
By your strict key of life.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
Is yours so foul, sir?
- WHITE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM
Faith, some that's pleased to make a wanton on't
Call it infirmity of blood, flesh-frailty;
- 102 Polonia Poland
pickled (a) preserved in brine, like condiments at a meal (b) drunk (c) varie-gated—like the uniform of Swiss soldiers, or the linguistically and theologically diverse populations of both countries
- 104 myst'ry (a) private enigma (b) state secret
- 105 we're... cabinets we are the repositories of your most precious documents and secret discussions
- 107 womb (often described as a mouth, hungry for insemination, and not satisfied until pregnant)
- 108 grave (often described as a mouth which gaped for all mankind)
what's whatever else is
- 109 husbandry household financial management
- 111 the very... comforts i.e. even someone on their deathbed pay for their soul's spiritual consolation
- 112 her... counsels all the religious advice given to her (the soul)
- 113 Leave... revènués bequeath (to the Church) huge estates sale-orisons (a) purchased prayers
(b) prayers for money
- 114 pass unreconciled die without being reconciled to God or the Church
- 116 fiction myth, pagan religion
- 117 lord god
- 118 pass for tuns walk through because the passage is blocked by so many large casks of wine or huge chests of gold
- 119 bestow dispose of
- 120-1 locked... life i.e. excluded by your rigorous code of conduct—echoing the Biblical references to 'the key of David' (Isaiah 22:22, Revelations 3:7) and 'the key to the bottomless pit' (Revelations 9:1, 20:1)
- 122 make... on't treat it as something trifling
- 123 infirmity... flesh-frailty See 'infirmity of flesh' (Romans 6:19, Galatians 4:13) and 'the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak' (Matthew 26:41).
blood (in humoural medical theory, the source of lust)
- 124 a worse name i.e. 'lust' or 'adultery' or
'sodomy'
- 125 trifle littlest
mere innocent complete child, simpleton,
harmless person
- But certain there's a worse name in your book for't.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
The trifle of all vices, the mere innocent, 125 The very novice of this house of clay. Venery?
If I but hug thee hard, I show the worst on't.
It's all the fruit we have here after supper;
Nay, at the ruins of a nunnery once
Six thousand infants' heads found in a fishpond.
- 130 WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES
How?
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
How? Ay, how? How came they thither, think you?
Ulric, bishop of Augsburg, in's epistle
To Nicholas the First, can tell you how.
Maybe he was at cleansing of the pond.
I can but smile to think how it would puzzle
135 All mother-maids that ever lived in those parts
To know their own child's head. But is this all?
- BLACK DUKE OLIVARES [to White Knight Charles]
Are you ours yet?
- WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES
One more, and I am silenced.
But this that comes now will divide us questionless.
'Tis ten times ten times worse than the forerunners.
- 140 BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
Is it so vile there is no name ordained for't?
Toads have their titles, and creation gave Serpents and adders those names to be known by.
- WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES
This of all vices bears the hidden'st venom,
The secret'st poison. I'm an arch-dissembler, sir.
- 145 BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR
How!
- 126 novice beginner (especially in a monastic 'house')
- house of clay i.e. the human body (Job 4:19, etc.)
- Venery sex (but also 'sport of hunting', to which King James and his favourites were addicted)
- 127 If... hard (one man closely embracing another, with the sexual suggestion of 'hard')
- 128 It's... fruit the only dessert is sex (perhaps specifically sodomy, of which Catholics were often accused); the sex we have does not bear fruit (= produce children)
- 132 Ulric St Ulric (890-973) epistle letter (widely cited by Protestant propagandists)
- 133 Nicholas the First Pope St Nicholas I (d.
867)
- 136 mother-maids alleged virgins who are actually mothers (a blasphemous version of the Virgin birth)
- 142 Toads i.e., even toads (considered poisonous and repulsive) titles names (but suggesting aristocratic or royal rank)

In the endgame, White Duke is behind White Knight, protecting him, deep in the Black House (a). At 5.3.161.1 White Knight takes Black Knight, opening up White Duke's threat to Black King (b): White Knight could be taken, or Black Duke could be blocked, but either response would still leave Black King vulnerable to attack by the other piece. Black realizes that the cause is lost, and at 5.3.162 White Duke takes Black King (c). In all three diagrams, the White pieces below the dotted line are invisible to the audience, and their positions are completely speculative (and irrelevant to the staging).

WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES

It's my nature's brand. Turn from me, sir.
The time is yet to come that e'er I spoke
What my heart meant.

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR

And call you that a vice?

150 Avoid all profanation, I beseech you.
The only prime state-virtue upon earth,
The policy of empires—O take heed, sir,
For fear it take displeasure and forsake you.
It is a jewel of that precious value
Whose worth's not known but to the skilful lapidary:
155 The instrument that picks ope princes' hearts
And locks up ours from them with the same motion.

BLACK DUKE OLIVARES [to White Knight Charles]
You never came so near our souls till now.

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [to White Knight Charles]
What we have done

Has been dissemblance ever.

WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES

There you lie then,
And the game's ours. We give thee checkmate by Discovery, King—the noblest mate of all.

160

[White Knight Charles takes Black Knight Gondomar, and White Duke of Buckingham takes Black King Felipe]

BLACK KING FELIPE I'm lost, I'm taken!
A great shout and flourish

WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES

Ambitious, covetous, luxurious falsehood!

WHITE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM Dissembler!—that includes all.

BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR All hope's confounded.

165

BLACK QUEEN MARIA Miserable condition!

Enter [from the White House] White King James, White Queen [of Bohemia], White Bishop [of Canterbury], with their White Pawns

WHITE KING JAMES [embracing White Knight Charles]
O let my arms be blessed with this dear treasure,

146 brand mark of infamy

149 Avoid...profanation don't be blasphemous (by calling dissembling a vice). Contrast Psalm 26:4, 'neither will I go in with dissemblers'.

150 state political, diplomatic

157 You...now (a) you were never so closely connected to us as you are now (b) you never understood our insides as well as you do now

158 brother soul-mate, fellow Christian, fellow monk. (If he had married the Infanta, White Knight Charles would have become literally the 'brother' (= brother-in-law) of Black King Felipe).

159 lie (a) are positioned (b) tell lies

161 Discovery public exposure (of your lies and other vices). In chess, 'checkmate by discovery' occurs when the movement of one piece (here, the White Knight) clears a path by which another piece (here, the White Duke) places the opposing King in check. A knight and duke can place an opposing king in check only if his freedom of movement is blocked by other pieces.

noblest mate most impressive form of checkmate (but in contrast to the other meaning of the words, the 'royal marriage' proposed between Charles and Maria)

163 Ambitious...falsehood (the four vices which the Black House confesses in this scene)

luxurious lecherous

165-6 hope's...Miserable Wisdom 3:11 ('For whoso despiseth wisdom and nurture, he is miserable, and their hope is vain')

166 BLACK QUEEN (The object of the 'Spanish Match' appropriately speaks the last speech by the Black House, acknowledging the complete collapse of their strategy.)

Miserable (a) unhappy, wretched (b) contemptible, pathetic condition situation, position (but playing on 'contract, treaty', i.e. the proposed diplomatic dynastic marriage)

- Truth's glorious masterpiece.—See, Queen of sweetness,
He's in my bosom safe, and this fair structure
Of comely honour his true-blest assistant.
- 170 WHITE QUEEN [OF BOHEMIA]
May their integrities ever possess
That pow'rful sanctuary.
- WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES As 'twas a game, sir,
Won with much hazard, so with much more triumph
We gave him checkmate by discovery, sir.
- WHITE KING JAMES
175 Obscurity is now the fittest favour Falseness can sue for. It well suits perdition.
It's their best course that so have lost their fame
To put their heads into the bag for shame—
*The bag opens, and the Black lost [pieces] appear in
it. The Jesuit Black Bishop slides in it*
And there, behold! The bag, like hell-mouth, opens 180 To take her due, and the lost sons appear (Greedyly gaping for increase of fellowship
In infamy—the last desire of wretches),
Advancing their perdition-branded foreheads
Like Envy's issues or a bed of snakes.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN [in the bag]
185 'Tis too apparent. The game's lost, King taken.
- FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO [in the bag]
The White House has given us the bag, I thank 'em.
- BLACK PAWN [in the bag]
They'd need have given you a whole bag by yourself.
'Sfoot! This Fat Black Bishop has so squelched and squeezed me,
So overlaid me, I have no verjuice
Left in me. You shall find all my goodness,
If you look for't, in the bottom of the bag.
- FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO [in the bag] Thou malapert Pawn!
The Bishop must have room, he will have room,
And room to lie at pleasure.
- BLACK PAWN [in the bag] All the bag I think
Is room too scant for your Spalato paunch.
- JESUIT BLACK BISHOP'S PAWN [in the bag, to Jesuitess Black Queen's Pawn]
Down, viper of our Order! Art thou showing Thy impudent whorish front?
- JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN [in the bag]
Yes, monster holiness!
- WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES
Contention in the bag? Is hell divided?
- WHITE KING JAMES [to Black pieces in the bag]
You'd need have some of majesty and power
To keep good rule amongst you. Make room, Bishop.
- 200 [White King James puts Black King Felipe in the bag]
- FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO [in the bag]
I'm not so easily moved when I'm once set.
I scorn to stir for any king on earth.

- 170 comely lovely assistant i.e. White Duke of Buckingham
- 174 We emphasizing their cooperation, as at l. 160)
- 175 Obscurity (a) darkness, as in the eternal darkness of hell (b) inconspicuousness, making it possible to hide (c) unintelligibility, as a defence against being caught in a lie favour reward, mercy
- 176 perdition (a) utter ruin (b) damnation
- 177 fame good reputation
- 178 put... bag i.e. hide, conceal their faces
bag sack in which chess pieces are stored (allegorically, death, or hell), but also suggesting the 'game-bag' in which hunters put killed game
- 178.1 bag opens (probably by opening a trapdoor, with what appears to be the open top of a huge bag sticking out of it: see the illustrated title-pages, pp. 27 and 1773)
Black... appear (The Fat Bishop and three captured pawns speak, but not all need appear simultaneously: the dialogue emphasizes their struggling for position within the chaotic bag.)
- 178.2 Jesuit... slides (perhaps because the trapdoor opens under him)
- 179 like hell-mouth (similar—but not identical—to the old-fashioned theatrical representation of the entrance to hell, with devils and painted flames)
- 180 lost sons See John 17:12 (translated 'son of perdition' or 'lost child')
- 181–2 Greedyly... wretches (proverbially, 'misery loves company')
- 183 Advancing... foreheads raising their heads up (presumably the only part of their bodies visible to the audience)
perdition-branded Genesis 4:15 ('the Lord set a mark upon Cain', who killed his brother Abel out of envy), or 1 Timothy 4:2 ('Speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their conscience seared with a hot iron')
- 184 Envy's issues children of envy (one of the seven deadly sins). See Wisdom 2:24 ('through envy of the devil came death into the world'); the serpent in Eden was often said to have been motivated by envy.
snakes (often associated with Envy)
- 186 given... bag bagged us (but playing on the colloquial senses 'given us the money-bags' and 'cheated us, left us holding an empty bag')
- 187 BLACK PAWN (originally the Black Jesting Pawn, in a scene cut from this version: see Additional Passages. Here, perhaps Black Knight's Pawn or White King's Pawn.)
- 188 'Sfoot by God's foot (a strong oath, referring to the feet of Jesus, nailed to the cross)
- 188–91 This... bottom (possibly suggesting sodomy, the Fat Bishop having drained the Pawn sexually)
- 189 overlaid laid on top of verjuice acidic juice squeezed from sour fruit (hence, 'life-juices', but perhaps playing on 'vir' meaning 'man' and 'juice' meaning 'semen')
- 190 goodness (Ironic: normally 'virtue', but here 'best part, physically'; slang for sexual prowess)
- 192 malapert impudent
- 193 room (punning on 'Rome': he wanted to become the Pope, which Protestants called 'the Bishop of Rome')
- 194 lie (a) lie down (b) tell untruths
- 196 viper poisonous snake (alluding to the fable of a frozen viper that a man revived by placing it in his shirt, who was then killed when it bit him: hence, 'treacherous ingrate')
- our Order i.e. the Jesuits
- 197 front forehead, face (which should be blushing, if she were not so shameless)
monster holiness (oxymoron, playing on the title 'Your Holiness')

- WHITE QUEEN [OF BOHEMIA]
 Here comes the Queen. What say you then to her?
 [White Queen of Bohemia puts Black Queen Maria in the bag]
- FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO [in the bag]
 Indeed a quean may make a bishop stir.
- 205 WHITE KNIGHT CHARLES
 Room for the mightiest machiavel politician
 That e'er the devil hatched of a nun's egg.
 [White Knight Charles beats and kicks Black Knight Gondomar into the bag]
- FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO [in the bag]
 He'll peck a hole i'th' bag and get out shortly.
 But I shall be the last man that creeps out,
 And that's the misery of greatness ever.—
- 210 FOH! the politician is not sound i'th' vent;
 I smell him hither.
- WHITE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM
 Room for a sunburnt, tansy-faced beloved,
 An olive-coloured Ganymede.
 [White Duke of Buckingham puts Black Duke Olivares in the bag]
- And that's all
 That's worth the bagging.
- FAT BISHOP OF SPALATO [in the bag]
 Crowd in all you can,
 The Bishop will be still uppermost man,
 Maugre King, Queen, or politician. 215
- WHITE KING JAMES
 So let the bag close now (the fittest womb
 For treachery, pride, and malice),
 [The bag closes]
- whilst we winner-like,
 Destroying through heaven's power what would destroy,
 Welcome our White Knight with loud peals of joy. 220
 Exeunt
- Epilogue. [Enter] the Virgin White Queen's Pawn Epilogue*
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN [bowing]
 My mistress, the White Queen, hath sent me forth
 And bade me bow thus low to all of worth
 That are true friends of the White House and cause,
 Which she hopes most of this assembly draws.
 For any else—by envy's mark denoted, 5
 To those night glow-worms in the bag devoted—
 Where'er they sit, stand, and in corners lurk,
 They'll be soon known by their depraving work.
 But she's assured, what they'd commit to bane
 Her White friends' hands will build up fair again. 10
 [Exit]

ADDITIONAL PASSAGES

A Apparently omitted in performance; between 2.2.22 and 23 in a speech by the Fat Bishop.

But most on't out of cullis of cock-sparrows.
 'Twill stick and glue the faster to the adversary;
 'Twill slit the throat of their most calvish cause,

204 quean . . . stir (a) prostitute can arouse a bishop sexually (b) queen, the most powerful chess piece, can make a chess bishop flee

205 machiavel machiavellian

209 greatness i.e. overweightness (which makes it difficult for him to squeeze through a little hole—but also, more generally, equating 'Very Important People' with 'Very Fat People')

210 Foh (expression of disgust, presumably accompanied by stage business: hell is when someone farts in a crowded phonebooth)

sound . . . vent healthy in the anus (referring to Gondomar's stinking fistula)

212 sunburnt dark-skinned (referring not just to a suntan, but to the belief that dark complexions were caused by living closer to the equatorial sun: Ethiopians were called 'sunburnt')

tansy-faced yellow to brownish-orange complexion (like varieties of tansy flower)

213 olive-coloured (Olives range in colour from green to brown to black; here punning on the name 'Olivares')

Ganymede In Greek mythology, a youngster and court cupbearer, sodomized by Zeus; hence, catamite, passive homosexual lover. (The relationship between Black King and Black Duke mirrors that rumoured between White King and White Duke.)

216 Maugre despite

217 womb (a) stomach (b) uterus (i.e., either the place that eats evil, or the one that gives birth to it)

220 peals traditional celebratory bell-ringing (which perhaps accompanies the exit)

Epilogue.3 House and cause dynasty and ideology (not always united)

4 most . . . draws attracts most of this audience (but assembly also suggests 'Parliament' and 'congregation')

5 envy's mark (Envy's traditional characteristics were pallor, leanness, hollow eyes, sidelong glances. But perhaps also 'the mark of Cain', again.)

6 night dark (referring to the Black House, the darkness of sin or hell, and the underground worm-world)

glow-worms shiny monsters (referring to the common Biblical images of 'worm' for death and the devil)

bag (where fishermen might keep worms for bait)

devoted (a) dedicated (b) destined

7 sit . . . corners (all possible for spectators in the Globe theatre)

9 bane poison, death, ruin (perhaps alluding to the massive destruction of Protestant territories in Germany, esp. the Palatinate)

10 hands (a cue for applause)

build . . . again beautifully rebuild again (recognizing that the game will keep being played)

A.1 cullis rich broth

cock-sparrows small birds (a regular part of the English diet), notorious for lechery, and eaten as aphrodisiacs

3 calvish (a) stupid (b) idolatrous, worshipping the Biblical golden calf (a Protestant charge against Catholics)

- And yet I ate but little butcher's meat
5 In the conception.
- B Apparently omitted in performance; at the beginning of the Black Knight's speech at 2.2.148.
- BLACK KNIGHT GONDOMAR [aside] A shrewd retort!
He's made our Bishop smell of burning too.
Would I stood farther off, were't no impeachment
To my honour or the game. Would they'd play faster!—
- C In place of 3.1.320.
- VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
How, marriage?
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
That contaminating act
Would have spoiled all your fortunes. A rape? God bless us!
VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN
Thou talk'st of marriage?
JESUITESS BLACK QUEEN'S PAWN
Yes, I saw the man.
VIRGIN WHITE QUEEN'S PAWN The man?
- D Apparently omitted in performance, perhaps because its original comic function had been superseded by addition of the Fat Bishop; in place of 3.1.345-6.
- Pray, follow me then, and I'll ease you instantly.
Exeunt
- [3.2]
Enter a Black Jesting Pawn [from the Black House]
BLACK JESTING PAWN
I would so fain take one of these White Pawns now.
I'd make him do all under-drudgery,
Feed him with asses' milk (crumbed with goats' cheese)
And all the whitemeats could be devised for him;
I'd make him my white jennet when I pranced
After the Black Knight's litter.
Enter a White Pawn [from the White House]
WHITE PAWN And you'd look then
Just like the devil, striding o'er a night-mare
Made of a miller's daughter.
[White Pawn takes Black Jesting Pawn]
BLACK JESTING PAWN A pox on you!
Were you so nigh? I'm taken like a blackbird
In the great snow, this White Pawn grinning over me.
WHITE PAWN
And now because I will not foul my clothes
Ever hereafter (for white quickly soils, you know)—
BLACK JESTING PAWN
Ay, prithee get thee gone, I shall smut thee.
WHITE PAWN
Nay, I'll put that to venture: now I have snapped thee
Thou shalt do all the dirty drudgery
That slavery was e'er put to.
BLACK JESTING PAWN I shall cozen you.
You may chance come and find your work undone
then,

- 5 conception imagining, composition (of the book)
- B.2 burning (a) burnt flesh, as in hellfire, or in heretics burned at the stake (b) rage
- 3 farther off i.e. not next to the Bishop, as the Knight is in the opening array of a chess game
- impeachment (a) damage (b) impediment
- 4 Would I wish faster (Like a chessmaster, he is bored by the slow play of amateur moves he can already anticipate.)
- D.o.1 Black Jesting Pawn (not precisely identified, but perhaps the Black King's Pawn, to be captured soon after White King's Pawn). Could be doubled with Black Knight's Pawn, Ignatius, or Error.
- 1 fain gladly take capture (a chess piece), seize sexually
- 2 under-drudgery (unique Middleton compound, 'under' suggesting both 'menial' and 'sexually subordinate')
- 3 asses' milk (normally used medicinally, not as nourishment)
asses (proverbially clumsy, stupid beast of burden)
milk (proverbially, 'as white as milk')

- crumbed with topped with crumbs of
- goats' cheese (typically white, unlike most cheese made from cows' milk; not a delicacy, but associated with poor, mountainous regions like Wales and Scotland)
- goats (proverbially lecherous; also, by allusion to Matthew 25:32-33, the damned, in contrast to the sheep who are saved)
- 4 whitemeats dairy products
- 5 jennet small Spanish horse—hence 'ridden' by his master (suggesting sexual mounting, but also perhaps the famous scene in Tamburlaine when the prisoner Bajazet is turned into a beast of burden)
- 6.1 White Pawn (not precisely identified; could be doubled with any characters except the two other pawns in this scene, Black Queen's Pawn, or White Queen's Pawn)
- 7 devil (traditionally black; see title-page of World Tossed at Tennis)
striding o'er straddling night-mare Bad dreams were thought to be caused by a female spirit or goblin (night-mare), which sat upon the dreamer's chest and produced a feeling

- of suffocation; here, punning on mare, 'female horse', which the male devil/pawn rides
- 8 Made of created by a spell which transformed miller (proverbially, covered with white flour)
- 8.1 White . . . Pawn (the first White capture of a black piece, in almost exactly the middle of the play, so far dominated by aggressive Black moves)
- 9 nigh near
- 9-10 blackbird . . . snow a blackbird frozen to death or immobilized, conspicuous and easily collected (by a man also presumably covered with snow)
- 10 grinning (a) grimacing, baring his fangs (b) smiling exaggeratedly, like an idiot
- 12 white quickly soils (why acting companies normally avoided white costumes—which made Game at Chess an unprecedented spectacle)
- 13 smut smudge, defile
- 14 put . . . venture risk that snapped snatched, bitten or seized quickly
- 16 cozen cheat

OCCASIONAL POEMS, 1619–25

Edited by Gary Taylor

THOUGH Oscar Wilde was famous for his wit, without historical testimony it would be almost impossible to prove that any particular bon mot was a genuine Oscarism. Because Middleton never published a collection of the shorter products of his ‘witty muse’, we will never know how many small poems he wrote. With longer works, we can confidently identify Middleton’s distinctive style, but as the size of the data sample shrinks the statistical reliability of such stylistic fingerprinting also diminishes. Many anonymous early modern poems might be Middleton’s, but his name did not adhere to them because the name would have been irrelevant to readers or dangerous for the author. It hardly seems a coincidence that no satirical political poems are attributed to Middleton (one of the great Renaissance satirists), despite the survival of hundreds of libellous verses written in his lifetime: if he had written such poems, he would have had every incentive to conceal his authorship. ‘The Picture Plainly Explained’ was printed as part of an edition of A Game at Chess that concealed the name not only of the author but also of the printer, engraver, and publisher. That anonymity itself announced something about the nature of the work.

Notably, for several of the poems explicitly attributed to Middleton in early documents, his authorship is part of the poem’s meaning. A playwright praises an actor, or another playwright; the imprisoned author of A Game at Chess petitions for his release; a gift identifies the giver. But other poems belong to what Marcy North calls the ‘Anonymous Renaissance’. Many of Middleton’s contemporaries made conscious use of the diverse possibilities created by the absence of a name. Middleton almost certainly wrote the epitaph on Sir George Bolles and the poem celebrating the opening of the Chapel of St James—he is historically linked to the occasion for both poems, and stylistically they resemble him more than any rival candidate—but the meaning of those two poems, for early readers, was not in any way affected by who wrote them. Attribution would not only have been irrelevant; it could have detracted from the seemingly impersonal authority of the text. Middleton, as the official Chronologer of London, was being paid to praise Bowles and Barker, and any acknowledgement of his authorship might have diminished each poem’s credibility.

Whether attributed or anonymous, all Middleton’s uncollected verses are public artifacts, not simulated autobiography. He wrote in many once-popular genres: epitaph, prison poem, verse caption to a painting or a printed image. The verses celebrating the christening of St James church might be included in Middleton’s Honourable En- tainments, though they are not attributed to a dramatic persona and deliberately make no gestures toward theatrical illusion. The commendatory poem was the most common genre of literary criticism before the Restoration (Chandler); at least 4,748 commendatory poems were printed in British books between 1478 and 1641 (Williams). Middleton’s praise of Webster’s Duchess of Malfi will stand comparison with any rival example, including Ben Jonson’s famous commendation of Shakespeare. ‘Every particular will bear a large paraphrase’, eyewitness John Holles said of Middleton’s A Game at Chess, and the same might be said of his occasional poems.

None of them are love poems, or lust poems. Middleton’s plays include many song lyrics, including the enormously popular ‘Hence, all you vain delights’ (Valour 3.3.36–54), with its speaker/singer’s evocative, paradoxical praise of the deliciousness of melancholy. But, like other seventeenth-century poets from Jonson to Dryden, Middleton abandoned the belated Petrarchanism which had dominated sixteenth-century English verse from Wyatt to Shakespeare; sonnets gave way to epigrams. But Jonson’s epigrams can still give the impression of being deeply personal poems, representing his reaction to the death of his son or an invitation to dinner. Even when it treats less intimate material, Jonson’s verse focuses our attention squarely on the poet himself, on Jonson rhetorically constructing his own cultural authority. The contrast with Middleton is evident in Jonson’s epigram to the great Elizabethan actor Edward Allen (usually spelled ‘Alleyn’):

If Rome so great, and in her wisest age,
Feared not to boast the glories of her stage—
As skillful Roscius and grave Aesop, men
Yet crowned with honours (as with riches, then),
Who had no less a trumpet of their name
Than Cicero, whose every breath was fame—
How can so great example die in me,
That, Allen, I should pause to publish thee?—
Who both their graces in thyself hast more Outstripped, than they did all that went before,
And present worth in all dost so contract,
As others speak, but only thou dost act.
Wear this renown. ’Tis just, that who did give
So many poets life, by one should live.

Jonson rhymes ‘thee’ with ‘me’, and the poem tells us more about its author than its subject. The comparison of Alleyn to Roscius and Aesop praises the actor, but it also displays the poet’s own learning, which was central to Jonson's self-made reputation. Roscius and Aesop give place to Cicero, with whom Jonson (in the next line) implicitly compares himself. Jonson praises an actor who surpasses the actors Cicero praised, thus implying that Jonson's judgement actually outstrips Cicero's. After the complex twelve-line-long first sentence, the simple imperative 'Wear this renown' assumes that 'this' little poem by Jonson itself constitutes and guarantees fame. At the pinnacle of the hierarchical final conceit, emphatically saved for last, stands the unique poet Jonson ('one') who gives life to the actor who gives life to 'many' unnamed other 'poets'. Jonson's binaries—Rome/England, actor/author, many/one—create a structure which defines and affirms Jonson's unparalleled, world-historically significant me me.

Middleton also uses 'me' as a rhyme word, and also defines himself as 'one' in the final line of a poem. But Middleton's authorial 'one', at the end of his plea 'To the King', is diminutive, not aggrandizing: 'but...one man'. Even 'man' is minuscule: this is not Pico della Mirandola's or Jacob Burckhardt's god-like Renaissance Man, but Middleton's self-deflating pun on 'man' as chess piece and personal servant. Middleton defines himself as just a single man (in a kingdom that contains perhaps two million of the King's male subjects), just a single chess piece (on a board containing thirty-two), and just a pawn, a servant to some other more important piece/person. Unlike Jonson's 'me', Middleton's 'me' is an explanatory afterthought: he does not assume that the King even knows who he is, but explicates 'one man' by appending 'that's me', and then his signature.

Jonson's poem on the actor Alleyn differs even more remarkably from Middleton's poem on the actor Burbage, where the first person pronoun does not appear at all, and the reader's eyes are focused wholly on Burbage. Middleton's poem is, typically, much smaller than Jonson's, just as Middleton's plays are shorter than Jonson's, as Middleton's body was less bulky than Jonson's. Middleton's tight style nevertheless packs as much punch in four lines as Jonson manages in fourteen. This may not at first be obvious, because Middleton's lines seem so characteristically, disarmingly simple.

Astronomers and star-gazers this year
Write but of four eclipses; five appear,
Death interposing Burbage—and their staying
Hath made a visible eclipse of playing.

Middleton does not begin with the greatness of Rome. He does not invoke millennia of praise. He doesn't say 'I'm like Cicero.' Instead, he begins with ephemera, implicitly compares himself to the nameless writers of almanacs, and limits himself to 'this year'. His subject is not eternity. His subject, he announces, is only his (our) own little moment. Jonson explicitly compares modern London to ancient Rome. Middleton also situates modern London in a larger cultural context, but his allusion is subtler. 'Astronomers and star-gazers' echoes Isaiah 47:13: 'Let now the astrologers, the star-gazers, the prognosticators, stand up, and save thee from these things that shall come upon thee.' That's the translation in the Geneva Bible (1560), the most popular personal Bible of the time; the King James translation (1611) is identical, except that it adds 'monthly' before 'prognosticators'. This verse, prescribed by the Book of Common Prayer, had been read to congregations every December 20 for sixty years, so it would have been familiar to many of Middleton's contemporaries. But Middleton's art, like Burbage's, was not exclusive or elitist. You can miss this allusion entirely and still make sense of the poem. Middleton's word astronomers may be a synonym for astrologers, but in any case the Greek word is more learned, and suggests a more educated activity, than the dismissive Anglo-Saxon 'star-gazers', which can refer to anyone who looks up at the sky, gaping in ignorance and wonder, in the way that groundlings at the Globe might have looked up at Burbage on the raised stage. Connoisseurs and amateurs alike, this year, mourn Burbage.

The clustered consonants (str, nd|st, rg, rs|th, s|y), the four stresses in the last five syllables, make this first line difficult to articulate. Part of the decorum of epitaphs, part of their function, is to slow us down, make us stop, think. The poem comes to a sharp stop twice in its second line: abruptly, 'five appear'. Astrologers, astronomers, and almanacs fascinate Middleton because they epitomize the overwhelming human desire to predict the future, an obsession writers and Calvinists share with farmers, businessmen, theatre owners and actors. Eclipses should be predictable; four of them have been predicted, to the day and hour. Then, unexpectedly, we face a fifth. Disturbingly, the universe refuses to be scheduled. And another unexpectedness attends this fifth eclipse. 'When beggars die,' Shakespeare tells us, 'there are no comets seen; the heavens themselves blaze forth the death of princes.' Queen Anna had died eleven days before Burbage, at Hampton Court, and her body was lying in state at Denmark House during the days when Burbage died and was buried. The royal expiration inspired poets like Patrick Hannay to declare that 'general darkness all the world o'erspreads'. We might therefore expect, any reader in March 1619 might expect, the third line to read, 'Death interposing Anna'. Middleton interposes Burbage where we would expect Anna, as an eclipse interposes one thing where we expect another. In context, Middleton's epitaph implicitly claims that the death of a mere actor was more important than the death of the Queen of England, Scotland, and Ireland.

'Five appear' announces a new eclipse, and the first word of the next line links that eclipse to 'Death'. Eclipses were traditionally regarded as omens, warnings, or signs of disaster. Middleton could have claimed that the prophecy written in the skies by those four eclipses of 1619 was being fulfilled by the death of Burbage (or Queen Anne, or both). But he does not claim that. Four eclipses are not enough; Middleton adds a fifth. Or rather, Death adds a fifth, 'interposing' that fifth eclipse, slipping it in between the other four. With great tact—which is to say, by sleight of hand introducing an outrageous idea in such a way that it seems natural—'Death interposing Burbage' transforms the actor's death into an eclipse, transforms Burbage himself into a heavenly body. The fifth eclipse at first seems to be, but then is not, the usual pathetic fallacy: unlike us, the universe is not convulsed by grief when someone we love dies. Middleton is not Shakespeare's Cleopatra, exclaiming that 'there should be now a huge eclipse Of sun and moon' as the macrocosm registers the death of microcosmic Mark Antony. The verb interpose—'to place between'—was often used in a technical sense, describing the movement of the moon into a position where it blocked the sun (or of the earth into a position between sun and moon). Since the eclipse has already been introduced, 'interposing Burbage' represents the actor as an astronomical object large enough to eclipse the sun or moon. Behind this metaphysical conceit lies a recurrent theme in classical mythology, echoed in many Renaissance texts: extraordinary individuals get transformed, at death, into stars. Burbage, though, is not just a star; Burbage is big enough to block the sun; Burbage is, we might say—thinking of the theatre where he had acted his greatest roles for two decades—"the Globe".

But the poem does not explicitly say any of that. We are saved from the absurdity of this image by the verb's more common, less technical sense: Death blocks Burbage, Death gets in his way. Death is an unexpected interruption. Death intercepts, obstructs Burbage, creating an eclipse by blocking the light that Burbage normally emanates. Depending on how we interpret the participle, Burbage is obstructing or obstructed. In either reading, the phrase puts Burbage in motion. If Burbage is 'placed between', then he is an actor, set in motion by someone else. Death, then, is the playwright, the writer of the final script that Burbage performs. If Burbage is 'interrupted', then Death's unscripted interposing denies the actor his last opportunity to 'enter, posing'.

But 'Death interposing Burbage' is itself only an interruption, a participial phrase between two simple sentences. The third line's first three words link personification to Latinate technical verb to unusual proper name; its last three words link the commonest of all conjunctions to a common pronoun and a common Anglo-Saxon verb. Two consecutive unstressed syllables ('-age, and') throw the weight of the line forward onto two consecutive stressed syllables ('their stay'), and the consonant conjunctions (nd|th . . . r|st) force us to slow down to articulate the spondee. Those two stressed syllables make, despite their simplicity, two complicated claims. Why 'their'? Why the plural instead of the singular? Epitaphs are usually all about singularity. And why 'stay'? Epitaphs are poems about people who have left us. What slows us down is not only the consonants and the stresses, but the unexpectedness of these words, these claims.

Whose stay? Death's and Burbage's. Death and Burbage, at opposite ends of the verb in the preceding phrase, are now coupled: no longer subject and object, active and passive, but united, as in an eclipse two formerly distinct objects become one. And what is this new odd couple doing? They stay. Or rather, they are staying. Middleton could easily have written 'stay', and rhymed it with 'play' in the last line, but he prefers the present participial noun, with its sense of renewed continuing activity: not a single stay, but a stretched-out staying.

The most famous epitaph on Burbage is the notorious, anonymous, snide quip, 'Exit Burbage'. Middleton's 'their staying' characterizes Burbage's death in exactly the opposite way. The sense is not, 'Burbage has left the stage' but rather, 'We are waiting for Burbage to enter, and he keeps not appearing, he keeps staying backstage.' The eclipse refuses to end. The Earl of Pembroke—the Lord Chamberlain, responsible for formal entertainments at court—wrote on 20 May (more than two months after Burbage's funeral) that he could not bear to attend a court performance of Pericles by the King's Men 'so soon after the loss of my old acquaintance Burbage'. Watching Pericles would have been painful because Pembroke would keep expecting to see Burbage enter, and Burbage would keep staying away. This is, I think, how many of us are affected by the death of someone we love. We cannot really imagine eternity; we cannot imagine that someone has exited, forever. Intellectually, we may know this; but cognition and emotion clash. What repeatedly pains us, after someone's death, is that we keep being startled by their failure to arrive. It is not that someone has gone away: the people we love leave our sight routinely, every day; the problem is that, this time, they have stopped returning. We keep expecting them to come around the corner or enter the room or step on stage, and they don't. It is as though Burbage, slower in his old age, has simply missed his cue, or been slow responding to his cue. Someone, backstage, has intercepted him.

But the poem continues, across the temporary 'staying' of the line-break. Middleton usually prefers the colloquial 'has', but the last line begins with the more formal, solemn, old-fashioned, Biblical 'hath'. Again, the cluster of consonants ('th|m') slows us down. 'Hath made' what? Made us cry, made us grieve, made us think about our own mortality? No, their staying makes another paradox: a 'visible eclipse'. The adjective visible enforces the implicit or submerged oxymoron in the earlier verb appear: in an eclipse what appears is the failure of light to appear, what's visible is the sudden invisibility of what we expect to see. Again, Middleton's language has a technical meaning: a visible eclipse is one visible at our latitude and longitude, but it is also an eclipse that is less than total, that leaves part of the disk of the sun or moon still visible. Having compared Burbage's death to an eclipse, Middleton now precisely qualifies that hyperbole: it is only an eclipse here, at the meridian of London, and even here it is not total.

And the last two words further qualify that image: it is only an eclipse 'of playing'. The fifth eclipse, announced earlier, is not an astronomical convulsion, but just a local interruption of theatrical activity. Out of (enforced) respect for the memory of Queen Anne, the theatres were closed until her funeral on 13 May. By instead attributing the all-too-visible eclipse of playing to Burbage's death, Middleton again implicitly claims that it was more important than the death of the Queen. Finally, the word 'playing' summons up all the more general senses of play, merriment, joy, spontaneity. It also announces an eclipse of 'feigning', pretending. The actor's death is not fiction, is not feigning, is not acting; this time, the death is real.

But it is also temporary. It is only an eclipse, a momentary interruption of light. It is only one eclipse out of five, one death among many deaths, and our grief for Burbage's death, our memory of his life, are as brief as an eclipse, or a temporary closure of the theatres, or an ephemeral almanac, thrown away at the end of its year, 'this year', the traditional period of formal rituals of mourning. Our grief is as brief as our own lives. Or perhaps it is death that is brief, only an eclipse, only a momentary blocking of the light, which will in due course return, in the promised resurrection of the dead. Middleton lets us choose how to interpret this eclipse.

With the exception of this 'elegant' epitaph, the tributes to Burbage after his death 'were notable for quantity rather than quality' (Edmond). Theatre historians often quote the others, because they tell us which roles Burbage played, or how he played them; we quote them as evidence, as archival records, not as poems. Middleton's four lines tell us nothing about Burbage's performances, but they are the most beautiful and moving tribute in English to any actor. There is no 'I' in this poem, but it takes three to eclipse: an observer, a light, and something that gets between the observer and the light. Middleton is quietly present among those implied observers, the communal 'we' of theatre people and theatre audiences, the community of mourners for any death, temporarily unable to see.

SEE ALSO

Textual introduction and apparatus: Companion, 992
 Authorship and date: 'Burbage', Companion, 404; 'Bolles', 416; 'St James', 427; 'Malfi', 438; 'To the King', 441; 'Hammond', 441; 'Picture', 442

Occasional Poems, 1619–25

On the death of that great master in his art and quality, painting and playing: Richard Burbage Burbage

Astronomers and star-gazers this year
 Write but of four eclipses; five appear,
 Death interposing Burbage—and their staying
 Hath made a visible eclipse of playing.

Burbage See Critical Introduction. Next to our edited text we reproduce the source: the only surviving copy, in a personal manuscript miscellany compiled about 1630 by Robert Bishop.

Title quality profession (especially used of acting) painting Burbage was a painter, but also an expert in face-painting, i.e. actor's make-up.

playing acting

Richard Burbage Burbage was buried on 16 March 1619 in the London parish of St Leonard Shoreditch; he died on a Saturday in Lent, 13 March.

- 1 Astronomers (not distinguished from what we now call 'astrologers')
- 2 Write (in the very popular annual almanacs: Thomas Bretnor's London Almanac, writing 'Of Eclipses of this year 1619', notes that 'Although we in England shall see no eclipse at all this year, yet will our neighbouring dwellers and lunar inhabitants behold the luminaries four times eclipsed', and then goes on to describe where and when the four eclipses will occur.)

- 3 interposing (a) intruding, placing between [the other eclipses] (b) intruding, placing between [the sun and the earth, or the sun and the moon] (c) interrupting
- 4 their Death's and Burbage's
- visible apparent, evident; but also in the technical sense 'partial, not creating total darkness'
- playing (a) acting, dancing, theatre (b) free movement, live mobility (c) amusement, merriment

Bolles

[On Sir George Bolles]

Honour, integrity, compassion:
 Those three filled up the lifetime of this man.
 Of honour: the grave praetorship he bare,
 Which he discharged with conscience, truth, and care.
 5 He possessed earth, as he might heaven possess:
 Wise to do right, but never to oppress.
 His charity was better felt than known,
 For when he gave there was no trumpet blown.
 What more can be comprised in one man's fame
 10 To crown a soul and leave a living name?
 All his just praise in her life may be read,
 The true wife of his worth as of his bed.

Honour, Integrity, Compassion,
 Those three fill'd up
 the life time of this man:
 Of Honour, the grave
 Praetorship he bare,
 Which he discharg'd with Conscience, Truth, and Care,
 He posses'd Earth,
 as he might Heaven possesse,
 Wife to doe right,
 but never to oppresse.

His Charity was better
 felt than knowne,
 For when he gave,
 there was no Trumpet blown.
 What more can be compriz'd
 in one mans fame,
 To crowne a soule,
 and leave a living name?
 All his just praise
 in her life may be read,
 The true Wife of his worth
 as of his bed.

Bolles Sir George Bolles (1538–1621) was Lord Mayor of London in 1617–18; Middleton wrote The Triumphs of Honour and Industry to celebrate his inauguration. He was buried in the parish church of St Swithin, with 'A very fair monument on the south side of the chancel, with this inscription' (Survey of London, 1633). The church was destroyed in the Great Fire of London (1666).

The source is a revised and expanded edition of John Stow's Survey of London, edited by Anthony Munday and others, published in 1633. Each verse line is divided into two type lines, because the full line would not fit in the narrow column of the double-column page.

- 1 compassion (four syllables: Middleton often treated '-ion' as two syllables, particularly at the end of a verse line)
 2 filled up (perhaps punning on his name, which could be pronounced 'bowls') man (rhyming with 'compassion'—a typical Middleton rhyme)
 3 praetorship i.e. office of Lord Mayor (associating the government of London with that of ancient Rome) bare bore, carried the burden of 5 possessed earth (a) owned land (b) inhabited a body as (a) in the same way that (b) in a way that would make it likely that 7–8 His...blown i.e. his acts of charity

were anonymous, were not publicly trumpeted or bragged about (playing on the phrase 'blow your own trumpet', brag about yourself)

10 living name ever-living, surviving reputation

12 true (a) genuine, real (b) sexually faithful, chaste wife The funeral monument 'was erected at the sole cost and charges of Joan, Lady Bolles, in memory of her late dear and worthy husband... which Lady Joan was the eldest daughter of that worthy and famous deceased Knight, Sir John Hart, sometimes likewise Lord Mayor of the said City of London' (Survey of London).

As David could
 his eyes no rest afford, Till he had found
 a place out to the Lord,
 To build an Altar:
 So this man of worth,
 The mirror which these later dayes brings forth, Barkham the worthie,
 whose immortall name,
 Marble's too weake to hold,
 for this workes fame.
 He never ceast
 in industrie and care,
 From ruines to redeeme this House of Praier; Following in this
 the holy Patriarks waies, That ready were
 him Altars still to raise,
 where they receiv'd a blessing:
 So this Lord,
 Scarce warme in Honours seat,
 did first accord
 To this most pious worke,
 in which is showne,
 Gods blessing, and his thanks
 met both in one.
 The charge
 the honourable Citie beares, whose bounty
 in ful Noblenesse appears To acts of best condition,
 in such wise,

[The Temple of St James]

St James

[1]

As David could his eyes no rest afford
 Till he had found a place out to the Lord
 To build an altar, so this man of worth,
 The mirror which these later days bring forth,
 Barkham the worthy, whose immortal name
 Marble's too weak to hold, for this work's fame. 5
 He never ceased in industry and care
 From ruins to redeem this house of prayer,
 Following in this the holy patriarchs' ways,
 That ready were Him altars still to raise 10
 Where they received a blessing; so this lord,
 Scarce warm in honour's seat, did first accord
 To this most pious work, in which is shown God's blessing and his thanks met both in one.
 The charge the honourable City bears, 15
 Whose bounty in full nobleness appears
 To acts of best condition, in such wise

St James These verses were written to celebrate the consecration of the 'very beautiful and comely parish church' of St James, in Aldgate Ward just inside London's old north-east wall, on 2 January 1623; the City of London had paid for the church's restoration, and the Mayor, both Sheriffs, and sixteen aldermen were present. The church was destroyed in the Great Fire of London, rebuilt, and then completely demolished in 1874.

The source is the same edition of Survey of London that contains 'Bolles'.

1 'On a fair table [i.e., tablet] hanging in the chancel are these verses depicted' (Survey of London, 1633)

1-3 As David... altar 2 Samuel 24:18-25, 1 Chronicles 21:18-29. (This is the beginning of the construction of the Temple in Jerusalem.)

4 mirror exemplary ideal later days (Seventeenth-century Christians believed that they lived in the world's old age.)
bring forth (a) give birth to (b) bring to public attention

5 Barkham Edward Barkham, Lord Mayor of London 1621-22; Middleton celebrated his inauguration in The Sun in Aries

8 house of prayer (a phrase that occurs seven times in the King James Bible)

9 patriarchs Noah, Abraham, Jacob, Moses, and Joshua

12 Scarce... seat i.e., immediately after becoming Lord Mayor accord agree

14 his Barkham's
 15 charge expense

That all things, bettering by their ruin, rise.
 Two noble faithful supervisors then 20 (Amongst a Senate of religious men)
 Selected were, to whom the care they gave:
 Generous Hamersley, and Campbell the grave,
 Each being a masterpiece of zeal and care
 Towards God's own temple, fit for truth's affair.
 25 Now at the blessed foundress I arrive,
 Matilda, whom Henry the First did wive.
 The christendom she gave it held the same
 Till James our sovereign gave it his own name.
 And since I touch antiquity so near,
 30 Observe what notes remarkable appear:
 An alderman of London was at first
 Prime prior of this church; falling to worst,
 It is now raised by encouragement and care
 Of a Lord Mayor of London, which is rare

That all things, bettering
 by their ruine, rise.
 Two noble faithfull
 Supervisors then,
 Amongst a Senate
 of religious men, Selected were,
 to whom the care they gave,
 Generous Hamersley,
 and Cambell the grave,
 Each being a master-piece of zeale and care
 Towards Gods owne Temple, fit for truths affaيرة.
 Now at the blessed Foundresse
 I arrive,

Matilda, whom
 Henry the first did wive,
 The Christendome she gave it held the same,
 Till James our Soveraigne
 gave it his owne name.
 And since I touch
 Antiquity so neere, Observe what notes
 remarkable appeare:
 An Alderman of London was at first
 Prime Prior of this Church.
 Falling to worst,
 It is now rais'd
 by encouragement and care
 Of a Lord Maior of London,
 which is rare,

- 18 bettering ... ruin improving as a result of their deterioration (paradox): the new church is not only restored, but converted from Catholic to Protestant worship
bettering (perhaps pronounced as two syllables, 'bett'ring')
 20 Senate (comparing the Aldermen of London to the Senators of ancient Rome)
 22 Hamersley ... Campbell Hugh Hamersley and James Campbell, Aldermen (named

- in the dedication to Entertainments, 12–13)
 24 affair business (since both were businessmen)
 26 Matilda Matilda 'the good Queen' (1080–1118), famous for her piety and her patronage of religious foundations, first wife of Henry I (1069–1135), youngest son of William the Conqueror; she founded the Priory in 1108.

- 27 christendom christening, giving of a Christian name held remained
 31–2 alderman ... prior 'Norman, the first prior, was made an alderman of London, and rode with them on solemn days, but in an ecclesiastical habit' (marginal note, Survey of London). Norman was 'the first canon regular in all England' (Survey, p. 145).

*And worth observing.
 Then, as I began,
 I end best with
 the honour of the man.
 This Cities first Lord Maior lies buried here,
 Fitz-Alwine,
 of the Drapers Company,
 And the Lord Maior,
 whose fame now shines so cleere, Barkham,
 is of the same Society.*

And worth observing. Then, as I began,
 I end best with the honour of the man.
 This city's first Lord Mayor lies buried here,
 Fitz Ailwin, of the Drapers' Company,
 And the Lord Mayor, whose fame now shines so clear,
 Barkham, is of the same society.

35 40

*The rising here
 of the cleere Gospels Sunne,
 Is through the Senases
 free donation.
 The Globe of that bright Sunne,
 the God of might,
 Christ Iesus is the rising and the light.
 The heat the blessed Spirit of Truth and Right;
 And as these three,
 the Globe, the light, the heat,
 Are all one Sunne,
 so Three One God compleat:
 Thrice Allelujah
 speakes about the rayes,
 That Three in One
 may onely have the praise.*

[II]

The rising here of the clear Gospel's sun
 Is through the Senate's free donation.
 The globe of that bright sun, the God of might;
 Christ Jesus is the rising and the light;
 The heat, the blessed Spirit of truth and right.
 And as these three (the globe, the light, the heat)
 Are all one sun, so three one God complete.
 Thrice 'Alleluia' speaks about the rays
 That three in one may only have the praise.

5

38 Fitz Ailwin Henry fitz Ailwin (d. 1212), who held a lifetime appointment as Mayor, traditionally said to have begun in 1189

40 society association, guild

II 'there is a fair monument in the east end of the chancel, made in resemblance of a golden sun, with beams and rays very ingeniously formed, characterizing these verses in and among them' (Survey of London). These verses are separated from the preceding forty. The nine lines—

three times three—formally mirror their subject (the Trinity).

2 free donation (a phrase usually referring to the Emperor Constantine's act, making Christianity the state religion of Rome; here, 'Senate' contrasts with Emperor, and the English church 'here' with the Roman one)

3 God of might God the Father (a phrase used in John Hopkin's The Whole Book of Psalms (1562) and in Matthew Parker's translation of The Whole Psalter (1567?), Psalm 2, 24, 77, 95, 146, and often thereafter)

5 Spirit Holy Spirit

9 three in one the Holy Trinity, the Christian notion of one God in three aspects (Father, Son, Holy Spirit), alluding to the church's medieval name (the Priory of the Holy Trinity, called Christchurch) and to its temporary name during the rebuilding ('Trinity Christ's Church')

[III]

This sacred structure, which this Senate fames,
Our King hath styled 'The Temple of St James'.

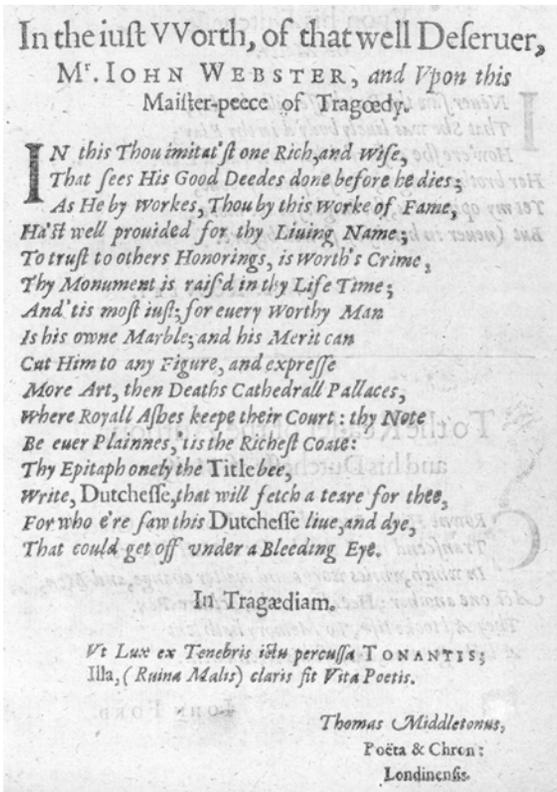

Malfi

*In the just worth of that well-deserver, Master John Webster, and upon this masterpiece of tragedy
[The Duchess of Malfi]*

In this thou imitat'st one rich and wise,
That sees his good deeds done before he dies;
As he by works, thou by this work of fame
Hast well provided for thy living name.
5 To trust to others' honorings is worth's crime;
Thy monument is raised in thy lifetime.
And 'tis most just, for every worthy man
Is his own marble, and his merit can Cut him to any figure and express
10 More art than death's cathedral palaces,
Where royal ashes keep their court. Thy note
Be ever plainness; 'tis the richest coat.
Thy epitaph only the title be:
Write 'Duchess', that will fetch a tear for thee—
15 For who e'er saw this duchess live and die,
That could get off under a bleeding eye?

In Tragœdiam

Ut lux ex tenebris ictu percussa Tonantis, Illa, ruina malis, claris fit vita poetis.

- III This couplet is separated from the preceding verses by prose, which identifies the Mayor and Aldermen who constitute 'this Senate'.
- 1 which...fames (a) which they make famous (b) which makes them famous
- 2 Our King James I, who personally authorized the building of the new church, in response to a petition from George Abbot, Archbishop of Canterbury styled named, given the title
- Malfi The poem appears in the first edition (1623) of Webster's play, after Webster's dedication and before shorter commendatory poems by William Rowley and John Ford (with whom Middleton collaborated that year on Gypsy). The play was printed by Nicholas Okes, who also printed most of Middleton's pageants and the first edition of A Game at Chess. In this

- and other copies of the printed quarto, ink from the other side of the page shows through. Italic type is used for the Dedication and for all the commendatory poems.
- 1 this (a) writing this play (b) publishing this play
- 4 living name ever-living reputation
- 6 Thy monument...lifetime (comparing Webster to people who build their own tombs before they die)
- 8 marble monument, statue
- 9 Cut sculpt
- 10-11 cathedral...court (probably referring to Westminster Abbey, where King James in 1612 had buried his son Prince Henry and re-interred his mother Mary, Queen of Scots; most recently, Queen Anne was buried there in 1619)
- 16 get off under escape, get away with a

- payment less than
- bleeding eye (imagining tears as drops of blood: compare Game 1.1.6, 'My soul bleeds at mine eyes')
- 17-19 In...poetis 'To Tragedy: | As light from darkness springs at the Thunderer's stroke, | So is life to the famous poet, ruin to the bad.' Tragedy is gendered female in Latin.
- 18 lux ex tenebris (later motto of the Freemasons) Tonantis (from Tonans, Thunderer, a common classical and neo-Latin epithet for the supreme deity: 'Jupiter the Thunderer' occurs at Duchess of Malfi 2.2.19)
- 19 malis (a) evildoers (b) bad poets
claris both 'famous' and 'clear' (glancing back toward the praise of 'plainness')

To the King

King

A harmless game, raised merely for delight,
Was lately played by the Black House and White.
The White side won, but now the Black House brag
They changed the game and put me in the bag—

5

And that which makes malicious joy more sweet,
I lie now under hatches in the Fleet.
Use but your royal hand, my hopes are free;
'Tis but removing of one man—that's me,

Tho. Middleton

King Several texts of the poem identify the King as James I, who died on 27 March 1625. A warrant for Middleton's arrest was issued on 30 August 1624.

These couplets belong to a long tradition of poems written in prison. Ovid's Tristia, written during his exile, were an important classical antecedent; particularly relevant to Middleton's poem here was Ovid's Book II, which contains poems addressed to the Emperor Augustus (who had exiled Ovid, as King James had imprisoned Middleton). The most famous early specimens of the genre in Britain were written in the fifteenth century by Charles D'Orleans and James I of Scotland. The genre has continued to be popular in modern times (Daniel Berrigan, Dietrich Bonhoeffer, Joseph Brodsky, Dennis Brutus, Nazim Hikmet, Etheridge Knight, Ho Chi Minh, Ezra Pound, Bobby Sands, and Jimmy Santiago Baca standing out among the many twentieth-century examples).

We reproduce two of the five early copies of the poem, one (top) in a miscellany compiled by Sir Thomas Dawes c.1624–8, the other (bottom) in a miscellany compiled by Sir Thomas Hulse c.1624–40s.

- 1 game (a) contest (b) quarry (c) A Game at Chess, performed from 5–14 August 1624. We do not know when Middleton was found, or how long he was imprisoned; this poem might have been written before the dedicatory poem to Hammond.
- raised 'mounted' (used of theatrical performances), but also 'startled, roused from its hiding place' or 'bred' (a hunting term, used of prey). James I's favourite hobby was hunting.
- merely only, entirely
- 2 played (a) acted (b) hunted
- 3–4 Black House . . . bag The play was closed and Middleton arrested as a result of complaints by the Spanish ambassador.
- 4 changed the game (a) reversed the outcome of the game (b) changed the kind of game being played (c) substituted a different quarry

put . . . in the bag bagged (like lost chess pieces, or dead game)

me (in contrast to the Black pieces spectacularly bagged in Middleton's play)

- 6 under hatches below deck (i.e. in the lower wards or dungeons), like the Black characters in the play, peering out the trapdoor from under the stage
- the Fleet a London prison (but punning on the naval sense)

- 7 but only

hand power (but also literally 'handwriting', signing the papers for Middleton's release, and the hand that moves a chess piece)

my hopes are free (in anticipation, or as a consequence, of the King's pardon: even when his body is imprisoned, his hopes are at liberty)

- 8 removing taking out (of prison, of the bag); but also re-moving, moving again
- man (a) person (b) chess piece (c) servant

Occasional Poems

Hammond

To the worthily accomplished
Master William Hammond

This—which nor stage nor stationer's stall can show;
The common eye may wish for, but ne'er know—
Comes in its best love with the New Year forth
As a fit present to the hand of worth.

Hammond Probably addressed to the wealthy William Hammond who lived in the London parish of Allhallows on the Wall, where he was buried on 10 January 1635; he was a friend of Richard Fishborne, to whom Middleton dedicated the 1620 edition of Two Gates.

The unique source is depicted, part of a manuscript of A Game at Chess prepared in late 1624 by the professional scribe Ralph Crane. Crane occasionally worked for the King's Men, and also prepared two other surviving manuscripts of A Game at Chess (one of them the unique copy of the Early form), the only surviving manuscripts of The Witch and 'An Invention', and the manuscripts from which Middleton's adaptation of Measure for Measure and Webster's Duchess of Malfi were printed in 1623. He worked closely with Middleton in the 1620s.

This is the only page in Middleton's handwriting, and the deliberate waste of space (a whole page for a four-line poem) announces the deluxe nature of the gift: given the high cost of paper, the amount of blank space on this page represents 'conspicuous consumption'. What seems to have been the original binding was also pointedly expensive: parchment with gilt stamps and holes for tie-strings or ribbons.

1 This A Game at Chess: Middleton's gift to Hammond was this manuscript copy of the play.

nor stage . . . stall (Further performances of the play had been banned, and it did not appear in print until May 1625.)
stationer's bookseller's

3-4 New Year . . . present (It was common to give gifts on New Year's Day, rather than Christmas.)

Picture The most famous example of this genre—a poem commenting on an illustrated title-page or frontispiece—is Ben Jonson's poem on the engraved portrait of Shakespeare in his Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies (1623). But there were many other poems of this kind written in the period, including Jonson's 'The Mind of the Frontispiece to a Book', Richard Crashaw's 'On the Frontispiece of Isaacson's Chronology Explained', George Wither's 'The Meaning of the Frontispiece' and 'The Meaning of the Title-page', and Michael Drayton's 'Upon the Frontispiece' to Poly-Olbion. Immediately relevant political parallels for the genre can be found in Thomas Scott's Vox Dei (1623) and Vox Regis (1624). More generally, the genre of caption poem is connected to the Renaissance fondness for emblem books, anthologies of symbolic images with an explanatory poem attached to each; A Game at Chess 2.2.248 alludes to one of the most notorious anthologies of picture poems—'Aretine's pictures', Pietro Aretino's sixteenth-century collection of poems about a series of pornographic woodcuts.

The source is a copy of the illicit edition of A Game at Chess, printed in 1625 by Nicholas Okes, who also printed

The Picture plainly explained, after the manner of the chess play

Picture

A game at chess is here displayed
Between the Black and White House made,
Wherein crown-thirsting policy
For the Black House (by fallacy)
To the White Knight check often gives,
And to some straits him thereby drives.
The Fat Black Bishop helps also
With faithless heart to give the blow.
Yet (maugre all their craft) at length
The White Knight, with wit-wondrous strength
And circumspective prudency,
Gives checkmate by discovery
To the Black Knight; and so at last,
The game thus won, the Black House—cast
Into the bag, and therein shut—
Find all their plumes and coxcombs cut.
Plain-dealing thus by wisdom's guide
Defeats the cheats of craft and pride.

5

10

15

Middleton's poem on The Duchess of Malfi. The poem was placed (above the Prologue) on a page facing the illustrated title-page (reproduced in 'Lives and Afterlives', p. 27).

3 crown-thirsting hungry for (a) other king's crowns, kingdoms (b) coin, money

4 policy machiavellian political scheming

4 fallacy (a) deceit, deception (b) error

5 White Knight Check is given to the King, not the Knight, and 'Knight' might be an error. But Middleton imagines his characters as both pieces and players, and in the play the chief direct target of the Black House is the White Knight (Prince Charles, prominently depicted on the engraved title-page, who by the time the picture and poem were printed had become King Charles).

6 straits difficulties (but perhaps punning on the 'narrow seas' which Prince Charles crossed and re-crossed in his 1623 visit to Spain, represented in Acts 4 and 5 of the play)

7 Fat Black Bishop Marc'Antonio di Dominis, prominently depicted on the title-page; the play's Fat Bishop begins on the White side but later switches to Black.

9 maugre despite

9 craft craftiness, cunning

10 wit-wondrous amazingly clever

11 circumspective cautious, looking in all directions (as a good chess player should do): apparently a Middleton coinage

12 prudency prudence, wisdom, foresight

13 Black Knight See l. 5. The chief Black player is Count Gondomar, prominently depicted on the title-page: Charles's trip to Madrid undid all the diplomatic schemes of the Spanish ambassador, and the poem portrays the play as a chess game played by Charles against Gondomar.

15 bag sack for holding discarded chess pieces, spectacularly represented at the end of the play, and visible in the background of the engraving

16 plumes pretentious ornament suggesting high rank, military arrogance, or the latest fashions

16 coxcombs caps worn by fools, hence 'fools' (but suggesting the literal sense of a rooster's crest)

16 cut 'cut down to size' (but ironic, given that the Black House is responsible for castrating a White character)

18 pride arrogance (often attributed to the Spanish; Spanish chess players dominated the game, and Spanish power still dominated Europe and much of the globe)

LOST PAGEANT FOR CHARLES I: A BRIEF ACCOUNT

Gary Taylor

ON 27 March 1625, James I died. The next month the Aldermen of the City of London began making plans so 'that the citizens of this City may show and perform their loyalties and bounden duties towards his most excellent Majesty at his passage through the same in preparing of pageants and other shows and things necessary toward the solemnization of that his royal coronation in as stately and sumptuous manner as hath been heretofore performed by this City unto any his noble progenitors.' Soon after the Chamberlain was authorized to make payments to the workmen employed for the 'intended shows'. One of those workmen was Middleton, although he was not named until later. Indeed, Middleton is the only writer ever named in connection with these pageants, intended to equal The Whole Royal and Magnificent Entertainment, which had officially welcomed James I into London.

The London authorities were advised, by the court, 'to prepare and erect, in several places within the city, sundry pageants for the fuller and more significant expression of your joys upon his Majesty's and his royal consort's intended entrance through your said city'. That entrance could never have been celebrated before the state funeral on May 7. But the reign of the second Stuart king, like the reign of the first, began with a devastating outbreak of plague. Plague deaths had reached thirty by the week ending 5 May, and forty-five by the week ending 12 May (Bentley). Deaths did not abate till November.

Nevertheless, preparations for the pageants did not immediately stop. On April 22, the Venetian ambassador reported 'The plague grows worse in the city. All the best inhabitants are leaving it'; nevertheless, 'The coronation will take place,' including 'the festivities, illuminations and the dispensation of wine, beer and bread.' On May 6, Londoner John Chamberlain wrote, 'Here is great preparation for shows and pageants.' The same day the Cambridge scholar Joseph Mead, in a letter written from London, reported that 'The coronation is put off till September.' Eight days later, still in London, Mead relayed rumours circulating about the postponement: 'Why the coronation is deferred so long we know not, but some imagine some mystery in it, besides the present businesses and the danger of infection.' The present businesses included Charles I's marriage to the French princess Henrietta Maria, performed by proxy in Paris on May 1 (London dating), and preparations for the new Queen's imminent arrival in England. But on 21 May Mead wrote that 'The pageants howsoever go forward at London', despite seventy-one plague deaths that week. Apparently, Middleton and others were still working on the pageants;

the projected delay until September may simply have given them time to prepare a more magnificent royal entry. The Venetian ambassador reported, 'Everything is prepared for the entry into this city, although they will delay the time in order to perfect the apparatus they are making, which will be very costly, both publicly and privately.' He also had an explanation for the delay: 'The coronation has apparently been deferred to September for various reasons, such as the plague and the expense, but perhaps even more the claim of Scotland to come first in order and not agreeing to the union of the two kingdoms.' By June 27, he had heard that 'the public celebrations' were 'postponed until the time of the coronation' (September no longer being specified), and that 'the Scots are dissatisfied since the death of the late king, for they have no hope of the chief influence, and absolutely require his Majesty's coronation in Scotland'. (The King's royal entry into Edinburgh was in fact delayed until 1633.)

I have found no further references to the pageants until December, which is not surprising given the severity of the plague in London during the intervening months. On 10 September, Mead quoted a letter sent to him from a doctor in London: 'The want and misery is the greatest here that ever any man living knew; no trading at all, the rich all gone; housekeepers and apprentices of manual trades begging in the streets, and that in such lamentable manner as will make the strongest heart to yearn.' The annual Lord Mayor's show, which should have taken place on October 29, was cancelled.

The London theatres re-opened the last week of November or the first week of December. City authorities were still worried about the plague for several weeks, but by 12 December Mead had heard that plans were still in place for the King and Queen to arrive at the Tower of London at the end of the month, and then 'the first of February to ride through London; the second, to be crowned'. On 26 December 1625 the Earl of Arundel and Surrey, acting in his capacity as Earl Marshal, informed the Lord Mayor and Council that 'his Majesty is resolved to have his royal coronation solemnized on Candlemas Day next [February 2], and therefore intendeth to make his solemn entry from the Tower of London unto Westminster on the day before, being the first of February'; he expected that the Mayor and Council would resolve 'that such preparations of triumph as you have thought convenient for the honouring of his Passage through London' should be in 'absolute readiness', and added 'I know that your Lordship will have care that all diligence shall be used for the dignity and honour of the same, in regard of the great concourse of strangers [i.e., foreigners] that will be present' that will be present' for the occasion. London could expect a spectacular royal pageant to attract many visitors from outside the city—with a resulting economic windfall for inns, taverns, and retail shopkeepers.

Responding to the renewed royal command, in January 1626 the Common Council set up a committee 'for the preparing, appointing, and ordering of such shows, pageants, and triumphs as against his Majesty's said passage through this city should be thought fit'. This group was to meet with a similar group of Aldermen and to 'take care also for the disbursing of such moneys and charges...touching the preparing, ordering, and fitting of the said triumphs and shows...and likewise to consider what course and means they conceive most fittest to be taken for the levying and raising of moneys already disbursed or to be disbursed in and about the same'.

As the formation of this new committee suggests, a lot had changed in the intervening months. The City of London was governed by a committee of twenty-six aldermen, who served for life; in the nine months between early April and the end of December, eighteen new Aldermen took the places of predecessors who had died (Beaven, Pearl). Three more were elected in January, and another five by early June. This unusual instability in the City government meant that the plans approved by one group of aldermen were eventually judged by a very different group (including a new Mayor).

Middleton might have had to revise some of the material he had written the previous spring, in order to satisfy the new aldermen and to take account of intervening events. The word 'triumphs', used here and in other documents, had become bitterly ironic: purpose-built triumphal arches, harking back to the Roman ritual for celebrating military victories, could certainly have become embarrassing after the huge, useless expedition against Cadiz returned in December. Moreover, the long delay, the economic and personal disruption caused by the plague, and the London winter cannot have been good for the arches that had been partially or wholly erected the previous spring. At some point in January 1626 the Court of Aldermen received 'information' from 'the Master and Wardens of the Company of Painter-stainers of London,' reporting 'abuses and bad workmanship in and about the contriving and painting of the pageants'. The Aldermen appointed men 'to view the pageants, also the Cross in Cheap, and the work done in the Exchange, and sufficiently to inform themselves of the abuses any way committed in and about the workmanship thereof'. These problems obviously involved construction and decoration, which were not Middleton's personal responsibility. But the records do tell us that, in addition to the pageants, Middleton had planned events at Cheapside and the Royal Exchange.

On January 12, the Venetian ambassador reported that, 'On account of the mourning, the plague and present expenses, they will not prepare all the usual splendour. However the public and private expenses will be very heavy.' In London the next day, Mead had heard 'It's said the King and Queen's riding through London is put off till May,' but that the coronation would be performed 'in a private manner to save the charge of £60,000 in scarlet, which the King should otherwise have been at.' The King's financial difficulties were also emphasized by the Venetian ambassador, in a dispatch filed the same day: 'the entry is postponed until May to allow time for the display, and perhaps to prevent that from being too great, the expense being lessened by having the coronation only'. Chamberlain had heard a different explanation: 'the solemn entry... is put off till May, when the King means to go into Scotland to be crowned'. By 21 January a London friend had told Mead that the pageants were not the only thing being postponed: 'We hear neither of the Parliament nor coronation to be deferred, but only the crowning of the Queen and solemnity of riding through London to be put off.' The postponement of the Queen's coronation resulted from the Catholic Henrietta Maria's refusal to be crowned by a Protestant prelate. Six days later, Mead advised a friend in the country, 'The sight of the coronation will not be worthy of your journey to London, for the King rides not in state through the city until May.' On 2 February, Charles I detoured around the streets of London, going by water from the Tower to Westminster, and he went without his wife, Queen Henrietta having refused even to attend the ceremony. A new Parliamentary session began on February 6.

Although the public pageants were still being postponed, the royal court found time and money for private theatricals. The first court masque of the new reign, Seigneur de Racan's Artenice, took place on 21 February at Somerset House on a stage specially constructed by Inigo Jones, with a proscenium arch, perspective scenery, and changing scenes after the French fashion. Queen Henrietta Maria, who would not participate in the coronation, not only danced but also acted in the masque, with various ladies playing male roles. 'The performance was conducted as privately as possible', the Florentine ambassador reported; but although the audience was limited to those with special invitations, that did not stop rumours from circulating, or prevent English disapproval of the Queen (behaving like a common actor), or her transvestite female companions (playing with gender).

This first Caroline masque created, for its tiny circle of chosen actors and spectators, what Stephen Orgel calls 'the illusion of power'. By contrast, the official entry into London would have been a massive public display, celebration, and confirmation of royal power. On 25 May 1626, the Mayor of London received another letter from court—but not from the Earl of Arundel, who had been arrested on 5 March; a House of Lords petition for Arundel's release had been rejected by the King the previous week. The King's new messenger was William Herbert, Earl of Pembroke and Lord Chamberlain, who on May 25 directed the Lord Mayor 'to remove the said pageants which, besides the particular charge they cause in the city, do choke and hinder the passages of such as in coaches, or with their carriages, have occasion to pass up and down'. The pageants were to be torn down because they were obstructing traffic flow for London's wealthiest inhabitants. On May 26, the day after Pembroke's letter, the House of Lords voted not to consider any other business until Arundel was released. On 6 June, the London Aldermen ruled that 'Mr Christmas and Mr Middleton referring themselves to this Court, no further moneys shall be paid unto either of them, but that Mr Christmas shall forthwith cause the said pageants to be taken down, and to have the same for his full satisfaction.' Christmas was allowed to sell off the building materials, by way of reimbursement; Middleton got nothing, although 'no further moneys' indicates that he had been paid earlier, presumably for writing the speeches that should have been delivered, and perhaps for inventing the symbolism of the pageants themselves.

Charles I dissolved Parliament on June 15. To raise the money he could not get from Parliament, he asked a convocation of three hundred of London's wealthiest citizens to contribute £100,000; they refused. But the Court of Aldermen, so tight-fisted with Middleton, immediately gave the King £20,000. By 8 July, Mead had heard from 'some from London' that 'The money which the Aldermen gave the King, they presented neither in the name of a loan nor of their own proper gift, but as that which was intended for a present to his Majesty if he had rode through the city.' This might seem the end of the story, but in fact the cost of the aborted pageants haunted the London government for years. In September 1627—two months after Middleton's death—the Council established a committee to 'take consideration of such moneys as have been disbursed and paid out of the Chamber as well for and touching the making of the pageants and other solemnities and shows, and work for the beautifying of this city against the late intended time of his Majesty's passage through the same'. The investigation revealed that £4,300 had been spent (more than three times the cost of Middleton's Triumphs of Truth). That money had come directly from City funds, without any corresponding revenues to balance the books; the committee recommended levying this sum against the companies. But London citizens were increasingly reluctant to pay for the aldermen's generosity to the crown. As late as 26 August 1630, more than £973 remained to be raised (Withington), for pageants not performed in 1626.

The royal entry is not the only entertainment Middleton wrote for the city of London that is now lost: on 2 September 1623 he was paid twenty marks 'for and towards the charges of the service, lately performed by him at the shooting at Bunhill before the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, and for his service to be performed at the Conduit heads'. But those entertainments, and others, were at least performed, if not published. The text of the much more elaborate royal entry pageant—which would have eaten up more of his time, energy, and anxiety between April 1625 and May 1626—was never even heard.

Middleton's frustration must have been shared by many others. 'Owing to the scarcity of money,' the Venetian ambassador had reported on 26 May 1626, 'the King has given up his procession through London which was arranged for his coronation. Accordingly five most superb arches in the streets, two erected by the citizens and three by divers other nations, at an expense of many thousands of ducats, will prove useless and they have already begun to dismantle them amid the murmurs of the people and the disgust of those who spent the money.' Anthony Weldon also noted that 'some have taken as an ill omen' the fact that Charles I did not ride through the city in state, 'although the same triumphs were provided for him, as sumptuous as for any others'. An anonymous poem lamenting the cancellation of the 1625 Lord Mayor's show suggests what many ordinary people, in and out of London, must have felt about cancellation of the repeatedly promised and postponed entry pageant:

For lo the sport of that great day,
In which the Mayor hath leave to play,
and with him all the town;
His flag and drum and fife released,
And he forbid to go a feasting in his scarlet gown;
No fife must on the Thames be seen . . .

The pageants, and the painted cost
Bestowed on them, are all quite lost . . .

And 'mongst themselves they much complain
That this Lord Mayor, in first of reign, should do them so much wrong
As to suppress by message sad
The feast for which they all have had their marchpane dream so long.

Middleton's most elaborate pageant fell victim to problems that would continue to beset Charles I: lack of money, military failure, discontent in Scotland, clashes with Parliament, and the influence of his French Catholic wife. But the repeated postponement and then cancellation of the pageant were also, in themselves, a public relations disaster. On 13 May 1626, Mead reported that the King had been overheard saying, in private, 'I have . . . lost the love of my subjects.' He may finally have cancelled the pageant because he feared that the crowds would be less jubilant, in 1626, than they would have been the year before—or than they had been when he returned from Spain in October 1623. A riot at the Fortune Theatre on May 15, and a threatened riot at the Globe later that week, could not have increased his confidence in the stability of his people. Whatever the motives for his final decision, it can only have further disappointed the hopes of many of his subjects, Middleton among them.

SEE ALSO

- Lost Plays: A Brief Account: this volume, 328
Lost Political Prose, 1620–7: A Brief Account: this volume, 1907
General introduction to the civic entertainments: this volume, 968
Other Middleton-Christmas works: Antiquity, 1397; Aries, 1586;
Virtue, 1714; Integrity, 1766; Prosperity, 1901
List of works cited: Companion, 442

THE TRIUMPHS OF HEALTH AND PROSPERITY

Edited and annotated by David M. Bergeron, introduced by Bryan Reynolds

SIXTEENTH and seventeenth century Europe experienced a number of momentous historical sea changes: the Reformation, acceptance of the Copernican system of planetary motion, nascent capitalism, colonial expansion. Another important conceptual revolution, which has been largely overlooked, links all these revolutions. I refer to the evolution of the concept of place, especially as it relates to the concept of space. While the transformation was multifaceted and far-reaching, one particular aspect of it has been charted for the history of ideas by philosopher Edward Casey as a shift toward a downplaying of the concept of place as it had been construed in Aristotelian/

Ptolemaic and Christian philosophical traditions. For Aristotle, 'place' is both an abstraction of containment—that which is contained—and a significant interpretive category by which to process the interconnectedness among things, experiences, and events. Moving into the sixteenth century, the concept was enlarged with respect to Christian theology that viewed God as omnipresent, with place sometimes seen as having power in itself, and sometimes regarded as a sentient being (Casey).

By 1626, when Thomas Middleton wrote The Triumphs of Health and Prosperity to celebrate the inauguration of Cuthbert Hacket as Lord Mayor, place's status had significantly changed. Although still granted its relation to the immeasurability of God, place was being subsumed within an idea of infinite space that was more scientific and mathematical, and that became synonymous with the infinitude of God; place was thus understood less and less as individuated or proper. Robert Weimann noted in 2000 that this important topic had not been treated at much length in scholarship on early modern English drama, but Henry S. Turner and others have begun to repair this gap. Place became a mere mark on the expanse of a grid, like the identical squares of A Game at Chess, which Martin Brückner and Kristen Poole have related to early modern surveying. Place was therefore commensurately devalued as something without any particular power, and neutralized in effect by this historical move toward a scientific as opposed to a religious form of relativism. For instance, Middleton and Rowley's The Changeling, as Donald Hedrick and Bryan Reynolds have shown, embodies this historical shift in its remarkable reaction to the decay of the local, which is so pronounced as to suggest that the play may constitute a conscious exploration of the fugitive concept of place-in-drift. The play pursues its own transversal investigation, moving investigative-expansively across various fields of knowledge and kinds of phenomena, by which a place may be creatively altered—interpretively and experientially—in response to the openness and reduction of definition that constitutes new ideas of an overarching, subsuming, or all-encompassing space-time.

Although in an abbreviated form, Middleton's The Triumphs of Health and Prosperity similarly reflects anxiety over the diminishing material presence of place vis-à-vis a concept of space-time beyond the cognitive scope and physical control of humans. It gestures toward a return to an understanding of place itself, when virtuously occupied, as idiosyncratic, possessing sentience, affective presence, and the capacity to proliferate. More importantly, Prosperity insists on an understanding of place that requires a return to the—at this time—historically reactionary notion that God occupies specific places; by extension, it suggests that humans, because they are designed in God's image, may also.

The pageant begins with a bold assertion that epitomizes implicitly Middleton's concern over the value or stature of place and the subjective particularity it affords:

If you should search all chronicles, histories, records, in what language are letter soever; if the inquisitive man should waste the dear treasure of his time and eyesight, he shall conclude his life only with this certainty, that there is no subject upon earth received into the place of his government with the like state and magnificence as is his Majesty's great substitute into his honourable charge, the City of London, bearing the inscription of the Chamber Royal . . . (17-25)

All the methods by which humans attempt to contain time—'chronicles, histories, records'—cannot stand in for the City of London's affective presence, its 'delight to present itself' as a combined material, symbolic, and imaginary force of social power (Bryan Reynolds); the City inhabits experientially by 'magnificence', causing the transformation of space into place through activities designated, mapped, and thereby made proper (Michel de Certeau; Joseph Fitzpatrick and Bryan Reynolds). The Lord Mayor, the King's representative, by legitimate connection, via a chain of proper God-given links, enjoys the City as his 'great substitute in his honourable charge'. The City is strategically organized, mapped properly, as 'the most pleasant garden in England', a specific place (44).

But this nomination must not be taken for granted: 'A cloud of grief hath showered upon the face | Of this sad city, and usurped the place . . .' (60-1). All is saved because the new Lord Mayor arrives just in time to bring health and prosperity to 'this garden [that] was o'erflown' (64), so that one may 'Behold what figure now the city bears, | Like gems unvalued, her best joys she wears' (66-7); now 'Fixed in the king's great substitute: delight, | Triumph, and pomp, had almost lost their right: | The garden springs again' (70-2). Now the City requires 'Care and uprightness in the magistrate's place, | And in all men obedience, truth, and grace' (80-1). These declarations of redemption, the City revived with particularity and purpose, come not without warning, disinterred in the heroic account of 'that most famous and renowned brother of this company' of drapers (85-6), an explorer who has given the world a map, or rather, given a cartographic explanation of the world, with proper names and places, to a population possibly afraid of being nothing but dust in the wind of infinite sky, particles in space without direction or end:

Sir Francis Drake, who in two years and ten months did encompass the whole world, deserving an eminent remembrance in this sanctuary [the City of London], who never returned to his country without the Golden Fleece of honour and victory. (86-9)

Drake confirms, Prosperity opines, not only the placefulness of the world, itself a now comprehensible place, but also the priority and privilege of the particular place, the City of London, on which Londoners stand.

With a pronounced self-consciousness about the ever-expanding world, and thus potentially unwieldy world-view, Middleton discloses poignant concern over the precariousness and uncertainty that such placelessness may precipitate, 'For worth unmatched, danger unparalleled' (103), and seeks to mitigate these destabilizing forces with assurance of particularity, authority, righteousness, and propriety:

With just propriety does the city stand,
As fixed by fate, i'th' middle of the land;
It has, as in the body, the heart's place,
Fit for her works of piety and grace;
The head her sovereign, unto whom she sends
All duties that just service comprehends. (144-9)

Shot through with anxieties about loss of place combined with over-determined rhetoric underscoring the substitutive and synecdochical relations in a line of divine influence from God to Monarch to Lord Mayor to City of London to Londoners, Prosperity is a desperate attempt to convince its London audience that 'The place where now you are' (158) is together an exemplary site of collaboration with the monarchy, 'the king and you his substitute' (175).

Unfortunately, the 'prosperity' of Middleton and his collaborator Garret Christmas was not much enhanced by their work, because as late as 31 December 1626—more than two months after the performance—they had still not been paid:

Item: the payment of Mr Middleton and Mr Christmas for the pageants, and others for the fireworks and providing of chambers, being hitherto put off, in regard of the ill performance thereof, is now referred to the Wardens Bachelors of this Company, who are willing to compound and agree with the parties the best they may be, giving them contentment as the business shall deserve and as shall be fit the credit of this Company.

The claim of 'ill performance' may be an excuse: having had to finance three of the last five mayoral pageants (during years of economic depression, capped by the financial catastrophe of the 1625 plague), the Drapers were broke, and the Minutes of the Court of Assistants here acknowledge that the delay in payment may be detrimental to the company's 'credit'. In any case, the complaint concerned the pageant's 'performance', not Middleton's text and design, which would have been approved in advance; the published text was the first mayoral pageant to bear the arms of the sponsoring company on the title-page. Prosperity was the cheapest pageant since 1609—when there had also been complaints (Robertson and Gordon). It cost less than half the previous pageant, John Webster's Monuments of Honour (1624), and the contrast must have been obvious to everyone. Even more obvious to Middleton would have been the contrast with his previous shows: the Grocers had raised, for The Triumphs of Truth in 1613, 237 per cent of what the Drapers paid to produce The Triumphs of Health and Prosperity. Then as now, decisions about how much to spend on a spectacle are made by the producer, not the writer. Whatever the causes of its failings or successes, Middleton's text remains an important testimony to the period's concerns over the displacement of the concept of place by the concept of space.

The Tryumphes of Health and Prosperity.

SEE ALSO

Textual introduction and apparatus: Companion, 1010

Authorship and date: Companion, 337

General introduction to the civic entertainments: this volume, 968

Other Middleton-Christmas works: Antiquity, 1397; Aries, 1586; Virtue, 1714; Integrity, 1766; lost pageant for Charles I, 1898

The Triumphs of Health and Prosperity

A noble solemnity performed through the City, at the sole cost and charges of the honourable fraternity of Drapers, at the inauguration of their most worthy brother, the Right Honourable Cuthbert Hacket, Lord Mayor of the famous City of London.

To the honour of him, to whom the noble fraternity of Drapers, his worthy brothers have consecrated their loves in magnificent triumphs, the Right Honourable Cuthbert Hacket, Lord Mayor of the City of London

The city's choice, thy company's free love,
This day's unlooked-for triumph, all three prove
The happiness of thy life to be most great;
Add to these, justice, and thou art complete.

At your lordship's command,
Thomas Middleton

The Triumphs of Health and Prosperity

If you should search all chronicles, histories, records, in what language or letter soever; if the inquisitive man should waste the dear treasure of his time and eyesight, he shall conclude his life only with this certainty, that there is no subject upon earth received into the place of his government with the like state and magnificence as is his Majesty's great substitute into his honourable charge, the City of London, bearing the inscription of the Chamber Royal; which, that it may now appear to the world no less illustrated with brotherly affection than former triumphal times have been partakers of, this takes delight to present itself.

And first to enter the worthy love of his honourable society for his lordship's return from Westminster, having received some service by water, by the triumphant Chariot of Honour, the first that attends his lordship's most wished arrival bears the title of the Beautiful Hill or Fragrant Garden, with flowery banks, near to which lambs and sheep are a-grazing. This platform, so cast into a hill, is adorned and garnished with all variety of odoriferous flowers; on the top, arched with an artificial and curious rainbow, which both shows the antiquity of colours, the diversity and nobleness, and how much the more glorious and highly to be esteemed, they being presented in that blessed covenant of mercy, the bow in the clouds; the work itself encompassed with all various fruits, and bears the name of the most pleasant garden of England, the noble City of London, the flowers intimating the sweet odours of their virtue and goodnesses, and the fruits of their works of justice and charity, which have been both honourable brothers and bounteous benefactors of this ancient fraternity, who are presented in a device following under the types and figures of their virtues in their lifetime, which made them famous then and memorable for ever. And since we are yet amongst the woolly creatures that graze on the beauty of this beautiful platform, come we to the modern use of this noble mystery of ancient drapery, and we shall find the whole livery of this renowned and famous city furnished by it; it clothes the honourable senators in their highest and chiefest wearing, all courts of justice, magistrates, and judges of the land. But for the

4-5 Cuthbert Hacket had been a member of the Dyers company; translated to the Drapers in order to become mayor in 1626; served as Alderman until his death in 1631

16-217 Health...Health (in contrast to the 35,000 plague deaths of 1625)

31 service by water pageant entertainment on the Thames

35 a-grazing archaic form

36 odoriferous sweet, fragrant

41 covenant...bow refers to Old Testament story of Noah (Genesis 9); rainbow, symbol of God's covenant of mercy

53 mystery guild

The Tryumphes of Health and Prosperity.

better expression of the purpose in hand a speaker gives life to these following words.

THE SPEECH IN THE HILL WHERE THE RAINBOW APPEARS

60 *A cloud of grief hath showered upon the face
Of this sad city, and usurped the place
Of joy and cheerfulness, wearing the form
Of a long black eclipse in a rough storm;
With showers of tears this garden was o'erflown,*
65 *Till mercy was, like the blest rainbow, shown.
Behold what figure now the city bears,
Like gems unvalued, her best joys she wears;
Glad as a faithful handmaid to obey
And wait upon the honour of this day,*
70 *Fixed in the king's great substitute: delight,
Triumph, and pomp, had almost lost their right:
The garden springs again; the violet beds,
The lofty flowers bear up their fragrant heads;
Fruit overlade their trees, barns crack with store;*
75 *And yet how much the heavens wept before,
Threat'ning a second mourning. Who so dull
But must acknowledge mercy was at full?
In these two mighty blessings what's required?
That which in conscience ought to be desired:*
80 *Care and uprightness in the magistrate's place,
And in all men obedience, truth, and grace.*

After this, awaits his lordship's approach a masterpiece of triumph, called the Sanctuary of Prosperity; on the top arch of which hangs the Golden Fleece, which raises the worthy memory of that most famous and renowned brother of this company, Sir Francis Drake, who in two years and ten months did encompass the whole world, deserving an eminent remembrance in this sanctuary, who never returned to his country without the golden fleece of honour and victory. The four fair Corinthian columns or pillars imply the four principal virtues: wisdom, justice, fortitude, temperance, the especial upholders of kingdoms, cities, and honourable societies.

THE SPEECH IN THE SANCTUARY UPON THE FLEECE

*If Jason, with the noble hopes of Greece,
Who did from Colchis fetch the golden fleece,*
95 *Deserve a story of immortal fame,
That both the Asias celebrate his name,
What honour, celebration, and renown,
In virtue's right, ought justly to be shown
To the fair memory of Sir Francis Drake?*
100 *England's true Jason, who did boldly make
So many rare adventures, which were held
For worth unmatched, danger unparalleled;
Never returning to his country's eye
Without the golden fleece of victory.*
105 *The world's a sea, and every magistrate
Takes a year's voyage when he takes this state.
Nor on these seas are there less dangers found
Than those on which the bold adventurer's bound;
For rocks, gulfs, quicksands, here is malice, spite,*
110 *Envy, detraction of all noble right;
Vessels of honour, those do threaten more
Than any ruin between sea and shore.
Sail, then, by th' compass of a virtuous name,
And, spite of spites, thou bring'st the fleece of fame.*
115

Passing from this, and more to encourage the noble endeavours of the magistrate, his lordship and the worthy company is gracefully conducted toward the Chariot of Honour. On the most eminent seat thereof is Government illustrated, it being the proper virtue by which we raise the noble memory of Sir Henry fitz Ailwin, who held

60 cloud of grief reaction to death of King James in March 1625 and to the 1625 plague, which had caused the cancellation of the mayoral pageant that year
70 substitute that is, the mayor
71 Triumph...right no Lord Mayor's Show in 1625 (because of the plague) and no pageant to celebrate the official entry into London of the new king and queen (postponed for more than a year, then cancelled)
74 barns...store (in contrast to the dearth of 1622-23)
78 two mighty blessings end of the plague in 1626 and abundant harvest (Burridge)
83 Prosperity (in contrast to the devastating economic effects of the plague the previous year: see Lost Royal Pageant, p. 1898)
87 encompass...world (an image Middleton probably picked up from Samuel Purchas)
89-90 never...victory (in striking contrast to the 1625 naval expedition against Spain: see 'Lost Political Prose', p. 1909)

90 Corinthian columns the most ornate of the three orders of Greek architecture, with bell-shaped capitals
91 principal virtues the Cardinal Virtues
95 golden fleece Drake is prominently featured in William Vaughan's The Golden Fleece, divided into three parts, under which are discovered the errors of religion, the vices and decays of the kingdom, and lastly the ways to get wealth and to restore trading, so much complained of (1626).
97 both the Asias Asia Minor and Asia Major 100 Sir Francis Drake Drake is briefly mentioned in the prose of Aries (1621) and Integrity (1623), but here is the subject of one of the pageant's four speeches. Unlike Jason (who speaks in Aries), Drake was not primarily a merchant; he was instead famous for his military exploits against Spain. References to Drake acquired a strong political meaning in the mid-1620s, amid Protestant calls for a naval war against Spain, as a way of forcing the Habsburgs to relinquish the Palatinate. Because Drake had successfully attacked Cadiz in 1587, any mention of him in 1626 would recall the humiliating failure of the late 1625 expedition against Cadiz (which had cost c.£250,000, and achieved nothing). Alongside extended historical accounts, in John Smith's General History of Virginia (1624), Purchas his Pilgrims (1625) and William Camden's Annals (1625), Drake in the mid-1620s was lauded in texts with a more obvious agenda, like Philip Nichols's Sir Francis Drake Revived, calling upon this dull or effeminate age, to follow his noble steps (1626) and Bishop George Carleton's A Thankful Remembrance of God's Mercies (1624). Drake was also invoked polemically in some of Middleton's possible sources for A Game at Chess: the anonymous Experimental Discovery of Spanish Practises (1623), John Reynolds's Votivæ Angliæ (1624) and Vox Coeli (1624).

115 spite of spites notwithstanding, despite (OED)
121-6 Henry fitz Ailwin...Simon Eyre cf. their descriptions in earlier pageants, Aries (1621) and Integrity (1623)

The Triumphes of Health and Prosperity.

the seat of magistracy in this city twenty-four years together, a most renowned brother of this company: in like manner, the worthy Sir John Norman first rowed in barge to Westminster with silver oars, under the person of Munificence: Sir Simon Eyre that built Leadenhall, a granary for the poor, under the type of Piety; et sic de ceteris. This chariot drawn by two golden pelleted lions, being the proper supporters of the company's arms; those two that have their seats upon the lions presenting Power and Honour, the one in a little streamer or banneret bearing the arms of the present lord mayor; the other of the late, the truly generous and worthy Sir Allen Cotton, knight, a bounteous and a noble housekeeper, one that hath spent the year of his magistracy to the great honour of the city, and by the sweetness of his disposition, and the uprightness of his justice and government, hath raised up a fair lasting memory to himself and his posterity forever; at whose happy inauguration, though triumph was not then in season—death's pageants being only advanced upon the shoulders of men—his noble deservings were not thereby any way eclipsed: Est virtus sibi marmor, et integritate triumphat.

THE SPEECH OF GOVERNMENT

125 *With just propriety does this city stand,
As fixed by fate, i'th' middle of the land;
It has, as in the body, the heart's place,
Fit for her works of piety and grace;
The head her sovereign, unto whom she sends
All duties that just service comprehends;
The eyes may be compared, at wisdom's rate,
To the illustrious counsellors of state,
Set in that orb of royalty, to give light
To noble actions, stars of truth and right;
The lips, the reverend clergy, judges, all
That pronounce laws divine or temporal;
The arms to the defensive part of men.
So I descend unto the heart again,
The place where now you are; witness the love,
True brotherhood's cost and triumph, all which move 160 In this most grave solemnity; and in this
The city's general love abstracted is:
And as the heart, in its meridian seat,
Is styled the fountain of the body's heat,*

127–8 et sic de ceteris and so forth
128 pelleted lions marked with heraldic pellets
133 Allen Cotton elected Lord Mayor in 1625, but because of the plague there was no Lord Mayor's Show
142–3 Est... triumphat virtue is marble unto itself and triumphs through its integrity (Burridge)
146 as in the body This passage rewrites a classic comparison of a political community to a human body, the 'body politic': Shakespeare's version of the comparison in Coriolanus is now the most familiar, but Middleton would have been equally familiar with versions in Plutarch, Livy, Erasmus, Machiavelli, and William Camden's Remains. The emphasis on the body is particularly appropriate, given the theme of 'health' and the sickness of the previous year. heart's Middleton focuses on the heart (London), rather than the belly.

149 All... comprehends i.e., only those duties which would be included in the category of 'just service' to the sovereign. (Which services were legal and appropriate was a matter of dispute between the King and Parliament.)

*The first thing receives life, the last that dies,
Those properties experience well applies
To this most loyal city, that hath been
In former ages, as in these times seen,
The fountain of affection, duty, zeal,
And taught all cities through the commonweal;
The first that receives quick'ning life and spirit
From the king's grace, which still she strives to inherit,
And, like the heart, will be the last that dies
In any duty toward good supplies.
What can express affection's nobler fruit,
Both to the king and you his substitute?*

At the close of this speech, this Chariot of Honour and Sanctuary of Prosperity, with all her graceful concomitants, and the two other parts of triumph, take leave of his lordship for that time, and rest from service till the great feast at Guildhall be ended; after which the whole fabric of the triumph attends upon his honour both toward Saint Paul's and homeward, his lordship accompanied with the grave and honourable senators of the city, amongst whom the two worthy sheriffs, his lordship's grave assistants for the year, the worshipful and generous master Richard Fen and master Edward Brumfield, ought not to pass of my respect unremembered, whose bounty and nobleness for the year will no doubt give the best expression to their own worthiness. Between the Cross and the entrance of Wood Street, that part of triumph being planted, being the Fragrant Garden of England with the rainbow, to which the concluding speech hath chiefly reference, there takes its farewell of his lordship, accompanied with the Fountain of Virtue, being the fourth part of the Triumph.

THE LAST SPEECH

*Mercy's fair object, the celestial bow,
As in the morning it began to show,
It closes up this great triumphal day,
And by example shows the year the way,
Which if power worthily and rightly spend,
It must with mercy both begin and end.
It is a year that crowns the life of man,
Brings him to peace with honour, and what can
Be more desired? 'Tis virtue's harvest time,
When gravity and judgement's in their prime;
To speak more happily, 'tis a time given*

151 illustrious counsellors the Privy Council
162 meridian locality or situation distinct from others (OED)
177–8 concomitants companions
185–6 Richard Fen or Venn, became mayor in 1637
186 Edward Brumfield Leatherseller and Fishmonger, became mayor in 1636
189 Cross located in Cheapside at end of Wood Street
195 celestial bow rainbow
203 harvest time (alluding to the date of the Lord Mayor's Show, October 29)

The Tryumphes of Health and Prosperity.

To treasure up good actions fit for heaven.
To a brotherhood of honour thou art fixed,
That has stood long fair in just virtue's eye;
For within twelve years' space thou art the sixt
210 That has been lord mayor of this company.
This is no usual grace, being now the last;
Close the work nobly up, that what is past,
And known to be good in the former five,
May in thy present care be kept alive.
215 Then is thy brotherhood for their love and cost

Requited amply, but thy own soul most.
Health and a happy peace fill all thy days;
When thy year ends, may then begin thy praise.
For the fabric or structure of the whole triumph, in so short a time so gracefully performed, the commendation 220 of that the industry of master Garret Christmas may justly challenge; a man not only excellent in his art, but faithful in his undertakings.

FINIS

209 ~~sixt~~ six Drapers had been mayor since 1614

LOST POLITICAL PROSE, 1620–7: A BRIEF ACCOUNT

Thomas Cogswell

IN 1735, two manuscript volumes of Thomas Middleton's work as Chronologer for the City of London appeared at an auction, where the curious were able to peruse them. A quick inspection revealed that the first of these, The Annales, dealt with a series of notable 'Passages and Occurrences' in the city from 1620 to 1622: the death of the Bishop of London, the imprisonments of Viscount St Albans and Sir Edward Coke, and the fiery destruction of the Fortune Theatre. The other volume, lacking the precise focus on the metropolis, was aptly dubbed Middleton's Farrago. Among the charges and counter-charges between the earl of Essex and Viscount Wimbledon was an account of Henrietta Maria's marriage contract and two sections tersely entitled 'Parliamentary Matters, 1625–26' and 'Habeas Corpus 1627'. The owner of these works, hopeful of cashing in on Middleton's name, 'puffed up' the price. But when the market proved less enthusiastic than expected, he withdrew the Annales and the Farrago from the auction—and ultimately from scholarly view.

Aside from this tantalizing description, there is no other surviving information on these two major prose works of Thomas Middleton. Since a willingness to explore the boundaries of the politically acceptable was a hallmark of Middleton's plays and entertainments, it is tempting to speculate that he might have done the same as City Chronologer. Yet the basic fact of the matter is that we can now say very little about these two lost works with any degree of confidence. The only certainty in this otherwise murky business concerns the main themes of the Annales and the Farrago, which were noted at the auction house in 1735. Fortunately these tell us a great deal about Middleton's lost histories.

It could well be assumed that the disappearance of these two volumes was not a major calamity, since they may well have been thoroughly anodyne. After all, history was one of the literary genres to which the Stuart regime exhibited a hypersensitivity. Given that assessments of medieval kings often earned their authors an uncomfortable encounter with the Privy Council, contemporaries interested in more recent history could be confident that their efforts would receive a thorough inspection at Whitehall. Indeed after 1620 there was a 'political' licenser, specially charged to review 'any matters of newes relations histories or other things in prose or in verse that have reference to matters and affairs of State'. Little wonder then that when a team of writers decided to continue John Stow's popular Annales into the 1620s, they wisely erred on the side of extreme caution. After tersely noting the disastrous Ré expedition in 1627, the editor advised his readers that

'what more may be said of this voyage and action, I refer you unto other books written to that purpose'. The coverage of the 1626 Parliament was even more laconic; all the editor noted about this highly significant session was that 'a Parliament began at Westminster and continued until Thursday the 15th of January next following, and then was dissolved by Commission'. Chronologies in other words generally gave a wide berth to anything even remotely controversial.

In his chronicle Middleton may well have run true to the cautious form of the genre. But before endorsing that judgement, it is vital to remember an important mitigating factor: Middleton was only writing a manuscript history, which was not intended for publication. To be sure, the government was not wholly oblivious to the 'underground' trade in manuscripts, and it did sometimes prosecute the authors of controversial poems and tracts. Nevertheless the frankness with which authors writing in this medium regularly discussed the most sensitive contemporary issues would have been simply unimaginable in print. Consequently the basic fact that Middleton did not have to secure official authorization for his work accorded him considerable leeway. The main themes of his two works, furthermore, suggest that Middleton availed himself of this comparative freedom. Of all the themes, only one—the destruction of the Fortune Theatre—was a thoroughly mundane matter, devoid of political significance. All the others dealt with issues of the first importance, which had riveted the nation's attention. By contrast, in the continuation of Stow's Annales, sensational topics were apt to receive a non-committal sentence, if the editors did not pass over them in complete silence.

Unfortunately, the comparative audacity of Middleton's reportage is now hidden by the obscurity of the events themselves, some of which are murky even to scholars on the field. Therefore, in order to arrive at a fuller appreciation of the contemporary significance of the topics which Middleton handled, the present essay will examine them in some detail.

I. Annales

The crisis atmosphere which hung over the realm in the early 1620s is clearly apparent in Middleton's Annales. In the years after 1618, warfare erupted between the Habsburgs and Protestants in central Europe. At the centre of this conflict was James I's daughter, Princess Elizabeth, who had married the leading Calvinist protagonist, Frederick V of the Palatinate. Unfortunately for the Protestant militants, early hopes for resounding victory quickly evaporated as Imperial armies easily bested their opponents and so revived fears of a Habsburg 'universal monarchy'. Meanwhile James I, the 'Defender of the Faith', refused to become militarily involved. Instead he diligently sought a diplomatic solution to the international crisis, the centrepiece of which was the projected marriage of his heir to a Spanish princess. Had such a match simply been a matter of finding a suitable bride for Prince Charles, it would not have aroused as much anxiety as it did among English contemporaries. But everyone suspected—and with good reason—that the Habsburgs would insist on a de facto toleration of English Catholics. Such an action seemed especially foolhardy; given the Catholic reputation for rebellion and aggressive proselytizing, toleration appeared a prescription for the imminent subversion of the Church of England and indeed of England itself.

These apprehensions surfaced at the death of John King. After a long and distinguished clerical career as Dean of Christ Church, Vice-Chancellor of Oxford and ultimately Bishop of London, King died on 31 March 1621. Yet the solemnity of his funeral was soon marred by reports of a deathbed conversion to Catholicism. Although apparently untrue, the charges flourished in part because of the kindness he had shown to imprisoned priests. Such actions speak well for King's sense of Christian charity, but when religious war had erupted on the continent, they were all too easily misinterpreted. Furthermore, as Bishop of London, King had played a major role in checking zealous metropolitan preachers who criticized James's pacifism. In any event, the rumour of his conversion made enough sense to enough people that it clung to his name; in fact, later in the year, a Protestant tract urging renewed vigilance against resurgent Catholicism calmly cited King's conversion as common knowledge. Nor was the rumour simply a useful tool for radical Protestants; Catholic controversialists also trumpeted the news. King's son found the situation so embarrassing that in an effort to redeem the good name of the Church of England and his father, he directly confronted these reports in a sermon at Paul's Cross. Middleton therefore lavished attention on an incident in which a local bishop's reputation had become a casualty in James I's campaign for accommodation with Spain.

Those alarmed at the prospect of a Catholic revival found refuge in hopes for a Parliament, whose members by and large had scant sympathy for a Spanish match in general and for a relaxation of the penal laws in particular. Unfortunately, after an impressive display of devotion to the institution early in James's English reign, the king had become irritated with the Parliament-men's refusal to vote new subsidies with either the generosity or the frequency that James thought appropriate. Thus aside from a brief 'addled' session in 1614, James summoned no Parliaments between 1610 and 1621. In the interim, moral as well as fiscal corruption seemed to overwhelm the administration. Admittedly a few outrageous examples like the Overbury murder and the earl of Suffolk's light fingers forced James to intervene. Yet until matters reached such extraordinary heights, the king appeared distressingly tolerant of embezzlement and extortion. The situation in the law courts seemed most alarming, with widespread reports of corruption among the senior judges. Consequently, when the continental crisis eventually forced James to summon a new Parliament in 1621, many contemporaries hoped that the new session would belatedly clean up internal abuses as well as steer the king away from a Spanish match.

These hopes explain the attention which Middleton accorded Viscount St Albans's commitment to the Tower. In the opening weeks of the session, the Parliament-men in an extraordinary action immediately voted a handsome subsidy bill. Since in normal circumstances they would only have done so at the end of the session, James was delighted with their action, vowing in response to 'meet with his Subjects more than halfway' in their demands. A few months later he learned the cost of such generosity, for what the House of Commons most desired was revival of the medieval practice of impeaching royal ministers. The first court grandee to suffer at the hands of an early modern Parliament was Francis Bacon, the Lord Chancellor. Initially James attempted to save him, but ultimately a full set of witnesses, all recounting multiple tales of bribery, proved too much even for his lax moral standards. With Bacon's fall, justice at last appeared done, and many across the country rejoiced. Yet more importantly, Parliament had played a major role in the legal drama, and having established a precedent, many were understandably eager to have Parliament send more corrupt officials to keep Bacon company in the Tower. Thomas Locke perhaps best caught the mood: 'they have begun at the highest, and they meane to come downwards, Westminster Hall was never so made clean as it is like to be this year'.

Events soon proved that James had no intention of permitting such extensive cleaning. Nevertheless, when the Lord Chancellor was himself committed to the Tower on 28 May 1621, many contemporaries regarded it as an obvious red-letter day. Equally obvious is the next item in The Annales, which concerned Parliament and another commitment to the Tower of London. But this time the imprisonment had nothing to do with either corruption or impeachment.

Late in 1621, as Imperial forces were poised to overrun all of the Palatinate, the home of Frederick V and Elizabeth, James again turned to Parliament. Additional parliamentary funds were essential, he argued, in order to maintain an army of mercenaries until plans for a negotiated settlement could be completed. Although many in the House of Commons were interested in a more bellicose response, the more they thought about James's proposal the less they fancied it. Chief among their worries was the wisdom of committing English taxpayers, if not English soldiers, to a limited war against some elements of the House of Austria, while remaining at peace and indeed planning a wedding with the rest of the family. All these fears came out into the open after an unclear message from Court apparently suggested that James was at last ready for a more belligerent policy. In the unrestrained debate which followed, some members proposed open war against Spain and the breach of the Spanish match. Once word of these developments reached Court, James and Charles were furious, and in an effort to forestall a major incident with Spain, the king ordered the Commons to cease any further discussion of foreign affairs.

Unfortunately while the royal order made logical diplomatic sense, it initiated a quarrel with the House over a matter about which it was tetchiest—its privileges. Earlier in the year, the Parliament-men had been deeply suspicious about royal efforts to subvert the House's customary freedom of speech. A brief royal message had been enough to alleviate this apprehension, but with James's order at the end of the year forbidding any discussion of affairs of state, the suspicion arose again. Rather than back down, the House dug in its heels, formally reminding James in its 'Protestation', that 'every Member of the House of Parliament hath, and of right, ought to have freedom of speech'. Rather than accept this position, James dissolved the Parliament even though the lack of parliamentary subsidies hamstrung his diplomatic efforts. Once the session was over, the king signalled his contempt for the House's vaunted freedom of speech by ripping the 'Protestation' out of the Commons Journals with his own hands. He also imprisoned several leaders of the Commons for their words at the end of the session. Most prominent among the imprisoned was Sir Edward Coke, former Lord Chief Justice and erstwhile Privy Counsellor. In sharp contrast to St Albans's brief stay in the Tower in some of the more salubrious rooms, Coke and his fellow Parliament-men spent over half a year there in almost complete isolation. Thus, the bland summary excerpted from The Annales for 27 December 1621, 'Sir Edward Coke Committed to the Tower', referred to an event easily as constitutionally important and as politically dramatic as the revival of impeachment.

II. Farrago

We do not know how long Middleton continued working on the Annales. But the Aldermen and the Common Councillors eventually decided he was no longer earning his annual fee of £10. On 1 February 1626, the Common Council of London resolved to end Middleton's salary, 'unless he give this Court satisfaction according as was intended he should do when the said pension was first granted him'. All things considered, Middleton's work for the city was comparatively easy money, and it speaks volumes about his financial position in 1626 that he decided to resume his duties.

In doing so, he displayed his deference to a patron. Yet as a cursory examination of the main categories of Annales and Farrago reveals, Middleton's understanding of his duties as City Chronologer had shifted radically between 1622 and 1626. The death of the Bishop of London, the imprisonment of two men in the Tower and a fire at a London theatre were all events which, at least in the first instance, took place in the metropolis. In The Farrago, however, Middleton adopted a much wider and a more distinctly national focus. The city hence found itself underwriting someone much more interested in imitating William Camden than John Stow.

Middleton's interest in larger themes becomes apparent with the first item in The Farrago: the charges and counter-charges between the earl of Essex and Viscount Wimbledon. Late in 1625, after many delays, Charles I initiated open war against Spain with a bold coup de main; he dispatched Wimbledon with an enormous Anglo-Dutch fleet of over a hundred vessels and 12,000 troops to capture Cadiz. With a force that size, it seemed impossible that Wimbledon could fail to do something which would redeem the battered honour of the realm. Yet he did fail. On his ignominious return in December, Wimbledon blamed the inadequate supplies, the weather and bad luck for the debacle. His subordinate officers led by the earl of Essex were quick to point to a more crippling problem: Wimbledon's indecision and timidity, they alleged, verged on cowardice. In turn, Wimbledon denounced his own officers: Lord Cromwell he termed a drunkard, Lord Valentia a common embezzler, Colonel Horwood a mutineer, and as for Essex, 'an evil spirit hath got possession of you'. Thus the bitterest irony about the opening of the long awaited military intervention on the continent was that the hottest skirmishes were between the general and his officers.

Plainly these bickerings through the first half of 1626 attracted widespread popular interest, but they did not monopolize it. Rather the second of Middleton's topics did. Within weeks of assuming the throne, Charles I finally wed a Bourbon rather than a Habsburg princess. Amid the celebrations over the marriage, many of his subjects hoped and prayed that Henrietta Maria would follow the ecclesiastical eclecticism of her father, Henri IV, and decide that London was worth an Anglican service. Events soon proved the futility of such hopes, for far from being a politique, she was a zealous Catholic devotee. Indeed, it would have been hard for her to be anything else, given the size of her clerical retinue. In turn, the presence of a bishop and twenty priests moving through London in full clerical garb naturally excited suspicions that something had gone seriously wrong in the negotiations for a French match.

Thanks to James's insistence on organizing a broad non-denominational front against the Habsburgs, a Bourbon bride for Charles made the most diplomatic sense. Yet many at home were alarmed over the prospect that France would insist on de facto toleration just as much as Spain had. To allay these fears, Prince Charles had solemnly vowed to the 1624 Parliament that he would never agree to any marriage terms which required the suspension of English laws. In subsequent negotiations with the French, however, he and his father agreed to a separate codicil, the Ecrit Particular, granting an English toleration of Catholics in return for French military support against the Habsburgs. This clause of course remained secret. On the other hand, it did not require detailed inside information to deduce that Charles had violated the spirit, if not the letter, of his promise to Parliament; the spectacle of thousands of English Catholics openly flouting the penal laws was enough to create considerable interest in the precise terms of the marriage treaty.

In the face of the mounting curiosity, the government stonewalled. Only after high-level negotiators had agreed on the terms was John Beaulieu, the king's French Secretary, able to secure the full text, which he forwarded to the king's Agent in Brussels; these details, Beaulieu added, 'I can assure you are yet made very dainty here amongst us, for the reasons which shall but too plainly appear unto you in the reading of the same.' And for those less well connected, the exact terms were to remain a very precious commodity. In light of Middleton's fondness for tackling sensitive issues, it is only natural that he should have written a section on 'the Treaty and Articles of Marriage between Prince Charles and Henrietta Maria'. But it is worth noting that he had at last entered the innermost chamber of the arcana imperii, the same one whose discussion in 1621 had earned Coke and his colleagues a stint in the Tower.

Having at last directly tackled one of the most sensitive 'affairs of state', he continued to do so with his last two themes. Of all the parliamentary sessions which Middleton had witnessed, none matched those of 1625 and 1626 for sheer emotional drama and political intensity. Early in his reign, Charles I hurriedly summoned a new Parliament in order to vote new funding for the war. But between the plague then raging in the metropolis and the massive French wedding party which had arrived with the new queen, the administration temporarily forgot about the new session. When its attention returned, the regime found that the Parliament-men, eager to flee the infected capital, had already passed the subsidy bill. Closer calculations revealed that the amount voted was inadequate for Charles's requirements. Therefore, a few weeks after adjourning the Westminster session, he met a second one at Oxford where he pressed for an extraordinary second vote of supply in one year. There, for the first time, direct criticism of the duke of Buckingham emerged. Some Parliament-men voiced grave reservations about his ability to direct the nascent war effort, citing everything from the French match to the massive fleet which Wimbledon was then gathering for the Cadiz expedition. 'Let us lay the fault where it is,' Sir Francis Seymour told his colleagues, 'the Duke of Buckingham is trusted.' Rather than endure further complaint, Charles dissolved the Parliament.

Although such abrupt action was hardly a prescription for future harmony, Charles and Buckingham hoped that early in 1626 they could meet a new Parliament armed with domestic reforms, like the enforcement of the penal laws, and victories which Wimbledon's fleet would surely gain. Unfortunately, as the quarrelling among Wimbledon and staff testified, hopes of presenting Parliament with a splendid triumph proved vain. The cessation of the Catholic toleration, while a shrewd political act, was offset by the loan of English vessels to Louis XIII, who, thanks to another administrative mistake, was able to use them against the Huguenots of La Rochelle. In short, in the half year between the two Parliaments, Buckingham succeeded in eroding rather than improving his credibility.

Consequently in the 1626 Parliament, renewed criticism of the duke quickly turned into a move to impeach him; additional parliamentary funds, a majority agreed, were only certain to be wasted with Buckingham at the helm. Meanwhile Charles I dug in his heels, refusing to consider cashiering the duke. The result was a four-month-long confrontation between king and Parliament. In the end, although it meant financially sabotaging the war effort, Charles dissolved his second Parliament. But before he did so, enough dirt emerged from various parliamentary investigations to shatter forever any popular enthusiasm for Buckingham. Amid the flood of revelations was one which can only have fixated Middleton: armed with a bundle of diplomatic documents, the earl of Bristol quite convincingly argued that Buckingham's relation of the trip to Madrid in 1623, the heroic account which Middleton enshrined in A Game at Chess, in fact played fast and loose with the truth. Thus in less than two years after Middleton's greatest triumph, the White Duke had taken on decidedly more somber hues.

The last item in Farrago, 'Habeas Corpus 1627', arose as a direct consequence of Charles's decision to dissolve the Parliament of 1626. This action preserved Charles's poverty as well as his prerogative, and in the midst of a Spanish war, this condition was, to say the least, extremely dangerous. In desperation, the regime sought to raise money through a series of extra-parliamentary levies. First Charles and Buckingham asked for a nationwide benevolence; this in the end produced only trifling amounts after the ratepayers rejected the request with cries of 'a Parliament, a Parliament!' Better luck attended a more finely crafted appeal in the 'forced loan' campaign of 1626-7. Carefully presented to small groups and individuals and surrounded by an array of royal concessions, this campaign stressed the repayment of the loan as well as the king's promise not to make this non-parliamentary tax the first of many others. On these terms, the government at last managed to extract an impressive amount of money, albeit grudgingly, from the ratepayers.

Although a majority paid, a significant minority refused, alleging that the levy, notwithstanding all the concessions and conditions, was illegal. What further heightened the drama of these refusals was the fact that many of the 'recusants' were godly Protestants, gentlemen like the earl of Essex, committed to the war against Spain. For them, their eagerness to grapple with the Habsburg Antichrist did not extend to subverting the 'ancient constitution' at home. In response, the government adopted a hard line. In extreme cases, some of the lower orders who refused were actually impressed for foreign service. Those of higher rank were stripped of local office and imprisoned indefinitely pending the King's pleasure. Although this practice was common enough—Coke and his colleagues had suffered it after the 1621 session—its legal standing was dubious. Therefore, in 1627 five of the knights then imprisoned resolved to challenge the government on this point. Some of the best attorneys in the realm then argued that the practice of indefinite imprisonment without charge, much less a trial, violated the venerable legal principles enshrined in the writ of habeas corpus. Hence, the plaintiff's counsel urged the Court to see that this practice 'cannot stand with the laws of the realm or that of Magna Carta'. This result was one of the great cases in seventeenth-century constitutional law, easily equal to Bate's case in 1606 and the Ship Money case of 1636. It would not be surprising if the Five Knights Case had fascinated Middleton, whose usurping tyrant in Hengist, King of Kent, Vortiger, indignantly asked

What's all our greatness
If we that prescribe bounds to meaner men
Must not pass these ourselves? (3.1.98-100)

Regrettably Middleton was unable to hear the answer to Vortiger's question. He died in July 1627 before either the judges found for the king or Charles reluctantly accepted in the following years the Petition of Right, which explicitly prohibited the practice. Nevertheless the date of his passing only underscores the importance which he set on his chronicle and on this issue. Since the opening rounds of the legal proceedings in the Five Knights Case had only begun a few days before his demise, Middleton died in a thoroughly appropriate manner: even from his deathbed he was busy following developments in a case which represented, in Sir Robert Phelps's words, 'the greatest thing that ever was about the liberty of the subject'.

III.

With much of the mystery removed from the main topics in the Annales and the Farrago, the importance of these works should now be clearer. To be sure, we are still unable to deduce how Middleton handled these matters, and it is even possible that he might have been sympathetic to the government on some issues. Yet the one fact about Middleton's chronicles is indisputable: his post with the City of London did not make him any less audacious in grappling with controversial issues than he was in other genres. As we have seen, the topics which tended to attract Middleton's attention were either sensitive 'affairs of state' or controversies involving the liberties of the subject, and as the decade progressed, this tendency hardened into a habit.

This conclusion, it must be conceded, supports the somewhat unusual notion that a major dramatist might have enjoyed writing contemporary history. Yet in Middleton's case, this is on mature reflection not entirely surprising. In A Game at Chess, the Black Queen's Pawn boasted of the thorough Spanish penetration of the bureaucracy at Whitehall; indeed Catholic moles were so ubiquitous that

so are designs
Of times prevented and important secrets
Of states discovered. (1.1.59-61)

It is not hard to imagine that Middleton enjoyed turning tables on the Jesuits and the Spaniards. All the evidence from the Annales and the Farrago indicates that he was eager to try his hand at discovering secrets of state, even if he was only working for the Corporation of London.

SEE ALSO

Lost Plays: A Brief Account: this volume, 328
Lost Pageant for Charles I: A Brief Account: this volume, 1898
Authorship and date: Annales, Companion, 438; Farrago, Companion, 443
List of works cited: Companion, 1166

This page intentionally left blank

JUVENILIA 1597-1601

This page intentionally left blank

THE WISDOM OF SOLOMON PARAPHRASED

Edited and annotated by G. B. Shand, introduced by Debora Shuger

The Wisdom of Solomon Paraphrased, Middleton's earliest known work, appeared in print in 1597, probably between March and June of that year. Although perhaps loosely modelled on Henry Lok's metrical paraphrase, Ecclesiastes, Otherwise Called the Preacher (1597), Middleton's poem relies principally on the Geneva Bible's translation of the Apocryphal Sapientia Solomonis (also known as the Liber Sapientiae), along with the Latin translation included in the Protestant Junius-Tremellius Bible and possibly the Great Bible or a pre-Clementine Vulgate (see the commentary note to 10.89–120). Middleton, however, apparently did not enlist the assistance of any commentary, since he makes elementary errors of interpretation in dealing with passages clearly and correctly explicated by all patristic, medieval, and Renaissance exegetes (see the commentary on 10.89–120, 16.43–54, and 19.204).

As the handful of scholars who have attempted to read The Wisdom of Solomon Paraphrased uniformly report, it is a very bad poem, committing some of the most execrable lines extant in the corpus of English verse, my favourites being 'Fishes are oft deceived by the bait. | The bait, deceiving fish, doth fish deceive' (4.127–8) and 'Old time is often lost in being bald: | Bald because old, old because living long' (12.13–14). G. B. Shand (1983) summarizes the critical tradition with admirable concision: the poem is 'a stupefying read'. Yet it is not uniformly bad, or, more accurately, despite its often wretched versification, The Wisdom of Solomon has a striking and problematic weirdness that awakens scholarly curiosity—a decent and customary substitute for aesthetic pleasure.

Lily Bess Campbell's Divine Poetry and Drama in Sixteenth-Century England (1961) richly documents the Elizabethan vogue for biblical paraphrases, particularly of the Psalms and the canonical books attributed to Solomon (Canticles, Ecclesiastes, Proverbs). Yet at first glance the Sapientia Solomonis (I use the Latin title to distinguish the biblical text from Middleton's poem) seems an unlikely subject for an English Protestant poet. While part of the Vulgate Old Testament, all Protestant Bibles reject Sapientia's canonical status, lumping it with other post-exilic texts in the Apocrypha, which both the Geneva Bible and Thirty-Nine Articles define as extra-canonical books written by 'godly men' but having no doctrinal authority. From Jerome on, most exegetes, both Catholic and Protestant, recognized that the Sapientia Solomonis should not be attributed to Solomon but probably originated in the Alexandrian Jewish community sometime between the third century BC and the first century AD, perhaps—given its syncretic Platonism—a work of Philo Judeus.

Sapientia thus lacks, particularly for Protestants, any firm claim to divine inspiration. But Middleton may have considered it attractive for a couple of reasons. First, the thirteenth chapter of Sapientia closely parallels the beginning of Paul's Epistle to the Romans—the central text of Reformed theology. Moreover, the book's precarious status may have made it more accessible to literary experimentation; in Biblical Drama in England (1968), Murray Roston notes that Protestant biblical drama avoids tampering with canonical Scripture, preferring instead to adapt the less fearfully sacred material found in the Apocrypha and the first-century Jewish historian Josephus. Although the same tacit interdict did not fall so heavily on non-dramatic biblical poetry, Middleton may have been more comfortable with drastically rewriting a non-canonical text than with embroidering the Word of God. For The Wisdom of Solomon spills over the confines of paraphrase, more than sixty per cent of the poem having no biblical equivalent; even where Middleton's lines do have some recognizable basis in Sapientia, their relation tends to be aggressively contrapuntal rather than faithfully paraphrastic. Middleton's liberties with his ostensible source increase in the latter half of the poem, an independence signalled by a shift in speaker from the fictional 'Solomon' of Sapientia to the authorial 'I' that suddenly intrudes at 10.67. One might more accurately describe the poem as a creative misreading than a strict paraphrase.

Shand has suggested a general political context for the poem, noting that Middleton several times hints at parallels between Elizabeth and Wisdom, particularly his depiction of the latter as Astraea, a queen, and as 'barren' (6.1–18, 8.1–7, 4.12). The remainder of what little scholarship exists on The Wisdom of Solomon focuses rather narrowly on the poem's rhetoric. Norman Brittin's 1946 dissertation treats the work as a typically Elizabethan academic exercise in figural hyperactivity. However, Brittin's staggering enumeration of schemes and tropes does not convey the peculiar flavour of Middleton's verse, which differs radically from the 'Platonic', metaphysical splendour suffusing Sapientia's celebration of Wisdom's radiance and majesty. Middleton is at his worst when trying to evoke cosmic glory: compare the Geneva Bible's 'for while all things were in quiet silence, and the night was in the midst of her swift course, Thine almighty word leaped down from heaven out of thy royal throne' (18:14–15) with Middleton's ponderous

When Phoebe's axletree was limned with pale,
 Pale which becometh night, night which is black
 Hemmed round about with gloomy-shining veil,
 Borne up by clouds, mounted on silence' back;
 And when night's horses, in the running wain,
 O'ertook the midst of their journey's pain;

Thy word, O Lord, descended from thy throne . . .
 (18.157-63)

Instead, The Wisdom of Solomon shows clear affinities to Renaissance emblems; the poetry is static, pictorial, and sententious. The descriptions of the 'fruitful tree' in 1.169-74 and the contrast between the cedar and the mushroom at 2.128-32 are typical, if rather flat, examples of Middleton's allegorical emblems.

Often these images have a grotesque vividness. Bizarre figures peer from the stanzas: the voracious demon-lover of 1.109-12, the 'hungry cannibals' who 'suck your pelican to death' (19.121-6), the dying men digging their graves with their own tears (19.13-18). Pastoral and macabre merge disconcertingly in Middleton's comparison of death to 'Sol bestrid[ing] his golden mountain's top, | Lightning heaven's tapers with his living fire' (2.43-4) and his description of divine vengeance as resembling 'dew-distilling drops [that] fall from the morn' (11.167). The finest of Middleton's images have the morbid beauty one associates with Jeremy Taylor, evoking haunting scenes of bodily decay where 'Man, being grass, is hopped and grazed upon, | With sucking grasshoppers of weeping dew' (16.73-4) and dying swans fill 'the choir of waves with laving pain, | Yet dancing in their wail' (19.183-4). At times the poetry has an almost surreal quality: the strange 'icy jaw of Phoebe's hair' (19.202) and 'dead carcass of descending spirit' (1.134). The rhetorical exemplum dissolves into the resonant illogic of dreams.

A bewilderingly unstable landscape, indistinct chronology, and grammatical ambiguities intensify one's sense of surreal dislocation. Pronouns often have no discernible referent. Who, for example, is the 'Thou' that suddenly appears at 4.67 or the 'You' in 10.171-4? Similarly, spatio-temporal indicators point enigmatically into a referential miasma. Beginning at 5.181, Middleton seems to be describing an impending apocalypse, in which 'All heaven shall be in arms against earth's world'; the remainder of this chapter continues in the future tense, but the following chapter unexpectedly begins, 'After this conflict between God and man, | Remorse took harbour in God's angry breast' (6.1-2). Future metamorphizes into past; one cannot tell whether the conclusion to Chapter 5 depicts the Apocalypse or the Deluge or some unknown historical event. Similarly, 3.87-8 describes 'here' as a place void of 'justice,' the habitation of 'woe and sorrow,' but at 18.103-4 Middleton declares that 'Now righteousness bears sway, and vice put down, | Virtue is queen, treading on mischief's head'. Again, we do not know whether 'here' and 'now' refer to Elizabethan England, a biblical episode, a moment in allegorical time, or nothing in particular. In place of consistent chronology or spatial orientation, the poem unfurls a sequence of images that mysteriously surface and recede: a nameless, dead 'face, heaving her heavy eyelids up | From forth the chamber of eternal night' (5.7-8), the demonic 'empress of the night' (10.46), the strange 'newly created beasts' that march past 'profane, ill-limned, pale spectacles' (11.127-34), the bodiless 'tigers' jaws' (16.43), an unidentified father bound in prison, facing imminent death (2.211-16). This procession of obscure creatures gives the poem a phantasmagoric atmosphere, like a nightmarish dream-vision or Spenser on acid.

The disorientation increases in the latter half of the poem (Chapters 10-19), which in Sapientia rehearses the Old Testament stories of the Israelites' providential deliverance from their enemies. Middleton either omits or confuses the historical allusions, so that the reader cannot possibly tell that the passages refer to Abraham, Moses, Joseph, and Jacob. Instead, historical events become psychological allegory, symbols of fear, horror, and misery. The seventeenth chapter of Sapientia recounts the plague of darkness afflicting the Egyptians; in Middleton, both plague and Egyptians disappear, leaving only a terrifying darkness where 'grief's pris'ners . . . | Slept in night's dungeon insupportable, | Lodged in night's horror too endurable' (17.136-8). The darkness turns into a troubled sleep, a 'hollow cave where visions come and go, | Where serpents hiss, where mandrakes groan and creep!' (17.141-2)—nightmares reminiscent of the 'dire and dreadful dreams' Calvin ascribes to the wicked (Institutes 1.3.2). The 'hollow cave' is one of a series of images of caverns, tombs, and concavities recurring throughout Middleton's poem as figures of the obscure centre of personality, from whose darkness arise monstrous visions and agonized cries: 'sobs' piercing the 'deep cistern of the centre's breast', 'vaults [that] | Sound and resound their old-new-weeping faults' (18.109-20). Sapientia celebrates the power of God over Israel's enemies; Middleton writes about the nightmares tormenting the evil conscience.

The Wisdom of Solomon's erasure of Old Testament history seems surprising, given the centrality of these narratives in Reformed theology. In other respects, however, the poem follows the ideological contours of sixteenth-century English Protestantism. Sometimes—as in the stanzas on social justice and the responsibilities of rulers (6.61-96, 217-28)—these loci approximate the corresponding biblical passage (6:9-11, 24); at other times they seem Middleton's additions. To this latter category belong the emphases on obedience, discipline, and submission to God (1.161, 6.55-6, 8.25-36, 9.61-6). One also occasionally notes an implicit anti-Romanist bias, most evidently in Middleton's reference to idols as 'saints' (13.111) and his total omission of Sapientia's account of the redemptive, mediating role of the Aaronic priesthood (18:21-24), which Middleton turns into an encomium on the divine Word (18.223-46). The same theological animus may explain the curious removal of all typological allusions from the poem (see note to 2.211-16). Roman Catholic exegetes defended Sapientia's canonicity on the ground that its second chapter prophesies Christ's torture and death at the hands of his enemies (2:12-21). Middleton, conversely, may have been uncomfortable with the notion that an apocryphal text could attain prophetic vision and therefore alters the passage to make its Christological implications unrecognizable.

The Wisdom of Solomon, in fact, consistently rewrites Sapientia, often in a Calvinist direction but at times with implications less easy to categorize. The assertion that 'God made thy thought' (1.67) seems an oblique reference to predestination; the description of God at 12.97-102 shows the marks of Protestant voluntarism. Likewise 13.49-60 replaces the biblical affirmation that 'by the greatness and beauty of the creatures proportionably the maker of them is seen' (13:5 in the Authorized Version; the Geneva translation is garbled here) with a defence of the absolute freedom of God vis-à-vis his creation; the non-analogical relation between 'workman' and 'hand-work' replaces Sapientia's ontological correspondences.

The most overt and drastic misreading, however, comes at 10.89-132, where Middleton takes the Bible's periphrastic allusions to Jacob as a continuation of the story of Cain begun earlier in the tenth chapter. That is, he assimilates the first murderer and the godly patriarch into a single figure, who becomes the type of the repentant and redeemed sinner. Cain was 'fetched again by wisdom's power, | Had pardon for his deed, love for his lower' (10.95-6). This assimilation produces a narrative model of radical conversion effected by God's gratuitous mercy. This paradigm recurs repeatedly in Middleton's poem. Whereas Sapientia consistently contrasts the righteous and the wicked—usually the Egyptians and Hebrews—Middleton conflates the opposing figures, treating them as a single referent, as 'man' in general: 'man' who, although wicked, receives pardon, who is both punished and redeemed, whose corrupt nature is restored by divine grace (8.187-201, 11.73-108, 12.13-60, 12.121-32, 16.1-66, 18.13-36). Middleton's revisions tend to stress the total depravity of human nature, since the vices Sapientia attributes to the Egyptians become universal human characteristics, and simultaneously to underscore the radical otherness of a grace that redeems such creatures almost in spite of themselves. We are 'pressed down with vice's weights and mischief's gins' but God's 'pity is without a bound, | And sparest them which in some faults be found' (12.124-32).

The wedge Middleton drives between nature and grace—a polarity foreign to Sapientia—gives the poem a generally Calvinist structure. This label, however, while accurate, seems not quite adequate. A radical dualism pervades the whole poem, opposing nature to grace, mortality to eternity, earth to heaven. Middleton's additions to his biblical material often betray a sharp revulsion from the body, temporality, and the terrible burden of existence (7.1-60, 8.37-42, 8.187-96, 16.34). Echoes of Job announce

Happy is he that lives, twice he that dies,
Thrice happy he which neither lived nor died,
Which never saw the earth with mortal eyes,
Which never knew what miseries are tried. (4.85-8)

In Middleton's hands, in fact, the distinction between nature and grace takes a curious, almost gnostic, turn, where nature at moments seems an autonomous, demi-urgic force opposed to divine wisdom (7.77-84). The creation of Adam described in the opening stanzas of Chapter 10 thus appears to involve two stages: first nature produces a rough, 'unfashioned' creature, who then needs to be, as it were, licked into shape by Wisdom. The poem never speaks of nature as a law or instrument of God; it (or she) denotes a separate power, the principle at once of generation and mortality: a mother who 'loves the issues of her womb' and 'makes her lap their quiet-sleeping tomb' (11.181-3). Nature also, Middleton several times suggests, determines 'moral' character, making some persons bad, some good, in the same sense that it makes some trees oaks and some poplars (2.163-8, 3.19-21, 4.25-30, 5.145-54). Hence sin results from biology rather than wrong choice; the opening stanzas of Chapter 13, which debate whether evil derives from man or from nature, conclude: 'Why blame I men? 'Tis she [nature]... that weaves, | That weaves, that wafts unto destruction's pen'.

A related quasi-gnostic anthropology informs Middleton's representation of the relation between body and soul. The body seems an alien shell or burden, enclosing and weighing down a divine emanation-spirit; the speaker thus equates Wisdom with 'my pure soul, locked in my body's grave' (8.106; cf. 7.13-24, 8.187-92, 10.151-4, 12.1-6, 12.229-30, 15.71-2, 16.133). At one point he describes Wisdom as his 'face' or 'form' (9.101-3), apparently a reflection or mirror of the self apprehended as an external and yet interior presence—as both 'my map' and 'shape of my thought'. Wisdom—one's 'pure soul' or conscience—seems less part of the self than a divine being who enters and transforms what Middleton terms our 'clayey lumps of pain' (12.114).

Hence in this life the righteous are strangers in a strange land, apparently unable or unwilling to act; they have 'no deeds', 'no show of store', but simply 'wait death's hour', knowing 'death to be the way to rest' (4.78-83). In an extraordinary passage, Middleton compares the good man to a fatally wounded lion, who in his agony rends 'the harbour of his body's cage; | Scorning the base-housed earth, mounts to the sky' (16.97-101). The soul claws with suicidal violence at its mortal prison. Innocent III might have appreciated such sentiments, but they scarcely suggest the ethical, reforming temper of urban Protestantism.

These disquieting and not-quite-orthodox oppositions between the realms of nature and spirit culminate in the concluding apocalypse of 19.163–210. In Sapientia, the corresponding passage (19:18–22) forms a rather obscure coda, apparently intended to give a ‘scientific’ explanation for such miracles as the parting of the Red Sea and the ten plagues by comparing these disruptions of natural phenomena to rearranging a sequence of musical notes. Middleton, however, excises the reference to Exodus, evoking instead a fantastic vision where each creature undergoes metamorphosis, so that sparrows sing like larks, nightingales fall silent, eagles fly below sparrows, and so forth. The irruption of supernatural power inverts natural law—or rather, as Middleton puts it, at the approach of God, ‘nature slew herself’ (19.205). This apocalypse thus repeats on a cosmic scale the individual’s drastic conversion as divine Wisdom penetrates its sinful flesh, for grace does not perfect nature but shatters it.

One more topic deserves consideration. While it seems futile to comb The Wisdom of Solomon for anticipations of Middleton’s mature style, the work’s repeated evocations of ‘tragedy’ and the ‘tragic’ are not without interest in light of the poet’s subsequent career. Although Middleton’s later understanding of tragedy need not be identical to his youthful intuitions, his earlier use of the term may elucidate the trajectory linking the Elizabethan biblical poet to the Stuart dramatist.

The word first occurs in the beginning of the second chapter, as part of the long prosopopoeia spoken by the ungodly. They defend their libertine pursuit of momentary pleasures on the ground that ‘our life [is] but our life’s tragedy, | Extinguished in a momentary time’ by the bleak finality of death (2.31–2). Thus, for unbelievers, mortality is tragedy. In Wisdom, this is almost always tragedy’s primary sense. At 4.6, ‘tragedy’ means simply ‘death’. At 17.161 the speaker commands ‘Pull in thy head, thou sorrow’s tragedy’, and then goes on to define this (apparently snail-like) tragedy in what may be the only wholly successful stanza of the poem:

The merry shepherd cannot walk alone,
Tuning sweet madrigals of harvest’s joy,
Carving love’s roundelays on every stone,
Hanging on every tree some amorous toy,
But thou with sorrow interlines his song,
Opening thy jaws of death to do him wrong.

Et in Arcadia ego. The intrusion of death gives all plots their tragic endings—the snap-shut of tragedy’s fatal jaws. Middleton further adumbrates ‘sorrow’s tragedy’ in the following stanza, where this grotesque allegorical figure (a cross between a snail and a tyrannosaur?) metamorphoses into a second image of death-in-life. The nightmare visions that well up from the ‘hollow cave’ (17.133–56) and the toothy monster lying in wait for the merry shepherd are ‘poisoned buds from Acherontic stalk’—hell-flowers pushing up into the garden and infecting the air with a miasmatic and ‘gloomy darkness’ (17.171–2).

Again at 18.128 Middleton evokes the tragic implications of mortality. Here, however, tragedy signifies less the impinging of death upon life than the meaninglessness of individual achievement and status in the face of universal mortality. King, subject, and slave become undifferentiated ‘dead carcasses’ in a charnel ‘dead scene’ that bows down before ‘the tragic cypress of lament’, as though the tombs were suppliants prostrating themselves before the towering, funereal trees. The syntax of the passage is confusing, but Middleton seems to suggest that the tragic lament records the ‘knowledge’ of death’s brutal levelling—that this knowledge constitutes the laments of the dead, whose sobs and weeping issue from their tombs (18.109–20).

The dead here seem to be the damned. As Middleton conflates nature and evil, so he makes no firm distinction between mortality and eternal punishment; for unbelievers, ‘Earth is their hell’ (11.78) or rather earth and hell together constitute a realm of pain, wickedness, and despair, cut off from the consoling radiance of supernal Wisdom. Hence Middleton at times associates tragedy with the penal agony of the damned and the suffering of sinners, a suffering at once the consequence of their own wickedness and a punishment imposed by divine justice (5.13–14, 13.153–4, 18.73–6). The tragic darkness shadowing this composite realm of nature and sin appears most starkly at 10.25–34, which recounts the murder of Abel. The murder is itself ‘death’s tragedy’, but Middleton pursues the theatrical metaphor, making the earth the tragic chorus, as it were, for ‘A weeping part had earth in that same play, | For she did weep herself to death that day’. But the earth’s tears, ‘distilled from millions of her eyes’, cause the Flood, making ‘her womb an overflowing clime’. The mother-earth who weeps for her lost children also destroys them; she is both source and grave for, in Yeats’s words, ‘those dying generations’. The tragic play that climaxes in the Flood simultaneously enacts divine vengeance against sin and nature’s ineluctable cycles of birth and death. Mortality is, it would seem, its own punishment.

Middleton’s notion of tragedy thus differs radically from the typical definitions given in Renaissance poetics. For Middleton, tragedy does not involve extraordinary calamities nor the fall of princes nor Fortune’s caprice; it has no politics and no heroes. Instead, in The Wisdom of Solomon ‘tragedy’ signifies something close to the Calvinist state of fallen nature. The opening chapter of the Institutes thus defines the human condition as a composite of ‘miserics . . . infamies . . . unhappiness . . . ignorance, vanity, poverty, infirmity . . . depravity and corruption’. So too Middleton’s tragic creatures are sinful, hopeless, and agonizingly mortal. The ‘gnostic’ undertones in Middleton’s poem are less un-Calvinist than selectively Calvinist: the result of his obsessive focus on the ruined world of homo naturalis, a nightmare shadow-world that is only briefly and sporadically punctured by an alien transcendence bringing pardon and renewal. Hence, for all the syntactic and prosodic defects of its style, The Wisdom of Solomon’s surreal and murky allegorical imagery has, at least in certain passages, its own peculiarly haunting power as the decorous symbol for this tragic universe of unbelief in which vermilion worms and ‘grasshoppers of weeping dew’ suck on corpses (16.73–8) and the ‘often-weeping eyes of dry lament | ...pour forth burning water of despair’ (16.157–8).

SEE ALSO

Textual introduction and apparatus: Companion, 461Authorship and date: Companion, 335

The Wisdom of Solomon Paraphrased

A Jove surgit opus.

Epistles To the right honourable and my very good lord, Robert Devereux, Earl of Essex and Ewe, Viscount of Hereford, Lord Ferrers of Chartley, Boucher, and Louvaine, Master of Her Majesty’s Horse and Ordnance, Knight of the Honourable Order of the Garter, and one of Her Majesty’s most honourable Privy Council

The summer’s harvest, right honourable, is long since reaped, and now it is sowing time again. Behold, I have scattered a few seeds upon the young ground of unskillfulness. If it bear fruit, my labour is well bestowed, but if it be barren, I shall have less joy to set more. The husbandman observes the courses of the moon, I the forces of your favour; he desireth sunshine, I cheerful countenance, which once obtained, my harvest of joy will soon be ripened. My seeds as yet lodge in the bosom of the earth like infants upon the lap of a favourite, wanting the budding springtime of their growth, not knowing the east of their glory, the west of their quietness, the south of their summer, the north of their winter. But if the beams of your aspects lighten the small moiety of a smaller implanting, I shall have an everyday harvest, a fruition of content, a branch of felicity.

Your Honour’s, addicted in all observance,
Thomas Middleton

To the Gentlemen Readers

Gentlemen, I give you the surveyance of my new-bought ground, and will only stand unto your verdicts. I fear me, that the acres of my field pass the ankers of my seed. If wanting seed, then I hope it will not be too much seeded. This is my bare excuse. But trust me, had my wit been sufficient to maintain the freedom of my will, then both should have been answerable to your wishes. Yet nevertheless think of it as a willing, though not a fulfilling moiety. But what mean I? While I thus argue, Momus and Zoilus, those two ravens, devour my seed because I lack a scarecrow. Indeed, so I may have less than I have, when such foul-gutted ravens swallow up my portion. If you gape for stuffing, hie you to dead carrion carcasses, and make them your ordinaries. I beseech you, gentlemen, let me have your aid, and as you have seen the first practice of my husbandry in sowing, so let me have your helping hands unto my reaping.

Yours, devoted in friendship,
Thomas Middleton

Epigraph A Jove surgit opus. Of God the work arises. First half of the Ovidian phrase (Fasti 5.111) with which Middleton will devoutly close the poem at 19.216.1; later the epigraph to the manuscript version of Hubburd. The intermingling of classical with Christian elements, from passing representations of the sun as Phoebus or Titan, to extended passages as when Astraea’s voice replaces that of Solomon in Chapter Six, is not unusual; sometimes, as in Ghost (see 479–562 and Introduction), it may embody telling thematic complexity or conflict.

Epistles.2 Robert Devereux, Earl of Essex ambitious favourite of Elizabeth I, executed for his ill-fated rebellion against the Queen in February 1601
4 Master . . . Ordnance director of the Queen’s military stores and artillery; Essex was appointed to the post 18 March 1597, just prior to the composition of this dedication.
12 husbandman farmer
20 aspects favourable looks or glances, as from the sun moiety portion 28 my field the Apocryphal Sapientia Solomonis, identified as Geneva in this commentary

ankers dry measures; OED records no other occurrence of this sense.
29 If wanting seed if lacking in creative invention
30 seeded gone to seed; overgrown
34 Momus Greek god of ridicule, criticism
35 Zoilus acerbic Greek critic
36 scarecrow apparently, a protective patron, though the figure is less than flattering so thus 37 you Momus and Zoilus
39 ordinaries tavern meals

Chapter One

Verse 1	Wisdom, elixir of the purest life, Hath taught her lesson to judicial views, To those that judge a cause and end a strife, Which sits in judgement's seat, and justice use: 5 A lesson worthy of divinest ear, Quintessence of a true divinest fear.	'O foolish men, to war against your bliss! O hateful hearts, where wisdom never reigned! O wicked thoughts, which ever thought amiss! What have you reaped? What pleasure have you gained? A fruit in show, a pleasure to decay: This have you got by keeping folly's way.	Verse 4 40
10	Unwilling that exordium should retain Her life-infusing speech, doth thus begin: 'You,' quoth she, 'that give remedy or pain, Love justice, for injustice is a sin. 15 Give unto God his due, his reverent style, And rather use simplicity than guile.	'For wisdom's harvest is with folly nipped, And, with the winter of your vice's frost, Her fruit all scattered, her implanting ripped, Her name decayed, her fruition lost: Nor can she prosper in a plot of vice, Gaining no summer's warmth, but winter's ice.	45
Verse 2	'For him, that guides the radiant eye of day, Sitting in his star-chamber of the sky, 15 The horizons and hemispheres obey, And winds, the fillers of vacuity. Much less should man tempt God, when all obey, But rather be a guide, and lead the way.	'Thou barren earth, where virtues never bud, Thou fruitless womb, where never fruits abide, And thou dry withered sap which bears no good, But the dishonour of thy proud heart's pride: A seat of all deceit, deceit deceived, Thy bliss a woe, thy woe of bliss bereaved.	Verse 5 50
20	'For tempting argues but a sin's attempt. Temptation is to sin associate. So doing, thou from God art clean exempt, Whose love is never placed in his love's hate. He will be found not of a tempting mind, But found of those which he doth faithful find.	'This place of night hath left no place for day. Here never shines the sun of discipline, But mischief, clad in sable night's array, Thought's apparition, evil angel's sign: These reign enhoused with their mother, night, To cloud the day of clearest wisdom's light.	55 60
Verse 3	'Temptation rather separates from God, Converting goodness from the thing it was, Heaping the indignation of his rod To bruise our bodies like a brittle glass: 30 For wicked thoughts have still a wicked end, In making God our foe, which was our friend.	'O you that practise to be chief in sin, Love's hate, hate's friend, friend's foe, foe's follower, What do you gain? What merit do you win, To be blaspheming vice's practiser? Your gain is wisdom's everlasting hate, Your merit grief, your grief your life's debate.	Verse 6 65
35	'They muster up revenge, encamp our hate, Undoing what before they meant to do, Stirring up anger and unlucky fate, Making the earth their friend, the heaven their foe: But when heaven's guide makes manifest his power, The earth, their friend, doth them like foes devour.	'Thou canst not hide thy thought. God made thy thought. Let this thy caveat be for thinking ill. Thou know'st that Christ thy living freedom bought, To live on earth according to his will. God being thy creator, Christ thy bliss, Why dost thou err? Why dost thou do amiss?	70

1 The Judges of the earth are enjoined by Wisdom to seek God, to refrain from death-dealing slander and complaint, to know justice and righteousness from vice. (The summary headnotes to each chapter are editorial.)

Convenient compendia of the exegetical tradition on the Sapientia Solomonis can be found in the Biblia Sacra (1617), which gives patristic and medieval glosses; Cornelius a Lapide's Commentarius in librum Sapientiae (1627), which summarizes patristic, medieval, and Tridentine readings; and the Critici sacri (1698), which reprints the major scholarly commentaries from the mid-fifteenth through the mid-seventeenth centuries (D.S.).

6 fear of God, which is traditionally the beginning of wisdom

7 exordium introductory portion of a discourse

retain restrain, hinder

10 justice 'righteousness' (Geneva)

12 simplicity freedom from deceit; sincerity

14 star-chamber playing on the name of the judicial court at Westminster

15 horizons and hemispheres earth and heaven

21 exempt cut off, excluded

23 of by

25 Temptation 'wicked thoughts' (Geneva)

29 still always, constantly

31 encamp organize into a military camp (continuing the figure initiated by 'muster')

43 folly 'a wicked heart' (Geneva)

56 sun 'holy Spirit' (Geneva)

discipline instruction in the mysteries of faith

57 mischief harm or evil caused by a particular agent; often, as perhaps here, a hurtful character

68 caveat warning (regularly disyllabic in this text)

69 Christ not, of course, in Geneva

72 err go astray; sin

Verse 7	'He is both judge and witness of thy deeds. He knows the volume which thy heart contains.		'Thy roaring vices' noise hath cloyed his ears. Like foaming waves they have o'erwhelmed thy joy.	115
75	Christ skips thy faults, only thy virtue reads, Redeeming thee from all thy vice's pains. O happy crown of mortal man's content, Sent for our joy, our joy in being sent!		Thy murmurings, which thy whole body bears, Hath bred thy wail, thy wail thy life's annoy. Unhappy thoughts, to make a soul's decay! Unhappy soul, in suffering thoughts to sway!	120
80	'Then sham'st thou not to err, to sin, to stray, To come to composition with thy vice, With new-purged feet to tread the oldest way, Lending new sense unto thy old device? Thy shame might flow in thy sin-flowing face, Rather than ebb to make an ebb of grace.		'Then, sith the height of man's felicity Is plunged within the puddle of misdeeds, And wades amongst discredit's infamy, Blasting the merit of his virtue's seeds, Beware of murmuring, the chiefest ill, From whence all sin, all vice, all pains distill.	Verse 11 125
Verse 8	'For he which rules the orb of heaven and earth, And the unequal course of every star, Did know man's thoughts and secrets at his birth, Whether inclined to peace or discord's jar. He knows what man will be ere he be man, And all his deeds in his life's living span.		'O heavy doom, proceeding from a tongue! Heavy-light tongue, tongue to thy own decay! In virtue weak, in wickedness too strong, To mischief prone, from goodness gone astray; Hammer to forge misdeeds, to temper lies, Selling thy life to death, thy soul to cries.	130
90	'Then 'tis impossible that earth can hide Unrighteous actions from a righteous God, For he can see their feet in sin that slide, And those that lodge in righteousness' abode. He will extend his mercy on the good, His wrath on those in whom no virtues bud.		'Must death needs pay the ransom of thy sin With the dead carcass of descending spirit? Wilt thou of force be snarèd in his gin, And place thy error in destruction's merit? Life, seek not for thy death; death comes unsought, Buying the life which not long since was bought.	Verse 12 135
Verse 9	'Many there be that after trespass done Will seek a covert for to hide their shame, And range about the earth, thinking to shun God's heavy wrath and meritorious blame. They, thinking to fly sin, run into sin, And think to end, when they do new begin.		'Death and destruction never needs a call: They are attendants on life's pilgrimage, And life to them is as their playing ball, Grounded upon destruction's anchorage. Seek not for that which unsought will betide. Ne'er wants destruction a provoking guide.	140
100	'God made the earth; the earth denies their suit, Nor can they harbour in the centre's womb. God knows their thoughts although their tongues be mute, And hears the sounds from forth their bodies' tomb. Sounds? Ah, no sounds, but man himself he hears, Too true a voice of man's most falsest fears.		'Will you needs act your own destruction? Will you needs harbour your own overthrow? Or will you cause your own eversìon, Beginning with despair, ending with woe? Then dye your hearts in tyranny's array, To make acquittance of destruction's pay.	Verse 13 150
105	'O see destruction hovering o'er thy head, Mantling herself in wickedness' array, Hoping to make thy body as her bed, Thy vice her nutriment, thy soul her prey. Thou hast forsaken him that was thy guide, And see what follows to assuage thy pride.		'What do you meditate but on your death? What do you practise but your living fall? Who of you all have any virtue's breath, But ready armèd at a mischief's call? God is not pleasèd at your vice's savour, But you best pleasèd when you lose his favour.	155
Verse 10

73 He 'the Spirit of the Lord' (Geneva)

80 come to composition enter into a compromising agreement

82 device wilful invention; embedded in this stanza ('err', 'stray', 'way', 'device') is the language of the Elizabethan General Confession.

88 jar dissension

100 meritorious merited

104 centre's womb midpoint of the earth

109-10 O see destruction... array This emblematic description repeats the elements of the presentation of 'mischief' at 57.

117 murmurings grumblings

118 annoy vexation, trouble

121 sith since

124 Blasting ruining, discrediting

126 distill trickle; gently flow

127 doom judgement proceeding... tongue 'The mouth that speaketh lies, slayeth the soul' (Geneva).

133 needs necessarily; emphatic when combined with 'must'

135 gin snare, trap, device

143 betide happen

147 eversìon overthrow

Verse 14 160	'He made not death to be your conqueror, But you to conquer over death and hell; Nor you to be destruction's servitor, Enhoused there where majesty should dwell. God made man to obey at his behest, And man to be obeyed of every beast.	A life must needs be short to them that dies, For life once dead in sin doth weakly live. These die in sin, and mask in death's disguise, And never think that death new life can give. They say life dead can never live again. O thoughts, O words, O deeds: fond, foolish, vain!	10
165	'He made not death to be our labour's hire, But we ourselves made death through our desert. Here never was the kingdom of hell-fire Before the brand was kindled in man's heart. Now man defieth God, all creatures man; Vice flourisheth, and virtue lieth wan.	Vile life, to harbour where such death abodes, Abodes worse than are thoughts, thoughts worse than words, Words half as ill as deeds, deeds sorrow's odes, Odes ill enchanters of too ill records: Thoughts, words, and deeds conjoined in one song, May cause an echo from destruction's tongue.	Verse 2 15
Verse 15	'O fruitful tree, whose root is always green, Whose blossoms ever bud, whose fruits increase, Whose top celestial virtue's seat hath been, Defended by the sovereignty of peace! This tree is righteousness. O happy tree, Immortalized by thine own decree!	Quoth they, 'tis chance whether we live or die, Born or abortive, be or never be. We worship fortune, she's our deity. If she denies, no vital breath have we. Here are we placèd in this orb of death. This breath once gone, we never look for breath.	20
175	'O hateful plant, whose root is always dry, Whose blossoms never bud, whose fruits decrease, On whom sits the infernal deity To take possession of so foul a lease! This plant is vice. O too unhappy plant, Ever to die, and never fill death's want!	'Between both life and death, both hope and fear, Between our joy and grief, bliss and despair, We here possess the fruit of what is here, Born ever for to die, and die death's heir. Our heritage is death annexed to life, Our portion death, our death an endless strife.	Verse 3 30
Verse 16 185	'Accursèd in thy growth, dead in thy root, Cankered with sin, shaken with every wind, Whose top doth nothing differ from the foot, Mischief the sap, and wickedness the rind: So the ungodly, like this withered tree, Is slack in doing good, in ill too free.	'What is our life but our life's tragedy, Extinguished in a momentary time? And life to murder life is cruelty, Unripely withering in a flow'ry prime. An urn of ashes pleasing but the shows, Once dry, the toiling spirit wand'ring goes.	35
190	'Like this their wicked growth, too fast, too slow: Too fast in sloth, too slow in virtue's haste. They think their vice a friend when 'tis a foe: In good, in wickedness, too slow, too fast. And as this tree decays, so do they all, Each one copartner of the other's fall.'	'Like as the traces of appearing clouds Gives way when Titan resalutes the sea, With new-changed flames gilding the ocean's floods, Kissing the cabinet where Thetis lay, So fares our life, when death doth give the wound: Our life is led by death, a captive bound.	Verse 4 40

Chapter Two

Verse 1 5	Indeed they do presage what will betide, With the misgiving verdict of misdeeds. They know a fall will follow after pride, And in so foul a heart grows many weeds. 'Our life is short,' quoth they. No, 'tis too long, Lengthened with evil thoughts and evil tongue.	'When Sol bestrides his golden mountain's top, Light'ning heaven's tapers with his living fire, All gloomy powers have their diurnal stop, And never gains the darkness they desire: So perisheth our name when we are dead, Ourselves ne'er called to mind, our deeds ne'er read.	45
----------------------	---	---	-----------

159 servitor manservant

161 behest command

163 hire wages

168 wan sickness; gloomy

188 sloth laziness, often in matters of faith (hence the merger of sloth with despair as one of the seven deadly sins)

2 The wicked speak out against the faithful,
but their speech is envious imaginings.

1 they 'the ungodly' (Geneva)

presage predict

betide happen

2 misgiving apprehensive

13-14 abodes, | Abodes shifting awkwardly from the verbal ('forebodes') to the substantive ('forebodings') for the sake of the anadiplosis

16 enchanters chanters, or singers

records musical notes

34 prime springtime; state of perfection

38 Titan the sun

40 cabinet boudoir

Thetis one of the Nereids; fig. the sea

43 Sol the sun

45 diurnal daily

Verse 5 'What is the time we have? What be our days?
 50 No time, but shadow of what time should be;
 Days in the place of hours which never stays,
 Beguiling sight of that which sight should see.
 As soon as they begin they have their fine,
 Ne'er wax, still wane, ne'er stay, but still decline.

55 'Life may be called the shadow of effect,
 Because the cloud of death doth shadow it;
 Nor can our life approaching death reject;
 They both in one for our election sit.
 Death follows life in ev'ry degree,
 60 But life to follow death you never see.

Verse 6 'Come we, whose old decrepit age doth halt
 Like limping winter, in our winter, sin.
 Faulty we know we are. Tush, what's a fault?
 A shadowed vision of destruction's gin.
 65 Our life begun with vice, so let it end;
 It is a servile labour to amend.

'We joyed in sin, and let our joys renew.
 We joyed in vice, and let our joys remain.
 To present pleasures future hopes ensue,
 70 And joy once lost, let us fetch back again.
 Although our age can lend no youthful pace,
 Yet let our minds follow our youthful race.

Verse 7 'What though old age lies heavy on our back,
 Anatomy of an age-crookèd clime?
 75 Let mind perform that which our bodies lack,
 And change old age into a youthful time.
 Two heavy things are more than one can bear:
 Black may the garments be, the body clear.

'Decaying things be needful of repair.
 80 Trees eaten out with years must needs decline.
 Nature in time with foul doth cloud her fair,
 Begirting youthful days with age's twine.
 We live, and while we live, come let us joy:
 To think of afterlife, 'tis but a toy.

Verse 8 'We know God made us in a living form,
 But we'll unmake, and make ourselves again:
 Unmake that which is made, like winter's storm,
 Make unmade things to aggravate our pain.
 God was our maker, and he made us good,
 90 But our descent springs from another blood.

'He made us for to live, we mean to die.
 He made the heaven our seat, we make the earth.

Each fashion makes a contrariety,
 God truest God, man falsest from his birth.'
 Quoth they, 'This earth shall be our chiefest heaven, 95 Our sin the anchor, and our vice the haven.

'Let heaven in earth, and earth in heaven consist. Verse 9
 This earth is heaven, this heaven is earthly heaven.
 Repugnant earth, repugnant heaven resist:
 We joy in earth, of other joys bereaven. 100
 This is the paradise of our delight:
 Here let us live, and die in heaven's spite.

'Here let the monuments of wanton sports
 Be seated in a wantonness' disguise,
 Closed in the circuit of venereal forts 105
 To feed the long-starved sight of amour's eyes.
 Be this the chronicle of our content,
 How we did sport on earth till sport was spent.

'But in the glory of the brightest day,
 Heaven's smoothest brow sometime is furrowèd,
 And clouds usurp the clime in dim array,
 Dark'ning the light which heaven had borrowèd.
 So in this earthly heaven we daily see That grief is placèd where delight should be.

'Here lives the righteous, bane unto their lives. 115
 O sound from forth the hollow cave of woe.
 Here lives age-crookèd fathers, widowed wives,
 Poor, and yet rich in fortune's overthrow.
 Let them not live, let us increase their want,
 Make barren their desire, augment their scant. 120

'Our law is correspondent to our doom. Verse
 Our law to doom, is dooming law's offence. 11
 Each one agreeth in the other's room
 To punish that which strives and wants defence.
 This, cedar-like, doth make the shrub to bend,
 125 When shrubs doth waste their force but to contend.

'The weakest power is subject to obey:
 The mushrooms humbly kiss the cedar's foot,
 The cedar flourishes when they decay,
 Because her strength is grounded on a root. 130
 We are the cedars, they the mushrooms be,
 Unabled shrubs unto an abled tree.

'Then sith the weaker gives the stronger place, Verse
 The young the elder, and the foot the top, 12
 The low the high, the hidden powers the face,
 All beasts the lion, every spring his stop, 135
 Let those which practise contrariety
 Be joined to us with inequality.

53 fine ending
 54 wax grow, increase still wane constantly decrease
 82 Begirting encircling
 93 contrariety opposition
 97 consist co-exist

99 Repugnant Opposed
 100 bereaven bereft 103 monuments of wanton sports 'some token of our pleasure' (Geneva)
 105 venereal pertaining to sexual desire
 (from Venus, goddess of love)

106 amour's amorous; or possibly love's; pronounced with the stress on the first syllable in the 15th-17th centuries
 115 bane destroyer
 120 scant need

140	‘They say that we offend. We say they do. Their blame is laid on us, our blame on them. They strike, and we retort the stricken blow: So in each garment there’s a differing hem. We end with contraries as they begun, Unequal sharing of what either won.’	The wicked, answering to the latter words, Begins to speak as much as speech affords:	185
Verses 13, 14	In this long conflict between tongue and tongue, Tongue new beginning what one tongue did end Made this cold battle hot in either’s wrong, And kept no pausing limits to contend. One tongue was echo to the other’s sound, 150 Which breathèd accents between mouth and ground.	‘One tongue must answer other tongue’s reply. Beginning boasts requires an ending fall. Words lively spoke do sometimes wordless die: If not, live echoes unto speeches call. 190 Let not the shadow smother up the deed: The outward leaf differs from inward seed.	190
155	He which hath virtue’s arms upon his shield Draws his descent from an eternal king. He knows discretion can make folly yield, Life conquer death, and vice a captive bring. 155 The other, tutored by his mother, sin, Respects nor deeds nor words, but hopes to win.	‘The shape and show of substance and effect Doth shape the substance in the shadow’s hue, And shadow, put in substance, will neglect The wonted shadow of not being true. Let substance follow substance, show a show, And let not substance for the shadow go.	Verse 18 195
Verses 15	The first, first essence of immortal life, Reproves the heart of thought, the eye of sight, The ear of hearing ill, the mind of strife, 160 The mouth of speech, the body of despite. Heart thinks, eyes sees, ears hears, minds meditate, Mouth utters both the soul and body’s hate.	‘He that could give such admonition, Such vaunting words, such words confirming vaunts, As if his tongue had mounted to ambition, Or climbed the turrets which vainglory haunts, Now let his father, if he be his son, Undo the knot which his proud boasts have spun.	200
165	But nature, differing in each nature’s kind, Makes differing hearts, each heart a differing thought. Some hath she made to see, some folly-blind, Some famous, some obscure, some good, some naught. So these which differeth in each nature’s reason, Had nature’s time, when time was out of season.	‘We are his enemies, his chain our hands, Our words his fetters, and our heart his cave; Our stern embracements are his servile bonds: Where is the helper now which he should have? In prison like himself, not to be found: He wanteth help himself to be unbound.	Verse 19 210
Verses 16	Quoth they, ‘He doth reprove our heart of thinking, Our eyes of sight, our ears of hearing ill, Our minds, our hearts in meditation linking, Our mouths in speaking of our bodies’ will. Because heart, sight, and mind do disagree, He’d make heart, sight, and mind of their decree.	‘Then sith thy father bears it patiently, To suffer torments, grief, rebuke, and blame, ’Tis needful thou shouldst bear equality, To see if meekness harbour in thy name. Help, father, for thy son in prison lies! Help, son, or else thy helpless father dies!’	215
175	‘He says our heart is blinded with our eyes, Our eyes are blinded with our blinded heart, Our bodies on both parts defiled lies, Our mouths the trumpets of our vices’ smart.’ Quoth he, ‘God is my father, I his son: 180 His ways I take, your wicked ways I shun.’	Thus is the righteous God and righteous man Drowned in oblivion with this vice’s reign. ‘God wanteth power,’ say they, ‘of what we can: The other would perform that which is vain. 220 Both faulty in one fault, and both alike Must have the stroke which our law’s judgements strike.	Verse 20 220
Verses 17	As meditated wrongs are deeper placed Within the deep cave of a wronged mind, So meditated words is never passed Before their sounds a settled harbour find.	‘He calls himself a son, from heaven’s descent. What can earth’s force avail ’gainst heaven’s defence? His life by immortality is lent: 225 Then how can punishment his wrath incense? Though death herself in his arraignment deck, He hath his life’s preserver at a beck.’	225

139 They ‘the righteous’ (Geneva, where it is singular)
196 wonted usual
199 He . . . admonition the righteous or godly man; Christ
203–16 Now let . . . dies! The words of the wicked apparently echo the taunting of the crucified Christ.

207 servile enslaving
211–16 The corresponding biblical passage (2:13–20) does not mention an imprisoned father. Virtually all pre-modern commentaries (including the notes to Geneva) take the passage, which describes the suffering of the righteous man at the hands of the wicked, as the prophecy of Christ’s passion. Middleton’s addition of the unnamed ‘father’ effectively eliminates any typological resonances (D.S.).

220 The other the righteous or godly man
228 beck tiny gesture of command

Verse As doth the basilisk with poisoned sight
 21 Blind every function of a mortal eye,
 Disarm the body's powers of vital might,
 Rob heart of thought, make living life to die,
 So doth the wicked with their vice's look
 Infect the spring of clearest virtue's brook.

235 This basilisk, mortality's chief foe,
 And to the heart's long-knitted artery,
 Doth sometime perish at her shadow's show,
 Pois'ning herself with her own poisoned eye.
 Needs must the sting fall out with over-harming,
 240 Needs must the tongue burn out in over-warming.

Verse So fares it with the practisers of vice:
 22 Laden with many venomous adders' stings,
 Sometimes are blinded with their own device,
 And tunes that song which their destruction sings.
 245 Their mischief blindeth their mischievous eyes,
 Like basilisks which in their shadow dies.

They go, and yet they cannot see their feet,
 Like blinded pilgrims in an unknown way:
 Blind in perceiving things which be most meet,
 250 But need nor sight nor guide to go astray.
 Tell them of good, they cannot understand;
 But tell them of a mischief, that's at hand.

Verses The basilisk was made to blind the sight,
 23, 24 The adder for to sting, the worm to creep,
 255 The viper to devour, the dog to bite,
 The nightingale to wake when others sleep.
 Only man differs from his maker's will,
 Undoing what is good, and doing ill.

A godlike face he had, a heavenly hue,
 260 Without corruption, image without spots,
 But now is metamorphosèd anew,
 Full of corruption, image full of blots,
 Blotted by him that is the plot of evil:
 Undone, corrupted, vanquished by the devil.

Chapter Three

Verse 1 But every cloud cannot hide Phoebus' face,
 Nor shut the casement of his living flame,
 Nor is there every soul which wanteth grace,
 Nor every heart seduced with mischief's name.
 5 Life cannot live without corruption;
 World cannot be without destruction.

229 basilisk fabulous reptile whose look was reputed to be fatal 236 long-knitted interlaced, intertwined;
 the arteries were considered to bear both blood and vital spirits.
 243 are they are

Nor is the body all corrupt, or world
 Bent wholly unto wickedness' assault.
 The adder is not always seen uncurled,
 Nor every soul found guilty in one fault.
 10 Some good, some bad: but those whom virtues guard,
 Heaven is their haven, comfort their reward.

Thrice-happy habitation of delight!
 Verse 2 Thrice-happy step of immortality!
 Thrice-happy souls, to gain such heavenly sight,
 15 Springing from heaven's perpetuity!
 O peaceful place! But O, thrice-peaceful souls,
 Whom neither threats, nor strife, nor wars controls!

They are not like the wicked, for they live;
 Verse 3 Nor they like to the righteous, for they die.
 20 Each of their lives a differing nature give:
 One thinks that life ends with mortality,
 And that the righteous never live again,
 But die as subjects to a grievous pain.

What labouring soul refuseth for to sweat,
 Verse 4 Knowing his hire, his payment, his reward,
 To suffer winter's cold and summer's heat,
 Assured of his labour's due regard?
 The bee with summer's toil will load her hive,
 30 In winter's frost to keep herself alive.

And what divinest spirit would not toil,
 And suffer many torments, many pains,
 This world's destruction, heavy labour's foil,
 When heaven is their hire, heaven's joy their gains?
 Who would not suffer torments for to die,
 35 When death's reward is immortality?

Pain is the entrance to eternal joy.
 Verse 5 Death endeth life, and death beginneth life:
 Beginneth happy, endeth in annoy,
 40 Begins immortal peace, ends mortal strife.
 Then, seeing death and pains bring joy and heaven,
 What need we fear death's pain when life is given?

Say sickness or infirmity's disease
 (As many harms hang over mortal heads)
 Should be his world's reward, yet heaven hath ease,
 45 A salve to cure, and quiet resting beds.
 God maketh in earth's world lament our pleasure,
 That in heaven's world delight might be our treasure.

Fair may the shadow be, the substance foul.
 Verse 6 After the trial followeth the trust.
 50 The clearest skin may have the foulest soul.
 The purest gold will sooner take the rust.

249 meet fitting, suitable 263 plot type, representation; OED records
 this sense only in Solomon.
 3 While the righteous and faithful are assured of eternal peace after worldly suffering, the ungodly are punished

eternally.
 1 Phoebus the sun
 2 casement hinged window
 33 foil defeat; also, as at 54, muck
 45 his death's

	The brook, though ne'er so clear, may take some soil. The heart, though ne'er so strong, may take some foil.		Then shall you see the judges of the earth Summoned with the trumpet of his ire, To give account and reck'ning from their birth, Whe'er worthy or unworthy of their hire. The godly shall receive their labour's trial, The wicked shall receive their joy's denial.	Verse 10
55	Wouldst thou be counted just? Make thyself just. O purify thy mire-bespotted heart! For God doth try thy actions ere he trust, Thy faith, thy deeds, thy words, and what thou art. He will receive no mud for clearest springs, Nor thy unrighteous words for righteous things.		They which did sleep in sin, and not regarded The poor man's fortune, prostrate at their feet, Even as they dealt, so shall they be rewarded, When they their toiled souls' destruction meet: From judges they petitioners shall be, Yet want the sight which they do sue to see.	100 105
Verse 7	As God is perfect God and perfect good, So he accepteth none but perfect minds. They ever prosper, flourish, live, and bud, Like blessed plants, far from destruction's winds:		That labour which is grounded on delight, That hope which reason doth enrich with hap, That merit which is placed in wisdom's might, Secure from mischief's bait or folly's clap, Wit's labour, reason's hope, and wisdom's merit, All three in one make one thrice-happy spirit.	Verse 11
65	Still bud, ne'er fade, still flourish, ne'er decay, Still rise, ne'er fall, still spring, ne'er fade away. Who would not covet to be such a plant? Who would not wish to stand in such a ground, Sith it doth neither fruit nor blessing want, Nor aught which in this plant might not be found? They are the righteous which enjoy this earth, The figure of an ever-bearing birth.		Why set I happiness fore mortal eyes, Which covets to be drenched in misery, Mantling their foolish minds in folly's guise, Despising wisdom's perpetuity? Sin's labour, folly's hope, and vice's merit: These three in one make a thrice-cursèd spirit.	115 120
Verse 8	The small is always subject to the great, The young to him which is of elder time, The lowest place unto the highest seat, And pale-faced Phoebe to bright Phoebus' clime. Vice is not governor of virtue's place, But blushes for to see so bright a face.		Vain hope must needs consist in what is vain. All foolish labours flows from folly's tears. Unprofitable works proceed from pain, And pain ill labour's duest guerdon bears. Three vanities in one, and one in three, Make three pains one, and one uncertainty.	Verse 12 125
80	Virtue is chief, and virtue will be chief: Chief good, and chief Astraea, justice' mate, Both for to punish and to yield relief, And have dominion over every state, To right the wrongs which wickedness hath done, Delivering nations from life-lasting moan.		A wicked king makes a more wicked land. Heads once infected soon corrupts the feet. If the tree falls, the branches cannot stand, Nor children, be their parents indiscreet. The man infects the wife, the wife the child, Like birds which in one nest be all defiled.	130
Verse 9	O you whose causes plungeth in despair, Sad-faced petitioners with grief's request, What seek you? Here's nor justice nor her heir, But woe and sorrow with death's dumb arrest. Turn up your woe-blind eyes unto the sky: There sits the judge can yield you remedy.		The field which never was ordained to bear Is happier far than a still-tillèd ground: This sleeps with quietness in every year, The other cursed if any tares be found. The barren happier than she that bears: This brings forth joy, the other tares and tears.	Verse 13 135
90	Trust in his power. He is the truest God: True God, true judge, true justice, and true guide. All truth is placèd in his truth's abode, All virtues seated at his virtuous side. He will regard your suit, and ease your plaint, And mollify your misery's constraint.		The eunuch never lay in vice's bed. The barren woman never brought forth sin. These two in heaven's happiness are led: She fruit in soul, he fruit in faith doth win.	Verse 14
76	Phoebe the moon	continuing the legal imagery of 'suit' and	112 clap stroke, blow
80	Astraea goddess of justice, associated with Virgo; sometimes a complimentary persona of Elizabeth I	'plaint' in 95	124 duest guerdon most deserved reward
96	mollify soften	106 toiled exhausted; trapped as in a toil or net	138 tares weeds constraint affliction, distress; but also	108 sight . . . see heaven	139 never . . . bed 'with his hands hath not wrought iniquity, nor imagined wicked things against God' (Geneva)
		110 hap good fortune

	O rare and happy man, forever blest! O rare and happy woman, heaven's guest!		Or live they long, or die they suddenly, They have nor hope, nor comfort of reward. Their hope of comfort is iniquity, The bar by which they from their joys are barred. O old-new end, made to begin new grief! O new beginning, end of old relief!	190
Verse 15	Who seeks to reap before the corn be ripe? Who looks for harvest among winter's frost? Or who in grief will follow pleasure's pipe? What mariner can sail upon the coast? That which is done in time is done in season, 150 And things done out of time is out of reason.
	The glorious labour is in doing good, In time's observance, and in nature's will, Whose fruit is also glorious for our food, If glory may consist in labour's skill, 155 Whose root is wisdom, which shall never wither, But spring, and sprout, and love, and live together.		Chapter Four If happiness may harbour in content, If life in love, if love in better life, Then unto many happiness is lent, And long-departed joy might then be rife: Some happy if they live, some if they die, Happy in life, happy in tragedy.	Verse 1 5
Verse 16	But every ground doth not bear blessed plants, Nor every plant brings forth expected fruit. What this same ground may have, another wants, 160 Nor are all causes answered with one suit. That tree whose root is sound, whose grounding strong, May firmly stand when others lie along.		Content is happiness because content. Bareness and barrenness is virtue's grace: Bare because wealth to poverty is bent, Barren in that it scorns ill fortune's place. The barren earth is barren of her tares, The barren woman barren of her cares.	10
	View nature's beauty, mark her changing hue: She is not always foul, nor always fair. 165 Chaste and unchaste she is, true and untrue, And some springs from her in a lustful air. And these adulterers be, whose seed shall perish: Never shall lust and wickedness long flourish.		The soul of virtue is eternity, All-filling essence of divinest rage, And virtue's true eternal memory Is barrenness, her soul's eternal gage. O happy soul, that is engaged there, And pawns his life that barren badge to wear!	Verse 2 15
Verse 17	Although the flint be hard, the water soft, Yet is it mollified with lightest drops. Hard is the water when the wind's aloft, Small things in time may vanquish greatest stops. The longer grows the tree, the greater moss, The longer soil remains, the more the dross.		See how the multitude, with humble hearts, Lies prostrate for to welcome her return. See how they mourn and wail when she departs. See how they make their tears her trophy's urn. Being present, they desire her; being gone, Their hot desire is turned to hotter moan.	20
175	The longer that the wicked lives on earth, The greater is their pain, their sin, their shame, The greater vice's reign and virtue's dearth, The greater goodness' lack and mischief's name. When in their youth no honour they could get, 180 Old age could never pay so young a debt.		As everyone hath not one nature's mould, So everyone hath not one nature's mind. Some think that dross which others take for gold. Each difference cometh from a differing kind. Some do despise what others do embrace, Some praise the thing which others do disgrace.	Verse 3 30
Verses 18, 19	To place an honour in dishonour's place, Were but to make disparagement of both. Both enemies, they could not brook the case, For honour to subvert dishonour's growth. 185 Dishonour will not change for honour's room: She hopes to stay after their bodies' doom.		The barren doth embrace their barrenness, And hold it as a virtue worthy meed. The other calls conception happiness, And hold it as a virtue-worthy deed. The one is firmly grounded on a rock, The other billows game and tempests mock.	35

147 follow pleasure's pipe dance to wanton tunes
160 causes cases in law
166 some...air some people are naturally born lecherous
172 stops obstacles
174 dross impure matter

187 Or...or Whether...or
190 bar obstacle; objection which completely invalidates a legal claim or plea
4 Of the salvation of the righteous, despite the lures of worldly pleasure, and of the spiritual blindness of the unrighteous, whose hearts cannot see God's grace.

4 rife flourishing, abundant, common, free
14 rage creative fervour
16 gage pledge, security, badge
22 trophy's memory's?
32 meed reward
36 game make sport of

Verse 4 Sometime the nettle groweth with the rose. The nettle hath a sting, the rose a thorn. This stings the hand, the other pricks the nose, 40 Harming that scent which her sweet birth had borne. Weeds among herbs, herbs among weeds are found: Tares in the mantle of a corny ground. The nettle's growth is fast, the rose's slow. The weeds outgrow the herbs, the tares the corn. 45 These may be well compared to vice's show, Which covets for to grow ere it be born. As greatest danger doth pursue fast going, So greatest danger doth ensue fast growing. Verse 5 The tallest cedar hath the greatest wind. 50 The highest tree is subject unto falls. High-soaring eagles soon are stricken blind. The tongue must needs be hoarse with many calls. The wicked, thinking for to touch the sky, Are blasted with the fire of heaven's eye. 55 So, like ascending and descending air, Both dusky vapours from two humorous clouds, Lies witherèd the glory of their fair, Unpleasant branches wrenched in folly's floods: Unprofitable fruits like to a weed, 60 Made only to infect, and not to feed. Verse 6 Made for to make a fast, and not a feast, Made rather for infection than for meat, Not worthy to be eaten of a beast, Thy taste so sour, thy poison so great: 65 Thou mayst be well comparèd to a tree, Because thy branches are as ill as thee. Thou hast begot thine own confusion, The witnesses of what thou dost begin, Thy doomers in thy life's conclusion, 70 Which will unasked and asked reveal thy sin. Needs must the new-hatched birds bewray the nest, When they are nursèd in a stepdame's breast. Verse 7 But righteousness is of another sect. Her root is from an everlasting seed. 75 No weak, unable grounding doth connect Her never-limited memorial's deed. She hath no branches for a tempest's prey, No deeds but scorns to yield unto decay.	She hath no withered fruit, no show of store, But perfect essence of a còmplete power. Say that she dies to world, she lives the more, As who so righteous but doth wait death's hour? Who knows not death to be the way to rest? And he that never dies is never blest. Happy is he that lives, twice he that dies, Thrice happy he which neither lived nor died, Which never saw the earth with mortal eyes, Which never knew what miseries are tried. Happy is life, twice happy is our death, But three times thrice he which had never breath. 90 Some thinks that pleasure is achieved by years, Or by maintaining of a wretched life, When, out alas, it heapeth tears on tears, Grief upon grief, strife on beginning strife. Pleasure is weak, if measurèd by length: 95 The oldest ages hath the weaker strength. Three turnings are contained in mortal course: Verse 9 Old, mean, and young. Mean and old brings age. The youth hath strength, the mean decaying force. The old are weak, yet strong in anger's rage. 100 Three turnings in one age: strong, weak, and weaker; Yet age nor youth is youth's or age's breaker. Some says that youth is quick in judging causes. Some says that age is witty, grave, and wise. I hold of age's side with their applauses, 105 Which judges with their hearts, not with their eyes. I say grave wisdom lies in greyest heads, And undefiled lives in age's beds. God is both grave and old, yet young and new: Verse 10 Grave because agèd, agèd because young. Long youth may well be callèd age's hue, And hath no differing sound upon the tongue. God old, because eternities are old, Young, for eternities one motion hold. Some in their birth, some dies when they are born. 115 Some born, and some abortive, yet all die. Some in their youth, some in old age forlorn, Some neither young nor old, but equally. The righteous, when he liveth with the sinner, 120 Doth hope for death, his better life's beginner.
---	--

37-51 Sometime... blind intensely proverbial: 39 glances at Tilley N134: 'It is better to be stung by a nettle than pricked by a rose', and 49-50 make up a version of Tilley C208: 'High cedars fall... when low shrubs remain.'

42 Tares weeds, but playing on 'tears' (rips) corny fruitful

51 High-soaring... blind direct contradiction of the proverb, 'Only the eagle can gaze

at the sun' (Tilley E3)

56 humorous moist

68 witnesses 'For all the children that are born of the wicked bed, shall be witness of the wickedness against their parents when they be asked' (Geneva).

69 doomers judges

71 bewray foul

73 righteousness 'the righteous' (Geneva); in shifting to the virtue, Middleton also shifts to the feminine from Geneva's masculine.

88 tried undergone

102 breaker destroyer, violator

119 The righteous Middleton seems to pass over Geneva's allusion to Enoch: 'He pleased God, and was beloved of Him, so that whereas he lived among sinners, He translated him.'

Verse 11	The swine delights to wallow in the mire, The giddy drunkard in excess of wine. He may corrupt the purest reason's gyre, And she turn virtue into vice's sign.	Some blinded be in face, and some in soul. The face's eyes are not incurable; The other wanteth healing to be whole, Or seems to some to be enduring.	Verse 16
125	Mischief is mire, and may infect that spring Which every flow and ebb of vice doth bring. Fishes are oft deceived by the bait. The bait, deceiving fish, doth fish deceive. So righteous are allured by sin's deceit, And oft enticed into sinners' weave.	Look in a blinded eye, bright is the glass, Though brightness banished from what it was. 'So,' quoth the righteous, 'are these blinded hearts: The outward glass is clear, the substance dark. Both seem as if one took the other's parts, Yet both in one have not one brightness' spark. The outward eye is but destruction's reader, Wanting the inward eye to be the leader.	175
Verse 12	The fisher hath a bait, deceiving fish. The fowler hath a net, deceiving fowls.	'Our body may be called a commonweal, Our head the chief, for reason harbours there. From thence comes heart's and soul's united zeal, All else inferiors be which stand in fear. This commonweal, ruled by discretion's eye, Lives likewise if she live, dies if she die.	Verse 17
135	Both wisheth to obtain their snaring wish, Observing time like night-observing owls. The fisher lays his bait, fowler his net: He hopes for fish, the other birds to get.		185
140	This fisher is the wicked, vice his bait. This fowler is the sinner, sin his net. The simple righteous falls in their deceit, And like a prey, a fish, a fowl beset. A bait, a net, obscuring what is good, Like fish and fowl took up for vice's food.	'Then how can weal or wealth, common or proper, Long stand, long flow, long flourish, long remain, When wail is weal's, and stealth is wealth's chief stopper, When sight is gone, which never comes again? The wicked sees the righteous lose their breath, But know not what reward they gain by death.	190
Verse 13	But baits nor nets, gins nor beguiling snares, Vice nor the vicious sinner, nor the sin, Can shut the righteous into prison's cares, Or set deceiving baits to mew them in. They know their lives' deliverer, heaven's God, Can break their baits and snares with justice' rod.	Though blind in sight, yet can they see to harm, See to despise, see to deride and mock; But their revenge lies in God's mighty arm, Scorning to choose them for his chosen flock. He is the shepherd, godly are his sheep; They wake in joy, these in destruction sleep.	Verse 18
150	When vice abounds on earth, and earth in vice, Then virtue keeps her chamber in the sky, To shun the mischief which her baits entice, Her snares, her nets, her guiles, her company.	These ever-wake eyes are no sleepy parts. These ever sleep, for sleep is heart's disguise. Their waking eyes do see their heart's lament, While heart securely sleeps in eyes' content.	195
Verse 14	As soon as mischief reigns upon the earth, Heaven calls the righteous to a better birth.
Verse 15	The blinded eyes can never see the way. The blinded heart can never see to see. The blinded soul doth always go astray.	The godly sleep in eyes, but wake in hearts. The wicked sleep in hearts, but wake in eyes. These ever-wake eyes are no sleepy parts. These ever sleep, for sleep is heart's disguise. Their waking eyes do see their heart's lament, While heart securely sleeps in eyes' content.	Verse 19
160	All three want sight, in being blind all three. Blind and yet see, they see and yet are blind. The face hath eyes, but eyeless is the mind.	If they awake, sleep's image doth molest them, And beats into their waking memories. If they do sleep, joy waking doth detest them, Yet beats into their sleeping arteries. Sleeping or waking, they have fear on fear, Waking or sleeping, they are ne'er the near.	Verse 20
165	They see with outward sight God's heavenly grace, His grace, his love, his mercy on his saints. With outward-facèd eye and eyed face, Their outward body inward soul depaints. Of heart's chief eye they chiefly are bereft, And yet the shadow of two eyes are left.	If waking, they remember what they are, What sins they have committed in their waking. If sleeping, they forget tormenting's fare, How ready they have been in mischief's making.	210

123 gyre circle, revolution

128 deceiving fish in the form of, or consisting of, a deceiving fish

148 mew confine

153 her baits vice's lures

166 depaints depicts

191 the righteous 'the wise' (Geneva)

205 molest trouble, grieve

207 joy waking the pleasure they indulged in while awake

detest curse; denounce

208 Yet... arteries yet taints or infects their forgetful hearts

210 near nearer

215 When they awake, their wickedness betrays them,
When they do sleep, destruction dismays them.

Chapter Five

Verse 1 As these two slumbers have two contraries,
One slumber in the face, one in the mind,
So their two casements two varieties,
One unto heaven, and one to hell combined.
5 The face is flattery, and her mansion hell.
The mind is just, this doth in heaven dwell.

The face, heaving her heavy eyelids up
From forth the chamber of eternal night,
Sees virtue hold plenty's replenished cup,
10 And boldly stand in God's and heaven's sight.
She, opening the windows of her breast,
Sees how the wicked rest in their unrest.

Verse 2 Quoth she, "Those whom the curtain of decay
Hath tragically summonèd to pain, 15 Were once the clouds and clouderers of my day,
Depravers and deprivers of my gain."
The wicked hearing this descending sound,
Fear struck their limbs to the pale-clothèd ground.

Verse 3 Amazed at the freedom of her words,
20 Their tongue-tied accents drove them to despair,
And made them change their minds to woe's records,
And say within themselves, 'Lo what we are:
We have had virtue in derision's place,
And made a parable of her disgrace.

Verse 4 'See where she sits enthronized in the sky.
See, see her labour's crown upon her head.
See how the righteous live which erst did die,
From death to life with virtue's lodestar led.
See those whom we derided, they are blest:
30 They heaven's, not hell's, we hell's, not heaven's guest.

'We thought the righteous had been fury's son,
With inconsiderate speech, unstayèd way.
We thought that death had his dishonour won,
And would have made his life destruction's prey.
35 But we were mad, they just, we fools, they wise:
We shame, they praise, we loss, they have the prize.

'We thought them fools, when we ourselves were fools. Verse 5
We thought them mad, when we ourselves were mad.
The heat which sprang from them our folly cools.
We find in us which we but thought they had. 40

We thought their end had been dishonour's pledge;
They but surveyed the place, we made the hedge.

'We see how they are blessed, how we are curst,
How they accepted are, and we refused,
45 And how our bonds are tied, their bonds are burst,
Our faults are hourly blamed, their faults excused.

See how heavens gratulate their welcome sight,
Which comes to take possession of their right.

'But O, too late we see our wickedness! Verse 6
Too late we lie in a repentant tomb! 50

Too late we smooth old hairs with happiness!
Too late we seek to ease our bodies' doom!

Now falsehood hath advanced her forgèd banner,
Too late we seem to verify truth's manner.

'The sun of righteousness, which should have shined, 55

And made our hearts the cabins of his east,
Is now made cloudy night through vice's wind,
And lodgeth with his downfall in the west.

That summer's day, which should have been night's bar,

Is now made winter in her icy car. 60

'Too much our feet have gone, but never right. Verse 7
Much labour have we took, but none in good.

We wearied ourselves with our delight,
Endangering ourselves to please our mood.

Our feet did labour much: 'twas for our pleasure. 65
We wearied ourselves: 'twas for our leisure.

'In sin's perfection was our labour spent.

In wickedness' preferment we did haste.

To suffer perils we were all content,

For the advancement of our vices past. 70

Through many dangerous ways our feet have gone,
But yet the way of God we have not known.

'We which have made our hearts a sea of pride, Verse 8

With huge risse billows of a swelling mind,

With tossing tumults of a flowing tide,

Leaving our laden bodies plunged behind, 75

What traffic have we got? Ourselves are drowned,
Our souls in hell, our bodies in the ground.

5 The belated recognition of the unrighteous that they have wandered in darkness and that their passing leaves no trace; for they put their faith in worldly nature, which God will bring to chaos and confusion.

1 two slumbers of the unrighteous and the righteous

3 casements windows; fig. eyes

11 She virtue

24 parable proverbial story; here, a mocking story

25 enthronized enthroned

27 erst earlier; not long ago

28 lodestar guiding star

31-4 son...his reverting momentarily to Geneva's singular

32 unstayed unstable

40 which that which; i.e., dishonour

41 pledge hostage, pawn

42 made the hedge entrapped ourselves

47 gratulate greet joyfully

56 cabins dwellings

east rising

59 bar barrier

60 car triumphal chariot

68 preferment furtherance, promotion

74 risse risen

77 traffic saleable commodities; fig. benefit

Verse 9 80	'Where are our riches now? Like us, consumed. Where is our pomp? Decayed. Where's glory? Dead. Where is the wealth of which we all presumed? Where is our profit? Gone. Ourselves? Misled. All these are like to shadows what they were: There is nor wealth, nor pomp, nor glory here.	As soon as we have breath, so soon we spend, Not having that which our content would have. As ships, as birds, as arrows, all as one, Even so the traces of our lives are gone.	125
Verse 10	'The dial gives a caveat of the hour. Thou canst not see it go, yet it is gone. Like this the dial of thy fortune's power, Which fades by stealth till thou art left alone. Thy eyes may well perceive thy goods are spent, Yet can they not perceive which way they went.	'A thing not seen to go, yet going seen, And yet not showing any sign to go: Even thus the shadows of our lives have been, Which shows to fade, and yet no virtues show. How can a thing consumed with vice be good? Or how can falsehood bear true virtue's food?'	130
90	'Lo, e'en as ships sailing on Tethys' lap Ploughs up the furrows of hard-grounded waves, Enforcèd for to go by Aeol's clap, Making with sharpest tine the water graves, The ship once past, the trace cannot be found, Although she diggèd in the water's ground;	Vain hope, to think that wickedness hath bearing, When she is drownèd in oblivion's sea, Yet can she not forget presumption's wearing, Nor yet the badge of vanity's decay. Her fruits are cares, her cares are vanities: Two, both in one destruction's liveries.	Verse 14 135
Verse 11	'Or as an eagle with her soaring wings, Scorning the dusty carpet of the earth, Exempt from all her clogging jesses, flings Up to the air, to show her mounting birth, And every flight doth take a higher pitch, To have the golden sun her wings enrich;	Vain hope is like a vane turned with each wind. 'Tis like a smoke scattered with every storm, Like dust, sometime before, sometime behind, Like a thin foam made in the vainest form. This hope is like to them, which never stay, But comes and goes again all in one day.	140
100	'Yet none can see the passage of her flight, But only hear her hovering in the sky, Beating the light wind with her being light, Or parting through the air where she might fly; The ear may hear, the eye can never see What course she takes, or where she means to be;	View nature's gifts: some gifts are rich, some poor, Some barren grounds there are, some clothed with fruit, Nor hath all nothing, nor hath all her store, Nor can all creatures speak, nor are all mute. All die by nature, being born by nature, So all change feature, being born with feature.	Verse 15 150
Verse 12	'Or as an arrow which is made to go Through the transparent and cool-blowing air, Feeding upon the forces of the bow, Else forceless lies in wanting her repair; Like as the branches when the tree is lopped Wanteth the forces which they forceless cropped;	This life is hers. This dead, dead is her power. Her bounds begins and ends in mortal state. Whom she on earth accounteth as her flower, May be in heaven condemned of mortal hate, But he whom virtue judges for to live, The Lord his life and due reward will give.	155
115	'The arrow, being fed with strongest shot, Doth part the lowest elemental breath, Yet never separates the soft air's knot, Nor never wounds the still-foot winds to death; It doth sejoin and join the air together, Yet none there is can tell or where or whither;	The servant of a king may be a king, And he that was a king, a servile slave. Swans before death a funeral dirge do sing, And waves their wings against ill fortune's wave. He that is lowest in this lowly earth May be the highest in celestial birth.	Verse 16 160
Verse 13	'So are our lives: now they begin, now end, Now live, now die, now born, now fit for grave.	The rich may be unjust in being rich, For riches do corrupt and not correct. The poor may come to highest honour's pitch, And have heaven's crown for mortal life's respect. God's hands shall cover them from all their foes, God's arm defend them from misfortune's blows.	165

85 dial sundial
91 Tethys' lap the lap of the sea-goddess;
Tethys is often figurative for the sea
93 Aeol's Aeol is Aeolus, god of winds clap forceful blow
94 tine iron tooth of a harrow

99 clogging encumbering jesses straps fastened to the legs of a hawk used in falconry 112 repair return
114 cropped fed upon 116 lowest elemental breath slightest material breeze

118 still-foot stable
119 sejoin separate, disjoin
123 spend pass away
133 bearing fruition

Verses 17, 18	His hand eternity, his arm his force, His armour jealousy, his breastplate heaven, His helmet judgement, justice and remorse, His shield is victory's immortal steven, The world his challenge, and his wrath his sword, Mischief his foe, his aid his gospel's word.	"To you I speak," quoth she, "Hear, learn, and mark, You that be kings, judges, and potentates. Give ear, I say. Wisdom, your strongest ark, Sends me as messenger, to end debates. Give ear, I say, you judges of the earth. Wisdom is born: seek out for wisdom's birth.	Verse 2 10
Verses 19, 20	His arm doth overthrow his enemy, His breastplate sin, his helmet death and hell, His shield prepared against mortality, His sword 'gainst them which in the world do dwell: So shall vice, sin and death, world and the devil, Be slain by him which slayeth every evil.	"This heavenly ambassage from wisdom's tongue, Worthy the volume of all heaven's sky, I bring as messenger to right your wrong, If so her sacred name might never die. I bring you happy tidings: she is born, Like golden sunbeams from a silver morn.	Verse 3 15
Verse 21	All heaven shall be in arms against earth's world. The sun shall dart forth fire commixed with blood. The blazing stars from heaven shall be hurled. The pale-faced moon against the ocean flood. Then shall the thund'ring chambers of the sky Be lightened with the blaze of Titan's eye.	"The Lord hath seated you in judgement's seat. Let wisdom place you in discretion's places. Two virtues one will make one virtue great, And draw more virtues with attractive faces. Be just and wise, for God is just and wise: He thoughts, he words, he words and actions tries.	 20
185	The clouds shall then be bent like bended bows To shoot the thund'ring arrows of the air. Thick hail and stones shall fall on heaven's foes, And Tethys overflow in her despair. The moon shall overflow her horny hood With Neptune's ocean's overflowing flood.	"If you neglect your office's decrees, Heap new lament on long-tossed miseries, Do and undo by reason of degrees, And drown your sentences in briberies, Favour and punish, spare and keep in awe, Set and unset, plant and supplant the law,	Verse 4 30
Verse 22	The wind shall be no longer kept in caves, But burst the iron cages of the clouds, And Aeol shall resign his office staves, Suffering the winds to combat with the floods. So shall the earth with seas be palèd in, As erst it hath been overflowed with sin.	"O be assured, there is a judge above, Which will not let injustice flourish long. If tempt him, you your own temptation move, Proceeding from the judgement of his tongue. Hard judgement shall he have, which judgeth hard, And he that barreth others shall be barred.	Verse 5 35
195	Thus shall the earth weep for her wicked sons, And curse the concave of her tirèd womb, Into whose hollow mouth the water runs, Making wet wilderness her driest tomb. Thus, thus iniquity hath reigned so long That earth on earth is punished for her wrong.	"For God hath no respect of rich from poor, For he hath made the poor and made the rich. Their bodies be alike, though their minds soar, Their difference naught but in presumption's pitch. The carcass of a king is kept from foul, The beggar yet may have the cleaner soul.	Verse 6 40
Chapter Six
Verse 1	After this conflict between God and man, Remorse took harbour in God's angry breast. Astraea to be pitiful began, All heavenly powers to lie in mercy's rest. Forthwith the voice of God did redescend, And his Astraea warned all to amend.	"The highest men do bear the highest minds. The cedars scorn to bow, the mushrooms bend. The highest often superstition blinds, But yet their fall is greatest in the end. The winds have not such power of the grass, Because it lowly stoopeth whenas they pass.	 45

170 zealousy zealousness? OED records only this occurrence of such usage, and Geneva reads 'jealousy'.

172 stevèn voice; but at 7.282 (as also in Ghost, 503) 'stevèn' evidently means crown, from the Greek stephanos.

191 horny hood presumably with reference to the two horns of the crescent moon; but possibly Tethys's headdress?

195 staves rods or wands, carried as badges of authority

197 palèd fenced

6 Astraea exhorts the judges of the earth to seek wisdom through discipline, love, and God's law, and cautions them that God has higher expectations of the mighty.

3 Astraea goddess of justice, associated with Virgo, and sometimes a complimentary type for Queen Elizabeth I; substituted here for Geneva's Solomon, and including the personification of virtue from Chapter Five

9 ark chest, coffer, particularly as receptacle for divine law

13 ambassage message

Verses 7, 8 “The old should teach the young observance’ way, But now the young doth teach the elder grace. The shrubs do teach the cedars to obey. These yield to winds, but these the winds outface. Yet he that made the winds to cease and blow, Can make the highest fall, the lowest grow. 55 ‘He made the great to stoop as well as small, The lions to obey as other beasts. He cares for all alike, yet cares for all, And looks that all should answer his behests. But yet the greater hath the sorer trial, 60 If once he finds them with his laws’ denial. Verses 9 ‘Be warned, you tyrants, at the fall of pride. You see how surges change to quiet calm, You see both flow and ebb in folly’s tide, How fingers are infected by their palm. 65  This may your caveat be: you, being kings, Infect your subjects, which are lesser things. ‘Ill scents of vice, once crept into the head, Doth pierce into the chamber of the brain, Making the outward skin disease’s bed, 70 The inward powers as nourishers of pain. So if that mischief reigns in wisdom’s place, The inward thought lies figured in the face. Verses 10 ‘Wisdom should clothe herself in king’s attire, Being the portraiture of heaven’s queen, 75 But tyrants are no kings, but mischief’s mire, Not sage, but shows of what they should have been. They seek for vice, and how to go amiss, But do not once regard what wisdom is. 80 ‘They which are kings by name are kings by deed, Both rulers of themselves and of their land. They know that heav’n is virtue’s duest meed, And holiness is knit in holy bond. These may be rightly callèd by their name, Whose words and works are blazed in wisdom’s flame. Verses 11 ‘To nurse up cruelty with mild aspect Were to begin, but never for to end. Kindness with tigers never takes effect, Nor proffered friendship with a foe-like friend. Tyrants and tigers have all natural mothers: 90 Tyrants her sons, tigers the tyrants’ brothers. ‘No words’ delight can move delight in them, But rather plough the traces of their ire, Like swine that take the dirt before the gem, And scorns that pearl which they should most desire,	But kings, whose names proceed from kindness’ sound, Do plant their hearts and thoughts on wisdom’s ground: ‘A grounding ever moist, and never dry, An ever-fruitful earth, no fruitless way, In whose dear womb the tender springs do lie, Which ever flows, and never ebbs away. The sun but shines by day: she day and night Doth keep one stayèd essence of her light. ‘Her beams are conducts to her substance’ view. Her eye is adamant’s attractive force. A shadow hath she none, but substance true, Substance outliving life of mortal course. Her sight is easy unto them which love her, Her finding easy unto them which prove her. ‘The far-fet chastity of female sex Is nothing but allurement into lust, Which will forswear and take, scorn and annex, Deny and practise it, mistrust and trust. Wisdom is chaste, and of another kind: She loves, she likes, and yet not lustful blind. ‘She is true love, the other love a toy. Her love hath eyes, the other love is blind. This doth proceed from God, this from a boy. This constant is, the other vain combined. If longing passions follow her desire, She offereth herself as labour’s hire. ‘She is not coyish she, won by delay With sighs and passions, which all lovers use, With hot affection, death, or life’s decay, With lovers’ toys, which might their loves excuse. Wisdom is poor, her dowry is content. She nothing hath because she nothing spent. ‘She is not wooed to love, nor won by wooing, Nor got by labour, nor possessed by pain. The gain of her consists in honest doing. Her gain is great in that she hath no gain. He that betimes follows repentance’ way Shall meet with her his virtue’s worthy pay. ‘To think upon her is to think of bliss. The very thought of her is mischief’s bar. Depeller of misdeeds which do amiss, The blot of vanity, misfortune’s scar. Who would not think, to reap such gain by thought? Who would not love, when such a life is bought?	95 Verses 12, 13 100 105 Verses 14 115 120 Verses 15 125 130 Verses 16 135
--	---	--

81 duest meed most deserved reward

84 blazed published

91 No words’ delight ‘set your delight upon my words’ (Geneva)

102 stayèd fixed

104 adamant’s magnet’s

106 course journey; and glancing at ‘corse’, corpse

109 far-fet far-fetched, elaborate; this jaded assessment of female chastity as mere coyness has no parallel in Geneva.

111 annex take over

117 boy Cupid

118 combined as in marriage

131 betimes while there is still time

135 Depeller one who drives out

	‘If thought be understanding, what is she? The full perfection of a perfect power, A heavenly branch from God’s immortal tree, Which death nor hell nor mischief can devour. Herself is wisdom, and her thought is so. Thrice happy he which doth desire to know.	Majestic portraitures of earthly fame, Relievers of the poor in age’s moan: If your content be seated on a crown, Love wisdom, and your state shall never down.
Verse 17	‘She manlike woos, men womenlike refuses. She offers love, they offered love deny, And hold her promises as love’s abuses Because she pleads with an indifferent eye. They think that she is light, vain, and unjust, When she doth plead for love and not for lust.	‘Her crowns are not as earthly diadems, But diapasons of eternal rest. Her essence comes not from terrestrial stems, But planted on the heavens’ immortal breast. If you delight in sceptres and in reigning, Delight in her, your crown’s immortal gaining.	185
150	Hard-hearted men, quoth she, can you not love? Behold my substance: cannot substance please? Behold my feature: cannot feature move? Can substance nor my feature help or ease? See heaven’s joy defigured in my face: Can neither heaven nor joy turn you to grace?	‘Although the shadows of her glorious view Hath been as accessory to your eyes, Now will I show you the true substance’ hue, And what she is, which without knowledge lies, From whence she is derived, whence her descent, And whence the lineage of her birth is lent.	Verse 22
155	‘O, how desire sways her pleading tongue, Her tongue her heart, her heart her soul’s affection! Fain would she make mortality be strong, But mortal weakness yields her plea’s rejection. Her care is care of them, they careless are. Her love loves them, they neither love nor care.	‘Now will I show the sky, and not the cloud, The sun, and not the shade, day, not the night, Tethys herself, not Tethys in her flood, Light, and not shadow of suppressing light. Wisdom herself, true type of wisdom’s grace, Shall be apparent before heart and face.	190
Verses 18, 19	‘Fain would she make them clients in her law, Whose law’s assurance is immortal honour, But them nor words nor love nor care can awe, But still will fight under destruction’s banner. Though immortality be their reward, Yet neither words nor deeds will they regard.	‘Had I still fed you with the shade of life, And hid the sun itself in envy’s air, Myself might well be callèd nature’s strife, Striving to cloud that which all clouds impair. But envy, haste thee hence: I loathe thy eye, Thy love, thy life, thyself, thy company.	Verse 23
160	‘Her tongue is hoarse with pleading, yet doth plead, Pleading for that which they should all desire. Their appetite is heavy, made of lead, And lead can never melt without a fire. Her words are mild, and cannot raise a heat, Whilst they with hard repulse her speeches beat.	‘Here is the banner of discretion’s name, Advanced on wisdom’s ever-standing tower. Here is no place for envy or her shame, For Nemesis or black Megaera’s power. He that is envious is not wisdom’s friend: She ever lives, he dies when envies end.	210
Verse 20	‘Requested they, for what they should request. Entreated they, for what they should entreat. Requested to enjoy their quiet rest, Entreated like a sullen bird to eat. Their eyes behold joy’s maker, which doth make it, Yet must they be entreated for to take it.	‘Happy, thrice-happy land, where wisdom reigns! Happy, thrice-happy king, whom wisdom sways! Where never poor laments, or souls complains, Where folly never keeps discretion’s ways. That land, that king, doth flourish, live, and joy, Far from ill fortune’s reach, or sin’s annoy.	Verse 24
175	‘You whose delight is placed in honour’s game, Whose game in majesty’s imperial throne,	‘That land is happy, that king fortunate, She in her days, he in his wisdom’s force, For fortitude is wisdom’s sociate, And wisdom truest fortitude’s remorse. Be therefore ruled by wisdom, she is chief, That you may rule in joy and not in grief.’	Verse 25
180			225
Verse 21

155 defigured portrayed 166 banner pronounced (and spelled) ‘bonner’
 175 Requested they they are requested
 176 Entreated they they are entreated 188 diapasons consonance of the top and bottom notes of a musical octave;

hence heavenly concords? But Middleton evidently misunderstands the term, here and at 18.252, as the name of some sort of crown.
 194 accessory contributory 201 Tethys herself the sea-goddess, as opposed to the sea

214 Nemesis goddess of retribution Megaera’s Megaera was one of the avenging Furies.
 222 annoy vexation
 225 sociate associate (obs.); preserved for metre, as also at 10.66
 226 remorse force

Chapter Seven

Verse 1 What am I? Man. O what is man? O naught.
 What am I? Naught. Yes. What? Sin and debate,
 Three vices all in one, of one life bought.
 Man am I not. What then? I am man's hate.
 5 Yes, man I am: man because mortal, dead;
 Mortality my guide, by mischief led.
 Man because like to man, man because born;
 In birth no man, a child; child because weak;
 Weak because weakened by ill fortune's scorn;
 10 Scorned because mortal, mortal in wrong's wreak.
 My father, like myself, did live on earth.
 I, like myself and him, follow his birth.
 Verse 2 My mother's matrix was my body's maker.
 There had I this same shape of infamies.
 15 Shape? Ah, no shape, but substance, mischief's taker,
 In ten months' fashion. Months? Ah, miseries.
 The shame of shape, the very shape of shame,
 Calamity myself, lament my name.
 I was conceived with seed, deceived with sin:
 20 Deceived because my seed was sin's deceit.
 My seed deceit because it closed me in,
 Hemmed me about for sin's and mischief's bait.
 The seed of man did bring me into blood,
 And now I bring myself... in what? No good.
 Verse 3 When I was born, when I was, then I was.
 Born? When? Yet born I was, but now I bear:
 Bear mine own vices, which my joys surpass,
 Bear mine own burden full of mischief's fear.
 30 When I was born, I did not bear lament,
 But now, unborn, I bear what birth hath spent.
 When I was born, my breath was born to me,
 The common air which airs my body's form.
 Then fell I on the earth with feeble knee,
 Lamenting for my life's, ill fortune's, storm,
 35 Making myself the index of my woe,
 Commencing what I could, ere I could go.
 Verse 4 Fed was I with lament as well as meat.
 My milk was sweet, but tears did make it sour.
 Meat and lament, milk and my tears I eat,
 40 As bitter herbs, commixed with sweetest flower.
 Care was my swaddling clothes as well as cloth,
 For I was swaddled and clothèd in both.

Why do I make myself more than I am? Verse 5
 Why say I, I am nourishèd with cares,
 When everyone is clothèd with the same, 45
 Sith as I fare myself, another fares?
 No king had any other birth than I,
 But wailed his fortune with a wat'ry eye.
 Say what is mirth? An entrance unto woe. Verse 6
 Say what is woe? An entrance unto mirth. 50
 That which begins with joy doth not end so,
 These go by change, because a changing birth.
 Our birth is as our death, both barren, bare:
 Our entrance wail, our going out with care.
 Naked we came, into the world as naked. 55
 We had nor wealth nor riches to possess.
 Now differ we, which difference riches makèd,
 Yet in the end we naked ne'ertheless.
 As our beginning is, so is our end:
 60 Naked and poor, which needs no wealth to spend.
 Thus weighing in the balance of my mind Verse 7
 My state, all states, my birth, all births alike,
 My meditated passions could not find
 One freed thought which sorrow did not strike.
 65 But knowing every ill is cured by prayer,
 My mind besought the Lord, my grief's allayer.
 Wherefore I prayed, my prayer took effect,
 And my effect was good, my good was gain,
 My gain was sacred wisdom's bright aspèct,
 And her aspèct in my respect did reign. 70
 Wisdom, that heav'nly spirit of content,
 Was unto me from heav'n by prayer sent.
 A present far more worthy than a crown, Verse 8
 Because the crown of an eternal rest; 75
 A present far more worthy than a throne,
 Because the throne of heav'n, which makes us blest;
 The crown of bliss, the throne of God is she,
 Comparèd unto heav'n, not, earth, to thee.
 Her footstool is thy face, her face thy shame,
 Thy shame her living praise, her praise thy scorn, 80
 Thy scorn her love, her love thy merit's blame,
 Thy blame her worth, her worth thy being born.
 Thyself art dross to her comparison,
 Thy valour weak unto her garrison.

7 Solomon, no longer replaced by Astraea, asserts his decaying physical humanity, wherefore he has prayed for and received the gifts of wisdom, knowledge, reason, and discretion.
 1-12 What...birth 'I myself am also mortal and a man like all other, and am come of him that was first made of the earth' (Geneva). These lines seem almost experimental, the poet seeking an internalized dialogic way to articulate a conflict not evident in the Geneva version, where Solomon merely tells of his common humanity.

 2 Yes denying 'Naught'; see the similar antithesis between 4 and 5, also turning on 'Yes'.
 10 wreak retributive pain or punishment
 13 matrix womb
 16 ten months' usual Elizabethan measurement of human gestation, equating 'month' with the 28-day lunar cycle, rather than with the longer calendar units 39 eat ate

 57 makèd made
 78 Comparèd comparable, equal
 83 dross impure matter
 84 garrison means of defence

Verse 9	To liken gold unto her radiant face Were likening day to night, and night to day, The king's high seat to the low subject's place, And heav'n's translucent breast to earthly way; For what is gold? Her scorn. Her scorn? Her ire, 90 Melting that dross with naught but anger's fire.	Glad that her face was in mine eyes' locked bower, Sad that my senses never drew her plot. I knew not that she was discretion's mother, Though I professed myself to be her brother.	130
90	In her respect 'tis dust. In her aspects Earth. In respect of her 'tis little gravel. As dust, as earth, as gravel she rejects The hope, the gain, the sight, the price, the travail. 95 Silver, because inferior to the other, Is clay, which two she in one look doth smother.	Like a rash wooer feeding on the looks, Digesting beauty, apparition's show, Viewing the painted outside of the books, And inward works little regards to know, So I, feeding my fancies with her sight, Forgot to make inquiry of her might.	Verse 13 135
Verse 10	Her sight I callèd health, herself my beauty: Health as my life, and beauty as my light; Each in performance of the other's duty, 100 This curing grief, this leading me aright. Two sovereign eyes, belonging to two places: This guides the soul, and this the body graces.	External powers I knew, riches I had; Internal powers I scarcely had discerned. Unfeignèdly I learnèd to be glad; Feigning I hated, verity I learned. I was not envious, learnèd to forsake her, But I was loving, learnèd for to take her.	140
100	The heartsick soul is cured by heart-strong health. The heart-strong health is the soul's brightest eye. 105 The heartsick body healed by beauty's wealth, Two sunny windolets of either's sky, Whose beams cannot be clouded by reproach, Nor yet dismounted from so bright a coach.	And had I not, my treasure had been lost, My loss my peril's hazard had proclaimed, My peril had my life's destruction tossed, My life's destruction at my soul had aimed: Great perils hazarded from one poor loss, As greatest filth doth come with smallest dross.	Verse 14 150
Verse 11	What dowry could I wish, more than I have? 11 What wealth, what honour, more than I possess? My soul's request is mine, which I did crave For sole redress: in soul I have redress. The bodily expenses which I spend, Is lent by her which my delight doth lend.	This righteous treasure, whoso rightly useth Shall be an heir in heav'n's eternity. All earthly fruits her heritage excuseth, All happiness in her felicity. The love of God consists in her embracing, The gifts of knowledge in her wisdom's placing.	155
115	Then I may call her author of my good, Sith good and goods are portions for my love. I love her well. Who would not love his food, His joy's maintainer, which all woes remove? I richest am, because I do possess her; 120 I strongest am, in that none can oppress her.	I speak as I am prompted by my mind, My soul's chief agent, pleader of my cause. I speak these things, and what I speak I find By heaven's judgement, not mine own applause. God he is judge; I next, because I have her. God he doth know; I next, because I crave her.	Verse 15 160
Verse 12	It made me glad to think that I was rich, 12 More gladder to to think that I was strong, For lowest minds do covet highest pitch, As highest braves proceed from lowest tongue. 125 Her first arrival first did make me glad, Yet ignorant at first, first made me sad.	Should I direct, and God subvert, my tongue, I worthy were of an unworthy name: Unworthy of my right, not of my wrong, Unworthy of my praise, not of my shame; But seeing God directs my tongue from missing, I rather look for clapping than for hissing.	165
125	Joyful I was, because I saw her power. Woeful I was, because I knew her not.	He is the prompter of my tongue and me. My tongue doth utter what his tongue applies. He sets before my sight what I should see. He breathes into my heart his verities. He tells me what I think, or see, or hear: His tongue a part, my tongue a part doth bear.	Verse 16

94 travail pronounced 'travel'
101 sovereign efficacious in curing
106 windolets small windows; OED records this item only in the 1590s
124 braves boasts, vaunts; not recorded as a substantive sense in OED
129 bower habitation; chamber

130 plot representation
132 brother Solomon has apparently reclaimed his role from Astraea.
153 heritage inheritance 168 clapping ... hissing audience expressions of approval and disapproval in the theatre; the theatre imagery continues in the next stanza, with 'prompter' and 'part'.

170 applies apparently, 'speaks'; from the transitive sense 'address, direct (words) to?'

175 Our words he knows in telling of our hearts. Our hearts he knows in telling of our words. All in his hands, words, wisdom, works, and arts, And every power which influence affords. He knows what we will speak, what we will do, 180 And how our minds and actions will go. Verse 17 The wisdom which I have is heaven's gift. The knowledge which I have is God's reward. Both presents my forewarnèd senses lift, And of my preservation have regard. 185 This teaches me to know, this to be wise; Knowledge is wit's, and wit is knowledge' guise. Verse 18 Now know I how the world was first created, How every motion of the earth was framed, How man was made, the devil's pride abated, 190 How time's beginning, midst, and end was named. Now know I time, time's change, time's date, time's show, And when the seasons come, and when they go. Verse 19 I know the changing courses of the years, And the division of all differing climes, 195 The situation of the stars and spheres, The flowing tides and the flow-ebbing times. I know that every year hath his four courses, I know that every course hath several forces. Verse 20 I know that nature is in everything: Beasts furious, winds rough, men wicked are, Whose thoughts their scourge, whose deeds their judge- ment's sting, Whose words and works their peril and their care. I know that every plant hath difference; I know that every root hath influence. Verse 21 True knowledge have I got in knowing truth, True wisdom purchasèd in wisest wit. A knowledge fitting age, wit fitting youth, Which makes me young, though old with gain of it. True knowledge have I, and true wisdom's store, 210 True hap, true hope: what wish, what would I more? Known things I needs must know, sith not unknown. My ear is knowledge, she doth hear for me. All secrets know I more because not shown. My wisdom secret is, and her I see. Knowledge hath taught me how to hear known causes; 215 Wisdom hath taught me secrecy's applauses.	Knowledge and wisdom known in wisest things Is reason's mate, discretion's sentinel. More than a trine of joys from virtues springs, More than one union, yet in union dwell: 220 One for to guide the spring, summer the other, One harvest's nurse, the other winter's mother. Four mounts, and four high mounters, all four one: One holy union, one begotten life, One manifold affection, yet alone, 225 All one in peace's rest, all none in strife; Sure, stable, without care, having all power, Not hurtful, doing good; as one all four. This peaceful army of four knitted souls Is marching unto peace's endless war. Their weapons are discretion's written rolls, Their quarrel love, and amity their jar. Wisdom director is, captain, and guide; All other take their places, side by side. Wisdom divides the conflict of her peace 235 Into four squadrons of four mutual loves, Each bent to war, and never means to cease. Her wings of shot her disputation moves. She wars unseen, and pacifies unseen; She is war's victory, yet peace's queen. 240 She is the martial trumpet of alarms, And yet the quiet rest in peace's night. She guideth martial troops, she honours arms, Yet joins she fight with peace, and peace with fight. She is the breath of God's and heaven's power, 245 Yet peace's nurse, in being peace's flower. A flowing in of that which ebbeth out, An ebbing out of that which floweth in; Presumption she doth hate in being stout. Humility, though poor, her favours win. 250 She is the influence of heaven's flow: No filth doth follow her, where'er she go. She is that spring which never hath an ebb, 255 That silver-coloured brook which hath no mud, That loom which weaves and never cuts the web, That tree which grows and never leaves to bud. She constant is, inconstancy her foe; She doth not flow and ebb, nor come and go. Phoebus doth weep when wat'ry clouds approach; She keeps her brightness everlastingly. 260 Phoebe, when Phoebus shines, forsakes night's coach; Her day is night and day immortally: The undefiled mirror of renown, The image of God's power, her virtue's crown.	Verse 22 220 Verse 23 225 Verse 24 235 240 Verse 25 245 250 Verse 26 255 260
--	--	---

175 telling instructing

176 telling prompting

195 spheres concentric transparent celestial globes imagined, by the older astronomy, to revolve around the earth

219 trine group of three

225 alone playing on 'all one'

231 rolls muster lists (of troops)

232 jar dissension

238 wings of shot flanking divisions, armed with bows or firearms, in battle array

256 leaves ceases; also playing on the plural of 'leaf'

Verse Discretion, knowledge, wit, and reason's skill, 27 All four are places in one only grace.
 They wisdom are, obedient to her will.
 All four are one, one in all four's place.
 And wisdom being one, she can do all,
 270 Sith one hath four, all subject to one call.

Verse Herself, remaining self, the world renews,
 28 Renewing ages with perpetual youth,
 Ent'ring into the souls which death pursues,
 Making them God's friends, which were friends to truth.
 275 If wisdom doth not harbour in thy mind,
 God loves thee not, and that thy soul shall find.

Verse For how canst thou be led without thy light?
 29 How can thy eyeless soul direct her way,
 If wanting her which guides thy steps aright,
 280 Thy steps from night into a path of day
 More beautiful than is the eye of heaven,
 Gilding herself with her self-changing steven?

Verse The stars are twinkling handmaids to the moon.
 30 Both moon and stars handmaids to wisdom's sun.
 285 These shine at middest night, this at mid-noon.
 Each new begins their light when each hath done.
 Pale-mantled night follows red-mantled day;
 Vice follows both, but to her own decay.

Chapter Eight

Verse 1 Who is the empress of the world's confine,
 The monarchess of the four-cornered earth,
 The princess of the seas, life without fine,
 Commixer of delight with sorrow's mirth?
 5 What sovereign is she, which ever reigns,
 Which queen-like governs all, yet none constrains?

Verse 2 Wisdom. O fly my spirit with that word!
 Wisdom. O lodge my spirit in that name!
 Fly soul unto the mansion of her lord,
 10 Although thy wings be singed in her flame.
 Tell her my blackness doth admire her beauty;
 I'll marry her in love, serve her in duty.

Verse 3 If marry her, God is my father God,
 Christ is my brother, angels are my kin,
 15 The earth my dowry, heaven my abode,
 My rule the world, my life without my sin.
 She is the daughter of immortal Jove,
 My wife in heart, in thought, in soul, in love.
 Happy forever he, that thought in heart.
 20 Happy forever he, that heart in thought.

Happy the soul of both which bears both part.
 Happy that love which thought, heart, soul hath sought.
 The name of love is happiest, for I love her;
 Soul, heart, and thoughts, love's agents are to prove
 her.

Ye parents that would have your children ruled,
 Here may they be instructed, ruled, and taught.
 Ye children that would have your parents schooled,
 Feeding their wanton thirst with folly's draught,
 See here the school of discipline erected;
 See here how young and old are both corrected. 30

Children, this is the mistress of your bliss,
 Your schoolmistress, reformer of your lives.
 Parents, you that do speak, think, do amiss,
 Here's she which loves, and life's direction gives.
 She teacheth that which God knows to be true;
 She chooseth that which God would choose for you. 35

What is our birth? Poor, naked, needy, cold. 35
 What is our life? Poor as our birth hath been.
 What is our age? Forlorn in being old.
 What is our end? As our beginning's scene. 40
 Our birth, our life, our age, our end is poor:
 What birth, what life, what age, what end hath more?

Made rich it is with vanity's vain show.
 If wanting wisdom, it is folly's game;
 Or like a bended or unbended bow, 45
 Ill fortune's scoff it is, good fortune's shame.
 If wisdom be the riches of thy mind,
 Then can thy fortune see; not seeing, blind.

Then if good fortune doth begin thy state,
 Ill fortune cannot end what she begins. 50
 Thy fate at first will still remain thy fate,
 Thy conduct unto joys, not unto sins.
 If thou the bridegroom art, wisdom the bride,
 Ill fortune cannot swim against thy tide.

Thou marrying her dost marry more than she: 55
 Thy portion is not faculties, but bliss.
 Thou need'st not teaching, for she teacheth thee;
 Nor no reformer, she thy mistress is.
 The lesson which she gives thee for thy learning
 Is every virtue's love, and sin's deserving. 60

Dost thou desire experience for to know? 65
 Why, how can she be less than what she is?
 The growth of knowledge doth from wisdom grow.
 The growth of wisdom is in knowing this.
 Wisdom can tell all things: what things are past,
 What done, what undone, what are doing last.

282 steven crown; voice285 middest the very middle of8 How Wisdom, the beloved schoolmistress, teaches all the higher virtues; marriage with her achieves both worldly glory and joyful immortality.

3 fine ending24 prove verify, validate32 reformer amender; glancing at the leaders of the 16th-century religious reformation?

49 good fortune 'prudency' (Geneva)56 faculties powers of the mind60 every virtue's 'soberness and prudency, righteousness and strength' (Geneva)

	Nay more, what things are come, what are to come, Or words, or works, or shows, or actions; In her brain's table-book she hath the sum, 70 And knows dark sentences' solutions. She knows what signs and wonders will ensue, And when success of seasons will be new.	Although mute silence tie my judgement's tongue, Sad secretary of dumb action, Yet shall they give me place though I be young, And stay my leisure's satisfaction, Even as a judge which keeps his judgements mute, When clients have no answer of their suit.	Verse 12
Verse 9	Who would not be a bridegroom? Who not wed? Who would not have a bride so wise, so fair? 75 Who would not lie in such a peaceful bed, Whose canopy is heav'n, whose shade the air? How can it be that any of the skies Can there be missing where heav'n's kingdom lies?	But if the closure of my mouth unmeets, And dives within the freedom of my words, They like petitioners' tongues welcome greets, And with attentive ear hears my accords. But if my words into no limits go, Their speech shall ebb, mine in their ebbing flow.	115 120
80	If care-sick, I am comforted with joy. If surfeiting on joy, she bids me care. She says that overmuch will soon annoy: Too much of joy, too much of sorrow's fare. She always counsels me to keep a mean, And not with joy too fat, with grief too lean.	And what of this vain world, vain hope, vain show, Vain glory, seated in a shade of praise, Mortality's descent, and folly's flow, The badge of vanity, the hour of days? What glory is it for to be a king, When care is crown, and crown is fortune's sling?	Verse 13 125
Verse 10	Fain would the shrub grow by the highest tree. Fain would the mushroom kiss the cedar's bark. Fain would the seely worm a-sporting be. Fain would the sparrow imitate the lark. Though I a tender shrub, a mushroom be, 90 Yet covet I the honour of a tree.	Wisdom is immortality's alline, And immortality is wisdom's gain. By her the heaven's lineage is mine. By her I immortality obtain. The earth is made immortal in my name; The heav'ns are made immortal in my fame.	130
95	And may I not? May not the blossoms bud? Doth not the little seed make ears of corn? Doth not a sprig, in time, bear greatest wood? Doth not young ev'nings make an elder morn? 95 For wisdom's sake, I know, though I be young, I shall have praises from my elders' tongue.	Two spacious orbs of two as spacious climes Shall be the heritage which I possess: My rule in heav'n, directing earthly times, My reign in earth, commencing earth's redress. One king made two, one crown a double crown; One rule two rules, one fame a twice renown.	Verse 14 135
Verse 11	And as my growth doth rise, so shall my wit; And as my wit doth rise, so shall my growth. In wit I grow; both growths grow to be fit; 100 Both fitting in one growth be fittest both. Experience follows age, and nature youth: Some agèd be in wit, though young in ruth.	What heaven is this, which every thought contains? Wisdom my heav'n, my heav'n is wisdom's heav'n. What earth is this, wherein my body reigns? Wisdom my earth, all rule from wisdom giv'n. Through her I rule, through her I do subdue; Through her I reign, through her my empire grew.	140
105	The wisdom which I have springs from above. The wisdom from above is that I have. Her I adore, I reverence, I love; She's my pure soul, locked in my body's grave. The judgement which I use from her proceeds, Which makes me marvelled at in all my deeds.	A rule, not tyranny; a reign, not blood; An empire, not a slaughterhouse of lives; A crown, not cruelty in fury's mood; A sceptre which restores, and not deprives; All made to make a peace, and not a war, By wisdom, concord's queen and discord's bar.	Verse 15 150

69 table-book pocket notebook or memorandum-book	102 ruth pity	judicious pronouncements?
70 dark sentences difficult problems, enigmas	110 Sad sober	119-20 But if... flow 'If I talk much, they [the great men] shall lay their hands upon their mouths' (Geneva).
85 Fain Gladly	secretary one entrusted with secret matters	127 alline ally or kin, presumably; apparently Middleton's coining (not in OED)
87 seely innocent, harmless	111 they 'great men' (Geneva)	150 bar barrier
a-sporting playing happily	115 unmeets is unsuitable (not recorded in OED)
88 imitate the lark by singing beautifully	118 accords agreements between parties; so,

The coldest word oft cools the hottest threat,
 The tyrant's menaces the calms of peace.
 Two colds augmenteth one, two heats one heat,
 And makes both too extreme, when both increase.
 155 My peaceful reign shall conquer tyrants' force:
 Not arms, but words, not battle, but remorse.

Verse
 16 Yet mighty shall I be, though war in peace;
 Strong, though ability hath left his clime;
 And good, because my wars and battles cease,
 160 Or at the least lie smothered in their prime.
 The sense, once diggèd up with fear's amaze,
 Doth rage untamed with folly's senseless gaze.

If wisdom doth not harbour in delight,
 It breaks the outward passage of the mind.
 165 Therefore I place my war in wisdom's might,
 Whose heavy labours easy harbours find.
 Her company is pleasure, mirth, and joy,
 Not bitterness, not mourning, not annoy.

Verse
 17 When every thought was balanced by weight
 Within the concave of my body's scale,
 My heart and soul did hold the balance straight,
 To see what thought was joy, what thought was wail;
 But when I saw that grief did weigh down pleasure,
 I put in wisdom to augment her treasure.

Verse
 18 Wisdom, the weight of immortality.
 Wisdom, the balance of all happiness.
 Wisdom, the weigher of felicity.
 Wisdom, the paragon of blessedness.
 180 When in her hands there lies such plenty's store,
 Needs must her heart have twice as much and more.

Verse
 19 Her heart have I conjoined with her hand.
 Her hand hath she conjoined with my heart.
 Two souls one soul, two hearts one body's bond,
 And two hands made of four by amour's art.
 185 Was I not wise in choosing earthly life?
 Nay, wise, thrice wise, in choosing such a wife!

Verse
 20 Was I not good? Good, then the sooner bad.
 Bad, because earth is full of wickedness,
 Because my body is with vices clad,
 190 Anatomy of my sin's heaviness.
 As doth unseemly clothes make the skin foul,
 So the sin-inkèd body blots the soul.

Thus lay my heart plunged in destruction's mire. Verse
 Thus lay my soul bespotted with my sin. 21
 Thus lay myself consumed in my desire. 195
 Thus lay all parts ensnarèd in one gin.
 At last my heart, mounting above the mud,
 Lay between hope and death, mischief and good.

Thus panting, ignorant to live or die,
 To rise or fall, to stand or else to sink, 200
 I cast a fainting look unto the sky,
 And saw the thought which my poor heart did think;
 Wisdom my thought, at whose seen sight I prayed,
 And with my heart, my mind, my soul, I said:

Chapter Nine

O God of fathers, Lord of heav'n and earth, Verse 1
 Mercy's true sovereign, pity's portraiture,
 King of all kings, a birth surpassing birth,
 A life immortal, essence ever pure,
 Which, with a breath ascending from thy thought, 5
 Hast made the heav'ns of earth, the earth of naught,

Thou which hast made mortality for man, Verse
 Beginning life to make an end of woe, 2, 3
 Ending in him what in himself began,
 His earth's dominion, through thy wisdom's flow, 10
 Made for to rule according to desert,
 And execute revenge with upright heart:

Behold a crown, but yet a crown of care, Verse 4
 Behold a sceptre, yet a sorrow's guise,
 More than the balance of my head can bear, 15
 More than my hands can hold, wherein it lies:
 My crown doth want supportance for to bear,
 My sceptre wanteth empire for to wear.

A legless body is my kingdom's map,
 Limping in folly, halting in distress. 20
 Give me thy wisdom, Lord, my better hap,
 Which may my folly cure, my grief redress.
 O let me not fall in oblivion's cave;
 Let wisdom be my bail, for her I crave.

Behold thy servant pleading for his hire, Verse 5
 As an apprentice to thy gospel's word.
 Behold his poor estate, his hot-cold fire.
 His weak-strong limbs, his merry woes record.
 Born of a woman, woman-like in woe:
 They weak, they feeble are, and I am so. 30

156 remorse pity, compassion

170 concave hollow, cavity

scale playing secondarily on the rare sense of 'scale' as surface, exterior

181 conjoined linked (in the preceding couplet); in the next line it means married

187-96 Was...gin Nothing in Geneva 8:20,

21 parallels the self-loathing given to

Solomon here. Middleton apparently motivates the transition to prayer by plunging his speaker into remorse for the self-congratulatory worldliness of 185-6.

9 Solomon, on behalf of sinning humanity, prays for wisdom's correction, that his works may be acceptable, his governance righteous.

12 revenge 'judgement' (Geneva)

29-30 Born of a woman...I am so. 'I thy servant, and son of thine handmaid, am a feeble person' (Geneva); the attribution of weakness and feebleness to women is Middleton's.

	My time of life is as an hour of day; 'Tis as a day of months, a month of years. It never comes again but fades away, As one morn's sun about the hemispheres.	All these three casements were contained in wit: 'Twas wisdom for to frame the heaven's sky, 'Twas wisdom for to make the earth so fit, And hell within the lowest orb to lie; To make a heav'nly clime, an earthly course, And hell, although the name of it be worse.	Verse 9 75
35	Little my memory, lesser my time, But least of all my understanding's prime.
Verse 6	Say that my memory should never die; Say that my time should never lose a glide; Say that myself had earthly majesty, 40 Seated in all the glory of my pride; Yet if discretion did not rule my mind, My reign would be like fortune's, folly-blind;	Before the world was made, wisdom was born: Born of heav'n's God, conceived in his breast, Which knew what works would be, what ages worn, What labours life should have, what quiet rest, What should displease and please, in vice, in good, What should be clearest spring, what foulest mud.	80
45	My memory a pathway to my shame, My time the looking-glass of my disgrace, Myself resemblance of my scornèd name, My pride the puffed shadow of my face: Thus should I be remembered, not regarded; Thus should my labours end, but not rewarded.	O make my sinful body's world anew; Erect new elements, new airs, new skies. The time I have is frail, the course untrue, The globe unconstant, like ill fortune's eyes. First make the world, which doth my soul contain, And next my wisdom, in whose power I reign.	Verse 10 90
Verse 7	What were it to be shadow of a king? 50 A vanity. To wear a shadowed crown? A vanity. To love an outward thing? A vanity. Vain shadows of renown. This king is king of shades, because a shade, A king in show, though not in action made.	Illumine earth with wisdom's heav'nly sight. Make her ambassador to grace the earth. O let her rest by day and lodge by night Within the closure of my body's hearth, That in her sacred self I may perceive What things are good to take, what ill to leave.	95
55	His shape have I, his cognizance I wear, A smoky vapour hemmed with vanity. Himself I am, his kingdom's crown I bear, Unless that wisdom change my livery. A king I am, God hath inflamèd me, 60 And lesser than I am I cannot be.	The body's heat will flow into the face, The outward index of an outward deed. The inward sins do keep an inward place: Eyes, face, mouth, tongue, and every function feed. She is my face. If I do any ill, I see my shame in her repugnant will.	Verse 11 100
Verse 8	When I command, the people do obey, Submissive subjects to my votive will. A prince I am, and do what princes may: Decree, command, rule, judge, perform, fulfil. 65 Yet I myself am subject unto God, As are all others to my judgement's rod.	She is my glass, my type, my form, my map, The figure of my deed, shape of my thought, My life's charàcter, fortune to my hap, Which understandeth all that heart hath wrought. What works I take in hand, she finisheth, And all my vicious thoughts diminisheth.	105
70	As do my subject honour my command, So I at his command a subject am. I build a temple on Mount Zion's sand, Erect an altar in thy city's name. Resemblances these are, where thou dost dwell, Made when thou framèd'st heaven, earth, and hell.	My facts are written in her forehead's book, The volume of my thoughts, lines of my words. The sins I have she murders with a look, And what one cheek denies, th'other affords. As white and red, like battles and retreats, One doth defend the blows, the other beats.	Verse 12

34 hemispheres heavens36 prime state of perfection38 glide step55 His shape the 'king in show' of the preceding linecognizance emblem, coat of arms59 God The shift to speaking of God rather than to him is Middleton's. Geneva in this chapter is unvarying in its direct prayerful address. Middleton returns to addressing God only at 69-72, and in Verse 10. And see note to 163.

62 votive expressive of a vow, desire67 subject collective singular for subjects of a realm69 Mount Zion's Mount Zion is a sacred hill in Jerusalem72 framèd'st created72-84 hell . . . mud The stress on hell, vice, and foulness is Middleton's.73 casements here, apparently, creations or constructions, suggested by 'framèd'st' in the preceding line

86 Erect . . . skies Build a whole new creation, from this material world, to the air above it, to the upper regions or heavens.102 repugnant opposing103 type representation, image105 charàcter emblem, cipher109 facts evil deeds; like 'vicious thoughts' in 108, this detail has no counterpart in Geneva

- 115 So is her furious mood commixed with smile.
Her rod is profit, her correction mirth.
She makes me keep an acceptable style,
And govern every limit of the earth.
Through her the state of monarchy is known;
120 Through her I rule, and guide my father's throne.
- Verse
13 Mortality itself, without repair,
Is ever falling feebly on the ground:
Submissive body, heart above the air,
Which fain would know, when knowledge is not found.
125 Fain would it soar above the eagle's eye,
Though it be made of lead, and cannot fly.
- The soul and body are the wings of man.
The soul should mount, but that lies drowned in sin,
With leaden spirit, but doth what it can,
130 Yet scarcely can it rise when it is in.
Then how can man so weak know God so strong?
What heart from thought, what thought from heart hath sprung?
- Verse
14 We think that every judgement is alike,
That every purpose hath one final end.
135 Our thoughts, alas, are fears; fears horrors strike;
Horrors our life's uncertain course do spend.
Fear follows negligence, both death and hell:
Unconstant are the paths wherein we dwell.
- Verse
15 The hollow concave of our bodies' vaults,
Once laden up with sin's eternal graves,
Straight bursts into the soul the slime of faults,
And overfloweth like a sea of waves.
The earth, as neighbour to our privy thought,
Keeps fast the mansion which our cares have bought.
- Verse
16 Say, can we see ourselves? Are we so wise?
Or can we judge our own with our own hearts?
Alas, we cannot. Folly blinds our eyes,
Mischief our minds, with her mischievous arts.
Folly reigns there where wisdom should bear sway,
150 And folly's mischief bars discretion's way.
- O weak capacity of strongest wit!
O strong capacity of weaker sense!
To guide, to meditate, unapt, unfit,
Blind in perceiving earth's circumfluence.
If labour doth consist in mortal skill, 155 'Tis greater labour to know heaven's will.
- The toiling spirit of a labouring man
Is tossed in casualties of fortune's seas.
He thinks it greater labour than he can,
To run his mortal course without an ease.
160 Then who can gain or find celestial things,
Unless their hopes a greater labour brings?
- What volume of thy mind can then contain Thoughts, words, and works, which God thinks, speaks, and makes,
When heav'n itself cannot such honour gain, 165 Nor angels know the counsel which God takes?
Yet if thy heart be wisdom's mansion,
Thy soul shall gain thy heart's made mention.
- Who can in one day's space make two days' toil?
Or who in two days' space will spend but one?
The one doth keep his mean in overbroil,
The other under mean because alone.
Say, what is man without his spirit sways him?
Say, what's the spirit if the man decays him?
- An ill-reformèd breath, a life, a hell, 175 A going out worse than a coming in.
For wisdom is the body's sentinel,
Set to guard life which else would fall in sin.
She doth correct and love, sways and preserves,
Teaches and favours, rules and yet observes.
180
- Chapter Ten
- Correction follows love, love follows hate,
175 For love in hate is hate in too much love.
So chastisement is preservation's mate,
Instructing and preserving those we prove.
So wisdom first corrects, then favoureth,
5 But fortune favours first, then wavereth.

139 concave cavity
vaults sewers
143 privy secret or intimate; with a glance at the substantive sense, a latrine 147-8 Folly ... Mischief not implied by Geneva
154 circumfluence flowing around; apparently here, activity; OED's first record of this item is from 1888
160 ease relief 163 thy mind another instance of the poem's instability concerning addressoraddressee: where Geneva's Solomon prays to God, Middleton's speaker now addresses either himself or some undefined listener.

168 made mention mention-making; i.e., commemoration
171 keep his mean in overbroil To keep one's mean is to observe moderation;
a broil is a tumult, quarrel, tempest;
overbroil is presumably an intensified state of agitation, disorder; and so the sense is apparently that the one keeps his cool in desperate situations.
172 under mean below average; of low regard

173 without unless 10 From the five books of Moses: the deliverance of the righteous, and the destruction of the unrighteous, all effected by wisdom. In order, the stories of Adam, Cain, Noah, Lot, Cain again (probably in error for Jacob), Joseph, and the durance and flight of the Israelites, culminating in the central miracle of this work, the parting and closing of the Red Sea.
1 Correction like 'chastisement' in 3, not implied by Geneva
4 prove try, test

First, the first father of this earthly world,
 First man, first father called for after time,
 Unfashioned and like a heap was hurled,
 10 Formed and reformed by wisdom out of slime.
 By nature ill reformed, by wisdom purer:
 She mortal life, she better life's procurer.

Verse 2 Alas, what was he but a clod of clay?
 Whatever was he but an ashy cask?
 15 By wisdom clothed in his best array,
 If better may be best, to choose a task.
 One gave him time to live, she power to reign,
 Making two powers one, one power twain.

Verse 3 But O, malign, ill-boding wickedness,
 20 Like bursting gulls o'erwhelming virtue's seed,
 Too furious wrath forsaking happiness,
 Losing ten thousand joys with one dire deed:
 Cain could see, but folly struck him blind,
 To kill his brother in a raging mind.

Verse 4 O too unhappy stroke, to end two lives!
 Unhappy actor in death's tragedy!
 Murd'ring a brother, whose name murder gives,
 Whose slaying action, slaughter's butchery.
 A weeping part had earth in that same play,
 30 For she did weep herself to death that day.

Water distilled from millions of her eyes
 Upon the long-dried carcass of her time.
 Her wat'ry conduits were the weeping skies,
 Which made her womb an overflowing clime.
 35 Wisdom preserved it, which preserves all good,
 And taught it how to make an ark of wood.

Verse 5 O that one board should save so many lives
 Upon the world's huge billow-tossing sea!
 'Twas not the board, 'twas wisdom which survives:
 40 Wisdom that ark, that board, that fence, that bay.
 The world was made a water-rolling wave,
 But wisdom better hope's assurance gave.

And when pale malice did advance her flag
 Upon the raging standard of despite,

Fiend's sovereign, sin's mistress, and hell's hag,
 45 Dun Pluto's lady, empress of the night,
 Wisdom, from whom immortal joy begun,
 Preserved the righteous as her faultless son.

The wicked perished, but they survived. Verse 6
 The wicked were ensnared, they were preserved. 50
 One kept in joy, the one of joy deprived,
 One feeding, fed, the other feeding, starved.
 The food which wisdom gives is nourishment,
 The food which malice gives is languishment.

One feeds, the other feeds, but choking feeds: 55
 Two contraries in meat, two differing meats.
 This brings forth hate, and this repentance' seeds,
 This war, this peace, this battles, this retreats.
 And that example may be truly tried,
 These lived in Sodom's fire, the other died. 60

The land will bear me witness they are dead, Verse 7
 Which for their sakes bears nothing else but death,
 The witness of itself with vices fed,
 A smoky testimony of sin's breath.
 This is my witness, my certificate, 65
 And this is my sin-weeping sociate.

My pen will scarce hold ink to write these woes,
 These woes, the blotted inky lines of sin.
 My paper wrinkles at my sorrow's shows,
 And like that land will bring no harvest in. 70
 Had Lot's unfaithful wife been without fault,
 My fresh-inked pen had never called her salt.

But now my quill, the tell-tale of all moans, Verse 8
 Is savoury bent to aggravate salt tears,
 And wets my paper with salt-water groans,
 Making me stick in agonizing fears. 75
 My paper now is grown to billows' might;
 Sometimes I stay my pen, sometimes I write.

O foolish pilot I, blind-hearted guide!
 Can I not see the cliffs, but rend my bark? 80
 Must I needs hoist up sails 'gainst wind and tide,
 And leave my soul behind, my wisdom's ark?
 Well may I be the glass of my disgrace,
 And set my sin in other sinners' place.

7 first father Adam

10 Formed...slime The original for this line is omitted from Geneva and the Junius-Tremellius versions; it appears, however, in pre-1592 editions of the Vulgate (eduxit illum de limo terrae) and in the Coverdale, Matthew, and Great Bibles ('took him out of the mould of the earth') (v.s.).

reformed amended

27 name linking 'Cain' metonymically with 'murder'

34 clime region

40 bay embankment, dam

46 Dun dark, murky

Pluto's lady Persephone or Hecate, queen of hell

48 the righteous The reference in Geneva is to Abraham; but Middleton evidently treats the term as plural in his next line.

60 Sodom's Sodom was one of the cities destroyed by fire for carnal wickedness (Genesis 19).

67 My pen replacing Solomon's voice with that of the poet

71 Lot's unfaithful wife turned into a pillar of salt when fleeing the destruction of Sodom

72 salt see 71; but playing on the adjectival sense, lecherous

74 savoury playing on two senses: the religious one, savouring of holiness, and the culinary one, describing tastes distinct from sweet

aggravate intensify

80 bark sailing vessel

82 ark chest, coffer, particularly as receptacle for divine law

83 glass emblematic mirror

Verse 9 But why despair I? Here comes wisdom's grace, Whose hope doth lead me unto better hap, Whose presence doth direct my fore-run race, Because I serve her as my beauties' map. Like Cain I shall be restored to heaven, 90 From shipwreck's peril to a quiet haven. Verse 10 10 When that by Cain's hand Abel was slain, His brother Abel, brother to his ire, Then Cain fled, to fly destruction's pain, God's heavy wrath, against his blood's desire; 95 But being fetched again by wisdom's power, Had pardon for his deed, love for his lower. Verse 11 11 By his repentance he remission had, And relaxation from the clog of sin. His painful labour labour's riches made, 100 His labouring pain did pleasure's profit win. 'Twas wisdom, wisdom made him to repent, And newly placed him in his old content. 105 His body, which was once destruction's cave, Black murder's territory, mischief's house, By her these wicked sins were made his slave, And she became his bride, his wife, his spouse, Enriching him which was too rich before: Too rich in vice, in happiness too poor. Verse 12 12 Megaera, which did rule within his breast, And kept foul Lerna's fen within his mind, Both now displease him, which once pleased him best, Now murd'ring murder with his being kind. These which were once his friends are now his foes, Whose practice he retorts with wisdom's blows. 115 Yet still lie they in ambush for his soul, But he, more wiser, keeps a wiser way. They see him, and they bark, snarl, grin and howl, But wisdom guides his steps, he cannot stray: By whom he conquers, and through whom he knows 120 The fear of God is stronger than his foes. Verse 13 13 When man was clad in vice's livery, And sold as bondman unto sin's command, She, she forsook him not for infamy, But freed him from his heart's imprisoned bond, 125 And when he lay in dungeon of despite, She interlined his grief with her delight.	Though servile she with him, she was content. The prison was her lodge as well as his, Till she the sceptre of the world had lent To glad his fortune, to augment his bliss, To punish false accusers of true deeds, And raise in him immortal glory's seeds. Say, shall we call her wisdom by her name? Or new invent a nominating style, Reciting ancient worth to make new fame, Or new-old hierarchy from honour's file? Say, shall we file out fame for virtue's store, And give a name not thought nor heard before? Then should we make her two, where now but one. Then should we make her common to each tongue. Wisdom shall be her name, she wise alone. If alter old for new, we do old wrong. Call her still wisdom, mistress of our souls, Our lives' deliverer from our foes' controls. To make that better which is best of all, Were to disarm the title of the power, And think to make a raise, and make a fall, Turn best to worst, a day unto an hour. To give two sundry names unto one thing, Makes it more commoner in Echo's sling. She guides man's soul: let her be called a queen. She enters into man: call her a sprite. She makes them godly which have never been: Call her herself, the image of her might. Those which for virtue plead, she prompts their tongue, Whose suit no tyrant nor no king can wrong. She stands as bar between their mouth and them. She prompts their thoughts. Their thoughts prompts speeches' sound. Their tongue's reward is honour's diadem, Their labour's hire with duest merit crowned. She is as judge and witness of each heart, Condemning falsehood, taking virtue's part. A shadow in the day, star in the night: A shadow for to shade them from the sun, A star in darkness for to give them light. A shade in day, a star when day is done: Keeping both courses true, in being true, A shade, a star, to shade and lighten you.	Verse 14 130 Verse 15 135 140 Verse 16 150 155 Verse 17 160 165
---	--	--

89 Cain All premodern commentaries and glosses on the corresponding biblical passage (10:10-12), including the marginal cross-reference in Geneva, note that it refers to Jacob (D.S.); but Genesis Rabbah, oddly, illustrates divine mercy by recounting Adam's encounter with a repentant and forgiven Cain (22:13).
96 lower reward, recompense

109 Megaera one of the avenging Furies
110 Lerna's Lerna was a swampy Argolian river, home of the hydra.
121 man Joseph, son of Jacob; he was sold to the Egyptian Potiphar, falsely accused of sexual harassment by Potiphar's wife, and thrown into prison, where he prospered.
133 we the righteous people

136 file catalogue, roll
137 file out erase
150 Echo's sling figurative explanation for the nymph's ability to throw sound back to its source
152 sprite spirit
168-75 lighten you . . . your craves Evidently the poem turns here briefly to direct address of Moses and the Israelites.

Verses 18, 19 And had she not, the sun's hot-burning fire
Had scorched the inward palace of your powers,
Your hot affection cooled your hot desire.
Two heats once met make cool distilling showers.
So likewise, had not wisdom been your star,
You had been prisoner unto Phoebe's car.

175 She made the Red Sea subject to your craves,
The surges calms, the billows smoothest ways.
She made rough winds sleep silent in their caves,
And Aeol watch, whom all the winds obeys.
Their foes, pursuing them with death and doom,
180 Did make the sea their church, the waves their tomb.

Verses 20, 21 They furrowed up a grave to lie therein,
Burying themselves with their own handy deed.
Sin digged a pit itself to bury sin.
Seed plowèd up the ground, to scatter seed.
185 The righteous, seeing this same sudden fall,
Did praise the Lord, and seized upon them all.

A glorious prize, though from inglorious hands!
A worthy spoil, though from unworthy hearts!
Tossed with the ocean's rage upon the sands,
190 Victorious gain, gainèd by wisdom's arts:
Which makes the dumb to speak, the blind to see,
The deaf to hear, the babes have gravity.

Chapter Eleven

Verse 1 What he could have a heart, what heart a thought,
What thought a tongue, what tongue a show of fears,
Having his ship balanced with such a freight,
Which calms the ever-weeping ocean's tears,
5 Which prospers every enterprise of war,
And leads their fortune by good fortune's star?

Verses 2, 3 A pilot on the seas, guide on the land,
Through uncouth, desolate, untrodden way,
Through wilderness of woe, which in woes stand,
10 Pitching their tents where desolation lay,
In just revenge encount'ring with their foes,
Annexing wrath to wrath, and blows to blows.

Verse 4 But when the heat of overmuch alarms
Had made their bodies subject unto thirst,

And broiled their hearts in wrath's allaying harms
With fiery surges which from body burst,
That time had made the total sum of life,
Had not affection strove to end the strife.

Wisdom, affectionating power of zeal,
Did cool the passion of tormenting heat
20 With water from a rock, which did reveal
Her dear dear love, placed in affection's seat.
She was their mother twice, she nursed them twice,
Mingling their heat with cold, their fire with ice.

From whence received they life? From a dead stone? Verse 5
From whence received they speech? From a mute rock?
As if all pleasure did proceed from moan,
Or all discretion from a senseless block?
For what was each but silent, dead, and mute,
As if a thorny thistle should bear fruit? 30

'Tis strange how that should cure which erst did kill,
Give life in whom destruction is enshrined.
Alas, the stone is dead, and hath no skill.
Wisdom gave life and love: 'twas wisdom's mind.
She made the stone, which poisonèd her foes, 35 Give life, give cure, give remedy to those.

Blood-quaffing Mars, which washed himself in gore, Verse 6
Reigned in her foes' thirst slaughter-drinking hearts,
Their heads the bloody storehouse of blood's store,
Their minds made bloody streams disbursed in parts. 40
What was it else but butchery and hate,
To prize young infants' blood at murder's rate?

But let them surfeit on their bloody cup, Verse 7
Carousing to their own destruction's health.
We drink the silver-streamèd water up, 45
Which unexpected flowed from wisdom's wealth,
Declaring by the thirst of our dry souls
How all our foes did swim in murder's bowls.

What greater ill than famine? Or what ill Verse 8
Can be compared to the fire of thirst?
One be as both, for both the body kill, 50
And first brings torments in tormenting first:
Famine is death itself, and thirst no less,
If bread and water do not yield redress.

174 Phoebe's car the moon
175 made the Red Sea subject when the Israelites fled through the parted waters, which then closed to swallow up the pursuing Egyptians craves needs; prayers; OED records no substantive form before 1707
178 Aeol Aeolus, god of the winds
179 Their foes the Egyptians 182 handy manual 111 The many miracles done for Israel in the flight out of Egypt; God's vengeance against the unrighteous and idolatrous, and the guarantee of God's mercy to the repentant righteous.

3 balanced common Elizabethan error for ballasted; retained here for metre freight cargo, freight (obs., retained for rhyme); wisdom
13 alarms calls to arms
15 broiled embroiled, involved in hostility;
seared, charred
allaying tempering by fire

18 affection (divine) love
19 affectionating regarding with affection 21 water from a rock Moses's miracle in Kadesh
25 dead stone anticipating the discussion of idolatry in Chapter 13
31 erst at first, formerly 37 Blood-quaffing Mars god of war; the phrase appears in Marlowe's Hero and Leander, 151 (first published in 1598)
38 thirst thirsty?

55	Yet this affliction is but virtue's trial, Proceeding from the mercy of God's ire, To see if it can find his truth's denial, His judgement's breach, attempts contempt's desire. But O, the wicked, sleeping in misdeed,	Content they were to die for virtue's right, Sith joy should be the pledge of heaviness. When unexpected things were brought to pass, They were amazed, and wondered where God was.	100
60	Had death on whom they fed, on whom they feed.	He whom they did deny, now they extol. He whom they do extol, they did deny; He whom they did deride, they do enrol In register of heav'nly majesty. Their thirst was ever thirst. Repentance stopped it. Their life was ever dead. Repentance propped it.	105
Verse 9	Adjudged, condemned, and punished in one breath, Arraigned, tormented, tortured in one law, Adjudged like captives with destruction's wreath, Arraigned like thieves before the bar of awe:	And had it not, their thirst had burned their hearts, Their hearts had cried out for their tongues' reply, Their tongues had raised all their bodies' parts, Their bodies, once in arms, had made all die. Their foolish practices had made them wise: Wise in their hearts, though foolish in their eyes.	Verse 13
65	Condemned, tormented, tortured, punished, Like captives bold, thieves unastonished.	But they, alas, were dead to worship death, Senseless in worshipping all shadowed shows, Breathless in wasting of so vain a breath, Dumb in performance of their tongues' suppose. They in adoring death, in death's behests, Were punished with life, and living beasts.	115
70	Say God did suffer famine for to reign, And thirst to rule amongst the choicest heart, Yet father-like he eased them of their pain, And proved them how they could endure a smart; But as a righteous king condemned the others, As wicked sons unto as wicked mothers.	Thus for a show of beasts they substance have, The thing itself against the shadow's will, Which makes the shadows, sad woes in life's grave, As naught impossible in heaven's skill. God sent sad Os for shadows of lament. Lions and bears in multitudes he sent,	Verse 14
Verse 10	For where the devil reigns, there sure is hell, Because the tabernacle of his name,	Newly created beasts, which sight ne'er saw, Unknown, which neither eye nor ear did know, To breathe out blasts of fire against their law, And cast out smoke with a tempestuous blow, Making their eyes the chambers of their fears, Darting forth fire as lightning from the spheres.	Verse 15
75	His mansion-house, the place where he doth dwell, The coal-black visage of his nigrum fame. So, if the wicked live upon the earth, Earth is their hell, from good to worser birth.	Thus marching one by one, and side by side, By the profane, ill-limned, pale spectacles, Making both fire and fear to be their guide, Pulled down their vain-adoring chronicles; Then staring in their faces, spit forth fire, Which heats and cools their frosty-hot desire:	120
80	If present, they are present to their tears, If absent, they are present to their woes, Like as the snail, which shows all that she bears, Making her back the mountain of her shows: Present to their death, not absent to their care, Their punishment alike, where'er they are.	Frosty in fear, unfrosty in their shame, Cool in lament, hot in their powers' disgraces, Like lukewarm coals, half kindled with the flame, Sate white and red must'ring within their faces. The beasts themselves did not so much dismay them, As did their ugly eyes' aspects decay them.	125
Verse 11	Why, say they mourned, lamented, grieved, and wailed, And fed lament with care, care with lament: Say, how can sorrow be with sorrow bailed, When tears consumeth that which smiles hath lent? This makes a double prison, double chain,	And that by patience cometh heart's delight, Long-sought-for bliss, long-far-fet happiness.	Verse 16
90	A double mourning and a double pain. Captivity, hoping for freedom's hap, At length doth pay the ransom of her hope, Yet frees her thought from any clogging clap, Though back be almost burst with iron's cope. So they endured the more, because they knew That never till the spring the flowers grew;	130	135
Verse 12	And that by patience cometh heart's delight, Long-sought-for bliss, long-far-fet happiness.	140	140

56 the mercy of God's ire merging and compressing what 11:8 keeps separate in Geneva: 'For when they were tried and chastised with mercy, they knew how the ungodly were judged and punished in wrath.'

58 attempts tries with afflictions or temptations

61 Adjudged sentenced, doomed
70 proved tested
73 devil no comparable mention in Geneva
74 tabernacle dwelling-place
76 nigrum black (Latin)
87 bailed liberated

93 clogging clap encumbering imprisonment
94 cope cloak; vaulted covering
98 long-far-fet far-fetched, i.e., fetched from afar
134 ill-limned poorly-painted 142 Sate apparently for sated, or satiate, i.e., glutted

Verse
17 Yet what are beasts but subjects unto man,
By the decree of heav'n, degree of earth?
They have more strength than he, yet more he can,
He having reason's store, they reason's dearth;
But these were made to break subjection's rod,
150 And show the stubbornness of man to God.

Had they not been ordained to such intent,
God's word was able to supplant their powers,
And root out them which were to mischief bent,
With wrath and vengeance, minutes in death's hours;
155 But God doth keep a full, direct, true course,
And measures pity's love with mercy's force.

Verse
18 The wicked thinks God hath no might at all,
Because he makes no show of what he is,
When God is loath to give their pride a fall,
160 Or cloud the day wherein they do amiss;
But should his strength be shown, his anger rise,
Who could withstand the sun-caves of his eyes?

Verse
19 Alas, what is the world against his ire?
As snowy mountains 'gainst the golden sun,
165 Forced for to melt and thaw with frosty fire,
Fire hid in frost, though frost of cold begun.
As dew-distilling drops fall from the morn,
So new destruction's claps fall from his scorn.

Verse
20 But his revenge lies smothered in his smiles.
His wrath lies sleeping in his mercies' joy,
Which very seldom rise at mischief's coils,
And will not wake for every sinner's toy.
Boundless his mercies are, like heaven's grounds:
They have no limits, they, nor heav'n no bounds.

175 The promontory-top of his true love
Is like the end of never-ending streams,
Like Nilus' water-springs which inward move,
And have no outward show of shadows' beams.
God sees, and will not see, the sins of men, 180 Because they should amend. Amend? O when?

Verse
21 The mother loves the issues of her womb,
As doth the father his begotten son.
She makes her lap their quiet-sleeping tomb.
He seeks to care for life which new begun.
185 What care hath he, think then, that cares for all,
For agèd and for young, for great and small?

190 Is not that father careful, filled with care,
Loving, long-suffering, merciful and kind,
Which made with love all things that in love are,
Unmerciful to none, to none unkind?

Had man been hateful, man had never been,
But perished in the springtime of his green.

But how can hate abide where love remains?
Or how can anger follow mercy's path?
How can unkindness hinder kindness' gains?
195 Or how can murder bathe in pity's bath?
Love, mercy, kindness, pity, either's mate,
Doth scorn unkindness, anger, murder, hate.

Had it not been thy will to make the earth
It still had been a chaos unto time;
200 But 'twas thy will that man should have a birth,
And be preserved by good, condemned by crime.
Yet pity reigns within thy mercies' store.
Thou spar'st and lov'st us all. What would we more?

Chapter Twelve

Verse 1
When all the elements of mortal life
Were placèd in the mansion of their skin,
Each having daily motion to be rife,
Closed in that body which doth close them in,
God sent his holy spirit unto man,
5 Which did begin when first the world began.

Verse 2
So that the body, which was king of all,
Is subject unto that which now is king,
Which chast'neth those whom mischief doth exhale
Unto misdeeds from whence destructions spring.
10 Yet merciful it is, though it be chief,
Converting vice to good, sin to belief.

Verse 3
Old time is often lost in being bald:
Bald because old, old because living long.
It is rejected oft when it is called,
15 And wears out age with age, still being young.
Twice children we, twice feeble and once strong,
But being old, we sin and do youth wrong.

The more we grow in age, the more in vice.
A house-room long unswept will gather dust.
20 Our long unthawèd souls will freeze to ice,
And wear the badge of long imprisoned rust.
So those inhabitants in youth twice born,
Were old in sin, more old in heaven's scorn,

Verse 4
Committing works as inky spots of fame,
Commencing words like foaming vice's waves,
Committing and commencing mischief's name,
With works and words sworn to be vice's slaves:
As sorcery, witchcraft, mischievous deeds,
30 And sacrifice, which wicked fancies feeds.

162 sun-caves of his eyes 'power of thine arm' (Geneva)

171 coils confused noises

177 Nilus' water-springs sources of the Nile, thought by Europeans to be obscure

12 How God is merciful toward even murderers and idol-worshippers, giving them leisure to repent; but his wise and just punishment of the unrepentant, especially the idolatrous, is extreme; how they are first derided and shamed, then damned.

3 rife flourishing

9 exhale drag out

23 those inhabitants 'those old inhabitants of the holy land' (Geneva), from whom the Israelites would reclaim it

Verse 5	Well may I call that wicked which is more. I rather would be low than be too high. O wondrous practisers, clothed all in gore, To end that life which their own lives did buy!	They worsè are with too much punishing, Because by nature prone to injury; For 'tis but folly to supplant his thought, Whose heart is wholly given to be naught.	75
35	More than swine-like, eating man's bowels up, Their banquet's dish, their blood their banquet's cup.	These seeded were in seed. O cursèd plant! Seeded with other seed. O cursèd root! Too much of good doth turn unto good's want, As too much seed doth turn to too much soot: Bitter in taste, presuming of their height, Like misty vapours in black-coloured night.	80
Verses 6, 7	Butchers unnatural, worse by their trade, Whose house the bloody shambles of decay, More than a slaughter-house which butchers made,	But God, whose powerful arms one strength doth hold, Scorning to stain his force upon their faces, Will send his messengers both hot and cold, To make them shadows of their own disgraces. His hot ambassador is fire, his cold Is wind, which two scorn for to be controlled.	Verse 12
40	More than an Eastcheap, seely bodies prey; Thorough whose hearts a bloody shambles runs: They do not butcher beasts, but their own sons.	For who dares say unto the king of kings, What hast thou done which ought to be undone? Or who dares stand against thy judgement's stings? Or dare accuse thee for the nations' moan? Or who dare say, revenge this ill for me? Or stand against the Lord with villainy?	90
45	Chief murd'ring of their souls which their souls bought, Extinguishers of light which their lives gave, More than knife butchers they, butchers in thought, Sextons to dig their own begotten grave, Making their habitations old in sin, Which God doth reconcile and new begin.	What he hath done he knows. What he will do He weigheth with the balance of his eyes. What judgement he pronounceth must be so, And those which he oppresses cannot rise. Revenge lies in his hands. When he doth please, He can revenge and love, punish and ease.	95
Verse 8	That murd'ring place was turned into delight, That bloody slaughter-house to peace's breast, That lawless palace to a place of right, That slaught'ring shambles to a living rest, Made meet for justice, fit for happiness, Unmeet for sin, unfit for wickedness.	The clay is subject to the potter's hands, Which with a new device makes a new mould, And what are we, I pray, but clayey bonds, With ashy body joined to cleaner soul? Yet we, once made, scorn to be made again, But live in sin like clayey lumps of pain.	Verse 13
50	That bloody slaughter-house to peace's breast, That lawless palace to a place of right, That slaught'ring shambles to a living rest, Made meet for justice, fit for happiness, Unmeet for sin, unfit for wickedness.	The clay is subject to the potter's hands, Which with a new device makes a new mould, And what are we, I pray, but clayey bonds, With ashy body joined to cleaner soul? Yet we, once made, scorn to be made again, But live in sin like clayey lumps of pain.	Verse 14
Verse 9	Yet the inhabitants, though mischief's slaves, Were not dead-drenched in their destruction's flood. God hoped to raise repentance from sins' graves, And hoped that pain's delay would make them good. Not that he was unable to subdue them, But that their sins' repentance should renew them.	Yet if hot anger smother cool delight, He'll mould our bodies in destruction's form, And make ourselves as subjects to his might, In the least fuel of his anger's storm. Nor king nor tyrant dare ask or demand, What punishment is this thou hast in hand?	100
60	But that their sins' repentance should renew them.	Yet if hot anger smother cool delight, He'll mould our bodies in destruction's form, And make ourselves as subjects to his might, In the least fuel of his anger's storm. Nor king nor tyrant dare ask or demand, What punishment is this thou hast in hand?	105
Verse 10	Delay is took for virtue and for vice. Delay is good, and yet delay is bad. 'Tis virtue when it thaws repentance' ice. 'Tis vice to put off things we have or had.	Yet if hot anger smother cool delight, He'll mould our bodies in destruction's form, And make ourselves as subjects to his might, In the least fuel of his anger's storm. Nor king nor tyrant dare ask or demand, What punishment is this thou hast in hand?	110
65	But here it followeth repentance' way, Therefore it is nor sin's nor mischief's prey.	Yet if hot anger smother cool delight, He'll mould our bodies in destruction's form, And make ourselves as subjects to his might, In the least fuel of his anger's storm. Nor king nor tyrant dare ask or demand, What punishment is this thou hast in hand?	115
70	Delay in punishment is double pain, And every pain makes a twice-double thought, Doubling the way to our lives' better gain, Doubling repentance, which is single bought; For fruitless grafts, when they are too much lopped, More fruitless are, forwhy their fruits are stopped.	Yet if hot anger smother cool delight, He'll mould our bodies in destruction's form, And make ourselves as subjects to his might, In the least fuel of his anger's storm. Nor king nor tyrant dare ask or demand, What punishment is this thou hast in hand?	120
Verse 11	So fares it with the wicked plants of sin, The roots of mischief, tops of villainy:	Yet if hot anger smother cool delight, He'll mould our bodies in destruction's form, And make ourselves as subjects to his might, In the least fuel of his anger's storm. Nor king nor tyrant dare ask or demand, What punishment is this thou hast in hand?	120

38 shambles meat market
40 Eastcheap London meat-market area
seely bodies prey innocent bodies [their] prey
41 Thorough through; retained for metre 46 Sextons church officers whose duties include digging graves

72 forwhy because
74 tops green growth above ground
78 naught immoral, vicious
79 seeded were in seed were gone to seed at the very outset; 'it was a cursed seed from the beginning' (Geneva) 82 soot gardener's term for a substance of

sooty appearance or nature
83 presuming aspiring; rank, overgrown 102 ease relieve
103 carvèd spectacle idol; not suggested here by Geneva, but anticipating the discussion in Chapter 13

Verse 15 We all are captives to thy regal throne. Our prison is the earth, our bonds our sins, And our accuser our own bodies' groan, Pressed down with vice's weights and mischief's gins. 125 Before the bar of heav'n we plead for favour, To cleanse our sin-bespotted bodies' savour. Thou righteous art; our pleading then is right. Thou merciful; we hope for mercy's grace. Thou order'st everything with look-on sight: 130 Behold us, prisoners in earth's wand'ring race. We know thy pity is without a bound, And sparest them which in some faults be found. Verse 16 Thy power is as thyself, without an end, Beginning all to end, yet ending none, 135 Son unto virtue's son, and wisdom's friend, Original of bliss to virtue shown, Beginning good which never ends in vice, Beginning flames which never end in ice. 140 For righteousness is good in such a name. It righteous is; 'tis good in such a deed. A lamp it is, fed with discretion's flame; Begins in seed, but never ends in seed. By this we know the Lord is just and wise, Which causeth him to spare us when he tries. Verse 17 Just, because justice weighs what wisdom thinks; Wise, because wisdom thinks what justice weighs. One virtue maketh two, and two more links. Wisdom is just, and justice never strays. The help of one doth make the other better, 150 As is the want of one the other's letter. But wisdom hath two properties in wit, As justice hath two contraries in force. Heat added unto heat augmenteth it, As too much water bursts a water-course. God's wisdom too much proved doth breed God's 155 hate; God's justice too much moved breeds God's debate. Verse 18 Although the ashy prison of fire-dust Doth keep the flaming heat imprisoned in, Yet sometime will it burn, when flame it must, 160 And burst the ashy cave where it hath been. So if God's mercy pass the bounds of mirth, It is not mercy then, but mercy's dearth. Yet how can love breed hate, without hate's love? God doth not hate to love, nor love to hate.	His equity doth every action prove, Smothering with love that spiteful envy's fate. For should the teen of anger trace his brow, The very puffs of rage would drive the plow. But God did end his toil when world begun. Now like a lover studies how to please, And win their hearts again whom mischief won, Lodged in the mansion of their sin's disease. He made each mortal man two ears, two eyes, To hear and see; yet he must make them wise. If imitation should direct man's life, 'Tis life to imitate a living corse. The thing's example makes the thing more rife. God loving is. Why do we want remorse? He put repentance into sinful hearts, And fed their fruitless souls with fruitful arts. 180 If such a boundless ocean of good deeds Should have such influence from mercy's stream, Kissing both good and ill, flowers and weeds, As doth the sunny flame of Titan's beam, A greater Tethys then should mercy be, 185 In flowing unto them which loveth thee. The sun which shines in heav'n doth light the earth. The earth which shines in sin doth spite the heaven. Sin is earth's sun, the sun of heav'n sin's dearth: Both odd in light, being of height not even. 190 God's mercy then, which spares both good and ill, Doth care for both, though not alike in will. Can vice be virtue's mate, or virtue's meat? Verse 22 Her company is bad, her food more worse. She shames to sit upon her better's seat, 195 As subject beasts, wanting the lion's force. Mercy is virtue's badge, foe to disdain; Virtue is vice's stop, and mercy's gain. Yet God is merciful, to mischief flows, More merciful in sin's and sinners' want. 200 God chast'neth us, and punisheth our foes, Like, sluggish drones amongst, a labouring ant. We hope for mercy at our bodies' doom; We hope for heav'n, the bail of earthly tomb. What hope they for? What hope have they of heaven? Verse 23 They hope for vice, and they have hope of hell, 210 From whence their souls' eternity is given, But such eternity which pains can tell. They live, but better were it for to die, Immortal in their pain and misery.
--	---

121 thy resuming, until 143, Geneva's direct conversation with God

124 gins traps, fetters, instruments of torture

136 Original originator, source

150 letter hinderer, obstructor

155 proved tested

156 debate strife, contention

167 teen vexation, irritation; perhaps with a play on 'tine' (tooth of a harrow, as at 5.94)

176 corse obsolete form of 'corpse', retained for rhyme

198 stop set-back, loss

202 drones in bees, the non-worker males; hence idlers, sluggards; the line is evidently inverted for the sake of both metre and rhyme, logically reading 'Like a labouring ant among sluggish drones.'

204 bail release

Hath hell such freedom to devour souls?
 Are souls so bold to rush in such a place?
 God gives hell power of vice, which hell controls.
 Vice makes her followers bold with armed face.
 215 God tortures both, the mistress and the man,
 And ends in pain that which in vice began.

Verse
 24 A bad beginning makes a worser end,
 Without repentance meet the middle way,
 Making a mediocrity their friend,
 220 Which else would be their foe because they stray.
 But if repentance miss the middle line,
 The sun of virtue ends in west's decline.

225 So did it fare with these, which strayed too far,
 Beyond the measure of the mid-day's eye,
 In error's ways, led without virtue's star,
 Esteeming beast-like powers for deity;
 Whose heart no thought of understanding meant,
 Whose tongue no word of understanding sent:

Verse
 25 Like infant babes, bearing their nature's shell
 Upon the tender heads of tend'rer wit,
 Which tongue-tied are, having no tale to tell
 To drive away the childhood of their fit;
 Unfit to tune their tongue with wisdom's string,
 Too fit to quench their thirst in folly's spring.
 235 But they were trees to babes, babes sprigs to them,
 They not so good as these, in being naught;
 In being naught, the more from vice's stem,
 Whose essence cannot come without a thought.
 To punish them is punishment in season:
 240 They children-like, without or wit or reason.

Verse
 26 To be derided is to be half dead.
 Derision bears a part 'tween life and death.
 Shame follows her with misery half fed,
 Half-breathing life, to make half life and breath.
 245 Yet here was mercy shown: their deeds were more Than could be wiped off by derision's score.

250 This mercy is the warning of misdeeds,
 A trumpet summoning to virtue's walls,
 To notify their hearts which mischief feeds,
 Whom vice instructs, whom wickedness exhales.
 But if derision cannot murder sin,
 Then shame shall end, and punishment begin.

For many shameless are, bold, stout in ill. Verse 27
 Then how can shame take root in shameless plants,
 When they their brows with shameless furrows fill, 255
 And plows each place, which one plow-furrow wants?
 Then being armed 'gainst shame with shameless face,
 How can derision take a shameful place?

But punishment may smooth their wrinkled brow,
 And set shame on the forehead of their rage, 260
 Guiding the fore-front of that shameless row,
 Making it smooth in shame, though not in age.
 Then will they say that God is just and true;
 But 'tis too late, damnation will ensue.

Chapter Thirteen

The branch must needs be weak, if root be so. Verse 1
 The root must needs be weak, if branches fall.
 Nature is vain, man cannot be her foe,
 Because from nature, and at nature's call.
 Nature is vain, and we proceed from nature: 5
 Vain therefore is our birth, and vain our feature.

One body may have two diseases sore.
 Not being two, it may be joined to two.
 Nature is one itself, yet two and more,
 Vain, ignorant of God, of good, of show, 10
 Which not regards the things which God hath done,
 And what things are to do, what new begun.

Why do I blame the tree, when 'tis the leaves? Verse 2
 Why blame I nature for her mortal men?
 Why blame I men? 'Tis she, 'tis she that weaves, 15
 That weaves, that wafts unto destruction's pen.
 Then being blameful both, because both vain,
 I leave to both their vanity's due pain.

To prize the shadow at the substance' rate,
 Is a vain substance of a shadow's hue; 20
 To think the son to be the father's mate,
 Earth to rule earth because of earthly view;
 To think fire, wind, air, stars, water, and heaven,
 To be as gods, from whom their selves are given.

Fire as a god? O irreligious sound! Verse 3
 Wind as a god? O vain, O vainest voice!
 Air as a god, when 'tis but dusky ground?
 Star as a god, when 'tis but Phoebe's choice?
 Water a god, which first by God was made?
 Heaven a god, which first by God was laid? 30

218 Without unless 240 or...or either...or 250 exhales drags off

13 Derision of idolators, who worship nature or their own impermanent handiwork, ignoring the eternal Creator who first made all nature and all humankind.

3 vain ineffectual
 6 feature creation
 7 sore grievous, severe
 16 wafts carries, transports
 17 both nature and men
 22-30 Earth...laid? drawing on a conventional anatomy of the created world,

ascending from the four elements (earth, air, fire, water) to the winds, the stars in their spheres, and heaven itself 27 dusky ground the dim or obscure lower level of creation (wanting 'God's bright excellence of brightest day'—33)

Say all hath beauty, excellence, array,
 Yet beautified they are, they were, they be,
 By God's bright excellence of brightest day,
 Which first implanted our first beauty's tree.
 35 If then the painted outside of the show
 Be radiant, what is the inward row?

Verse 4 If that the shadow of the body's skin
 Be so illumined with the sun-shined soul,
 What is the thing itself which is within,
 40 More rinsed, more cleansed, more purified from foul?
 If elemental powers have God's thought,
 Say what is God, which made them all of naught?

It is a wonder for to see the sky,
 And operation of each airy power;
 45 A marvel that the heav'n should be so high,
 And let fall such a low distilling shower.
 Then needs must he be high, higher than all,
 Which made both low and high with one tongue's call.

Verse 5 The workman mightier is than his hand-work,
 50 In making that which else would be unmade.
 The ne'er-thought thing doth always hidden lurk,
 Without the maker in a making trade.
 For had not God made man, man had not been,
 But nature had decayed and ne'er been seen.

55 The workman never showing of his skill
 Doth live unknown to man, though known to wit.
 Had mortal birth been never in God's will,
 God had been God, but yet unknown in it.
 Then having made the glory of earth's beauty,
 60 'Tis reason earth should reverence him in duty.

Verse 6 The savage people have a supreme head,
 A king, though savage as his subjects are;
 Yet they with his observances are led,
 Obeying his behests whate'er they were.
 65 The Turks, the infidels, all have a lord,
 Whom they observe in thought, in deed, in word.

And shall we, differing from their savage kind,
 Having a soul to live and to believe,
 Be rude in thought, in deed, in word, in mind,
 70 Not seeking him which should our woes relieve?
 O no, dear brethren, seek our God, our fame;
 Then if we err, we shall have lesser blame.

How can we err? We seek for ready way. Verse 7
 O that my tongue could fetch that word again,
 Whose very accent makes me go astray, 75
 Breathing that erring wind into my brain.
 My word is passed, and cannot be recalled;
 It is like aged time, now waxen bald.

For they which go astray in seeking God,
 Do miss the joyful narrow-footed path; 80
 Joyful, thrice joyful way to his abode,
 Naught seeing but their shadows in a bath.
 Narcissus-like, pining to see a show,
 Hind'ring the passage which their feet should go.

Narcissus' fantasy did die to kiss. Verses
 O sugared kiss, dyed with a poisoned lip! 8, 9
 The fantasies of these do die to miss.
 O tossèd fantasies, in folly's ship!
 He died to kiss the shadow of his face;
 These live and die to life's and death's disgrace. 90

A fault without amends, crime without ease,
 A sin without excuse, death without aid;
 To love the world, and what the world did please,
 To know the earth, wherein their sins are laid;
 They knew the world, but not the Lord that framed it; 95
 They knew the earth, but not the Lord that named it.

Narcissus drowned himself for his self's show; Verse
 Striving to heal himself, did himself harm. 10
 These drowned themselves on earth with their selves'
 woe,
 He in a water-brook by fury's charm. 100
 They made dry earth wet with their folly's weeping,
 He made wet earth dry with his fury's sleeping.

Then leave him to his sleep. Return to those Which ever wake in misery's constraints,
 Whose eyes are hollow caves and made sleep's foes, 105
 Two dungeons dark with sin, blind with complaints.
 They callèd images which man first found
 Immortal gods, for which their tongues are bound.

Gold was a god with them, a golden god:
 Like children in a pageant of gay toys, 110
 Adoring images for saints' abode.
 O vain, vain spectacles of vainer joys!
 Putting their hope in blocks, their trust in stones,
 Hoping to trust, trusting to hope in moans.

31 array condition of being specially fitted out for display
 36 row ray, beam
 61 savage non-Christian
 69 rude ignorant, untutored
 71 dear brethren The addressee becomes a virtual Puritan congregation here.
 78 waxen grown

80 narrow-footed having a narrow footway 82 bath spring of water (anticipating the Narcissus image of the next line)
 83 Narcissus-like in Greek mythology, Narcissus is the beautiful youth who died of self-love (the essence of idolatry), adoring his own image in a pool
 87 these the misguided people who seek God

in his material world 100 fury's Fury is inspired frenzy, passionate obsession.
 107 found founded? i.e., cast, moulded, as in a foundry
 111 saints' abode. This reference makes explicit the underlying anticatholicism of the poem's assault on idolatry.

Verses
11, 12 As when a carpenter cuts down a tree,
Meet for to make a vessel for man's use,
He pareth all the bark most cunningly,
With the sharp shaver of his knife's abuse,
Ripping the seely womb with no entreat,
120 Making her woundy chips to dress his meat;

Verse
13 Her body's bones are often rough and hard,
Crooked with age's growth, growing with crooks,
And full of weather-chinks which seasons marred,
Knobby and rugged, bending in like hooks;
125 Yet knowing age can never want a fault,
Encounters it with a sharp knife's assault,

Verse
14 And carves it well, though it be self-like ill,
Observing leisure, keeping time and place,
According to the cunning of his skill,
130 Making the figure of a mortal face,
Or like some ugly beast in ruddy mould,
Hiding each cranny with a painter's fold.

Verses
15, 16 It is a world to see, to mark, to view,
How age can botch up age with crooked thread,
135 How his old hands can make an old tree new,
And dead-like he can make another dead;
Yet makes a substantive able to bear it,
And she, an adjective, nor see nor hear it.

140 A wall it is itself, yet wall with wall
Hath great supportance, bearing either part.
The image, like an adjective, would fall,
Were it not closèd with an iron heart.
The workman, being old himself, doth know
What great infirmities old age can show.

Verse
17 Therefore, to stop the river of extremes,
He burst into the flowing of his wit,
Tossing his brains with more than thousand themes,
To have a wooden stratagem so fit:
Wooden, because it doth belong to wood;
150 His purpose may be wise, his reason good.

His purpose wise? No, foolish, fond, and vain.
His reason good? No, wicked, vile, and ill,
To be the author of his own life's pain,
To be the tragic actor of his will,

Praying to that which he before had framed,
For welcome faculties, and not ashamed;

155

Calling to folly for discretion's sense,
Calling to sickness for sick body's health,
Calling to weakness for a stronger fence,
Calling to poverty for better wealth;
160 Praying to death for life, for this he prayed,
Requiring help of that which wanteth aid;

Desiring that of it which he had not,
And for his journey that which cannot go,
And for his gain her furth'rance, to make glad
The work which he doth take in hand to do.
165 These windy words do rush against the wall;
She cannot speak, 'twill sooner make her fall.

Chapter Fourteen

As doth one little spark make a great flame,
Kindled from forth the bosom of the flint,
As doth one plague infect with its self name,
With wat'ry humours making bodies' dint:
5 So, even so, this idol worshipper
Doth make another idol practiser.

The shipman cannot team dame Tethys' waves
Within a wind-taut cap'ring anchorage,
Before he prostrate lies, and suffrage craves,
And has a block to be his fortune's gage:
10 More crooked than his stern, yet he implores her;
More rotten than his ship, yet he adores her.

Who made this form? He that was formed and made.
Verse 2 'Twas avarice, 'twas she that found it out.
She made her craftsman crafty in his trade,
15 He cunning was in bringing it about.
O, had he made the painted show to speak,
It would have called him vain, herself to wreak.

It would have made him blush alive, though he Did dye her colour with a deadly blush.
Thy providence, O Father, doth decree
A sure, sure way amongst the waves to rush, Verses 3, 4 Thereby declaring that thy power is such,
That though a man were weak, thou canst do much.

117 cunningly skillfully
120 woundy characterized by wounds;
OED's earliest example is from 1660
129 cunning knowledge, craft
132 fold wrapping, covering
134 botch up patch, repair
137 substantive fig. an independent person or thing
138 she the idol, consistently neuter in Geneva
adjective fig. a dependent person or thing; 'he setteth it in a wall, and maketh it fast with iron, providing so for it lest it fall' (Geneva), 15-16.

145 river of extremes journey toward death
148 wooden playing on the sense 'mad' 156 faculties personal attributes, such as the 'discretion' and 'health' of the next stanza 14 Of idol-worshipping at sea; idolatry and vice; the origins and spreading of idolatry, and the evils proceeding from it.
3 self very, own (emphatic adj.)
4 humours mists; bodily fluids dint stroke, blow
7 team harness, yoke; but perhaps an error

for 'tame'
8 wind-taut holding wind tautly; usually applied to a dangerous excess of sail or rigging
cap'ring dancing
9 suffrage assistance; intercession
10 block of wood
11 her the block or idol; again feminizing
Geneva's neutral object; see gloss on 67, and note especially 235-40.
15 crafty skilful; cunning
18 wreak avenge

Verse 5 What is one single bar to double death,
 One death in death, the other death in fear?
 This single bar, a board, a poor board's breadth,
 Yet stops the passage of each Neptune's tear.
 To see how many lives one board can have!
 30 To see how many lives one board can save!

How was this board first made? By wisdom's art,
 Which is not vain but firm, not weak but sure.
 Therefore do men commit their living heart
 To planks which either life or death procure,
 35 Cutting the storms in two, parting the wind,
 Plowing the sea till they their harbour find;

Verse 6 The sea whose mountain billows, passing bounds,
 Rusheth upon the hollow-sided bark,
 With rough-sent kisses from the water grounds,
 40 Raising a foaming heat with rage's spark.
 Yet sea nor waves can make the shipman fear:
 He knows that die he must, he cares not where.

For had his timorous heart been dyed in white,
 And sent an echo of resembling woe,
 45 Wisdom had been unknown in folly's night,
 The sea had been a desolation's show;
 But one world's hope lay hovering on the sea,
 When one world's hap did end with one decay.

Yet Phoebus drownèd in the ocean's world,
 50 Phoebe disgraced with Tethys' billow-rolls,
 And Phoebus' fiery-golden wreath uncurled,
 Was seated at the length in brightness' souls.
 Man, tossed in wettest wilderness of seas,
 Had seed on seed, increase upon increase.

Verses 7, 8 Their mansion-house a tree upon a wave:
 O happy tree, upon unhappy ground!
 But every tree is not ordained to have Such blessedness, such virtue, such abound:
 60 Some trees are carvèd images of naught,
 Yet godlike revered, adored, besought.

Verse 9 Are the trees naught? Alas, they senseless are.
 The hands which fashion them condemn their growth,
 Cuts down their branches, vails their forehead bare.
 Both made in sin, though not sin's equal both:
 65 First God made man, and vice did make him new,
 And man made vice from vice, and so it grew.

Now is her harvest greater than her good,
 Her wonted winter turned to summer's air,

Her ice to heat, her sprig to cedar's wood,
 Her hate to love, her loathsome filth to fair. 70
 Man loves her well, by mischief new created;
 God hates her ill, because of virtue hated.

O foolish man, mounted upon decay, Verse
 10 More ugly than Alastor's pitchy back,
 Night's dismal summoner, and end of day, 75
 Carrying all dusky vapours hemmed in black,
 Behold thy downfall, ready at thy hand!
 Behold thy hopes wherein thy hazards stand!

O spurn away that block out of thy way,
 With virtue's appetite and wisdom's force, 80
 That stumbling block of folly and decay,
 That snare which doth ensnare thy treading corse!
 Behold, thy body falls! Let virtue bear it.
 Behold, thy soul doth fall! Let wisdom rear it.

Say, art thou young or old, tree or a bud? Verse 11 Thy face is so disfigurèd with sin,
 Young I do think thou art. In what? In good,
 But old I am assured by wrinkled skin.
 Thy lips, thy tongue, thy heart, is young in praying,
 90 But lips and tongue and heart is old in straying:

Old in adoring idols, but too young
 In the observance of divines law;
 Young in adoring God, though old in tongue,
 Old and too old, young and too young in awe:
 95 Beginning that which doth begin misdeeds,
 Inventing vice which all thy body feeds.

But this corrupting and infecting food, Verse
 12 This caterpillar of eternity,
 The foe to bliss, the canker unto good,
 The new accustomed way of vanity:
 100 It hath not ever been, nor shall it be,
 But perish in the branch of folly's tree.

As her descent was vanity's alline, Verse
 13 So her descending like to her descent:
 Here shall she have an end, in hell no fine. 105
 Vainglory brought her vainly to be spent.
 You know all vanity draws to an end,
 Then needs must she decay, because her friend.

Is there more folly than to weep at joy? Verse
 14 To make eyes wat'ry when they should be dry?
 To grieve at that which murders grief's annoy?
 To keep a shower where the sun should lie?
 But yet this folly-cloud doth oft appear,
 When face should smile and wat'ry eye be clear.

27 board ship; fig. providence

28 Neptune's sea-god's

47 one world's hope Noah (who built his ark guided by divine wisdom), and his living cargo

48 hap luck, chance

58 abound abundance (not otherwise recorded)

63 vails lowers submissively

67 her vice's

74 Alastor's belonging to the Greek spirit of vengeance

82 corse obsolete form of corpse, here with the sense (also obsolete) of a living body (hence, of life in death?)

98 caterpillar rapacious parasite; like 'moth', much stronger in Middleton's usage than in ours

101 ever always

103 alline ally, kin

105 fine ending

111 annoy vexation

115	The father mourns to see his son life-dead, But seldom mourns to see his son dead-lived. He cares for earthly lodge, not heaven's bed, For death in life, not life in death survived, Keeping the outward shadow of his face	They, like to Tantalus, are fed with shows, Shows which exasperate and cannot cure. They see the painted shadow of suppose. They see her sight, yet what doth sight procure? Like Tantalus they feed, and yet they starve.	Verse 18 160
120	To work the inward substance of disgrace; Keeping a show to counterpoise the deed; Keeping a shadow to be substance' heir, To raise the thing itself from shadow's seed, And make an element of lifeless air;	The craftsman feeds them with a starving meat, Which doth not fill but empty hunger's gape. He makes the idol comely, fair, and great, With well-limned visage and best-fashioned shape, Meaning to give it to some noble view, And feign his beauty with that flatt'ring hue.	165
Verse 15, 16	But could infection keep one settled place, The poison would not lodge in every breast, Nor feed the heart, the mind, the soul, the face, 130 Lodging but in the carcass of her rest; But this idolatry, once in man's use, Was made a custom then without excuse.	Enamoured with the sight, the people grew To divers apparitions of delight. Some did admire the portraiture so new, Hewed from the standard of an old tree's height. Some were allured through beauty of the face, With outward eye to work the soul's disgrace.	Verse 19
135	Nay more: it was at tyranny's command, And tyrants cannot speak without a doom, Whose judgement doth proceed from heart and hand, From heart in rage, from hand in bloody tomb, That if through absence any did neglect it, Presence should pay the ransom which reject it.	Adorèd like a god, though made by man! To make a god of man, a man of god, 'Tis more than human life or could or can, Though multitudes' applause in error trod: I never knew since mortal life's abode, That man could make a man, much less a god.	175 180
140	Then to avoid the doom of present hate, Their absence did perform their presence' want, Making the image of a kingly state, As if they had new seed from sin's old plant; Flatt'ring the absence of old mischief's mother, With the like form and presence of another;	Yes, man can make his shame without a maker, Borrowing the essence from restored sin. Man can be virtue's foe, and vice's taker, Welcome himself without a welcome in. Can he do this? Yea, more. O shameless ill: Shameful in sin, shameless in wisdom's will!	Verse 20 185
Verse 17	Making an absence with a present sight, Or rather presence with an absent view; Deceiving vulgars with a day of night, Which know not good from bad, nor false from true: A craftsman cunning in his crafty trade, 150 Beguiling them with that which he had made.	The river of his vice can have no bound, But breaks into the ocean of deceit, Deceiving life with measures of dead ground, With carvèd idols, disputation's bait; Making captivity, clothed all in moan, Be subject to a god made of a stone.	190
155	Like as a vane is turned with every blast, Until it point unto the windy clime, So stand the people at his word aghast. He making old-new form in new-old time, 155 Defies and deifies all with one breath, Making them live and die, and all in death.	Too stony hearts had they which made this law. O, had they been as stony as the name, They never had brought vulgars in such awe, To be destruction's prey, and mischief's game. Had they been stone-dead both in look and favour, They never had made life of such a savour.	Verse 21 195

115 life-dead deprived of life	worshipped by the commandment of	reach
116 dead-lived living in a condition of spiritual death	tyrants' (Geneva)	158 exasperate increase the fierceness of appetite
119 outward shadow the father's idolatrous image of his dead son, viewed as one of the possible origins of idolatry	134 doom sentence of punishment	164 gape wide-open mouth
132 without excuse no one was excused from idol-worship, not the servants of the mourning father, not the subjects of the tyrant: 'this wicked custom prevailed, and was kept as a law, and idols were	140 Their absence the absence of tyrants (whose images were worshipped in their stead)	166 well-limned well painted, portrayed
	151 vane weathervane	177 or . . . or either . . . or
	157 Tantalus mythical king of Phrygia, condemned never to gain the ever-receding food and drink just beyond his	179 abode temporary stay
		193 they . . . law the tyrants who commanded idol-worshipping
		195 vulgars common or uneducated people

200 Yet was not this a too sufficient doom,
 Sent from the root of their sin-o'ergrown tongue,
 To cloud God's knowledge with hell-mischief's gloom,
 To overthrow truth's right with falsehood's wrong:
 But daily practised a perfect way,
 Still to begin, and never end to stray.

Verse 22 For either murder's paw did grip their hearts,
 With whisp'ring horrors drumming in each ear,
 Or other villainies did play their parts,
 Augmenting horror to new-strucken fear,
 Making their hands more than a shambles' stall,
 210 To slay their children ceremonial.

Verse 23 No place was free from stain of blood or vice.
 Their life was marked for death, their soul for sin,
 Marriage for fornication's thawed ice,
 Thought for despair, body for either's gin.
 215 Slaughter did either end what life begun,
 Or lust did end what both had left undone.

Verses 24, 25 The one was sure, although the other fail,
 For vice hath more competitors than one.
 A greater troop doth evermore avail,
 220 And villainy is never found alone.
 The bloodhound follows that which slaughter killed,
 And theft doth follow what deceit hath spilled.

225 Corruption's mate to infidelity,
 For that which is unfaithful is corrupt.
 Tumults are schoolfellows to perjury,
 For both are full when either one hath supped.
 Unthankfulness, defiling, and disorders,
 Are fornication's and uncleanness' boarders.

Verse 26 See what a sort of rebels are in arms,
 To root out virtue, to supplant her reign,
 Opposing of themselves against all harms,
 To the deposing of her empire's gain.
 O double knot of treble miseries!
 O treble knot, twice, thrice in villainies!

235 O idol-worshipping, thou mother art,
 She-procreatress of a he-offence.
 I know thee now. Thou bear'st a woman's part.
 Thou nature hast of her, she of thee sense.
 These are thy daughters, too too like the mother:
 240 Black sins, I damn you all with inky smother.

Verse 27 My pen shall be officious in this scene,
 To let your hearts' blood in a wicked vein,
 To make your bodies clear, your souls as clean,
 To cleanse the sinks of sin with virtue's rain.

Behold your coal-black blood, my writing ink,
 My paper's poisoned meat, my pen's foul drink.

245 New-christened are you with your own new blood,
 But mad before, savage and desperate,
 Prophesying lies, not knowing what was good,
 Living ungodly, evermore in hate;
 250 Thund'ring out oaths, pale sergeants of despair;
 Swore and forswore, not knowing what you were.

Now look upon the spectacle of shame,
 The well-limned image of an ill-limned thought.
 Say, are you worthy now of praise or blame,
 255 That such self-scandal in your own selves wrought?
 You were heart-sick before I let you blood,
 But now heart-well since I have done you good.

Now wipe blind folly from your seeing eyes,
 And drive destruction from your happy mind.
 260 Your folly now is wit, not foolish-wise;
 Destruction, happiness, not mischief blind.
 You put your trust in idols, they deceived you.
 You put your trust in God, and he received you.

Had not repentance grounded on your souls,
 Verse 29 The climes of good or ill, virtue or vice,
 Had it not flowed into the tongue's enrols,
 Ascribing mischief's hate with good advice,
 Your tongue had spilled your soul, your soul your tongue,
 270 Wronging each function with a double wrong.

Your first attempt was placèd in a show:
 Imaginary show without a deed.
 The next attempt was perjury, the foe
 To just demeanours, and to virtue's seed.
 275 Two sins, two punishments, and one in two,
 Makes two in one, and more than one can do.

Four scourges from one pain, all comes from sin,
 Verse 30 Single yet double, double yet in four.
 It slays the soul. It hems the body in.
 It spills the mind. It doth the heart devour, 280 Gnawing upon the thoughts, feeding on blood,
 Forwhy, she lives in sin, but dies in good.

She taught their souls to stray, their tongues to swear,
 Their thought to think amiss, their life to die,
 Their heart to err, their mischief to appear,
 285 Their head to sin, their feet to tread awry.
 This scene might well have been destruction's tent,
 To pay with pain what sin with joy hath spent.

209 shambles' meat market's

222 spilled destroyed

225 Tumults riots; mental agitation

236 She-procreatress... he-offence 'For the worshipping of idols... is the beginning and the cause and the end of all evil' (Geneva); 'a he-offence' is presumably the highest sort in the patriarchal hierarchy of gender.

241 My pen... scene casting himself as something like the author of a stage satire; by the end of Verse 28, he will sound more like a healing evangelist

266 climes regions

267 enrols registers, lists; fig. prayers of confession, lists of sins

269 spilled destroyed

271 attempt temptation, seduction
a show an idol

277 scourges instruments of divine chastisement, agents of calamity

282 Forwhy Because

Chapter Fifteen

Verse 1 But God will never dye his hands with blood, His heart with hate, his throne with cruelty, His face with fury's map, his brow with cloud, His reign with rage, his crown with tyranny. 5 Gracious is he, long-suffering and true, Which ruleth all things with his mercy's view. Gracious, for where is grace but where he is: The fountain-head, the ever-boundless stream? Patient, for where is patience in amiss, 10 If not conducted by pure grace's beam? Truth is the moderator of them both, For grace and patience are of truest growth. Verse 2 For grace-beginning truth doth end in grace, As truth-beginning grace doth end in truth. 15 Now patience takes the moderator's place, Young-old in suffering, old-young in ruth. Patience is old in being always young, Not having right, nor ever offering wrong. So this is moderator of God's rage, 20 Pardoning those deeds which we in sin commit, That if we sin, she is our freedom's gage, And we still thine, though to be thine unfit. In being thine, O Lord, we will not sin, That we thy patience, grace, and truth may win. Verse 3 O grant us patience, in whose grant we rest, To right our wrong, and not to wrong the right. Give us thy grace, O Lord, to make us blest, That grace might bless, and bliss might grace our sight. 30 Make our beginning and our sequel truth, To make us young in age, and grave in youth. We know that our demands rest in thy will, Our will rests in thy word, our word in thee, Thou in our orisons, which dost fulfil That wished action which we wish to be. 35 'Tis perfect righteousness to know thee right; 'Tis immortality to know thy might. Verses In knowing thee, we know both good and ill: 4, 5 Good to know good and ill, ill to know none. In knowing all, we know thy sacred will, 40 And what to do, and what to leave undone. We are deceived, not knowing to deceive; In knowing good and ill, we take and leave.	The glass of vanity, deceit, and shows, The painter's labour, the beguiling face, The divers-coloured image of suppose, 45 Cannot deceive the substance of thy grace; Only a snare to those of common wit, Which covets to be like, in having it. The greedy lucre of a witless brain, Verse 6 This feeding avarice on senseless mind, 50 Is rather hurt than good, a loss than gain, Which covets for to lose, and not to find. So they were coloured with such a face, They would not care to take the idol's place. Then be your thoughts coherent to your words, 55 Your words as correspondent to your thought. 'Tis reason you should have what love affords, And trust in that which love so dearly bought. The maker must needs love what he hath made, 60 And the desirer's free of either trade. Man, thou wast made. Art thou a maker now? Verse 7 Yes, 'tis thy trade, for thou a potter art, Temp'ring soft earth, making the clay to bow, But clayey thou dost bear too stout a heart. 65 The clay is humble to thy rigorous hands, Thou clay too tough against thy God's commands. If thou want'st slime, behold thy slimy faults. If thou want'st clay, behold thy clayey breast. Make them to be the deepest centre's vaults, And let all clayey mountains sleep in rest. 70 Thou bear'st an earthly mountain on thy back, Thy heart's chief prison-house, thy soul's chief wreck. Art thou a mortal man, and mak'st a god? Verse 8 A god of clay, thou but a man of clay. 75 O suds of mischief, in destruction sod! O vainest labour in a vainer play! Man is the greatest work which God did take, And yet a god with man is naught to make. He that was made of earth would make a heaven, If heaven may be made upon the earth. 80 Sin's heirs the airs, sin's plants the planets seven, Their god a clod, his birth true virtue's dearth. Remember whence you came, whither you go: Of earth, in earth, from earth to earth in woe.
--	--

15 But by God's mercy and grace, and by learning to know good and ill, the faithful avoid idolatry. The potter who worships a clay image of his own making is again derided, as are those who worship senseless animals.

16 ruth pity

19 this mercy

21 gage warrant, guarantee

33 orisons prayers

41 We...deceive Not knowing how to deceive, we are easily deceived.

43 glass mirror

45 suppose fancy, imagination

49 lucre monetary profit

53 So So long as

55 coherent consistent

61 thou the potter (third person in Geneva)

69 vaults sewers

72 wreck pronounced, and spelled, 'wrack'
in SIMMES

75 suds filth, dregs
sod stewed

Verse 9 'No,' quoth the potter, 'as I have been clay, So will I end with what I did begin. I am of earth, and I do what earth may. I am of dust, and therefore will I sin. My life is short. What then? I'll make it longer. 90 My life is weak. What then? I'll make it stronger. 'Long shall it live in vice, though short in length, And fetch immortal steps from mortal stops. Strong shall it be in sin, though weak in strength, Like mounting eagles on high mountains' tops. 95 My honour shall be placèd in deceit, And counterfeit new shows of little weight.' Verse 10 My pen doth almost blush at this reply, And fain would call him wicked to his face, But then his breath would answer with a lie, 100 And stain my ink with an untruth's disgrace. Thy master bids thee write. The pen says, 'No.' But when thy master bids, it must be so. Call his heart ashes. O, too mild a name! Call his hope vile. More viler than the earth! 105 Call his life weaker than a clayey frame; Call his bespotted heart an ashy hearth. Ashes, earth, clay, conjoined to heart, hope, life, Are feature's love, in being nature's strife. Verse 11 Thou mightst have chose more stinging words than these, For this he knows he is, and more than less. In saying what he is, thou dost appease The foaming anger which his thoughts suppress. Who knows not, if the best be made of clay, The worst must needs be clad in foul array? 115 Thou, in performing of thy master's will, Dost teach him to obey his lord's commands. But he repugnant is, and cannot skill Of true adoring, with heart-heaved-up hands. He hath a soul, a life, a breath, a name, 120 Yet is he ignorant from whence they came. Verse 12 'My soul,' saith he, 'is but a map of shows, No substance, but a shadow for to please. My life doth pass even as a pastime goes, A momentary time to live at ease; 125 My breath a vapour, and my name of earth, Each one decaying of the other's birth.	'Our conversation best, for there is gains, And gain is best in conversation's prime. A mart of lucre in our conscience reigns, Our thoughts as busy agents for the time. 130 So we get gain, ensnaring simple men, It is no matter how, nor where, nor when. 'We care not how, for all misdeeds are ours. Verse We care not where, if before God or man. 13 We care not when, but when our crafts have powers, 135 In measuring deceit with mischief's fan. For wherefore have we life, form, and ordaining, But that we should deceive, and still be gaining? 'I, made of earth, have made all earthen shops, And what I sell is all of earthy sale. 140 My pots have earthen feet, and earthen tops, In like resemblance of my body's veil. But knowing to offend the heavens more, I made frail images of earthy store.' O bold accuser of his own misdeeds! Verse O heavy clod, more than the earth can bear! 14 Was never creature clothed in savage weeds, Which would not blush when they this mischief hear! Thou told'st a tale which might have been untold, Making the hearers blush, the readers old. 150 Let them blush still that hears, be old that reads; Then boldness shall not reign, nor youth in vice. Thrice miserable they which rashly speeds, With expedition to this bold device: More foolish than are fools, whose misery 155 Cannot be changed with new felicity. Are not they fools which live without a sense? Verse Have not they misery which never joy? 15 Which takes an idol for a god's defence, And with their self-willed thoughts themselves destroy? 160 What folly is more greater than is here? Or what more misery can well appear? Call you them gods which have no seeing eyes, No noses for to smell, no ears to hear, No life but that which in death's shadow lies, 165 Which have no hands to feel, no feet to bear? If gods can neither hear, live, feel, nor see, A fool may make such gods of every tree.
---	--

97 My pen The poem's voice shifts again to the persona of the poet. The pen's submission to the will of the poet in the following four stanzas mirrors the idol's subjection to its maker.
108 feature's that which is created, made 115 Thou the pen
116 him the potter

117 repugnant resistant, hostile
skill have knowledge
127 Our conversation living with others, society; in Geneva, the verse harks back to the greedy idol-making craftsmen of 15:9
gains material profit 129 mart market

136 fan instrument for winnowing grain; mischief was sometimes personified as a corn-thresher, as in the 15th-century morality play Mankind
140 sale with a play on French sale, dirty?
142 veil i.e., apparently, that which veils the soul

Verse
16 And what was he that made them but a fool,
Conceiving folly in a foolish brain,
Taught and instructed in a wooden school,
Which made his head run of a wooden vein?
'Twas man which made them; he his making had.
Man, full of wood, was wood, and so ran mad.

175 He borrowèd his life, and would restore
His borrowed essence to another death.
He fain would be a maker, though before
Was made himself, and God did lend him breath.
No man can make a god like to a man.

180 He says he scorns that work; he further can.

Verse
17 He is deceived, and in his great deceit,
He doth deceive the folly-guided hearts.
Sin lies in ambush, he for sin doth wait:
Here is deceit deceived in either parts.

185 His sin deceiveth him, and he his sin;
So craft with craft is mewed in either gin.

The craftsman mortal is, craft mortal is,
Each function nursing up the other's want.
His hands are mortal, deadly what is his,
Only his sins buds in destruction's plant.

190 Yet better he than what he doth devise,
For he himself doth live; that ever dies.

Verse
18 Say, call you this a god? Where is his head?
Yet headless is he not, yet hath he none.

195 Where is his godhead? Fled. His power? Dead.
His reign? Decayèd. And his essence? Gone.
Now tell me, is this god the god of good,
Or else Silvanus, monarch of the wood?

200 There have I pierced his bark, for he is so:
A wooden god, feigned as Silvanus was.
But leaving him, to others let us go,
To senseless beasts their new adoring glass:
Beasts which did live in life, yet died in reason;
Beasts which did seasons eat, yet knew no season.

Verse
19 Can mortal bodies and immortal souls
Keep one knit union of a living love?
Can sea with land, can fish agree with fowls?
Tigers with lambs, a serpent with a dove?

O no, they cannot. Then say, why do we Adore a beast which is our enemy? 210

What greater foe than folly unto wit?
What more deformity than ugly face?
This disagrees, for folly is unfit,
The other contrary to beauty's place.
Then how can senseless heads, deformèd shows, 215
Agree with you, when they are both your foes?

Chapter Sixteen

O call that word again! They are your friends,
Your lives' associates, and your loves' content.
That which begins in them, your folly ends.
Then how can vice with vice be discontent?
Behold, deformity sits on your heads: 5
Not horns, but scorns; not visage, but whole beds.

Behold, a heap of sins your bodies pale,
A mountain-overwhelming villainy.
Then tell me, are you clad in beauty's veil,
Or in destruction's pale-dead livery? 10
Their life demônstrates, now alive, now dead,
Tormented with the beasts which they have fed.

You like to pelicans have fed your death
With folly's vain-let blood from folly's vein,
And almost starved yourselves, stopped up your breath,
Had not God's mercy helped, and eased your pain. 15
Behold, a new-found meat the Lord did send,
Which taught you to be new, and to amend.

A strange-digested nutriment, even quails,
Which taught them to be strange unto misdeeds. 20
When you implore his aid, he never fails
To fill their hunger whom repentance feeds.
You see, when life was half at death's arrest,
He new-created life at hunger's feast.

Say, is your god like this, whom you adored,
Or is this God like to your handy-frame? 25
If so, his power could not then afford
Such influence which floweth from his name.
He is not painted, made of wood and stone,
But he substantial is, and rules alone. 30

Verse 4

171 wooden playing on the adjectival sense of 'wood' meaning mad
177 fain willingly
180 he further can [he says] he is capable of more [than the mere creation of man] 186 mewed confined gin cunning stratagem fig.
190 his sins buds his sins spring forth, begin to grow
193 Say ... god to the maker of the idol; the implicit dialogue of the next few rhetorical questions shows Middleton's poetic persona at its dramatic best.

198 Silvanus Pan
204 seasons seasonings, i.e., herbs?
season moderation
16 Continuing to chastise the idolatrous: those who repent are guaranteed God's mercy and divine nourishment; the unrepentant idolators and ungodly suffer plagues, fires and tempests; God's people endure torments but are finally safe, nourished with angelic food and with the word of the Lord.
1 that word 'foes'
6 beds of vice, as in 17.1

7 pale fence in 11 Their reverting momentarily to Geneva's third-person designation of the idolatrous
13 pelicans reputed to nourish their young self-sacrificially, with blood pecked from their own breasts
19 quails referring to the miraculous feeding of the grumbling Israelites in the wilderness (Numbers 11:31 ff.); the quail is a small relative of the partridge
20 strange reserved, uncomplying
26 handy-frame handiwork

He can oppress and help, help and oppress
 The sinful incolants of his made earth.
 He can redress and pain, pain and redress
 The mountain-miseries of mortal birth.
 35 Now, tyrants, you are next, this but a show,
 And merry index of your after-woe.

Verses
 5, 6 Your hot-cold misery is now at hand:
 Hot because fury's heat, and mercy's cold;
 Cold because limping, knit in frosty bond,
 40 And cold and hot in being shamefast-bold.
 They cruel were. Take cruelty their part,
 For misery is but too mean a smart.

But when the tigers' jaws, the serpents' stings,
 Did summon them unto this life's decay,
 45 A pardon for their faults thy mercy brings,
 Cooling thy wrath with pity's sunny day.
 O tyrants, tear your sin-bemirèd weeds!
 Behold your pardon, sealed by mercy's deeds!

Verse 7 That sting which painèd could not ease the pain.
 50 Those jaws that wounded could not cure the wounds.
 To turn to stings for help, it were but vain,
 To jaws for mercy, which wants mercy's bounds.
 The stings, O Saviour, were pulled out by thee,
 Their jaws clasped up in midst of cruelty.

Verse 8 O sovereign salve, stop to a bloody stream!
 O heavenly care and cure, for dust and earth!
 Celestial watch to wake terrestrial dream,
 Dreaming in punishment, mourning in mirth:
 Now knows our enemies that it is thee,
 60 Which helps and cures our grief and misery.

Verse 9 Our punishment doth end, theirs new begins.
 Our day appears, their night is not o'erblown.
 We pardon have, they punishment for sins.
 Now we are raised, now they are overthrown.
 65 We with huge beasts oppressed, they with a fly;
 We live in God, and they against God die.

A fly! Poor fly to follow such a flight!
 Yet art thou fed, as thou wast fed before,

With dust and earth feeding thy wonted bite,
 With self-like food from mortal earthly store.
 A mischief-stinging food, and sting with sting,
 Do ready passage to destruction bring.

Man, being grass, is hopped and grazed upon,
 With sucking grasshoppers of weeping dew.
 Man, being earth, is worms' vermilion,
 75 Which eats the dust, and yet of bloody hue.
 In being grass, he is her grazing food;
 In being dust, he doth the worms some good.

These smallest actors were of greatest pain,
 Of folly's overthrow, of mischief's fall,
 But yet the furious dragons could not gain
 The life of those whom verities exhale.
 These folly overcame, they foolish were;
 These mercy cured and cures, these godly are.

When poisoned jaws and venenated stings
 Were both as opposite against content,
 Because content with that which fortune brings,
 They eased were, when thou thy mercies sent.
 The jaws of dragons had not hunger's fill,
 Nor stings of serpents a desire to kill.
 90

Appalled they were, and struck with timorous fears,
 For where is fear but where destruction reigns?
 Aghast they were, with wet eye-standing tears,
 Outward commencers of their inward pains.
 They soon were hurt, but sooner healed and cured,
 Lest black oblivion had their minds inured.
 95

The lion, wounded with a fatal blow,
 Is as impatient as a king in rage;
 Seeing himself in his own bloody show,
 Doth rend the harbour of his body's cage;
 Scorning the base-housed earth, mounts to the sky,
 To see if heaven can yield him remedy.
 Verse
 12

O sinful man! Let him example be,
 A pattern to thine eye, glass to thy face,
 That God's divinest word is cure to thee,
 Not earth but heaven, not man but heavenly grace.
 105 Nor herb nor plaster could help teeth or sting,
 But 'twas thy word, which healeth everything.

32 incolants inhabitants; the earliest known occurrence of this rare latinized item (OED) made created
 41 They The person shifts; the referent remains the tyrants of line 35.
 43-54 But...cruelty The exegetical tradition on the corresponding (and obscure) biblical passage (16:7) associates it with the brazen serpent (Numbers 21:9). Middleton does not appear to have grasped the allusion (D.S.). 'For when the cruel fierceness of the beasts came upon them, and they were hurt with the stings of

cruel serpents, | Thy wrath endured not perpetually, but they were troubled for a little season, that they might be reformed, having a sign of salvation, to remember the commandment of thy Law. | For he that turned toward it, was not healed by the thing that he saw, but by thee, O Saviour of all' (Geneva 5-7).
 65 they with a fly 'For the biting of grasshoppers and flies killed them' (Geneva).
 69 wonted habitual
 75 vermilion red earth; glancing at Latin

vermis, worm
 81 furious dragons 'the teeth of the venomous dragons could not overcome thy children' (Geneva)
 82 exhale drag out
 85 venenated envenomed, poisonous; according to OED, Middleton's is the earliest recorded occurrence of any form of this item created from Latin venenare
 96 inured hardened
 97 lion proverbial? Compare Marlowe's Edward II, 5.1.11-14, on which Middleton seems to depend here.

- Verse We fools lay salves upon our body's skin,
 13 But never draw corruption from our mind.
 We lay a plaster for to keep in sin;
 We draw forth filth, but leave the cause behind.
 With herbs and plasters we do guard misdeeds,
 And pare away the tops, but leave the seeds.
- 115 Away with salves, and take our Saviour's word.
 In this word Saviour lies immortal ease.
 What can thy cures, plasters and herbs afford,
 When God hath power to please and to displease?
 God hath the power of life, death, help, and pain;
 120 He leadeth down, and bringeth up again.
- Verses Trust to thy downfall, not unto thy raise:
 14, 15 So shalt thou live in death, not die in life.
 Thou dost presume, if give thyself the praise,
 For virtue's time is scarce, but mischief's rife.
 125 Thou mayst offend, man's nature is so vain.
 Thou, now in joy, beware of after-pain.
- First cometh fury, after fury thirst,
 After thirst blood, and after blood a death.
 Thou mayst in fury kill whom thou loved'st first,
 130 And so, in quaffing blood, stop thine own breath;
 And murder done can never be undone,
 Nor can that soul once live whose life is gone.
- Verse What is the body but an earthen case,
 16 That subject is to death, because earth dies?
 135 But when the living soul doth want God's grace,
 It dies in joy, and lives in miseries.
 This soul is led by God, as others were,
 But not brought up again, as others are.
- This stirs no provocation to amend,
 140 For earth hath many partners in one fall,
 Although the Lord doth many tokens send,
 As warnings for to hear when he doth call.
 The earth was burned and drowned with fire and rain,
 And one could never quench the other's pain.
- Verse Although both foes, God made them then both friends,
 17 And only foes to them which were their foes.
 That hate begun in earth what in them ends,
 Sin's enemies they which made friends of those.
 Both bent both forces unto single earth,
 150 From whose descent they had their double birth.
- 'Tis strange that water should not quench a fire,
 For they were heating-cold, and cooling-hot.
- 'Tis strange that wails could not allay desire,
 Wails water's kind, and fire desire's knot.
 In such a cause, though enemies before,
 155 They would join friendship to destroy the more.
- The often-weeping eyes of dry lament,
 Verse Doth pour forth burning water of despair,
 18 Which warms the caves from whence the tears are sent,
 And, like hot fumes, do foul their nature's fair.
 160 This, contrary to icy water's vale,
 Doth scorch the cheeks, and makes them red and pale.
- Here fire and water are conjoined in one,
 Within a red-white glass of hot and cold;
 Their fire like this, double and yet alone,
 165 Raging and tame, and tame and yet was bold:
 Tame when the beasts did kill and felt no fire,
 Raging upon the causers of their ire.
- Two things may well put on two several natures,
 Verse Because they differ each in nature's kind,
 19 They differing colours have, and differing features:
 If so, how comes it that they have one mind?
 God made them friends, let this the answer be.
 They get no other argument of me.
- What is impossible to God's command?
 175 Nay, what is possible to man's vain ear?
 'Tis much, he thinks, that fire should burn a land,
 When mischief is the brand which fires bear.
 He thinks it more, that water should bear fire;
 180 Then know it was God's will. Now leave t'inquire.
- Yet mightst thou ask, because importunate,
 Verse How God preserved the good. Why? Because good, 20 Ill fortune made not them unfortunate.
 They angels were, and fed with angels' food.
 Yet mayst thou say—for truth is always had—185 The rain falls on the good as well as bad.
- And say it doth: far be the letter P
 From R, because of a more reverent style.
 It cannot do without suppression be.
 These are two bars against destruction's wile:
 190 Pain without changing P cannot be rain;
 Rain without changing R cannot be pain.
- Both sun and rain are portions to the ground,
 Verse And ground is dust, and what is dust but naught?
 21 And what is naught is naught, with alpha's sound,
 195 Yet every earth the sun and rain hath bought.
 The sun doth shine on weeds as well as flowers;
 The rain on both distills her weeping showers.

111 plaster poultice; remedy applied to the body on fabric or a bandage
 120 down 'unto the gates of hell' (Geneva)
 135 want lack
 145 both foes of one another
 153 wails associated with weeping, and thence with water

167 felt no fire 'For some time was the fire so tame, that the beasts, which were sent against the ungodly, burnt not' (Geneva).
 169–80 Two things...t'inquire. There is no comparable throwing up of the hands in Geneva.

187–92 And...pain The point of this whimsy is that rain may be destructive to the damned, benevolent to the saved.
 193 portions the proper destiny
 195 naught worthless
 198 distills pours

200 Yet far be death from breath, annoy from joy,
 Destruction from all happiness' allines.
 God will not suffer famine to destroy
 The hungry appetite of virtue's signs.
 These were in midst of fire, yet not harmed,
 In midst of water, yet but cooled and warmed.

Verse 22
 22 And water-wet they were, not water-drowned;
 And fire-hot they were, not fire-burned.
 Their foes were both, whose hopes destruction crowned,
 But yet with such a crown which ne'er returned.
 Here fire and water brought both joy and pain:
 210 To one disprofit, to the other gain.

The sun doth thaw what cold hath freezed before,
 Undoing what congealèd ice hath done,
 Yet here the hail and snow did freeze the more,
 In having heat more piercing than the sun;
 215 A mournful spectacle unto their eyes,
 That as they die, so their fruition dies.

Verses 23, 24
 23, 24 Fury, once kindled with the coals of rage,
 Doth hover unrecalled, slaughters untamed.
 This wrath on fire, no pity could assuage,
 220 Because they pitiless which should be blamed;
 As one in rage, which cares not who he have,
 Forgetting who to kill and who to save.

One deadly foe is fierce against the other,
 As vice with virtue, virtue against vice,
 225 Vice heartenèd by death, his heartless mother,
 Virtue by God, the life of her device.
 'Tis hard to hurt or harm a villainy;
 'Tis easy to do good to verity.

Verse 25
 25 Is grass man's meat? No, it is cattle's food,
 But man doth eat the cattle which eats grass,
 And feeds his carcass with their nursed-up blood,
 Length'ning the lives which in a moment pass.
 Grass is good food, if it be joined with grace,
 Else sweeter food may take a sourer place.

Verse 26
 26 Is there such life in water and in bread,
 In fish, in flesh, in herbs, in growing flowers?
 We eat them not alive, we eat them dead.
 What fruit then hath the word of living powers?
 How can we live with that which is still dead?
 240 Thy grace it is, by which we all are fed.

Verses 27, 28
 27, 28 This is a living food, a blessèd meat,
 Made to digest the burden at our hearts,
 That leaden-weighted food which we first eat,
 To fill the functions of our bodies' parts:

An indigested heap, without a mean,
 Wanting thy grace, O Lord, to make it clean.

250 That ice which sulphur vapours could not thaw,
 That hail which piercing fire could not bore,
 The cool-hot sun did melt their frosty jaw,
 Which neither heat nor fire could pierce before.
 250 Then let us take the springtime of the day,
 Before the harvest of our joys' decay.

A day may be divided, as a year,
 Into four climes, though of itself but one:
 Verse 29
 29 The morn the spring, the noon the summer's sphere,
 255 The harvest next, evening the winter's moon.
 Then sow new seed in every new day's spring,
 And reap new fruit in day's old evèning.

260 Else, if too late, they will be blasted seeds;
 If planted at the noontide of their growing,
 Commencers of unthankful, too late deeds,
 Set in the harvest of the reaper's going;
 Melting like winter ice against the sun,
 Flowing like folly's tide, and never done.

Chapter Seventeen

O fly the bed of vice, the lodge of sin!
 Verse 1
 Sleep not too long in your destruction's pleasures!
 Amend your wicked lives, and new begin
 A more new, perfect way to heaven's treasures!
 5 O, rather wake and weep than sleep and joy!
 Waking is truth, sleep is a flatt'ring toy.

O take the morning of your instant good!
 Be not benighted with oblivious eye.
 Behold the sun which kisseth Neptune's flood,
 And resalutes the world with open sky.
 10 Else sleep and ever sleep. God's wrath is great,
 And will not alter with too late entreat.

Why wake I them which have a sleeping mind?
 Verse 2
 O words, sad sergeants to arrest my thoughts!
 If waked, they cannot see, their eyes are blind,
 15 Shut up like windolets which sleep hath bought.
 Their face is broad awake, but not their heart;
 They dream of rising, yet are loath to start.

These were the practisers how to betray
 The simple-righteous with beguiling words,
 20 And bring them in subjection to obey
 Their irreligious laws and sin's accords;
 But night's black-coloured veil did cloud their will,
 And made their wish rest in performance' skill.

200 allines allies
 208 which ne'er returned which remained with them permanently
 226 device design
 240 grace 'word' (Geneva)
 243 leaden-weighted food Adam's sin?
 254 climes seasons

263 Melting... ice 'For the hope of the unthankful shall melt as the winter ice, and flow away as unprofitable waters' (Geneva).
 17 How the unrighteous are forgetful of their salvation; how they think to sleep hidden in the bed of vice, but are plagued with hellish darkness, with uncontrollable fears and visions.

 9 Neptune's sea-god's
 16 windolets small windows
 24 rest...skill incapable of performance

Verse 3 The darksome clouds are summoners of rain,
 In being something black and something dark;
 But coal-black clouds makes it pour down amain,
 Darting forth thunderbolts, and lightning's spark.
 Sin of itself is black, but black with black 30 Augments the heavy burden of the back.

They thought that sins could hide their sinful shames,
 In being demi-clouds and semi-nights;
 But they had clouds enough to make their games,
 Lodged in black coverings of oblivious nights.
 35 Then was their vice afraid to lie so dark,
 Troubled with visions from Alastor's park.

Verse 4 The greater poison bears the greater sway.
 The greatest force hath still the greatest face.
 Should night miss course, it would infect the day
 40 With foul-risse vapours from a humorous place.
 Vice hath some clouds, but yet the night hath more,
 Because the night was framed and made before.

That sin which makes afraid was then afraid,
 Although enchambered in a den's content.
 45 That would not drive back fear which comes repaid,
 Nor yet the echoes which the visions sent.
 Both sounds and shows, both words and action,
 Made apparitions' satisfaction.

Verse 5 A night in pitchy mantle of distress,
 50 Made thick with mists, and opposite to light,
 As if Cocytus' mansion did possess
 The gloomy vapours of suppressing sight;
 A night more ugly than Alastor's pack,
 Mounting all nights upon his night-made back.

55 The moon did mourn in sable-suited veil.
 The stars, her handmaids, were in black attire.
 All nightly visions told a hideous tale.
 The screech-owls made the earth their dismal choir.
 The moon and stars denied their twinkling eyes,
 60 To lighten vice, which in oblivion lies.

Verse 6 Only appeared a fire in doleful blaze,
 Kindled by furies, raised by envious winds,
 Dreadful in sight, which put them to amaze,
 Having before fury-despairing minds.
 65 What hair in reading would not stand upright?
 What pen in writing would not cease to write?

Fire is God's angel, because bright and clear,
 But this an evil angel, because dread:

Evil to them which did already fear,
 A second death to them which were once dead,
 70 Annexing horror to dead-strucken life,
 Connecting dolour to live nature's strife.

Deceit was then deceived, treason betrayed,
 Verse 7 Mischief beguiled, a night surpassing night.
 Vice fought with vice, and fear was then dismayed,
 75 Horror itself appalled at such a sight.
 Sin's snare was then ensnared, the fisher caught;
 Sin's net was then entrapped, the fowler fought.

Yet all this conflict was but in a dream,
 A show of substance, and a shade of truth,
 Illusions for to mock in flatt'ring theme,
 80 Beguiling mischief with a glass of ruth,
 For boasts require a fall, and vaunts a shame,
 Which two vice had, in thinking but to game.

Sin told her creditors she was a queen,
 Verse 8 And now become revenge, to right their wrong,
 With honey-mermaid's speech alluring seen,
 Making new-pleasing words with her old tongue:
 'If you be sick,' quoth she, 'I'll make you whole.'
 90 She cures the body, but makes sick the soul.

Safe is the body when the soul is wounded.
 The soul is joyful in the body's grief.
 One's joy upon the other's sorrow grounded,
 One's sorrow placèd in the one's relief.
 95 Quoth sin, 'Fear nothing, know that I am here,'
 When she, alas, herself was sick for fear.

A promise worthy of derision's place,
 Verse 9 That fear should help a fear when both are one.
 She was as sick in heart, though not in face,
 With inward grief, though not with outward moan;
 100 But she clasped up the closure of the tongue,
 For fear that words should do her body wrong.

Cannot the body weep without the eyes?
 Yes, and frame deepest canzons of lament.
 Cannot the body fear without it lies 105 Upon the outward show of discontent?
 Yes, yes, the deeper fear sits in the heart,
 And keeps the parliament of inward smart.

So sin did snare in mind, and not in face,
 Verse 10 The dragon's jaw, the hissing serpent's sting.
 Some lived, some died, some ran a fearful race,
 Some did prevent that which ill fortunes bring.
 100 All were officious servitors to fear,
 And her pale cognizance in heart did wear.

36 Alastor's park Alastor is the Greek spirit of vengeance.
 40 foul-risse foul-risen
humorous moist 51 Cocytus' belonging to hell's river of lamentation

 58 screech-owls birds of ill omen
 73 Deceit was then deceived Geneva's marginal note on Verse 7 links it to the triumph of Moses and Aaron over the sorcerers of Pharaoh (Exodus 7, 8).

 85 creditors believers
 104 canzons songs

115 Malice condemned herself guilty of hate, With a malicious mouth of envious spite, For Nemesis is her own cruel fate, Turning her wrath upon her own delight. We need no witness for a guilty thought, 120 Which to condemn itself a thousand brought. Verse 11 For fear deceives itself in being fear. It fears itself in being still afraid. It fears to weep, and yet it sheds a tear. It fears itself, and yet it is obeyed: 125 The usher unto death, a death to doom, A doom to die in horror's fearful tomb. Verse 12 His own betrayer, yet fears to betray, He fears his life by reason of his name. He fears lament, because it brings decay, 130 And blames himself in that he merits blame. He is tormented, yet denies the pain; He is the king of fear, yet loath to reign. Verse 13 His sons were they which slept and dreamt of fear, A waking sleep, and yet a sleepy waking, 135 Which passed that night more longer than a year, Being grief's pris'ners, and of sorrow's taking; Slept in night's dungeon insupportable, Lodged in night's horror too endurable. 140 O sleep, the image of long-lasting woe! O waking image of long-lasting sleep! The hollow cave where visions come and go, Where serpents hiss, where mandrakes groan and creep! O fearful show, betrayer of a soul, Dying each heart in white, each white in foul! Verse 14 A guileful hole, a prison of deceit, Yet nor deceit nor guile in being dead; Snare without snarer, net without a bait, A common lodge, and yet without a bed; A hollow-sounding vault, known and unknown, 150 Yet not for mirth, but too too well for moan. Verse 15 'Tis a free prison, a chained liberty, A freedom's cave, a serjeant and a bail. It keeps close prisoners, yet doth set them free, Their clogs not iron, but a clog of wail. 155 It stays them not, and yet they cannot go; Their chain is discontent, their prison woe.	Still it did gape for more, and still more had, Like greedy avarice without content; Like to Avernus, which is never glad Before the dead-lived wicked souls be sent. 160 Pull in thy head, thou sorrow's tragedy, And leave to practise thy old cruelty. The merry shepherd cannot walk alone, Tuning sweet madrigals of harvest's joy, Carving love's roundelays on every stone, 165 Hanging on every tree some amorous toy, But thou with sorrow interlines his song, Opening thy jaws of death to do him wrong. O now I know thy chain, thy clog, thy fetter, Thy free-chained prison, and thy cloggèd walk! 'Tis gloomy darkness, sin's eternal debtor. 'Tis poisoned buds from Acherontic stalk. Sometime 'tis hissing winds which are their bonds, Sometime enchanting birds which binds their hands. Sometime the foaming rage of water's stream, 18 Or clatt'ring down of stones upon a stone, Or skipping beasts at Titan's gladsome beam, Or roaring lion's noise at one alone, Or babbling Echo, tell-tale of each sound, From mouth to sky, from sky unto the ground. 180 Can suchlike fears follow man's mortal pace, 19, 20 Within dry wilderness of wettest woe? It was God's providence, his will, his grace, To make midnight midnight in being so. Midnight with sin, noon where virtue lay: That place was night, all other places day. 185 The sun, not past the middle line of course, Did clearly shine upon each labour's gain, Not hind'ring daily toil of mortal force, Nor clouding earth with any gloomy stain. 190 Only night's image was apparent there, With heavy-leadan appetite of fear.	Verse 16 160 165 Verse 17 18 180 Verses 19, 20 185 190 Verse 1 5
---	--	---

Chapter Eighteen

You know the eagle by her soaring wings,
And how the swallow takes a lower pitch.
You know the day is clear, and clearness brings,
And how the night is poor, though gloomy-rich.
 This eagle virtue is, which mounts on high;
 The other sin, which hates the heavens' eye.

- | | | |
|---|---|--|
| 117 Nemesis goddess of retribution | 165 roundelays simple songs with refrains | preserved, for the later salvation of the |
| 142 mandrakes poisonous plants whose forked roots were thought to have human properties | 172 Acherontic hellish; pertaining to one of the rivers of hell | repentant Israelites; how God struck down the firstborn of the Egyptians, his punishment falling equally on master and servant; how the word of God plagued the ungodly with fearful visions of their guilt and punishment; how even the Israelites were plagued, until divine wisdom, through Aaron, put death to flight. |
| 154 clogs blocks attached to the leg or neck to prevent escape | 179 Echo nymph, reduced to disembodied voice | |
| 159 Avernus sulphurous central Italian lake, thought to be the entrance to (and thus synonymous with) hell | 187 middle line of course the midpoint of its daily journey, noon; literally, the celestial meridian which the sun crosses at noon | |
| 164 madrigals part songs for three or more voices | 18 Triumphs of virtue and wisdom over mischief and vice: how Moses was | |

	This day is wisdom, being bright and clear. This night is mischief, being black and foul. The brightest day doth wisdom's glory wear.	Wicked? No, bloody laws. Bloody? Yea, worse, If any worse may have a worsen name. Men? O no, murd'ers, not of men's remorse, For they are shameful, these exempt from shame. What, shall I call them slaughter-drinking hearts? Too good a name for their too ill deserts.	Verse 5 50
10	The pitchy night puts on a blacker roll. Thy saints, O Lord, were at their labour's hire, At whose heard voice the wicked did admire.
Verse 2	They thought that virtue had been clothed in night, Captive to darkness, prisoner unto hell, 15 But it was sin itself, vice, and despite, Whose wishèd harbours do in darkness dwell. Virtue's immortal soul had midday's light; Mischief's eternal soul had midday's night.	Murder was in their thoughts, they thought to slay. And who? Poor infants, harmless innocents. But murder cannot sleep. It will betray Her murd'rous self with self-disparagements. One child, poor remnant, did reprove their deeds, And God destroyed the bloody murd'ers' seeds.	55 60
20	For virtue is not subject unto vice, But vice is subject unto virtue's seat. One mischief is not thawed with other's ice, But more adjoined to one, makes one more great. Sin virtue's captive is, and kneels for grace, Requesting pardon for her rude-run race.	Was God destroyer then? No, he was just, A judge severe, yet of a kind remorse; Severe to those in whom there was no trust, Kind to the babes which were of little force. Poor babes, half murdered in whole murder's thought, Had not one infant their escaping wrought.	Verse 6 65
Verse 3	The tongue of virtue's life cannot pronounce The doom of death, or death of dying doom. 'Tis merciful, and will not once renounce Repentant tears to wash a sinful room. Your sin-shine was not sun-shine of delight, 30 But shining sin in mischief's sunny night.	'Twas God which breathed his spirit in the child, The lively image of his self-like face. 'Twas God which drowned their children, which defiled Their thoughts with blood, their hearts with murder's place; For that night's tidings our old fathers joyed, Because their foes by water were destroyed.	70
35	Now by repentance you are bathed in bliss, Blessed in your bath, eternal by your deeds. Behold, you have true light, and cannot miss The heav'nly food which your salvation feeds. True love, true life, true light, your portions true: What hate, what strife, what night can danger you?	Was God a murd'rer in this tragedy? No, but a judge how blood should be repaid. Was't he which gave them unto misery? No. 'Twas themselves which miseries obeyed. Their thoughts did kill and slay within their hearts, Murd'ring themselves, wounding their inward parts.	Verse 7 75
Verse 4	O happy, when you pared your o'ergrown faults, Your sin, like eagle's claws, past growth of time, All underminèd with destruction's vaults, 40 Full of old filth, proceeding from new slime; Else had you been deformèd like to those Which were your friends, but now become your foes.	When shines the sun, but when the moon doth rest? When rests the sun, but when the moon doth shine? When joys the righteous? When their foes are least. And when doth virtue live? When vice doth pine. Virtue doth live when villainy doth die; Wisdom doth smile when misery doth cry.	80
45	Those which are worthy of eternal pain, Foes which are worthy of immortal hate, Dimming the glory of thy children's gain With cloudy vapours set at darkness' rate: Making new laws, which are too old in crime; Making old-wicked laws serve a new time.	The summer days are longer than the nights. The winter nights are longer than the days. They show both virtue's loves and vice's spites, Sin's lowest fall, and wisdom's highest raise. The night is foe to day, as naught to good; The day is foe to night, as fear to food.	Verse 8 90

10 roll portion of a head dress

11 labour's hire reward

12 admire wonder, marvel

33 true light the 'burning pillar of fire'

(Geneva) which led the Israelites in the wilderness

39 vaults sewers

43 Those... pain Pharaoh and the Egyptians

59 One child Moses

67-70 'Twas God... place This seems closer to blasphemy than Calvinism.

The passage is theologically defensible only if one interprets the second 'which'

as referring to 'their'. God, that is, drowned the children of those who defiled their thoughts with blood. This would be stretching a point, except that Middleton's syntax is frequently ungrammatical (D.S.).

69 drowned their children 'thou hast taken away the multitude of their children and destroyed them all together in the mighty water' (Geneva, 18:5); there is no comparable event in Exodus

89 naught mischief, vice

A king may wear a crown, but full of strife,
 The outward show of a small-lasting space.
 Mischief may live, but yet a deadly life.
 Sorrow may grieve in heart and joy in face.
 95 Virtue may live disturbed with vice's pain;
 God sends this virtue a more better reign.

Verse 9 She doth possess a crown, and not a care,
 Yet cares, in having none but self-like awe.
 She hath a sceptre without care or fear,
 100 Yet fears the Lord, and careth for the law.
 As much as she doth rise, so much sin falls,
 Subject unto her law, slave to her calls.

Now righteousness bears sway, and vice put down,
 Virtue is queen, treading on mischief's head,
 105 The law of God sancited with renown,
 Religion placed in wisdom's quiet bed.
 Now joyful hymns are tunèd by delight,
 And now we live in love, and not in spite.

Verse 10 Strong-hearted vice's sobs have pierced the ground,
 In the deep cistern of the centre's breast,
 Wailing their living fortunes with dead sound,
 Accents of grief, and actions of unrest.
 It is not sin herself, it is her seed,
 Which, drowned in sea, lies there for sea's foul weed.

115 It is the fruit of murder's bloody womb,
 The lost fruition of a murd'rous race,
 A little stone which would have made a tomb
 To bury virtue with a sin-bold face.
 Methinks I hear the echoes of the vaults
 120 Sound and resound their old-new-weeping faults.

Verse 11 View the dead carcasses of human state,
 The outsides of the soul, case of the hearts.
 Behold the king, behold the subject's fate,
 Behold each limb and bone of earthen arts.
 125 Tell me the difference then of every thing,
 And who a subject was, and who a king.

The self-same knowledge lies in this dead scene,
 Vailed to the tragic cypress of lament.
 Behold that man, which hath a master been,
 130 That king, which would have climbed above content.
 Behold! Their slaves, by them upon the earth,
 Have now as high a seat, as great a birth.

Verse 12 The ground hath made all even which were odd,
 12 Those equal which had inequality;

Yet all alike were fashionèd by God,
 In body's form, but not in heart's degree.
 One difference had, in sceptre, crown, and throne,
 Yet crowned, ruled, placed in care, in grief, in moan.

For it was care to wear a crown of grief,
 And it was grief to wear a crown of care;
 The king death's subject, death his empire's thief,
 Which makes unequal state, and equal fare:
 More dead than were alive, and more to die
 Than would be buried with a mortal eye.

O well-fed earth with ill-digesting food!
 O well-ill food, because both flesh and sin!
 Sin made it sick, which never did it good.
 Sin made it well. Her well doth worse begin.
 The earth, more hungry than was Tantal's jaws,
 Had flesh and blood held in her earthen paws. 150

Now could belief some quiet harbour find,
 When all her foes were mantled in the ground,
 Before their sin-enchantments made it blind,
 Their magic arts, their necromantic sound.
 Now truth hath got some place to speak and hear,
 And whatsoe'er she speaks, she doth not fear. 155

When Phoebe's axletree was limned with pale,
 Pale which becometh night, night which is black,
 Hemmed round about with gloomy-shining veil,
 Borne up by clouds, mounted on silence' back;
 And when night's horses, in the running wain,
 O'ertook the middest of their journey's pain; 160

Thy word, O Lord, descended from thy throne,
 The royal mansion of thy power's command,
 As a fierce man of war in time of moan,
 Standing in midst of the destroyed land,
 And brought thy precept as a burning steven,
 Reaching from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven. 165

Now was the night far spent, and morning's wings
 Flew thorough sleepy thoughts and made them dream,
 Hying apace to welcome sunny springs,
 And give her time of day to Phoebus' beam.
 No sooner had she flown unto the east,
 But dreamy passage did disturb their rest. 170

And then, like sleepy-waking hearts and eyes,
 Turned up the fainting closures of their faces,
 Which between day and night in slumber lies,
 Keeping their waky and their sleepy places;
 And lo, a fearing dream and dreaming fear
 Made every eye let fall a sleepy tear. 180

97 She virtue, righteousness
 103 Now after the Passover, the destruction of the firstborn of Egypt, the subsequent plague; what follows is a triumphant moralizing of the scene of death.
 105 sancited established; evidently a Middleton coinage, from Latin sancire

117 stone fruit pit (following from 'seed', 'fruit', 'fruition')
 128 Vailed lowered in deference cypress fine black mourning kerchief 149 Tantal's belonging to Tantalus (mythical king of Phrygia, condemned never to gain the ever-receding food and drink

just beyond his reach) 157 axletree axle; axis of revolution
limned painted
 161 wain wagon
 167 steven voice
 171 Hying apace speeding swiftly
 176 closures fig. eyes?

Verses 18, 19 A tear half-wet from they themselves half-lived,
 Poor dry-wet tear, too moist a wet-dry face;
 A white-red face, whose red-white colour strived
 To make anatomy of either place;
 185 Two champions, both resolved in face's field,
 And both had half, yet either scorned to yield.

They which were wont to mount above the ground
 Hath leaden, quick-glued sinews, forced to lie,
 One here, one there, in prison, yet unbound,
 190 Heart-striving life and death to live and die;
 Nor were they ignorant of fate's decree,
 In being told before what they should be.

Verse 20 Their falsest visions showed the truest cause,
 False because fantasies, true because haps;
 195 For dreams, though kindled by sleep-idle pause,
 Sometime true indices of danger's claps,
 As well doth prove in these sin-sleeping lines
 That dreams are falsest shows, and truest signs.

By this time death had longer pilgrimage,
 200 And was engagèd in more living breasts.
 Now every ship had fleeting anchorage.
 Both good and bad were punished with unrests.
 But yet God's heavy plague endured not long,
 For anger quenched herself with her self wrong.

Verse 21 Not so, for heat can never cool with heat,
 21 Nor cold can warm a cold, nor ice thaw ice.
 Anger is fire, and fire is anger's meat.
 Then how can anger cool her hot device?
 210 The sun doth thaw the ice with melting harm;
 Ice cannot cool the sun which makes it warm.

It was celestial fire, terrestrial cold.
 It was celestial cold, terrestrial fire.
 A true and holy prayer which is bold
 To cool the heat of anger's hot desire,
 215 Pronouncèd by a servant of thy word,
 To ease the miseries which wraths afford.

Verse 22 Weapons and wit are double links of force.
 22 If one unknit, they both have weaker strength.
 The longer be the chain, the longer course,
 220 If measured by duplicity of length.
 If weapons fail, wit is the better part;
 Wit failing, weapons have the weaker heart.

Prayer is weak in strength, yet strong in wit,
 And can do more than strength, in being wise.
 Thy word, O Lord, is wisdom, and in it
 225 Doth lie more force than forces can surprise.
 Man did not overcome his foes with arms,
 But with thy word, which conquers greater harms.

That word it was with which the world was framed,
 The heavens made, mortality ordained.
 That word it was with which all men were named,
 In which one word there are all words contained:
 The breath of God, the life of mortal state,
 The enemy to vice, the foe to hate.

When death pressed down the sin-dead-living souls,
 235 And drew the curtain of their seeing day,
 This word was virtue's shield, and death's controls,
 Which shielded those which never went astray;
 For when the dead did die and end in sin,
 The living had assurance to begin.
 240

Are all these deeds accomplished in one word?
 O sovereign word, chief of all words and deeds!
 O salve of safety, wisdom's strongest sword,
 Both food and hunger, which both starves and feeds:
 245 Food unto life, because of living power,
 Hunger to those whom death and sins devour.

For they which lived were those which virtue loved,
 And those which virtue loved did love to live.
 Thrice happy these whom no destruction moved;
 She present there, which love and life did give.
 250 They bore the mottoes of eternal fame
 On diapasons of their father's name.

Here death did change his pale to purple hue,
 Blushing, against the nature of his face,
 To see such bright aspects, such splendid view,
 255 Such heav'nly paradise of earthly grace,
 And hid with life's quick force his ebon dart
 Within the crannies of his meagre heart;

Descending to the place from whence he came,
 With rich-stored chariot of fresh-bleeding wounds,
 Sore-grievèd bodies from a soul's sick name,
 260 Sore-grievèd souls, in bodies' sin-sick sounds.
 Death was afraid to stay where life should be,
 For they are foes, and cannot well agree.

184 anatomy skeleton, especially one prepared for examination; from Geneva's 'shewed the cause of his death'
 194 haps unfortunate events, mishaps
 196 claps blows
 204 self own
 215 servant of thy word Aaron
 220 duplicity doubleness
 226 surprise overcome, overpower

252 diapasons again, as at 6.188, Middleton misunderstands the musical term; he uses it here for Geneva's 'diadem'.
 255 splendent extremely brilliant 257 ebon black
 258 meagre emaciated
 19 Despite all these torments, and despite apparent repentance, the Egyptians still persecuted the Israelites, broke faith and pursued them to the Red Sea and their own destruction; God, both merciful and vengeful, fed his starving people with quails, but plagued the Egyptians for their persecutions; at last the whole earth is miraculously transformed by God in aid of his faithful people.

Chapter Nineteen

Verses
1, 2 Avaunt, destroyer, with thy hungry jaws,
Thy thirsty heart, thy longing ashy bones!
The righteous live. They be not in thy laws,
Nor subjects to thy deep oppressing moans.

5 Let it suffice that we have seen thy show,
And tasted but the shadow of thy woe.

Yet stay, and bring thy empty car again:
More ashy vessels do attend thy pace.
More passengers expect thy coming wain.

10 More groaning pilgrims long to see thy face.
Wrath now attends the passage of misdeeds,
And thou shalt still be stored with souls that bleeds.

Verses 3
Some lie half-dead, while others dig their graves
With weak-forced tears to moist a long-dry ground;
15 But tears on tears in time will make whole waves,
To bury sin with overwhelming sound.
Their eyes for mattocks serve, their tears for spades,
And they themselves are sextons by their trades.

20 What is their fee? Lament. Their payment? Woe.
Their labour? Wail. Their practice? Misery.
And can their conscience serve to labour so?
Yes, yes, because it helpeth villainy.
Though eyes did stand in tears, and tears in eyes,
They did another foolishness devise.

Verses 4
So that what prayer did, sin did undo,
And what the eyes did win, the heart did lose.
Whom virtue reconciled, vice did forego.
Whom virtue did forego, that vice did choose.

30 O had their hearts been just, eyes had been winners!
Their eyes were just, but hearts new sin's beginners.

Verses 5
They digged true graves with eyes, but not with hearts,
Repentance in their face, vice in their thought.
Their delving eyes did take the sexton's parts.
The heart undid the labour which eyes wrought.

35 A new strange death was portion for their toil,
While virtue sat as judge to end the broil.

Verses 6
Had tongue been joined with eyes, tongue had not strayed.
Had eyes been joined to heart, heart then had seen.
But O, in wanting eyesight it betrayed

40 The dungeon of misdeeds where it had been.
So, many living in this orb of woe
Have heaved-up eyes, but yet their hearts are low.

This change of sin did make a change of feature,
A new strange death, a misery untold,

A new reform of every old-new creature,
New-serving offices which time made old:
New-living virtue from an old-dead sin,
Which ends in ill what doth in good begin.

When death did reap the harvest of despite,
The wicked ears of sin and mischief's seed,
Filling the mansion of eternal night
With heavy-leadened clods of sinful breed,
Life sowed the plants of immortality,
To welcome old-made new felicity.

The clouds, the gloomy curtains of the air,
Drawn and redrawn with the four-winged winds,
Made all of borrowed vapours, darksome fair,
Did overshadow their tents, which virtue finds.
The Red Sea's deep was made a dry-trod way,
Without impediment, or stop, or stay.

The thirsty winds, with overtoiling puffs,
Did drink the ruddy ocean's water dry,
Tearing the zone's hot-cold, whole-ragged ruffs,
With ruffling conflicts in the field of sky;
So that dry earth did take wet water's place,
With sandy mantle and hard grounded face.

That way, which never was a way before,
Is now a trodden path, which was untrod,
Through which the people went as on a shore,
Defended by the stretched-out arm of God,
Praising his wondrous works, his mighty hand,
Making the land of sea, the sea of land.

That breast where anger slept is mercy's bed.
That breast where mercy wakes is anger's cave.
When mercy lives, then Nemesis is dead,
And one for either's corpse makes other's grave.
Hate furrows up a grave to bury love,
And love doth press down hate; it cannot move.

This breast is God, which ever wakes in both.
Anger is his revenge, mercy his love.
He sent them flies instead of cattle's growth,
And multitudes of frogs for fishes strove.
Here was his anger shown, and his remorse,
When he did make dry land of water-course.

The sequel proves what actor is the chief.
All things beginning knows, but none their end.
The sequel unto mirth is weeping grief,
As doth mishaps with happiness contend;
For both are agents in this orb of weeping,
And one doth wake when other falls a-sleeping.

1 Avaunt Depart destroyer death
 8 ashy vessels dead carcasses
 9 wain wagon
 17 mattocks tools for dislodging roots and stones
 18 sextons gravediggers

24 another foolishness the pursuit of the Israelites 35 portion payment
 36 broil quarrel
 63 zone's sky's
ruffs fringes, ruffles; clouds, continuing the figure from 55

64 ruffling blustering, turbulent
 75 Nemesis goddess of retribution
 79 both mercy and anger
 83 remorse pity 85 sequel outcome
actor agent

	Yet, should man's eyes pay tribute every hour, With tributary tears to sorrow's shrine, He would all drown himself with his own shower, And never find the leaf of mercy's line.	You lay in ambush. O deceitful snares, Enticing baits, beguiling sentinels! You added grief to grief, and cares to cares, Tears unto weeping eyes where tears did dwell. O multitudes of sin, legions of vice, Which thaws with sorrow sorrow's frozen ice!	Verse 15 135
95	They in God's anger wailed, in his love joyed; Their love brought lust ere love had lust destroyed.
Verse 12	The sun of joy dried up their tear-wet eyes, And sat as lord upon their sobbing heart, For when one comfort lives, one sorrow dies, Or ends in mirth what it begun in smart. What greater grief than hunger-starved mood? What greater mirth than satisfying food?	A banquet was prepared, the fare deceit, The dishes poison, and the cup despite, The table mischief, and the cloth a bait, Like spinner's web t'entrap the strange fly's flight. Pleasure was strewed upon the top of pain, Which, once digested, spread through every vein.	140
100
105	Quails from the fishy bosom of the sea Came to their comforts which were living-starved, But punishments fell in the sinners' way, Sent down by thunderbolts which they deserved. Sin-fed these sinners were, hate-cherished; According unto both they perished.	O ill conductors of misguided feet, Into a way of death, a path of guile! Poor pilgrims which their own destruction meet In habitations of an unknown isle! O had they left that broad deceiving way, They had been right, and never gone astray!	Verse 16 150
Verse 13	Sin-fed, because their food was seed of sins, And bred new sin with old-digested meat; Hate-cherished, in being hatred's twins, And sucking cruelty from tiger's teat: Was it not sin to err and go astray? Was it not hate to stop a stranger's way?	But mark the punishment which did ensue Upon those ill-misleading villainies: They blinded were themselves with their self view, And fell into their own-made miseries, Seeking the entrance of their dwelling places With blinded eyes and dark misguided faces.	155
115	Was it not sin to see and not to know? Was it not sin to know and not receive? Was it not hate to be a stranger's foe, And make them captives which did them relieve? Yes, it was greatest sin first for to leave them, And it was greatest hate last to deceive them.	Lo, here was snares ensnared, and guiles beguiled, Deceit deceived, and mischief was misled. Eyes blinded sight, and thoughts the hearts defiled. Life, living in aspects, was dying-dead. Eyes thought for to mislead, and were misled; Feet went to make mistreads, and did mistread.	Verse 17 160
120
Verse 14	O hungry cannibals which know no fill, But still do starving feed, and feeding starve! How could you so deceive? How could you spill Their loving selves which did yourselves preserve? Why did you suck your pelican to death, Which fed you too too well with his own breath?	At this proud fall the elements were glad, And did embrace each other with a kiss. All things were joyful which before were sad: The pilgrims in their way, and could not miss. As when the sound of music doth resound With changing tune, so did the changed ground.	165
125
130	O, say that cruelty can have no law, And then you speak with a mild-cruel tongue; Or say that avarice lodged in your jaw, And then you do yourselves but little wrong. Say what you will, for what you say is spite 'Gainst ill-come strangers which did merit right.	The birds forsook the air, the sheep the fold. The eagle pitched low, the swallow high. The nightingale did sleep, and uncontrolled Forsook the prickle of her nature's eye. The seely worm was friends with all her foes, And sucked the dew-tears from the weeping rose.	Verse 18

94 leaf of mercy's line the written line (containing his salvation) on mercy's page, or in mercy's book (fig.); compare Timon, 14.118: 'not within the leaf of pity writ'.

103 Quails relatives of the partridge; despite the authority of Numbers 11:31, quails are not sea-birds

105 sinners' apparently, the Egyptians' (supported by Geneva's marginal note); Exodus at this point tells the story of the forgetful Israelites and their subsequent sins and punishments.

114 to stop a stranger's way to place the Israelites (strangers or foreigners) in bondage

125 pelican the Israelites; but most often associated emblematically with Christ, from the belief that the adult pelican feeds its (ungrateful) young with its own blood from a wound pecked in its breast

142 spinner's spider's strange foreign

160 aspects looks, glances

175 The sparrow tuned the lark's sweet melody.
 The lark in silence sung a dirge of dole.
 The linnet helped the lark in malady.
 The swans forsook the choir of billow-roll.
 The dry-land fowl did make the sea their nest;
 180 The wet-sea fish did make the land their rest.

Verse
 19 The swans, the choristers which did complain
 In inward feeling of an outward loss,
 And filled the choir of waves with laving pain,
 Yet dancing in their wail with surge's toss,
 185 Forsook her cradle-billow-mountain bed,
 And hies her unto land, there to be fed.

Her sea-fare now is land-fare of content.
 Old change is changèd new, yet all is change.
 The fishes are her food, and they are sent 190 Unto dry land, to creep, to feed, to range.
 Now coolest water cannot quench the fire,
 But makes it proud, in hottest hot desire.

Verse
 20 The ev'ning of a day is morn to night.
 The ev'ning of a night is morn to day.
 195 The one is Phoebe's clime, which is pale-bright,
 The other Phoebus in more light array.

She makes the mountains limp in chill-cold snow;
 He melts their eyes and makes them weep for woe.

His beams, ambassadors of his hot will,
 Through the transparent element of air, 200
 Doth only his warm ambassage fulfil,
 And melts the icy jaw of Phoebe's hair;
 Yet those, though fiery flames, could not thaw cold,
 Nor break the frosty glue of winter's mould.

Verse
 21 Here nature slew herself, or, at the least,
 Did tame the passage of her hot aspects.
 All things have nature to be worst or best,
 And must incline to that which she affects.
 But nature missed herself in this same part,
 210 For she was weak, and had not nature's heart.

'Twas God which made her weak and makes her strong,
 Resisting vice, assisting righteousness,
 Assisting and resisting right and wrong,
 Making this epilogue in equalness.

'Twas God, his people's aid, their wisdom's friend, 215
 In whom I did begin, with whom I end.

A Jove surgit opus; de Jove finit opus.

178 forsook . . . billow-roll abandoned the sea
 183 laving washing, bathing 186 her the swan's; Middleton's abrupt change of number is awkward, but it does restore parallelism with the singular birds in Verse 18.
 195 Phoebe's clime the moon's territory

204 frosty glue Premodern commentaries identify this ('which seemed to be ice,
 and was of a nature that would melt,
 and yet was an immortal meat' in Geneva 19:21) with manna, not snow; again
 Middleton appears to have misunderstood

the text (D.S.).
 216.1 A Jove . . . finit opus. See note to the Epigraph. Now, echoing 216, Middleton completes the Ovidian phrase and with it ends his labours: Of God the work arises;
 in God the work ends.

MICROCYNICON: SIX SNARLING SATIRES

Edited by Wendy Wall

Microcynicon is chiefly famous because it was publicly burned on 4 June 1599 shortly after its publication. Three days earlier the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London ordered the suppression of ten books including Middleton's, and banned the publication of all satires, presumably because the genre was scurrilous and dangerously topical. Lynda Boose has argued that it was satire's status as a new brand of self-loathing pornography that attracted the Archbishop's attention. Whether the texts were censored primarily for moral or political reasons remains unclear. Joseph Hall's influential precursor text, Virgideiarum, also included in the order, was mysteriously spared from the flames. While some writers ignored the order and continued to write satires, Middleton, like John Marston, mainly directed his satirical energies toward the commercially-promising stage. Microcynicon disappeared and was not reprinted in the seventeenth century. By leaving Microcynicon in the ashes of obscurity for almost the next four hundred years, many critics have unwittingly validated the censor's notion that the text was better left unknown. Its spectacularly controversial inauguration, however, highlights how this diminutive octavo volume exemplifies the conventions and contradictions of late sixteenth-century satire.

Satire always ushers the reader into a degenerate world of rogues, liars, panders and sinners. Microcynicon is no exception. It shows us snippets of London life—from the dinner table of the haughty Superbia, to Droone's elaborate schemes to trick a gull in a tavern, to the cross-dressed Pyander's titillating sexual deceptions in public streets. In this work, as in all of its kind, the satirist holds up for our censure a world gone awry. Each of Microcynicon's six poems targets a specific vice: usury, prodigality, pride, cheating, cross-dressing, foolishness. As in The Nightingale and the Ant and The Black Book, Middleton writes here in a didactic genre designed to prevent threats to the social and moral order. Microcynicon, however, shows us Middleton's only foray into the genre of formal verse satire, a form established by Horace, Juvenal, and Persius.

Middleton was inspired to write Microcynicon by the outpouring of English satires at the turn of the century, primarily by Hall's Virgideiarum (1597–8), and Marston's two 'snarling' satires, Pygmalion's Image and Certain Satires (1598) and The Scourge of Villainy (1598), but also by Everard Guilpin's Skialetheia (1598), William Rankins's Seven Satires (1598); and John Donne's manuscript Satires (1593?). In these works, the speakers display little of the marked humility prevalent in the medieval Piers Plowman. Instead writers deploy a combative rhetoric which can be, as Hall describes, 'unpleasing both to the unskilful and over-musical ear'. Middleton places his work squarely in these literary circles by imitating Hall's preface, echoing Marston's indignant language, presenting conventional satire themes (the spendthrift heir, the hermaphrodite), and toying with a genre seen as appropriate for launching a poet's career in the 1590s literary milieu. Joining contemporary writers who abandoned Petrarchan and Ovidian love traditions in favour of the emergent Jacobean impulse toward burlesque and parody, he nevertheless departs from Marston's furious tone of rebuke and Hall's Horatian and urbane criticism of literary style. Instead Middleton presents character sketches focusing on social follies rather than invective fuelled by disdain for poetic practices.

In formal satire, the (male) speaker displays his intimate knowledge of human frailty. For this reason, as Alvin Kernan notes, the satiric persona can appear as unsavoury as his subject matter. Given this dilemma, the suppression of Microcynicon brilliantly demonstrates one of the strange tensions surrounding satiric writing: in engaging a self-professed 'low' genre that denounces low social modes, the satirist is always in danger of absorption into the world of vice. Indeed the issue of self-incrimination is a prevalent theme in Microcynicon.

Written in rhymed iambic couplets, Microcynicon moves from the discursive style of classical satire in the first two poems to narrative vignettes in the next three. In effect, Middleton wanders from the declamatory to the dramatic. In keeping with the expected obscure style of the genre, the first poem opens with the metaphysical world of the avaricious usurer Cron. After mourning the decline of the golden age, the speaker places Cron at the London Exchange and elliptically describes Cron's various fallacious rationalizations for greed: money constitutes heaven, hell, and earth in his cosmology of gold. The second satire vivifies the ironic wages of Cron's sin by showing how his wastrel heir Zodon lavishly spends the miser's hoard. A typical Renaissance social climber, Zodon has pretensions that lead him to financial ruin. Middleton specifically mocks Zodon's haughty demands for material pampering and social respect. When Zodon's extravagance blurs into lust, we see Middleton's awareness of the conceptual linkages between monetary and sexual circulation. The second satire thus demonstrates the Renaissance tendency to express social problems through the language of eroticism.

In Satires Three, Four, and Five, the speaker appears to abandon his moral stance and instead to revel in the energy revealed by his character sketches of Superbia, Droone, and Pyander. In the satire on pride, Superbia decides to kill herself in the wake of a spectacularly lavish luncheon because she sees someone more beautiful than she. After deftly conveying the seductive delights of the meal, Middleton shifts from Superbia's narcissism to a related sketch of Lady Tiptoes, who pitches a temper tantrum because she detects a spot on her gorgeous frock. Middleton follows Renaissance convention both in gendering pride as female and in exemplifying it as the fetishization of food and clothing. Critiques of courtly foppery, fastidiousness, and what Puritan-influenced conduct books call 'prodigal nicety' and 'dainty-mouthed' behaviour were often directed at women or labelled as effeminate traits. Barnaby Rich, for instance, notes that 'Far-fetched and dear bought is good for Ladies'. If Zodon represents the hubristic male social climber who is punished for acquisitiveness, Superbia embodies the paralysis that can ensue from the overvaluation of creature comforts.

Vice's Executioner, from George Wither, Abuses Stript and Whipt (1617).

Satire Four offers its readers a foray into rogue literature by presenting a single continuous narrative about Droone's triumph in wining, dining, and pickpocketing a gullible dinner companion. Here Middleton contributes to the vogue for cony-catching pamphlets popularized by Robert Greene. These works make visible the operations of a powerful underground of cheaters and thieves who trade on human greed and self-interest. The most striking element of this satire is the liveliness of the poetic style, the cohesion of the story, and the one-line moral that is remembered only in the final line. Satire Four thus dramatizes how the satirist can become intrigued by the moral flaws that he condemns.

This problem reaches its pinnacle in the fifth satire when we enter the world of the transvestite Pyander, for here the speaker confesses that he has actually frequented bawdy-houses and lusted after this cross-dressed boy. The speaker coyly feigns reluctance at exposing Pyander's secret, but eventually decides to publicize the boy's duplicity:

And shall I then procure eternal blame
By secret cloaking of Pyander's shame,
And he not blush?
By heaven I will not! I'll not burn in hell
For false Pyander, though I loved him well.

Middleton's singular use of the half-line accentuates the drama of this confession. In the Prologue the speaker narrates his wild origins; it is no coincidence that the speaker's complicity in vice is established in the fifth satire in peculiarly sexual terms: the satirist, like the lustful mythological satyr to which he was falsely linked etymologically, is known for his physicality. Elizabethans speculated that satire had its origins in satyr plays in which actors assumed the character of woodland creatures to launch savage attacks. 'A satire is... a very railing, only ordained to rebuke vice... The Satires had their name of uplandish gods, that were rude, lascivious and wanton of behaviour', Thomas Langley declared in 1546. In Microcynicon the speaker appropriately confesses his sordid motive of revenge in the satire most explicitly connected with sexuality. If satire always turns on inherent contradictions in the moral but beastly persona, as Kernan argues, then that persona is one peculiarly linked to eroticism. In Abuses Stript and Whipt (1617), for instance, George Wither's satyr-speaker readily admits his own sexual culpability: 'An Executioner am I, | Of Lust, and wanton Venery. | Thus are the vices scourg'd by me, | Yet my self from vice not free'.

The fifth satire is also conventional in establishing the theme of homoeroticism. Marston, Hall, Rankins, and Weever all describe the allure of the seductive boy 'Ganymede'. Middleton's reference to Sodom makes clear that his satire is not just about Pyander's gender trickery, but also about what we now understand as homosexual desire. In fact, Pyander's 'trick' becomes emblematic of satire's instability: the desire for (moral or sexual) difference erodes into a familiar sameness. The satirist's efforts to stand apart from the arena of sin only expose his immersion within it, and the distinction between high and low moral worlds collapse. The result is a 'crisis of categories', of which, Marjorie Garber argues, the transvestite is a favourite cultural symbol. Neither male nor female, Pyander exists to point to the general breakdown of cultural categories. Middleton neatly describes Pyander's undecidable nature:

Sometimes he jets it like a gentleman,
Otherwhiles much like a wanton courtesan.
But truth to tell a man or woman whether,
I cannot say, she's excellent in either.
But if report may certify a truth,
She's neither of either, but a cheating youth.

Unsurprisingly critics have downplayed these homoerotic elements. In John Payne Collier's mock dialogue about Microcynicon, for instance, the characters decide that this satire reveals the author's negative view of women; they further determine that Pyander's 'ingling' (the word for sodomizing) is throughout the text a misprint for 'jugling'. Sodomy, however, was understood in the Renaissance as a channelling of sexual energy for purposes other than reproduction, an excess of desire. Homoeroticism thus ties neatly into the writer's understanding of satire's indebtedness to the Bacchanalian wild man; and Microcynicon exposes how eroticism pervades the issues of social critique and self-incrimination central to the genre.

The final satire presents an intentionally confusing dialogue between a fool and a satirist. In a self-conscious moment, the satirist finds himself satirized by an 'Innocent' who steps into the poem to interrogate him about his writing. The difficulty that the reader has in disentangling the speakers is deliberate: ascertaining the boundaries between satirist and fool (both of whom are called an 'ass') becomes part of the game. Verifying Juvenal's famous credo, 'Difficile est saturam non scribere' (it is difficult not to write satire), the speaker suggests that his writing is involuntary: 'It is impossible, streams that are barred their course, | Swell with more rage, and far more greater force, | Until their full-stuffed gorge a passage makes'. The fool's response, 'A resolute ass!', deflates this high-blown rhetoric and ironically points toward the future suppression of the poem. The reversals that have hovered around the other satires become the subject of this last poem, where a supposed critique of wise (foolish) innocence becomes the satirist's own trial. Middleton thus ends Microcynicon with a direct comment on the problem ever-present in satire: its failed attempt to maintain stable ethical boundaries between moralist and immoral world.

We are not surprised by the poem's final twist because Middleton has already drawn attention to the satirist's inextricable relationship to the disorderly world that is his subject. In the Prologue, the speaker suggests that he develops a vengeful and hostile tone simply in response to the malice of society; satire merely returns the world's vices to itself. Drawing on a grotesquely vivid image of regurgitation, he defies his critics in terms that far exceed a simple mirroring of vice to itself:

Your devilish venom cannot me affright.
It is a cordial of a candy taste,
I'll drink it up, and then let't run at waste.
...
I'll belch into your throats all open wide,
Whose gaping swallow nothing runs beside.
And it if venom, take it as you list:
He spites himself, that spites a satirist.

The text's concluding motto, however, highlights anxieties about satire: 'Qui color albus erat, nunc est contrarius albo' ('its colour, that once was white, is now the very opposite'). Drawn from Ovid's Metamorphoses, this passage refers to the transformation of the spotlessly white raven who turned black because it chattered too much. Middleton's allusion addresses the world's general degeneration through a story that hints at the more particular problem of representation. Describing evil through satire can infect both writer and reader, transforming them into the black colour that defines the speaker's project. In the Prologue, Middleton claims that his pen drinks up sin (which blackens his ink) and spits it back at detractors. The poem becomes a 'black defying embassy' (Prologue.21) sent out to travel the 'deserts of black sin' (1.11). Blackness is thus linked explicitly to the satirist's embittered invective and the flaws that he seeks to remedy. The final motto indicates that the text itself may have blackened the world, as 'nigrum' ink (Defiance.16) metaphorically spills into the reading public—polluting it with knowledge of its own sordid nature and marking the poem as a figure for the impurity it condemns.

Middleton's symbolic use of ink underscores his general attention to the materiality of his books. As Gary Taylor notes, Middleton chooses a title for this satire that self-referentially highlights the small size of the book object. While the octavo format was not uncommon to satire, Middleton makes the size part of the text's wit: penned by the youthful 'little cynic' and small enough to rest comfortably in a hand or pocket, the book humbly names its ambitious project and suggests an uneasy intimacy with its readers. In essence, Middleton cleverly renders the conventional humility espoused by satirists (Horace called his satires 'little books') into physical form. Microcynicon calls attention to the text's physicality to convey satire's 'lowly' power to hold a microscope to the world's grand foibles.

Through his book's title and format, Middleton also defines Microcynicon as an abbreviated project. The chapter headings clearly promise to present more than one 'book' (chapter), in keeping with conventions established by other writers: Hall's first three books included twenty-two satires, and Marston's Scourge boasted three books of ten satires. Middleton's allusion to further books issues a promise that his last satire teasingly cancels. By calling his readers' attention to the relative brevity of his six satires, Middleton implies both his ability and his disinclination to write grander volumes. In fact, the book object's incomplete status could register the speaker's disgust and frustration with the unpleasant and difficult task of satire writing.

Middleton's references to satyrs also help us to understand Microcynicon's theatrical nature, for Renaissance etymology linked formal satire to satyr plays. Unlike popular satires of its day, Microcynicon is prefaced with a list of persons. Middleton follows Hall in writing a prologue, but he is the only satirist to further this motif by adding an epilogue. This theatricalization of the text is intensified by the fact that the poem is not dedicated to a patron. Instead the list of characters becomes the text's primary defining feature, appropriate because each poem is devoted principally to a single character. Departing from the model of Hall's and Marston's more excursive satires, Middleton offers relatively continuous dramatic narratives. While other satirists rail elliptically at vice, Middleton tells stories about particular characters who embody certain traits. And unlike Marston's and Hall's interest in specific contemporary poets and styles, Middleton makes no reference to the literary scene. Instead of topical references that document his inclusion in an elite circuit of writers, Middleton shapes this work through theatrical techniques, as he does later in The Black Book. Microcynicon thus looks appropriately ahead to Middleton's career in theatre.

Critics have generally considered satire to be an inferior literary form because of its topicality and harsh style. Unlike epic or romance, satire emphasizes its social referentiality; that is, it points explicitly to details of contemporary life. Certainly Microcynicon's themes are not new to the Renaissance: the world's enslavement to sex, money, greed, and vanity were all topics familiar to Horace, Persius, and Juvenal. But Microcynicon gives these satirical staples a local cast and colour. For this reason, satire has been seen as a wayward form in need of close regulation from authorities. For this reason as well, satire has been neglected by critics who felt that it did not properly transcend its own social moment to meditate on universal truths. As literary criticism has increasingly become aware of the historical embeddedness of all literary forms, however, it has made way for a new appreciation of this genre. In an age in which we now commonly recognize that all works of literature are intricately tied to their social moment, satire's topicality is no longer perceived as a critical shortcoming.

Satire has also been devalued because it cuts against the grain of aesthetic standards. Derived from satūra, 'satire' means a medley, a heterogeneous compilation of disparate forms. Microcynicon is perfectly in keeping with its genre in its fragmentary form and rapidly changing caricatures. Collating proverbs, Biblical verse, and classical satire with contemporary description, Middleton places a premium on capturing features of English life in quick and broad lines rather than developing principles of cohesion. He also shows himself capable of adopting the rough poetic style and truculent persona established by Juvenal and perfected by Marston. Hence Everard Guilpin primes his Muse to sing as a 'foul-mouth Jester'; and Middleton says in his conclusion, 'For jocund wit of force must jangling be'. This impropriety is precisely what bothered the text's second nineteenth-century editor, Bullen, who noted Microcynicon's 'barbarous phraseology' and predicted that "Brief, but tedious" will be the censure of most readers'. Middleton followed other satirists in deploying jangling rhymes and metrical irregularities; thus the indecorous and hybrid quality that some of the poem's readers have so disliked are fundamental and self-conscious elements of satire.

Microcynicon is also conventional in reflecting cultural anxieties about shifts in the social order, particularly the instability of class and of gender relations. Microcynicon patrols the ground of social distinction by scapegoating Superbia as the emblem of pride, by mocking Pyander's 'deviant' sexual behaviour and by denouncing Zodon's social mobility as lustful debauchery. Like many contemporary satires, it announces itself as a 'low' form that consolidates the high world of moral value, as Greg Bredbeck suggests. But the impulse to establish social orthodoxy fractures visibly in Satire Five where Pyander's homosexuality is not at moments as troublesome as his false advertising, and in Satire Four where Droone's tactics are amusingly condoned. As in so much Renaissance writing, the text exceeds its own easy morals and instead offers a complex picture of the problems that arise when one attempts to hold on to fixed cultural and ethical boundaries. In doing so, the work makes visible a truism: satire always teeters on the brink of becoming its opposite. Thus it is no surprise that the avowedly moral Microcynicon could be burned in its own time. It is itself commentary on the troubling energy of satire. The last poem ends up parodying the fate of Microcynicon when the fool/satirist is forced to disappear. It was just a short time until the censors made the text do the same.

SEE ALSO

Textual introduction and apparatus: Companion, 465
 Authorship and date: Companion, 336

Microcynicon

Six Snarling Satires

Persons	<table style="border: none; margin: auto;"> <tr> <td style="font-size: 4em; vertical-align: middle;">{</td> <td style="padding: 0 10px;"> Insatiate Prodigal Insolent Cheating Ingling Wise </td> <td style="padding: 0 10px;"> Cron Zodon Superbia Droone Pyander Innocent </td> <td style="font-size: 4em; vertical-align: middle;">}</td> </tr> </table>	{	Insatiate Prodigal Insolent Cheating Ingling Wise	Cron Zodon Superbia Droone Pyander Innocent	}	Avaunt I say! I'll anger thee enough, And fold thy fiery eyes in thy smazky snuff.
{	Insatiate Prodigal Insolent Cheating Ingling Wise	Cron Zodon Superbia Droone Pyander Innocent	}
5			Defiance, resolution and neglects, True trine of bars against thy false assault, Defies, resolves defiance, and rejects Thy interest to claim the smallest fault. Thou lawless landlady, poor prodigal, Sour solace, credit's crack, fear's festival.

Adsis pulcher homo canis hic tibi pulcher emendo

His Defiance to Envy

5	Envy, which mask'st thyself in common guise, To haunt deservers and to hunt deserts, Hard-soft, cold-hot, well-evil, foolish-wise, Miscontrarities, agreeing parts,	More angry satire-days I'll muster up Than thou canst challenge letters in thy name, My nigrum true-born ink no more shall sup Thy stained blemish, charàctered in blame. My pen's two nebs shall turn unto a fork,
---	--	---

This commentary focuses upon intertextual relationships.

Title Microcynicon Translated as 'having to do with a churlish dog or a cynic', the title alludes to the relationship between the satirist and the cynic, as well as referring to the general association of satire with the fury of dogs. Compare Hall's 'biting satires', Goddard's A Mastiff Whelp with other Rough-Island-like Curs, and Marston's reference to himself as a 'barking' and 'sharp-fang'd satirist' (Pygmalion, 262 and The Scourge of Villainy, Satire IX, 362). In the first satire, Middleton refers to his 'snarling muse' (14). In this text, dogs become representative of both evil and the project that is necessary to drive away viciousness; this image thus marks a collapse in the dichotomies that underpin satire (see notes to 1.4 and 1.100). The title also calls attention to the text's small 'micro' size. Because satire was perceived to be an unheroic genre, writers often humbly speak of their works as diminutive: Horace, for instance, refers to his 'little books' (Satire 1:4) and his 'little volume' (Satire 1:10). Through his title, Middleton shows that he has transformed a rhetorical ploy into a physical object.

Persons. 7 Adsis . . . emendo This phrase is obscure, but it might translate as 'Come here, good-looking man—and I, a good-looking dog, will amend you'. Irwin admits difficulty in translating this phrase, but guesses: 'Draw near, handsome man: I, a handsome dog, publish [these things] for you here'. No source is known, although the scansion could be classical hexameter. Whatever the meaning of this motto, it furthers the link between satire writing and bestiality established by the title.

Defiance This conventional address to potential critics is written specifically in imitation of Joseph Hall's Virgideiariam (1597). Middleton replicates Hall's rhyme scheme, stanzaic form, and title, the Defiance to Envy.

2 mask'st . . . guise The masquerade imagery follows Hall's Prologue to Virgideiariam, which denounces envy and hypocrisy: 'The world's eye bleared with those shameless lies, | Mask'd in the show of meal-mouth'd poesies. | Go, daring Muse, on with thy thankless task, | And do the ugly face of Vice unmask'. Marston also introduces the satirist as someone who unmasks the world's 'masked shows' (Pygmalion, 262).

5 Miscontrarities false contraries; the double negative contributes to the tone created by the extensive use of oxymoron in this stanza. These figures call attention to the duplicitous way in which Envy works to appear as its opposite as well as its tendency to levy contrarities.

6 Avaunt go away

7 smazky The precise meaning of this word is unclear; perhaps 'smeechy', as Dyce suggests (blackened and smoky); or a variant of 'smaikry', meaning contemptible behaviour or roguery. snuff candle end, used to signify something of little value or on the point of extinction. Here the term is part of an unusual and obscure phrase which calls attention to the self-destructive nature of envy.

12–13 Thou . . . festival This series of inappropriately yoked words indicate Envy's contradictions.

13 crack boast

14 satire-days punning on 'Saturdays', continuing the holiday imagery of 'festival'. In his address to detractors, Marston imagines his critics as part of a common crowd gathered sardonically at the 'festival' of poetry (Scourge, 301). 16 nigrum black. Middleton uses this obscure term in Solomon to describe the devil: 'the coal-black visage of his nigrum fame' (11.76). As in this passage, Middleton calls attention to the physical nature of writing in The Black Book where the devil links the blackness of ink to the evil nature of the objects he satirizes: 'Am I black enough, think you, dressed up in a lasting suit of ink? Do I deserve my dark and pitchy title?' (824–6). In Microcynicon Middleton calls his text a 'black defying embassy' (Prologue.21) sent out to travel over the deserts of 'black sin' (1.111). In Solomon Middleton employs an extended version of the frightening image called forth in these lines, as the satirist's pen drinks up the black sins of the world to serve as the ink through which he will excoriate vice: 'Black sins, I dim you all with inky smother. | My pen shall be officious in this scene, | To let your hearts blood in a wicked vein; | . . . Behold your coal-black blood, my writing-ink, | My paper's poison'd meat, my pen's foul drink' (14.240–6). Following Hall, who notes that poets write in 'black condemning coal' (Book I, Satire III), and Marston, who refers to the satirist's 'ink-black fist' (Scourge, 322), Middleton associates blackness both with the satirist's caustic rebuke and with the evil he excoriates.

18 nebs the points of pens. Satirists conventionally described writing as an act of violence. In Skialetheia, for instance, Everard Guilpin figures satirical writing as a physical attack: 'Holding my pen, my Rapier in my fist: | I know I shall wide-gaping Momes convince' (Conclusion, 23–24).

20 Chasing old Envy from so young a work;
I, but the author's mouth, bid thee avault,
He more defies thy hate, thy hunt, thy haunt.
T.M. Gent.

The Author's Prologue

Book 1

Dismounted from the high-aspiring hills,
Which the all-empty airy kingdom fills,
5 Leaving the scorched mountains threat'ning heaven
From whence fell fiery rage my soul hath driven,
Passing the down-steep valleys all in haste,
Have tripped it through the woods; and now, at last,
Am veiled in a stony sanctuary,
10 To save my ire-stuffed soul lest it miscarry,
From threat'ning storms o'erturning verity,
That shames to see truth's refined purity.
Those open plains, those high sky-kissing mounts,
Where huffing winds cast up their airy accounts
15 Were too too open, shelter yielding none,
So that the blasts did tyrannize upon
The naked carcass of my heavy soul,
And with their fury all my all control.
But now, environed with a brazen tower,
20 I little dread their stormy raging power.
Witness this black defying embassy,

That wanders them before in majesty,
Undaunted of their bugbear threat'ning words,
Whose proud aspiring vaunts, time past records.
Now windy parasites or the slaves of wine,
25 That wind from all things save the truth divine,
Wind, turn, and toss into the depth of spite,
Your devilish venom cannot me affright.
It is a cordial of a candy taste,
I'll drink it up, and then let't run at waste—
30 Whose druggy lees mixed with the liquid flood
Of muddy fell defiance as it stood,—
I'll belch into your throats all open wide,
Whose gaping swallow nothing runs beside.
And if it venom, take it as you list:
35 He spites himself, that spites a satirist.

The First Book

Satire 1

Insatiate Cron

Cur eget indignus quisquam, te divite

Time was, when down-declining toothless age,
5 Was of a holy and divine presage,
Divining prudent and foretelling truth,
In sacred points instructing wand'ring youth.
But O detraction of our latter days,

20 but only

Prologue.2 Book 1 By referring to subsequent books, Middleton imitates and revises Hall's Virgideciarum, which advertised six books of satires but delivered only the first three. The remaining satires were published in the following year. But Middleton playfully alters the presentation of Hall's incomplete text in two important ways. First, he uses the reference to highlight the small size of his 'micro' collection. Hall's first three books included twenty-two satires, Horace's work contained two books of eighteen satires, and Marston's Scourge boasted three books of ten satires. By calling his readers' attention to the relative brevity of his six satires, Middleton creates the impression that he could write grand volumes if he so desired. While placing his work in relation to prominent satires, his allusion to further books issues a promise that his last satire teasingly cancels, for the sixth satire ends with the satirist blending into the fool who is 'carried away' by wit. The satire seems to be unexpectedly broken off in the middle. Such an ending, Middleton hints, appropriately signifies the trauma of satire in a world where the satirist's vantage point continuously erodes.

6 fell savage. Middleton imitates Marston's trademark fury, a style derived primarily from Juvenal.

11 verity truth. The speaker describes his descent from a place associated with both elevated thoughts and openness. He retreats to a secure site from which satire can be written, a place safe from both moral vice and critical pressures against expression (both of which can lead to the poet's 'miscarriage').

19 with within

23 brazen strong, as made of brass

23 bugbear imagined as dreadful

26 wind unfolds; turning and winding are words that indicate movement away from the straight and narrow; as the word 'error' means to turn. Middleton picks up on the word 'windy' in the preceding line.

28 affright frighten

31 lees the basest part, the dregs

33 belch The imagery of regurgitation is a subset of the more general body imagery common to satire, a genre obsessed with the vices of the flesh and the often violent curative procedures necessary to purge sin. Middleton deploys images of vomiting throughout Solomon.

35 venom is poisonous

36 satirist The original spelling 'Satyrlist' hints at the erroneous Renaissance etymology for the word, derived from the licentious goat-man satyr and signalling the satirist's beastly persona. See introduction.

1.3 Cron a shortened version of Cronus, the mythological Titan who rebelled against his father in order to gain power, or a pun on 'crone'. Satire One is one of the more difficult satires; it uses the cosmographical imagery of earth, heaven, and hell to establish the domain of devilish greed and its fallacies. The satire is more fragmentary than the next four because it rapidly moves through various sketches of the usurer and his foibles.

4 Cur...divite 'Why should any decent man be in need when you are rich?' (Horace, Satires, Book II. 2, 103). Horace's speaker is a poor peasant named Ofellus who argues for the simple life. In this passage, Ofellus urges a rich young man to share his wealth. The allusion to this particular satire is telling because Ofellus deploys dog imagery in representing the miser.

5 toothless harmonious; but also a common reference to satire. Hall's Virgideciarum, which is subtitled The First Three Books of Toothless Satires, opens its last book with the theme that establishes Middleton's first satire: 'Time was, and that was term'd the time of gold, | When world and time were young that now are old'. Hall's satire laments the passing of an age of natural simplicity into a time of wasteful luxury.

6 presage an utterance foretelling future events

- 10 How much from verity this age estrays!
Ranging the briery deserts of black sin,
Seeking a dismal cave to revel in.
This latter age, or member of that time
Of whom my snarling muse now thund'reth rhyme,
15 Wandered the brakes until a hidden cell
He found at length and still therein doth dwell.
The house of gain insatiate it is,
Which this hoar-agèd peasant deems his bliss.
O that desire might hunt amongst that fur!
20 It should go hard but he would loose a cur
To rouse the fox hid in a bramble bush,
Who frighteth conscience with a wry-mouthed 'Push!'
But what need I to wish or would it thus,
When I may find him starting at the Burse,
25 Where he infecteth other pregnant wits,
Making them co-heirs to his damnèd fits?
There may you see this writhen-facèd mass
Of rotten mould'ring clay, that prating ass
That riddles wonders (mere compact of lies) 30 Of heaven, of hell, of earth and of the skies.
Of heaven thus he reasons: heaven there's none,
Unless it be within his mansion.
O there is heaven. Why? Because there's gold,
That from the late to this last age controlled 35 The massy sceptre of earth's heavenly round,
Exiling forth her silver-pavèd bound
The leaders, brethren, brazen counterfeits
That in this golden age contempt begets.
'Vaunt then immortal I, I only king,
40 And golden god of this eternal being.'
Of hell Cimmerian thus Avarus reasons:
'Though hell be hot, yet it observeth seasons.'
Having within his kingdom residence,
O'er which his godhead hath preeminence, 45 An obscure angel of his heaven it is,

- Wherein's contained that hell-devouring bliss.
Into this hell sometimes an angel falls,
Whose white aspect black forlorn souls appalls,
And that is when a saint believing gold,
Old in that heaven, young in being old, 50
Falls headlong down into that pit of woe,
Fit for such damnèd creature's overthrow.
To make this public that obscurèd lies,
And more apparent vulgar secrecies,
To make this plain, harsh unto common wits, 55
Simplicity in common judgement sits.
This down-cast angel or declining saint
Is greedy Cron, when Cron makes his complaint,
For his poor creditors—fall'n to decay,
Being bankrupts—take heels and run away. 60
Then frantic Cron, galled to the very heart,
In some by-corner plays a devil's part,
Repining at the loss of so much pelf,
And in a humour goes and hangs himself.
So of a saint, a devil Cron is made. 65
The devil lov'd Cron, and Cron the devil's trade.
Thus may you see such angels often fall,
Making a working day a festival.
Now to the third point of his deity,
And that's th'earth, thus reasons credulity: 70
Credulous Cron, Cron credulous in all,
Swears that his kingdom is in general.
As he is regent of this heaven and hell,
So of the earth all others he'll expel.
The sky's at his dispose, the earth his own, 75
And (if Cron please) all must be overthrown.
Cron, Cron, advise thee, Cron with the copper nose,
And be not ruled so much by false suppose,
Lest Cron's professing holiness turn evil,
And of a false god prove a perfect devil. 80
I prithee, Cron, find out some other talk,

10 estrays strays

11 briery thorny

12 cave Cron's refuge uneasily echoes the satirist's own 'stony sanctuary' (Prologue.9)

15 brakes clumps of bushes

17 insatiate never satisfied

18 hoar-agèd white-haired. Middleton puns on 'age' when he shifts from a description of a righteous past age to the elderly Cron.

19–22 O... 'Push!' These lines are obscure, but they generally express a wish that the usurous fox, whose insidious goading tempts people to 'push' ahead greedily, could be routed out of his hiding place by correct desire. The speaker imagines that frightening the fox into action would give him a dose of his own medicine.

19 fur either a forest of fir-trees (picking up on 'brakes' in l. 15), or the typical usurer's garment which was lined with fur.

20 cur dog

21 bramble bush a briery shrub that the fox uses to entangle others, now serving as his defence

22 wry-mouthed with a twisted smile

24 Burse the Royal Exchange in London, a place of national and international financial trade

25 pregnant swelling

27 writhen-facèd contorted

28 mould'ring decaying

prating chattering or bragging

29 riddles used as a verb mere compact composed wholly

33–5 gold...round with a pun on the mythic golden age now literalized as money in the present time

36 bound boundary; gold exiles out of its limits the people listed in the next line; with a possible secondary meaning of 'bond' (lowly and base peasants) in which case 'bound' would refer not to the limits but to the exiled elements.

39 Vaunt boast

41 Cimmerian fabled place of intense darkness and gloom
Avarus Latin for avarice, with the accent on the second syllable

43 Having...residence Hell has residence within Avarice's heaven; this designation is part of Avarice's false reasoning that reinterprets the entire theological cosmology as within his domain of greed.

44 godhead divine nature

45 angel pun on a gold coin

48 appalls dims or fades, as well as dismays

59–60 For...away For Cron's suicide because of his creditors' flight, compare Trick 4.4.22–23.

63 Repining complaining

pelf money or property, usually tainted credulity Cron's over-readiness to believe

72 in general universal

77 copper nose brazen, rash; a red nose

caused by intemperance

78 suppose supposition

Make not the Burse a place for spirits to walk,—
 For doubtless if thy damnèd lies take place,
 Destruction follows; farewell, sacred grace.
 85 Th'Exchange for goodly merchants is appointed;
 'Why not for me?' says Cron, 'and mine anointed?
 Can merchants thrive and not the usurer nigh?
 Can merchants live without my company?'
 No, Cron helps all, and Cron hath help from none,
 90 What others have is Cron's, and Cron's his own.
 And Cron will hold his own, or't shall go hard,
 The devil will help him for a small reward.
 The devil's help—O 'tis a mighty thing!
 If he but say the word, Cron is a king.
 95 O then the devil is greater yet then he?
 I thought as much—the devil would master be.
 'And reason too,' saith Cron, 'for what care I,
 So I may live as God, and never die?'
 Yea, golden Cron, death will make thee away,
 100 And each dog, Cron, must have a dying day.
 And with this resolution I bequeath thee
 To God or to the devil, and so I leave thee.

Satire 2

Prodigal Zodon

Who knows not Zodon? Zodon, what is he?
 The true born child of insatiety.
 5 If true born, when? If born at all, say where?
 Where conscience begged in worst time of the year.
 His name young Prodigal, son to greedy gain,

Let blood by folly in a contrary vein.
 For scraping Cron, seeing he needs must die,
 Bequeathèd all to prodigality. 10
 The will once proved and he possessed of all,
 Who then so gallant as young Prodigal?
 Mounted aloft on flattering fortune's wings,
 Where like a nightingale secure he sings,
 15 Floating on seas of scarce prosperity,
 Engirt with pleasure's sweet tranquillity.
 Suit upon suit, satin too too base,—
 Velvet, laid on with gold or silver lace,
 A mean man doth become, but he must ride
 In cloth of finèd gold, and by his side 20
 Two footmen at the least, with choice of steeds,
 Attirèd when he rides in gorgeous weeds.
 Zodon must have his chariot gilded o'er,
 And when he triumphs, four bare before
 25 In pure white satin to usher out his way
 To make him glorious on his progress day.
 Vail bonnet he that doth not passing by,
 Admiring on that sun-enriching sky,
 Two days encaged at least in strongest hold;
 Storm he that list, he scorns to be controlled. 30
 What, is it lawful that a mounted beggar
 May uncontrolled thus bear sway and swagger?—
 A base-born issue of a baser sire,
 Bred in a cottage, wand'ring in the mire
 With nailèd shoes and whipstaff in his hand, 35
 Who with a 'hey and ree' the beasts command,
 And being seven years practised in that trade,

85 Th'Exchange the Burse or Royal Exchange
 87 usurer someone who lends money with interest; one of the main targets of satire and social critique in early modern England. The devilish Cron here coyly points to the often unacknowledged relationship between demonized usurers and the more socially-acceptable rising merchant class.
 100 And...day a bleak revision of the proverb: 'Every dog has his day' (Tilley, D464). This dog imagery hearkens back to the motto on the title-page and the title.
 101-2 And...thee This section appropriately ends with the satirist's mock legacy, which counters Cron's reluctance to accept his mortality and draw up a will, and which sets up the next satire in which Cron has unwisely bequeathed his money to the spendthrift Zodon.
 2.2 Zodon The extravagant heir is a theme treated by Hall in Book IV, Satire II of Virgidemiarum, Rankins in Seven Satires, and Marston in the third satire of The Scourge of Villainy. Irwin speculates that Zodon refers to the Greek phrase for a carved or painted figure. The second satire is clearly concerned with preserving established socioeconomic divisions within the social order, as it denounces the extravagance and lechery of the unlicensed social climber.

 8 Let blood medical practice whereby blood was drained in order to balance the humours that constituted bodily fluids. Middleton uses the image of a mistaken blood-letting to indicate Cron's fallacy in leaving money to the spendthrift Zodon.
 9 scraping miserly
 16 Engirt encircled
 17-18 Suit...lace clothing imagery signals Zodon's inappropriate presumption to class status. Sumptuary laws regulated the clothing that each class could wear. Zodon's finery indicates his attempt to ignore such laws and climb above his station. Zodon far surpasses the ostentatious people that Hall mocks for wearing 'satin sleeves' (Book III, Satire IV). Throughout the poem, Middleton uses clothing imagery to signal various improprieties—for instance, Superbia's over-investment in her gown in Satire 3 and Pyander's transvestism in Satire 5.
 19 mean lowly become become himself, suffice for himself

 22 weeds clothes
 23 gilded painted gold
 24 triumphs to enter a city victoriously in a lavish procession. Middleton authored a series of pageants called Triumphs designed for use in the civic life of London.
bare horses without saddles
 26 progress a ceremonial procession or journey by a king of queen; picking up on the pageant imagery from l. 24
 27 Vail to tip a hat in deference. This expression is seen, for instance, in Book III, Satire V of Virgidemiarum when Hall mocks the exaggerated courtesy of the gallant who keeps 'his bonnet vailed' (60). Middleton here suggests that Zodon will strenuously punish anyone who neglects to show respect for him.
 30 list desires
 35 nailèd shoes cheap shoes. In Black Book Middleton uses the image of the 'hard nailly soles' of swains' shoes in order to signal their plodding natures (84).
 36 'hey and ree' Irwin: 'terms used in driving horses, oxen, etc: "hey" (haw)—turn to the left; "ree" (gee)—turn to the right'

At seven years' end by Tom a journey's made Unto the city of fair Troynovant,
 40 Where through extremity of need and want
 He's forced to trot with fardel at his back
 From house to house, demanding if they lack
 A poor young man that's willing to take pain
 And mickle labour, though for little gain.
 45 Well, some kind Trojan, thinking he hath grace, Keeps him himself or gets some other place.
 The world now—God be thankèd!—'s well amended:
 Want, that erewhile did want, is now befriended,
 And scraping Cron hath got a world of wealth.
 50 Now what of that? Cron's dead. Where's all his pelf?
 Bequeathèd to young Prodigal. That's well:
 His god hath left him, and he's fled to hell.
 See, golden souls, the end of ill-got gain!
 Read and mark well; to do the like refrain.
 55 This youthful gallant, like the prince of pleasure,
 Floating on golden seas of earthly treasure
 (Treasure ill-got by minist'ring of wrong),
 Made a fair show, but endur'd not long.
 Ill-got, worse spent; gotten by deceit,
 60 Spent on lascivious wantons which await
 And hourly expect such prodigality,
 Lust-breathing lechers given to venery.
 No day expired but Zodon hath his trull.
 He hath his tit, and she likewise her gull.
 65 Gull he, trull she: O 'tis a gallant age!
 Men may have hackneys of good carriage,
 Provided that there rain a golden shower.
 Then come whos' will at the appointed hour.
 Hour me no hours; hours break no square.

38 journey's journeyman's; a journeyman is an employee who can earn wages after a period of apprenticeship; but also a pun on the journey undertaken to London (Troynovant), both of which signal potentially disruptive social shifts
 39 Troynovant nickname for London, because supposedly founded by Brutus the Trojan. The myth of Troy surfaces frequently in Renaissance dramatists' descriptions of London.
 41 fardel bundle or parcel 42 demanding asking
 44 mickle great quantity
 45 Trojan see above, 2.39
 47 The... amended proverbial: 'The world is well amended with him' (Tilley, W902), used sarcastically to indicate Zodon's inflated importance
 53 ill-got gain proverbial: 'Ill-gotten goods never prosper'; 'Ill-gotten gods thrive not to the third heir' (Tilley, G301, G305).
 62 Lust-breathing excited by lust. Irwin points to Shakespeare's Rape of Lucrece (1594): 'Lust-breathèd Tarquin leaves the Roman host' (3).
venery lechery
 63 trull prostitute or concubine
 64 tit young woman of loose character

gull dupe
 66 hackneys horses for hire; slang for prostitutes or other people who rent themselves for cash
 68 whos' whosoever
 68-9 hour... square make me no set timetables, for hours are unimportant. 'Break no square' was a common phrase for 'ought not to matter'.
 70 rain with a pun on reign 74 banishèd banished from stews red-light districts
 77 bravery finery
 3.2 Superbia in excess. The haughty and overly-materialistic woman is the subject of much Renaissance literature. In making woman the figure of pride, Middleton contributes to the well-worn convention of aligning women with rampant consumerism and narcissism. In Marlowe's parade of seven deadly sins in Doctor Faustus, for instance, Pride identifies himself in two central ways: through his imitation of a lady's extravagant fashions and thus his conquest of her naked body, and through his haughty demands to be pampered (vi.114-122).

Where gold doth rain, be sure to find them there. 70
 Well, Zodon hath his pleasure: he hath gold,
 Young in his golden age, in sin too old.—
 Now he wants gold; all his treasure's done.
 He's banishèd the stews; pity finds none.
 Rich yesterday in wealth, this day as poor, 75
 Tomorrow like to beg from door to door.
 See, youthful spendthrifts, all your bravery
 Even in a moment turned to misery.

Satire 3

Insolent Superbia

List, ye profane fair painted images,
 Predestinated by the destinies
 At your first being to fall eternally 5
 Into Cimmerian black obscurity.
 Ill-favoured idols, pride's anatomy,
 Foul-coloured puppets, balls of infamy,
 Whom zealous souls do racket to and fro,
 Sometimes aloft ye fly, otherwhiles below, 10
 Banded into the air's loose continent,
 Where hard upbearing winds hold parliament.
 For such is the force of down-declining sin,
 Where our short-feathered peacocks wallow in,
 That when sweet motions urge them to aspire 15
 They are so bathèd o'er by sweet desire
 In the odiferous fountain of sweet pleasure,
 Wherein delight hath all embalmed her treasure—
 I mean where sin, the mistress of disgrace,
 Hath residence and her abiding place. 20
 And sin, though it be foul, yet fair in this,

3 List listen
 4 Predestinated predestined
 6 Cimmerian see 1.41
 7 anatomy medical term for dissection applied metaphorically to the act of laying something bare. Here Superbia strips away the surface of Pride to expose it explicitly and thoroughly. The title of Stephen Gosson's Anatomy of Abuses is a common example of how the term signalled an exhaustive description or an exposure of something hidden.
 8 puppets dolls, commonly used contemptuously to describe women who use cosmetics. See Guilpin's Skialetheia: 'Why they are Idols, Puppets, Exchange babies, | And yet (thou fool) tak'st them for goodly Ladies' (Satire II, 11-12).
balls tennis balls conventionally imply inconstancy, as they are linked to the vicissitudes of fortune. In this passage, Superbia travels aimlessly on the whims of her own self-gratification.
 11 continent space
 12 upbearing supportive
 14 peacocks creatures concerned with excessive display
 17 odiferous fragrant

- In being painted with a show of bliss.
 For what more happy creature to the eye
 Than is Superbia in her bravery?
 25 Yet who more foul disrobèd of attire?—
 Pearled with the botch as children burnt with fire,
 That for their outward cloak upon the skin,
 Worsen enormities abound within.
 Look they to that; truth tells them their amiss, 30 And in this glass, all-telling truth it is.
 When welcome spring had clad the hills in green
 And pretty whistling birds were heard and seen,
 Superbia abroad 'gan take her walk
 With other peacocks for to find her talk.
 35 Kyron, that in a bush lay closely couched,
 Heard all their chat, and how it was avouched.
 'Sister,' says one, and softly packed away,
 'In what fair company did you dine to day?'—
 40 'Mongst gallant dames'—and then she wipes her lips,
 Placing both hands upon her whalebone hips,
 Puffed up with a round circling farthingale;
 That done, she 'gins go forward with her tale:
 'Sitting at table carved of walnut tree,
 45 All coverèd with damasked napery,
 Garnished with salts of pure beaten gold,
 Whose silver-plated edge of rarest mould
 Moved admiration in my searching eye
 To see the goldsmith's rich artifice;
 The butler's placing of his manchets white,
 50 The plated cupboard, for our more delight,
 Whose golden beauty glancing from on high Illuminated other chambers nigh;
 The slowly pacing of the servingmen
 Which were appointed to attend us then,
 55 Holding in either hand a silver dish
 Of costly cates of far-fetched dainty fish,
 Until they do approach the table nigh,
- Where the appointed carver carefully
 Dischargeth them of their full-freighted hands,
 Which instantly upon the table stands. 60
 The music sweet, which all that while did sound,
 Ravish the hearers, and their sense confound.
 This done, the master of that sumptuous feast
 In order 'gins to place his welcome guest.
 Beauty first seated in a throne of state, 65
 Unmatchable, disdainig other mate,
 Shone like the sun, whereon mine eyes still gazed,
 Feeding on her perfections that amazed.
 But O her silver-framèd coronet
 With low down-dangling spangles all beset, 70
 Her sumptuous periwig, her curious curls,
 Her high-prized necklace of entrailèd pearls,
 Her precious jewels wondrous to behold,
 Her basest gem framed of the purest gold!
 O I could kill my self for very spite, 75
 That my dim stars give not so clear a light.
 Heart-burning ire new kindled bids despair,
 Since beauty lives in her, and I want fair.
 O had I died in youth, or not been born,
 Rather than live in hate, and die forlorn. 80
 And die I will—' Therewith she drew a knife
 To kill herself, but Kyron saved her life.
 See here, proud puppets, high-aspiring evils,
 Scarce any good, most of you worse than devils,
 Excellent in ill, ill in advising well, 85
 Well in that's worst, worse than the worst in hell.
 Hell is stark blind; so blind most women be,
 Blind, and yet not blind when they should not see.
 Fine Madam Tiptoes in her velvet gown,
 That quotes her paces in characters down, 90
 Valuing each step that she had made that day,
 Worth twenty shillings in her best array.
 And why, forsooth, some little dirty spot

22 painted In condemning them for their use of cosmetics, Renaissance writers conventionally transformed women into a central emblem of hypocrisy and duplicity. The second satire of Guilpin's Skialetheia is devoted entirely to this subject.
 26 Pearled ornamented, sprinkled with pearl-like shapes
botch boils and sores
 30 glass The speaker follows medieval convention in holding up a mirror to the vices of the age. Interestingly the satirist's use of the glass to expose vice resembles one of the vices themselves: women's conventional association with vanity.
 31 clad dressed
 35 Kyron Irwin suggests that the name alludes to Chiron, the centaur who trained various mythological figures to be heroes; here used parodically to underscore Superbia's failed moral education.

 37 packed away to bring a fellow conspirator into a plot; here to incite Superbia
 40 whalebone the material used to stiffen the midriff of women's dresses
 41 farthingale hooped petticoat
 44 damasked richly-figured designs, usually on fine cloth napery table linen
 45 salts salt shakers
 49 manchets loaves of the finest wheat bread
 50 plated cupboard a sideboard either overlaid with a thin trim of gold or silver, or used to hold the china
 56 cates delicacies
 64 guest guests
 69 coronet decorative headdress
 71 periwig wig
 72 entrailèd entwined
 74 basest cheapest 78 want fair lack beauty; 'fair', or light-coloured features, is the ideal of feminine beauty during this time

 83 puppets contemptuous term for people, usually women, suggesting that they are dressed like dolls
 89 Tiptoes Middleton shifts here to a related character sketch about Lady Tiptoes, whose name indicates her disdain and haughtiness. In The Scourge of Villainy Marston uses the term to indicate presumption: 'O how on tip-toes proudly mounts my muse! | Stalking a loftier gait than satires use' (Satire III, 362). In Christ's Tears over Jerusalem Thomas Nashe calls forth a similar image: 'Delicacy is the sin of our London Dames. So delicate are they in diet, so dainty and pulling fine in their speech, so tiptoe-nice in treading on the earth' (Works, II, 144-45).
 90 quotes...down remembers in detail her steps and writes them down

Hath fell upon her gown or petticoat.
 95 Perhaps that nothing much, or something little,
 Nothing in many's view, in hers a mickle,
 Doth thereon surfeit, and some day or two
 She's passing sick, and knows not what to do.
 The poor handmaid, seeing her mistress wed
 100 To frantic sickness, wishes she were dead,
 Or that her devilish tyrannizing fits
 May mend, and she enjoy her former wits.
 For whilst that Health thus counterfeits Not-well,
 Poor Here-at-Hand lives in the depth of hell.
 105 'Where is this baggage? where's this girl? what ho!
 Quoth she, 'was ever woman troubled so?
 What, hussy Nan!' And then she 'gins to brawl.
 Then in comes Nan, 'Sooth mistress did you call?'— 'Out on thee, quean! now by the living God'— 110 And then she strikes, and on the wench lays load.
 Poor silly maid, with finger in the eye,
 Sighing and sobbing takes all patiently.
 Nimble Affection, stung to the very heart
 To see her fellow mate sustain such smart, 115 Flies to the Burse gate for a match or two,
 And salves th'amiss, there is no more to do.
 Quickfooted kindness, quick as itself thought,
 With that well-pleasing news but lately bought
 By love's assiduate care and industry,
 120 Into the chamber runs immediately,
 Where she unloads the freight of sweet content.
 The haggler pleased doth rise incontinent.
 Then thought of sickness is not thought upon;
 Care hath no being in her mansion.
 125 But former peacock pride, grand insolence,
 Even in the highest thought hath residence.
 But it on tiptoe stands: Well, what of that?
 It is more prompt to fall and ruinate.
 And fall it will when death's shrill clamorous bell
 130 Shall summon you unto the depth of hell.
 Repent, proud princocks. Cease for to aspire,
 Or die to live with pride in burning fire.

104 Here-at-Hand nickname for her maid
 109 quean ill-behaved and impudent woman
 111 finger in the eye derisive term for weeping
 113 Nimble Affection probably a fellow maid
 115 match Dyce glosses this as 'pattern', meaning a piece of cloth, but Irwin suggests that it could imply as well a love match, a morsel of gossip.
 119 assiduate constant
 121 unloads pronounced 'unlades'
 122 incontinent without self-restraint
 131 princocks a proud, conceited and pert young boy. In abruptly shifting from Superbia as a feminized figure of pride to the masculine coxcomb, Middleton anticipates the gender-crossing created by Pyander's 'painted' counterfeiting in Satire 5.

 4.2 Droone a loafer, someone idle
 4 more...chameleon proverbial. See Tilley, C221.
 5 jets struts or parades
 7 mantle conceal
 9 hoary grey-haired
 9 Paul's the courtyard of St Paul's Cathedral, scene of commerce and social gathering 12 angels coins, with a common pun on losing virtue 13 his the gentleman's
 15 far-fet far-fetched
 21 wot know

Satire 4

Cheating Droone

There is a cheater by profession
 That takes more shapes than the chameleon.
 Sometimes he jets it in a black furred gown,
 5 And that is when he harbours in the town.
 Sometimes a cloak to mantle hoary age,
 Ill-favoured like an ape in spiteful rage,
 And then he walks in Paul's a turn or two,
 To see by cheating what his wit can do.
 10 Perhaps he'll tell a gentlemen a tale
 Will cost him twenty angels in the sale,
 But if he know his purse well-lined within,
 And by that means he cannot finger him,
 He'll proffer him such far-fet courtesy 15 That shortly in a tavern neighb'ring by
 He hath engaged the silly gentleman,
 To whom he proffers service all he can.
 'Sir, I perceive you are of gentle blood;
 Therefore I will our cates be new and good.
 20 For well I wot, the country yieldeth plenty,
 And as they diverse be, so are they dainty.
 May it please you then a while to rest you merry?
 Some cates I will make choice of and not tarry.'
 The silly cony blithe and merrily
 25 Doth for his kindness thank him heartily.
 Then hies the cheater very hastily
 And with some peasant, where he is in fee,
 Juggles, that dinner being almost ended,
 He in a matter of weight may then be friended.
 30 The peasant, for an angel then in hand,
 Will do whate'er his worship shall command,
 And yields, that when a reckoning they call in,
 To make reply there's one to speak with him.
 The plot is laid. Now comes the cheater back, 35 And calls in haste for such things as they lack.
 The table freighted with all dainty cates,
 Having well fed, they fall to pleasant chats,
 Discoursing of the mickle difference
 40 'Twixt perfect truth and painted eloquence.

25 cony dupe. 'Cony-catching' pamphlets describing the ruses and tricks of rogues were popular at the turn of the century. Middleton's fourth satire partakes more of this genre than of traditional satire. Here as in the most prominent cony-catching works—Robert Greene's A Disputation Between a He Cony-Catcher and a She Cony-Catcher, The Black Book's Messenger, and The Defence of Cony-Catching—the writer exposes with relish the ingenious practices of the cheater.
 27 hies hastens
 28 in fee beholden to; from a medieval term indicating feudal obligation
 29 Juggles plays tricks, plans to cheat
 38 chats pronounced 'chates'

Plain truth that harbours in the country swain,
 The cony stands defendant; the cheater's vein
 Is to uphold an eloquent smooth tongue,
 To be truth's orator righting every wrong.
 45 Before the cause concluded took effect,
 In comes a crew of fiddling knaves abject,
 The very refuse of that rabble rout,
 Half shoes upon their feet torn round about—
 Save little Dick the dapper singing knave.
 50 He had a threadbare coat to make him brave, (God knows, scarce worth a tester, if it were Valued at most; of seven it was too dear).
 Well, take it as they list, Shakerag came in,
 Making no doubt but they would like of him,
 55 An 'twere but for his person, a pretty lad,
 Well-qualified, having a singing trade.
 Well, so it was the cheater must be merry,
 And he a song must have, called 'hey-down-derry'.
 So Dick begins to sing; the fiddlers play.
 60 The melancholy cony replies, 'Nay, nay,
 No more of this!' The other bids, 'Play on!
 'Tis good our spirits should something work upon—Tut, gentle sir; be pleasant, man,' quoth he,
 'Yours be the pleasure; mine the charge shall be.
 65 This do I for the love of gentlemen.
 Hereafter happily if we meet again,
 I shall of you expect like courtesy,
 Finding fit time and opportunity.'
 'Or else I were ungrateful,' quoth the cony, 70 'It shall go hard, but we will find some money,
 For some we have, that some well used gets more,
 And so in time we shall increase our store.'
 'Mean time', said he, 'employ it to good use,

For time ill-spent doth purchase time's abuse.'
 With that, more wine he calls for, and intends 75 That either of them carouse to all their friends.
 The cony nods the head, yet says not 'Nay!'
 Because the other would the charge defray.
 The end tries all, and here begins the jest,
 My gentleman betook him to his rest.
 80 Wine took possession of his drowsy head,
 And cheating Droone hath brought the fool to bed.
 The fiddlers were discharged and all things whist,
 Then pilf'ring Droone 'gan use him as he list.
 Ten pounds he finds, the reckoning he doth pay,
 85 And with the residue passeth sheer away.
 Anon the cony wakes, his coin being gone,
 He exclaims against dissimulation.
 But 'twas too late; the cheater had his prey.
 Be wise, young heads: care for an afterday. 90

Satire 5

Ingling Pyander

Age hath his infant youth, old trees their sprigs, O'erspreading branches their inferior twigs.
 Old beldam hath a daughter or a son,
 5 True born or illegitimate, all's one.
 Issue she hath. The father? ask you me?
 The house wide open stands; her lodging's free.
 Admit myself for recreation
 Sometimes did enter her possession,
 10 It argues not that I have been the man
 That first kept revels in that mansion.
 No, no, the haggling common place is old;
 The tenement hath oft been bought and sold.

41 swain gentleman; here suggesting the simple man 42 stands defendant offers a defence of 47 rabble rout disorderly crowd
 49 dapper trim and neat
 50 brave handsome in appearance
 51 tester slang term for a sixpence
 53 Shakerag a beggarly and disreputable person
 55 An If
 58 'hey-down-derry' both a common refrain and a tune, often associated in seventeenth-century songbooks and ballads with frivolous and bawdy songs
 71 that some a pun on 'sum'
 78 defray pay
 79 tries determines 83 whist silenced
 84 pilf'ring thieving
 90 Be... afterday In compressing the entire moral lesson into this final line, the speaker reveals his departure from conventional satire. Interestingly, he seems to forget his role as righteous commentator for most of the poem and to neglect the moral that justifies his rollicking description of vice.

 5.2 Ingling An ingling was a sodomite, hermaphrodite, or someone who engaged in homosexual practices. When the term was used more generally to suggest trickery, fondling, or cozening, it still carried this sexual connotation. Marston's satires refer numerous times to the lustful gallant's boy-lover, and to the English love of dainty fashions that filled the London streets with apparent hermaphrodites (Pygmalion, Satires II and III; and Scourge, Satires III, VII and VIII). See also Weever's poem on Pontus, the woman-man (Epigrams, Fifth Week, 14); William Rankins's satire on the duplicitous practices of inglers (Seven Satires, 30–31); Brathwaite's dedication to catamites in Strappado for the Devil; and Donne's reference to the 'prostitute boy' in his first satire. Middleton lists inglers in his array of vices in Black Book (339).

 5 beldam old woman, with slightly pejorative meaning
 9 Admit meaning 'I admitted myself into the house' or 'I do admit that I did enter'
 13 haggling wrangling, suggesting perhaps the bickering over prices common in such a house common place with a pun on 'commonplace', a truism 14 tenement house, usually rented

- 15 'Tis rotten now ('earth to earth, dust to dust').
Sodom's on fire, and consume it must,
And wanting second reparations
Pluto hath seized the poor reversions.
But that hereafter worlds may truly know
20 What hemlocks and what rue there erst did grow,
As it is Satan's usual policy,
He left an issue of like quality,
The still memorial, if I aim aright,
Is a pale chequered black hermaphrodite.
25 Sometimes he jets it like a gentleman,
Otherwhiles much like a wanton courtesan.
But truth to tell a man or woman whether,
I cannot say, she's excellent in either.
But if report may certify a truth,
30 She's neither of either, but a cheating youth.
Yet Troynovant, that all-admirèd town,
Where thousands still do travel up and down,
Of beauty's counterfeits affords not one
So like a lovely smiling paragon
35 As is Pyander in a nymph's attire,
Whose rolling eye sets gazers' hearts on fire,
Whose cherry lip, black brow and smiles procure
Lust-burning buzzards to the tempting lure.
What, shall I cloak sin with a coward fear, 40 And suffer not Pyander's sin appear?
I will, I will.—Your reason?—Why, I'll tell,
Because time was I loved Pyander well.
True love indeed will hate love's black defame;
So loathes my soul to seek Pyander's shame.
45 O but I feel the worm of conscience sting,
And summons me upon my soul to bring Sinful Pyander into open view,
- There to receive the shame that will ensue.
O this sad passion of my heavy soul
Torments my heart and senses do control. 50
Shame thou, Pyander, for I can but shame;
The means of my amiss by thy means came.
And shall I then procure eternal blame
By secret cloaking of Pyander's shame,
And he not blush? 55
By heaven I will not! I'll not burn in hell
For false Pyander, though I loved him well.
No, no, the world shall know thy villainy,
Lest they be cheated with like roguery.
Walking the city as my wonted use, 60
There was I subject to this foul abuse;
Troubled with many thoughts pacing along,
It was my chance to shoulder in a throng,
Thrust to the channel I was, but crowding her,
I spied Pyander in a nymph's attire. 65
No nymph more fair than did Pyander seem,
Had not Pyander then Pyander been.
No lady with a fairer face more graced,
But that Pyander's self himself defaced.
Never was boy so pleasing to the heart 70
As was Pyander for a woman's part.
Never did woman foster such another,
As was Pyander, but Pyander's mother.
Fool that I was in my affection,
More happy I had it been a vision. 75
So far entangled was my soul by love
That force perforce I must Pyander prove,
The issue of which proof did testify
Ingling Pyander's damnèd villainy.
I loved indeed and to my mickle cost; 80

15 'earth . . . dust' See the penalty exacted on Adam when ousted from the garden of Eden: 'In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground, for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return' (Genesis 3:19). The Book of Common Prayer paraphrases this verse in its instructions for 'The Burial of the Dead': 'I commend thy soul to God, the almighty, and thy body to the ground—earth to earth, ashes to ashes, dust to dust'.

16 Sodom's Sodom was the famous Biblical city of wickedness destroyed by God because of its sexual corruption (see Genesis 18–19). Bredbeck describes how Renaissance writers frequently allude to Sodom to conjure up a host of sexual sins that threaten the integrity of the social world, but he emphasizes the danger of erasing the specific homoerotic meanings implied by the term. The reference to Sodom indicates that this satire is not just about Pyander's gender trickery, but also concerned with homosexuality.

18 Pluto god of Hades, the underworld for the dead

reversions the return of an estate to its original owner after the holder's death; the remainder or legacy

20 hemlocks poisonous plants

rue plant associated with bitterness and contrition

22 issue offspring

23 still secret; but also continuing

24 pale chequered black contrast of colours on either Pyander's clothing or his face

hermaphrodite both male and female

27–8 But . . . either Compare Marston's call for clarification in Pygmalion: 'lay the substance out, | Or else, fair Briscus, I shall stand in doubt | What sex thou art, since such hermaphrodites, | Such Protean shadows so delude our sights' (Satire II, 274).

31 Troynovant see 2.39

34 paragon thing of supreme excellence

36 rolling eye wandering eye; often represented as a seductive and dangerous quality of feminine beauty. See, for instance, Shakespeare's Sonnet 20 where the poet's praise for his beloved is similarly implicated in a story of gender confusion: 'A woman's face, with nature's own hand painted | Hast thou, the master-mistress of my passion; | A woman's gentle heart, but not acquainted | With shifting change as if false women's fashion; | An eye more bright than theirs, less false in rolling, | Gilding the object whereupon it gazeth'. Adams compares this line to Ghost of Lucrece: 'Raging to see beauty's enrolled themes | Writ in her eye-rolls' (624–5).

55 And . . . blush? the only partial line in the text, used to accentuate the confession and resolve of the satirist

59 roguery trickery, mischief

60 wanted customary

63 shoulder to rub shoulders, move between people

throng crowd

64 channel sewer

77 force perforce of necessity; because of a peculiarly binding power

prove test (sexually)

I loved Pyander, so my labour lost.
 Fair words I had, for store of coin I gave,
 But not enjoyed the fruit I thought to have.
 O so I was besotted with her words,— 85 His words, that no part of a she affords;
 For had he been a she, injurious boy,
 I had not been so subject to annoy.
 A plague upon such filthy gullery!
 The world was ne'er so drunk with mockery.
 90 Rash-headed cavaliers, learn to be wise,
 And if you needs will do, do with advice.
 Tie not affection to each wanton smile,
 Lest doting fancy truest love beguile.
 Trust not a painted puppet as I have done,
 95 Who far more doted than Pygmalion.
 The streets are full of juggling parasites
 With the true shape of virgins' counterfeits,
 But if of force you must a hackney hire,
 Be curious in your choice; the best will tire.
 100 The best is bad; therefore hire none at all.
 Better to go on foot than ride and fall.

Satire 6

Wise Innocent

'Way for an innocent, ho!'—'What, a pure fool?'—
 'Not so, pure ass'—'Ass, where went you to school?'—
 'With innocents.'—'That makes the fool to prate.'— 5
 'Fool, will you any? Yes, the fool shall ha't.'—
 'Wisdom, what shall he have?'—'The fool, at least.
 Provender for the ass, ho! Stalk up the beast!'—
 'What, shall we have a railing Innocent?'—
 'No, gentle gull, a wise man's precedent.'— 10
 'Then forward, Wisdom!'—'Not without I list;
 Twenty to one, this fool's some satirist.'—
 'Still doth the fool haunt me. Fond fool be gone!'—
 'No, I will stay, the fool to gaze upon.'—
 'Well, fool, stay still.'—'Still shall the fool stay? No!'— 15
 'Then pack simplicity.'—'Good Innocent, why so?'—
 'Nor go nor stay: what will the fool do then?'—
 'Vex him that seems to vex all other men!'—
 'It is impossible; streams that are barred their course
 Swell with more rage and far more greater force 20

81 labour lost proverbial phrase (Tilley, L9), punning also on the sexual meaning of 'labour'

83 But... have This line leaves somewhat ambiguous the exact extent of Pyander's 'trial'. Either the speaker did not find sexual gratification at all because of Pyander's sex, or the speaker merely did not find the kind of sexual gratification that he expected.

84 besotted infatuated

90 cavaliers swaggering sprightly gentlemen

91 do have sexual relations

95 Pygmalion mythic artist who fell in love with the statue that he created. His story is detailed in Ovid's general account of sexual perversities in Metamorphoses. The speaker here asserts the strength of his devotion by referring to Pygmalion, who often exemplified the persistent lover. But Middleton secondarily follows Renaissance sonnet writers who use this myth to evoke intensely frustrated desire. Influenced by Marston's The Metamorphosis of Pygmalion's Image, in which the central character finds himself 'deceived' because he believes the object of his desire to be a 'real' woman (101), Middleton represents his speaker as an unfulfilled but equally ardent Pygmalion. Middleton also implicitly refers to the literary controversy surrounding Marston's Pygmalion: Marston claimed that his text parodies Ovidian poetry, while others read it as unironic, and accused him of contradicting his own denunciations of lust. This reference is thus appropriate for a speaker who rails at the hermaphrodite boy that he himself has desired.

98 hackney prostitute (see 2.66); because the phrase denotes a horse for hire, it suggests the bawdy connotations of riding

99 curious careful, discriminating tire weary

6.2 Wise foolish. This obscure satire is written as a mock dialogue between an innocent and a satirist, in which the two speakers play with the terms 'fool', 'innocent', and 'ass' in their debate over who is truly the fool. By having a character step forth to challenge the poet who has written the previous five satirical pieces, this poem self-consciously emphasizes the satirist's precarious moral ground. As the satire continues, it becomes almost impossible to distinguish the speakers.

Innocent someone deficient in intelligence or sense. When the Innocent introduces himself in the opening lines, however, he intends the term to mean someone guileless.

5 prate chatter; echoing Proverbs 10:8: 'The wise in heart will receive commandments: but a prating fool shall fall.' Marston similarly closes his book of satires by echoing a phrase from this verse: 'Lord, how I laugh to hear the pretty fool | How it will prate!' (Scourge, Satire XI, 380).

6 'Fool... ha't.' The Innocent answers his own question by suggesting that the real fool will indeed receive some of his words

8 Provender provisions. Middleton uses this word to establish the satire's playful puns on packing, carrying and bearing—all of which suggest the burden endured by the person who has to listen to the fool. (See 16, 31–3, and 38.) The

Innocent also alludes to the proverb, 'a proud horse that will not carry his own provender' (Tilley, H683), suggesting that the Satirist must dispense with his pride and take on the intellectual equipment he needs in order to carry out his tasks.

Stalk The central meaning here is to stock or provide goods, but the word also suggests other meanings: to pursue stealthily and to walk with stiff, high and haughty steps. With this command, the Innocent sarcastically calls for preparations for the burdensome task of having the fool unleash his thoughts.

11 list listen

17 'Nor... then?' Through his exasperated response, the satirist pretends that the Innocent's designation of the satirist as a fool in fact only constitutes his refusal to leave or stay.

19–20 streams... force A common Renaissance image suggesting that prohibition increases desire. See Shakespeare's Rape of Lucrece when Tarquin tells Lucrece that her protests merely increase his desire to rape her: 'my uncontrolled tide | Turns not, but swells the higher by this let [barrier]' (645–46). Indirectly alluding to Juvenal's famous credo, 'Difficile est saturnam non scribere' (it is difficult not to write satire), the speaker uses this image to explain the involuntary nature of his writing. Citing Juvenal explicitly, Marston similarly claims: 'I cannot hold... my rage must freely run' (Scourge, Satire II, 311–12). The text's allusion to prohibition increases the irony of Microcynicon's subsequent censorship and the prohibition on satire-writing.

Until their full-stuffed gorge a passage makes
 Into the wide maws of more scopious lakes.
 Spite me? Not spite itself can discontent
 My steelèd thoughts or breed disparagement.
 25 Had pale-faced coward fear been resident
 Within the bosom of me, Innocent,
 I would have housed me from the eyes of ire,
 Whose bitter spleen vomits forth flames of fire.’—
 ‘A resolute ass! O for a spurring rider,
 30 A brace of angels!’—‘What? Is the fool a briber?
 Is not the ass yet weary of his load?’—
 ‘What? With once bearing of the fool abroad?
 Mount again, fool!’—‘Then the ass will tire
 And leave the fool to wallow in the mire.’—

‘Dost thou think otherwise?’—‘Good ass, then, be gone!’—
 ‘I stay but till the Innocent get on.’— ‘What, wilt thou needs of the fool bereave me?
 Then pack, good foolish ass, and so I leave thee.’

35

Epilogue to the last Satire of the First book

Thus may we see by folly oft the wise
 Stumble and fall into fool’s paradise,
 For jocund wit of force must jangling be.
 Wit must have his will, and so had he.
 Wit must have his will, yet parting of the fray
 Wit was enjoined to carry the fool away.

5

Qui color albus erat, nunc est contrarius albo

FINIS

- 21 gorge narrow ravine, but also implying a vomiting forth of matter 22 maws voracious stomach-like space scopious spacious 27 housed sheltered
 29 rider gold coin embossed with the image of a horseman
 30 brace a couple, with possible puns on the spiritual embrace which lends security and defence (another meaning for brace)
briber either an extortioner or a general term for a scoundrel
 31–2 Is . . . abroad? alludes to the proverb: ‘the wise man must carry the fool upon his shoulders’ (Apperson, 697)
 31 load the Innocent’s term for the speaker’s diatribe, which the Satirist interprets in the next lines as his burdensome task of carrying the listener by having to explain the world to him
 35–8 ‘Dost . . . thee.’ Although the Innocent probably has the last word in sending the Satirist away, the speakers in these

- lines cannot with any certainty be assigned. Instead Middleton deliberately ends his satire with the Satirist blending indistinguishably into one of his targets.
 37 bereave deprive
 38 pack leave
Epilogue.1 As in 1.2 and Prologue.2, Middleton indicates that he has written more books. His Epilogue suggests, however, that he cannot bring them forth, since both wit and the satirist have been lost in the process of writing. Middleton could also imply that his abbreviated Microcynicon, unlike classical and contemporary satires containing more than one book in a single volume, gets at the heart of satire, a genre designed to self-destruct or to be left unfinished.
 3 Stumble and fall common biblical phrase for sin. See, for instance, Jeremiah 50:32, ‘And the most proud shall stumble and fall.’
fool’s paradise proverbial (Tilley, F523)

- 4 jocund merry; but Marston’s references to his satires as ‘jocund’ often turns into an assertion of their discordant nature. See Scourge, 367 and 371.
of force necessarily jangling noisy and discordant
 5 Wit . . . will proverbial
 6 fray skirmish
 8 Qui . . . albo ‘its colour, that once was white, is now the very opposite’ (Ovid, Metamorphoses, Book II, 541). Middleton refers to the transformation of the spotlessly white raven who turned black because it chattered too much. The citation provides textual symmetry because it alludes to the world’s sweeping degeneration, the idea which opens Satire One. It also suggests that representing and exposing vice has possibly infected both writer and reader, transforming them into the black colour that defines the speaker’s project (see Defiance.16 and the introduction).

THE GHOST OF LUCRECE

Edited by G. B. Shand

FROM the moment it is summoned up to perform its history on the poet's 'round stage' (35) until its final containment in the 'hall of hell' (597), the mutilated body of the raped and self-slaughtered Lucrece is the central geographical feature of Middleton's The Ghost of Lucrece (1600). Onto that copiously weeping, bleeding, and lamenting body is inscribed a poet's and an age's dramatically impacted masculine ambivalence about chastity and rape, guilt and shame, holy dying and suicide, salvation and damnation, Christianity and paganism. Lucrece, the classical paragon of female chastity, has been eternally polluted by the fact of rape. Riddled with a complex of Christian guilt and pagan shame (translated into concern for her stained soul on the one hand, for her stained honour on the other), she has committed suicide, both the ultimate damnable act of despair and the ultimate laudable act of reclamation. In consequence, she has descended into an underworld which is the inevitable destination of her pagan spirit, but which is imaged as a fiery hell of eternal torment, rendered unbearably tragic by her 'Christian' longing for redemption.

The history of the Lucrece myth's many transformations is concisely traced by Ian Donaldson; and Stephanie Jed persuasively situates the myth at the centre of the rise and formation of Humanism. The basic story is quickly summarized: during a lull in the Roman siege of Ardea (509 BC), young Prince Tarquin and some noble friends rode home in secret to spy into the behaviour of their wives. Only Collatine's wife, Lucrece, was found virtuously at home, spinning wool with her maids and longing for her husband's safe return; the others were all abroad, dancing and revelling. So Lucrece was judged the most chaste, and the night visitors rode back to Ardea. But ironically, Ovid tells us, blind love for Lucrece had suddenly infected Prince Tarquin. The more unachievable she seemed, the more hotly he desired her. So he returned secretly to Collatine's residence, where Lucrece chastely welcomed him as both kinsman and guest. At night, he sneaked into Lucrece's bedchamber, raped her, and fled. Lucrece summoned her husband and father from the siege, told them of the rape, and stabbed herself to death. She thus became the catalyst for the resultant banishment of the Tarquins, and the establishment of the republic.

Although viewed as the epitome of chaste virtue, Lucrece nevertheless also became a highly problematic interpretative nexus on two counts: first, she did not physically resist the rape, but yielded to fear of infamy when Tarquin threatened to kill both her and a slave and to claim he had caught them together; and second, she subsequently committed what most Renaissance Christian commentators saw as the terrible crime of self-murder. The inherent contradictions between deep personal sympathy for her history and deep moral concern for its implications rendered her a compelling and unstable signifier.

While some English versions of Lucrece's story, such as Thomas Heywood's 1607 play, come near to effacing her personal tragedy beneath the project of dramatizing its political implications, Middleton, like Shakespeare before him, seizes the opportunity to personalize an icon of violated chastity, taking an important early step toward the sympathetic evocation of the female subject which marks some of his later work. Yet Middleton's unquestioned sympathy for the plight of Lucrece is nonetheless compromised and problematic. He uses intrusive exposure of her body as a major strategy for articulating the impotent humiliation of the modest raped woman. He begins by staging her publicly, summoning her from hell to perform her wretchedness amidst a cast of Tarquins, 'Black spirits, hard hearts, thick thoughts, souls boiled in lust' (44). Her nominal audience is to be female soul-mates:

Enrollèd vestals, Dian's hemispheres,
Rape-slaughtered Lucreces, all martyred graces, (39–40)

but the dominant spectating gaze is actually male: the attending poet, and his implicitly male readership, from the Baron Compton to whom the poem is dedicated, to the admirers of her hair, her eyes, her breasts, all mapped and controlled by the concluding blazon. Shortly after her exposure on the Prologue's stage, her location is reconfigured as 'this world below' (69), and for the remainder of the poem Lucrece's ghostly body seems suspended in a virtually unlocalized desert place, its only reference points a distant Milky Way, the competing starry figures of Venus and Vesta, and the nearby 'hall of hell' (597). All features of a stable or identifiable surrounding worldly landscape are erased, leaving her alone in the unbroken objectifying gaze of poet and reader. The focal stare thus imposed on the female subject paradoxically enforces her object status, and silently informs every word of Lucrece's lament. It is one of Middleton's main achievements in the poem, but it depends on a calculated act of intrusion for its success.

Lucrece's foregrounded body is rendered a hyperbolic site of instability by the poem's most obvious imagistic technique, the intensive use of liquid imagery stemming from Ovid's 'fluunt lacrimae more perennis aquae'

(‘her tears flowed like a running stream’). Weeping and wounded, the body is figured as a copiously flowing vessel or source, awash in incessantly shifting tides, floods, fountains, rivers, streams and baths of tears and blood. The common Renaissance trope of the leaky vessel, and ‘the potential shamefulness of the association of women with water’ (Paster), are everywhere evident. Lucrece figures the recreated moment of her suicide as a ‘tide of blood’ opening the sluices of her spirit (122). Then, in a latently incestuous gesture, Lucrece exhorts the spirit of Tarquin to quaff his bloody fill at the ivory bowl of her wounded breast:

Thou art my nurse-child, Tarquin, thou art he.
 Instead of milk, suck blood and tears and all.
 In lieu of teats, Lucrece thy nurse, even she,
 By tragic art seen through a crystal wall,
 Hath carved with her knife thy festival.
 Here’s blood for milk; suck till thy veins run over,
 And such a teat which scarce thy mouth can cover.
 (136–42)

This horribly leaking embodiment of lust’s dominion is set against the distant milky white of chaste Vesta, of the Via Lactea, of an unattainable heaven, all equally realized in images of liquidity:

’Twas thou, O chastity, that gild’st the sky
 With beams of virtue. It is thou dost dwell
 In that white milken crystal silver cell,
 Thou laundress to the gods and goddesses,
 Washing their souls in founts of holiness. (509–13)

Tarquin’s ardent lust, on the other hand, is thoroughly figured in images of dry heat and fire. Jonathan Bate points out that Ovid misses the opportunity to pun from Ardea to ardent, and that if Shakespeare yields to the pun it is very discreetly. Not so Middleton:

Tarquin from Ardea posts. Hence sprang the fire,
 For Ardea’s name sounds ardent hot desire. (148–9)

So heated is Tarquin’s ardour that it is capable of igniting Lucrece’s blood, causing her fall, and turning her shame into an ever-burning beacon (73–9). The poem’s larger irony is that, at least in Lucrece’s assessment, none of her floods of tears and blood will finally dampen the fiery dust and ashes of Tarquin’s lechery, nor quench the flames of hell where she is doomed to meet with him for eternity. Middleton’s stand on Lucrece’s story may be troubled, but his indictment of the blindly destructive force of male desire is unmistakable.

Lucrece’s fluent properties are not limited to tears and blood. She flows in eloquence as well. Framed by the dignified measures of rhyme-royal, which Gascoigne characterized as ‘a royal kind of verse, serving best for grave discourses’, Lucrece’s lament is in a near-theatrical language, reminiscent of early Marlowe, or of the self-conscious rhetoric of Kyd’s Spanish Tragedy. Its frequent repetitive patterning, manifesting the reverberative quality typical of ‘female complaints’, is particularly remarkable. Sometimes this takes the form of highly rhythmic alliteration and assonance, or playful echoic clotting: ‘Like beams of morning, to a mourning cloud’ (54), ‘To show that Tarquin’s planet plants in me’ (76), or ‘From beauty’s wrist so wrest that golden rod’ (609). At other times the repetition may take the form of anadiplosis, where the word or phrase ending one line anticipates the beginning of the next:

But O my heaven, shall I forget thy spheres?
 O spheres of heaven, shall I let pass your skies?
 O skies which wears out time... (479–81)

(This passage also typifies the poem’s use of repeated apostrophe.)

Sometimes this repetitive patterning is much more dilated. In her formal vituperatio against Tarquin (115–261), Lucrece pursues an anaphora (repetition of the beginning of a line, clause, or sentence) through twenty occurrences in fourteen stanzas, tolling out the name of the rapist: ‘Tarquin the ravisher’, ‘Tarquin the Roman’, ‘Tarquin my kinsman’, ‘Tarquin the prince’, ‘Tarquin the traitor’, ‘Tarquin the lecher’, and at last, six times, and with an effect of ominous physical presence, ‘Tarquin the night-owl’ (143–240).

And finally, the varied tools of repetition may inform an amplification with presentational bravura, as in this remarkable imagistic elaboration (peristasis) when Lucrece displays her blood- and tear-stained knife:

Behold this blade, varnished with blood and tears,
 Blood from my heart, tears from my stilling eyes.
 Behold, I say, this knife, whereon appears Vesta’s vermilion, melting from her skies,
 And tears of pearls in bloody mysteries.

This is the tragic knife. Here you may see Tears strive for fame, and blood for chastity.

(101–7)

Such insistent patterning might seem at first to distance the reader from Lucrece’s experience, conferring on it a ritual elegance which mutes its emotional intensity. But the verse has an orality which silent reading may obscure. Spoken aloud, it can spring into life, its inexorable repetitive beats becoming the driving pulse of the speaker herself, as was observed in a remarkable 1996 staging of the poem at the Bear Gardens in London’s Globe Education Centre. Directed by Claire van Kampen, with Joy Richardson as Lucrece, and Mark Rylance playing the young poet in the act of writing her, this production effectively claimed a significant new female role for the Elizabethan stage repertoire. Richardson’s Lucrece, reliving her rape, suicide, and damnation, was a compelling vocal and emotional presence, her performance derived organically from Middleton’s instinctively theatrical provision of text which readily embodies a living subject.

Not that Lucrece’s personal ownership of that text is uncomplicated. The voice of Middleton’s poem might be described as a sometimes indeterminate vocal mosaic, formed from a combination of several 'female' voices identified as Lucrece's, but significantly contained and permeated by the male voice of the attendant poet, who does not confine himself to the framing Prologue and Epilogue. Instead he intervenes unannounced in Lucrece's lament on several occasions. Assigning voice is complicated by the fact that Simmes's edition provides no typographical marker to indicate changes of speaker. In Claire van Kampen's staging, Mark Rylance's poet intervened eight times from his dominant position in a study on the upper level, bringing to life the poem's latent tension between its creating poet and the violated subject of his creation. Rylance spoke the first half of 143, 241-7, 260-1, 332-8, 360-94, 402-36, 478, and 556-62.

Only a few of these masculine interruptions of the female voice are clear textual obligations. At 241-7, an unmistakable intervention, the poet contrives to elide Lucrece's description of the actual rape by entering as a kind of controlling playwright to transform the moment of violation into two discreetly emblematic dumb shows:

Now enters on the stage of Lucrece' heart
 Black appetites in flamed habiliments.
 When they have acted all, then they depart.
 Rape ent'ring next, armed in murder's tents,
 Racks Vesta's tenants and takes all her rents.
 This shows that Vesta's deity is poor:
 She hath the stalk, but Venus hath the store.

At 302, almost as if to remind us that Lucrece's chaste domestic behaviour on the night before her rape was an object of male spying, and indeed that Lucrece's very words are contained by male reportage, he intrudes briefly, and entirely unexpectedly into her own description of her speech to her maids:

Yet was my heart so light that still I said,
 'Sing merrily, my maids, our wheels go round.
 Who would not sing and spin and be a maid,
 To serve so sweet a goddess, and be bound
 Apprentice where such mistresses abound?
 Sing merrily, my maids,' (again she says)
 'For Vesta is the goddess of our lays.' (297-303)

A third likely intrusion of the attendant poet occurs at 402-36, where he seems goaded into a personal exhortation of Tarquin, and of masculine desire more generally. This moment is harder to be certain about. While it identifies a writer whose pen has been burnt to ashes by the sulphurous fire of Tarquin's lust (and indeed, while the collocation of 'lust' with 'pen of mine' (402) may ironically turn back in self-condemnation upon a male speaker through the common Elizabethan interplay of 'pen' and 'penis'), no inverted commas or parentheses signal the advent of a new speaker, and in any case, Lucrece has already begun to present herself as writer at 396-7, a transformation she will complete at 563, where she entirely reshapes herself from the staged speaker of the beginning of her lament into the epistolary plainant who finishes it off. So the reader may be justifiably uncertain as to who the writing 'I' is when Tarquin is attacked at 402. But if the speaker here is in fact taken to be the attendant poet, there is an effect almost like duet as the voice of Lucrece re-enters at 437, seamlessly taking over the poet's apostrophe to lust, and making it explicitly her own in the reference to 'my ghost' at 438. That the status of these possible poetic interventions remains dubious suggests how blurred is the poem's line between the 'female' subject and her objectifying male presenter.

As has been suggested above, Lucrece's own status in the poem shifts from staged speaker of her lament to writer of the plaining 'Lines of Blood and Flame' which she directs to Tarquin at 574. Her voice undergoes other variations as well, most notably into the scathing tones of a turn-of-the-century satirist, crying out for vengeance to a corrupt and thus unhearing world. At 164-77 she launches an attack on Rome which might seem, in its references to the 'triple crown' (172) and to 'Roman devils' (170), to transcend Lucrece's pagan age, glancing at the papacy and at Elizabethan anti-Catholic animosity. Later, at 360-94 (lines assigned to the poet in Claire van Kampen's production), the satirical target is enlarged: not just Tarquin's masculine lust, but an apparently current iron age, and an iniquity-ridden prince's court which may not be restricted to the world of the Tarquins. This voice, sometimes more anticipatory of Vindice in The Revenger's Tragedy than reminiscent of the typical female plainant, carries such compelling weight that at least one observer (Bromley) has read the entire poem as satire.

Though the poem's satirical and vengeful impulses are strong, however, the impotent stasis of Lucrece's circumscribed condition is even stronger: there is no avenger to hear her hell-bound ghost, and in any event Tarquin is already dead and damned with her. Her potential is confined to lament. Thus The Ghost of Lucrece is most fruitfully characterized as 'female complaint', a broadly inclusive genre extending back to Ovid's Heroides, and much explored in the English Middle Ages and Renaissance by poets, mainly men, drawn to its capacity for staging the solitary 'female' voice in a heightened condition of grievance over abandonment, loss or violation (Kerrigan). For his Lucrece, Middleton draws importantly on Shakespeare's Lucrece, and on Ovid's in the Fasti. He also appears familiar with versions in Livy's Historia, perhaps as translated by William Painter in The Palace of Pleasure (1566) or by Philemon Holland in The Roman History (1600, but licensed in 1598). And, as recorded in Adams's edition, he does recycle phrasing and imagery from Robert Greene's Ciceronis Amor (1598), a work which probably caught his attention because of an incidental Lucrece-like narrative in which the Roman conqueror of a castle finds its lord and chaste lady in bed, she having committed suicide to prevent her certain rape. But the formal kin of Middleton's poem are works like Samuel Daniel's Complaint of Rosamond (1592), Thomas Churchyard's lament of Jane Shore from The Mirror for Magistrates (reprinted as 'The Tragedy of Shore's Wife' in 1593), and Michael Drayton's Matilda (1594). Like so many earlier 'female complaints' (and like Shakespeare's The Rape of Lucrece for that matter), all these works are couched formally in rhyme-royal. All feature a powerless plaining female ghost. And all are mediated in some fashion by an attendant male poet whose voice inevitably complicates and even contains the 'female' voice of the poem's subject.

The troubled containment of Middleton's Lucrece ultimately goes beyond the fact that she is a male construction, extending to her eternal confinement in a Christian hell. Middleton tacitly accepts a Calvinist reading of her damnation. Where Shakespeare's Lucrece, at her suicide, releases an 'immaculate and spotless' soul from the 'polluted prison' of her body, bequeathing it 'unto the clouds', Middleton's heroine has gone to hell, and her lament in no way challenges the appropriateness of this fate. Instead, she characterizes herself as culpable, indeed complicit, in having been deceived by Tarquin: 'I left sweet verdure for a flattering voice' (457).

Middleton does not directly foreground the debate, joined famously by Saint Augustine in De civitate dei, as to whether Lucrece's damnation is for self-slaughter, or for the sexual pollution she so relentlessly claims. Instead, he virtually neutralizes it, implying that, whatever her faults, as a pagan her soul's exclusion from salvation is automatic. This Christian colouring of classical materials is at the heart of the poem's climax, as Middleton exploits the central paradox of a pre-Christian (and therefore damned) Lucrece who nonetheless has compelling Christian instincts. He renders her thoroughly contrite, and yearning for Christian salvation. At 479, Lucrece addresses heaven. She begins with two stanzas of rhetorical questions berating herself for having forsaken chastity. Then, beginning at 514, she is given five entire stanzas of apostrophe to chastity, figured as 'Saint' Vesta (the Roman goddess of the household). This single-sentence apostrophe is grammatically closed only at 549, beginning a climactic stanza where at last she prays for explicit Christian redemption, through the elements of the Eucharist ('blood divine', 'food angelical') and through the gift of the Holy Spirit ('silver dove'). Abruptly, however, the following stanza (556-62) pulls back to assert her pagan ineligibility, either in her own voice or in that of the poet, ending with:

Lucrece, I say, how canst thou Lucrece be,
Wanting a God to give a life to thee?

The force of this moment is devastating. As the words of rejection were spoken by Mark Rylance's poet at the Globe, Joy Richardson's Lucrece shrank perceptibly, her entire demeanour instantly transformed from beseeching penitence to resigned and bitter hellishness. For after such knowledge, Lucrece can entertain no hope. She bitterly consecrates her lament to Tarquin, and her mortified body is pulled from the poem's stage by Melpomene, the muse of tragedy, sinking in despair to partner the ghost of Tarquin 'in the hall of hell' (597). The poetic persona now closes off the poem with a wistful, even chagrined funereal blazon of Lucrece's physical beauties as they are transformed by Death: her hair, her eyes, her tongue, her breath, her breasts. He thus contains Lucrece's body, her 'female' voice, her very subjectivity, in a specifically objectifying masculine frame. Indeed, the bracketing of her lament between the male poet's Prologue and Epilogue is of a piece with Lucrece's strait confinement not only in hell, but in a world of overwhelming male desire which inevitably imposes pollution, destruction, and damnation, even on the most chaste.

SEE ALSO

Textual introduction and apparatus: Companion, 467
Authorship and date: Companion, 337

The Ghost of Lucrece.

Desire's true graduates read in Tarquin's books, Be ye our stage's actors. Play the cooks: Carve out the daintiest morsel—that's your part— 50 With lust-keen falchion, even in Lucrece' heart. Now weepeth Lucrece with a trine of eyes, Quenching the fire of lust with tears and blood, Changing those eye-lamps, which were wont to rise Like beams of morning, to a mourning cloud, 55 Her heart, the purest eye, to a red sea-flood. Her ghost the idea of her soul resumes, Which Phoenix-wise burns in her own perfumes. The Ghost of Lucrece Medea's magic, and Calypso's drugs, 60 Circe's enchantments, Hecatē's trifrom Weans my soul, sucking at revenge's dugs, To feed upon the air. What wind, what storm Blew my dissevered limbs into this form, And from the virgin paradise of death 65 Conjures my ghost with poetizing breath? The candle of my shame burns in the sky, Set on the cross-poles of the firmament To fear away divine virginity And light this world below, that being bent 70 To follow me, they go not as I went. But when I hope to see the candle wane, Then Tarquin's spirit falls on the snuff again, So that the snuff, the savour of my shame That stinks before the throne of chastity, 75 Is still rekindled with venereal flame To show that Tarquin's planet plants in me The root of fiery blood and luxury, First forcing with his breath one flame's retire, Then takes my blood for oil, his lust for fire.	Now burns the beacon of my soul indeed 80 Too high for fame, but low enough for fume. Saints, keep your cloister-house. Vesta, make speed, Take in thy flowers, for fear the fire consume Thy eternal sweet virginity-perfume. For lust and blood are mingled in one lamp 85 To seal my soul with rape and murder's stamp. Before my shame, yon candle had no fire, Vestals nil feared me, the world saw me not. Shame was the tinder, and the flint desire That struck in Tarquin's bosom and begot 90 A child of fire, a firebrand, and so hot That it consumed my chastity to dust, And on my heart painted the mouth of lust. Was I the cradle, O my chastity, To rock and lull this bastard firebrand, 95 Nursed with my blood, weaned with my tragedy, Fed at my knife's sharp point upon my hand, Born and reborn where'er my spirits stand? I was the cradle. See the fiery dart That burns Diana's temples in my heart. 100 Behold this blade, varnished with blood and tears, Blood from my heart, tears from my stilling eyes. Behold, I say, this knife, whereon appears Vesta's vermilion, melting from her skies, 105 And tears of pearls in bloody mysteries. This is the tragic knife. Here you may see Tears strive for fame, and blood for chastity. Right hand, thou act'st revenge's hand aright. This knife and thou have sworn to kiss my breast. Thou art my Vesta's antidote, to fright 110 Lust from the bed of Collatinus' rest. Performer of thy vow, hand, be thou blest, For thou in this hast shown me what thou art, Driving the foe from scaling of my heart.
--	--

47 read learned
50 falchion sword
51 Now weepeth Lucrece The implication is that she has arisen to the stage by this point.
trine threesome (her actual eyes, and the wound to her heart)
55 sea-flood tide
56 idea perfect form. (The sense is that Lucrece's soul inhabits, for the moment, the apparition of her deceased body, 'ghost' being the inverted object of 'resumes'.)
resumes puts on anew
57 Which The referent is presumably 'Her ghost.'
Phoenix-wise Phoenix: mythical Arabian bird, reincarnated from its own ashes perfumes odorous fumes or vapour given off by the burning of any substance 59 Medea's vengeful sorceress of Greek mythology, responsible for numerous deaths, including those of her own

children
Calypso's nymph who held Odysseus enthralled for seven years
60 Circe's enchantress who turned Odysseus's companions to swine
Hecatē's goddess of the moon, and Persephone's underworld attendant, with power to conjure dreams, phantoms and spirits; often represented with three heads or bodies (hence 'trifrom')
67 cross-poles transverse supports, as of a high roof
69 bent inclined, tempted
70 they i.e., chaste women, those who comprise 'divine virginity' (68)
72 snuff burnt or burning portion of a candle-wick
75 still constantly
76 Tarquin's planet Venus
77 luxury lechery
81 fame here, modest female reputation, which, in Elizabethan prescriptions, keeps a low profile

fume (a) smoke (which dirties it) (b) anger
88 nil not at all
91 firebrand i.e., Tarquin's lust (literally, flaming kindling, but figuratively (a) one who enflames the passions (b) one who is doomed or deserves to burn in Hell)
93 mouth of lust i.e., her death-wound?
102 stilling trickling (aphetic form of 'distilling')
104 vermilion scarlet pigment 105 pearls associated with purity mysteries rites
108-14 At some point immediately before or during this stanza, Lucrece appears to re-enact her suicide, stabbing herself once again. Joy Richardson, in the 1996 Globe production, used the force of the verb 'Driving' in 114, plunging the imagined dagger into her breast as she spoke the word.
111 Collatinus Collatine, Lucrece's husband

The Ghost of Lucrece.

- 115 Come, spirit of fire, bred in a womb of blood,
 Forged in a furnace by the smith of hell,
 Begot and formed in that burning flood
 Where Pluto's Phlegethontic tenants dwell,
 And scalded spirits in their fiery cell
 120 Breathes from their soul the flame of luxury.
 From that luxurious clime I conjure thee.
- Now is my tide of blood. Come, quench thy soul.
 The sluices of my spirit now runs again.
 Come, I have made my breast an ivory bowl
 125 To hold the blood that streameth from my vein.
 Drink to my chastity, which thou hast slain.
 But woe the while, that labour is in vain,
 To drink to that which cannot pledge again.
- Quaff thine own fill and let that lustful flame
 130 That circuits in the circle of thy spirit
 Pledge thy desire, carousing off my shame
 Which swims amidst my blood and doth inherit
 The portion of my soul without a merit.
 And if this spring of blood cannot suffice,
 135 I'll rain down tears from my elemental eyes.
- Thou art my nurse-child, Tarquin, thou art he.
 Instead of milk, suck blood and tears and all.
 In lieu of teats, Lucrece thy nurse, even she,
 By tragic art seen through a crystal wall,
 140 Hath carved with her knife thy festival.
 Here's blood for milk; suck till thy veins run over,
 And such a teat which scarce thy mouth can cover.
- Tarquin the ravisher: O, at that name
 See how mine eyes dissolveth into tears!
 145 Tarquin the Roman: I describe my shame.
- From Rome it came, a Roman name it bears.
 Tarquin my guest: lo, here began my fears.
 Tarquin from Ardea posts. Hence sprang the fire,
 For Ardea's name sounds ardent hot desire.
- Tarquin my kinsman: O divinity,
 150 Where art thou fled? Hast thou forsook thy sphere?
 Where's virtue, knighthood and nobility?
 Faith? Honour? Piety? They should be near,
 For 'kinsman' sounds all these. They are not here.
 Tarquin my kinsman: was it thou didst come 155 To sack my Collatine's Collatium?
- Tarquin my kinsman: too unkindly done,
 And by a kinsman too, my ghost avers it.
 Doth therefore that same name of kindred run
 To see their kin red, and with blood prefers it?
 160 O enemy to faith, that still defers it!
 Had Tarquin never lustful Tarquin been,
 Lucrece the chaste should have chaste Lucrece seen.
- Tarquin the prince: had Rome no better heirs?
 Thou mistress of the world, no better men?
 165 Thou prodigality of nature's fairs,
 Are tigers kings? Mak'st thou thy throne a den?
 Thy silver glittering streams black Lerna's fen?
 Thy seven hills that should o'erlook thy evils
 Like seven hells to nurse up Roman devils?
 170
- To thee, that mak'st the moon thy looking-glass
 To view thy triple crown and seven-fold head,
 To thee, I say, the ghost of what I was Plains me and it, sith thou so long hast fed
 The ravisher and starved the ravishèd.
 175 If Vesta's lines were ever writ in thee,
 Then weigh the blotting of those lines in me.

115-261 This attack on Tarquin is in the form of a vituperatio, an ironic inversion of the methods of rhetorical praise. As an exercise it was common in Renaissance schools and universities, and is therefore not surprising in a young poet. It is in three parts: an exordium (115-42), an ironic genus of Tarquin (143-240), and the presentation of his vicious achievement (241-61).

115 Come, spirit of fire conjuring Tarquin, who ascends the imagined stage between 121 and 122

116 smith of hell i.e., Vulcan

118 Pluto's god of the underworld

122 tide (a) high tide (b) time

135 elemental Water is one of the four elements, of course, but 'elemental' may also mean 'pertaining to the sky'; see 253 and 340, where 'elements' are celestial spheres, and 502, where 'element' appears to mean 'sky'.

136 nurse-child child breast-fed by its nurse

139 crystal wall again figuring Lucrece's

gored ghost as an observed glass or mirror, as in the dedicatory sonnet, line 12. (John Jowett suggests, alternatively, an echo of the crystal pavement of Venus' temple in Marlowe's Hero and Leander, I.144-5: 'There might you see the gods in sundry shapes, | Committing heady riots, incests, rapes'.)

140 festival (a) apparently a feeding place (b) feast

148 Ardea town 23 miles south of Rome, site of the siege by the Roman army (including both Tarquin and Collatine)

150 kinsman Lucius Tarquinius Collatinus (Collatine) and Sextus Tarquinius were second cousins.

153 near quibbling on 'closely related'

156 Collatium here, Lucrece herself, figured conventionally as the patriarchal property of Collatine (his house, city, fortress)

157 unkindly unnaturally, not befitting a relative

done with a play on the sexual sense

159 Doth...run i.e., Do kindred run to see their kin red (with blood, shame)? SIMMES, in 159, uses the usual Elizabethan spelling 'kinred', setting up the wordplay.

160 prefers promotes

161 defers sets aside

163 Lucrece...seen exploiting the duality between the gored ghost and the voice of its presenter (see 174)

166 fairs beauties

168 Lerna's a marsh in Argolis (a region of ancient Greece), traditional home of the many-headed Hydra slain by Hercules

169 o'erlook (a) keep watch over (b) wink at, ignore

172 triple crown signifying imperial rule over Europe, Asia and Africa; perhaps also glancing at the papal crown

174 Plains laments, complains

175 starved killed, destroyed (playing on 'fed' in the previous line)

176 lines (a) lineaments (b) lines of writing

177 weigh ponder

The Ghoft of Lucrece.

180 Tarquin the prince: sham'st thou to hear thy name? Rome, 'tis thy heir. Sham'st thou to call him son? Tarquin the prince: lo, I'll repeat thy shame. A Roman heir, from him to thee I run. I'll shame you both before my shame be done. Tarquin the prince, Tarquin the Roman heir: Thus will I haunt and hunt you to despair. 185 Tarquin the traitor: bid my spirit rise And call up all the senses of my soul, For treason should be guarded with more eyes Than was Jove's Io under his control, For treason's guile doth win the traitor's goal. 190 Tarquin the traitor: watch when time's in season, For treason doth betray all things to treason. Tarquin the lecher: virgin chastity Melts at the heat of that luxurious word, Like maiden snow upon a promontory, 195 Kissing the sun, her heavenly lovely lord, Then dies, and melts into a wat'ry ford. So did my chastity's white-snow attire Dissolve in blood at Tarquin's lustful fire. Tarquin the night-owl: chastity, beware. 200 Thou art beset with millions of deceits. Thy eyes have leaden lids, they take no care; Thy senses, rocked asleep, and thy conceits, Tempered with silence, fear nor snares nor baits. Only the vestal pureness of thy soul 205 Bade me beware that night-observing owl. Tarquin the night-owl: in whose flaming eyes Lust and desire bandied their balls of blood, Chasing my spirit with fiery mysteries Unto the hazard where destruction stood 210 Ready to strike my soul into a cloud, So, when the sun had seen my vapour rise, Then with his beams to dash me from the skies.	Tarquin the night-owl: watch destruction. What, hath the eyes of lust no lids at all, Or do they hover for confusion, 215 Answering in silence when affections call? When lust awakes, the eyelids never fall, But, like a courser holding reason's rein, Doth shut the eyes and opens them again. Tarquin the night-owl: Vesta, look about. 220 The fourth alarum of my fears now rings, And yet the hour of dread is scarce run out, For midnight's face more force of terror brings. To think on that, my sinews shake like strings, 225 And chastity, which yet had spirit and breath, Lay quavering at my heart to tune her death. Tarquin the night-owl: turn the glass again. Five times my tongue, the hammer of my soul, That beats upon my breath and strikes a strain 230 Sounding all quavers—that's the song of dole— Five times my tongue did even my tongue control, For fear is such a slave and coward elf, That, fearing others, runs and fears himself. Tarquin the night-owl: enter treachery. 235 Sextus Tarquinius, this sixth hour is thine. Farewell my life, farewell my chastity, Farewell, though not mine now, that which was mine. Thy grapes are now devoured. Alas, poor vine. The tyrant, with his force of luxury, 240 Tires me an aunt, through imbecility. Now enters on the stage of Lucrece' heart Black appetites in flamed habiliments. When they have acted all, then they depart. Rape ent'ring next, armèd in murder's tents, 245 Racks Vesta's tenants and takes all her rents. This shows that Vesta's deity is poor: She hath the stalk, but Venus hath the store.
--	--

187 with by

188 Io Seduced by Jove and then transformed into a heifer, she was guarded by Argus of the hundred eyes.

under his control The pronoun refers, without explicit antecedent, to Argus.

194 promontory mountain ridge

196 ford stream

202 conceits imaginings

207 Lust... blood i.e., Tarquin's eyeballs are figured as bloody with lust and desire. 'bandied', meaning tossed back and forth, as with rackets, introduces a series of tennis references: once chased to the 'hazard' or in-play area of a tennis court (209), Lucrece's soul is struck or served (210) and dashed or devastatingly returned (212) in an exchange between destruction (209) and the sun (211).

213 watch (a) watch for (b) stay awake

218 reason's rein that rein which reason properly should hold. (The conventional image of the rider reason controlling the horse of the passions is reversed here.)

219 Doth shut The apparent agent is 'lust' (217), and the sense is that lust takes control of sight, as with Tarquin's 'flaming eyes' (206).

221 alarum peal or chime of warning bell or clock (here referring to the anaphora 'Tarquin the night-owl', which is repeated six times)

224 strings of a musical instrument

226 quavering (a) playing or singing quavers, i.e., eighth notes (b) trembling

227 glass hourglass

228 hammer as of a bell

232 elf demon

239 tyrant SIMMES prints 'Tyr-ant' to set up the pun in 240.

240 Tires attires

aunt whore

imbecility weakness, impotence

242 flamed flaming. Specifically (a) burning (b) decorated with flame-like streaks or slashes (c) flame-coloured (as often was the attire of strumpets)

habiliments (a) garments (b) armour

244 tents (a) intents, purposes (b) tents of war

247 stalk (a) stem (b) chaff store that which is stored; i.e. the grain. (In A Lover's Complaint, 147, Shakespeare's abandoned maid 'Reserv'd the stalk and gave him all my flower.')

The Ghost of Lucrece.

This is the tragic scene. Bleed heart, weep eyes, 250 Fly soul from body, spirit from my veins.
 Follow my chastity where'er it lies,
 Which my unhallowed body now refrains.
 Look to the lamp of chastity, it wanes.
 The star which guided all my elements
 Pulls in her head and leaves the firmaments.

255 Rape, in his paws of blood and fangs of lust,
 Hath stained th' immaculate lily of my field,
 And hath sepulchred in the shade of dust
 Diana's milken robe, and Vesta's shield.
 When tigers prey, the seely lambs must yield;
 260 When Tarquin posts from Ardea, by and by Lucrece must lose her life and chastity.

O Collatine, where sleeps thy troubled spirit?
 What new-come Morpheus hath arrested thee?
 Doth thy heart soundly sleep? Doth nothing stir it?
 265 Dear Collatine, awake! Wert thou with me,
 The arches of mine eyes would waken thee,
 For tears like waves rush at my eyelids' door,
 Striving together who should go before.

Come, Collatine, the foe hath sacked thy city.
 270 Collatium goes to wrack. Come, Collatine.
 Come, Collatine, all piety and pity
 Is turned to petty treason. What is thine
 Is seized upon long since, and what is mine
 Carried away. True man, thou sleep'st at Rome 275 Even while a Roman thief robs thee at home.

Come, Collatine, 'tis Lucrece bids thee come,
 Or shall I send my pursuivant of groans Unto proud Rome from poor Collatium
 To make all private means by public moans, 280 Discouraging my black story to the stones?
 Come, Collatine, 'tis Tarquin's dreadful drum
 That conjures me to call, and thee to come.

Thy Lucrece' bed, which had fair canopies
 Spangled with stars like to the firmament,
 285 And curtains wrought with many deities,
 Resembling Jove's white lacteal element,

Are stained now by lust and ravishment,
 The stars out-stared, the deities defied.
 These I had stored, the other defied.

The night before Tarquin and lust came hither— 290
 Ill token for a chaste memorial—
 My maids and I, poor maid, did spin together
 Like the three sisters which the fates we call,
 And fortune lent us wheels to turn withal.
 Round goes our wheels like worlds. On mine alone 295
 Stood fortune reeling on a rolling stone.

Yet was my heart so light that still I said,
 'Sing merrily, my maids, our wheels go round.
 Who would not sing and spin and be a maid,
 To serve so sweet a goddess, and be bound 300
 Apprentice where such mistresses abound?
 Sing merrily, my maids,' (again she says)
 'For Vesta is the goddess of our lays.

'Maidens,' quoth I, 'but think what maidens be:
 They are the very string that ties their hearts,
 305 The pillars of their souls' pure purity,
 The distillations of th' essential parts,
 Both good deservers and the good deserts.
 Then, seeing Vesta hath so many trades,
 Go round, our wheels. Sing merrily, my maids. 310

'What nimble fingers hath virginity,
 To twist the thread and turn the wheel about!
 O virgins, that same pearl of chastity
 Shines like the moon to light your thoughts throughout.
 Pure cogitations never harbours doubt, 315
 But like the fairest purest chrysolite,
 Admits no bruise without a crack with it.

'Spin merrily, my maiden paradise.'
 Thus with a merry cheer I whirled their wheels,
 And made them rid at once more than at twice. 320
 Such pretty pleasure true affection feels
 That time's old head runs swifter than his heels,
 For mirth's fledged wings are of so quick a flight
 That makes the morn seem noon, the noon seem night.

251 refrains avoids (here transitive, the object being 'body')
 252 lamp of chastity i.e., the Moon
 253 elements (a) basic components of body (and soul); but playing here on the secondary meaning (b) celestial spheres
 254 firmaments heavens; the plural is quite unusual
 256 lily of my field chastity. (The phrase, though not the sense, may derive from Matthew 6:28.)
 259 seely innocent
 263 Morpheus god of dreams 266-7 arches...waves Probably refers to the arches of London Bridge, famed for the noise of the water rushing through them.

 273-4 seized...Carried away probably from the standard English gloss of Latin rapio, rapere: to seize, carry off, drag away
 277 pursuivant herald
 279 means laments
 286 Jove's...element the Milky Way
 289 These...deified. The sense of the line seems to be that Lucrece had decorated her canopies and curtains herself.
stored accumulated
deified created as gods
 291 ill...memorial i.e., an evil way of identifying a chaste occasion

296 reeling (a) whirling unsteadily (b) winding up thread (as Collatine should have been present to do—355)
stone ball
 305-8 They...deserts The essential quality of maidens, namely virgin chastity, is the very string that ties the hearts of maidens, it is the pillar of their purity, and so on; finally, in line 308, virtue is its own reward.
 316 chrysolite greenish gemstone such as zircon, topaz
 320 rid accomplish (more in one hour than others might in two)

The Ghost of Lucrece.

325 'My maids, those airy sinews in your hands
Were of a finer thread than that you spin.
It was a merry age in golden bands
When Saturn sowed the earth and did begin
To teach bad husbands a new way to win.
330 Then was true labour exercised and done,
When gods did reel what goddesses had spun.'

Those times are waxen bald. A prouder air
Blows in the heaven and breathes upon the earth.
That age is out of date. Another heir
335 Claims his possession by an iron birth,
And in an iron throne of death and dearth Rules this young age, sucking until it whine
Even at the dugs of Pluto's Proserpine.

Thus, like Diana by a lily fount,
340 Sat I amidst my vestal elements.
Thus did myself still with myself account,
To free my thoughts from chainèd discontents
And stir up mirth, the nurse of nourishments.
Thus with a lightsome spirit and soul's carouse,
345 I like a housewife cherished up my house.

When Roman dames, tickled with pride and lust,
Ravished with amorous philosophy,
Printed the measures of their feet in dust,
Temp'ring their blood with music's harmony—
350 The very synod-house of venery—
Then I at home, instead of melody,
Grated my wheel upon the axletree.

How like Arachne turnèd I my wheel!
Each of my maids how like a shepherdess!
355 Had Collatine, my shepherd, held the reel,

We four might well have made a country mess.
But one abroad makes one at home the less.
My Collatine, my shepherd, was at Rome,
And left poor me to feed his flock at home.

Is Venus made a laundress to the court? 360
Cupid, her son, elected for a page?
No marvel if Diana's stars do sport
With Venus' planets upon Cupid's stage.
Iron must have fire. This is an iron age.
365 Our souls, like smiths, with anvils of desire,
Beat on our flesh, and still we sparkle fire.

The prince's court is ev'n a firmament
All wrought with beams by day and stars by night;
The prince himself the sunny element
From whence all beams and stars do borrow light 370
To paint their faces with a red and white;
Those beams ambassadors of his bright array,
Those stars his counsellors by night and day.

How comes it then—speak, speak, iniquity,
Thou blur of kingdoms and thou blot of kings, 375
Thou metamorphosis of purity,
That shap'st the greater things to lesser things—
How comes it then that Cupid's bow-string swings
About the heels of time? Iniquity, 380 It is the halter of thy luxury.

Thou hast burnt out the humour of thy bones,
And made them powders of impiety
To strew about the earth as thick as stones,
Like wombs of lust in tombs of lechery;
And all thy sinews, O iniquity, 385
Are so dried up, and now so slender spun,
That Venus makes them bow-strings for her son.

327 merry age in golden bands the golden age, the first and best age of the world, when Saturn, the Roman god of the harvest, reigned benignly, and introduced agriculture 329 husbands husbandmen, farmers win earn, as through harvest 332 bald i.e., old, decrepit
334 heir Vulcan?
335 iron referring, as at 364, to the iron age, the last and worst age of the world, a period of wickedness, debasement
338 Proserpine goddess of fertility, queen of the underworld
340 elements celestial spheres, i.e., chaste maids (proceeding from the association of Diana with the moon); see 'Diana's stars' (below, 362)
343 nurse of nourishments Middleton is particularly fond of this brand of etymological wordplay 347 Ravished with amorous philosophy enraptured by practical wisdom or disputation on the art of love (i.e., 'Seduced by love talk') 348 measures playing on the sense 'dances'

349 Temp'ring (a) blending (b) heating
350 synod-house (a) ecclesiastical council-chamber; but (b) a 'synod' is also an astrological conjunction, and 'house' may be used in a loosely astrological sense, suggesting that the other Roman wives, carried away by love-talk, dance and music, were under the planetary influence of Venus, as at 363. (In either case, wanton dance—the conjunction of 'blood' with 'music'—is a site of 'venery' or sexual indulgence.)
352 Grated underlining the contrast with the sounds of dance music
axletree (a) axle (of the spinning-wheel) (b) imaginary axis-line of any heavenly body, or the pole of the heavens (compare previous note) 353 Arachne unfortunate weaver who angered Athena with her depictions of the gods' amours, and was transformed into a spider 356 mess company of four (Lucrece, her two maids, and Collatine)

360 laundress here, a prostitute (but not at 512)
361 page male whore
367 prince's i.e., the ideal prince, ironically contrasted with Prince Tarquin
369 sunny element the sun itself
371 red and white conventional figure for beauty
372 array courtly assembly (and playing on 'ray')
378-9 Cupid's...time Cupid's bow is now the possession of time; love has become temporal, debased. Compare the situation of beauty at 466.
380 It...luxury Cupid's bowstring (love) has become subject to Iniquity's lust.
381 humour juice, perhaps even marrow; probably alluding to the effects of syphilis
382 powders ashes

- Where is the spring of blood's virginity
 That wont to serve thy veins like conduit heads
 390 And cleanse thy cistern of iniquity
 With maiden humours from chaste Flora's meads?
 Then slept'st thou like a lord in honour's beds.
 Then virtue was thy bedfellow. Now know,
 As great an ebb follows as great a flow.
- 395 Lo, under that base type of Tarquin's name
 I cipher figures of iniquity.
 He writes himself the shamer, I the shame,
 The actor he, and I the tragedy.
 The stage am I, and he the history,
 400 The subject I, and he the ravisher.
 He, murd'ring me, made me my murderer.
- O lust, this pen of mine that writes thee 'lust'
 Lies blasted at the sulphur of thy fire.
 The quill and feathers, burnt to ashy dust,
 405 Like dust and ashes flies before desire,
 Unable to endure thy flamed attire;
 For, in the sky of contrariety,
 The winner's life is when the losers die.
- If I proceed, O fiery incolants
 410 Of that vast hell which Pluto terms his hall,
 Tarquin's companions, ye, I say, that haunts
 The banks of burning baths, to you I call:
 Send me Prometheus' heart t' indite withal,
 And from his vulture's wings a pen of blood 415 Thrice steeped and dipped in Phlegethontic flood.
- Then shall I stamp the figure of the night
 On Tarquin's brow, and mark him for her son,
 The heir of darkness, bastard of the light,
 The cloud of heaven, th' eclipser of the sun,
 420 The stain in Vesta's cheeks which first begun
 In Tarquin's flesh, begot of fiery dust.
 O thou the hell of love, untutored lust!
- It bribes the flesh to war against the spirit
 With tickling blood must'ring in every vein.
 It weans the conscience from her heavenly merit,
 425 Depraving all chaste thoughts, her maiden train.
 It makes the heart think and unthink again.
 It taints the breath with fire, the brain with blood,
 And sets a devil where a god had stood.
- Being in the eye, lust is a cockatrice,
 430 Hemlock in taste, a canker in the thought,
 And in the life a moth, which in a trice
 Consumes that treasure which so dear was bought
 And cost so many drops of blood, for naught;
 So many streams of blood and baths of sweat,
 435 To bathe our spirits and to quench our heat.
- O hell-eyed lust, when I behold thy face
 Prefigured in my ghost, drawn in my mind,
 I think of Sidon's flowers that grow apace
 And favour thee by quality and kind:
 440 They look like faith before, and fame behind,
 But if thou savour these well-favoured evils,
 They have the sight of gods, the scent of devils.
- If I had, like a curious herbalist,
 Measured thy quantity by quality,
 445 Or Aesculapius-wise, on reason's fist
 Had planted virtue by the property,
 Or with the lapidary's policy
 Made choice by insight—that's the note of wit,
 And not by outward hue to judge of it—450
- Then, like that skilful Aesculapius,
 Setting apart the colour of deceit,
 I might have known Tarquin from Tereus,
 And Lucrece' bed from Philomela's bait.
 455 Vesta conceived what Venus did conceit,

389 thy Tarquin and iniquity becoming one;
 see 395-6

391 maiden humours pure streams
Flora's goddess of flowers

395 type symbol

396 cipher express (as with characters, or in a cryptogram)

399 history (a) story (b) play

402 this pen of mine either a temporary refiguring of Lucrece as the epistolary writer of her own lament (see 413 ff., and 563 ff.); or, as in the 1996 Globe production, an interjection in the voice of the poet

409 incolants inhabitants (possibly a Middleton coinage; cf. Solomon, 16.32)

412 burning baths Phlegethon (river of fire in Hell)

413 Prometheus' heart Prometheus was a Titan, chained to a mountain by Zeus for giving fire and arts to humankind. His liver was devoured over and over by a vulture. In asking for his heart, Lucrece asks for his strength and endurance.

indite write

422 untutored uncontrolled, undisciplined

427 think and unthink i.e., be unsteadfast

430 cockatrice fabulous serpent, said to kill with its glance, like the basilisk

432 moth used figuratively for something that eats away, gnaws or wastes gradually and silently

433 treasure which so dear was bought the soul, bought (saved) by the Crucifixion

438 Prefigured represented

439 Sidon's flowers Sidon was an ancient Phoenician seaport on what is now the coast of Lebanon. The image, from Ciceronis Amor (7.123), is evidently Greene's invention: 'the flowers in Sidon as they are precious in the sight so they are pestilent in savour.'

440 favour resemble

441 fame virtuous reputation

442 savour smell

443 sight appearance

444 curious careful, attentive

445 quantity worth

446 Aesculapius-wise legendary Greek physician who could revive the dead;
 god of medicine, associated through his father Apollo with truth and prophecy reason's fist Tarquin's forcible persuasion, perhaps reflecting an oratorical hand gesture; Lucrece's apparent point is that she did not put the 'virtue' of Tarquin's argument to a sufficiently wise test; 'fist' may also carry its sense of 'stench, fart', picking up 'the scent of devils' above (443), and setting up the subsequent opposition between 'sweet verdure' and 'a flattering voice' (457).

449 note (a) mark (b) regard, notice (thus 'note of wit' would mean 'wit's manner of taking note')

453 from by the example of

Tereus Thracian king, rapist of Philomela

454 bait temptation

455 Vesta . . . conceit Vesta (unlike me) understood what Venus was planning.

The Ghoft of Lucrece.

But, wanting Aesculapius in my choice,
I left sweet verdure for a flattering voice.

Did beauty, that same bavin's blaze, incense thee,
That flower of time, which buds with vanity,
That string of fortune's wheel, which doth commence
thee
The graduate of hell-born iniquity?
Was beauty made the mark of luxury?
Then, heavens, from henceforth let the world behold
Beauty in lead, deformity in gold.

Say beauty's beams dazzled thy cloudy eyes;
This beauty hangs but at the heels of time,
And when time's wings a loftier measure flies
Then beauty like poor Icarus must climb,
Or plunge into the puddle of her slime;
For beauty's limbs are of a waxen frame,
And melts like Icarus' wings at every flame.

Saw'st thou the colours which quaint Phidias drew
In dead-live pictures with a touch of art?
Such red and white hath beauty being new,
Made only to amaze th' amazer's heart.
Yet Phidias' colours, piercing like a dart,
Were stained with every breath, and lost their prime.
So beauty's blot drops from the pen of time.

But O my heaven, shall I forget thy spheres?
O spheres of heaven, shall I let pass your skies?
O skies which wears out time, and never wears,
Shall I make dim the tapers of your eyes?
O eyes of heaven, sun, moon, and stars that rise
To wake the day, and free imprisoned night,
Shall my oblivious vapour cloud your light?

'Tis thou, O chastity. Shall I forsake thee,
Or drown thy memory in my bloody stream?
Remember, O my soul, did she not make thee
Out of Diana's ribs? Did not that beam
Which glisters in thy spirit like Jove's eye-gleam

Reflect from Vesta's face upon thy heart,
Like Phoebus' brow, the pride of heaven's art?

O thou that mak'st the Via Lactea whiter,
That virgin gallery of majestic Jove,
Fair Juno's maze—to foot it doth delight her—
The silver path of heaven, and bath of love;
There sits the lamb, the swan, the turtle dove,
Ensigns of peace, of faith, and chastity:
O silver stage to golden harmony.

That choir of saints in virgin ornament
Where angels sing like choristers of heaven,
Where all the martyrs kneel, the element
Where Cynthia's robe and great Apollo's steven Hangs at the altar of this milken haven—
And to conclude, not able to begin,
I write of that which flesh hath never seen.

'Twas thou, O chastity, m' eternal eye,
The want of thee made my ghost reel to hell.
'Twas thou, O chastity, that gild'st the sky
With beams of virtue. It is thou dost dwell
In that white milken crystal silver cell,
Thou laundress to the gods and goddesses,
Washing their souls in founts of holiness.

O thou that deck'st our Phoebus in the east,
Circling his temples with spiritual beams,
And guides his vestal chariot to the west
Through that pure crystal track of lacteal streams,
Silvering his wheels with alabaster gleams,
Then temp'ring the bright porphyry of his face
With chaste Endymion's blush, the dye of grace,

That doing duty to his father Jove
Upon his knee of fire, bids him arise,
And blessing all his beams with kissing love,
Like a majestic father gilds his eyes
To add a rarer shine unto the skies,
Then takes his chariot with a brighter pride,
And cries aloud, 'Saint Vesta be my guide!'

457 verdure odour
458 bavin's blaze a 'bavin' is a bundle of kindling
incense set on fire; inflame with passion 460 string Middleton evidently overlaps Fortune's wheel with the spinning wheel of the Fates; 'string' thus becomes something like the thread of life. The collocation with 'commence' and 'graduate' suggests a secondary glance at the special sense of 'string' at Oxford: a pat logical argument passed down from undergraduate to undergraduate for use in examinations.
commence admit to a university degree
462 mark target
468 Icarus son of Daedalus who flew too near the sun on waxen wings which melted, plunging him to death in the sea

469 slime original ooze; moral filth
472 Phidias considered the greatest artist of ancient Greece
477 prime newness
489 Diana's ribs echoing the creation of Eve
492 Phoebus Apollo, god of light, the arts, etc.; associated, as here, with the sun
493 thou chastity
495 Juno's wife of Jupiter; protectress of women foot (a) walk (b) dance 497 the lamb, the swan, the turtle dove respectively, the 'faith', 'chastity', and 'peace' of the following line. (The context implies constellations or stars, particularly as Cygnus (The Swan), one of the Ptolemaic constellations, is located in the Milky Way, and poetically linked to the rape of Leda. But Columba (The Dove), a minor southern constellation, was almost unknown in the 16th century, and I find no heavenly body associated with the lamb.)

502 element sky
503 Cynthia's moon goddess
steven probably here understood by Middleton to mean 'crown', as in Solomon, 7.282. See 622-3.
507 m' eternal my eternal, presumably with play on 'maternal'
519 temp'ring modifying porphyry hard rock consisting of red or white crystals in a red ground-mass
520 Endymion's young Greek shepherd, beloved of the Moon
522 bids The subject appears to be Jove; at 'takes' (526), it appears to revert to Phoebus.

The Ghost of Lucrece.

- Saint Vesta, O thou sanctifying saint,
That lends a beam unto the clearest sun,
530 Which else within his fiery course would faint
And end his race ere he had half begun,
Making the world believe his power were done,
His oil burnt out, his lamp returned to slime,
His fires extinguished by the breath of time,
- 535 O thou, the pearl that hangs on Juno's brow,
Like to the moon, the massy pearl of night,
Thou jewel in the ear of Jove, to show
The pride of love, the purity of light,
Thou Atlas of both worlds, umpire of right,
540 Thou haven of heaven, th' assigner of each sign,
Sanctity's saint, divinity's divine,
- O thou, the silver taper of the moon,
Set in an alabaster candlestick
That by the bed of heaven at afternoon
545 Stands like a lily which fair virgins pick
To match it with the lily of their cheek,
Thou lily lamb, thou crystal-feathered dove
That nestles in the palace of thy Jove,
- O touch my veins again, thou blood divine.
550 O feed my spirit, thou food angelical,
And all chaste functions with my soul combine.
Colour my ghost with chastity, whose all
Feeds fat lean death and time in general.
Come, silver dove, heaven's alabaster nun,
555 I'll hug thee more than ever I have done.
- Lucrece, alas, thou picture of thyself,
Drawn poor and pale by that old painter, time,
And overdashed by death, that meagre elf
Which dries our element of blood to thyme,
560 And temp'reth our old ashes with new slime;
Lucrece, I say, how canst thou Lucrece be,
Wanting a god to give a life to thee?
- Bleed no more lines, my heart. This knife, my pen,
This blood, my ink, hath writ enough to lust.
565 Tarquin, to thee, thou very devil of men,
I send these lines. Thou art my fiend of trust.
- To thee I dedicate my tomb of dust.
To thee I consecrate this little-most Writ by the bloody fingers of my ghost.
- This little scroll of fire that burns my hand 570
In repetition of thy fiery name
I fold upon my heart, my bloody land,
And to thy ghost my ghost doth send the same,
Intituled The Lines of Blood and Flame:
The ghost of Lucrece, that's the ghost of blood; 575
The ghost of Tarquin, that's the fiery flood.
- Now for thy title and deserved style,
In dedication to thy worthiness:
To thee the second of Cocytus' isle,
Chief seignior to the Phlegethontic mess, 580
High steward unto Pluto's holiness,
Temp'rer of flames, the Lord Tisiphone,
My bloody fires begs patronage of thee.
- Now lack I nothing but the post of hell
To fly like Vesta's arrow from my bow 585
With these my red-hot news, and then to tell
How many times my heart did ebb and flow
Like seas, with tears above and blood below.
And from poor Lucrece' mouth tell Tarquin thus,
That Philomel hath writ to Tereus. 590
- Here stops the stream of tragic blood and fire,
And now Melpomene hales my spirit in.
The stage is down, and Philomela's choir
Is hushed from pricksong. Acheron's bells begin 595
To call our ghosts, clad in the spirits of sin.
Now Tereus meets with ravished Philomel, Lucrece with Tarquin in the hall of hell.
- The Epilogue*
- Rhamnusia in a chariot of revenge,
Heaped up with ghosts of blood and spirits of fire, 600
Hath piled up Lucrece' ghost, so to avenge
Her chaste untimely blood of flamed desire.
Now at the bar of hell, revenge's choir,
Pleads Lucrece with a tongue of tears and bloods.
First speaks her heart, and then her eyes in floods. 605

539 Atlas Titan condemned to stand at the western end of earth and hold up the sky
541 divine priest, cleric
555 hug cherish
558 overdashed (a) splashed over (b) destroyed, overthrown (c) cancelled out
559 thyme described by herbalists as particularly hot and dry
566 of trust trusted
572 fold (a) roll up (b) clasp
577 style designation
579 Cocytus like Phlegethon and Acheron, a river of Hell; Middleton uses all three interchangeably with 'hell'. See line 594 below.

580 seignior lord
582 Lord Tisiphone Middleton has apparently given the avenging fury a sex-change, and made the new lord, figuring Tarquin, very like Vulcan.
592 Melpomene hales my spirit in the muse of tragedy drags my spirit offstage (or beneath the stage)
593 The stage is down the play is over, the hangings struck

594 pricksong a written descant or counterpoint (with punning allusions to Philomela's thorn, and to the violating male organ)
600 of blood bloody 601 pilled plucked, pulled, torn 602 of upon
603 bar as in a courtroom, the wooden rail marking off the judge's seat revenge's choir in apposition to 'the bar of hell', 'choir' meaning, figuratively, the judgement place where revenge is seated

The Ghoft of Lucrece.

Can death, that shrimp of spirits, that bony wretch, That meagre element, that beggar god, From Lucrece' sky such heavenly colours fetch, From beauty's wrist so wrest that golden rod 610 Which makes all red and white disperse abroad? Death's power is come, and beauty's triumph past. She was as chaste as fair, as fair as chaste. Her hair, which in Arachne's finest loom Was kissed with silver shuttles, O that hair 615 Which made Collatium shine in spite of Rome, Combing her tresses like Jove's golden heir— He made Rome bright, she made Collatium fair— That hair which danced in beams before her breath Serves now to stuff the gaping ribs of death. Her eyes, the curious fabric of her world, Apollo's touchstones where he tried his beams, And when her eyes outmatched his fires he hurled His crown of splendour into quenching streams, Raging to see beauty's enrolled themes 625 Writ in her eye-rolls; but alas, those eyes Which lived in beauty, now in beauty dies. Her tongue, which Orpheus tuned before he died, And strung before he journeyed unto hell, That new Parnassus by a river's side, 630 Where music sojourns and the muses dwell,	O tongue of hers, Diana's silver bell, That rung chaste prayers to the church of heaven, Now she of it, and it of her bereaven. Her breath, which had a violet perfume Tempered with rose all verdure, O her breath 635 Through discord of her tongue did all consume. Through discord of her tongue did all consume. Unto the air of earth she did bequeath That pension of her life, from life to death. How ill was this bestowed on death, that elf Which robs all others, yet still poor itself. 640 Her teats, twixt whom an alabaster bridge Parts each from other, like two crystal bowls Standing aloof upon the body's ridge, Bears chastity's white nectar-flowing souls. O valley decked with Flora's silver rolls, 645 Why giv'st thou suck to death? It will be fed, For know, death must not die till all be dead. And to conclude, her all in every sphere, That like the sun on crystal elements Did shine in clearness bright, in brightness clear, 650 Her head her skies, her soul her firmaments, Now stained by death, before by ravishments: First Tarquin-life clad her in death's array. Now Tarquin-death hath stol'n her life away.
---	--

FINIS

655

608 fetch carry off

609 rod sceptre

610 Which... abroad which defeats or scatters all other beauty

616 Jove's golden heir Phoebus

620 curious fabric elaborately wrought construction; perhaps with a glance at 'curious' meaning especially observant, often collocating with 'eyes'

624 enrollèd celebrated

625 eye-rolls (a) the rounds or disks of her eyes (b) rollings of the eyes (c) punning on 'roll' meaning parchment scroll

627 Orpheus mythological musician-poet whose lyre charmed even the gods of Hell

629 Parnassus mountain sacred to the muses, and thus to the arts river's side Orpheus's dying song echoed from the riverbank. This ironic 'new Parnassus' is presumably hell, with the dead Lucrece situated beside the river Phlegethon in a bitter revision of the conventional riverside placement of the speaker of a female complaint.

635 verdure fragrance

637 air punning on 'heir'?

645 rolls (a) round ornamental pads (b) fig.
breasts

THE PENNILESS PARLIAMENT OF THREADBARE POETS

Edited by Swapan Chakravorty

THE first extant edition of The Penniless Parliament of Threadbare Poets appeared in 1604 as the concluding part of a jestbook called Jack of Dover, His Quest of Inquiry for the Veriest Fool in England. William Ferbrand, the publisher, had entered The Second Part of Jack of Dover in the Stationers' Register on 3 August 1601, and Penniless was probably first published later that year. Hayward Townshend's Megalopsychy (1682) reports that on 16 December 1601, Henry Doyley complained to the Commons against 'The Assembly of Fools', a book published by one living 'right over Guild-Hall-Gate', an address which agrees with Ferbrand's. The Privy Council dismissed the libel charge, having found the work 'a mere toy...an old book, entitled, The Second Part of Jack of Dover' (Wilson, p. 316).

The Assembly of Fools was possibly a mock-parliament, a fact that provoked the literal-minded Doyley into moving the Commons. Jack's name in the reported title suggests that Penniless, perhaps then called 'Assembly of Fools', was printed as part of the jestbook in 1601. A probable reference to the first Fortune, completed by the end of 1600 (Orrell, p. 127), as the 'new playhouse' (ll. 247-8) also favours 1601 as the date of composition.

F. P. Wilson pointed out in 1938 that Penniless was a revision of Simon Smellknave's Fearful and Lamentable Effects of Two Dangerous Comets, a mock-prognostication for 1591 influenced by Adam Foulweather's A Wonderful Strange and Miraculous Prognostication published the same year. It was Smellknave's tract from which Middleton borrowed passages for Plato's Cap, and which Anthony Nixon recycled two years later in The Black Year (Wilson, pp. 267-72). The reviser's opening lines—'all such as buys this book' (l. 2)—show that Penniless was intended for separate publication, and it was so printed in 1608, 1637, and 1649. Its integrity indicates a revision in two stages. The first turned Comets into Penniless; the second recast Jack's first-person report of his search (which survives unrevised in six jests) into his encounter with a group of poor poets in St Paul's Cathedral, so that a pretext was provided for joining the parliament to the jests. It is hard to tell if Middleton was involved in retouching the jests. But the new material in Penniless shows an undoubted concentration of Middleton traits.

In 1601 Middleton was nearly a penniless poet himself, dependent on odd jobs for Henslowe and the popular press. The comic almanac or prophecy, credited to pseudonymous authors who borrowed from one another, was one form of fast and cheap publishing which suited his satiric talents. He might have been interested in Comets if, as seems possible, 'Simon Smellknave' was a pseudonym of Thomas Nashe. Middleton, whose Microcynicon was banned at the same time as Nashe's books, seems to have viewed himself as Nashe's literary heir (Rhodes, pp. 57-61). Not only did he defend Nashe in The Ant and the Nightingale; he also wrote The Black Book as a sequel to Pierce Penniless. The words 'Penniless' and 'Threadbare' in the title invoke Pierce Penniless and Nashe's self-description in Have With You to Saffron Walden as a poet in a 'threadbare cloak' (III, 26.16). The idea of having penniless poets as legislators (at a time when only freeholders worth at least forty shillings a year could vote) agrees with the self-regarding portrayal in Middleton's early work of the talented but indigent scholar-poet as an instance of social injustice. It is also consistent with his sympathy, deeper than Nashe's, for the socially disadvantaged. More generally, the change from a mock forecast to a comic parliament, the reviser's most significant contribution, turned a socially neutral parody into a potentially disruptive satire.

The composition of literary 'parliaments' varied from the councils of birds and beasts in medieval texts to The Parliament of Devils, published in 1509. The medieval instances of the ancient convention were allied to that of the debate or colloquy (Bennett, p. 140), but Chaucer's Parliament of Fowls exploited the dual connotation of the word as a parley and as a political institution (Dean, p. 19). Middleton may have had Chaucer's poem in mind in the choice of metaphor and title, the latter including the formulaic caption, 'Here beginneth' (l. B.10), present in the headline to a Cambridge University Library manuscript (Gg. 4.27) of The Parliament of Fowls. The conciliar form, however, was ruled out by the nature of Middleton's source, and he had thus to use 'parliament' in the exclusive sense of a legislative body.

If The Assembly of Fools was an earlier title for Penniless, the jury might originally have been one of fools rather than of poets. The 1615 edition of the jestbook printed by John Beale has a chapter-title that reads 'How the Fool of Hereford was chosen Foreman of the Jury, and of the speech he uttered to the rest of his fellows' (A4). There is no such event or speech in the tale, and the caption is clearly a survival from an earlier version. Fools, in any case, had long been associated with mock forecasts. The first leaf of A Merry Prognostication (1544), the oldest known example in English, shows a costumed fool making prophecies, the block being borrowed from Richard Pynson's 1509 edition of Barclay's The Ship of Fools.

Doyley's suspicion may not have been altogether idle, especially since mock-parliaments figured in oppositional polemics starting from the anonymous An Heavenly Act of Parliament concerning how Man shall Live (first published from Amsterdam c.1547) to Thomas Scott's The Second Part of Vox Populi (1624). His complaint must surely have alerted publishers to the political resonances of the metaphor. As a title, Penniless Parliament should have had a resilient topicality throughout a period in which Parliament's presumed duty to relieve the king's debts was a major divisive issue (Harriss), and the extant editions were marketed at some of the climactic moments in the contest between Crown and Commons. In 1601 the demand for the withdrawal of monopolies occasioned what Robert Cecil thought was unprecedented 'levity and disorder' in Parliament (Elton, p. 324). In 1604 disputes between the new king and the Commons over religious and fiscal reforms had resulted in an assertion of parliamentary privileges in the celebrated 'Apology'. In 1608 the Commons was refusing to vote the additional taxes proposed after the Court of Exchequer had upheld the royal prerogative of levying poundage. Beale bought his rights in Penniless in 1614, the year James I summoned and dissolved the Addled Parliament (which had again attacked the 1608 impositions). Beale printed another edition in 1637, when the discontent over Charles I's refusal to call Parliament was sharpened by the Ship Money case and the enforcing of a new liturgy in Scotland. The 1649 edition followed Pride's Purge and appeared in the year the Rump Parliament executed the king.

In ll. 258–9 the reviser changed the phrase 'these times' (Comets, C1) to 'these dangerous times'. The adjective suits 1601, the year that saw the rebellion of the Earl of Essex to whom Middleton had dedicated Solomon. The change from 'King of Spain' (C3^v) to 'Tyrone' (ll. 177–8) recalls Essex's embarrassing truce with the rebel after his failed Irish expedition (1599–1600), as might the revised text in ll. 283–4 which mentions those who 'go to the wars and get nothing'. There may be a sly glance at the depositions made in the February trial of Essex and Southampton in ll. 318–20, where an allusion to illiterate forgers is altered to those who may 'forswear themselves' as 'boldly' as the lettered. Through such minor changes made to an 'old book', Middleton was able to produce social and political satire even after the bishops' 1599 edict against the genre.

The adaptation certainly made Penniless a more popular work than Comets. While Comets is known to have had only one edition, Penniless had at least six between 1601 and 1649. Only five copies of these early printings survive: one each for the 1604, 1637, and 1649 editions, and two for the 1608 quarto. There is no copy of the 1601 edition, and in the only extant copy of the 1615 quarto of Jack of Dover, the Penniless section is missing, though advertised on the title-page. The low survival-rate is that of such fast-selling ephemera as jestbooks, ballads, and almanacs (Wilson, p. 284), and it is possible that other editions were printed of which no copies remain.

Astrological prognostications had a mass circulation in Europe throughout the Renaissance, even when written by distinguished scholars such as Agostino Nifo and Peter Martyr (Febvre and Martin, p. 277). The Pronosticatio (1488) of the Rhenish astrologer Johan Lichtenberger, for instance, had fourteen editions in German, Italian, and Latin by 1500, and about fifty by the middle of the sixteenth century (Mandrou, p. 51). The English astrological writers parodied by Foulweather and Smellkneave were thus reworking the material of a genre that had always needed to combine its esoteric pedigree with the demands of a large lay readership.

The same paradox characterizes European examples of mock prophecies, the earliest German example dating as far back as 1480. The genre attracted humanists such as Jacob Henrichmann, Rabelais, and Aretino, yet the parodies show little regard for authorial rights (Wilson, pp. 259–61). English mock-prophecies also recycled earlier material. A work such as W. W.'s A Merry and Pleasant Prognostication by Four Witty Doctors (1577), for example, derives most of its material from the rhymed Merry Prognostication of 1544 (Wilson, pp. 262–3, 283–4).

A feature of genres which commanded large press runs was their symbiotic contact with oral culture and, hence, the collective nature of their authorship. Sermons, news, ballads, jests, riddles, recipes, and rogue literature stimulated the oral circulation of the material they sought to preserve (Neuburg, pp. 50–1), inducing demand for further reprintings and redactions. The writer needed to exploit this market spiral as much as the publisher, while he could hope for a fair deal only by claiming his intellectual property rights. The paradox is reflected in the way educated but indigent authors such as Nashe would write anonymous or pseudonymous pamphlets one day and abuse authors of popular genres the next. In Have with You to Saffron Walden, Nashe ridicules Gabriel Harvey for ghosting the almanacs of Gabriel Frende: 'What, a grave Doctor a base John Doleta, the almanac-maker, Doctor Deus-ace and Doctor Merry-man?' (III, 72.8–9). The name-calling suggests that the writer of mock almanacs was as much a hack as the authors he parodied, and it was under the pseudonym of 'Doctor Merryman' that Beale published the 1637 edition of Penniless.

The mock prophecies of Foulweather and Smellkneave, however, were rather different from the ones Nashe derides. Their parodic quibbles demand a more lettered readership, and their involvement in the Marprelate and Harvey–Nashe controversies means that they were designed to address a knowledgeable coterie. The decision to print Penniless as a sequel to an anonymous jestbook marks the extent to which Middleton was able to convert such a coterie text into a recyclable bestseller, or what he later called a 'stock-book' (Valour, 5.3.16). Since 'stock-books' such as almanacs were priced according to size (Bosanquet, p. 10), a detachable piece of work like Penniless gave publishers the option of printing it separately in cheaper editions. This adaptability to market segments is reflected in at least one typographical decision in the independent quarto of 1608: the change from the roman type of 1604 to the parodic use of black letter, the standard font for printed Parliamentary decrees and royal proclamations. Judging by the equal division of the six known editions into the two formats, Penniless appears to have been successful both as a sequel and as a discrete work.

Penniless reduces its source by a little over 30 per cent. The examples of Macbeth and Measure for Measure show that Middleton was chosen to adapt important texts by others, and the Malone manuscript of A Game at Chess is evidence that he could skilfully abridge his own. The latter omits 787 lines by cutting long speeches, interjections, explanatory digressions, and secondary motifs such as the story of the Black Knight's Pawn. That it yet manages to disguise the jumps, justify the metre, and even speed up the action suggests that the reviser had considerable experience with such editorial work.

That manuscript, of course, was a gift for one distinguished reader and not an adaptation for mass circulation. With Smellknavé, Middleton's editorial method was similar to that by which the Troyes printers of the early seventeenth century adjusted texts from lettered French culture to the demands of lowbrow publishing. These texts of the bibliothèque bleue, often titles first published in more reputable formats, modernized the vocabulary, pruned allusions and digressions, and broke up sentences and paragraphs into shorter, repetitive, and formulaic units which were easier to read and remember (Chartier, pp. 248–50). Some of these features were already present in Smellknavé, since he was mimicking a popular genre. The change to the parliamentary metaphor, however, enabled Middleton to add to the text's appeal a durable dimension missing in Nixon's Black Year, which also recalls some of the verbal and lexical formulae of the bibliothèque bleue.

One may derive some idea of the abridgement and rewriting demanded by the revision from the following passage in Comets, B2^v–B3:

Plato, the prince of philosophers, with others, looking into the successive alteration of states, saith that, generally, Comets do appear when some dangerous change is to follow. And Aristotle, a man of rare and exquisite judgement, thinketh that Crinite Comets have their particular working in private houses, as well as in commonweals. For which cause, let those married men of weakest wit and worst courage provide themselves of good weapons to defend them from assaults, for about the hour and year appointed shall this feminine Comet appear, putting such masculine courage in all wives that they who have had their will to this hour, will (if they may choose) have the mastery all the year after. But at this instant their value shall be doubled, for they who shall not valiantly resist them are awarded to pay a sheep's head to their neighbour in penance of their folly.

It shall be wonderful to behold (through this sinister influence) how men that are deaf shall hear no more than those that are dead; and such as are without teeth shall chew as little as babes new born. Women that every morning taste a pint of malmsey and oil shall chide as well as they that drink small beer all the winter; and those that have no regard of their honesty, may strain a point beyond modesty.

Erra Pater with provident judgement, looking into these lamentable miseries incident in these westerly parts, saith that oil of holly is a present remedy for a shrewd housewife, calling Socrates flat fool that suffered his wife to crown him with a pisspot.

When this passage is adapted for Penniless (ll. 139–55), the new conceit has no use for such conventions of comic forecasts as citing authorities from Plato to Erra Pater, and the distinctions made between the two comets and their respective effects. Traces of the annual forecast are erased (except in the phrase 'all the year after'); 'shall' in l. 145 avoids the clumsy repetition of 'will' as noun and verb; deft substitutions ('about midnight', 'ordaining that all those that give their wives their own wills to be fools', 'those husbands') sharpen the jokes; the remark on chiding women is shifted to fit an earlier context (ll. 19–21); and the deletions considerably shorten the passage. The future tense of prophecies lends itself easily to the imperative of statutes. Phrases effecting the change occasionally transpose words from the source. The praises of Aristotle and Erra Pater, for example, are given to the legislators (ll. 139–40, 149). The dependence suggests a conscious exercise of the parodist's skill in altering sense without changing too many words. Elsewhere, the revision resituates lines from Smellknavé's prefatory epistle (A2; ll. 7–12), and paraphrases verse, moving them to new contexts (C3^v–D1^v; ll. 375–7, 379–82).

In most cases, the changes enrich the quibbles. Thus the phrase 'horse-nightcap' introduces the 'horse/whores' pun, extending the meaning of 'clip' (ll. 20–3), brought over from a different context in Comets (A4), to include 'embrace' as well as the more obvious ones ('steal' and 'pare the edges of gold and silver coins'). The phrase 'Footman's Inn' for prison furthers the pun on 'lattice' (l. 208), since lattices were a feature of inns, and the addition of 'Salisbury Plain' creates a new quibble on 'plain dealing' (ll. 341–5). The added passages ease the entry into the parliamentary metaphor, besides importing new jokes such as the pun on 'stocks' (l. 329–30). Of the omissions, perhaps the most significant is Smellknavé's censure of players—'as famous in idleness, as dissolute in living' (B2).

Prophecies such as Richard Harvey's Astrological Discourse upon the Conjunction of Saturn and Jupiter (1583), a possible target of Smellknavé's satire, centred on the fear of the prodigious 'in these latter days' when the end of the world was expected shortly (Nashe, V, 167) and when harvest-failures, wars, and the plague were breeding chiliastic hallucinations (Clark, p. 44). The mock prophecy's weapon for deflating that sensationalism was the pun. Keeping the tone but twisting its import, the pun laboured the banal and brought the reader back to the unexceptional and the familiar. By a further turn of conceit, Penniless legislates the average and the corrupt, the triteness of which mocks the idealism of the text's legal refrains. While the comic forecast predicted the predictable, the saturnalian conceit of Penniless indicts that dullness as the image of a society indifferent to true merit. This transition to a satire with a pronounced class animus is typical of Middleton, even if his verbal contribution only amounts to roughly 35 per cent of the text.

As long as its dependence on Comets went undetected, Penniless was regarded as a document of some curiosity value. The headnote in the Harleian Miscellany (1744), in which it was included by William Oldys, saw it as a 'jocose reproof' of contemporary 'vices and follies'. Thomas Wright reprinted Jack of Dover and Penniless for the Percy Society in 1842, as did Charles Hindley in 1872. But Wilson's discovery of its borrowings led to disesteem of Penniless and its sources. These were to be treated, to recall Edward Young's distinction, not as 'originals', but 'imitations . . . wrought up by those mechanics, art and labour, out of pre-existent materials not their own' (Young, p. 274). In 1617, in Satires and Satirical Epigrams, Henry Fitzgeffrey declared that he did not wish 'each peasant, each mechanic ass' to buy his verse; he included 'A Quest of Inquiry (Jack of Dover's)' (A8-8^v) in a list of works from which he wished to distance his own poetry. Since Beale printed a composite edition in 1615, Fitzgeffrey was probably thinking of Penniless as well. Similar suspicion of, if not distaste for, popular success may still haunt academic appraisals. Thus Foulweather and Smellknave are branded 'pseudonymous scribblers' by Sandra Clark (p. 29), who finds Comets 'dull and laboured' (p. 270) and who, following Wilson, dismisses Penniless as a purloined text.

Distinguished contemporaries of Foulweather and Smellknave, however, did not deem their work unworthy of notice. In Pierce's Supererogation (1593) Gabriel Harvey chose to describe Andrew Perne, the Vice Chancellor of Cambridge whom Nashe held in high regard, as 'a fair prognostication of a foul weather' (Harvey, Works, II, 300). John Florio mentions those that 'prognosticate of fair, of foul, and of smelling weather' (A2) in the dedication to his Second Fruits (1591). Ironically, such attention is a witness to the works' ephemeral and coterie appeal. Penniless, on the other hand, retains, even furthers, the genre's strengths while removing its dependence on the annual and the topical.

The biggest tribute to Penniless and its source comes from Middleton himself. Not only did he find Comets worth borrowing from in Plato and, less directly, in Owl; he also quarried its quibbles and jokes for his mature plays (Chakravorty). It is not surprising that the vigorous current of anonymous, collaborative, and popular writing of which Penniless is part should be such a vital presence in the signed texts of a self-repeating author with a paradoxical flair for self-erasure.

SEE ALSO

Textual introduction and apparatus: Companion, 469
Authorship and date: Companion, 337

The Penniless Parliament of Threadbare Poets

First of all, for the increase of every fool in his humour, we think it necessary and convenient that all such as buys this book and laughs not at it before he hath read it over shall be condemned of melancholy, and be adjudged to walk over Moorfields twice a week in a foul shirt and a pair of boots, but no stockings.

It is also agreed upon that long-bearded men shall seldom prove the wisest, and that a niggard’s purse shall scarce bequeath his master a good dinner. And because water is like to prove so weak an element in the world that men and women will want tears to bewail their sins, we charge and command all gardeners to sow more store of onions, for fear widows should want moisture to bewail their husbands’ funerals.

In like manner we think it fit that red wine should be drunk with oysters, and that some maidens shall blush more for shame than for shamefastness. But men must have care, lest conversing too much with red petticoats they banish their hair from their heads and, by that means, make the poor barbers beggars for want of work.

Furthermore, it is lawful for those women that every morning taste a pint of muscadine with eggs to chide as well as they that drink small beer all the winter, and those that clip that they should not shall have a horse-nightcap for their labour. Gentlemen that sell land for paper shall buy penury with repentance. And those that have most gold shall have least grace; some that mean well shall fare worse; and he that hath no credit shall have less commodity.

It is also ordered and agreed upon that such as are choleric shall never want woe and sorrow, and they that lack money may fast upon Fridays by the statute. And it shall be lawful for them that want shoes to wear boots all the year, and he that hath never a cloak may without offence put on his best gown at midsummer (witness old Prime, the keeper of Bedlam dicing house).

This commentary notes major departures from Middleton’s source, Simon Smellknave’s Fearful and Lamentable Effects of Two Dangerous Comets (1591). It does not record every variant, and ignores the verbal formulae added to turn the forecasts into statutes.

- 1–5 First . . . stockings (an addition)
- 1 every . . . humour a possible reference to Jonson’s plays, Every Man in His Humour (1598), and Every Man out of His Humour (1599)
- 2 buys this book (evidence that Penniless was conceived as a work independent of Jack of Dover)
- 4 melancholy Melancholia, a mental disease, was caused by an excess of black bile, a ‘humour’ in the sense in which the word is used in l. 1.
- Moorfields Field for public recreation outside Bishopsgate and adjoining the hospital of St Mary of Bethlehem or Bedlam. The safer lunatics roamed and begged in Moorfields; hence, its association with melancholy (Tilley, M1134).
- 5 but no stockings The bedlam-beggar, and the ‘abraham man’ posing as one, went bare-legged. See John Awdely, The Fraternity of Vagabonds (1561): ‘An abram-man is he that walketh bare-armed, and bare-legged, and feigneth himself mad’.

- 6 long-bearded men Pun on ‘long beard’ or ‘the man with the beard’, a round drinking jug with a narrow neck. The line in Comets, A4, followed the definition of the first comet as ‘barbata’ or ‘bearded’.
- 8 like likely
- 9 want lack
- 11 store supply
- onions (often associated with false tears)
- 13–14 red . . . oysters an aphrodisiac
- 15 shamefastness modesty
- 16 red petticoats ‘Venus’ (Comets, A4). Red velvet petticoats were worn by the more expensive prostitutes. See Deloney, Thomas of Reading (1598–9): ‘no meat pleased him so well as mutton, such as was laced in a red petticoat’ (218).
- 16–17 banish . . . heads as an effect of syphilis
- 20 pint . . . eggs ‘pint of malmsey and oil’ (Comets, B3). Muscatel wine with eggs was a reputed aphrodisiac.
- 21–2 those . . . not The clause ‘such as clip that they should not’ occurs in a different passage in Comets, A4. ‘Clip’ could mean pare the edges of gold and silver coins or steal by cutting. The additional sense of embrace (Mad World 4.5.53) is introduced by the ‘horse/whores’ pun in ll. 21–2.
- 22 shall . . . labour (An addition.) As punishment for those who ‘clip’, Comets, A4, mentioned the ‘cord’, here altered to ‘horse-nightcap’, meaning a halter or hangman’s noose.

- horse-nightcap (punning on ‘whores’)
- 24 grace lustre; also blush, shame
- 25 credit Solvency, inverting the senses of honour and reputation as in the proverb, ‘He that has lost his credit is dead to the world’ (Tilley, C817).
- 26 commodity goods, profit
- 27 choleric irascible, having cholera as the dominant humour
- 28 and sorrow (an addition)
- 29 fast upon Fridays Sale of meat was banned since 1548 on Fridays to help the fish trade.
- by the statute The phrase ‘by statute’, otherwise formulaic for the mock-parliament, was present in the source line in Comets, A4^v. Smellknave may have been referring to either of two Elizabethan statutes on fasting days passed in 1562 and 1585.
- 29–32 And . . . house (an addition)
- 30 boots Worn by gallants even when not riding. Middleton hints at cheats who wore boots to hide money as well as their bare legs (see ll. 4–5).
- 31 midsummer the period of the summer solstice, supposed to worsen madness
- 32 old Prime (1) an actual person? (2) a possible play on ‘prime’, the third best hand at primero, consisting of four cards all of different suits; (3) Priam of Troy

The penniless Parliament of threedbate Poets.

In like manner it is agreed upon that what day soever Paul's Church hath not in the middle aisle of it either a broker, masterless man, or a penniless companion, the usurers of London shall be sworn by oath to bestow a new steeple upon it. And it shall be lawful for cony-catchers to fall together by the ears about the four knaves at cards which of them may claim superiority, and whether false dice or true be of the most antiquity.

Furthermore, we think it necessary and lawful for the husband and wife to fall at square for superiority in such sort as the wife shall sit playing above in the chamber while the husband stands painting below in the kitchen. Likewise we mark all brokers to be knaves by letters patents. And usurers, for five marks apiece, shall lawfully be buried in the chancel, though they have bequeathed their souls and bodies to the devil in hell.

In like manner it is thought good that it shall be lawful for muscadines in vintners' cellars to indict their masters of commixtion, and sergeants shall be contented to arrest any man for his fees. Alewives shall sell flesh on Fridays without licence, and such as sell beer in halfpenny pots shall utter bread and cheese for money through the whole year. And those that are past honesty and shame shall smile at sin; and they that care not for God, prefer money before conscience.

Furthermore, it shall be lawful for footstools (by the help of women's hands) to fly about without wings. And poor men shall be accounted knaves without occasions. Those that flatter least shall speed worst. And pigs by the statute shall dance the antics with bells about their necks to the wonder and amazement of all swineherds.

In like manner it is convenient that many men shall wear hoods that have little learning, and some surfeit so much upon wit and strive so long against the stream as their necks shall fail them. Some shall build fair houses by bribes, gather much wealth by contention, and, before they be aware, heap up riches for another and wretchedness for themselves.

Furthermore, it shall be established for the benefit of increase that some shall have a tympany in their bellies which will cost them a child-bearing, and, though the father bear all the charges, it shall be a wise child that shall know his own father.

It shall be lawful for some to have a palsy in their teeth in such sort as they shall eat more than ever they will be able to pay for, some such a migrain in their eyes as they shall hardly know another man's wife from their own, some such a stopping in their hearts as they shall be utterly obstinate to receive grace, some such a buzzing in their ears as they shall be enemies to good counsel, some such a smell in their noses as no feast shall escape without their companies. And some shall be so needy as neither young heirs shall get their own, nor poor orphans their patrimony.

Also it is enacted and decreed that some shall be so humorous in their walks as they cannot step one foot from a fool, some so consumed in mind as they shall keep never a good thought

- 34 middle aisle central aisle of St Paul's, a haunt of idlers and cheats on weekdays, when the cathedral was used as a market
broker (1) pawnbroker; (2) second-hand dealer
 34-5 masterless man unemployed servant
 35-6 shall...oath 'have sworn' (Comets, B3)
 36 new steeple The spire of St Paul's Cathedral was destroyed by lightning on 4 June 1561. The restoration, not started until 1633, remained incomplete when the church was destroyed in the fire of 1666. The delay provoked satiric attacks.
 36-7 And...about (an addition)
 37 fall...ears quarrel
 38 knaves (1) jacks in a deck of cards; (2) villains superiority (The cards are of course equal.) 38-9 whether...antiquity The fairness of diceplay in antiquity is discussed in Gilbert Walker, A Manifest Detection of Dice Play (1552).
 40-1 the...square 'we shall have a dreadful war betwixt the wife and husband' (Comets, A4^v)
 41 at square to quarrelling
 42 playing (1) playing a musical instrument; (2) having sex (with someone other than her husband)
chamber bedroom
 43 painting Face-painting was common among fashionable Elizabethan males. (A possible quibble on 'panting'.)

- below...kitchen 'beneath' (Comets, A4^v)
brokers (1) pawnbrokers; (2) middlemen; (3) pimps 44 letters patents statutory documents marks A mark was worth 13s. 4d.
 45 lawfully...chancel an allusion to rich citizens buying their burials in parish churches
 46 souls...hell 'souls to the devil' (Comets, A4^v)
 48-9 commixtion dilution (common complaint against vintners)
 49 sergeants 'bailiffs' (Comets, A4^v); sheriff's officers
 50 fees bribes
Alewives...Fridays Alewives appear to have dodged the Friday ban on the sale of meat.
sell flesh (alluding to prostitution)
 51 utter sell
 51-2 bread...money 'mutton and faggots for silver' (Comets, A4^v). Smellknave's hint that alehouses dodged the lenten ban is destroyed by the change.
 52-3 honesty and (an addition)
 55-6 (by...hands) Added to clarify the joke on flying footstools which in Comets, B1 (as in Foulweather, Prognostication, III, 389, ll. 17-22) followed a forecast of tempests.
 57 occasions reasons
 58 speed fare
pigs drunkards
antics the performance of burlesque dancers, themselves called 'antics' 59 bells A feature of 'antics' as of morris-

- dancers; see the play on 'bell' in Gravesend, 1064-5: 'And all these antics dressed in hell, | To dance about the passing bell'.
 61 hoods university bachelors' caps
 62 surfeit...wit overuse their cheating skills
 63 strive...stream Allusion to the proverb, 'It is folly to strive against the stream' (Tilley, S927).
their...them (i.e., they shall be hanged or beheaded) 65 contention litigation before...aware 'ere they are aware' (Comets, B1)
 67 increase breeding
 68 tympany...bellies swelling because of pregnancy
 70 it...father proverbial (Tilley, C309)
 73-4 hardly...wife 'not know a poor man's franktenant' (Comets, B1). The change draws on Foulweather, Prognostication, III, 390, ll. 17-19: 'and men shall be troubled with such pain in the eyes that they shall not know their own wives from other women'.
 74 stopping obstruction
 75 grace (1) divine favour; (2) pardon
 77 noses 'nostrils' (Comets, B1)
 78 companies 'presence' (Comets, B1)
so needy 'hidebound so near themselves' (Comets, B1)
 80 humorous 'altered' (Comets, B1)
 81 foot 'pace' (Comets, B1). The alliterative substitution introduces a pun on 'foot' (step, measure of distance).
 82 keep 'find' (Comets, B1)

The penniles Parliament of threedbate Poets.

to bless themselves, some so disguised in purse as they count it fatal to have one penny to buy their dinners on Sundays, some so burdened in conscience as they count wrongful dealing the best badge of their occupation. 85

But, amongst other laws and statutes by us here established, we think it most necessary and convenient that poulters shall kill more innocent poultry by custom than their wives and maids can sell with a good conscience. Also it is ordered and agreed upon that bakers, woodmongers, butchers and brewers shall fall to a mighty conspiracy so that no man shall either have bread, fire, meat or drink without credit or ready money. 90

Sycophants by the statute shall have great gifts, and good and godly labours shall scarce be worth thanks. It is also thought necessary that maids about midnight shall see wondrous visions to the great heart-grief of their mothers. 95

Furthermore, it is marked and set down that, if lawyers plead poor men's causes without money, Westminster Hall shall grow out of custom, to the great impoverishing of all nimmers, lifters and cutpurses. Those that sing bases shall love good drink by authority, and trumpeters that sound trebles shall stare by custom. Women that wear long gowns may lawfully raise dust in March. And they that keep a temperate diet shall never die on surfeits. 100

In like manner it shall be lawful for sailors and soldiers to spend at their pleasures what they get by their swords. And if the treasurer pay them anything beyond count and reckoning, if they build not an hospital therewith, they may bestow it in apparel by the statute. 105

It is further established and agreed upon that they that drink too much Spanish sack shall about July be served with a fiery 110

facias. But oh you ale-knights, you that devour the marrow of the malt and drink whole aleutubs into consumptions, that sing Queen Dido over a cup and tell strange news over an alepot, how unfortunate are you who shall piss out that which you have swallowed down so sweetly. You are under the law, and shall be awarded with this punishment: that the rot shall infect your purses and eat out the bottoms ere you be aware. 115

It is also agreed upon and thought necessary that some women's lips shall swell so big as they shall long to kiss other men beside their husbands. Others' cheeks shall be so monstrous out of frame as they cannot speak in a just cause without large fees. Some with long tongues shall tell all things which they hear; some with no brains shall meddle much and know little. And those that have no feet may by the statute go on crutches. 120

Furthermore, it is convenient and thought meet that Ale shall exceed so far beyond his bounds as many stomachs shall be drowned in liquor, and thereupon will follow the dropsy to the great benefit of all physicians. It is lawful for some to take such purgative drugs that, if nature help not, the worms in the churches in London shall keep their Christmas at midsummer in their bellies. But tailors by this means shall have more conscience, for, where they were wont to steal but one quarter of a cloak, they shall have due commission to nick their customers in the lace, and, beside their old fees, take more than enough for new fashions' sake. But now touching these following articles, we are to advise old men to look with spectacles lest in finding over-many wise lines they wax blind with reading. 130

But now touching the benefit of private houses, by our rare and exquisite judgements, we think it very commodious that those 140

83 disguised altered (to a new fashion)
 84 fatal 'impious' (Comets, B1)
 85 burdened 'consumed' (Comets, B1).
 The change avoids the repetition of 'consumed', used in ll. 81-2.
 88-9 poulters...poultry (alluding to the supposedly English excess in slaughtering poultry)
 93 meat 'flesh' (Comets, B1^v)
 94-5 good...thanks 'virtuous and godly labours shall be scarce worth grameracies' (Comets, B1^v)
 96 maids...visions Maids' nocturnal visions were almost invariably accounted sexual.
 99 Westminster Hall seat of the chief London law courts such as the Chancery, the King's Bench, and the Star Chamber
 99-100 grow...custom 'be little troubled with rich men' (Comets, B1^v)
 100 nimmers pilferers
lifters thieves, cheats
 101 sing bases a probable quibble on 'base' = bastard, also the name for a sweet Spanish wine
 102 trumpeters braggarts sound trebles boast stare boast and threaten 104 on of 106 what...swords (an addition) 107 treasurer purser count and reckoning computed dues

108 hospital (for injured soldiers and sailors) bestow 'employ' (Comets, B1^v)
 111 sack white wine, usually imported from Spain
 111-12 fiery facias quibble on the red faces of drunkards and feri facias, a writ of attachment against debtors
 112 ale-knights votaries of the ale-house
 112-13 marrow...malt malt-extract
 113 consumptions wasting diseases (which supposedly drained the 'marrow')
 114 Queen Dido In Crete when Dedalus (Comets, B1^v). Probably a bawdy song; note the pun on 'quean' = a whore, and on 'die' = have an orgasm + 'do' = copulate. Compare Roaring Girl, 6.62. Or it could be William Byrd's song on Dido ('When by first by force of fatal destiny') printed in Songs of Sundry Natures (1589).
strange 'Spanish' (Comets, sig. B1^v); (1) unusual; (2) foreign 117 rot A wasting disease. The context suggests an allusion to the 'rot' or liver-inflammation in sheep.
 118 purses (1) money-bags; (2) scrotums ere...aware (an addition)
 120 swell The context in Comets, B2, was a forecast of the disease 'mumpsimus', a mock-Latinism for mumps.
 121-32 Others'...bellies Abbreviates

forecast of various monsters in Comets, B2.
 121-2 shall...frame 'to swell so monstrously' (Comets, B2)
 124 meddle...little Proverbially, 'Fools will be meddling' (Tilley, F546).
 126 meet fit, proper
Ale The word is capitalized elsewhere as well, but here the capitalization suggests the metaphor of the river.
 128-9 to...physicians (an inserted phrase, anticipating the idea in ll. 339-40)
 130 worms...churches maggots in graves
 131 keep celebrate
 132 bellies (comparing a round belly to the vault of the church)
 133 steal...cloak (a familiar complaint against tailors)
 134-5 nick...lace (1) snip lace of clothes they made for customers; (2) rob their customers in overcharging for lace
 136 But...articles (phrase added to justify retaining ll. 136-8, which ended the section on the first comet in Comets, B2) touching concerning 138 wax 'were' (Comets, B2)
 139 private houses In Comets, B2^v, the second comet was a crinite comet, supposed to affect domestic matters as well as state affairs.
 140 commodious convenient, profitable married men of weakest wit and worse courage should provide themselves of good weapons to defend themselves from assaults which shall assail them about midnight. And it shall be lawful for all wives to have a masculine courage in such sort that they who 145 have had their wills to this hour shall have the mastery all the year after. And those husbands which doth not valiantly resist them shall be awarded to pay a sheep's head to their next neighbour in penance for their folly.

As by our provident judgements we have seen into these lamentable miseries incident in these parts of the world, so for the reformation thereof we do ordain and enact that the oil of holly shall prove a present remedy for a shrewd housewife, accounting Socrates for a flat fool that suffered his wife to crown him with a pisspot, ordaining that all those that give their wives their own 150 wills to be fools by act of Parliament.

Also it is further established and agreed upon that Essex calves shall indict butchers' knives of wilful murder, and whosoever will prove a partial jurymen shall have a hot sheep's skin for his labour. Bow Bell in Cheapside (if it break not) shall be warranted by letters patents to ring well. And, if the conduit heads want no water, the tankard bearers shall have one custard more to their solemn dinners than their usual custom.

Moreover, it is thought good that it shall be lawful for all tripe-wives to be exquisite physicians, for in one offal they shall find more simples than ever Galen gathered since he was chastened. 165
 Beside, if dancers keep not tide and time in their measures, they shall forfeit a fat goose to their teacher for their slender judgement. The French morbus by commission shall be worth three weeks' diet. And they who have but one shirt to shift them withal may by the law strain courteously to wear a foul one upon the Sunday. Also our commission shall be sent forth for the increase 170 of hemp, as not only upland grounds shall be plentifully stored therewith, but also it shall so prosper in the highways as the stalks thereof shall touch the top of Tyburn.

In like manner we think it necessary and convenient that there shall be great noise of wars in taverns, and wine shall make some so venturous as they will destroy Tyrone and all his power at one draught. Also we think it meet that there be craft in all occupations (and those that are penitent in this world shall have comfort in a better). Silk weavers by the statute shall prosper well if they wash their hands clean on fasting days, for otherwise in soiling their work they shall lose their work-masters. Daws by authority shall leave building in steeples and dwell in cities. And such as are cunning in music shall know a crotchet from a quaver. But let weapons (i.e., penises)

142 of with

143 about midnight (an addition)

143-6 And... after Revised version of the forecast in Comets, B2^v, concerning the second comet, which, although hairy ('crintite'), was 'feminine'.

144-5 they... wills Proverbially, 'Women will have their wills' (Tilley, W723).

146 And... doth 'for they who shall' (Comets, B2^v)

147 sheep's head (referring to the cuckold's horned head)

150 parts... world 'westerly parts' (Comets, B3, since the second comet was to appear in the west)

151 oil of holly a whipping, traditionally prescribed for a scold

152 shrewd shrewish

153-4 Socrates... pisspot The story of Socrates comparing the urine poured on him by Xanthippe to rain following thunder is told in Merry Tales, Witty Questions and Quick Answers (1567). The same story is told in Jack of Dover, B4-4^v, where Socrates's place is taken by 'a certain poor labouring man in Lincoln' (B4). (Xanthippe throws water, not urine, in the source in Diogenes Laertius, Lives of Eminent Philosophers, II, 36.)

153 flat slow-witted

154-5 ordaining... Parliament (an addition)

155 wills (1) powers of choice (2) penises

156 Essex calves (1) finest calves (2) dupes

157 of wilful murder (an addition)

158 jurymen 'Juror' (Comets, B3)

hot sheep's skin New parchment bonds. The phrase suggests that the calves and butchers refer to rich heirs and loan sharks (the skin is 'hot' since the victim has been just slaughtered).

159 Bow... Cheapside 'The bells of Barking' (Comets, B3). The great bell at the church of St Mary Bow in Cheapside, rung every night at nine, had a reputation for being late and loud.

160 conduit heads London's chief source of fresh water were the nine conduits.

161 tankard bearers water carriers
custard open pie

161-2 solemn dinners The 'bake-house', where the tankard bearers had their meals, were, like the conduits, a notorious centre of gossip, and here not 'solemn' at all.

162 than... custom (an addition)

163-4 tripe-wives tripe-sellers

164 offal entrails

165 simples medicines made of one ingredient (with a possible hint of 'simpletons' who will trust in the medicinal value of offal)

Galen Claudius Galenus (c.129-99), Graeco-Roman medical writer (not Christian or 'christened')

166 dancers (commonly associated with sexual licence)

tide and time The joke in Comets, B3, followed a forecast on tides.

167 fat (in contrast to 'slender' in l. 167-8)

goose (1) blockhead; (2) whore

168 morbus 'pox' (Comets, B3); syphilis

169 three weeks' diet standard three weeks' treatment for syphilis

shift them (1) use as a shirt; (2) manage their affairs

171 Sunday (when one could normally wear one's best clothes)

171-2 Also... hemp (an addition)

172 hemp material used in making ropes, including hangman's nooses upland grounds high ground, with a quibble linking it to 'highways' in l. 173-4, the way to the gallows for highwaymen

174 Tyburn site for public hangings (in what is now Connaught Square)

176 noise (1) confused sound; (2) a band of musicians (who often played at taverns)
wars (1) brawling; (2) battles, recounted by veterans

177 Tyrone 'the King of Spain' Comets, B3^v. Hugh O'Neill, Earl of Tyrone led an Irish uprising in Ireland in 1595. Routed by Mountjoy's Irish expedition, Tyrone formally surrendered in April 1603. See Critical Introduction.
power army

178 craft (1) skill; (2) dishonesty occupations Trades; proverbially, 'There is knavery in all trades' (Tilley, K152).

179-80 shall... better i.e., they can expect no reward in this world

181 wash... days referring to the stink of fish, the statutory diet for fasting days on fasting days 'this Lent' (Comets, C3^v): removing a trace of the annual forecast; see ll. 249-50, 306-7)

182 work-masters master workmen, employers

Daws (1) birds; (2) fools

184 cunning learned, skilful crotchet (1) quarter note; (2) whim
quaver (1) half a crotchet; (2) shaking movement

185 such men as instruct youth be very circumspect, for, if they learn more than their masters can teach them, they shall forfeit their wits to those that bring them up. 210

Furthermore, we think it most necessary and convenient that the generation of Judas should walk about the world in these 190 our latter days and sell his neighbour for commodity to any man.
But the usurers shall be otherwise disposed, for, having monthly taken but a penny in the shilling ever since they began first their occupation, shall now with a good conscience venture upon threepence with the advantage. Besides, many men shall prove 195 themselves apparently knavish and yet in their own opinions will not be so. And many women shall imagine that there are none fairer than themselves.

Moreover, for the further increase of foolish humours, we do establish and set down that fantastic devices shall prove most 200 excellent, and some shall so long devise for other men that they will become barren themselves. Some shall devise novelties to their own shames, and some snares to entrap themselves within.

In like manner we think it most necessary that those that be fortune-tellers shall shut a knave in a circle and, looking about 205 for the devil, shall find him locked in their own bosoms. Atheists by the law shall be as odious as they are careless, and those that depend on destiny and not on God may chance look through a narrow lattice at Footman's Inn. But my dear friends the grocers are plentifully blessed, for their figs and reasons may allure fair lasses by authority. Yea, many men by the statute shall be so kind-hearted that a kiss and an apple shall serve to make them innocents.

It is further agreed upon and established that many strange events shall happen in those houses where the maid is predominant with her master and wants a mistress to look narrowly unto
her. 215

Also we think it convenient that some shall take their neighbour's bed for their own, some the servant for the master, and (if candles could tell tales) some will take a familiar for a flea. Also we think it meet that there should be many fowlers who instead 220 of larks shall catch lobcocks. And many for want of wit shall sell their freehold for tobacco pipes and red petticoats. Likewise we think it convenient that there should be many takers—for some would be taken for wise men who indeed are very fools, for some will take cracked angels of poor debtors, and a quart of malmsey 225 when they cannot get a pottle.

But stay a while, whither are we carried, leaving the greatest laws unpublished and establishing the less? Therefore we enact and ordain as a necessary statute that there shall great contentions fall between soldiers and archers, and, if the fray be not 230 decided at a pot of ale and a black pudding, great bloodshed is like to ensue. For some shall maintain that a Turk can be hit at twelve score pricks in Fiendsbury Fields, ergo the bow and shafts won Boulogne. Others shall say that a pot gun is a dangerous

- 185 they (i.e., the youths)
- 186 forfeit lose as penalty (for breach of engagement)
- 189-90 the generation . . . days 'Judas shall walk about the world this latter time' (Comets, B3^v). The return of Judas was linked in Comets to the imminent end of the world. The revision expands the sense to mean usurers in general.
- 190 commodity profit
- 191 usurers 'Jews' (Comets, B3^v)
- 192-4 a . . . advantage The Act against Usury in the thirteenth year of Elizabeth's reign fixed the legal rate of interest at ten per cent. Three pence in the shilling monthly is an extortionate rate.
- 192 shilling ten pence
- 192-3 ever . . . occupation 'this six year' (Comets, B3^v)
- 194 advantage gain
- 194-7 many . . . themselves Abbreviates a passage on self-love in Comets, B3^v-B4.
- 199 fantastic devices (1) swindling tricks; (2) remarkable inventions
- 201 barren (1) unproductive; (2) dull
- 202 their own shames 'shame themselves' (Comets, B4)
- 204 circle conjuror's circle for raising and confining the devil
- 206 careless (1) thoughtless; (2) careless
- 207 chance happen to (alluding to the atheist belief in chance rather than divine providence)
- 208 narrow lattice prison bars at Footman's Inn (an addition); in a prison, playing on 'lattice' in l. 208, since lattices were a feature of inns
- 209 figs (thought to be aphrodisiacs)
- reasons (punning on 'rasins')
- 211 kind-hearted (1) benevolent; (2) cheated (literally, have their teeth extracted, since 'kind-heart' meant a tooth-drawer)
- apple harlot (but also suggesting Eve's apple in Eden)
- 212 innocents fools, dupes
- 214 maid 'Virgo' (Comets, B4); (1) maid servant; (2) virgin
- 215 wants lacks
- narrowly suspiciously
- 218 some . . . master i.e., some women will have sex with their male servants instead of their husbands
- 218-19 (if . . . tales) Variant of the proverb, 'If the bed could tell all it knows it would put many to the blush' (Tilley, B190).
- 219 familiar attendant spirit
- 220 fowlers (1) trappers of wild birds; (2) cheats, fool-takers
- 221 lobcocks bumpkins, simpletons
- for . . . wit 'to the West of the North' (Comets, B4^v)
- 222 freehold estate held in fee-simple, fee-tail or for life
- tobacco . . . petticoats 'peas pottage' (Comets, B4^v)
- 223 many takers The theme of 'takers' unites the paragraph, and the source of this sentence was at its start in Comets, B4^v.
- 224 would . . . fools 'one would be taken for wise, who is an idiot' (Comets, B4^v)
- 225 cracked angels Dud coins, the crack extending from the edge to the ring within which the sovereign's head was stamped. An angel was a gold coin worth about 50 pence.
- malmsey 'a nipcrust' (Comets, B4^v). Malmsey is a sweet wine.
- 226 pottle two quarts
- 227 stay a while 'alas' (Comets, B4^v)
- 228 laws . . . the 'wonders unreckoned, and relying on the' (Comets, B4^v)
- 230-2 archers . . . ensue 'archers (if the fray be not decided) at a pot of ale and a black pudding' (Comets, B4^v). The changed construction makes 'at' follow 'decided' rather than 'contention' as in the source.
- 232 Turk dummy target in archery
- 233 twelve score pricks 120 paces (the standard archery range)
- Fiendsbury Fields i.e., Finsbury Fields (used for archery practice; also a notorious promenade)
- 234 Boulogne 'Granado' (where the Moors were defeated by the Christians) (Comets, B4^v). Boulogne was captured by Henry VIII in 1544 after a two-month siege.
- pot gun mortar (quibbling on 'pot', a drinking vessel)
- 234-5 dangerous . . . against 'perilous weapon at' (Comets, B4^v). The artillery charge against a city wall is here reduced to drunkards defacing walls by urinating against them.

The penniles Parliament of threedbate Poets.

235 weapon against a mud wall and an enemy to the painter's work. Amongst these controversies we will send forth our commission to god Cupid, being an archer, who shall decide the doubt and prove that archery is heavenly, for in meditation thereof he hath lost his eyes.

240 O gentle fellow soldiers, then leave your controversies if you love a woman, for I will prove it that a mince pie is better than a musket. And he that dare gainsay me, let him meet me at the Dagger in Cheap with a case of pewter spoons, and I will answer it. And, if I prove not that a mince pie is the better weapon, let me

245 dine twice a week at Duke Humphrey's table.

It is furthermore established that the four knaves at the cards shall suddenly leap from out the bunch and desperately prank about the new playhouse to seek out their old master Captain Cropear. Also it is thought meet that some men (in these days)

250 shall be politic beyond reason, and write more in one line than they can prove in an age. It shall be lawful for some to study which way they may walk to get them a stomach to their meat, whilst other are as careful to get meat to put in their bellies. Likewise there shall be great persecution in the commonweal of kitchen fees, so that some desperate women shall boil, try and seethe poor tallow to the general commodity of all the whole company of tallow chandlers.

255

Alas, alas, how are we troubled to think on these dangerous times? For tailors by act of Parliament may lawfully invent new fashions. And he that takes Irish aqua vitae by the pint may by the law stumble without offence and break his face. And it shall be thought convenient that some be so desperate bent as they shall go into my Lord Mayor's buttery when all the barrels be full without either sword or dagger about them. Many men shall be so vent'rously given as they shall go into Petticoat Lane and yet come out again as honestly as they went first in.

260
265

In like manner it shall be lawful for Thames water to cleanse as much as ever it did in times past, and if the brewers of London buy store of good malt, poor bergemen at Queenhithe shall have a whole quart for a penny. St Thomas onions shall be sold by the rope at Billingsgate by the statute. And sempsters in the Exchange shall become so conscionable that a man without offence may buy a falling band for twelve pence.

270

It shall be lawful for smiths to love good ale. And, if it be possible to have a frost of three weeks long in July, men shall not be afraid of a good fire at midsummer. Porters' baskets shall

275

238-9 in... eyes i.e., love is blind, like someone who stares too long at the sun (heaven)

241 mince pie an expensive delicacy (but also suggesting the slang sense of pie as 'female pubic triangle')

243 Dagger in Cheap 'Woolsack' (Comets, C1). The change helps the wordplay (see 'weapon' in ll. 244-5). The Dagger in Foster Lane in Cheapside specialized in minced pies: see Quiet Life, 5.1.73.

pewter spoons (instead of pistols, normally carried in a case and used in duels)

243-4 answer it (1) prove it; (2) answer his challenge to a duel

244-5 prove... table 'say not that a gun is the better weapon, he shall never be bound to serve with bow and arrows while he liveth' (Comets, C1). 'To dine with Duke Humphrey's' was to go without dinner (Tilley, D637). The tomb of Sir John Beauchamp (d. 1358) in the south aisle of St Paul's, taken to be that of Duke Humphrey of Gloucester (1391-1447), was the rendezvous of debtors seeking sanctuary.

246 knaves See l. 38 above.

248 about... playhouse 'it on the stage' (Comets, C1). The change shifts the censure from players to the crooks in the audience. The playhouse was probably the Fortune, built in 1600.

248-9 to... Cropear (An addition.) Allusion to the common punishment at the pillory, involving a pun on the 'ear' of the corn.

249 some... days 'Men this year' (Comets, C1)

250 politic clever, affecting worldly wisdom

252 get 'catch' (Comets, C1)

a stomach an appetite

253 other (i.e., poorer people)

careful anxious, painstaking put... bellies 'fill their maw' (Comets, C1)

254 persecution quest

254-5 kitchen fees drippings, a perquisite of the cook

255 try extract oil from fat by heating

seethe boil

256 tallow animal fat, used for making candles

commodity profit

256-7 the... of (an addition)

258-9 are... times 'am I perplexed to think on these times' (Comets, C1; see Critical Introduction). The paragraph abbreviates and rearranges the source.

260-1 And... face 'Irish aqua vitae abundantly taken about this time, shall make a man stumble' (Comets, C1).

260 aqua vitae whisky, brandy

262 desperate 'desperately' (Comets, C1)

263 buttery cellar

barrels wine barrels (but suggesting 'gun barrels' of defensive fortifications)

265 given... Lane 'disposed, that they shall go into brothel houses' (Comets, C1). Petticoat Lane (Middlesex Street, formerly Hog Lane) was a haunt of prostitutes.

266 come... in i.e., come out with their reputation intact (with a bawdy quibble suggesting copulation)

268 in times past 'before' (Comets, B4^v)

brewers of London 'brewer of Putney' (Comets, C1); allusion to the practice of diluting beer with water 269 poor... Queenhithe 'they about Richmond and Mortlake' (Comets, C1). Queenhithe was a quay in Upper Thames Street near Southwark Bridge.

270 whole... penny In 1591 (date of Comets), beer was 6s. 8d. per barrel of 32 (or 36) gallons, and small ale 3s. 4d.

270-1 St Thomas... rope There is a multiple quibble involving St Thomas à Waterings on Kent Road, an execution site. 'Waterings' would thus be linked to false tears (and, therefore, to onions; see ll. 10-12) as in Puritan, 1.1.124-5, and the hangman's rope to the 'rope' or string of onions as in Changeling, 1.2.208.

271 Billingsgate A London wharf in Thames Street. Stow mentions onions among the cargo unloaded at Billingsgate (p. 185).

sempsters (1) seamstresses; (2) prostitutes

Exchange Old Exchange, near St Paul's, a centre for shopping and trade

273 falling band Flat collar for men which became fashionable at the end of the sixteenth century. There is a bawdy innuendo in 'falling'.

274 smiths... ale Proverbially, 'The smith has always a spark in his throat' (Tilley, S562).

275 frost... long (possibly another reference to the three weeks' routine treatment for syphilis as in l. 169 above)

- have authority to hold more than they can honestly carry away. And such a drought shall come amongst cans at Bartholomew Fair in Smithfield that they shall never continue long filled.
- 280 The images in the Temple Church (if they rise again) shall have a commission to dig down Charing Cross with their falchions. And millers by custom shall have small mind to morning prayer if the wind serve them in any corner on Sundays. Those that go to the wars and get nothing may come home poor by authority. And those that play fast and loose with women's apron-strings may chance make a journey for a Winchester pigeon, for prevention thereof, drink every morning a draught of Noli me tangere and by that means thou shalt be sure to escape the physician's purgatory.
- 285 But amongst all other decrees and statutes by us here set down, we ordain and command that three things (if they be not parted) ever to continue in perpetual amity: that is, a louse in an old doublet, a painted cloth in a painter's shop, and a fool and his bauble. Furthermore, it shall be lawful for bakers to thrive by two things (that is, scores well paid and millers that are honest); physicians, by other men's harms; and churchyards, by often burials. Also we think it necessary for the commonwealth that the salmon shall be better sold in Fish Street than the beer shall be at
- Billingsgate. And heartsease amongst the company of herb-wives shall be worth as much money as they can get for it by the statute. It is further enacted and agreed upon that those that run fourscore mile afoot on a winter's day shall have a sore thirst about seven of the clock in the evening. And such as are inclined to the dropsy may be lawfully cured, if the physicians know how. Also we ordain and appoint that (if there be no great store of tempests) two halfpenny loaves shall be sold for a penny in Whitechapel. Chaucer's books (by act of Parliament) shall in these days prove more witty than ever they were, for there shall so many sudden or rather sodden wits step abroad that a flea shall not frisk forth unless they comment on her.
- 0 what a detestable trouble shall be among women about fourscore and ten years old, for such as have more teeth about them than they can well use shall die for age if they live not by miracle. Also it shall be lawful for bees, if the summer show not, to go on pilgrimage, and fly so far in one day as whoso sets up a landmark where they first light shall come to us and have a pound weight of gold for his diligence and labour.
- Moreover, we think it necessary that those that have two eyes in their head shall sometime stumble, and they that can neither
- 277 they...away 'their masters can carry' (Comets, C1^v); (i.e., porters will steal)
- 278 cans drinking vessels
- 278-9 at Bartholomew...Smithfield 'about Cape S. Vincent' (Comets, C1^v). The change to 'Smithfield' quibbles on 'smiths' in l. 274. On 24 August, the Feast of St Bartholomew, a civic fair was held at Smithfield.
- 280 images...Church images of crusading Knights Templars buried in the Temple Church
- 281 Charing Cross A possible reference to the legend that Eleanor of Castile (d. 1290), queen of Edward I, sank into the ground at Charing Cross. The legend is told in George Peele's Edward I which was probably first produced in 1591. Peele transfers a scandal involving Eleanor of Aquitaine, queen of Henry II, to Eleanor of Castile. Smellknaves may have been led by the play to confuse the two queens, since William Marshal (one of the Knights Templars buried in Temple Church) was instrumental in freeing Eleanor of Aquitaine from prison in 1189.
- falchions broad, curved swords
- 282 morning prayer (The avoidance of Sunday morning prayers was a common complaint against citizens.)
- 283 serve them i.e., turn their mills corner direction
- 283-4 Those...may 'They that ride to the westward of Flowers and Corns, if they catch not Brazil men, shall' (Comets, C1^v). See Critical Introduction.
- 284-8 And...purgatory (an addition)
- 285 fast and loose A cheating game in which a string or belt was so arranged that the viewer would think that he could make it fast by placing a stick through its folds, while the operator could pull it away.
- 286 Winchester pigeon (1) a prostitute; (2) a swelling in the groin caused by syphilis (so called because the Bishop of Winchester owned most of the land in the Southwark red-light area)
- 287 Noli me tangere literally, touch me not (John 20:17; Tilley, N202); a species of balsam
- 288 physician's purgatory (referring to the treatment of syphilis by inducing salivation with mercury, like Purgatory, uncomfortably hot, but temporary)
- 289-91 amongst...amity 'among all these changes, three things shall continue in perpetual amity if they be not severed' (Comets, C1^v)
- 291-2 louse...doublet Proverbially, 'A rogue's wardrobe is harbour for a louse' (Tilley, R161).
- 292 doublet sleeveless upper garment painted cloth imitation tapestry, used as hangings
- 293 bauble Familiar pun on bauble (fool's sceptre), and babble. Proverbially, 'A fool will not give his bauble for the Tower of London' (Tilley, F476).
- 294 scores accounts, bills
millers...honest Proverbially, 'The miller is a thief' (Tilley, M955).
- 297 salmon...Street 'cod shall be better sold than the bean' (Comets, C2). 'Salmon' and 'cod's head' both meant a gull, and 'salmon' was also a name for a prostitute. Old and New Fish Streets, in Queenhithe Ward and Bridge Ward Within respectively, were known for alehouses and whores.
- 297-8 than...Billingsgate (an addition)
- 298 heartsease (1) a pansy; (2) an endearment, a lover
herb-wives herb-sellers
- 299 much money 'much' (Comets, C2)
- 301 sore thirst (probably as a result of the sweating sickness, a febrile disease)
- 303 dropsy morbid accumulation of fluids in tissues and internal cavities
- 304 great store excess
- 305 tempests Storms and bad weather were likely to push up wheat prices and, therefore, reduce the statutory weight of the baker's loaf.
halfpenny loaves The baker's halfpenny loaf seems expected to weigh six ounces, although statutory weights varied with wheat prices. Bakers often dodged the law.
- 306 Whitechapel the central market district around St Paul's Cathedral
Chaucer's books The text of Chaucer familiar at the time of Comets was the folio edited by William Thynne, which had 10 editions between 1532 and 1561; but a new edition by Speght was published in 1598.
- 306-7 in these days 'this year' (Comets, C2)
- 308 sudden ready, quick sodden (1) dull; (2) drunk
- 308-9 a...forth i.e., the most trivial thing shall not be spared
- 312 for age of old age
- 314 whoso whoever
- 315 light alight, land
- 315-16 come...gold 'have a talent' (Comets, C2). The reward could be for tracking honey or because swarms had to be reclaimed, usually by beating on pots and pans.

320 write nor read may as boldly forswear themselves as they that can.
And it shall be lawful for almanac-makers to tell more lies than true tales. And they that go to sea without victuals may suffer penury by the statute.

325 In like manner it shall be lawful for any man to carry about him more gold than iron, if he can get it. But they that are given to a sullen complexion (if they be females) must be more circumspect for, if they repent their hidden sins too much, they may chance catch heaven for their labour. Therefore let maidens take heed how they fall on their backs, lest they catch a forty weeks' fever. And he that hath once married a shrew, and by good chance bury her, beware how he come into the stocks again.

330 Further, it shall be lawful for those that be rich to have many friends, and they that be poor may by authority keep money, if they can get it honestly.

335 Also we command and charge all such as have no conscience to do their worst, lest they die in the devil's debt. As for the rest, they that have more money than they need may help their poor neighbours if they will.

340 In like manner it shall be lawful for such as are subject to hot rheums to drink cold drink, and those that have a mind to enrich physicians to be never without diseases.

345 Also soldiers that have no means to thrive by plain dealing may by the statute swallow down an ounce of the syrup of subtlety every morning, and, if they cannot thrive that ways, we think it necessary that four times in the year they go a-fishing on Salisbury Plain.

Furthermore, for the benefit and increase of foolish humours, we think it necessary that those our dear friends which are sworn true servitors to women's pantables should have this order set down that you suit yourselves handsomely against goose feast, and if you meet not a fair lass betwixt Paul's and Stratford that day, we will bestow a new suit of satin upon you, so you will bear all the charges. 350

But as for you, dear friends and scholars, thus much we favour you, for you shall dine upon wit by authority, and, if you pay your hostess well, it is no matter though you score it up till it come to a good round sum. 355

In like manner it shall be lawful for maid's milk to be good physic for kibed heels, and a cup of sack to bedward a present remedy for the rheum. Such as are sick in the spring may take physic by the statute, and those that are cold may wear more clothes without offence. It is best to ride in long journeys lest a man be weary with going afoot, and more comely to go in broken stockings than barelegged. 360

Further, it shall be lawful for some to be lean because they cannot be fat. Some by the statute shall love beef passing well because they can come by no better meat, and other some simper it with an egg at dinner that dare manfully set upon a shoulder of veal in the afternoon. 365

Some shall be sad when they want money, and in love with widows rather for their wealth than their honesties. It is also thought necessary that some shall suspect their wives at home because they themselves play false abroad. And some love bowling alleys 370

319 forswear... can 'quit themselves of forgery' (Comets, C2^v). See Critical Introduction.

320 almanac-makers 'Such as have skill in physiognomy' (Comets, C2^v)

321 true tales 'truth' (Comets, C2^v)

321-2 go... penury 'will sail without compass, may have shipwreck without remedy' (Comets, C2^v). Middleton may have been remembering Raleigh's stranded and starving crew, of which his stepfather was a member, brought back by Drake from Roanoke Island in 1586.

324 more... iron more money than sword and armour

324-5 given... complexion (1) Dull skinned; (2) sullen tempered. The quibble followed from the forecast for the saturnine in Comets, C3^v. Unchaste women supposedly had pale complexions.

327 catch heaven Attain salvation. The verb contrasts with 'catch' in l. 328.

327-8 take... they 'beware to' (Comets, C3^v; part of a longer sentence which also involved men who seduced them)

328 forty weeks' fever pregnancy

329-30 And... again (an addition)

330 stocks (1) instrument of punishment; (2) frame to which a horse is confined for shoeing

331 to... many 'let them be sure of' (Comets, C4)

333 honestly (an addition)

335 do 'spit' (Comets, C4)

337 if they will (an addition)

339 rheums 'humours' or tempers

342 subtlety (1) an ornamental device or dressing made of sugar; (2) guile

343-5 we... Plain (An addition, introducing the 'plain dealing-Salisbury Plain' quibble.) Salisbury Plain was a flat region in the central south-west of England. 'Freshwater mariners', who swindled people with tales of shipwreck or piracy, were described by Thomas Harman in A Caveat for Common Coursitors (1566) as those whose 'ships were drowned in the plain of Salisbury' (p. 84). The phrase here would thus mean a cheat who 'fished' for dupes by pretending to be a ruined sailor.

347-8 which... pantables 'that are born under this kind goddess' (i.e. Venus) (Comets, C4^v). Compare Massinger, A New Way to Pay Old Debts, 1.1.137: 'And yet sworn servant to the pantoffle'.

348 servitors servants
pantables pantofles, shoes with high cork heels

349 against in preparation for goose feast (1) Greengoose Fair at Stratford Bow in Whitsun week; (2) 'goose' = prostitute)

354 dine upon wit Live by cunning. Proverbially, 'He lives by his wits' (Tilley, W581).

pay (1) recompense financially; (2) satisfly sexually

355 score it up (1) run up a bill; (2) copulate

356 round (pun on the 'roundness' of pregnancy)

357 maid's milk lac virginis, a medicinal cosmetic using monoxide of lead, red lead, white vinegar, and common salt

358 physic for 'to heal' (Comets, D1)
kibed affected by chilblains

sack (considered a preventive against catarrh)

360 may wear 'get' (Comets, D1)

361 without offence (an addition)

362 broken tattered

363 barelegged See ll. 4-5 above.

365 beef considered the favourite meat of the stupid

366 other some some other

366-7 simper it eat daintily with mouth shut

367 dinner principal meal, had usually around midday

manfully set upon 'make incision in' (Comets, D2). The change links the eating of veal to setting upon a 'veal', i.e., a gull, by the sergeant or robber for bribe or booty. Clapping on the shoulder is frequently associated with arresting officers.

370 honesties sexual modesty

372 bowling a disreputable pastime like dicing and drinking

The penniles Parliament of threed-bare Poets.

better than a sermon. But, above all other things, sprites with aprons shall much disturb your sleeps about midnight.

375 Furthermore, it shall be lawful for him that marries without money to find four bare legs in his bed. And he that is too prodigal in spending shall die a beggar by the statute.

380 In like manner we think it necessary that he that is plagued with a cursed wife to have his pate broke quarterly, as he pays his rent. Likewise he that delights in subtlety may play the knave by custom. And he that hath his complexion and courage spent may eat mutton on fasting days by the law.

And, to conclude, since there are ten precepts to be observed in the art of scolding, we humbly take our leave of Duke Humphrey's Ordinary, and betake us to the Chapel of Ill Counsel, where a 385 quart or two of fine Trinidado shall arm us against the gunshot of tongue-mettle and keep us safe from the assaults of Sir John Findfault. Vale, my dear friends, till my next return.

FINIS

ADDITIONAL PASSAGES

A Jack of Dover's Quest of Inquiry
When merry Jack of Dover had made his privy search for the fool of all fools, and making his inquiry in most of the principal places in England, at his return home was 5 adjudged to be the fool himself. But now wearied with the motley coxcomb, he hath undertaken in some place or other to find out a verier fool than himself. But first of all, coming to London he went into Paul's Church, where,
walking very melancholy in the middle aisle with Captain 10 Thingut and his fellows, he was invited to dine at Duke Humphrey's Ordinary, where, amongst many other good stomachs that repaired to his bountiful feast, there came in a whole jury of penniless poets who, being fellows of a merry disposition (but as necessary in a commonwealth 15 as a candle in a straw bed), he accepted of their company.
And as from poets cometh all kinds of foolery, so he hoped by their good directions to find out this fool of all fools

so long looked for. So thinking to pass away the dinner time with some pleasant chat, lest being overcloyed with too many delicats they should surfeit, he discovered to 20 them his merry meaning, who being glad of so good an occasion of mirth, instead of a cup of sack and sugar for digestion, these men of little wit began to make inquiry and to search for this aforesaid fool . . .

'Well,' quoth one of the jury, 'if we cannot find the fool B
we look for amongst these fools before named, one of us will be the fool, for, in my mind, there cannot be a verier fool in the world than is a poet. For poets have good wits, but cannot use them; great store of money, but cannot 5 keep it; and many friends, till they lose them. Therefore we think fit to have a Parliament of poets, and to enact such laws and statutes as may prove beneficial to the commonwealth of Jack of Dover's motley-coated fools.'

Here beginneth the Penniless Parliament of Threadbare Poets 10

373-4 sprites . . . midnight 'as all the crinite comets in Christendom cannot disturb us of our sleeps, (I mean such comets as wear aprons. . .)' (Comets, D2)
373 sprites spirits (i.e., women)
375-6 for . . . bed Adapts four verse lines in Comets, C3^v: 'Whoso marries without money, | in midst of his dread: | Shall at night if he please, | Find four bare legs in his bed.' Allusion to the proverb,
'There goes more to matrimony than four bare legs in a bed.'
376-7 And . . . statute Adapts four verse lines in Comets, C3^v: 'He that is prodigal,
| And lets his crowns fly: | If he spare
not in time, | shall a beggar die.'
378-80 he . . . rent (An addition.) There is a quibble on 'quarterly' (broken into quarters, quarterly payment of rent).
Smellknave predicted the appearance of the comets on 25 March, the legal quarter-day for rent payment.
379 cursed shrewish
380-1 Likewise . . . custom Adapts two verse lines in Comets, D1: 'Whoso in craft and subtlety delight, | Can play the knaves

by day as well as night.'
381-2 And . . . days Adapts four verse lines in Comets, D1^v: 'That a man whose complexion | and courage is spent:
| May instead of red herrings, | eat mutton in Lent.' See l. 29 above.
383-8 And . . . return (an addition) 383-4 ten . . . scolding Borrows from the Epilogue in Comets, D3: 'here are the ten precepts to be observed in the art of scolding'. The 'precepts' or 'commandments' were the shrew's ten fingernails (Tilley, C553).
384-5 Duke Humphrey's Ordinary See ll.
244-5 above.
385 Chapel of Ill Counsel apparently a tobacconist's shop
386 fine Trinidado Trinidad tobacco, considered the finest 387 tongue-mettle mettle = spirit (continuing the metaphor of 'gunshot' and punning on 'metal')
387-8 Sir John Findfault any carping critic
388 Vale farewell

A Penniless was published in 1604 as the second part of Jack of Dover; this paragraph was added at the start of the previously-published text of Jack of Dover
to account for the new part.
2 privy private, secret
6 motley fool's parti-coloured dress
coxcomb jester's cap
7 verier truer
10 Thingut (i.e., a starveling)
10-11 dine . . . Ordinary See ll. 244-5 above.
12 bountiful feast (ironic)
14-15 as necessary . . . straw bed Borrows the censure of poets in Comets, B2:
'as necessary in a Commonweale, as a candle in a strawbed' (i.e., useless, adapting Mark 4:21, but also suggesting the sense of dangerous).
20 delicats tasty dishes (ironic)
surfeit be sick from overeating (ironic) discovered disclosed
B This is the transition from the existing text of Jack of Dover into the text of Penniless, as it appears in the 1604 edition.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

John Lavagnino and I have overseen everything in the edition. I am responsible for commissioning the editorial team. However, each work was assigned to a specific general editor (or in some cases two), who did much of the detailed work of proofreading and commenting on the edited text, critical introduction, and commentary (including the relevant sections in Parts II and III of the Companion).

MacDonald P. Jackson: Michaelmas Term, Weapons, Widow, Macbeth, Quiet Life, Changeling, Valour, Gypsy, and Poems
John Jowett: Honest Whore, Trick, Yorkshire, Revenger, Gallants, Chaste Maid, Tennis, Hengist, and Game
Gary Taylor: Black Book, Magnificent Entertainment, Banquet, Sherley, Two Gates, Lady, Cupids, Dissemblers, Owl, Peacemaker, Old Law, Hengist, Measure, Solomon, Ghost, and Penniless
Valerie Wayne: Phoenix, Father Hubbard, Mad World, Timon, Puritan Widow, Roaring Girl, No Wit, Lady, Quarrel, Witch, Heroes, and Women Beware
Adrian Weiss: Meeting, Plato, Truth, Civitatis, Industry, Antiquity, Entertainments, Aries, Virtue, Integrity, Prosperity, Microcynicon, and Penniless

This table underestimates the extensive collaborative contribution of the Associate General Editors, who generously gave their time and expertise, assisting and advising on many aspects of the edition, large and small. My own introductory essays ('How to Use This Book', 'Lives and Afterlives', and—in the Companion—'Textual Proximities', 'The Order of Persons', and the General Textual Introduction to A Game at Chess) have benefited enormously from the general-editing of Jackson, Jowett, Lavagnino, Wayne, and Weiss. Even these Fantastic Five could not always save me from myself, but they have certainly worked overtime to minimize my fallibility. I have also received personal help and feedback from many—indeed, most—of the other contributors, and every one of them has enhanced my understanding of Middleton. R. V. Holdsworth has advised on this project from the outset, and although in the end he did not edit any of the works he has so generously shared his own exceptionally wide and detailed knowledge of Middleton with so many of us that we have listed him among the Contributors to both volumes.

A few pages cannot adequately express twenty years of gratitude for help given to seventy-five scholars on three continents. These overdue moral debts are both institutional and personal. The edition could never have been completed without the resources of the great archival collections that house the earliest texts of Middleton's works and the early records of his life, most particularly the British Library, the Folger Shakespeare Library, the Huntington Library, the Houghton Library at Harvard University, the Bodleian Library at the University of Oxford, the Public Record Office, and the library of Trinity College, Cambridge. Oxford University Press has, like Penelope, faithfully waited for two decades; its promise has sustained us through the long dark haul—and unlike Penelope it has been often present and helpful, a companion as well as an aspiration. Many other institutions have provided invaluable assistance with particular items, as can be seen in the list of illustrations, and in the individual acknowledgements recorded below. Each of these 'institutions' consists, in fact, of particular living individuals, who have personally helped one (or many) of us. But each of those institutions also represents particular individuals no longer living, who were instrumental in accumulating and preserving the cultural capital that has been invested in this enterprise.

The same is true of the institutions that have provided salaries and travel grants, technical support, and intellectual stimulation to all the scholars who have invested their lives in this edition. Institutional affiliations are acknowledged in the List of Contributors; each such affiliation represents a complex network of resources and individuals. As general editors, we could not have completed our own work without the generous research support of Florida State University, King's College London, and (at earlier stages of the project) Brandeis University and the University of Alabama. This sustained assistance has been supplemented by individual research fellowships awarded to me by the John Simon Guggenheim Foundation, the National Endowment for the Humanities, and the Folger Shakespeare Library.

Gary Taylor

My biggest debt is to my department at King's College London, which has supported my efforts since 1998 and in particular gave me a year's leave. Reiko Takeda made it possible for me to complete my work. Of the many scholars who have come to my aid, I want to thank especially Mac Pigman, Richard Proudfoot, Peter Robinson, Paul Vetch, and my fellow editors. The British Library provided the ideal environment for research.

For their advice and help during earlier years of the project, I am grateful to many people at Brandeis University, the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory, Brown University, and Texterity Inc. These organizations did not employ me to work on this edition, but they all found ways to make that work possible; Scott Magoon, Kelly Chance, and Martin Hensel were particularly generous. The Employment and Training Administration of the United States Department of Labor kept me going during one year; Leslie Brown provided every kind of support for many years. I created part of the production system for the edition in collaboration with Dominik Wujastyk, and with the financial support of the California Institute of Technology.

I am grateful to many people at Oxford University Press for their efforts on our behalf. I didn't think we could finish the edition without Frances Whistler, but she took us far enough along that we managed. Paul Luna's initial design was adapted and extended by Paul Cleal, Bryony Newhouse, Liz Powell, and Ruth Vincent; my thanks to all of them for making us look good.

John Lavagnino

All editors and readers of Middleton are indebted to Roger V. Holdsworth; I am especially so. I owe great thanks to G. Blakemore Evans and to David Bevington for expert advice and comments. I am grateful to D. H. Craig, Marjorie Garber, Scott Paul Gordon, Philip Gossett, Lisa Jardine, Elizabeth D. Scala, G. B. Shand, and Debbie Shen. I am also thankful to M. J., J. L., G. T., and A. W.

Douglas Bruster

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I wish to thank Dr Amlan Das Gupta of Jadavpur University, Calcutta, and Professor C. S. Lim and his Department of English at the University of Malaya, Kuala Lumpur, for their generous help at various stages of this work.

Swapan Chakravorty

The present edition owes a great deal to the work of twelve student actors who performed the play in the 1991 James Madison University production. Working from Xerox copies of Eld's quarto, these actors became, in effect, RAC's twelve assistant editors. And who better to help in decisions about inflection, meaning, and movement than actors, the people who, as a good playwright knows from the start, are going to reconstruct the play with their performance? Their choices as actors inform the present text. Here are their names alphabetically and the parts they played:

Caryn Baker: a gentleman and the Boy
Tenley Bank: First Courtesan, a drawer, Tiffany's servant, Marmaduke
Tapio Christiansen: Tailby
Jen DeMayo: Second Courtesan, Jack the Vintner, Piamont
Karen Hester: the Novice, Cleveland's servant, a drawer, a gentleman
Tod Kovner: Fitzgrave
Nicholas McDowell: Frip
Kara McLane: Arthur, Mistress Newcut, Fulk, Newblock's servant, a constable
Erick Pinnick: Goldstone
C. Charles Scheeren: Pursenet
Trissy Sincavage: a gentleman, Katherine, Bungler, a constable
J. Steven Smith: Primer, Tailby's servant, a tailor

Ralph Alan Cohen

We would like to thank Nancy Selleck for her help in compiling the doubling list. Ivo Kamps would like to thank the Graduate School at the University of Mississippi for a summer grant that allowed him to work on The Phoenix.

Lawrence Danson and Ivo Kamps

I have incurred four principal debts in producing this edition. The first is to the play's two modern editors, Iain Sharp and Robert Kean Turner; the second is to MacDonald Jackson, in his capacity as a General Editor of the present edition; the third is to the American Philosophical Society, who supported my own work on the play with a very welcome summer fellowship; and the fourth is to the staff of the Lilly Library in Bloomington, Indiana, from whose exceptionally handsome copy of the 1647 Beaumont and Fletcher folio, formerly the property of Richard Brinsley Sheridan, I have prepared this edition.

Michael Dobson

For this edition of A Fair Quarrel I am grateful for help received from Roger Holdsworth, Stephanie McIntyre, Marguerite Barrett, Fr. Frans Jozef Van Beeck, S.J., and Adrian Weiss.

Suzanne Gossett

I wish to thank the trustees of the Folger Shakespeare Library and the University of Nottingham Library for permission to reprint the manuscripts of Hengist, King of Kent. I also thank the Henry E. Huntington Library, the British Academy, and the Folger Shakespeare Library for their generous awards of fellowships to support the completion of this edition. Special thanks are also owed to Peter Beal, Peter Blayney, the late Fredson Bowers, S. P. Cerasano, R. A. Foakes, R. V. Holdsworth, William Ingram, Alan

H. Nelson, G. R. Proudfoot, James Riddell, Adrian Weiss, and Laetitia Yeandle for advice and support during the preparation of this edition.

Grace Ioppolo

My work has been facilitated by a period of leave and research funding from the University of Auckland and by an Edwin Mellon Fellowship at the Henry E. Huntington Library. I am grateful to the Librarians of Magdalen College and Worcester College, Oxford, and of Dulwich College, London, for making special arrangement to enable me to collate copies of The Revenger's Tragedy. Thanks are also due, for help of various kinds, to Ken Larsen, Roger Holdsworth, and the late Don McKenzie.

MacDonald P. Jackson

We acknowledge the generous support of Yves Peyré (University of Montpellier III). He is the author of La Voix des mythes dans la tragédie élisabéthaine (Paris: CNRS, 1996). We are also extremely grateful to Jane Kingsley-Smith (Roehampton University, London) for her expert advice on Cupids in the literature of the period. Finally, we wish to thank James R. Sewell, City Archivist of the Corporation of London Records Office, for his invaluable assistance with the manuscript of the Court of Aldermen proceedings.

M. T. Jones-Davies and Ton Hoenselaars

I would like to record here my debt to various institutions and individuals who have assisted me during my editing of Moseley's three 1657 Middleton plays over a number of years. The British Academy provided a grant towards study at the Folger Shakespeare Library in 1986, and the University of Waikato in New Zealand contributed towards a similar period at the Huntington Library in 1988. Wolfson College, Oxford, facilitated a spell of research in 1991 by awarding a Visiting Scholarship. Staff at the University of Waikato Library were constantly generous and efficient in their help. I am grateful to the hospitality of the Bodleian Library, the British Library, the Folger Shakespeare Library, and the Henry Huntington Library. Ken O. Arvidson and Marshall Walker were unflinchingly supportive Heads of the English Department at Waikato. Various people have provided me with information, advice, or encouragement: Nigel Bawcutt, Robert Cummings, Ton Hoenselaars, Roger Holdsworth, Grace Ioppolo, Robert Irish, MacDonald P. Jackson, Liz Ketterer, Johan Koppenol, Robert Maslen, Alan Riach, Kim Walker, and Helen Wilcox. Vanessa Byrnes, Helen Miller, and others at Waikato sustained my enthusiasm for Middleton. Kristin Lucas was my best reader.

John Jowett

I am grateful to Paul Mulholland for supplying me with a photographic copy of the Princeton copy of Okes. I also wish to thank Sue-Ellen Case for giving me a copy of her adaptation of The Roaring Girl; David Bergeron and Jean E. Howard for reading the Critical Introduction; Kim Colwell, Sianne Ngai, and Garrett Sullivan for invaluable help in preparing the edition; Christine Buckley of Oxford University Press; Gary Taylor, for generous support both editorial and moral; Peter Blayney, for sharing his discovery of new legal records concerning Mary Frith; and Brown University, for research funding.

Coppélia Kahn

I would like to thank Neil Fraistat, Joan Rachel Goldberg, John Lavagnino, Gail Kern Paster, Gary Taylor, and Adrian Weiss for their help and encouragement.

Theodore B. Leinwand

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The commentaries on Honour and Industry and the Busino Account have benefitted from the help of Prof. Stephen Booth, Dr Christopher Gales and Prof. Donald M. Friedman. Prof. Paul Seaver has been extremely generous in sharing his research into the membership of the Grocers' Company, as well as information about the personal income of various individuals and professions; I am most grateful. Tudi Sammartini, Paolo G. Sissa and Mark di Suvero provided invaluable assistance with (respectively) obtaining access to the Busino manuscript, with transcribing it, and with my translation. I am especially indebted to Prof. Louise George Clubb, who reviewed both transcription and translation, offering her expert advice on paleographic and interpretive problems.

Kate D. Levin

The editing of this text could not have been completed without the collaboration of two resourceful research assistants Nicholas Hoffman (commentary) and Eric Wilson (textual introduction and notes); additional assistance was provided by Jeremy Faro and Marco Torres. I am also grateful to: Marjorie Garber and Gregory Nagy for assistance with classical allusions; Thomas L. Berger, Barbara K. Lewalski, Barbara A. Mowat, and Wendy Wall, for discussions of editorial method; the Renaissance Doctoral Colloquium at Harvard University; students in English 90d (Spring 1993, Harvard), particularly Will Schoettle; the Clark, Rollins, and Robinson Research Funds (Harvard) and the Weinberg College of Arts and Sciences (Northwestern University); the staffs of the Chapin, Folger, Houghton, Huntington, and Newberry Libraries (in particular Susan Halpert at the Houghton and Paul Saenger at the Newberry); the department of Special Collections, Northwestern University Library; Gary Taylor for his patience, his suggestions and productive resistances, and his guidance; and Jay Grossman, who saved me from (at least some) editorial fallacies.

Jeffrey Masten

Besides many of the other Middleton editors, I am especially grateful to the following for the generous assistance they have given me at various stages of this project: Peter Blayney, Roman Dubinski, Rosalind Hays, Derek Keene, Jean Miller, Barbara Mowat, Donna Penrose, Thomas Sloane, Paul Stevens, Abigail Young, St Jerome's University, and the libraries holding copies of Tennis, particularly the Folger Shakespeare Library, which provided photographs of the title-page and cast-list of the masque and gave permission for their reproduction.

C. E. McGee

I would like to acknowledge the help of John Astington, Susan Cerasano, Andrew Gurr, and Laurie Maguire.

Scott McMillin

I am happy to record debts of gratitude to many who have assisted the preparation of editions of The Patient Man and the Honest Whore, The Two Gates of Salvation, and The Peacemaker. No editor of The Patient Man and the Honest Whore can fail to benefit from the labours of previous editors and other scholars; among those deserving of particular mention in this regard are Fredson Bowers and Cyrus Hoy. Special thanks are due to Valerie Wayne, who generously appraised me of research on her edition of A Trick to Catch the Old One; to Peter W. M. Blayney for freely sharing with me his own bibliographical investigations on the play and The Two Gates; to Laurie Maguire and to the production's director, Gordon Anderson, for accounts and observations on the 1992 London revival; and to John Jowett, who at an early stage provided extensive and valuable advice and suggestions.

In respect to The Two Gates of Salvation and The Peacemaker I am glad of the opportunity to extend thanks to several individuals:

Bernard Katz and Pdraig O'Cleirigh, each of whom made helpful contributions to recondite, stubborn, and knotty commentary matters; and Adrian Weiss, who graciously and unstintingly responded to a number of bibliographical queries. I wish also to express my gratitude to my General Editor, Gary Taylor, for beneficial thoughts and advice on all aspects of these editions and to G. B. (Skip) Shand for much-appreciated support and probing discussion. Any errors or infelicities that remain are my own. Thanks go also to librarians of various institutions and collections who made available early printed copies of the respective texts, microfilms, photocopies, and other research materials, and who have been unfailingly helpful in providing assistance.

I am grateful to the University of Guelph Research Advisory Board and the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada for research grants without which the editions could not have been completed.

Paul Mulholland

For assistance with manuscripts, thanks to Dr Bruce C. Barker Benfield, Department of Western Manuscripts, Bodleian Library, Oxford, and to Dr Ceridwen Lloyd-Morgan, Department of Manuscripts and Records, National Library of Wales, Aberystwyth. For elucidating particular points of text or context, thanks to: Professor Gordon Campbell, University of Leicester; Professor Patrick Collinson, Trinity College, Cambridge; Professor Richard Dutton, University of Lancaster; Professor (Emeritus) Eric Poole, University of Kent at Canterbury; Ms Anne Seller, University of Kent at Canterbury; and Ms Sheila Sweetinburgh, University of Kent at Canterbury. For locating visual materials, thanks to: Dr Kenneth Fincham, University of Kent at Canterbury; Dr Volker Krahn, Preusserkulturbesitz, Berlin; Dr Elisabeth McGrath, Warburg Institute, University of London; and Dr Thomas Sorge, Berlin. For sharing editorial expertise and theatrical experience, thanks to: Professor Al Braummüller, University of California at Los Angeles; Dr Elizabeth Schafer, Royal Holloway, University of London; and Professor Martin White, University of Bristol. For conferring long-term benefits, more than can be noted here, thanks to Professor Anne Lancashire, University College, University of Toronto and to Professor John C. Meagher, St. Michael's College, University of Toronto.

Marion O'Connor

I would like to thank Gary Taylor and Valerie Wayne for their helpful readings of earlier versions of my introduction.

Sharon O'Dair

The present editor is most grateful to T. W. Craik and D. E. L. Crane for help in the preparation of the text, and to Gary Taylor, John Jowett and Roger Holdsworth for supplying many of the verbal parallels in Canon and Chronology.

Neil Rhodes

I am grateful to Standish Henning for microfilms and encouragement at the start of this project. Frank Atkinson of the St Paul's Cathedral Library, Dr Heslop of the University of Birmingham Library, and the staffs at the British Library and the Beinecke Library at Yale were helpful in tracking down books and nearly-forgotten dissertations. The staff of Baker Library at Dartmouth College, especially Patricia Carter and her colleagues in Interlibrary Loan, devoted much time to my aid. Collaborating with Celia Daileader has been instructive to us both. The advice of Harry Beskind came at a crucial time. My deepest debt is to James L. Steffensen, upon whose editorial experience and personal support I have placed the greatest reliance.

Peter Saccio

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Charlene Liska and Anne Russell provided invaluable assistance with the early textual work on this edition of The Wisdom of Solomon Paraphrased. Textual research was made possible by grants from the Social Sciences and Humanities Council of Canada and the Huntington Library.

Paul Mulholland kindly read and advised on the early stages of The Ghost of Lucrece.

John Jowett and Gary Taylor made many helpful suggestions for the Commentary and the Critical Introduction. The textual work was supported by a grant from Glendon College.

Thanks to Paul Yachnin and Andrew Gurr for assistance and advice. Research for this edition of The Black Book was aided by grants from the Folger Shakespeare Library, the Canada Council, The British Council, and Glendon College.

G. B. Shand

I would like to thank my colleague at the University of Massachusetts Boston, Joseph Shork, for his generous and patient assistance in translating Latin that did not derive from standard classical texts, and Kenneth Rothwell and Robert Maher for additional advice on other problems relating to classical references or Latin translation. Sabrina Baron of the University of Chicago helped with the identification of some of the more obscure court officers in the processional Order. For Dekker's text I derived valuable assistance from the commentaries of Cyrus Hoy. Gary Taylor provided patient and invaluable assistance throughout the project. Any mistakes that remain are, of course, entirely my own responsibility.

R. Malcolm Smuts

My thinking about The Widow has been much influenced by graduate students at Brandeis University and the University of Alabama. Special thanks also to Raphael Seligmann and Leslie Thomson. The Georgia Shakespeare Festival on 1 April 2001 gave me the chance to direct a reading of the play by professional actors, which confirmed and enhanced my sense of its rich theatrical potential: I am indebted to everyone involved. Michael Warren's generous collaboration extended beyond the commentary to consistently insightful input on both the text and the introduction.

My edition of Macbeth is much indebted to the work of the two previous Oxford editors, Stanley Wells and Nicholas Brooke.

The careful proofreading eye and mind of Ronald A. Tumelson contributed greatly to the accuracy of the text and apparatus of both The Bloody Banquet and The Nice Valour. Suzanne Gossett played the part of a general editor for my work on Gypsy, as did Robert Maslen for my work on Gravesend. David Kathman, Bill Lloyd, and Tiffany Stern contributed useful information to "The Order of Persons". Doug Bruster, Larry Danson, and Paul Mulholland helped expedite urgent illustration requests. Kay Picart answered urgent questions about contemporary dance theory, and Scott Kopel was routinely, cheerfully indispensable.

My work on A Game at Chess is most heavily indebted to Trevor Howard-Hill, who generously provided me with advance access to much of his own work. Graduate students in seminars and readings at Brandeis University, the University of Alabama, and Florida State University have taught me a lot about the literary and dramatic potential of the play. Trish Henley spent many hours of work turning my hand-drawn (and re-drawn and re-drawn) stemmata into intelligible printed images. The assiduous repeated proofreading of John Jowett, Molly Hand, Trish Henley, John Lavagnino, Emily Rendek, Brandie Siegfried, and Ronald A. Tumelson made the texts and apparatus much more accurate than they would otherwise have been. Jowett provided invaluable editorial feedback on a colossal amount of material; Jackson, Wayne, and Weiss also contributed helpful local feedback.

My institutional debts for twenty years of work on all parts of the edition are recorded above. John Lavagnino has overseen every detail of my work (and everyone else's); his sense of humour, his intellectual range and acuity, his superb organizational and managerial skills, his ability to detect inconsistencies and connect hitherto-unconnected dots (not to mention his London apartment), sustained me through a task that would otherwise have succumbed to the despair of a sprinter miscast in a marathon. My first conversations with Celia R. Daileader were about Middleton, and we have continued talking about him for fifteen years; I owe much of my understanding of each to the other.

Gary Taylor

I am grateful to Peter W. M. Blayney for numerous helpful suggestions, answers to questions, and solutions to problems. Thanks are also due to Richard Proudfoot for his corrections and suggestions and to David Carnegie who generously shared insights gained when editing the play for the Cambridge edition of Webster. A much-appreciated release-time grant from the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada gave me the valuable time necessary to work on this edition.

Leslie Thomson

My thanks to Barbara Newman and Helen Deutsch for their suggestions about translation. I also wish to thank Joel Kaplan for generously sharing his preliminary work on Microcynicon with me.

Wendy Wall

I wish to thank the Huntington Library for granting me an Andrew W. Mellon Fund Fellowship which enabled me to prepare my contributions to the commentary while in residence there; and the Committee on Research of the Academic Senate, University of California, Santa Cruz, for its support of this work.

Michael Warren

It is a pleasure to acknowledge the help of many people in the preparation of this edition, beginning with all of the general editors: thank you Gary, John L., John J., Mac and Adrian for being such knowledgeable and genial colleagues. With remarkably good humour, George Watson loaned me his own annotated copy of the Oxford B.Litt. thesis he prepared on this play, from which I learned a great deal. With equal enthusiasm, Adrian Weiss shared his written analysis of the text of Trick and his knowledge of bibliography; the textual introduction is much improved by his vigorous response. In preparing this edition, I have benefitted from communications with Trick's future editor, Paul Mulholland, with John Astington about illustrations, with David Gants about paper, with Leslie Thomson about the Folger copy of the first edition, and with Gail Kern Paster about early modern medicine. For help on the critical introduction, I am grateful to Susan Amussen and Fran Dolan for advice on rape and the law; to Barbara Hodgdon for introducing me to Mary Carleton; to Margo Hendricks for assistance with Aphra Behn; and to my students for their varied and astute responses to the play, especially Joan Perkins and Jill Sprott. Paula Reeve did a thorough job of collating commentaries from previous editions; her work was funded by a grant from the University of Hawai'i Office of Women's Research. My university's Office of Research Relations also provided their support in two separate grants, and the NEH funded a summer stipend. My final and deepest thanks go to Richard Tillotson and Sarah Wayne Callies for their willing engagement with this play and related concerns, which in our family are often simultaneously dramatic and domestic.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Valerie Wayne

The collating of the scattered manuscripts of ‘Hence, all you vain delights’ has been done by various members of the Middleton team: Michael Dobson (Oxford), Lori Anne Ferrell (Huntington), Suzanne Gossett and Valerie Wayne (Folger), Grace Ioppolo (Cambridge and London), Lawrence Manley (Yale), Robert Maslen (Aberdeen), and Gary Taylor (Harvard, Nottingham, London). For advice and assistance more generally, we wish to thank Tim Armstrong, Greg DeRocher, Gordon McMullan, and Marion O’Connor.

Susan Wiseman and Gary Taylor

For my edition of A Chaste Maid in Cheapside, I gratefully acknowledge the financial assistance of the Social Science and Humanities Research Council of Canada, whose generous grant enabled me to employ a series of excellent research assistants, Linda Sinclair, Kimberley McLean-Fiander, and Faith Nostbakken, to whom I am very grateful. The edition, and especially the lineation and commentary, are indebted to the fine work of the play’s many good previous editors and critics, especially R. B. Parker, David L. Frost, Charles Barber, Alan Brissenden, Richard J. Wall, Margery Fisher, and David F. George.

Linda Woodbridge

Penelope Rensley assisted diligently and accurately in the initial editing of Meeting and Plato. R. V. Holdsworth and Gary Taylor helped make this version of both texts better than they would otherwise have been. I am grateful for their astute and rigorous suggestions. I am also grateful to the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada and the Huntington Library, San Marino, California, for their generous support.

Paul Yachnin